Egypt, Libya agree to cease-fire pact

CAIRO (AP) — Egypt and Libya have accepted a cease-fire in the bloody border conflict that erupted six days ago, a spokesman for Palestinian leader Yasir Arafat said today.

He said the agreement contained three points, but declined to disclose the details.

Palestinian sources said earlier that Arafat was proposing a temporary cease-fire, an end to the longtime propaganda warfare between the two North African Arab neighbors and negotiations aimed at achieving a permanent halt to the conflict.

Algerian President Houari Boumediene helped in negotiations, holding talks Sunday with Arafat and Libyan leader Moammar Khadafi. Boumediene then flew to Alexandria to consult Egyptian President Anwar Sadat. Shortly after Boumediene's arrival in the Egyptian Mediterranean port city, Sadat ordered his forces to cease all hostilities against Libya.

There was no immediate independent confirmation that hostilities had ended in the embattled border region, which has been off limits to reporters.

An Egyptian military spokesman said paratroopers, complying with the cease-fire, withdrew early today from the Libyan oasis of Al Jaghub, about 10 miles south of the Mediterranean coast and 20 miles west of the border.

The spokesman said the soldiers, supported by aircraft, had occupied the oasis Sunday because it was being used as a staging area for sabotage raids on Egypt.

There were conflicting claims regarding battlefield action Sunday. Libya said it downed 14 Egyptian planes and captured one pilot who bailed out. Egypt said it lost two planes in an attack on the Al Adam airbase, south of Tobruk. It also reported air raids aimed at two radar stations and an airfield at another oasis.

The Arab Revolutionary News Agency (ARNA) in the Libyan capital of Tripoli said two Libyans were killed in an Egyptian attack on the Al Kufra oasis at the southern end of the frontier, about 350 miles south of the Mediterranean. The Egyptian spokesman said Al Kufra's airport was raided after Libya moved planes into the area, threatening Egypt's security.

President defends domestic program

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter, responding to criticism of his domestic program by the director of the National Urban League, defended his welfare and job proposals today, saying he has "no apologies to make."

In a speech to the league's 67th annual conference, Carter pledged that his administration will provide "real money, real programs to help real people in need of real help."

Vernon Jordan, director of the moderate civil rights organization, called Sunday night for an August strategy meeting of black leaders, declaring, "many black people feel that their hopes and their needs have been betrayed" by Carter.

In his speech, Carter said his wife Rosalynn referred to the criticisms and told him, "Vernon doesn't think you're doing as well as I think you're doing, Jimmy."

After the talk, Carter met privately with Jordan, who then escorted him to his car and shook his hand before the President entered.

Carter listed increased jobs programs and antidiscrimination efforts as cornerstones of his concern for the nation's poor.

He said the welfare revision program he soon will send to Congress will emphasize "jobs and work for those who are able." The plan, criticized by Jordan, "is not a move backwards," and will create more than one million new public service jobs, he said.

He also pointed to administration efforts to increase the summer youth employment program to more than a million jobs and added:

"We more than doubled the public service jobs for the unemployed — from 310,000 to 725,000—nearly half of those for the long-term unemployed."

The President said one of his first reorganization efforts, not yet completed, has been "to work out ways to handle discrimination complaints faster and more effectively than we have in the past."

He also cited increased funds for education, an increase in revenue sharing and a provision in the latest public works bill allocating 10 per cent of $4 billion of contracts for minority businesses.

In the harshest appraisal of Carter by any black civil rights leader to date, Jordan said, "The administration is not living up to the first commandment of politics: to help those who helped you."

Johnstown woes increase

JOHNSTOWN, Pa. (AP) — An explosion ripped through a glass company building in the downtown section of this flood-ravaged city today, injuring at least 13 persons, police said.

An earlier police report that one person died at the Royal Plate Glass Co. was incorrect, said a spokesman for the Johnstown police.

"No one is dead, but the man they thought was killed is in critical shape," he said.

The blast collapsed a portion of a two-story building. Witnesses said a section of brick wall about 30 by 100 feet fell into a parking lot on top of several water-damaged cars.

Police at first had feared more people might be trapped inside the building but later said everyone was accounted for.

There were conflicting reports on the cause of the blast. A police spokesman said a gas leak was suspected, but a spokesman for Peoples Natural Gas Co. in Pittsburgh said its Johnstown office indicated there was no natural gas involved.

The glass company, which employs between 15 and 20 persons, resumed operations today for the first time since last Wednesday's flash flooding, which devastated the city and neighboring towns.

An eyewitness said the explosion caused a section of the building about 30 by 100 feet to collapse into a parking lot on top of several water-damaged cars.

The National Weather Service forecast severe thunderstorms and flood warnings for this mountainous western Pennsylvania community through today. Roads to low lying areas were blocked off and some areas were evacuated in anticipation of high winds and more rain.

House, Senate face busy weeks

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House of Representatives will consider raising the minimum wage this week as senators battle over a bill that would use tax money to pay part of the cost of Senate election campaigns.

The campaign finance bill is under attack from Republicans and some southern Democrats, which may keep the Senate snarled in controversy most of the time until Congress starts its summer recess Aug. 5.

The House of Representatives will complete action this week on a farm bill before taking up the measure to increase the minimum wage.

The farm bill would raise price supports for grains, cotton and rice, while lowering the supports for peanuts. It also would start a new support program for sugar. Another part of the bill would overhaul the food stamp program.

Once the House completes action on the bill, a House-Senate conference committee will try to work out a compromise between that measure and a Senate-passed bill that would set even higher price support levels. President Carter has termed the Senate bill unacceptable.

The bill to raise the present minimum wage of $2.30 an hour to $2.65 on Jan. 1 of next year is a compromise between the $3 asked by labor leaders and the $2.50 proposed by Carter.

However, under the bill the minimum wage would go up to $2.89 an hour on Jan. 1, 1979, and to $3.15 on Jan. 1, 1980. After that it would be set at 53 per cent of the average blue collar wage.

Efforts are in prospect to try to provide a lower minimum for young people seeking work, but this is opposed by AFL-CIO leaders.

Next on the House agenda is a bill under which the federal government would help states pay the cost of setting up systems to let voters register on election day for federal elections.

This measure, as first proposed by Carter, would have required the states to adopt election day registration systems. It ran into so much opposition that Democratic leaders agreed it should be done at the states' option. A few states already have such systems.

Carter included it in a package of election law changes he offered Congress. The package also seeks election of the president by direct, popular vote, junking the electoral college system. It also would remove restrictions on partisan political activities by federal employees and provide public financing for congressional campaigns.

All of these proposals are having a tough time in Congress, and Senate Democratic leaders reportedly feel the public financing measure has the best chance of approval this year.

The bill before the Senate came out of the Senate Rules Committee on a 5 to 4 vote. It would not supply money for primary races or for House campaigns. But supporters hope the House will provide for public financing of House races if the Senate approves its bill.

Under the Senate bill, Senate candidates would not have to accept public funds for their campaigns but, if they did, their expenditures would be limited. The limit, based on state population, would range from $273,000 in Alaska to $1,688,000 in California.

Retired 'tax woman' helps others find new lives at senior center

That nice-looking woman on the other side of the room is probably much older than she appears.

She was having a good time. It was quite obvious. Cheerfulness, like the sunshine, is hard to fake.

"Now, she's the shining example of what this place can do," said Katherine Shriver, who, at 75, certainly is no ordinary oldster.

The woman across the way was smiling, talking and being ever so pleasant. Takes no effort at all.

She was playing a game of cards with some of her friends at the Midland Senior Center.

She seemed relatively happy. But not so long ago, her appearance wasn't that of a woman pleased with her condition.

"She never smiled," said Mrs. Shriver, who, like most of the senior citizens who frequent the center, are widowed.

What was troubling her? You dare not ask. Perhaps she has found ways to cope with it. Maybe it was rooted in economics, or health, or anxiety over a thousand and one things, or perhaps it was drab loneliness.

That was it. Maybe. Here, at the center — at this social, recreational, therapeutic place — most shed their loneliness.

That lady over there did. "She's dressing up now, fixes her face, and talks .. smiles," Mrs. Shriver said.

"She had been so lonely. She had forgotten how to talk, how to smile."

Mrs. Shriver, a retired oil-and-gas "tax woman," works part-time at the city-sponsored center.

At the center, senior citizens may drop in for arts and crafts sessions, quilting parties, blood-pressure checks, games of skill and luck, for coffee by the potful, and, most importantly, for fellowship.

Once a week, on Wednesdays, they may come in for lunch and for an enlightening program.

"It's really the high point of the week for some of them to come to lunch," said Marge Holland, the center's director.

But mostly, it seemed, they were here for companionship, for the fellowship, to purge the loneliness from their lives.

"See," Mrs. Shriver said, "they're all having fun, talking."

She could look about the room and see the oldsters, of varied ages and backgrounds, playing their hands.

And that pleasant-looking woman over there was having a good time. She wasn't lonely.

Midland Jaycee-ettes seeking city, area artists' works

Original oils, acrylics, watercolors, crafts of all kinds or any original works by Midland and area artists are being sought by the Midland Jaycee-ettes for their 5th annual Starving Artist Sale to be held Nov. 10-12 at Dellwood Plaza Mall. This year, the Jaycee-ettes will have tables, pegboards and A-frames available for rent, according to Mrs. Tedda McAnear, chairman of the event. She noted that a percentage will not be taken from the artist's sales and artists can display their work for any or all of the three-day sale. Deadline for entry by all interested artists is Nov. 1; however Midland artists only may pre-register until Aug. 15. Additional information can be obtained from Mrs. McAnear at 684-5928 or from Mrs. Sharon Peacock, co-chairman, at 683-6490. Correspondence can be directed to Mrs. McAnear at 2490 Flare Court.

DEAR ABBY

Abby says ERA will lead to drafting of women

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: After reading your response to CONFUSED regarding ERA, I am still confused. You stated that "The ERA means that women will be subject to the draft." I have read various articles by people supporting the ERA that have said over and over that the power to draft women, if they should be needed to serve, already exists. The U.S. Constitution grants this power and the ERA will not really affect it.

Thank you.—FAITHFUL READER
DEAR FAITHFUL READER: Under the present law, women are precluded from being drafted by Section 453 of Title 50 of the United States Code. Once the ERA is ratified, the Congress will be required to treat men and women equally with respect to the draft. This means that both men and women who meet the physical and other requirements, and who are not exempt or deferred by law, will be subject to conscription.

are conscientious objectors, or who are exempt because of their responsibilities (certain public officials, or those with dependents) will not have the power to draft women by legislating such a change. It almost did so in World War II. But the law as it currently stands does prohibit the drafting of women.

My friends come to see ME—not my kitchen. And if they want to follow me into my kitchen while I'm preparing a snack or dinner, it's all right with me. It gives us that much more time to spend together. How can a person find time to finish a good book or do something creative or make himself an interesting person to be with if he's always worrying about appearances?—KITTY
DEAR KITTY: Thanks for pointing out something I confess I did not see. That's a topic on which I was myopic.

What difference does it make if their kitchens are messy? Why are some people always "on stage," never wanting anyone to see them (or their kitchens) in a less than perfect state?

WOMEN'S NEWS

DEAR ABBY: People who dislike having their friends follow them into the kitchen are missing the boat. What difference does it make if their kitchens are messy? Why are some people always "on stage," never wanting anyone to see them (or their kitchens) in a less than perfect state?

What do your experts say? Does the power to draft women already exist or not? This seems to be the main complaint against the passing of the ERA. Please set us straight on this part of a very important issue.

Of course the ERA will not require that all draft women already exist or not? This seems to be the main complaint against the passing of the ERA. Please set us straight on this part of a very important issue.

The Pat Walker Method Works!

I felt I was too old at 58, that my figure problems were hopeless. I made a decision to try one more time and went to Pat Walker's. That is one of the best decisions I have ever made in my life. There is no better method of reducing in the world than the Pat Walker program. I knew a person had to tone their body while losing weight to have the right kind of figure. That's just what you get at Pat Walker's. A completely new person emerges with the Pat Walker program. It's all so easy and fun to do plus you never have to worry about putting those nasty old pounds on again. The Pat Walker program teaches you how the right way. What these treatments have done for me is proof positive that any woman who wants a figure she can be proud of needs the Pat Walker program. It really works. I have lost 34 pounds and 58 inches. Maleta Fryman

Since I started Pat Walker's, I have lost 124 lbs. and 143 inches. Needless to say, I feel and look like a different person. On one occasion a person both my husband and I know wasn't going to speak because they thought my husband was with somebody else. This person is amazed at the change I have made. The biggest thrill I get is shopping for clothes and being able to pick and choose. When you wear a size 24 1/2 you don't have much choice, but size 8 you have a better selection. If you have a weight problem this is the place to come. Florence Sutton

Larger cause served

Things occurring in the nation's capital are not always quite what they seem to be.

