A QUICK READ OF THE NEWS

Money really grows in bank

A Madison, Wis., woman who went to the bank for a $1,500 cashier's check walked out with a check for $150 million.

Vanita McDuffy didn't look at the check for two days, but she said she passed out after noticing all the zeros.

A spokeswoman for First Federal Savings Bank said the bank discovered the error the same day and stopped payment.

McDuffy plans on returning the check and said she wants the original amount of $1,500 when she gets her new check — but maybe a little for her honesty.

They walk alike, talk alike

Darrell Felton didn't need a "Get Out of Jail Free" card. He had his brother.

Felton, 20, is accused of walking out of the Greene County Jail in Springfield, Mo., by posing as his brother, who also was locked up.

Felton was recaptured at a friend's house about 14 hours after the escape. His brother, Matthew Felton, 17, had been jailed on a misdemeanor offense. When his friends posted the $175 bond, the older brother walked out instead.

Officers discovered they had released the wrong man when friends came back to the jail and told them.

The friends then asked whether Matthew Felton could be released, hoping to free both men.

Just say no to hugs

Hugging has become a standard greeting at Pequot Lakes (Minn.) School, with some students saying they get 40 to 60 hugs a day, but the school isn't embracing the idea.

Teachers dole out reprimands for those caught hugging, or detention if a student is caught three times in a day or four times in a week.

Meeting in Lubbock to focus on farmers' lawsuit

JOURNAL STAFF REPORT

A March 5 meeting has been scheduled in Lubbock to discuss the allegations behind a lawsuit filed against the federal government.

Two of the farmers involved are from Clovis — Wesley Myers and Russell Grider.

Oral arguments in the case are scheduled to be heard at 9 a.m. (Mountain time) March 13 in the 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Denver.

The lawsuit, filed Jan. 24, 2000, in U.S. District Court in Denver seeks to force the federal government to honor commitments made to agriculture dating back to the Agriculture Adjustment Act of 1933.

The plaintiffs claim that agricultural producers have been hurt by the government's refusal to "implement statutory law requiring market regulation, antitrust action and foreign currency exchange stabilization," as provided in the act.

The 1933 law was intended as a temporary emergency measure during President Franklin D. Roosevelt's New Deal, but according to the lawsuit has been neither terminated nor honored by succeeding presidents.

The federal district judge dismissed the case as "a political question" but the appeals court agreed to hear oral arguments from the parties involved.

Named as defendants are the president, the U.S. secretary of agriculture, the U.S. secretary of the treasury and the United States of America.

The lawsuit "seeks to compel the government to obey its own laws that require maintenance of market conditions which affect farm prices, protect consumer interests and provide stability in international monetary policy," according to a statement being circulated by Lubbock farmer Bennie

Energas officials try to stop flight of farm users

JOURNAL STAFF REPORT

Several representatives of Energas met with area farmers Monday at the Bailey County Coliseum to explain the company's position in regard to skyrocketing natural gas prices and answer questions from local residents.

Kelly Grimes, general manager of Energas Agricultural Services, began her presentation by saying she was aware there has been a lot of discussion about the new contracts Energas sent out recently.

But, Grimes said, the documents are "sound, standard contracts" that differ very little from contracts on file in previous years.

Grimes also stressed three factors that have produced the escalating prices of the past few months:

- Temperatures 20 percent colder than average for the past few months;
- Minimal natural gas production in recent years and not enough infrastructure in place to meet the sudden swell in demand; and
- Inability to meet increased demand from new gas-powered electric generating plants, many of them in Texas.

Since the gas industry had long known that new electric plants would be coming on-line, the cause-and-effect relationship between the last two factors came close to implying a lack of sound planning on the part of gas suppliers.

Making things better

Workers were out Tuesday repairing the railroad crossing just north of "the crossroads" in downtown Muleshoe. Foreman Raul Sánchez of Lubbock (at left near the base of the crossing arm), along with John Malone of Lubbock and Lupe Diaz of Plainview (both near the front-end loader) said they hope to get the work done by Friday.

