NIEDRINGHAUS WINS

Missouri Republican Legislature Select Successor to Cockrell.

VICTORY CAME ON FIFTH BALLOT.

R. C. Keenan Held His Strength from the First, but Friends of Warner and Archer Went to the State Chairman.

Jefferson City, Mo., Jan. 6.—Thomas K. Niedringhaus, of St. Louis, chairman of the state central committee, was last night nominated for United States senator in absentia.

THOMAS K. NIEDRINGHAUS

Keenan, former national committeeman; Congressman Richard Bartholdt, United States District Attorney D. P. Dyer and Nathan Frank, all of St. Louis; William Warner, of Kansas City; and L. F. Parker, of Topeka.

The first ballot showed the following result: Niedringhaus, 36; Keenan, 28; Bartholdt, 3; Frank, 1; Parker, 1; Warner, 12; Dyer, 3. A majority of 47 was necessary to secure the nomination.

The second ballot resulted: Niedringhaus, 39; Keenan, 25; Parker, 12; Warner, 3; Dyer, 2; Bartholdt, 1.

The third ballot showed Niedringhaus creeping steadily, resulting: Niedringhaus, 40; Keenan, 20; Parker, 11; Warner, 3; Dyer, 3; Bartholdt, 1.

The fourth ballot stood: Niedringhaus, 40; Keenan, 20; Parker, 11; Warner, 3; Dyer, 3; Bartholdt, 1.

The fifth and final ballot resulted: Niedringhaus, 58; Keenan, 20; Parker, 11; Warner, 3; Dyer, 3; Bartholdt, 1.

As soon as the result of the ballot was announced there was much cheering and attention was directed to the Niedringhaus headquarters, where congratulations were showered upon the successful candidate.

The trunk belonging to Mrs. Chadwick was opened yesterday by Attorney Grovesman. It contained only wearing apparel for Mrs. Chadwick consisting of four dresses and an undersuit of underwear, the whole being worth, Mr. Grovesman thought, perhaps $400 or $500.

GLOOMY FOR ADAMS

"Gross Frauds" a Subterfuge That Peabodyites Use in Colorado.

RESULT TO BE DECLARED MONDAY

CHARLES of Adams Shows That Democratic Government Was Not His Will, Not He Allowed to Take His Seat.

Denver, Col., Jan. 6.—The procedure favored by the members of the legislature who believe that Gov. Peabody was elected by a majority of the votes legally cast is as follows.

When the votes are canvassed and show as it is admitted they will show that Alvin Adams possesses a majority of about 21,000; however, his election on the face of the returns, but to accompany this declaration with the statement that his least majority is a matter of doubt because of gross frauds perpetrated at the election.

A motion will then be made to refer the matter to a committee, which will report later than Monday. Similarly the supporters declare that such frauds were committed in 39 precincts of the city of Denver, as to which, in his opinion the election in those precincts and this report be adopted by the legislature, the 99 precincts will be thrown out, and the returns will show a majority for Gov. Peabody, who will then be declared by the legislature to be the legally elected governor of Colorado.

In his message to the legislature Gov. Peabody spoke as follows regarding elections.

"The fraudulent conduct of elections under our present system demands your immediate and concerted action. In a general way it seems sufficient to say that a modern primary and registration law should be enacted and the advisability of introducing voting machines should be considered. In my opinion we must admit that the elective franchise, especially in Denver, has been badly abused and prostituted, and a valid people protest and these outrages should be ended."

Find Purified Grain. The critics at work in a new deep well at Junction City, Kas., are finding all sorts of odd things.

First Oak, Alike Emblem. So far as known the first campaign emblem was a finger ring of copper. It was worn by the adherents of John Quincy Adams in 1828.

Autos in Our Cities. The automobiles in use in the United States are reported to number nearly 60,000. New York has the greatest number, 6,400.

Char. Relatives. The 22 nearest male relatives of the czar each receive a salary of $400,000 a year from the government.