For instance, all the warmth and good feeling which sprang forth from the recent meeting between President Carter and West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt were misleading.

Nineteen-gun salutes and a black tie dinner — unusually ostentatious for the Carter administration — set the tone for Mr. Carter's announcement to Mr. Schmidt and the world that "there are no differences between us."

This sounds great, of course, but actually there are said to be serious differences between the United States and West Germany. President Carter and Chancellor Schmidt do not see eye to eye on international nuclear issues, for one thing.

Like other leaders of Western Europe, Mr. Schmidt is worried that President Carter's public stress on human rights will choke off the flow of refugees from Communist Europe to the West and damage detente. At the same time the Carter administration openly is exerting pressure on West Germany to limit its exports because they are upsetting the economic equilibrium of the industrial West.

Undoubtedly one of the reasons the two statesmen glossed over these problems was to send the Soviet Union a message intended to open yet another approach to detente. An emerging school of thought is that no small part of Russia's present frustration is that it hasn't figured out a way to participate in multi-lateral detente. But many of the present issues, such as poverty, peace, the Middle East, Southern Africa, and particularly economic issues, do not fit into bilateral molds.

It is said that the Carter-Schmidt vague, but purposeful, suggestion that it would be beneficial to the Soviet Union to become more involved in multinational activities opens that door for Moscow.

However, it is felt by some that the Carter-Schmidt summit had far more important agenda items.

The United States and West Germany both have troubled but basically strong economies. Both are well off, compared with the rest of the world. The United States is enjoying a recovery which is likely to continue. West Germany considers itself in a mild recession, but no country in Western Europe is sounder.

Yet despite economic well-being, a somewhat strange mental condition grips both countries. The confidence of the people in the United States does not match the good times. Even after President Carter stressed his belief in the strength of the economy, the stock market continued to sag. Residents of the United States are not in a buoyant mood.

Similarly, West Germans are said to be unhappy about unemployment, high taxes, social programs and their government in general, despite the fact that most have full pockets. Chancellor Schmidt is fighting for his political life. A switch of only five votes in parliament would shatter his fragile coalition. Most observers agree it is a possibility.

Mr. Carter is, of course, politically secure. Because of this he can afford for the time being to ignore the differences the United States has with West Germany in the interest of a larger cause — stability in the Western Hemisphere.

West Germany is the most powerful nation in a shaky Western Europe. By stressing the constructive aspects of this nation's West German relations, President Carter also is saying that he would like to see the strongest leader in that nation stay at its helm in this critical period of confrontation with the Soviet Union.

If his ruffles and flourishing language in Washington accomplished that, then Mr. Schmidt should have had a 21-gun salute.

WASHINGTON MERRY — GO — ROUND

By JACK ANDERSON and LES WHITTEN

WASHINGTON — The bizarre story can now be told of a subtle attempt by Yugoslavia to trade a jailed American for information from the FBI.

President Tito's secret police, known by the dread initials UDB, had been anxious to exchange information with the FBI. What the UDB really wanted, according to our sources, was access to the FBI's files on the anti-Tito emigres in the United States.

But the FBI had no intention of sharing this information with Tito's police. Then in August, 1975, an opportunity came to apply some quiet pressure on Washington.

The UDB arrested an American businessman, Laszlo Toth, on charges of espionage. He was accused of securing pictures of a Yugoslav sugar refinery, a facility of dubious military significance.

It happened that Toth had been born and raised in Yugoslavia. As a young man, he had worked at the sugar factory. He wanted the pictures strictly for nonpolitical reasons.

Meanwhile, he had moved to the United States where he had become a citizen and had found employment with the Great Western Sugar Company. His 1975 visit was a sentimental journey to his homeland.

Intelligence sources say that the UDB at first offered to release Toth if he would agree to spy against his adopted country. He turned down the deal and was hit with a jolting, seven-year sentence.

This aroused then-Ambassador Laurence Silberman, a former Justice Department hotshot, who reviewed the case and concluded that the Yugoslavs must have known Toth was innocent. Silberman deduced, therefore, that they had some other reason than suspected espionage for holding Toth.

Silberman began badgering the Yugoslav foreign ministry with demands for Toth's release. When the diplomat gave him the brush-off, he went directly to the most feared official in Yugoslavia, Interior Minister Franjo Herjjevic, who heads the secret police.

Herjjevic is skilled in the devious arts. With Balkan subtlety, he spoke to Silberman first about Yugoslav emigres in the United States. Then Herjjevic glided smoothly into the question of Yugoslavia's long-standing desire for liaison with the FBI.

Silberman began making a case for Toth's immediate release. But Herjjevic dismissed the formal arguments. Among friends, he said carefully, anything could be worked out.

The brilliant, if brash, Silberman quickly grasped the message between the words. He suggested in dispatches to Washington that Herjjevic was offering a fuid pro quo. If the United States would agree to the FBI-UDB exchange program, the Ambassador noted, Toth could be quickly cut loose.

But Silberman didn't like the deal, which he considered to be extortionary. He took his complaint

ASIA MEMO: Recent book charts U.S.—India relations

By EDWARD NEILAN
Copley News Service

Recent revelations of an exchange of confidential correspondence between President Jimmy Carter and Indian Prime Minister Morarji Desai stirs hope that long-neglected U.S.—India ties are going to receive more attention.

During last year's Bicentennial, a book on that very subject was published. But due to the avalanche of reading matter which appeared during the birthday year, "The United States and India, 1776-1976" received little attention.

The 222-page work was published by the Times of India Press in New Delhi and was written and then presented at the White House in boxed editions as the government of India's Bicentennial gift to the United States. It is now available in bookstores in a commercial edition priced at $25.

The author is M.V. Kamath, the distinguished Washington correspondent of the Times of India. During a recent Georgetown lunch, Kamath made no secret of his conviction that his country is misunderstood by many Americans in journalism and government and hardly known at all in depth by most Americans.

He is particularly upset about interpretations of India which appear by authors who are essentially non-Indian. Like V.S. Naipaul's "India: Wounded Civilization" published this year by Alfred A. Knopf.

What, Naipaul a non-Indian? New York's literary set will bristle at that allegation.

Kamath says that Naipaul was born in India but spent most of his adult life in Trinidad and London and then as the "resident literary Indian" at the New Yorker and New York Review of Books.

Kamath became so incensed over Naipaul that I felt it would interrupt digestion of the omelette on which he was lunching. So for that reason secondarily, and for the obvious interest of the question primarily, I commissioned Kamath to do a review of Naipaul's book for the next issue of the Asia Mail, a monthly publication of which I am editor and publisher.

Back to Kamath's own work, "The United States and India, 1776-1976," he begins:

"A funny thing happened to Christopher Columbus on his way to India."

"He discovered America."
From there on Kamath takes the reader on a fascinating narrative voyage — interspersed with a fine selection of photographs — of relations between what have since become the world's two most populous democracies.

Formal ties between the two peoples began when President George Washington sent a consul to Calcutta. Full diplomatic relations came in 1947 after India achieved independence.

Somewhat ironically, after British Lord Cornwallis suffered his decisive defeat at Yorktown at the hands of American and French forces, he was assigned to India where he was able to win political and military battles that resulted in a stronger London hold-on South Asia.

In any marriage, Kamath quotes some Indian wise man, it is only the first 50 years that are difficult. So, taking 1947 as the start of a Washington-New Delhi "marriage," we still have a way to go.

President Carter has made a sound choice as our ambassador to India in naming Dr. Robert F. Goheen, who has been president emeritus of Princeton University. Goheen was born in 1919 in Venguria, India, where his parents served as medical missionaries.

Back in 1942, Jawaharlal Nehru said, "The next 100 years are going to be the century of America. And if the next century is going to be the century of America, it is also going to be the century of Asia, rejuvenated Asia deriving strength from its ancient cultures and yet vital to the youthful spirit of modern science."

Interestingly, India was one of the first Asian nations to urge the United States to recognize the People's Republic of China, and continued to hold that view even after the Sino-Indian war of 1962.

Washing is still mulling over that challenge.

While traders talk of a mysterious "China marker" developing, two-way trade between the United States and India is running at nearly $2 billion annually.

Mark Russell says

To some congressmen, there's only one thing worse than a committee chairman who won't do his best to expose the whole story of Koreagate. That's one who will.

So far, Koreagate is the worst excuse for a scandal we've ever seen. Is there nothing on tape?

Two Indian Tribes in Maine have been given back land taken from them in the French and Indian War. Since they've waited so long, Massachusetts should be thrown in as interest.

The Indian should be grateful. We took his worthless grazing lands, Green meadows and clean water and turned them into the greatest interstate highway system the world has ever known.

He could grow wheat and corn, but it took the white man to produce the concrete cloverleaf.

INSIDE REPORT:

The perils of Cassandra, as reviewed by columnists

By ROWLAND EVANS and ROBERT NOVAK

WASHINGTON — A defense expert's report to Congress on relative U.S.-Soviet military strength, contradicting the Carter administration's rosy view, has resulted in suppression of the report and threats that the expert may lose his job.

An alarming picture was painted by John M. Collins, a Library of Congress researcher, in his report prepared for the Senate Armed Services Committee last March: relative U.S. declines, both qualitative and quantitative; rising vulnerability in Western Europe; possible erosion of the nuclear deterrent. Collins is suffering Cassandra's fate. The committee's staff rejected the report, and Collins faces disciplinary action.

It is alleged this was prompted by the Carter administration, but that has not been proved and is denied. Nevertheless, it fits a Carter administration tendency, previously reported by us, to smother material that would argue for higher defense spending. With a hold on Pentagon spending essential for President Carter's balanced budget, the tendency is likely to continue.

The Collins report was requested in July 1976 by Frank Sullivan, staff director of the Senate Armed Services Committee. He asked the Congressional Research Service (an arm of the Library of Congress) for an unclassified comparison of U.S. and Soviet military strength. What Sullivan wanted was a nuts-and-bolts catalogue to check Defense Department figures.

What Sullivan got was more than he asked or bargained for. Collins, with defense experience totalling 35 years, devoted full time to the project. He conferred with Sullivan in October and periodically gave him progress reports. Working through the Christmas holiday and 100-hour weeks at the end, he finished a draft Feb. 16. After review by the Defense Department, the Joint Chiefs of Staff and the services, Collins presented a final draft, ready for publication, to Sullivan March 9. At that point, Sullivan had uttered not a word of criticism.

Evans

"Quantitative changes in the U.S. and Soviet armed forces since 1970 favor the Soviet Union with scattered exceptions," Collins concluded. "U.S. qualitative leads, less pronounced than in the past, cannot completely compensate." The result "impinges increasingly on American abilities to deter attacks against the United States, defend this country if deterrence fails, and safeguard associates whose security is closely linked with our own."

Collins also reported that NATO is quantitatively outclassed by the Warsaw Pact in almost every category, "and is losing its qualitative edge in several respects that count." Other samples from the 218-page report:

"U.S. bombers and ICBMs are more vulnerable than ever before...Soviet counterparts are comparatively secure because of our second-strike strategy."

"American forces, people and production base are naked to nuclear attack. The 'vulnerability gap' grows, because Soviet leaders stress defense, while U.S. leaders do not. End results eventually could erode our deterrent."

While claiming U.S. advantages in leadership, aircraft, submarines and other areas, Collins did not soft-pedal weaknesses. On anti-submarine warfare, for example: "Breakthroughs in the detection field are still in the blueprint stage, but beyond that, the size of America's specialized force is simply insufficient."

Suddenly, Sullivan told Collins the report did not meet requirements and would not be published. Collins asked that portions be published separately; Sullivan refused. Trying to salvage something of his report (cost to the taxpayer: about $50,000), Collins persisted.

That brought in Gilbert Gude, the former Maryland Congressman, who now heads the Congressional Research Service. Writing Collins in June, Gude denied him a Civil Service step increase, contended the report is "not of an acceptable level of competence" and warned of disciplinary action if he violated the confidentiality of the client's request.

Our checks with Pentagon officials and other defense experts who have read the Collins report, while evoking some criticism of his writing and organization, produced general praise of his professional competence. Indeed, Senate committee staffers did not echo Gude's charge of incompetence but complained of "unsubstantiated assertions" and claimed they had only asked Collins for a "bean count" of weapons.

Why then was this not told Collins much earlier? Suspicion arises that the substance, not merely the form, of Collins' report was offensive. Some defense sources claim the National Security Council (NSC), then drafting PRM-10's cheery view of U.S.-Soviet strength, intervened to kill the Collins report. The committee's staff denies it, and there is no evidence to contradict them.