Williams quintuplets developing personalities

JOURNAL STAFF REPORT

The five babies born recently to a former Muleshoe resident and his wife may still be three or four weeks away from leaving the hospital, but they're already developing individual personalities.

The four boys and one girl were born Jan. 24 at Northwest Texas Hospital to Matt and Leah Williams, who already had a 2 1/2-year-old daughter. Matt Williams is a 1975 graduate of Muleshoe High School.

The former Muleshoe man said Tuesday that the boys — Aidan Scott, Dixon Wayne, Ethan Noble and Garret Carl — and their new sister, Mattison Caye, are all doing well and beginning to show signs of individuality.

"One, we can tell, is going to be kind of a loner," he said. "Then one of the boys and the girl are kind of connected, and the other two boys are connected."

He said the relationship between the babies in the two pairs is easy to detect. "You can be holding one of them while the nurses are doing something to the other one, and the one you're holding will start making a fuss," he said.

Williams also said he would never have dreamed that becoming the father of quintuplets would have affected his life as much as it has. "The whole town has gone crazy up here," he said. Strangers stop him on the street to give him money for the babies, and he said Friday that a church recently donated a van for the family.

The babies are the grandchildren of Nig Williams of Muleshoe, George Williams of Littlefield and Harold and Beverly Boertsler of Tulsa. Great-grandparents are Adrian and Dorothy Scott and Montie and Reba Boertsler, all of Duncan, Okla.

Debbie Fahnttrapp and Louvenia Garlington, both of Muleshoe, are among the quintuplets' aunts.

Donations for the family can be made to the Williams Quintuplet Family at any branch of Amarillo National Bank. More details on how to donate will be published in the Journal.

Art students to compete at state

Two Muleshoe High School art students, Sonny Chávez and Nikki Bonds, will compete at the state level in art on April 7 at the University of Houston.

The two are among the 10 percent of top winners at the Region 17 Visual Arts Scholastic Event who advanced to state competition. The regional event was Feb. 17 at Ed Irons Junior High in Lubbock.

Chávez advanced in Division 4, which is the advanced level, and Bonds advanced in Division I. He is an Art 4 student while she is in Art 1.

State competitors are chosen from the top-scoring works by a panel of judges from across the region. They must undergo an interview with the judge in which they explain the concept of their artwork; they are rated both on the quality of the work and on their understanding of the elements and principals related to their work.

Muleshoe students competed at regional with those from 5A schools such as Lubbock High, Coronado and Monterey.

Other Muleshoe students receiving top ratings at Lubbock included Roxanne García, who rated in the top level of Division 4; Joey Tucker, Travis Tunnell, Olive Alarcón, Andy Domínguez, Cassandra Gonzales, Juana Segura, Myra Segura, Louis Simpson and Raymond Toscano.

Their art teacher is Hellen Adrian.

World Day of Prayer service set

Muleshoe's United Methodist Women have scheduled a one-hour World Day of Prayer service at noon March 2 in the First United Methodist Church fellowship hall.

The event will include a covered-dish luncheon, and those bringing food are asked to arrive by 11:45 a.m. Working women are not expected to bring a dish.

The World Day of Prayer is sponsored worldwide by Church Women United, which does not have a chapter in Bailey County. The goal of the event is to include all Christian women in a period of prayer around the world.

A nursery will be provided for small children; parents are asked to feed them before they are brought to the nursery.

Cowart wins more gymnastics honors

Amber Cowart of Muleshoe won the double-mini trampoline event in January's U.S.A. vs. Canada Winter Cup Challenge in in Primm, Nev.

That win came the day after she won the Age Group Team Trial in the same event.

The Winter Cup Challenge was Cowart's first competition at the elite level. "This was a huge win for Amber — she competed against athletes that were twice her age and experience," said Will Green, head coach of Cowart's Acrosports team. "She just acted like she was doing business as usual."

Cowart also finished third in individual trampoline and first in synchronized trampoline with her partner, Kasie Landers of Levelland.