CREED OF LONG LIFE.

"GRAND OLD MEN" OF ENGLAND UNFOLD SECRET.

Prominent Britishers Point Way to Longevity—Be Temperate in All Things—Exercise and Sleep Important Requisites.

London.—The secret of long life is a question which the editor of a weekly paper has been asking of a number of well-known septuagenarians and octogenarians, and some of the results of the inquiries are published below.

Lord Avebury, who notwithstanding a busy life in the realm of commerce, science, literature and politics, still is a hale man at 74, replies to the query raised in a clear, ringing, balding voice: "I believe the secret of long life, he declares, is to eat little, drink little, be as much in the open air as possible, keep the mind from anxiety and the body free from fatigue."

Frederic Harrison, chairman of the English positive sanitation, who long since passed his sixtieth year, and has been a constant traveler in his day, and who notwithstanding his years, still retains a powerful long walk, gives this advice: "I do not take tobacco, spirits nor any such things; rise from every meal with an appetite, walk daily two miles, sleep nightly seven hours, reverse all to which reverse is the end and be content with what you have."

Justin McCarthy, who is 76, says: "The best way to grow old is to keep steady, read good books, have much open air and physical exercise as possible and think as little as you can about the advance of years."

William Thomson (Lord Kelvin), the first scientist to be made a peer, is now in his eighty-first year. He is remarkable for his that the brilliant scientist who has done much for the world in the last 50 years is as hale as ever. The imagination which has produced so many epoch-making discoveries is still as vivid as in his early days.

For 50 years it has been my custom to go without lunch," remarked Lord Strathmore, now in his eightieth year. "That doesn't mean that I haven't taken a midday meal, but as a rule I only take two meals a day—breakfast and dinner. Of course, if there is anyone whom I particularly wish to meet, I am prepared to lunch with him. I see no harm in smoking a little, but I believe in temperance—yes, temperance in all things, whether food, drink or tobacco. At the same time, in my opinion, there are none more invigorating than those who insist on total abstinence. In sobriety and concentration lie the secrets of success."

REWARDS TRUSTY SERVANT

Millionaire Charles E. Hoyt Willa $50,000 to a West Virginia Girl.

Wheeling, W. Va.—Cecilia Tanswell, of this city, for several years a waitress in the West Virginia Hotel, has just received a check for $50,000 from the estate of Charles E. Hoyt, president of the West Virginia Hotel, who died in New York last week. The check was made payable to Cecilia Tanswell, a waitress in the hotel, who had been in the service of the late Mr. Hoyt for many years.

NEW TRIUMPH OF SURGERY

Operation Unlocks Jaws of Babe After Four Years of Intense Suffering.

Baltimore.—Science by an operation never before attempted, and performed by Dr. Charles G. Welch, of the Maryland university, of this city, has unlocked the jaws of six-year-old Pauline Plimpton, which for four years had been kept shut by liquid food administered through the aperture made by breaking a tooth.

The child was suffering from anchylorhisis of the joint. Dr. Welch decided on a new operation. The right jaw bone was laid open and about an inch of the bone at the junction of the jaw and temporal bone was chiseled away.

Next day the child could work her jaws without pain. She soon will be discharged from the hospital and is rapidly gaining in flesh.

Embroidered Towels.

"I wonder," said one housekeeper, "why girls do not often give us embroidered towels or napkins which they have embroidered themselves. Nothing ever goes to my heart more than a gift like that. Just a handsome initial is enough. If they choose to do a little draw-work on one or both ends, that is good, but I always fear in that case that they have tried their eyes. For a girl who has a little money, simply embroidered towels are old-fashioned but most acceptable gifts."—Chicago Daily News.

LIGE'S WORRIES.

AND HE DECIDES TO APPLY A REMEDY.