Still, suppressing the Collins report is of a piece with eliminating the President's Foreign Intelligence Advisory Board, downgrading Air Force intelligence and pooh-poohing the Team "B" dissenting view on Russian strength. This is no season for Cassandras.

WATCH ON WASTE — Last March, we reported that the Capitol Hill elite claimed to be exempt from President Carter's crackdown on oversized limousines. Shortly thereafter, Speaker Thomas "Tip" O'Neill gave up his comfortable Cadillac for a Mercury. More modest cars were ordered for Democratic leader James Wright and Republican leader John Rhodes. On the Senate side, eight new Marquis were ordered to replace four Cadillacs and four Lincolns. House Sergeant-at-Arms Kenneth Harding, while settling for a Marquis, ordered one with a flashy moon roof at an extra cost to the taxpayers of $50. "But," he assured our reporter Vance Hawthorne, "I buy my own gas and oil."

The House Rules committee can boast that the taxpayers didn't pick up the bills for the committee's Christmas bash last year. But an automobile lobbying group, the Committee of Automotive Retailers, helped to pay for the party. The group chipped in $116. Explained Secretary-Treasurer Frank McCarthy: "It wasn't going to a guy's campaign, just for booze and peanuts."

Trustee 'on verge' of selling Lance's troubled stock

The Washington Post
 WASHINGTON — The trustee for Budget Director Bert Lance's financial affairs said Sunday that he is on the verge of selling all of Lance's problem-packed stock in the National Bank of Georgia.

The trustee, Dalton G. G. businessman Tom Mitchell, said in a brief statement that he was in "an advanced state of definitive negotiations" to dispose of all of Lance's 200,000 shares in the Atlanta bank that he used to head.

The unusual Sunday announcement came on the eve of a special hearing of the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee on the circumstances of a $3.4 million Chicago bank loan Lance obtained last January to refinance the purchase of most of his NBG stock.

President Carter had asked the committee earlier this month to waive a conflict-of-interest rule that would have required Lance to sell all his NBG stock by Dec. 31. The price has dropped sharply in recent months, from the $17-plus that Lance paid to as low as $8.50, as the result of a series of real estate loans turned sour.

Lance told the Senate committee on July 15 that he would lose $1.6 million if he had to sell on the spot.

The final outcome could be much more favorable for the President's long-time confidant and friend. One source close to Lance suggested that the prospective price is not only above the current market value of $11.50 a share but substantially above the book value of $15.

"That's really not unusual for a private placement—which is often above book value and often very much above book value," this source said.

"I wouldn't be surprised if the price were high enough to pay off the Chicago bank loan and some others, too," this source added.

Mitchell declined comment on that point, saying any precise response might indicate the sale price of the stock, which he was not yet free to disclose. But he said he would expect to use the proceeds from the sale, whatever they might be, to help pay off the Chicago bank loan.

Once the sale is completed, presumably within the week, Mitchell said, "I doubt whether there will be any problem in making public the price."

The Senate Committee last met on Friday with the expectation that it would scuttle the Dec. 31 sales deadline but a report in The Washington Post concerning the chronology of the Chicago bank loan prompted a change of plans.

Lance had gone shopping for the loan with the First National Bank of Chicago on Dec. 2, 1976. Carter announced his appointment as director of the Office of Management and Budget the next day.

On Dec. 8, the National Bank of Georgia initiated a correspondent banking relationship with First National Bank of Chicago, although the Atlanta Bank already had such a relationship — designed to expand available services — with continental Illinois National Bank and Trust in Chicago.

The NBG deposited $50,000 in a non-interest-bearing account with First National of Chicago and increased it on March 30 to $200,000. Since then, according to several sources, the account has fluctuated somewhat.

The transactions raised the question of whether the NBG's non-interest-bearing account might be construed as a so-called compensating balance for the Chicago loan to Lance.

"By using these non-interest bearing correspondent accounts in this manner, some borrowing officials have been able to obtain loans at preferential rates and to circumvent other statutes and administrative regulations promulgated for the protection of federally regulated or insured banks," a 1970 circular from the Comptroller's of the Currency to the presidents of all national banks stated.

"There are no cases, at the present time, construing this practice as a misapplication under the criminal statutes," the circular added. "We believe, however, that where the facts demonstrate a clear detriment to the bank and a concomitant benefit to its officers, this activity would, at a minimum, constitute a breach of the fiduciary duty owed by the officials to the bank, and might in certain situations warrant prosecutive action."

The Post report on Friday prompted the committee to withhold approval of the deadline waiver being sought on Lance's behalf. Headed by Sen. Abraham Ribicoff (D-Conn.), the committee decided instead to call Lance for questioning Monday about the loan and about other aspects of his financial dealings described in various news articles and columns.

The Comptroller's regional office in Chicago was ordered Friday to check into the circumstances of the First National Loan to Lance. A spokesman for the Chicago bank, Nick Poulos, said Sunday that a representative of the Comptroller's office "paid a visit to our bank Friday (and) he was given all the information he asked for. My understanding is that he submitted his report to the regional Comptroller's office and I guess his report was then forwarded to Washington."

Weapons to spur plutonium use

By WALTER PINCUS
 The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The Pentagon plans to build so many new strategic and tactical nuclear weapons for the 1980s that Congress has been told that the United States will have to increase its production of weapons-grade plutonium.

Though these weapons programs grew up under the Nixon and Ford Administrations, the decision on whether or not to increase plutonium production will be President Carter's, probably this fall.

He has talked to the Soviet Union about cutting back on nuclear weapons, but said last week if negotiations fail, the U.S. will have to do what it considers necessary for its security.

President Carter has called on other countries to limit production of plutonium, the deadly explosive element used in making nuclear bombs. "We need more plutonium in the mid-'80s than we have now," Maj. Gen. Joseph K. Bratton, director of the Military Applications Division in the Energy Research and Development Administration, told a closed session of a House Armed Services subcommittee on April 27.

Nuclear weapons systems now in the research and development stages, "when added to the other new systems which have been approved," Bratton said, "simply build up the cumulative requirement for plutonium even when taking into account the dismantling and retirement of weapons which will return some plutonium back into the system."

As a first step in increasing plutonium production, Bratton proposed converting a nuclear reactor at Richland, Wash., from production of fuel grade plutonium to weapons grade.

When a committee member noted that step might be inconsistent with Carter's April 7 statement calling for limits on plutonium production, Rep. Charles H. Wilson (D-Calif.) responded. "The President's statement is as inconsistent as my golf scores, so I think perhaps we should go ahead and produce this plutonium."

"I agree," Rep. Samuel S. Stratton (D-N.Y.) then said.

Almost all new U.S. production of weapons-grade plutonium now takes place at Savannah River, S.C.

The Richland N-reactor presently produces "reactor fuel-grade plutonium," according to ERDA officials, which would be used to start the Clinch River breeder reactor, if that is ever completed.

Some N-reactor plutonium also is mixed with Savannah River plutonium to make a weapons-grade material. The N-reactor also produces $20 million worth of steam which is sold each year to the Pacific Northwest River Basins Commission. The commission uses it to power generators that turn out 4 per cent of the electric power in that area.

Blowout capped in Gulf

CAMERON, La. (AP) — An experimental tool pinched off the natural gas flow that fueled a blowout on a drilling rig in the Gulf of Mexico, and workers capped the well Sunday.

The rig blew out Wednesday night, sending a white plume of gas and water curling eight stories above the Gulf. Efforts to stop the flow by conventional methods failed.

So members of the Red Adair firm created a pipe pincher and snuffed the flow through the three-inch pipe. Once the flow was stopped, the well was capped.

Sadat orders men to cease fighting

CAIRO (AP) — President Anwar Sadat has ordered his troops to cease hostilities in Egypt's bloody six-day border conflict with Libya while Arab leaders work to cement a truce.

Cairo radio announced the cease-fire Sunday night as Sadat began a meeting at his coastal villa in Alexandria with Algerian President Houari Boumedienne, who flew in from talks with Libyan leader Col. Moammar Khadafy.

There was no immediate Libyan reaction to the Sadat order and no independent confirmation that hostilities had ended in the embattled border region, off-limits to news reporters.

Boumedienne and Palestine Liberation Organization chief Yasir Arafat, two of the few Arab leaders on friendly terms with Khadafy and his radical regime, shuttled between the neighboring North Africa states trying to mediate the dispute.

The Sadat-Boumedienne meeting ended early today but no details were announced.

An Egyptian military spokesman said paratroopers, complying with the cease-fire, withdrew early today from the Libyan oasis of Al Jaghbub, about 10 miles south of the Mediterranean coast and 20 miles west of the border.

The spokesman said the soldiers, supported by aircraft, had occupied the oasis Sunday because it was being used as a staging area for sabotage raids on Egypt.

There were conflicting claims regarding battlefield action Sunday. Libya said it downed 14 Egyptian planes and captured one pilot who bailed out. Egypt said it lost two planes in an attack on the Al Adam airbase, south of Tobruk. It also reported air raids aimed at two radar stations and an airfield at another oasis.

The Arab Revolutionary News Agency (ARNA) in the Libyan capital of Tripoli said two Libyans were killed in an Egyptian attack on the Al Kufra oasis at the southern end of the Mediterranean. The Egyptian spokesman said Al Kufra's airport was raided after Libya moved planes into the area, threatening Egypt's security.

Carbon dioxide report ominous

WASHINGTON (AP) — Continued use of oil, gas and coal will result in a buildup of carbon dioxide in the atmosphere, which could change the climate and perhaps cause the oceans to flood the earth's great coastal cities, says a report by a panel of scientists and engineers.

"The climatic effects of carbon dioxide release may be the primary limiting factor on energy production from fossil fuels over the next few centuries," the panel said in a report released Sunday by the National Research Council.

"There are profound uncertainties regarding the carbon cycle, climate and their interdependence... The possibility of modification of the world's climate by carbon dioxide released in the production of energy from fossil fuels should be given serious, prompt consideration," the report said.

Roger Revelle of Harvard and the University of California at San Diego told a news briefing that the potential climatic changes might result in increased snows in polar regions, and destruction of the West Antarctic icepack "resulting in a corresponding rise in the sea level of five meters (15 feet) in 300 years."

"It would happen slowly but coastal areas would have a lot of trouble," he said. And as for such coastal cities as New York and Los Angeles: "You'd have to move them," he said.

The report was based on a 2½-year study by a panel set up by the National Research Council, which was organized by the National Academy of Sciences in 1976 to encourage broad participation in its work by scientists and engineers.

If present trends continue, the report said, global temperatures will probably increase six centigrade, or about 11 degrees Fahrenheit by the 22nd century, and even more in polar regions. It said such an increase would far exceed the temperature fluctuations of the past several thousand years and "would very likely along the way have a highly significant impact on global precipitation."

The report said the principal causes for the current situation are increased use of fossil fuels since the industrial revolution and the destruction of forests, which take carbon dioxide from the air.

Murder probe criticized

WATERBURY, Conn. (AP) — An attorney who wants to represent Lorne Acquin, charged with the slayings of his foster brother's wife, seven children and a niece, says there was "gross misbehavior" by state police in the investigation.

State police refused comment on the accusation by John R. Williams, and also refused comment on a published report that the 27-year-old ex-convict told them that he bludgeoned members of Frederick Beaudoin's family with a tire iron and then set their house on fire in nearby Prospect with gasoline early Friday.

Williams, who met with Acquin over the weekend, said he would ask to be appointed Acquin's attorney when he appears for a preliminary hearing today at superior court in Waterbury on charges of murder and arson.

Acquin was held on $250,000 bail after being arrested early Saturday.

Williams said Saturday that the police investigation of the slayings involved "some of the most shocking misconduct of its kind I have ever seen."

He would not elaborate. The report in the Sunday editions of the The New Haven Register quoted sources as saying Acquin, who had lived several years ago with the Beaudoin family, told state police he arrived at the Beaudoin home between 2:30 and 3:30 a.m. Friday.

The Register quoted the sources as saying that Acquin told police he talked in the kitchen with Beaudoin's wife, Cheryl, 29.

House, Senate face busy weeks

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House of Representatives will consider raising the minimum wage this week as senators battle over a bill that would use tax money to pay part of the cost of Senate election campaigns.

The campaign finance bill is under attack from Republicans and some southern Democrats, which may keep the Senate snarled in controversy most of the time until Congress starts its summer recess Aug. 5.

The House of Representatives will complete action this week on a farm bill before taking up the measure to increase the minimum wage.