The Nevada win almost assured Cowart of a place on the world championship team to compete in Denmark in August and defend her Age Group world title. All she needed was to finish at least third at remaining meets in Snyder, Texas, and Greensboro, N.C.

Hearing held on rising cost of natural gas

SPECIAL TO THE JOURNAL

AUSTIN — In response to the rising cost of natural gas being faced by consumers, the Railroad Commission of Texas held a hearing Monday in Austin focusing on gas utility issues.

According to Commission Chairman Michael L. Williams, Commissioner Charles R. Matthews and Commissioner Tony Garza, the goal was to develop short-term recommendations that may aid in stabilizing price fluctuations.

The commission heard testimony from invited speakers representing consumers, businesses, city governments, utilities and natural-gas suppliers.

The speakers each offered remarks about the impact of recent higher natural-gas prices, and provided suggestions for heading off similar problems in the future.

Commissioners will utilize the suggestions to work out formal recommendations that will be shared with the 77th Legislature.

"All Texans have been affected by higher natural gas prices, and the impact may be felt for some time to come," Williams said. "By taking time to hear from uninterested parties, we now look forward to developing short-term solutions that can benefit everyone."

Matthews noted, "Over the last few months, we've heard various accounts of natural-gas prices hitting us in the pocket-book, but today's hearing marked the first time all sides could present their case. This unique opportunity will allow the commission to develop specific recommendations the Legislature has asked for and can use."

Added Garza, "While the price of natural gas is market-driven, there may be steps the Railroad Commission should be taking to alleviate the 'shock' that consumers are feeling," Garza said. "Today's hearing sends a signal to all Texans that the Railroad Commission is looking at all sides of this issue and taking action."

Recommendations coming out of Monday's meeting are expected to be voted on at the commission's March 1 before being passed on to the Legislature's House Committee on Energy Resources and the Senate Natural Resources Committee.

Veronicas receiving more attention as knowledge increases

By RONN SMITH
Editor

For anyone interested in the recent column on low-growing veronica species I recommended as groundcovers, there is a nice short article called "Early-blooming Veronicas" in the April issue of Country Living Gardener magazine.

Specifically, there is a nice color photo of Veronica liwanensis, the flat, ground-hugging species I recommend so highly for our area. (And the article still doesn't provide a common name, so I don't suppose there is an English name for this Turkish species.)

The article is written by Lauren Springer, who is certainly one of the "hottest" garden writers in America right now. She recommends using V. liwanensis between paving stones and also as a carpet through which spring-flowering bulbs can poke their flowers. Veronica oltensis, which has been less successful for me but I think was always planted in too much sun, is recommended for the same uses. The foliage on this species is finer than that on V. liwanensis, so there would be some uses where it is more desirable.

Both species carpet the ground with bright blue flowers; V. liwanensis has a lighter (almost pure white) eye in the center.

Springer's article mentions several other low-growing veronicas, including a list she recommends for dry soil:

- V. armena — a mounding plant with needle-like foliage;
- V. cinerea — a sub-shrubby mound with linear silver evergreen foliage;
- V. surculosa — spreading, with hairy gray evergreen foliage. This is the only one on this list that doesn't have blue flowers, this one having white or pale pink;

- V. chamaedryoides ssp. pseudocinerea — another sub-shrubby mound, with narrow evergreen silver foliage; and
- V. turilliana — a lax gray-green evergreen mound.

Springer's most recent book is called Passionate Gardening, published by Fulcrum Press and co-authored with Rob Proctor, another well-known garden writer.

I haven't read it yet, but I wouldn't hesitate to recommend it if you get the chance to read it. It will be worthwhile reading.

With spring bulbs starting to "pop" around the warmer parts of the region, don't forget the edible end of things.

People who planted spinach should enjoy homegrown salad greens very soon — the recent warmer weather really got the ball rolling as far as vegetable growth. Plants are already available at garden centers, if you didn't grow it from seed.

