A QUICK READ OF THE NEWS

Not the usual Nativity ...

An Elizabethton (Tenn.) High School anatomy class constructed its Nativity scene entirely with cat cadavers.

"It was disgusting. It was nasty," one unidentified student said in Monday's Elizabethton Star. "One cat was hanging from the ceiling as an angel. It had a halo. There were three dressed as the wise men and two as Mary and Joseph and one in a cradle dressed as baby Jesus."

The project, using dissected cadavers, was done for a school decorating contest. It was on display for several days in the classroom until students removed it.

MTV will save the world

MTV has selected six human specimens to survive into 2000, whatever New Year's Eve may bring.

The cable music network has tapped three men and three women to stay in its "millennium bunker" through New Year's Day.

MTV says it wants them there in the event of a millennial apocalypse so they could then repopulate the world and assure the network a future audience.

The "bunker-nauts" climbed into their temporary quarters in New York City, built from three tornado shelters in the basement of The New York Times Building, near the network's Times Square studios.

Among those chosen for the project is Maureen Kyle, 19, of suburban Westlake, Ohio.

MTV chose Kyle because of her wholesome midwestern values, but she said her parents understand that her role could entail sex with strangers should civilization reach its end.

Video from the bunker will be broadcast 24 hours a day on the Internet.

500 potential jurors called; Reyes murder trial near

By RONN SMITH
Editor

Jury selection in the capital murder trial of Muleshoe resident Gilbert Guadalupe "Tito" Reyes is scheduled to begin Jan. 10.

District Court Clerk Elaine Parker said Tuesday that notices were mailed Monday to 500 people ordering them to report for jury duty at the Bailey County Coliseum.

Potential jurors are being asked to report at 9:30 a.m. Jan. 10.

Reyes is scheduled for trial in the March 1998 death of his former girlfriend, Yvette Barraz, who allegedly was abducted from the parking lot at Leal's Restaurant, where she worked.

Her body was found stuffed behind the back seat of her car in the Mexican border town of Presidio, Texas. Reyes had been allowed to cross the border into Mexico legally before the body was discovered because he was not wanted for anything at the time.

Reyes was arrested in Portales after returning to the United States, and then extradited back to Texas in June 1998.

The case is to be heard by Senior District Judge Jack Young since Judge Gordon Green recused himself last January.

Young was appointed to hear the case by Judge Ray Anderson, presiding judge of the Ninth Administrative Judicial District.

David Martínez of Lubbock was appointed March 24 to serve as Reyes' attorney.

At the time of Barraz's death, her family had been seeking a court order to keep Reyes away from her. He was accused of threatening her with a gun just a few days before she allegedly was abducted from the restaurant parking lot.

Reyes and his attorney were in court Dec. 15 for a hearing on several pre-trial motions submitted by Martínez. One of them was a request for cameras to be barred from the courtroom during the trial.

Social Security data should be checked as soon as it arrives

SPECIAL TO THE JOURNAL

COLLEGE STATION — In October, the Social Security Administration began mailing individualized Social Security statements to 125 million workers age 25 and older who are not currently receiving Social Security benefits.

This is the largest customized mailing ever undertaken by a federal agency, and what workers learn from their statements can help them plan their financial futures.

"Don't disregard the statement when it arrives. Check it over because part of your future retirement income as well as other potential benefits will depend on its accuracy," said Nancy Granovsky, professor and family economics specialist with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

The statements are being mailed on a staggered schedule according to birth month, with statements scheduled for mailing about three months before a worker's birthday.

Statements will be mailed to workers on an annual basis.

The four-page statement will help workers with financial planning by providing estimates of their retirement, disability and survivors' benefits.

The statement provides an easy way to check on the accuracy of earnings posted on the Social Security record. The amount of Social Security benefits at the time of retirement is based on an individual's career wage record, so it is important for the earnings amounts to be correctly posted.

One out of every three Social Security beneficiaries is not a retiree but a disabled worker, or a member of a disabled worker's family, or a survivor of a worker who died.

Social Security provides disability coverage for a worker with a family equivalent to about a $233,000 disability policy. The survivor protection provided by Social Security is equivalent to

Vegetable conference Jan. 18 in Hereford

SPECIAL TO THE JOURNAL

LUBBOCK — A full day of presentation and workshops awaits vegetable growers Jan. 18 at the West Texas Vegetable Conference in Hereford, a Texas A&M University horticulturist said recently.