The farm bill would raise price supports for grains, cotton and rice, while lowering the supports for peanuts. It also would start a new support program for sugar. Another part of the bill would overhaul the food stamp program.

Once the House completes action on the bill, a House-Senate conference committee will try to work out a compromise between that measure and a Senate-passed bill that would set even higher price support levels. President Carter has termed the Senate bill unacceptable.

The bill to raise the present minimum wage of $2.30 an hour to $2.65 on Jan. 1 of next year is a compromise between the $3 asked by labor leaders and the $2.50 proposed by Carter.

However, under the bill the minimum wage would go up to $2.89 an hour on Jan. 1, 1979, and to $3.15 on Jan. 1, 1980. After that it would be set at 53 per cent of the average blue collar wage.

Efforts are in prospect to try to provide a lower minimum for young people seeking work, but this is opposed by AFL-CIO leaders.

Next on the House agenda is a bill under which the federal government would help states pay the cost of setting up systems to let voters register on election day for federal elections.

This measure, as first proposed by Carter, would have required the states to adopt election day registration systems. It ran into so much opposition that Democratic leaders agreed it should be done at the states' option. A few states already have such systems.

Carter included it in a package of election law changes he offered Congress. The package also seeks election of the president by direct, popular vote, junking the electoral college system. It also would remove restrictions on partisan political activities by federal employes and provide public financing for congressional campaigns.

All of these proposals are having a tough time in Congress, and Senate Democratic leaders reportedly feel the public financing measure has the best chance of approval this year.

The bill before the Senate came out of the Senate Rules Committee on a 5 to 4 vote. It would not supply money for primary races or for House campaigns. But supporters hope the House will provide for public financing of House races if the Senate approves its bill.

Under the Senate bill, Senate candidates would not have to accept public funds for their campaigns but, if they did, their expenditures would be limited. The limit, based on state population, would range from $273,000 in Alaska to $1,688,000 in California.

Retired 'tax woman' discovers new life working at center

That nice-looking woman on the other side of the room is probably much younger than she appears.

She was having a good time. It was quite obvious. Cheerfulness, like the sunshine, is hard to fake.

"Now, she's the shining example of what this place can do," said Katherine Shriver who, at 75, certainly is no ordinary oldster.

The woman across the way was smiling, talking and being ever so pleasant. Takes no effort at all.

She was playing a game of cards with some of her friends at the Midland Senior Center.

She seemed relatively happy. But not so long ago, her appearance wasn't that of a woman pleased with her condition.

"She never smiled," said Mrs. Shriver, who, like most of the senior citizens who frequent the center, are widowed.

What was troubling her? You dare not ask. Perhaps she has found ways to cope with it. Maybe it was rooted in economics, or health, or anxiety over a thousand and one things, or perhaps it was drab loneliness. That was it. Maybe. Here, at the center — at this social, recreational, therapeutic place — most shed their loneliness. That lady over there did. "She's dressing up now, fixes her face, and talks... smiles," Mrs. Shriver said. "She had been so lonely. She had forgotten how to talk, how to smile." Mrs. Shriver, a retired oil-and-gas "tax woman," works part-time at the city-sponsored center. At the center, senior citizens may drop in for arts and crafts sessions, quilting parties, blood-pressure checks, games of skill and luck, for coffee by the potful, and, most importantly, for fellowship.

Once a week, on Wednesdays, they may come in for lunch and for an enlightening program.

"It's really the high point of the week for some of them to come to lunch," said Marge Holland, the center's director.

But mostly, it seemed, they were here for companionship, for the fellowship, to purge the loneliness from their lives.

"See," Mrs. Shriver said, "they're all having fun, talking."

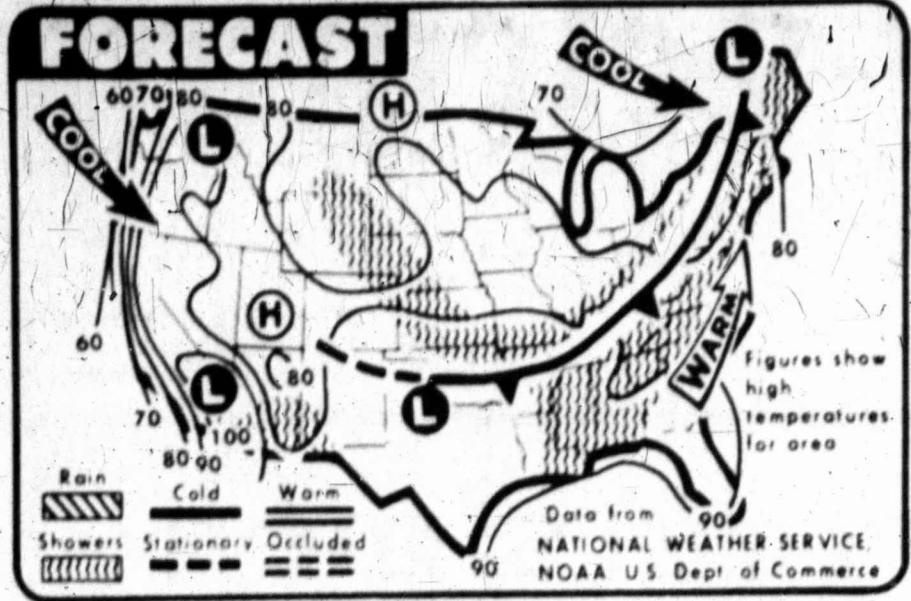

She could look about the room and see the oldsters, of varied ages and backgrounds, playing their hands.

And that pleasant-looking woman over there was having a good time. She wasn't lonely.

Trustee 'on verge' of selling Lance's troubled stock

The Washington Post
WASHINGTON — The trustee for Budget Director Bert Lance's financial affairs said Sunday that he is on the verge of selling all of Lance's problem-packed stock in the National Bank of Georgia.

The trustee, Dalton, Ga. businessman Tom Mitchell, said in a brief statement that he was in "an advanced state of definitive negotiations" to dispose of all of Lance's 200,000 shares in the Atlanta bank that he used to head.

The unusual Sunday announcement came on the eve of a special hearing of the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee on the circumstances of a $3.4 million Chicago bank loan Lance obtained last January to refinance the purchase of most of his NBG stock.

President Carter had asked the committee earlier this month to waive a conflict-of-interest rule that would have required Lance to sell all his NBG stock by Dec. 31. The price has dropped sharply in recent months, from the $17-plus that Lance paid to as low as $8.50, as the result of a series of real estate loans turned sour.

Lance told the Senate committee on July 15 that he would lose $1.6 million if he had to sell on the spot. The final outcome could be much more favorable for the President's long-time confidant and friend. One source close to Lance suggested that the prospective price is not only above the current market value of $11.50 a share but substantially above the book value of $15.

"That's really not unusual for a private placement—which is often above book value and often very much above book value," this source said.

"I wouldn't be surprised if the price were high enough to pay off the Chicago bank loan and some others," this source added.

Mitchell declined comment on that point, saying any precise response might indicate the sale price of the stock, which he was not yet free to disclose. But he said he would expect to use the proceeds from the sale, whatever they might be, to help pay off the Chicago bank loan.

Once the sale is completed, presumably within the week, Mitchell said, "I doubt whether there will be any problem in making public the price."

The Senate Committee last met on Friday with the expectation that it would settle the Dec. 31 sales deadline but a report in The Washington Post concerning the chronology of the Chicago bank loan prompted a change of plans.

Lance had gone shopping for the loan with the First National Bank of Chicago on Dec. 2, 1976. Carter announced his appointment as director of the Office of Management and Budget the next day.

On Dec. 8, the National Bank of Georgia initiated a correspondent banking relationship with First National of Chicago, although the Atlanta Bank already had such a relationship — designed to expand available services — with continental Illinois National Bank and Trust in Chicago.

The NBG deposited $50,000 in a non-interest-bearing account with First National of Chicago and increased it on March 30 to $200,000. Since then, according to several sources, the account has fluctuated somewhat.

The transactions raised the question of whether the NBG's non-interest-bearing account might be construed as a so-called compensating balance for the Chicago loan to Lance.

"By using these non-interest bearing correspondent accounts in this manner, some borrowing officials have been able to obtain loans at preferential rates and to circumvent other statutes and administrative regulations promulgated for the protection of federally regulated or insured banks," a 1970 circular from the Comptroller's of the Currency to the presidents of all national banks stated.

"There are no cases, at the present time, construing this practice as a misapplication under the criminal statutes," the circular added. "We believe, however, that where the facts demonstrate a clear detriment to the bank and a concomitant benefit to its officers, this activity would, at a minimum, constitute a breach of the fiduciary duty owed by the officials to the bank, and might in certain situations warrant prosecutive action."

The Post report on Friday prompted the committee to withhold approval of the deadline waiver being sought on Lance's behalf. Headed by Sen. Abraham Ribicoff (D-Conn.), the committee decided instead to call Lance for questioning Monday about the loan and about other aspects of his financial dealings described in various news articles and columns.

The Comptroller's regional office in Chicago was ordered Friday to check into the circumstances of the First National Loan to Lance. A spokesman for the Chicago bank, Nick Poulos, said Sunday that a representative of the Comptroller's office "paid a visit to our bank Friday (and) he was given all the information he asked for. My understanding is that he submitted his report to the regional Comptroller's office and I guess his report was then forwarded to Washington."

Weapons to spur plutonium use

By WALTER PINCUS
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The Pentagon plans to build so many new strategic and tactical nuclear weapons for the 1980s that Congress has been told that the United States will have to increase its production of weapons-grade plutonium.

Though these weapons programs grew up under the Nixon and Ford Administrations, the decision on whether or not to increase plutonium production will be President Carter's, probably this fall.

He has talked to the Soviet Union about cutting back on nuclear weapons, but said last week if negotiations fail, the U.S. will have to do what it considers necessary for its security.

President Carter has called on other countries to limit production of plutonium, the deadly explosive element used in making nuclear bombs.

"We need more plutonium in the mid-'80s than we have now," Maj. Gen. Joseph K. Bratton, director of the Military Applications Division in the Energy Research and Development Administration, told a closed session of a House Armed Services subcommittee on April 27.

Nuclear weapons systems now in the research and development stages "when added to the other new systems which have been approved," Bratton said, "...simply build up the cumulative requirement for plutonium even when taking into account the dismantling and retirement of weapons which will return some plutonium back into the system."

As a first step in increasing plutonium production, Bratton proposed converting a nuclear reactor at Richland, Wash., from production of fuel grade plutonium to weapons grade.

When a committee member noted that step might be inconsistent with Carter's April 7 statement calling for limits on plutonium production, Rep. Charles H. Wilson (D-Calif.) responded. "The President's statement is as inconsistent as my golf scores, so I think perhaps we should go ahead and produce this plutonium."

"I agree," Rep. Samuel S. Stratton (D-N.Y.) then said.

Almost all new U.S. production of weapons-grade plutonium now takes place at Savannah River, S.C.

The Richland N-reactor presently produces reactor fuel-grade plutonium, according to ERDA officials, which would be used to start the Clinch River breeder reactor, if that is ever completed.

Some N-reactor plutonium also is mixed with Savannah River plutonium to make a weapons-grade material. The N-reactor also produces $20 million worth of steam which is sold each year to the Pacific Northwest River Basins Commission. The commission uses it to power generators that turn out 4 per cent of the electric power in that area.

Blowout capped in Gulf
CAMERON, La. (AP) — An experimental tool pinched off the natural gas flow that fueled a blowout on a drilling rig in the Gulf of Mexico, and workers capped the well Sunday.
The rig blew out Wednesday night, sending a white plume of gas and water curling eight stories above the Gulf. Efforts to stop the flow by conventional methods failed.
So members of the Red Adair firm created a pipe pincher and snuffed the flow through the three-inch pipe. Once the flow was stopped, the well was capped.

Carter cites record before Urban League

By JONATHAN WOLMAN

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter, target of criticism from the director of the National Urban League, emphasized job-creating federal programs today in addressing the group.

Carter made no direct response to the criticism, however, in excerpts the White House released from his prepared text for the league's 67th annual meeting.

Vernon Jordan, director of the moderate civil rights organization, called Sunday night for an August strategy meeting of black leaders, declaring, "Many black people feel that their hopes and their needs have been betrayed" by Carter.

In his text, Carter said the welfare revision program he soon will send to Congress would create more than one million public service jobs. He also pointed to administration efforts to increase the summer youth employment program to more than a million jobs, and added:

"We more than doubled the public service jobs for the unemployed — from 310,000 to 725,000—nearly half of those for the long-term unemployed."

The President said one of his first reorganization efforts, not yet completed, has been "to work out ways to handle discrimination complaints faster and more effectively than we have in the past."