Lige Beck was, so the neighbors declared, the easy-goingest of his own good and the best of a bad bunch. Peter Beck, his brother, was just concluding a term in the county jail for larceny. It was not the first time that Peter had been behind the bars either. When he was not, like the operative criminal, "engaged in crime," he was living on his respectable brother's bounty. A maternal uncle, former Constable Wainman, also subsisted mainly on Lige Beck's money. Lige's sister, Mrs. Jim Drivson, would often descend upon him, with baggage, drunken husband and four children, and stay for a month or two at a time. Besides this Lige was spending money and general provisions to maintain a dozen worthless cousins, to say nothing of neighbors.

Lige had no family of his own. He had a steady, good-paying job in the iron works and money in the bank, to say nothing of his ownership of a row of cottages, in one of which he lived. One Sunday morning Lige was sitting at his kitchen door, looking absent-mindedly out on the wild cucumber vine in the backyard as he smoked his pipe. "It's good to be here alone in peace and quiet," he said half aloud. "I'm glad I done it."

He referred to the dispatch of a money order to his sister the day previous. She had asked him if she could not come and stay with him for a few days, as they were about to be turned out of their home for the non-payment of their rent and would have no place to stay while "Jim" looked around. "Lige sent the rent money."

Then he began to wonder what he should do with Peter when he came "out." As for getting Peter a job, he was almost afraid to try that. He had done that before and had been obliged to make good the young man's delinquencies.

While Lige was pondering over this the shrill, angry voice of a woman sounded from a neighboring porch. "You go home and wash your children's clothes, if you are too lazy and dirty to wash your own," said the voice. "Shook 'em?" of course I shook 'em, but I'll shake 'em again, the impel 'em ain't so much to blame, though. If they had a mother that knew any decent manners to teach 'em, they might be the triflin', worthless, destructive brats they are. You set a foot on my porch, Mrs. McAllister, an' I'll put this mop in your face."

"It's Mrs. Wier," said Lige, shaking his head solemnly. "What a tongue that woman has! It's awful! An' she's a nice smart-appearin' woman, too, an' a No. 1 housekeeper, an' pays her rent regular as the clock. What a tongue! Just listen to her. There! Mrs. McAllister has backed down. I knew it. There ain't nobody could stand up against a tongue like Mrs. Wier's. An' she's a nice-appearin' woman, too. I reckon her husband was glad to go to his rest."

There was a ring at the front door-bell. Lige got up with a sigh and opened the door in his Uncle Waldner. "Hello, Lige," said that good individual. "I thought I'd just look in an' see how you were makin' it. Fat an' program, ain't you? Some folks have 'em."

"Lige," he continued when he was comfortably seated in the wicker rocker. "I'm up against it. But I've got a scheme on hand that'll straighten me out financially and put me on my feet. Think of two weeks I'll be where I want you nobody a cent—not even you. But I've got a note to most respectable amount an' I want temporary accommodations to meet it."

"I've found one. The end of it was that Lige Beck, he ain't have the temporary accommodations."

"But I want he'll blow in," said Lige to himself when the uncle departed. He felt depressed. He felt more depressed when two hours later his sister popped in an appearance with three packages and four children. Jim, she explained, had had to use the rent money and the threatened eviction had taken on place. Jim would be along, too, before bedtime.

"There's Jim now," said the sister, as the doorknob rang again. It was Peter. And Peter had been celebrating his enlargement.

The next day Mrs. Wier received an unexpected visit from her landlord. If the visit was unexpected the proposal he made so stammeringly was still more so. It was nothing less than a proposal of marriage.

"In times," explained Lige, "I haven't got no one to look out for me as I've postered beyond reason."

"And you reckoned if I took you folks 'n' put postering you?" she asked. "You want protection?"

"Lige blushed. "I aint thought you was a fine-appearin' woman an' a No. 1 housekeeper," he faltered.

"Well," said the widow after a moment's consideration, "it's a queer world an' these queer people in it. But I've aint took you for a decent man an' if I aint mistaken I'll treat you right. I've had my own way to make an' there's some mean folks around—but you'll see. I aint goin' to have them relations of your around though. I speak plain."

