A QUICK READ OF THE NEWS

Historic signatures on view

For the first time in 130 years, the public will be able to gaze upon the original signatures of Billy the Kid's mom and other founders of Wichita, Kan.

On Monday, Judge Paul Buchanan, as chief judge of the 18th Judicial District, delivered the papers, a petition for Wichita to be incorporated, to the Wichita-Sedgwick County Historical Museum.

According to The Wichita Eagle, those papers hold 124 signatures, including that of Catherine McCarty — Billy the Kid's mother.

The papers had been stored for years in the Hutchinson salt mines with other Sedgwick County records.

When she signed the petition, McCarty owned and operated the City Laundry on North Main. She was the only woman to sign the petition.

Other signatures include those of William Greiffenstein, the man most Wichita historians consider the "father of Wichita" and who is credited for developing Douglas Avenue, the city's main downtown thoroughfare; William Finn, an early surveyor of Sedgwick County; and John Price Hilton, a land speculator who was elected Sedgwick County's first superintendent of schools and whose great-granddaughter is U.S. Supreme Court Justice Sandra Day O'Connor.

Bob Puckett, director of the museum, said he was more than happy to receive the papers and plans to place them in the museum's exhibit called "The Magic City."

Originally the petition was presented to Probate Judge Reuben Riggs for incorporation on July 21, 1870. At that time only 1,000 people lived in the county; 537 were eligible to vote.

In many ways the petition is a who's who of not only Wichita's founders, but also of the Old West. It is the basis for all land titles and future development of Wichita.

JOURNAL STAFF REPORT

If it seems a little early for boll traps caught weevils. weevils in the Bailey County area, last week's trapping results from the Texas Boll Weevil Eradication Foundation bear that out.

In fact, Bailey County traps captured only eight of the pests last week — which means that about

14 percent of the county's active

Most of the neighboring counties had even fewer weevils, with Lamb County reporting one and neither Parmer nor Castro counties reporting any at all.

Cochran County, to the south, reported 47 weevils caught in 38 percent of its active traps.

Few weevils found in early checks of area fields

Further to the southeast, however, the story was different. Garza County (Post) already had weevils reported from all its active traps, though its total of 115 bugs fell short of several counties' reports.

Hale County reported 189 weevils trapped and Lubbock County reported 185.

Crosby County reported by far the highest total (420), but since much of the county lies below the Caprock, the climate is much warmer. Farmers off the Caprock voted Wednesday to seek affiliation with a Rolling Plains weevil zone rather than the High Plains.

Texas 4-H roundup is next week

SPECIAL TO THE JOURNAL COLLEGE STATION Texas 4-H will "round up" the best of more than 997,000 state 4-H'ers June 12-16.

Texas 4-H Roundup is an annual time for education, competition, fellowship and fun for about 3,300 4-H members and volunteers who will flood the Texas A&M University Memorial Student Center.

The theme for this year's roundup is "Securing the Future."

Roundup activities for the high school-aged members will range from competitions to community service, spirit rallies to assemblies and motivational speakers to entertainment.

"Roundup is a key time for members to exhibit their knowledge in a wide array of project programs that range from agriculture to home economics, and business to personal development," said Gayle Hall, an Extension Service 4-H and youth development specialist.

"4-H'ers do this through competitions in judging, public speaking, method demonstrations, food, fashion and talent performances," Hall

Also during the event, more than $1 million will be given in scholarships to 4-H graduates.

Roundup will combine the efforts of 4-H clubs from across the state in a community service project for Texas Children's Hospital in Houston and the Dallas Children's Hospital.

Roundup participants are asked to bring new stuffed animals to be given to the hospitals.

More information on how to get involved with 4-H as a member or volunteer is available by contacting a county Extension office.

Preston advises fighting bagworms now

JOURNAL STAFF REPORT

Now is the best time for South Plains residents to spray for bagworms in junipers and other trees and shrubs, according to Bailey County Extension Agent Curtis Preston.

Spring hatching began in early May and is usually completed in about three weeks, Preston said.

Bagworm larvae emerge from hatching eggs inside last year's bags and begin feeding on leaves. They soon begin to construct their own protective bag of silk, twigs and leaves, making them camouflaged and hard to see.