He also cited increased funds for education, an increase in revenue sharing and a proviso in the latest public works bill allocating 10 percent of $4 billion of contracts for minority businesses.

In the harshest appraisal of Carter by any black civil rights leader to date, Jordan said, "The administration is not living up to the first commandment of politics: to help those who helped you."

His statements were seen as especially significant by blacks meeting here because the Urban League is a moderate force in the civil rights community and the 41-year-old Atlanta native previously has had only praise for Carter as an individual. Jordan had been reluctant to criticize Carter in the past six months, as have other black leaders who believe attempts to pressure Carter would backfire.

But Sunday night Jordan was blunt: "We have no full employment policy. We have no welfare reform policy. We have no national health policy. We have no urban revitalization policy."

"Black people and poor people resent the stress on balanced budgets instead of balanced lives. We resent unfulfilled promises of jobs, compromises (over voting reform) to win conservative support and the continued acceptance of high unemployment."

Later, at a news conference, Jordan said he did not intend for his speech to be seen as a break between the black community and the President. He said blacks are no different from other special interest groups, such as labor and women's right groups, who also feel dissatisfied with Carter's efforts in their behalf.

Carter enjoyed wide support from black leaders in his uphill primary campaign, and his narrow November election victory was made possible, in part, by his more than 90 percent polling among blacks. In turn, black leaders have been relatively silent during Carter's first six months. Though heartened by some key appointments, many black leaders privately voice concern that Carter's efforts to balance the budget in his first term will force cuts in domestic programs.

Co-ops to meet

WASHINGTON (AP) — The National Council of Farmer Cooperatives will sponsor a conference on international trade Sept. 28-30 to review issues involved in the current round of multilateral talks going on in Geneva, Switzerland.

Council officials said the meeting, to be held in Arlington, Va., "will bring together national leaders in agricultural trade issues" and others, including members of Congress, to examine U.S. policies in the Geneva talks. Those involve the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT).

The council said that Vice President Walter Mondale is expected to offer the keynote address.

Gunboats kill 22 fishermen

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Two Communist Vietnamese gunboats attacked three Thai fishing boats in the Gulf of Siam on Sunday, killing as many as 22 fishermen and capturing about 20 others, a Thai fishery association spokesman said.

The spokesman said the attack took place as the trawlers fished in Vietnamese territorial waters near Poulo Panjang Island, about 80 miles from the Vietnamese coast.

Thai fishermen in the past have been arrested and jailed in Vietnam, Cambodia and several other South Asian nations for illegally entering or fishing in their territorial waters.

Subversion of OSHA Charged

AUSTIN, Tex. (AP) — U.S. Labor Secretary Ray Marshall says he has evidence that some bureaucrats charged with implementing the Occupational Safety and Health Act (OSHA) tried to subvert the provisions of the controversial act.

Marshall said Sunday on "Capital Eye," a radio-television news panel show, that the bureaucrats deliberately sabotaged OSHA by nit-picking over-enforcement.

He asserted his support for OSHA and said he wants to make it work better.

Aristocrat of flooring inexpensive

By ANDY LANG AP Newsfeatures

If you wanted to impress someone years ago with the luxurious character of your home, you mentioned in an offhand manner that it had parquet floors.

Some persons weren't quite sure what a parquet floor was, except that it seemed to be made of patterned hardwood squares — which it was. Everybody agreed the floor had a decorative, kind of elegant appearance. The other area of agreement was that this type of floor was expensive.

Parquet is still the aristocrat of flooring. While not inexpensive by any means, it has been brought within the price range of most homeowners if they are willing to do it themselves; that is, do the installing. Thanks to advances in manufacturing technology, parquet squares are now available that can be installed by anyone, using either the peel-off type of blocks or those placed in mastic.

The individual squares, with built-in designs, can be put down over any subfloor, whether it's concrete, wood or tile. The squares are prefinished with a stain-resistant, strong, exterior finish baked into the wood grain.

Parquet blocks come in 6, 9 or 12-inch squares. Each block is made up of several short lengths of carefully selected pieces, arranged in an attractive pattern and held together, at the back, by metal spines or other fasteners.

Depending on the amount of money you want to spend and the time you have available, you can purchase these squares with a self-adhesive peel-off back or without. The peel-offs are a snap to install but are more expensive. The others are put down with mastic spread on the floor.

You will need enough square footage of flooring to cover the area plus about 8 per cent extra to allow for cutting and patching around doorways. You'll need one gallon of mastic per 40 square feet of flooring.

The biggest job in installing a parquet floor is the preparation. The room must be cleared of all furniture and the baseboards removed. The subfloor should be free of dust, dirt and any chemicals, such as oil or grease. Once the decks are cleared, you'll need to draw some guidelines. Find the center of each of two end walls and connect these points by drawing a chalk line. Measure to find the center of the chalk line. Using a carpenter's square and chalk, draw a line perpendicular to your first line. You will begin laying the squares from this center point and continue working out from there.

It's a good idea to lay some of the squares without mastic before you begin. This will give you an idea of how the floor is going to look and will also help you get the "feel" of the job ahead. The mastic is spread over an area of about 5 feet by 5 feet at a time. After it is spread, it should sit for about 45 minutes to an hour until it becomes tacky. Squares are then put down. All blocks should be squared up with your chalk lines and they should all fit snugly together.

After all the squares have been laid, walk over the entire floor, standing on each square to make sure it is securely set in the mastic. It is advisable to wait 24 hours before moving furniture back into the room.

Five Gulf employees complete long tours

Gulf Energy and Minerals Co.-U.S. has announced that five of its employees in the Southwest Division, headquartered in Midland, have completed 30 years of service with the company.

J. A. Teague of Odessa, D. E. Smith Jr. of Midland and J. C. Mills of Andrews, completed their tours July 16, while Willie M. Kasko of Odessa and J. P. Callan of Midland marked their 30th anniversaries July 15.

Teague is production superintendent in the Odessa Area of the Production Department. He joined Gulf in 1947 as an assistant civil engineer. He also has served as a petroleum engineer.

Smith is a senior drafting technician in the Midland office of the Comptroller Department. He started his Gulf career in 1947 as a senior lab helper. In addition to his present classification, he has served as a senior draftsman.

NY blackout conditions Flatbushers to survive

NEW YORK (AP) — The lights went out, and the looters were on the streets minutes later. They smashed store windows and took hams, couches, stereos and dresses — even automobiles — from store after store in communities all over New York.

Flatbush, a section of Brooklyn which has struggled for a decade to remain middle class, is among the survivors.

Merchants and residents in this racially mixed Brooklyn community are stunned and angry. Some may face financial ruin. Others an onerous rebuilding task.

Yet most say they plan to stay. "How can you leave a lifetime's work," said one merchant who's done business on Flatbush Avenue for 35 years. Her comment reflected the feelings of scores of other merchants, some of whom defended their stores with bare hands and improvised weapons.

The looting the night of July 13 was the latest and most devastating blow Flatbush has felt in the past decade.

Among middle-class areas in the city, Flatbush was perhaps the hardest hit. Thirty-two stores were looted and damaged in a half-mile on Flatbush Avenue. The total damage was estimated at $1 million by Jack Katz, president of the 700-member Flatbush Merchants Association.

Citywide damage from the blackout, looting and arson has been estimated by the U.S. Small Business Administration at about $150 million. About one-fifth of this is thought to be covered by insurance.

The blackout lasted for as long as 25 hours in some sections of the city, after lightning struck a Consolidated Edison transformer and power lines.

Police made 254 arrests in the Flatbush area, according to officials in the two precincts responsible for the community. Nearly 4,000 people were arrested citywide for blackout-related crimes.

The speed with which the looting and vandalism damage was repaired in Flatbush illustrated the growing strength neighborhood activist groups have shown in New York and other cities, particularly as municipal layoffs force neighborhoods to fend more for themselves.

Neighborhood activist groups have grown rapidly in such cities as Boston, Chicago, Philadelphia and Baltimore. A recent Rand Corp. study showed, for instance, that hundreds of neighborhoods across the country have formed citizen patrols to help prevent crime.

Flatbush, the site of the Battle of Long Island in 1776, later became a national symbol — often said with a snicker — of Brooklyn's middle-class heartland. But the 1960s brought hard times to the commercial and residential center of the city's largest borough of more than four million people.

The population changed from primarily white professionals and semi-professionals to working class of different ethnic groups. The newer residents didn't have the money to support Flatbush Avenue's on-fashionable specialty shops and boutiques.

Large shopping malls opened nearby, draining off customers and businesses.

Overnight, Flatbush was forced to confront not only problems posed by the looting, but by its own long-standing decline.

Only hours after the blackout, the broken glass was swept away. Empty shelves were refilled.

Several projects have taken shape in the last year to revitalize Flatbush Avenue. Next month, a consortium of banks, a utility company, city agencies, Pratt University and community groups plans to repair one block on the shopping street by placing new signs, repairing curbs and lighting, cleaning awnings, painting store fronts and otherwise making it more attractive.

The Flatbush Avenue Task Force, a coalition of 40 neighborhood, municipal and private organizations, has received $100,000 in federal community development funds since last fall which they say may be used to improve street lighting, if merchants approve.

But a handful of merchants say they plan to leave.

Ernest Zelnick, owner of Professional Hearing Aid Service, stormed up and down his office corridor and said, "After 30 years of service to the community of every kind, to whites and blacks, I give up. We've had it. I've leased a store near Kings Plaza (a nearby shopping mall) and we're going to move there as soon as we can."

Venezuela learning money can't do it all

By KAREN DeYOUNG The Washington Post

CARACAS, Venezuela — Like the mythical King Midas, who starved in the midst of plenty, oil-rich Venezuela is finding it can do just about anything with its money except eat it.

Caracas bank accounts are overflowing, and worldwide oil price increases have tripled the national income over the last three years, but Venezuela is suffering a food shortage so severe that President Carlos Andres Perez has labeled it his government's number one priority.

Grocery shelves here are often bare of such basic commodities as milk and eggs. Many shoppers wait hours in line for a chicken.

On the frequent days when food supplies in wealthy, luxury-filled Caracas are scarce, it is easier to buy a Cadillac than a pound of coffee.

Once a food exporter, Venezuela imported more than $700 million worth of food in 1975. More than half the total consumption of many staples is purchased abroad, including 500,000 tons of U.S. white corn imported last year to keep the country stocked with "arepas," the tortilla-like national bread.

In a heady blend of spending and desperation, the government has resorted to such measures as a twice-daily air shuttle to fly 25,000 live cattle — 175 head on each plane — from Costa Rica; the removal of import duties from many food products; and the loaning of enormous quantities of money, at rock-bottom terms, to any Venezuelan it can get interested in agriculture.

Since prices of most commodities are frozen by the government, food, when it is available, is fairly cheap. The lack of availability of food at any price, however, has become an infinitely more dangerous political problem for the Perez administration.

How this previously rural country got itself into such curious straits is a story unique to the 1970s, when oil suddenly made many poor nations rich beyond their wildest dreams.

For Venezuela, the oil-price boom meant that the country could afford a major industrial expansion. Small farmers who formerly grew enough food for both themselves and city dwellers flocked in record numbers to better-paying urban jobs.

In Caracas alone, the population is now more than twice what it was 20 years ago, and the current 2.2 million figure is expected to double again by the turn of the century. Venezuela's birth rate, one of the highest in the world, increases the population by 3.4 per cent each year.

At the same time, as the oil money has filtered down, Venezuelans of all economic strata can afford to eat more, and better. The country's per capita income of $2,000 a year is the highest in Latin America, and protein consumption — meat, eggs and vegetables — has skyrocketed.

The fact is, President Perez said in a recent interview, that "we are adding a lot of people, and we are consuming a lot of food. It's not the rich people who are eating more.

Perez said that total milk production in Venezuela has risen by more than 35 per cent since 1973.

In contrast, local milk production has increased by only 11 per cent during the same period. The difference has been made up in imports — more than 40,000 tons of powdered milk, primarily from the United States, was brought in last year.

Annual beef consumption has risen by more than a third in the last five years, and U.S. agriculture officials say they expect Venezuelan beef imports to double this year. Loads of eggs, cheese, vegetables and grain are brought in almost daily from outside the country, many by plane to avoid long unloading waits at Caracas' clogged Caribbean port.

Food production, in relation to population growth, is now down to early 1960s levels. While in absolute terms the 1976 harvest was 1.8 per cent lower than in 1975, in per capita terms it was down by 8 per cent. Less than 20 per cent of all Venezuelan land is used for food production, and all but a tenth of that is uncultivated pasture.