It's also time to set out plants of the cabbage family, including broccoli, cauliflower, Brussels sprouts (for a summer crop, though I mainly recommend this for fall gardening), broccoli raab and maybe even kohlrabi, the latter in the southern Panhandle and similar climates and in another couple of weeks farther north.

There's probably no big rush about setting out strawberry plants, especially at higher altitudes north of Hereford, but now is a good time — so they can establish a few roots before the hot weather arrives. Those of you in the southern Panhandle and adjacent parts of New Mexico who are interested in starting strawberries this year should at least start getting the bed ready.

Of course, strawberries can be planted after the weather warms up, but they will need more water and TLC — which means they'll require some time.

Agriculture secretary addresses forum

SPECIAL TO THE JOURNAL

Presenting the first major speech of her newly begun tenure as the 27th U.S. secretary of agriculture, Ann Veneman last week discussed the Bush administration stance on food and fiber policy.

She appeared Thursday before attendees of the 2001 USDA Agricultural Outlook Forum in Arlington, Va.

Veneman highlighted the need for an improved safety net for the production sector that works within an open-market framework.

She said government cannot force solutions, and added that the approach taken by House Agriculture Committee Chairman Larry Combest challenging different commodity groups to come together to develop a comprehensive set of program alternatives was one that should improve the process.

Of note in her speech was mention of the important role pest/disease prevention and eradication programs would have in helping producers eliminate production-robbing problems and increased costs.

Veneman discussed key areas for the administration, including:

- Pursuit of an aggressive trade policy to expand exports and open new markets;
- Provide a strong safety net and continue toward market-based solutions;
- Expand efforts to improve food safety and the use of new technologies;
- Develop new regulations within a sound science framework; and
- Work toward pro-agriculture reforms to tax policies.

With the administration yet to release its budget, Veneman was unable to provide any significant level of detail about the key points she highlighted.

Also lacking was comment about potential short-term relief that might be advanced to aid producers in 2001, and on the status of publication of the final rule to trigger the release of 2000 disaster assistance payments.

In other presentations given Thursday, World Trade Organization Director-General Mike Moore and Ambassador Rita Derrick Hayes, deputy

U.S. trade representative to the WTO, discussed the progress that has been made and the potential for further agreements when the next round of talks begins later this year.

Opening the forum was a panel discussion on the development of new farm legislation at the end of the current program.

Commodity-specific breakout sessions were conducted Friday, with the cotton session focusing on the outlook for the U.S. and projections for foreign production and consumption, and an overview of the U.S. textile trade.

Speakers addressing these issues were USDA Economic Research Service economist Leslie Meyer; Terry Townsend, executive director of the International Cotton Advisory Committee; Cass Johnson, assistant director of international trade at the American Textile Manufacturers Institute; and Peter Egli, president of Volcot America Inc.

Water plan can be examined at Bailey County courthouse

A copy of the recently completed Llano Estacado Regional Water Planning Group's recently completed water management plan is available for public examination at the Bailey County courthouse and at courthouses in neighboring counties.

The plan has been forwarded to the Texas Water Development Board in Austin, where it will be combined with plans from other regions to create a statewide water plan.

"The completed water management plan is dedicated to the memory of A. Wayne Wyatt, who served as chairman of the planning group from February 1998 to his untimely death on Dec. 5, 2000," said Chairman Harold P. "Bo" Brown of Lubbock.

Senate Bill 1, passed in the 75th Texas Legislature, divided the state into 16 regional water-planning areas.

The local region includes 21 counties.

In addition to being available at the courthouses in those counties, the water plan can be seen in the office of High Plains Underground Water Conservation District No. 1 (at 2930 Avenue Q in Lubbock) or on the Internet at www.llanoplan.org.

Slowing economy expected to torpedo big Texas cotton crop

JOURNAL STAFF REPORT

COLLEGE STATION — This year's cotton crop is expected to produce good yields, but the slowing economy is keeping it from being profitable, the Texas Agricultural Extension Service reported Tuesday.