"Our speaker this year will address topics such as pesticide laws and regulations, how to do business with large retail chains, water management, and crop health," said Dr. Roland Roberts, horticulturist with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service in Lubbock.

"We will also have a potato health workshop at this year's conference — which routinely draws growers from five states," he added.

The conference will run from 8:30 a.m. to 4:45 p.m. at the Hereford Community Center (Avenue C at Park Avenue). Registration begins at 8 a.m. and costs $25 per person, which includes a luncheon provided by the Deaf Smith County 4-H Parents Association and admission to a trade show stocked with commercial and education displays.

"Participants can earn CEU towards their pesticide applicator licenses. Certified crop advisers can earn professional development credits, and certified master gardeners can earn six hours credit toward their vegetable specialty certification," Roberts said.

The morning session will include a potato health workshop, and presentations on pesticide laws and regulations; plant breeding at Texas A&M University; and how to do business with large retail chains.

Keynote luncheon speaker John McClung of the Texas Produce Association will explain how retail consolidation may affect Texas growers and shippers, Roberts said.

A lunch break will allow participants to visit the trade show and see poster displays on drip-irrigated watermelons, potato seed piece treatments, post

Y2K update: Texas in good shape

A coalition of Texas agencies known as Readiness 2000 has provided the city of Muleshoe with information about many of the issues that concern citizens as the new year approaches.

The Journal will be printing some of this material until Jan. 1.

More information on any of these issues is available by calling city hall at 272-4528.

No. 9: Texans are generally in good shape.

Much — some might argue too much — has been written about the approach of the year 2000, or Y2K.

Some preach a litany of gloom and doom about the new year, a scenario that often seems straight from a 1950s science-fiction movie.

The effort that resulted in Readiness 2000 was launched almost four years ago to get Texas ready for the transition that is now upon us.

All the critical private-sector industries, including banking, have now certified themselves as Y2K ready.

Texans should not be swept up in a potential panic, either real or perceived, because of Y2K. The coalition's message is simple: Don't panic; just be ready.

Why "don't panic"? Because experts in many fields tell us that technical glitches will be few and far between. But people problems — folks overreacting, worrying, hoarding food or falling victim to scams — are potentially worrisome, according to Railroad Commissioner Tony Garza.

And why "be ready"? Because the Pistachios make the grade for healthy snacking

SPECIAL TO THE JOURNAL

When serving snacks to friends and family, consider choosing a snack that is not only delicious but nutritious, too. Pistachios help adults and children meet their daily nutrient needs while being fun to eat at the same time.

America's reliance on snacking continues to increase, as more than half of Americans (51 percent) eat a snack or two each day according to a 1999 Roper Poll.

It has been predicted that close to 40 percent of calories will come from snacks in the year 2000, making wise snacking choices critical for building healthful diets.

A snack that delivers nutrition in a nutshell, pistachios are a good source of fiber, vitamins and minerals, are low in saturated fat and relatively high in monounsaturated fat, considered by nutritionists to be the 'good' fat.

With the current trend toward "commitment-free eating," or eating snacks rather than a meal, pistachios can be a smart snack for today's time-compressed lifestyles especially during the holidays.

Pistachios date back to the Holy Lands of the Mideast, where they grew wild in high desert regions.

A rare delicacy, pistachios were a favorite of the Queen of Sheba, who hoarded the entire Assyrian supply for herself and her court.

The royal nut was imported by American traders in the 1880s and introduced in vending machines 50 years later to become one of America's most popular snack foods.

about a $354,000 life insurance policy, according to the Social Security Administration.

The administration wants workers to check their statements and help correct mistakes right away. Here are the things to check and what to do about them if there is a mistake or a discrepancy:

• Wrong address — Anyone who has moved since filing their last federal income tax return should notify the Internal Revenue Service, not Social Security.

Social Security does not keep the wage-earner's address in its system until they actually apply for benefits. In the meantime, it relies on the address from the latest income tax return.

Submit Form 8822 to the IRS to change the home mailing address. The form is available by calling the IRS at (800) 829-3676 or printing the form directly from the IRS' Internet Web site for the form, <http://ftp.fedworld.gov/pub/irs-pdf/f8822.pdf>.