While the high level of imports could conceivably go on until the oil wells run dry, many financial and agricultural experts here view that scenario as increasingly frightening. Instead, they argue, Venezuela needs to return to the near agricultural self-sufficiency it enjoyed 20 years ago.

Although last year's production problems were exacerbated by bad weather conditions that left farmland alternately parched and flooded, government officials and large-scale farmers agree that in general the problem is the result of bad planning, an import mentality and simple greed.

"Ninety-five per cent of the trouble," said one of Perez' agricultural advisers, "is that people here can make so much more money investing in things other than agriculture." The profit margin in real estate speculation, a thriving business in jampacked Caracas where a simple condominium apartment goes for $100,000 and up, is estimated to average more than 100 per cent. Just putting money in the bank earns an easy 8 per cent interest.

Big private money does not go into agriculture because, as one local cattleman from the steaming central plains said, "There are dozens of ways to make a quick buck here that are faster, cleaner and cooler."

While farmers complain that the government's freeze on retail food prices does not offer them a decent return and discourages investments, the Perez administration has tried every stimulation short of a free market to boost production, beginning with a pledge that agriculture would replace industry as the most important sector of the economy.

One of the first things Perez did after the election in 1973 was to release small farmers from government agriculture loans and to eliminate taxes from earned farm income.

In 1974 the government set up an agriculture credit fund with an initial deposit of $140 million to lend cheap money to farmers. Farm price supports were increased, and agro-industry was promoted in the countryside so that farmers could process their crops without middlemen. Under a more recent presidential decree, private Venezuelan banks must set aside 20 per cent of their money for loans to farmers.

Rural highways have been built, massive irrigation projects undertaken, and social service facilities have blossomed in the countryside.

The government programs have their critics and their supporters.

"There has been a lot of sloppy planning," said the cattleman. "Handing out a lot of money to farmers was a fairly good idea, but money without a lot of close coordination by good agriculture agents — people who know what they're doing — that was a failure."

At first, the easy money program brought a lot of city boys to the country. "They waded right in," the cattleman said. "They were going to make a fortune before Christmas. There was no methodology," and production rates did not come close to reflecting the investment.

"Agriculture is a good deal if you really know what you're doing. They (the government) should have set production goals. The only goal a lot of these new guys have is to figure out what to do in five years when they have to start paying the money back."

Many of the poorly supervised agricultural loans have been spent on family shopping, trips to Miami and luxury goods.

'Mad Monk' really was very kind man

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Rasputin, the "Mad Monk" of czarist Russia, was brutally murdered in 1916 not because the nobility feared his power, but because he resisted a prince's homosexual advances, Rasputin's daughter says.

Maria Grigorievna Rasputin, a 77-year-old widow who lives here on Social Security checks after years of circus performances as "the daughter of the Mad Monk," has recounted her memories of her notorious father.

"Rasputin: The Man Behind the Myth," published this month, was written with Patte Barham, editor and publisher of Society West magazine.

Miss Rasputin's version of her father contrasts with the legend, spread in more than 300 books and several movies, of the demonic, licentious, hypnotic, evil, bearded figure intruding to dominate the royal couple.

"My father was a very kind, very holy man," she said in an interview. "Always he think of others — never himself, only others. Many people were jealous of him."

She accepts the story of her father's prodigious sexual appetites with a sober expression and resigned shrug. "I learn of this many years later, but when I was living with him in St. Petersburg (now Leningrad), I see nothing of this. He was very strict father," she said in her heavily accented English.

She points out that her father, Grigori Efimovich Rasputin, was never a monk, but a "staretz" or self-styled holy man and faith healer.

After acquiring a reputation as a healer in St. Petersburg in 1907, he somehow stopped the hemophilia (hemorrhaging) of the young Czarovich Alexei, the heir to the throne. Rasputin's power over Czarina Alexandra and Czar Nicholas Romanov II was assured.

On Dec. 16, 1916, a group of nobility led by Prince Felix Yusupov killed Rasputin and threw his body into the river Neva. Most histories say the princes were trying to stop his influence with the royal couple.

But in her book, Miss Rasputin said the reason for the murder was Rasputin's rejection of Yusupov's homosexual advances. And she said an autopsy showed her father died from drowning in the river — despite having been poisoned, raped, shot, beaten and mutilated with a knife.

After the murder, Maria Rasputin and her younger sister were sheltered by the czar until his abdication in 1917, when the two fled to Siberia. Maria married White Russian officer Boris Soloviev, who tried to smuggle money to the czar's family. They left Russia and went to Europe, where her husband died of tuberculosis in 1926.

She became a cabaret dancer in Bucharest "because of my name, not because of my dancing." She learned to train wild animals — "why not? I have been in a cage with Bolsheviks" — and joined the Ringling Bros. Circus in 1935. She came permanently to this country two years later.

She settled in Los Angeles in 1947 and worked briefly in the San Pedro shipyards.

Don't tell enemy all your troubles

When today's hand was played South was too old a campaigner to show how he felt. He saw at a glance that he couldn't get to his hand to win tricks with the clubs, but he saw no advantage in telling his troubles to the enemy.

Instead, South nonchalantly allowed East to win the first trick with the jack of spades.

East thought it was a routine hold-up play. Without giving the matter deep thought, East returned the deuce of spades.

Thus south was rewarded for his air of confidence. He took the ace and king of spades, discarding dummy's ace and king of clubs. Then declarer could run his six clubs. The ace of hearts provided the ninth trick.

WOULD AVOID TRAP
Go back to the first trick and suppose that South weeps and walls about the lack of entry to his hand. It will then be too late to refuse the first trick, for East will avoid the trap.

If East sees what is going on he will return a heart at the second trick. The defenders can keep South out of his hand, and declarer will be lucky to win seven tricks.

DAILY QUESTION
Partner opens with one spade, and the next player bids two hearts. You hold: S-J962; H-Q1083; D-AJ9; C-62. What do you say?

ANSWER: Bid two spades. Your hand would be worth this raise even if you had four low hearts. If the opponents bid enough hearts you will come to life with a penalty double.

El Salvador belatedly learning importance of public relations

SAN SALVADOR — If there is one lesson this small Central American nation has learned from President Carter's human rights policy, it is the importance of having friends in Washington.

While grudgingly admitting to certain deficiencies in its governmental respect for the rights of peasants, political opponents and activist priests, El Salvador attributes much of its increasingly bad image in the United States to bad public relations.

Many here share the increasingly widespread conviction in many Latin American countries that human rights criticism, as dished out by the United States, is reserved for countries that are innocent in the ways of Washington.

Charges of a fraudulent election, the killing of protesters and expulsion of several priests here brought two congressional hearings, criticism by Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance and American church leaders, and threats of U.S. economic and military sanctions.

El Salvador—whose rural economy has long been controlled by a closed coalition of the military and the wealthy oligarchy, is finding that the righteous wrath of the United States can be very costly.

Since the administration began to look at this country's human rights record, there has been a decline in the tourist and convention trade, a slowing of outside and domestic investment and, at least temporarily, the U.S. squelching of a $90 million international loan request for a new hydroelectric project.

If the United States decides to follow through with loan vetoes in multilateral lending banks, it could cost much more. Some informed observers say it could bring El Salvador's entire development program, and perhaps its whole economy, crashing to the ground.

El Salvador has no industry to speak of, no strategic importance, and has traditionally existed by the sweat of the brow of its peasants, the careful borrowing of enough money to grow at a snail's pace, and the benevolent smile of the United States.

For these reasons, El Salvador may be one of the few countries in the world to respond positively to Carter's human rights policy. Already, small but important changes have begun.

Following a personal expression of concern by Vance over threats against Catholic priests by rightist terrorists here, allegedly linked to government security forces, President Romero last week began regular meetings with local church leaders.

For nearly a month after the terrorists gave Jesuit priests 30 days to leave the country or face systematic execution, Romero made no comment on the threat. Monday, three days before the deadline, and three days before the start of congressional hearings in Washington on the problem, he publicly denounced terrorism and said he would fight it, whether it came from the right or the left. So far no priests have left the country and none of the threatened Jesuits have been killed.

"We don't have the kind of image builders in Washington that some other countries have," said Lt. Col. Rafael Flores Lima, information minister for President Carlos Humberto Romero.

As evidence of what good public relations can do for a country, Flores Lima and other Salvadorean officials point to lobbying efforts by South Korea—and even closer to home, by neighboring Nicaragua. While Nicaragua has also been accused of human rights violations its lobbyists have managed to prevent serious sanctions.

Nicaragua has a large information or lobbying office in Washington. El Salvador, a poor country that is the smallest and most densely populated nation in the continental Americas, has only an embassy, and small one at that. With an annual budget of around $100,000, it is headed by an ambassador who does not speak English.

While El Salvador was being criticized last month, Nicaragua's information office, with the high-powered help of a former congressman and former Navy secretary, worked to defeat an effort by congressional liberals to eliminate all U.S. military assistance to that country.

The Nicaraguan sanction was subsequently removed from the Foreign Assistance Bill during a House floor debate, a loss that its backers attribute to Nicaraguan lobbying pressure.

Nicaraguan President Anastasio Somoza is "a smooth, intelligent guy," one source close to the Salvadorean government said with admiration. He pointed out that Somoza attended West Point, making good contacts with future political and military leaders.

"We are seriously considering sending somebody from here to West Point, just as a long-term investment," he said.

There are plans afoot in El Salvador to beef up its Washington embassy—with more U.S.-attuned diplomats.

Waterfront soap goes American

By MIKE SILVERMAN

NEW YORK (AP) — Take a long walk down to a short pier along the East River most weekday lunchtimes and, nestled between an iron-hulled square-rigger and a cargo schooner, you'll find a group of actors performing one of the oldest soap operas of them all.

Each Tuesday, the six-handkerchief tale of the orphan Lady Isabel Vane begins with her marriage and return to her childhood home. Each Friday, the tale ends in tragedy, as she dies of a bad cough and a broken heart, forgiven by the husband she has been tricked into betraying.

It's the creaking Victorian melodrama "East Lynne," as adapted by the South Street Free Lunchtime Theater, a shoestring company so far off-Broadway that it's practically off-shore.

The open-air "theater"—about 10 rows of metal folding chairs facing a wooden platform devoid of scenery—sits near the end of Pier 15, just downriver from the Brooklyn Bridge and the Fulton Fish Market near the foot of Manhattan. The pier is part of a seaport museum district that maintains shops, galleries and ships in their original 19th century condition.

"We felt in this setting it was appropriate to do a 19th century play," said director Mike Fischetti. "And since it's in the daytime, I thought it would be interesting to put on something close to what most people watch on TV in the daytime—soap operas."

Despite "East Lynne's" old-fashioned plot and archaic dialogue—as the hero holds the dying Isabel in his arms he exclaims: "You are growing faint, I perceive"—it was in its day one of the world's most popular plays. And for good reason, Fischetti said.

"People flocked to see it because they could really identify with the heroine and hate the villain, and actresses loved it because of that marvelous 15-minute death scene," he said.

Performing the play in four segments roughly 30 minutes each underscores the similarity to soap opera. It also makes it possible for someone who can't come every day to see the complete play over several weeks. On Mondays, the cast rehearses.

"We're hoping to attract an audience of all kinds — tourists, retired people, and office workers from the neighborhood of Wall Street who can spend their lunch hour here," Fischetti said.

About 50 people showed up each day the first week, most of them one time only.

"But we did have one man in a purple shirt who came back every day," said Jean Sullivan, codirector of the theater with Fischetti. "He said he liked our diction."

The troupe was founded in 1971, and the current production is supported by grants from the National Endowment for the Arts and New York State Council for the Arts. The actors earn $30 a week. True to its name, the theater charges no admission.

Don't be misled by false claims

Dear Dr. Solomon: Do those special weight-reducing belts really help? I keep seeing them advertised in magazines, and I am tempted to try one, but I just want to be sure before I do that it won't be something I'll regret—Alice P.

Dear Alice: You have very good instincts! Do follow them. And let me pass on to you some excellent advice from Wallace Janssen of the Food and Drug Administration, as I couldn't put it any better than he has done:

"Beware of all gadgetry promoted to aid in weight reducing. All 'passive' or 'effortless' exercise machines are fakes. The same is true of massagers which are represented as capable of 'spot reducing.' There are no devices that can 'reproportion' one's figure without dieting and proper exercise. That includes all so-called 'body wraps' and other sweat-inducing garments, girdles, belts and so forth."

While we are at it, here is some other good advice Mr. Janssen gave in a recent issue of the FDA Consumer:

"Don't believe anyone who tells you he has a cure—all or, as the Greeks put it, a panacea. All panaceas are quackery."

Beware of any treatment urged by self-appointed faith healers.