Extension economist Dr. Carl Sanderson of College Station said everything is coming into place across the state for cotton producers and a 10 percent increase in acreage from last year is expected.

"In the Harlingen area, they are finished with land preparation and planning to plant next month," he said. "In the Coastal Bend area, everything is read to go but it actually needs to dry out some before producers can get in with planting equipment."

The large cotton-planting areas of the state are all in different stages of land preparation, Anderson said.

"In the Southern High Plains and the Rolling Plains, cotton is planted much later, usually around May," he said. "Some of the land has been re-bedded and is prepared for planting, and some of the land has not been touched. They intend to plant as much acreage as possible, perhaps more than last year."

There will definitely be more acreage north of Lubbock because acreage is being taken out of irrigated corn and being replaced with cotton.

"This is because of the high cost of pumping water and (the cost of) some fertilizers, which the corn crop takes significantly more of," Anderson said.

Cotton prices are expected to be relatively weak and close to last year's, which were around 50 to 60 cents per pound to the farmer for base quality, he said.

"The bottom line is that the crop is good, but there is too much supply and too little demand," he said. "China came up with a much larger crop than expected, and many Asian countries have not recovered from their setback several years ago."

Nationally, the economy appears to be slowing rapidly, so Americans also are not buying as many cotton goods.

"Energy costs for this winter are going to eat in on a lot of consumer's budgets, so they will have to focus on those," he said. "They will have to postpone purchasing clothes, linens and other cotton goods in order to save money."

Given the oversupply, he said, farmers should think about growing less cotton.

GAS

Energas representative at the Muleshoe meeting, only fueled that line of thought by adding that drillers had felt "it wasn't worth it before" to drill for gas when the price was low, but now that the price has skyrocketed — in other words, from the consumer's standpoint, after the horses have left the barn — drilling activity has increased tremendously.

Grimes said some experts have said it could be as long as two years before the industry catches up.

She said Energas did what it could to minimize the damage to customers by staying away from purchases that would have locked the price in at $7 per thousand cubic feet for annual contracts, a price that some in the audience said would devastate farmers.

Rather, Grimes said, Energas decided on short-term purchases in the hope that there would be some price breaks that could be passed along to customers.

Even at that, she said, gas sales for this year probably are going to be at a historic low, "and we realize that."

One audience member expressed concern about the possibility of gas service being cut off in the middle of a crop year and asked why farmers could not be given the company's priority list, showing which users would be most vulnerable to shutoffs in an emergency. This might help farmers make an educated guess about whether they want to begin the crop year on gas, he added.

Grimes said she would look into that situation and might be able to provide the information, but that shutting off gas to farmers is such a remote possibility that she has never heard it discussed at Energas.

FARMERS

Pope, who is not a party to the lawsuit but is trying to stir interest in the Lubbock meeting.

The meeting will address the 1933 act and other details that "deal with obtaining fair crop prices for producers."

In addition to Myers and Grider, the other farmers involved in the lawsuit are Dr. Eugene Schroder of Colorado and Ed Petrowsky of Kansas, according to Pope.

The statement circulated by Pope quotes Schroder as saying, "It isn't just a farm issue. Consumers should know that the price of groceries has little relation to the price farmers are paid for their production. They need to consider what will happen when corporate farms squeeze out the few family farmers remaining."

Digital program to aid both agriculture and urban residents

SPECIAL TO THE JOURNAL
COLLEGE STATION — A pilot program under way in 42 Texas counties could soon help both agricultural producers and urban homeowners make on-the-spot decisions with just a click of the camera.

Lubbock and Deaf Smith counties on the South Plains are included in the project.

Digital cameras and a network of Texas Agricultural Extension Service county agents can perform plant identification, rangeland assessments, insect identification, animal health and nutrition, and other applications.

The program, called Texas Digital Diagnostics, is a program designed to diagnose problems found in these areas in a matter of minutes. The program is anticipated to be offered statewide by late spring.

The system involves using county Extension agents, the World Wide Web, and a team of diagnosticians from the Texas Agricultural Extension Service and the College of Veterinary Medicine at Texas A&M University.