"Just as you say," said Lige. "Yes, I guess it's 'Yes,'" answered Mrs. Wier.—Chicago Daily News.

RAIKO, THE MISER.

A JAPANESE FABLE. Once in a village of Japan there was a rich man named Raiko. His possessions and wealth increased every day, although his grudge was always with money, no beggar ever succeeded in getting one coin (mily) out of him. Few, indeed, dared ask him, and those who did never asked a second time.

night, when he opened to be alone for a few minutes, he heard a strange step in the room, and, opening his eyes, saw a boar (shudain) presly leaning over his pillow.

"Well, Raiko," said the priest, in a stern voice, "you are no better, are you? It looks as if the owl would soon have possession of you."

"What do you mean by daring to come into my room," cried the sick man, angrily, "an' say I have let the boar and their tempes loose on my life. The owl are no worse than you are! You need not come here to frighten me with threats of torment. You won't succeed in getting any of my money!"

"Keep your temper," answered his visitor, pleasantly. "I have come to see if you wish to be cured of this fever which is rapidly sapping your life."

"What do you know about illness?" asked Raiko, contemptuously. "Oh, I know a great deal. For instance, I know a positive cure for your ailment."

"Indeed, and if you should succeed in curing me, then you would demand pay?"

"Not even a rin," answered the boar. "I tell you I don't want any of your ill-gotten gains. Do you wish to know the cure or not? Will you live or die?"

"If you'll promise me solemnly," said the dying man, "not to ask for pay, I'll hear what you have to say."

"My cure," said the boar, gently. "It is your money that is weighing down your life. Struck out your full hands to the needy, loose your grudge, which is heavy with gold, and let others have a share in your wealth."

"An miserable wretch!" screamed the miser, beside himself with rage. "I knew you meant no good in coming here. As if I would give away my money! Even though you are, I will have your life!" and snatching a dagger from his bosom, he tried to stab the priest, but fell back exhausted on his pillow.

The boar repeated a few steps and regarded him calmly. "You are even meaner than I thought you, Raiko," he said at last. "I will now tell you the truth. I have noticed your sinfulness for some time, so I have come here every night and drawn the life blood from your veins. Now I shall have to kill you, for you are too mean to live!"

So saying, he blew out the light and Raiko's hair stood on end, as he felt some horrible creature grapple with him in the darkness. Defending himself with his dagger as well as he could, he screamed for help.

The servants rushed to the room, but found it in darkness. "Bring lanterns, quick!" cried their master. "I have been attacked by a murderous robber in the guise of a boar! You had no business to leave me here alone!"

When lights were brought to the scene, the sick man's monstrous hairy claw was found by the sick man's bed.

"I have wondered that creature, whatever it may be," said Raiko. "Run after it quickly and kill it!"

Guided by the drops of blood shed by the wounded monster, the servants followed it to the door and out into the garden, until at last Raiko and they came upon a hole dug in an ornamental mound.

As they stooped down to look at the enormous spider appeared at the entrance and said: "My friends, do not commit suicide by attacking the gods! But return to your master and try to show him his error, and to persuade him to change his way of life and overcome the terrible vices which have nearly caused his death."

The servants "knew that it was none other than the powerful and beneficent God Raiko, who had appeared as a boar, and was now, in the form of a gigantic spider, condescending to address them."

Trembling with fear they prostrated themselves and promised to obey him. When Raiko realized the real truth of the matter he felt great remorse for his conduct and resolved that, if his life was spared, he would be as generous as he had been covetous and grasping.

Time fully proved the sincerity of his repentance, and, giving away large sums of money to the poor and unfortunate, he lived to a good old age, respected and beloved.

Gillette Killed His Twin Sister. Riding Sun Ind., Jan. 5.—James Gillette, who with his sister, Mrs. Bell Seward, and Mr. and Mrs. Myron Barber, was indicted for the murder of his twin sister, Elizabeth Gillette, was found guilty and sentenced to life imprisonment.