Don't fall for science-fiction stuff. Don't assume that an article is legitimate because it is in the market, or advertised, or sent through the mails, or prescribed. Medical and pseudo-medical devices, unlike drugs, do not have to be approved before being marketed.

Special devices assist handicapped sculptors

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — A small canvas bag filled with sand hangs from the ceiling on a pulley in the studio where Professor Norman Holen teaches sculpture at Augsburg College.

The apparatus was invented by Holen to enable Mike Mitchell, whose spinal cord was damaged in a 1974 automobile accident, to pursue his interest in sculpture.

A box in the studio holds special tools which can be attached to the left foot of Ray Kiel, a cerebral-palsy victim who cannot control his hands, so Kiel can participate in the regular sculpture class.

Holen designed the tools specially for Mitchell and Kiel after he was asked if there was any way the two handicapped students might become involved in sculpture.

"They are a regular part of the class," Holen said. "I make all of the tools they use during my off time in my workshop at home. They enjoy the independence the tools give them and enjoy being treated like anybody else."

Kiel, 38, said he began painting water color landscapes about six years ago, holding a brush between his toes, and has sold several paintings.

"Because Ray had been painting with a brush between his toes, I thought I'd make a sculpture tool he could use between his toes," Holen said.

That first tool was a wooden kajife, about five inches long, with toe grooves on each side of the handle.

When Kiel had mastered that tool, Holen designed a wooden sandal with leather straps that Kiel could wear on his left foot. The sandal included a wooden sculpture tool attached to the Dear Dr. Solomon: We go crazy with the mosquitos around our place in the hot weather. Our neighbor said she heard that if you take thiamine supplements, you can really keep from being bitten. It saves all the bother of insect repellents, she says. What do you think about this? Is it safe to take supplements? Does it work?—Edie J.

Dear Edie: These claims about thiamine acting as an insect repellent have been around a long time, but tests done by the Department of Agriculture and others do not support them. So if I were you, I'd go back to insect repellents.

Thiamine, of course, is present in any well-balanced diet. It is also known as vitamin B1, and it is particularly useful in helping you handle the starches and sugars you eat.

Brown justifies troop pullout

By JOHN RODERICK

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Defense Secretary Harold Brown told South Korean officials today that the phased withdrawal of 33,000 U.S. troops is justified because it will remove the U.S. military presence here as a possible political issue in the United States, informed sources said.

The sources said Brown, beginning two days of talks with South Korean Defense Minister Suh Jyong-chul, spelled out details of a $1.9 billion U.S. military aid program for Seoul that President Carter will present to Congress.

Brown also delivered a letter from Carter to South Korean President Park Chung-hee in which Carter emphasized that the planned troop withdrawal does not signify "any change whatsoever in our commitment to the security of the Republic of Korea."

According to the text released by Park's office, Carter said, "Our determination to provide prompt support to help the Republic of Korea defend against armed attack, in accordance with the (U.S.-Korean mutual defense) treaty, remains firm and undiminished."

The letter said Brown would give South Korean officials details of Carter's plan for a four or five-year pullout of all American ground forces in Korea, principally the 2nd Infantry Division and its support units.

U.S. congressional and other critics of Park's authoritarian rule want U.S. troops pulled out unconditionally.

Conference sources said Brown told the South Koreans that the phased withdrawal was in order because the U.S. troops would be "politically vulnerable" if they remained in Korea.

Brown seemed to be implying that allowing the issue to boil over into a major controversy in the United States might lead to a sudden pullout without proper planning and with the danger of prompting North Korean aggression against an unprepared South Korea.

The sources said Brown indicated that the first 6,000 troops would be withdrawn by the end of 1978.

As the hour-long first meeting opened, the sources said, Suh read a statement reiterating South Korea's desire to have the troops remain but agreeing to accept the withdrawal on the condition that compensatory measures be carried out — meaning U.S. aid in bolstering South Korean defenses.

The aid program laid out by Brown was described this way:

Carter will ask Congress to provide $275 million a year for the next four years to South Korea in foreign military sales credit, a one-shot $300 million credit, and the transfer as an outright gift of $500 million worth of military equipment to be left behind by the departing 2nd Division.

Of the $1.9 billion aid total, $1.4 billion would be in the form of new foreign military sales credits, the interest on which generally averages 8 per cent a year.

After the meeting with Suh, Brown called on President Park at the presidential residence.

On Sunday, Brown visited U.S. and South Korean positions south of the uneasy demilitarized zone and told American soldiers there that despite the withdrawal plan they must "remain fully combat-ready" to deter possible attack from the Communist North.

Some farmers depending heavily on off-farm jobs

WASHINGTON (AP) — New government figures show that farm families who sell less than $20,000 worth of crops and livestock a year continued to earn more from jobs in town and other sources in 1976 than from what they produced on the land.

The Agriculture Department says the nation's 2.8 million farms averaged a total income each of $19,059 last year. That was up from $17,558 each in 1975.

But only $7,885 of the 1976 total came from farming profits. The remaining $11,174 came from "off-farm income" such as moonlighting jobs by farmers themselves or from jobs held by spouses and other members of their families.

The off-farm earnings were most pronounced for the smallest category of farms, those with annual sales of crops and livestock of $2,500 or less. These often have been called "country residences" by some authorities, rather than farms.

Those averaged $1,921 each from farm income and $15,630 in 1976 from off-farm earnings, a total income last year of $17,551 per farm. But the $2,500-or-less farms account for more than one million of the nation's 2.8 million farms, about 39 per cent. On the basis of dollar value of farm product sales, those accounted for only 1.4 per cent of the nation's food and fiber last year.

Not until annual farm product sales reach $20,000 a year do the off-farm earnings drop below those of actual farm income.

For example, in the category of sales ranging from $2,500 to $4,999 a year, farm earnings — net income — averaged $1,725 a farm and off-farm income $12,067 each for a total of $12,067.

Byrd says scandal may not be so large

WASHINGTON (AP) — Allegations of a new Washington scandal growing out of alleged South Korean influence-buying may have been blown out of proportion, Senate Majority Leader Robert Byrd says.

But the U.S. Justice Department is reported close to issuing indictments against five former congressmen, the Los Angeles Times said in today's edition.

Byrd said Sunday he believes charges that South Korean rice dealer Tongsun Park used his money to influence con-gressmen's votes may be exaggerated.

"I have a feeling that the matter is overblown because it appears in the public mind based on the number of persons whose names have appeared on some lists," the West Virginia Democrat said.

Byrd was referring to a list with the names of several dozen congressmen that once was found in Park's possession.

The senator suggested that Park might have exaggerated his own influence in Washington to impress the South Korean government.

Seoul government. Park entertained many congressmen at his Georgetown Club in Washington before leaving this country.

Meanwhile, the Times quoted an unidentified source close to House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill as saying the House Ethics Committee had been told of the impending indictments.

The newspaper said the House panel, chaired by Rep. John J. Flynt Jr., D-Ga., was given no indication as to the identity of the former congressmen.

Park, who now resides in London, has acknowledged giving gifts and campaign contributions to several congressmen. But he denied acting on behalf of the Justice Department spokesman Robert Havel declined to comment on the report. Department officials have said much of their information is subject to grand jury secrecy rules, and Justice has been reluctant to share its information with the ethics committee, the newspaper said.

Byrd made his comments on ABC-TV's "Issues and Answers."

PLATTSMOUTH, Neb. — Burl Cole Ogle, brother of Mrs. Paul (Lahoma) Trammell of 703 S. Weatherford, Midland, was killed instantly while coming home from work at Nebraska City after one day home from a reunion with his family at Ballinger, Texas.

Burl Ogle is survived by his wife, Shirley; two daughters, Amy, 9 and Kelly, 7; his mother, Mrs. Naomi Ogle; four brothers, Robert and Cody of Ballinger, Wesley of Clarksville, Tenn., and Larry of Plattsmouth; three sisters, Mrs. Paul (Lahoma) Trammell of Midland, Mrs. Dave (Barbara) Bryant of Albuquerque, N. Mex., and Mrs. J. A. (Wanda) Sloan of New Castle, Texas, 15 nieces and nephews; and one nephew Billy Glynn of Midland. Burl Ogle is preceded in death by two brothers, Milton and Billy; and his father Lilburn C. Ogle of Ballinger.

Burl Ogle had made his home in Plattsmouth for 11 years where he was an active member in the First Presbyterian Church.

Humphrey believes in miracles

NEW YORK (AP) — Sen. Hubert Humphrey says, "If you don't overcome self-pity, the game's over..." when a person is fighting against cancer.

Writing in the August issue of Reader's Digest, the former vice president admits, "the worst moment of my life was when I discovered that I had cancer."

But taking an optimistic tone, Humphrey adds, "Deep down, I believe in miracles. They have happened to a lot of people who were given up to die and then were restored to health."

Humphrey underwent surgery for cancer of the bladder last Oct. 7 and is still undergoing chemotherapy.

Patients react adversely to Laetrile

WASHINGTON (AP) — Georgetown University cancer specialists say they watched two cancer patients develop adverse reactions from using Laetrile and that the controversial substance may be dangerous.

Dr. Philip S. Schein, chief of Georgetown's medical oncology division, said Sunday that he and three colleagues seem to have found the first reported incidents of harmful effects to cancer patients who used Laetrile.

The substance which some hail as a cure for cancer, already contributed to the death of patients with malignant diseases.

The Georgetown physicians have submitted a report on their findings to the Journal of the American Medical Association.

"The main purpose of the report is to alert the medical profession and the public that this material may not be safe," Schein said in a telephone interview Sunday. "It has been assumed by the lay public and the medical profession that this material is at worst a harmless placebo. It may not even fit that criteria."

In their report, Georgetown University doctors said, "It cannot be assumed that Laetrile is non-toxic or that this compound has no derivative which may be harmful."

The Georgetown physicians have submitted a report on their findings to the Journal of the American Medical Association.

The report to the AMA said the symptoms of the cancer patients were of a type that could be easily missed by a doctor who prescribes and believes in Laetrile.

A doctor who believed in the substance could have thought the telephone interview was a symptom of the patient's cancer, the doctors said.

Schein said the doctors based their findings against Laetrile on this finding: When patients used the substance they experienced reactions.

When they stopped, the reactions disappeared.

Federal agencies and the AMA have said Laetrile is worthless in treating cancer, but at least 11 states have approved use of the substance. Those who believe in Laetrile claim it can control cancer, but its detractors say it is a fraud.

Laetrile is manufactured from the pits of certain fruits, including apricots, which contain cyanide poison. There have been reported cases of children accidentally eating Laetrile and becoming sick or dying, but Schein said the Georgetown patients were not suffering from cyanide poisoning.

Houston executive will be leery next time about helping KERRVILLE, Tex. (AP) — A 53-year-old Houston corporation executive says he nearly passed out several times from the heat after being locked in a car trunk and taken on a chase in which his car pushed another vehicle at 93 miles per hour.

But Davis Vanscoy, who was in the Kerrville area visiting his mother, escaped from his horrifying predicament and two men charged with kidnapping were still in Kerr County jail Sunday.

Vanscoy said his problems began when he was struck in the rear by a car driven by two men on Interstate 10 in the Texas Hill Country. Both cars stopped and Vanscoy offered to drive the men to a service station because their car was disabled.

On the way to Kerrville, the two pulled out knives and ordered Vanscoy to pull over.

"They made me go around to the side of the car and lay on the ground," he said. "They emptied my pockets."

Then while one of his abductors drove Vanscoy's car, the other held a knife to Vanscoy's throat as the trio returned to the disabled car.

"They said they were going to push their car, and I told them to just take mine," Vanscoy said. "They refused and shoved me in the trunk."

I didn't get my thoughts about me until I was in the trunk," said the World War II combat veteran. "I found a tire tool and worked on the trunk latch until I pried it loose."

By this time, he said, both cars were traveling at a high speed. Texas Department of Public Safety officer Charles Brune said he clocked the cars at 93 miles an hour.

"I raised the trunk to get some air and try to get someone's attention," said Vanscoy, who nearly always passed out several times in the oven-like heat of the trunk.

"Then as I was looking out I saw a trooper turn across the median and begin chasing us," he said. "I'd never been so happy."

The driver of the disabled vehicle fled, according to authorities, but the chase of the car with Vanscoy in the trunk continued for about 25 miles before the driver gave up.

Merit Cigarette Sets New Taste Standard.

Tests confirm low tar MERIT delivers flavor of higher tar cigarettes.

There is a way to get real taste from a cigarette without high tar.

Technology created it.

Taste tests proved it.

Smokers are confirming it. In fact, 75% of all MERIT smokers are former high tar cigarette smokers—the toughest taste critics of low tar smoking.

