Hobbies For Defense

The United States is calling the roll of brains as well as of brawn. Scientists are registering their technical skills and knowledge for possible defense use. They are filling out great questionnaires on which their special abilities are noted. These are kept in a confidential punchcard file. Later, if the government needs a man who speaks Romansch, has traveled in Afghanistan, or knows all about potato beetles, it will have only to run the cards through the machine.

Hobbies are listed as well as more formal technical qualifications. The amateur photographer, cryptographer, or model-maker may well find that the skill to which he has given hs evenings and days off have a definite value to national defense. Hobbies, generally regarded as a harmless aberration, have developed versatility and skills which are actually a defense asset.

A Glimpse Of Sunlight

A hundred and fifty years before Christ, Greek citystates, highly-cultured, were overrun by hard-boiled sol-diery from the west, the Roman Legions. Corinth, one of the glories of Greek civilization, was left a mass of wreckage.

The centuries marched slowly by; new layers of soil piled atop the site of these old Greek cities. Within the past hundred years studious men began digging in these sites, and their eyes were dazzled by the imperturbable beauty of some of the things they found. A stainless-steel world gazed admiringly at the lovely vases, the cunninglygraved coins, the perfect statues that came up from the earth.

Today American archaeologists who have been digging up such objects are burying them again. For again they are in danger of destruction by more terrible forces than the Turkish explosives that smashed the Parthenon.

After 2000 years these relics of a vanished civiliza-tion saw the light of day but briefly, to find that the world has not changed as much as some would like to think.

A determined and inspired team of Midland Bulldogs granted an appeal here yesterday in presenting Coach Bud Taylor a tingling 16-14 victory over Odessa's favored Bronchos in a District 3-AA game before approximately 5,000 holiday fans.

Coach Taylor asked them for a victory when he announced his resignation Wednesday as coach in a student pep rally.

Last night he said, "They were a great ball club out there today. I am proud of them. I knew they could do it and I appreciate their doing it for me.'

The Bulldogs, dead serious, staged a brilliant second half comeback to By Eddie Brietz nudge out the Odessans. Midland trailed 14-3 at the half.

Most good women players, however, have no weakness that would call for a differentiation of this kind. Certainly, Mrs. Horn was anything but timid when she jumped to six diamonds on today's hand. She made the contract by winning the opening lead with the ace of clubs, cashig the ace of diamonds and returning a spade, which West won with the ace. West returned a club which Mrs. Horn ruffed with the five of diamonds.

This play squeezed the East hand. If East discarded the queen of hearts, dummy's ten was good; while if she let go the jack of spades, de-clarer would cash the king and ten of spades for the last two tricks.

Interesting Facts Cluster About Story Of Major Play

THE REPORTER-TELEGRAM, MIDLAND, TEXAS

The original manuscript of "Alice In Wonderland," the famous childhood classic which will be presented in dramatic form by a cast of Clare Free Major Children's Theatre players here on December 2, was sold for a greater sum of money than any other book of fiction ever written. In 1929, the manuscript with its pen and ink drawings brought about $77,000 at auction in

This is only one of the interesting facts about the story which are revealed by officials of the North Ward PTA which is sponsoring the Clare Tree Major plays this year. Charles Lutwidge Dodgson was the proper and precise lecturer on mathematics at Oxford who wrote the tales of Alice's marvelous adventures for three young friendsand was so embarrassed by the pub licity which their success brought that he published his works under the pseudonym of Lewis Carroll. Midland boys and girls who see Alice and her strange playmates will notworry about such histori-cal facts, however. They will enjoy the fanciful story and the gay costumes and scenery of the pro duction. "Alice In Wonderland" will be the second Clare Tree Major play brought here this year, the first being "Seven Wishes." It will be
