Cover Up or Pay Up

PARIS - Sun worshippers in the up-market French Mediterranean resort of La Grande-Motte are being told to cover up when they step off the beach, or else face a fine.

Under pressure from local shopkeepers who believe the sight of semi-naked -- mainly male -- bodies into their stores may upset the genteel retirees who favor the town, the mayor's office has issued local police with 500 T-shirts to hand out to men and women wearing only swimwear.

People may be handed a T-shirt the first time they are caught parading their flesh through the town, but a second violation results in a fine of up to 38 euros (dollars). "We've got far fewer people who walk around unclothed now," said Jean-Michel Weiss, deputy police chief in La Grande-Motte, located between Montpellier and the picturesque Camargue region. "People have understood the message."

There have been no fines since the campaign began on July 13, and only 60 warnings given.

Love is for the birds

BRUSSELS - A woman dumped by her bird-loving boyfriend took her revenge by setting free some 350 of his feathered friends, a Belgian paper said on Monday.

The unidentified woman allegedly opened the doors of three aviaries in the Belgian coastal town of Bredene on Friday, letting fly hundreds of her ex's birds, most of them canaries, Het Volk daily said.

Neighbors and friends of the boyfriend, Noel Billiet, had since helped catch about 100 of them, it said.

"We've been catching birds for the past three days," a town local told the daily. "The animals are so tame you can catch them with a fishnet."

"It's incredible that someone would let those birds free out of revenge," he added.

The value of the birds is estimated at 5,000 euros ($5,050), the daily said.

Don't assume bugs in the garden are bad

By RONN SMITH
Editor

Earlier this year I recommended a book about native American bulbs, and apparently that book has been late coming off the press.

So this time I'm not sure I'm recommending a new book (Insects and Gardens by Eric Grissell; Timber Press). I just want to pass along some of the philosophy contained in the book, as expressed by a book reviewer in the June issue of the British magazine Gardens Illustrated.

We live in a part of the world where the general philosophy runs something like this: Any creature that moves in the garden is there to be killed; any plant not growing in a straight line is there to be killed; any plant growing where it wasn't planted by the hand of man is there to be killed.

It isn't that we're blood-thirsty — most of us were just taught that way and never have thought about whether it makes sense or not.

My point is that creating a sterile landscape is the opposite of gardening, and Americans are finally beginning to appreciate the balance and diversity of a more natural, less manicured yard.

The review of Insects and Gardens was written by Chris Baines, who is identified by the magazine as an expert wildlife in the garden.

Baines introduces himself by stating "As a horticulture student in the 1960s, I was taught that gardens should be killing fields. However, I've always argued that if you want a landscape rich in the more charismatic creatures (such as birds), then it pays to coddle the creepy crawlies, and that is undoubtedly the philosophy championed in this book."

Baines says the book does an excellent job of explaining the value of insects for pollination, and how predator insects keep down populations of aphids and flies.

"The message of the book is that the insect world is indispensable to good gardening, and that too much tidiness, particularly at soil level, will rob us of more allies than enemies," he writes.

He says Insects and Gardens is "thoroughly entertaining" and manages to explain scientific concepts in an understandable way — sometimes even making the lesson "amusing."

"Anyone who reads this fascinating book is almost bound to find themselves on hands and knees this summer, checking out the wildlife that most gardeners overlook," Baines concludes.

I got interested in this type of thing several years ago when I had a sizable border of the dwarf New England aster known as 'Snowdrift.'

I had noticed some weird magenta-and-orange (I'm not kidding) wasp-like critters on the flowers, and I wanted a closer look.

When I got on hands and knees and bent very close to the flowers, I saw a whole community of creatures rushing around in those white flowers. Besides black and brown, there were brilliant shiny green ones, brilliant yellow ones, stripes and spots of various colors.

I couldn't believe it — I had been gardening for 45 years or so, and certainly had grown white asters before, but I had never seen anything like that because I never got close enough.

The effect was like Grand Central Station, but most of the inhabitants were less than an eighth of an inch long!

If you rely on peat moss to help moisture retention (or lower the pH of your soil), you'll be interested to know that the British government has negotiated an agreement that ends the commercial extraction of peat from Britain's largest lowland peat bogs.

This is, of course, a praiseworthy thing from an environmental standpoint.

While most of what we get comes from Canada, I believe, and probably some from the Northeast, it's probably safe to predict: The price of peat for garden use could

Credit OK may depend on little-known credit score

SPECIAL TO THE JOURNAL
ROCKVILLE, MD. — Anyone who is not paying attention to his credit score may be paying too much for credit cards, mortgages and car loans — or might not be approved for new credit.

"Credit scoring is the concern that comes up most often with our clients," said Steve Rhode, president and co-founder of Myvesta, a financial-health center. "People are realizing that their credit scores are becoming more important, although few understand what they mean or what they can do to make their scores better."

The exact scoring formula is not disclosed, but certain factors are known to affect a credit score. "Your payment history, amount of debt and the types of accounts you hold are all taken into account when your credit score is calculated," Rhode said. "The length of your credit history also plays an important part; the longer your history the better."

A better score could mean big savings. A difference of 1 percentage point in interest on a $150,000 mortgage means a $100 savings every month. That adds up to $36,000 over the life of the loan.

That calculation compares a 6.5 percent interest rate to a 7.5 percent interest rate on a 30-year loan.

Rhode offers these general guidelines to explain what a credit score means:

° 700 and up: This is considered an excellent score and most lenders will give the holder an "A" rating, meaning the person will have access to the best interest rates.

° 600 to 699: A score in this range is considered good and most lenders will give the holder a "B" rating, meaning the person might still qualify for good interest rates but probably will not have access to the lowest rates.

° 500 to 599: This score probably means some past-due payments or an account in collections. Most lenders will give the holder a "C" rating and require at least 2 percentage points more interest than people with excellent credit.

° 499 and below: A score in this range means there may have been liens against property, or a lender may have sued or foreclosed on property. A person with this record might still be eligible for a loan, but the rates may not be favorable.

The concept is based on the belief that many out-of-state tourists come to Texas they want to see "the West" — not just the tall buildings in Dallas or Houston.

The program is intended to guide tourists through the various regions of Texas. The award will include an initial $50,000 to get the program started.

The regional committee includes representatives from Tulia, Lubbock, Clarendon, Panhandle, Amarillo, Mobeetie, Pampa, Wheeler, Borger, Quitaque, Floydada, Lorenzo, Post, Friona, Hereford, Lockney, Plainview, Crosbyton, Morton and Muleshoe.

Once the Plains Trail is approved, the county judge in each county will be contacted for recommendations about county sites to include on the trail.

Seventy-five percent of the counties in the region must participate in order for the Plains Trail to be accepted.

Letters of support from historical, governmental and civic organizations and individuals will be requested for the proposal as well as evidence of financial and in-kind commitment to assist in funding the project.

More information, contact Janie Headrick, program director of the Texas Historical Commission, at (512) 463-5754, or Vivian White at 272-3370.