As the larvae and their bags grow, control becomes more difficult.

Bagworms feed throughout the summer months, building their bags to a length of 1 to 12 inches. In the fall, bagworms become adults, mate, and the females lay eggs inside their bags. They overwinter in these bags, which are a familiar sight hanging on trees and shrubs. Each female bag contains from 500 to 1,500 eggs.

The deadline for receipt of applications is June 26.

Since the bagworm only completes one generation a year and spreads very slowly from plant to plant, picking the bags off infested plants in the winter will help control the pest.

If bagworms were present on a plant last year and no control measures were applied, however, the chances are good that an insecticide will be needed this spring.

Insecticides that can be used to control bagworms include sevin, dursban, diazinon, malathion and orthene. The biological control Bacillus thuringiensis also can be used.

To obtain effective control. thorough coverage of foliage is necessary.

The addition of a small amount of liquid soap or surfactant to the spray solution will improve control by helping the insecticide adhere to the treated trees and shrubs.

Some plants deserve a place in the garden just for kicks

By RONN SMITH Editor

There are a few plants that beg to be grown just for fun. I'm not necessarily talking about the orchids or the dahlias or even the Texas bluebonnets — flowers that people get hooked on and grow year after year.

Possibly the most commonly grown "fun plants" are ornamental gourds. Some people just get a kick out of seeing what they get - and maybe they develop a hobby of turning the gourds into water dippers, birdhouses or whatever.

One of my favorite Looney Tunes plants is giant fennel (Ferula communis). Now most of you probably don't get a clue from the name "fennel" because in the supermarket you walk right past the edible fennel without registering what it looks like.

Fennel has such lacy leaves that they appear almost not to be there. Giant fennel's leaves are much larger and heavier, but they still have that lacy effect.

With giant fennel, the foliage is apt to grow 3 feet high and that far across. This is in spring and early summer. When the weather gets hot, the foliage dies. Just when you think the plant must be turning roots up, the fun begins: A big, bare stalk shoots up out of the ground.

This stalk is so big and so bare that it looks something like the flower stalk on a century plant. In fact, in areas such as ours where century plants are common, you'd probably mistake giant fennel's bloom stalk for that of a century plant. Chances are you'd think century plant but with something different about it that you wouldn't be able to put your finger on.

Seen from a distance, the main difference is that the flower sprays on a century plant's stalk are arranged horizontally where giant fennel's are more globe-shaped.

The Heronswood Nursery catalog states that this stalk may rise to 10 feet or more in height. Sometimes it is indeed several feet taller than that.

The Heronswood catalog also states that the yellow flower balls are spectacular when the rays of the setting sun shine through them, and they are. The plants lend themselves to that situation, preferring full sun — though I advise not putting them against a west wall on the High Plains. The reflected heat of our summers can cook them to the point where they don't do well.

They also need some moisture in order to form that giant flower stalk.

Perhaps the biggest drawback to giant fennel is that the plants you purchase will be small and will take two or three years to bloom.

Apparently they are sold small because plants in the genus Ferula tend to develop a taproot, making it hard to transplant bigger specimens. This should also make you wary of trying to move them after a year or two if you decide you don't like where you put them.

But for the most part, giant fennel is a hoot to grow — and when it blooms, it will attract just about as much attention as a century plant under similar circumstances!

the present.

Think of it simply in terms of dollars and cents: Farmers are struggling to make a profit at all, so they aren't likely to use more pesticides than they think they need.

Homeowners, on the other hand, may have to buy 10 or 20 — or 50 — times what they need, simply because of the packages that are available. Once the money is spent, many people apparently don't hesitate to increase the dosage, figuring "more is better" when the opposite may be true.

In the process, they turn their lawns into toxic cesspools for the kids or grandkids to crawl around in. The mind boggles.

Insurance ground-rules changing

AUSTIN - Texans who are having trouble finding insurance coverage on residential property or tenant coverage on personal property may find solutions under new rules adopted by the Texas Department of

The rules implement 1999 legislation allowing certain homeowners to file residential property insurance applications directly with the Texas Department of Insurance without having to go through agents.