When an agricultural producer or homeowner has problems with a crop or urban landscape, a county agent can go to the location, take a photo image and transmit the image back to diagnostic sites throughout the state. Within minutes, a diagnostician can send an evaluation back to the county agent who can then relay the information to the inquiring citizen.

"Under the old system, a county agent would take a sample and mail it in," said Wayne Hamilton, director for the Center for Grazing Lands and Ranch Management at A&M. "Once the agent puts it in the envelope, even overnighting it, it would still take 24 hours. The turnaround time in that type of thing is not efficient at all. In the same circumstance, the agent takes digital images of the problem, puts them into his computer, and transmits the images to the lab all in the same day."

In addition to the supplied photo image, the county agent submits an online form over the web. The information includes the client's name, address, city and county as well as e-mail, phone and fax numbers. It also contains supporting information to assist diagnosticians in identifying the problem and making remedial recommendations.

If the problem involves a plant, the form asks for which county the sample was taken from, if the plant was found on either rangelands, pasture, lawn/garden, crop field, aquatic habitat, forest, parks/recreational, or seeds. Other vital information includes type of plant (if it is a woody tree, woody shrub, grass/grasslike) and type of habitat it was collected from such as dry upland, moist slope, wet bottomland or swamp.

The program is currently a free service, but could become fee-based for some future applications.

The University of Georgia has been using digital diagnostics in its state, and an agreement was made with Texas A&M University to establish such a system here. Partial funding for the Texas program is being provided by the G. Rollie White Foundation.

Hamilton said the program will help both rural and urban populations.

"For farmers, it could mean saving a sizable investment made in a particular crop," Hamilton said.

"If a fast-moving disease is found in a crop, a quick diagnosis can be made and the appropriate treatment can be applied to help the outcome of the harvest. This program will also give some comfort to our urban individuals, particularly those home gardeners with an unknown plant disease or the typical homeowner or commercial nurseryman who needs help identifying an insect or disease," he added.

Hamilton noted that the system was used in Georgia to help diagnose a plant eaten by a small child to determine if it was poisonous.

"If in fact it had been poisonous, the plant was identified quickly enough so that the appropriate action could be taken," he said.

"The thought of this program is mind-boggling in terms of potential capacity it has to save money. Georgia researchers saved in the first year after initiating their system more than $10 million, so I think everyone is pretty excited about the opportunity this type of program can bring to Texas," he said.

Dr. Chester Fehlis, deputy director of the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, said, "The Texas Digital Diagnostics program provides a unique tool to our county Extension agents. It enables them to use modern technology, quickly responding to clientele requests and better serve the increasingly complex issues facing Texans today."

The 42 pilot counties involved in the program include Cameron, Hidalgo, Starr, Nueces, Victoria, Karnes, Atascosa, Bexar, Jefferson, Harris, Fort Bend, Comal, Hays, Travis, Gillespie, Bell, Schleicher, McLennan, Tom Green and Cherokee.

Also Bosque, Comanche, Denton, Terry, Grayson, Archer, Lubbock, Wichita, Hall, Deaf Smith, Gray, Moore and El Paso.

Bill addresses alternative certification of teachers

As Texas continues to debate a course of action for finding alternative ways to certify teachers, I have been working to pass legislation that would assist states to develop new teacher training programs that are flexible enough to meet changing state and local needs.

It goes without saying that first-rate teachers are a key element in providing our children with a good education.

Texas, like many other states, is facing a critical shortage of qualified teachers. Superintendents of some rural school districts have told me that they have had teacher vacancies remain unfilled for a year or more, particularly in hard-to-fill subject areas.

The National Council on Education Statistics estimates that an additional two million teachers will be needed in America's public schools over the next decade.

Some school districts are coping with this growing crisis by relying on substitute and temporary teachers; others have raised salaries, but with only limited success at improving recruitment.

At the same time, I repeatedly hear stories of mid-career or retired professionals eager to go into the public schools and share their knowledge and skills with young people, but who are discouraged by the many hurdles they must clear to achieve traditional teacher certification.