Be sure to provide the employer with the new mailing address, too.

• Wrong name or date of birth — If this vital information is wrong, it will have to be corrected by completing Form SS-5, Application for a Social Security Card. This form is available from local Social Security offices.

If the location of a nearby office is not known, call (800) 772-1213.

Or, if the wage-earner has access to the Internet, the Social Security Office Locator can be utilized by typing in the person's zip code; SS-5 can be printed directly from the Web site (<http://www.ssa.gov/online/ss-5.html>).

• Error(s) in the earnings record: Carefully check over the earnings record to make sure it matches the actual earnings.

The best way to check is with copies of the W-2 forms that were attached to federal income tax returns from previous years. If there is a discrepancy, contact a Social Security Office or call (800) 772-1213, keeping W-2 forms or tax returns handy for the visit and/or conversation.

The Social Security Administration urges workers to contact them even if there is no W-2 or tax return readily available, as the administration may be able to search records when they receive information about an employer's business name and address.

Earnings for the current year will not appear on the record until next year.

Earnings for the past year may not yet have been posted by the time the statement was mailed.

"Consumers should check their statements very carefully. Plan to keep the statements with permanent financial files. The easiest way to do this is to make a file folder for each worker. After checking the statement for accuracy each year, file the statement in its folder," Granovsky suggested.

Further information about the Social Security Statement may be found at the web site <http://www.ssa.gov/mystatement/index.htm>.

Speakers at the afternoon session will discuss implications of the Food Quality Protection Act, Texas produce leadership and needs, consumer food safety, vegetable establishment techniques, soil and water salinity management, chile production techniques and pesticide record keeping.

"This is an invaluable opportunity for vegetable growers, market gardeners and crop consultants to learn the latest techniques for establishing and maintaining healthy vegetable crops," Roberts said. "More importantly, all of the information is portable — you can take it home and put it to use right way."

occasion has served to remind us that all Texans need to keep a readiness kit for themselves and their families.

For people in the Panhandle, ice storms are an annual occurrence. Texans who live along the coast need to be prepared for hurricanes. And for those in the vast central regions of the state, flooding is an all-too-common problem.

So, in all parts of the state, Y2K is a great reminder for every household to make sure there is a three-day supply of food, water and essential supplies kept in a safe place in the home.

While having to use these supplies this week seems unlikely, getting them together would ensure that everyone is ready for the next big storm.

Having trouble with mountain ash? Try a relative!

By RONN SMITH
Editor

OK, folks, it's official: Spring is springing! The snow crocus are up and growing — what surer sign is there?

These little flowers were blooming by mid-January last winter, and it looks as if they'll be that early again.

For my money, if your yard doesn't have any snow crocus, you ought to find a few square inches (that's all it takes, they're so small and well-behaved!) and start some for next winter. The earliest type seems to be the bright golden-orange one, and what better time of year for a spot of gaudy color in the flower bed?

I got an anonymous note from someone who says they really like mountain ash for its display of berries, but have tried three times and not been able to get one established, and do I have any pointers to offer?

Now, first of all, I have heard that there are a few mountain ash trees in Clovis that were established without much trouble.

I wouldn't be surprised if that's true, but I think it depended on: 1) the tolerance of the individual mountain ash that was planted; 2) the individual pocket of soil it was planted in; and 3) a possibly special relationship between that individual mountain ash and its Creator.

Seriously, though, this is like most landscape problems: The solution is not so tough, but it also isn't too well-known.

The mountain ash family (Sorbus) is divided into two very distinct "clans," and the trick is in knowing the difference.

The side of the family known as rowan trees contains the familiar European mountain ash (Sorbus aucuparia) and American mountain ash (Sorbus americana).

These are beautiful trees in the right climate, with their big clusters of berries. Unfortunately, they are intolerant of heat (ouch!) and drought (ouch! ouch!), and I don't think there is any way to "cheat" and help them adapt. To top it all off, they prefer acid soils (with pH below 6, anyway), so there's another factor that everybody in our part of the world has to deal with in order to grow mountain ash.

What to do? The other group of sorbus species is generally known as the whitebeams — but, just to keep things confused, some of them also have common names that include the term mountain ash!

By the way, the experts disagree on whether we're talking about mountain ash or mountainash. I write it as two words because I think mountainash just looks like a mistake.