The change improves a 3year-old residential Market Assistance Program that targets 411 ZIP codes deemed "underserved" for residential insurance.

The ZIP codes include innercity neighborhoods, rural communities and other areas where home insurance may be hard to buy.

"Home ownership is part of 'he American dream, but it's difficult for certain Texans to achieve if they can't find residential property insurance in the standard market," Insurance Commissioner José Montemayor said in adopting the new rules.

"The homeowners MAP improves the chances of fulfilling that dream, and now it's easier that ever for consumers to use 'his program," he said.

Gains include 6,500 construction jobs in April and 32,900 over the year.

The lowest unemployment rate in the state's Standard Metropolitan Statistical Areas was 1.4 percent in Bryan-College Station, followed by Austin-San Marcos at 1.9, Lubbock at 2.3. Waco at 2.8 and Dallas at 2.9 percent.

The highest unemployment rate was 13 percent in McAllen-Edinburg-Mission, followed by Brownsville-Harlingen-San Benito at 8.76, El Paso at 8.3, Beaumont-Port Arthur at 7.8 and Laredo at 7.1 percent.

Agreement reached

GEICO, a major auto insurer, has agreed to return about $500,000 deducted from Texas policyholder claims when damaged auto parts were replaced by newer parts.

In February, the Texas attorney general sued 88 other insurance companies, alleging that this practice, called "betterment," is illegal under the Texas auto policy.

GEICO was not sued because the company quickly agreed to change its practices and refund money to policyholders, Attorney General John Cornyn said. GEICO will refund any de-

A new program that enables students to take a portion of the nied by a licensed hunter 17 or training at home is available in several Texas cities.

> The home-study option allows students to study in the convenience of their homes and then attend a one-day, hands-on hunting skills course. This course also meets the mandated hunter-education requirements for Texas and all other states and provinces.

There are three steps to certification under the home-study course. Those interested in the program can contact a testing site to inquire about openings and availability of home-study materials or purchase the materials from participating merchants.

Students will receive a field guide, workbook, outdoor hunting annual and the "Safeguarding Our Heritage" video. The suggested retail price for the materials is $14.99.

Hunter education home-study course materials are available online (use keywords "texas outdoor life hunters field guide" in the books section) and at all major sporting goods retailers in Texas.

Students who take the course at home must complete the workbook and attend a one-day classroom and field-exercise course at a scheduled testing session and score at least 80 percent on the written exam.

A $5 registration fee will be assessed for the one-day class. Students must also complete a one-hour session on hunter responsibility, game laws and ethics, as well as a hunter-skills trail and a live-firing exercise.

Selling or renting a home presents dilemma

SPECIAL TO THE JOURNAL

In today's economy, where job changes are commonplace, many homeowners come right up against a difficult decision: Should I rent or should I sell?

It's a real dilemma for homeowners who must take a long-term job assignment away from the home office.

"The renting vs. selling question is really two questions," said Richard Roll, president of American Homeowners Association. "First, is it more financially advantageous to sell or rent? Second, are you prepared to be an absentee landlord?"

To address the financial question, first get an independent appraisal of the home's market value. Independent means finding a certified, professional appraiser and not relying on a real estate agent's opinion.

The homeowner might be surprised by the answer. Many homes have appreciated substantially in recent years, and some could be worth a lot more than the owner expects.

Next, determine the monthly costs of ownership, and compare the costs to the potential income from renting out the home. Add up mortgage costs, insurance, taxes, utilities, maintenance, fees, etc.

Some experts recommend including a vacancy factor of 5 percent to 10 percent of the annual rental income, to account for vacancies between leases or unexpected renter problems.

Next, figure out how much the home will rent for. Go to the rental classifieds in the local newspaper, ask your neighbors, or consult with a rental agency.

If, after subtracting monthly costs from monthly rental income the result is negative, then the home will have a loss (before tax considerations) as a rental property.

If the result is positive, compare that income stream with the short-term financial gains and tax considerations of selling.

Finally, consider the work and potential aggravation of becoming a landlord.

Would the owner be willing to handle all aspects of the job, or will the house generate enough money to pay a property manager to do it?

More information on any aspect of buying or owning a home is available on the Internet www.ahahome.com, the web site of the American Homeowners Association.