A true story: There is a small school district in East Texas that is unable to offer a French language class because there are no certified teachers of that language in town. Yet living in that same community is a retiree who majored in French in college, taught French in private school and says she would love to teach the language to young people and share with them her love of French literature.

But . . . she can't unless she gets a teaching certificate, which would require two years of committing to the nearest college.

It just makes sense to smooth the way for skilled professionals with college degrees who want to become teachers, rather than to put obstacles across their path to the classroom.

So I have introduced legislation, the Careers-to-Classrooms Act, to provide additional federal funding for states such as Texas that have been in the forefront of the promotion of alternative certification programs.

This bill will help states and local school districts to target mid-career professionals and outstanding recent college graduates, and to encourage them to become teachers under state-approved alternative certification programs.

My bill's program will offer stipends of up to $5,000 to help qualified individuals obtain their teaching certificates under a streamlined program if they will agree to teach in rural and other school districts in dire need of teachers.

Matching grants would go to school districts facing the most severe teacher shortages.

My Careers-to-Classrooms proposal actually is modeled after a highly successful Defense Department program called Troops to Teachers, which encourages career military men and women with specialized knowledge and skills to enter the classroom and teach. The program already has placed more than 500 new teachers in Texas and more than 3,000 nationwide.

Similarly, my proposal would help states to tap into the burgeoning high-tech and related fields to encourage those individuals to share their cutting-edge knowledge with our public school students.

I am a product of the public schools, first in my hometown of La Marque and then at the University of Texas in Austin. You will find no greater fan of strong public schools, and good teachers are what make them strong. The better chance all children in American will have to reach their full potential.

LADIES' GOLF ASSOCIATION

The Muleshoe Country Club Ladies' Golf Association met for its monthly luncheon Feb. 21, enjoying a meal prepared by Connie Dominguez.

President Anita Allgood presided over the meeting and welcomed guests as well as new member Jerrie Flowers.

Wishes for a happy February birthday were extended to Helen Templeton.

Pat Kirk called the roll and read the minutes of the last meeting. Linda Elder gave the treasurer's report and all committees gave their reports.

Tournament chairman Kay Field reported that the annual Jennyslippers Partnership Tournament is scheduled for Aug. 18. Plans are already under way for a big day.

Elder reported, as High Plains chairman, that a meeting will be held in March to plan for the year, April through October.

Yolonda Philips, playday chairman, was absent. The co-chairman, Ronda Box, reported that Philips has planned many new playday games for this year.

After the meeting, the members played a scramble, with two teams of four. The winning team, with a score of 72, was made up of Field, Allgood, Deborah Noble and Claudine Elliott. Dorothy St. Clair won the door prize.

Attending the luncheon were Kirk, Field, Box, Elliott, Allgood, Elder, St. Clair, Templeton, Flowers, Noble, Neats Foster, Sherri Shipman, Judy Wilbanks, Sheryl Engelking, Laverne Winn and Jeanetta Precure.

SCAC

The Student Community Action Club met Feb. 19 at the home of Bruce and Cindy Barrett.

The meeting was held to discuss the upcoming annual bake auction, the club's biggest money-making project, which is set for April 14 (the day before Easter). The proceeds go to the Muleshoe Heritage Center.

A committee was named to handle advertising for the bake auction, with members Roxann García, Elizabeth Castorena, Kayla Kelly and Carmen Flores.

Last year, the club raised the more money for the Heritage Center than did any other organization.

At every club meeting, canned goods are brought to be donated to the Muleshoe Food Pantry.

Members at the meeting honored the club's February citizen of the month, Shana Simms. These honorees are selected based on what they have done for the community, their attitude toward others and the role model they provide.

Simms was given a corsage and a certificate in recognition of her honor. She gave a moving speech, saying, "This is the best community I've lived in, and the people here are friendly. . . . The people here are great!"

Candace Hutto volunteered her home for the March meeting.