Anyway, the whitebeams and related species are much more drought-tolerant than typical mountain ashes, and also don't mind soils in the neutral range (pH around 7), which includes most of our region.

The biggest difference to you and I between the rowan trees and the whitebeams is that with the whitebeams you don't get the compound, frond-like leaves so familiar on mountain ashes. But you do still get the fruit display, and on some of the whitebeam group the fall foliage is color is possibly even more spectacular than with rowan trees.

Even in the summer, whitebeams generally have leaves that are white on the bottom (covered with "tomentum") so that any breeze sets up an interesting display.

The "true" whitebeam (Sorbus aria) is a tree of similar size (small to medium) to ordinary mountain ash species. Berries are crimson, usually with brown speckles. Some cultivars of this tree (notably 'Lutescens' and 'Majestica,' the latter with especially large fruit) are considered among the most desirable small trees in cultivation — bar none.

Another species that is often described as "magnificent" is Sorbus vestita, the Himalayan whitebeam. This one doesn't have the spectacular fruit color — its fruits look like russet-colored pears, which actually are close relatives to the mountain ash clan. This species, while well worth growing, is not going to be easy to find — you may have to go through one of the big mail-order "boutique" nurseries.

Another very desirable species with subdued fruit color, and this time with lobed maple-like leaves, is Sorbus torminalis — the Chequer tree or wild service tree (not to be confused with several native American species known as service trees).

And finally, adapted to our climate and with spectacular fruit crops and more easily located, is Sorbus alnifolia — the Korean mountain ash. The fruit color is variable, but whether you get the pinkish red, orange-red or scarlet, they're all good and they all last well into the early winter months.

This species is different from most of them in one regard, however — it becomes a full-size tree (up to 40 feet tall and 20 feet or more across) so don't plant it in a tight space thinking it's going to stay a postage stamp.

So, to the writer who was so embarrassed about losing three mountain ash trees, I'd say don't give up the idea — just switch to a related species. It probably wasn't that you have a "black thumb," but just that you hadn't yet matched the right plant to the right site.

Happy planting!

Cotton payment limitation still plagues producers

SPECIAL TO THE JOURNAL

Even though Congress eagerly responded to the economic situation threatening agriculture, some producers are still faced with unattractive choices when it comes to marketing their 1999 cotton.

Even though the 1999 Loan Deficiency Payment/ Marketing Loan Gain payment limitation was doubled from $75,000 to $150,000 per entity, many producers are experiencing problems.

Exceptionally high loan deficiency payment rates and better than expected production have combined to put some producers near or over the $150,000 threshold for LDPs or marketing loan gains.

Producers with bales that are no longer eligible for LDP because the payment limit has been reached have realistically only one place to go — the Commodity Credit Corp. loan.

With no market above the loan value of the cotton foreseen, producers with cotton they cannot receive LDPs on and market immediately will be forced to put their cotton in the Commodity Credit program in order to limit their losses.

Once the decision is made, producers need to understand what their options are once the cotton is in the loan.

The producer needs to remember, assuming that the Adjusted World Price is below the base loan rate of 51.92 cents, a few basics.

Upon initiation of the loan, the producer will be asked to pay all accrued warehouse and storage charges from the time the cotton was ginned up to the date the loan is initiated

Once in the loan, the cotton can follow one of three possible paths:

- Sale. Cotton is sold under standard "option to purchase" or "equity" type contract through which the producer passes the right to redeem the cotton on to the buyer.

The buyer can then redeem the cotton at the Adjusted World Price, with the marketing loan gain charged against the producers payment limitation;

- Redeem at the full loan value. If marketing loan gain payment limitation for the producer has been reached, the producer can redeem the loan at full value.

All storage on the cotton and interest on the loan is waived under this scenario and the producer redeems cotton for the loan principle only;

- Forfeit the cotton to Commodity Credit. If the producer forfeits the cotton, the storage on the cotton and interest on the loan are waived and Commodity Credit takes control of the cotton.

One possibility whose role is still uncertain is the option of generic certificates. Congress provided authority for the use of generic certificates; unfortunately, the cotton industry and USDA have not come to any agreement on how they might be used or how soon they could become available.

Additional information on certificates will be made available as soon as it is released.

For now, the best option for many producers will continue to be putting the cotton into the loan and subsequently forfeiting that cotton to the government.

Official says sales-tax holiday handed consumers $33 million

AUSTIN — Shoppers who purchased clothing and footwear during Texas' first sales-tax holiday, Aug. 6-8, saved nearly $33 million in state and local taxes.

Over those dates, shoppers purchased more than $400 million in tax-exempt clothing and shoes, about double the amount that normally would have been sold on a typical three-day weekend in August, Texas Comptroller Carole Keeton Rylander said.

"The sales tax holiday allowed families to stretch their shopping budgets at a critical time — the back-to-school shopping period," Rylander said in announcing the savings.

The 1999 Texas Legislature approved an annual sales tax holiday to fall on the first weekend of August each year.

Starting in 2000, cities, counties and other taxing entities will be allowed to opt out of the sales tax holiday and not offer the exemption from local sales taxes, but shoes and clothing price at less than $100 will continue to be exempt from the state sales tax.

Hacker hits state web sites
A computer hacker vandalized web sites of at least five state agencies Nov. 5-8, posting profanity.

Among those targeted were Texas Department of Protective and Regulatory Services, Department of Licensing and Regulation, Alcoholic Beverage Commission, state auditor's office and the Department of Public Safety.

All of the agencies' web sites use the Microsoft Windows NT Internet Information Server, The Associated Press reported.

Computer hacking is a federal crime, punishable by up to five years in prison and a $250,000 fine for each offense.

School safety discussed

Southwest Texas State University at San Marcos conducted a statewide summit on school safety Nov. 11 in Austin. Among topics discussed were school security, bullying and gang activity.

The university established a center to study causes and solutions for school violence in the wake of the Columbine High School shooting in Colorado last spring.

Attorney General John Cornyn, who spoke at the summit, called for a study on school violence earlier this year.

Other highlights

- Thousands of Texas veterans marking the last Veterans Day of the 20th century marched in a parade up Austin's Congress Avenue to the steps of the state capitol.

Bands played and speeches were made, honoring the men and women who pledged their lives and sacred honor to the country.

- Texas Parks and Wildlife Department has introduced the state's first wildlife conservation license plate, which sports the image of a horny toad and the slogan "Keep Texas Wild." Cost of the specialty plate is $25 in addition to regular registration fees.

- The state of Texas has terminated its contract with Wachenhut Corrections Corp. to run a state jail in Travis County. Last week, the Texas Department of Criminal Justice assumed operations of the 1,033-bed facility.

- State Rep. Leticia Van de Putte, D-San Antonio, moved to the state Senate last week after winning a special election to succeed the late Sen. Greg Luna, who died Nov. 6 of complications related to diabetes.
- The Texas Department of Transportation has released a list of the most problematic cars in 1998: Chevrolet Malibu and Cavalier, Dodge Caravan and Jeep Grand Cherokee.

Dairy project to visit Portales event again

SPECIAL TO THE JOURNAL
The Mobile Dairy Classroom, sponsored by the Southwest Dairy Museum of Sulphur Springs, Texas, will give educational demonstrations for Roosevelt County third-graders again during the Feb. 22-23 New Mexico Ag Expo in Portales.

Printed material will be provided for the students and their teachers.

In the 45-minute presentation, children can learn such dairy-related facts as vanilla being the most popular ice cream, cows have four stomachs, all children need two or three servings of milk per day, and there are 2,000 kinds of cheeses.

The classroom is 26 feet long and contains a fully operational milking parlor. The classroom carries a live cow and calf. The demonstrations can be enjoyed by all ages but are targeted to pre-kindergarten through sixth-grade children.

The instructors teach audiences the milking process, the characteristics and anatomy of dairy cows, and modern environmental and food-safety practices. Children will get to watch a milking demonstration and pet the cow.

The mobile classroom has been in operation since the late 1980s.

Small businesses urged to report scams

SPECIAL TO THE JOURNAL
LUBBOCK — Businesses that recognize scams but don't report them are preventing other businesses from being warned, according to the Lubbock Better Business Bureau.

A recent nationwide study indicates that nearly 29 percent of business office managers say their organizations have been targeted by some form of mail fraud.

Yet when asked what they would do if they had been victimized by mail fraud, only 29.5 percent of businesses surveyed indicated they would contact the U.S. Postal Service.

Less than 20 percent said they would report it to a national consumer protection organization. In contrast, 71.5 percent said it would be useful or very useful to receive free educational information on how to help protect their companies from fraud.

This independent study, commissioned by the Yellow Pages Publishers Association in cooperation with the Better Business Bureau system, underscores the reason both organizations sponsored the second annual "Protect Your Business Week" during the second week in November.

"This study underscores the need for businesses to educate employees responsible for paying bills to recognize and report unscrupulous and questionable offers for products and services," said Ed Blackman, executive vice president of the national not-for-profit trade association for the Yellow Pages publishing industry.

According to the Better Business Bureau, the most aggressive scams targeting businesses include:

- Bogus billing for Yellow Pages advertising;
- Vanity publications;
- Phony advertising solicitations;
- Fraudulent telemarketing offers for office supplies;
- Advance-fee loan brokers;
- Phony promotion/prize offers;
- Fund-raising appeals from questionable nonprofit organizations.

"Your organization's accounting department, or the individuals responsible for placing orders and paying bills, should be made aware of solicitations disguised as invoices and other dubious solicitations from unfamiliar companies or organizations," said Nan Campbell, president of the Better Business Bureau of the South Plains.

Consider these suggestions:

- Examine every invoice carefully;
- Contact a Better Business Bureau to see if it has information on the company involved;
- Look for invoices bearing the new "Get an Idea" trademarked of the Yellow Pages Advertising Council that is being used by a growing number of member publishers;
- Alert the state attorney general's office;
- Photocopy the solicitation and post it on company bulletin boards; and
- Notify the local postal inspector.

More information is available by contacting Nan Campbell at (806) 763-0459, ext. 229, or e-mailing presidentbbsouthplains.org.

Noisy toys can damage children's hearing

SPECIAL TO THE JOURNAL
HOUSTON — Noisy toys from Santa can do more than shatter "peace on earth" and good will toward men. They can damage a child's hearing.

"When selecting a toy, most parents are guided by the child's request, the color or the novelty. Parents assume that if a toy is in the store, it's OK. But that's not so," said Dr. Lois Sutton, a clinical professor of otorhinolaryngology at Baylor College of Medicine.

Only a few safety regulations address the noise levels of toys, so Sutton provides the following guidelines:

• If a toy makes any noise, parents should try it out before they take it home.

• Loud things can come in small packages, even plush toys. Test everything before you buy."

• If a parent has to raise their voice to be heard over the sound of the toy, if it hurts their ears or causes ringing in the ears, do not buy it.

"And remember, children don't usually play with toys the way the manufacturer intended. Sounds that may be tolerated at arm's length become dangerous when a child puts the toy to his or her ear."

Sutton notes that standards set by the Occupational Safety and Health Administration limit the time and length of noise exposure in the workplace to 80-85 dBA in an 8-hour period for adults.

The dBA is a scale that reflects the sensitivity pattern of human ears in decibels.

"OSHA recommends that hearing protection be worn in the workplace when loudness and ex-posure time exceed the standards. However, there are no standards for children," Sutton said.

Parents could be surprised to find that musical toys such as electric guitars, drums and horns emit sounds as loud as 120 dBA.

Toy phones can measure between 123 and 129 dBA, and toys that produce firearm sounds can measure 150 dBA a foot away from the noise source. According to Sutton, 85 decibels is about the loudness level of city traffic while 135 decibels is the level of a jackhammer.

"Noise exposure is cumulative," Sutton said. "Constant wear-and-tear on the fragile middle and inner ear structures can cause trauma. Over time, those noise exposures begin to add up.

"Loud may be considered cool, but we are seeing more and more high school students who suffer from hearing problems," she said. "Loud noise levels can become a habit."

Sutton urges parents to set limits, such as "the louder the toy, the shorter the play time."

And limits should include pre-teens and adolescents who listen to stereo systems with headphones and boom boxes with noise levels of 105-110 decibels, she added.

"If you can hear the music when you approach a child wearing a headset, it's too loud," she said.

GREAT PERFORMANCES

"From Vienna:
The New Year's Celebration 2000"

While Johann Strauss' "Wein, Weib, und Gesang" ("Wine, Women, and Song") may not sound politically correct today, its voluptuous melody and infectious waltz rhythm rang all the right bells in turn-of-the-century Vienna. That Vienna, a vortex of cultural change, marked the appearance of the Austrian capital in Europe's intellectual and artistic front ranks, but at heart, the city still swayed to more sensuous pleasures.

Now, Vienna 1900 takes on special significance as Walter Cronkite and the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra greet a new century in Great Performances "From Vienna: The New Year's Celebration 2000." From the city's famed Musikverein concert Hall, Riccardo Muti conducts Strauss waltzes, polkas, and marches as Cronkite hosts and provides side trips to sites from the astonishing Vienna that greeted the 20th century — a mere six months after Strauss' death on June 3, 1899.

Great Performances "From Vienna: The New Year's Celebration 2000" can be seen Saturday, January 1st at 9:00 p.m. on KENW-TV.

NOVA

"Tales from the Hive"

What's the buzz? Nova explores one of nature's most fascinating creatures on "Tales from the Hive."

"Tales from the Hive" is filmed in stunning micro-detail; as if by a bee with a Betacam, the program covers key moments in the life of a honey bee hive. The "Bee-cam" footage is some of the most extraordinary nature photography ever made, supplying intimate glimpses of bees on the wing and at home.

Honey bees are the ultimate intelligent insects, with a sophisticated system for communicating the location of food plus a selfless instinct for confronting danger and sharing resources. They have been called nature's most perfect society, but for many people their most commendable quality is the product of their labor: honey.

"Tales from the Hive" on Nova will be broadcast on Tuesday, January 4th at 8:00 p.m. The episode repeats Saturday, January 8th at 10:00 p.m. and Sunday, January 9th at 1:00 a.m.

Extension risk management economist named for Panhandle

SPECIAL TO THE JOURNAL

AMARILLO — Fred A. Hampel has been appointed risk management economist with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service in the Texas Panhandle. He fills the position formerly held by James D. Sartwelle III, who assumed the newly created risk management position in Bryan College Station.

Hampel will assist agricultural producers with risk management decisions through the Financial and Risk Management Assistance program.

This effort became a major part of Extension's Texas Risk Management Education Program, first funded by the Texas Legislature in 1997, then expanded during the last session.

"We're fortunate to have someone with outstanding financial management credentials join our risk management education team," said Roland D. Smith, professor and associate head for Extension in the department of agricultural economics at Texas A&M University in College Station.

Smith said the new specialist's experience in private industry and agricultural production, when coupled with his mastery of business principles, make him uniquely qualified to assist area producers in dealing with the many challenges and risks in agriculture, now and in the future.

Hampel holds a bachelor's degree in accounting and two graduate degrees: a master of science in agricultural economics and a master of accountancy from Kansas State University.

At KSU, he served as an instructor in the accounting department. He was a graduate research fellow in the university's agricultural economics department.

Previously, Hampel worked for Koch Industries of Wichita, Kan., as a financial and risk analyst in the refined products trading section.

The specialist also owned and operated diversified crop production, cattle feeding and seed processing businesses in Kansas for 12 years.

"I look forward to working with the agricultural producers in this area," Hampel said. "Assessing risk and incorporating that uncertainty into strategic financial decisions is of vital importance to any manager who wants to make sound, sophisticated decisions regarding a business' profitability and competitiveness."

The new FARM Assistance decision tool is state-of-the-art, and totally customized to the producer's operation.

"It uses the latest advancements in risk analysis techniques to look at business performance today and into the future," he added.

"I'm already seeing a large number of top managers wanting to take advantage of this opportunity," Hampel said. "They want to see how risk affects their bottom line over time, and how this risk-return relationship changes across alternative business plans."

More information is available by contacting Hampel at (806) 359-5401 or any local county agent.

Wildlife packets available to help establish pheasant/quail habitat

Managing land for wildlife is gaining interest in Texas, and the Texas Forest Service's West Texas Nursery in Lubbock has bare-root seedlings available to help landowners in creating habitat for pheasant and quail.

Now is the time to place orders, before species are sold out, said Ray Cragar, a silviculturist with the service.

The packets are $46 each, and include Russian olive, aromatic sumac, nanking cherry and plum.

Other packets are aimed at wild turkey (hackberry, bur oak, aromatic sumac and honeysuckle), deer (hackberry, flameleaf sumac, bur oak and four-wing saltbush) and squirrel (little walnut, Shumard oak, Osage orange and bur oak).

More information is available from the nursery at (806) 746-5801.