MERIT—the cigarette packed with 'Enriched Flavor' tobacco—seems to be solving the smoker dilemma of having to choose between high tar or low taste.

If you smoke, you'll be interested.

Tests Prove Taste

MERIT and MERIT 100's were both tested against a number of higher tar cigarettes. The results proved conclusively that 'Enriched Flavor' tobacco does boost taste without the usual increase in tar.

Overall, smokers reported they liked the taste of both MERIT and MERIT 100's as much as the taste of the higher tar cigarettes tested.

Cigarettes having up to 60% more tar!

Only one cigarette has 'Enriched Flavor' tobacco.

And you can taste it.

San Andres well finals

Friemel & Carpenter, Midland, have completed No. 5 W. T. Ford as a new San Andres producer in the Fuhrman-Mascho field of Andrews County, for a daily pumping potential of 52 barrels of 30-gravity oil and 10 barrels of load water, with gas rated at 722,000 cubic feet per day.

It finished through perforations at 4,262-4,411 feet, after acidizing the section with 5,500 gallons, plus fracturing with 40,000 gallons and 40,000 pounds of sand. Total depth of the well is 4,501 feet.

It is in section 15, block A-43, PSL survey.

Friemel & Carpenter operate the W. T. Ford lease for William P. Castleman Jr. of Midland; Kansas Natural Gas, Inc., Hays, Kan., and themselves.

Eddy tester gauges gas

Morris R. Antweil, Hobbs, N.M., No. 1 Rio, Eddy County, N.M., prospector, 5 1/2 miles northwest of Morrow production in the Penasco Draw field, flowed gas at the rate of 5.8 million cubic feet per day, for an unreported time.

The flow was through perforations at 5,885-8,713 feet, on a 3/4-inch choke. Location is 1,980 feet from north and east lines of section 29-18-25e, 10 miles southwest of Artesia.

Five Gulf employees complete long tours

Gulf Energy and Minerals Co.-U.S. has announced that five of its employees in the Southwest Division, headquartered in Midland, have completed 30 years of service with the company.

J. A. Teague of Odessa, D. E. Smith Jr. of Midland and J. C. Mills of Andrews, completed their tours July 16, while Willie M. Kasko of Odessa and J. P. Callan of Midland marked their 30th anniversaries July 15.

Teague is production superintendent in the Odessa Area of the Production Department. He joined Gulf in 1947 as an assistant civil engineer. He also has served as a petroleum engineer.

Smith is a senior drafting technician in the Midland office of the Comptroller Department. He started his Gulf career in 1947 as a senior lab helper. In addition to his present classification, he has served as a senior draftsman.

Mills, a lease operator in the Goldsmith Area of the Production Department, went to work for Gulf in 1947 as a lease pumper in Andrews.

Kasko, a senior clerk in the Comptroller Department, joined Gulf in 1947 as a senior typist-clerk. He also has served as a stenographer and senior stenotypist.

Callan joined Gulf in 1947 as a senior clerk in the Fort Worth office. He currently is a senior accounting clerk in the Midland office of the Comptroller Department.

Pecos, Loving wildcat projects among Permian Basin oil activity

Wildcats have been planned for Pecos and Loving counties, Pecos, Reeves and Sterling fields gained extensions and an Ector County reentry is slated.

Continental Oil Co. intends to reenter and plug back to wildcat depth of 7,260 feet on No. 4 Charles Canon, former 7,270 Cisco producer in the Sheffield, Southwest pool of Pecos, 13 miles northwest of Sheffield.

It originally was drilled to 7,778 feet. Location is 1,980 feet from south and 660 feet from west lines of section 72, block A-2, TCRB survey.

Texas Oil & Gas Corp., operating from Midland, will attempt to reopen Wolfcamp production in the depleted Hokit, Northwest field of Pecos, with the scheduling of No. 1-16 University, 15 miles southwest of Bakersfield.

The test, slated for a bottom depth of 7,000 feet, spots 1,980 feet from north and 467 feet from east lines of section 16, block 19, ULS, 3/4 mile west of the depleted opener.

PECOS COMPLETION

Texas Oil & Gas completed its No. 1-B Perry as a second producer and 1/2-mile northwest extension in the Sheffield, Northwest (Canyon) field of Pecos.

The calculated, absolute open flow potential was for 5,350 million cubic feet of gas per day, with gas-condensate ratio of 37,371-1, and gravity of the condensate being 69.9 degrees.

Completion was through perforations at 7,095-7,174 feet, following 2,000 gallons of acid on the pay zone.

Drilled to 7,500 feet, it has 4 1/2-inch casing set at that depth, and it is plugged back to 7,442 feet.

Well site is 1,980 feet from south and 467 feet from east lines of section 22, block Z, TCRB survey, 15 miles east of Bakersfield.

LOVING ACTIVITY

HNG Oil Co., Midland, filed application to drill No. 1-19-19 University as a 7,000-foot Cherry Canyon gas searcher in Loving, 15 miles west of Kermit.

Drill site, one mile south and slightly east of a depleted well in the Meridian (Delaware) field, is 660 feet from north and 1,980 feet from west lines of section 19, block 19, ULS.

Gulf Oil Corp. No. 1-E Roberta Dickson, et al-Trustee, has been slated as a location east stepout to the one-well Pinal Dome (Delaware) oil pool of Loving, 11 miles northeast of Mentone.

Location is 467 feet from north and west lines of section 21, block C-26, PSL survey. It is slated to 5,500 feet.

The field was opened in 1955.

REEVES EXTENDERS

Texaco, Inc. has finished three extenders in Reeves fields.

No. 2-BD Reeves Fee is a 3/4-mile west extension to the Reeves, North (3,260) field, and gauged a calculated, absolute open flow of 381,000 cubic feet of dry gas per day on potential test.

Christian to retire

H. A. Christian of Colorado City, a pipeline with Gulf Refining Co., will retire after 35 years and 10 months with the company.

The retirement will be effective Aug. 1.

His first job with the company was in the Roscoe District as a pipeline. In September of 1944, he was transferred to Midland where he worked as a pipeline welder.

In August 1945, he was transferred to Clyde where he spent the next several years. He was moved to the Abilene Station next where he worked as a pipeline welder and an engineer.

Christian moved to Colorado City in 1960.

Venezuela learning money can't do it all

By KAREN DeYOUNG
The Washington Post

CARACAS, Venezuela — Like the mythical King Midas, who starved in the midst of plenty, oil-rich Venezuela is finding it can do just about anything with its money except eat it.

Caracas bank accounts are overflowing, and worldwide oil price increases have tripled the national income over the last three years, but Venezuela is suffering a food shortage so severe that President Carlos Andres Perez has labeled it his government's number one priority.

Grocery shelves here are often bare of such basic commodities as milk and eggs. Many shoppers wait hours in line for a chicken.

On the frequent days when food supplies in wealthy, luxury-filled Caracas are scarce, it is easier to buy a Cadillac than a pound of coffee.

Once a food exporter, Venezuela imported more than $700 million worth of food in 1975. More than half the total consumption of many staples is purchased abroad, including 500,000 tons of U.S. white corn imported last year to keep the country stocked with "arepas," the tortilla-like national bread.

In a heady blend of spending and desperation, the government has resorted to such measures as a twice-daily air shuttle to fly 25,000 live cattle — 175 head on each plane — from Costa Rica; the removal of import duties from many food products; and the loaning of enormous quantities of money, at rock-bottom terms, to any Venezuelan it can get interested in agriculture.

Since prices of most commodities are frozen by the government, food, when it is available, is fairly cheap. The lack of availability of food at any price, however, has become an infinitely more dangerous political problem for the Perez administration.

How this previously rural country got itself into such curious straits is a story unique to the 1970s, when oil suddenly made many poor nations rich beyond their wildest dreams.

For Venezuela, the oil-price boom meant that the country could afford a major industrial expansion. Small farmers who formerly grew enough food for both themselves and city dwellers flocked in record numbers to better-paying urban jobs.

In Caracas alone, the population is now more than twice what it was 20 years ago, and the current 2.2 million figure is expected to double again by the turn of the century. Venezuela's birth rate, one of the highest in the world, increases the population by 3.4 per cent each year.

At the same time, as the oil money has filtered down, Venezuelans of all economic strata can afford to eat more, and better. The country's per capita income of $2,000 a year is the highest in Latin America, and protein consumption — meat, eggs and vegetables — has skyrocketed.

The fact is, President Perez said in a recent interview, that "we are adding a lot of people, and we are consuming a lot of food. It's not the rich people who are eating more."

Perez said that total milk consumption in Venezuela has risen by more than 35 per cent since 1973.

In contrast, local milk production has increased by only 11 per cent during the same period. The difference has been made up in imports — more than 40,000 tons of powdered milk, primarily from the United States, was brought in last year.

Annual beef consumption has risen by more than a third in the last five years, and U.S. agriculture officials say they expect Venezuelan beef imports to double this year. Loads of eggs, cheese, vegetables and grain are brought in almost daily from outside the country, many by plane to avoid long unloading waits at Caracas' clogged Caribbean port.

Food production, in relation to population growth, is now down to early 1960s levels. While in absolute terms the 1976 harvest was 1.8 per cent lower than in 1975, in per capita terms it was down by 8 per cent. Less than 20 per cent of all Venezuelan land is used for food production, and all but a tenth of that is uncultivated pasture.

While the high level of imports could conceivably go on until the oil wells run dry, many financial and agricultural experts here view that scenario as increasingly frightening. Instead, they argue, Venezuela needs to return to the near agricultural self-sufficiency it enjoyed 20 years ago.

Golden Fleece honor goes to postal service

By JEFFREY MILLS

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. William Proxmire is awarding his "Golden Fleece" award to the U.S. Postal Service, saying the mail agency spent more than $3.4 million on a Madison Avenue advertising campaign aimed at persuading Americans to write more letters.

"Spending public money trying to make Americans more prolific letter-writers is a dubious project at best," the Wisconsin Democrat said in a statement released today.

"People write letters for many reasons, but I doubt that a public relations pitch from the federal government is one of them. In my view, this kind of hype just won't make Americans type," Proxmire said.

Proxmire announces monthly "Golden Fleece" awards to what he feels is "the biggest, most ridiculous or most ironic example of wasting federal tax dollars."

In addition to the $3,475,600 paid to New York advertising agencies Young and Rubicam and Needham, Harper and Steers, the Postal Service also has spent $774,500 to run its ads in three test markets and evaluate the results.

Postal officials are considering whether to spend another $1 million for additional tests in 1978.

Postal Service spokesmen said the purpose of the tests is to see if advertising can lead to an increase in the lagging volume of mail, one of the reasons for the agency's chronic deficit.

"The program ended in the spring of 1976 and we are still analyzing the data. We have no firm plans to go any further," one spokesman said.

British Airways joins battle of cut-rate fares

LONDON (AP) — British Airways has joined the cut-rate Battle of the Atlantic.

The government-operated airline announced Sunday that it was seeking approval to lower its round-trip New York-to-London air fare to compete with Freddie Laker's walk-on Skytrain scheme.

Two U.S. airlines, Pan American and Trans World Airlines, have already announced plans to combat Laker Airways' challenge with lower transatlantic fares.

British Airways said it wants to cut its round-trip fare by 17 per cent to $290. The lower rate would apply only to trips originating in New York and only to so-called excursion tickets bought 45 days in advance.

The new fare would be effective Sept. 1 and "probably will run only during the low (winter) season," British Airways spokesman said. The fare would include confirmed seats and meals.

Laker has said his $236 New York-London round-trip fare, which provides for no advance booking and does not include meals or other extras, would be year-round. He plans to begin his "no-frills" operation Sept. 26.

British Airways removal asked by Albanian government

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (AP) — The Albanian government, long the lone Chinese Communist ally in Eastern Europe, has asked China to withdraw its technical advisers from that tiny Balkan nation, diplomatic sources here said today.

The sources said the request was made through the Chinese Embassy in Tirana, the Albanian capital.

Between 700 and 2,000 Chinese technical experts are in Albania, the sources estimated.

A worsening of relations between the two countries became apparent earlier this month when the Albanian Communist party daily newspaper Zeri i Popullit — Voice of the People — sharply attacked Peking.

Without mentioning China by name, the newspaper denounced it for its Third World policies and for its rapprochement with the United States.

The editorial, insisting there could be no compromise on ideology, suggested that the only true Marxist-Leninist party today is the Albanian

Politicians outdo kids under 6 on lying survey

BELLINGHAM, Wash. (AP) — A recent "most-likely-to-lye" survey puts politicians at the top of the heap, just ahead of children under 6.

Dr. B.L. Kintz of Western Washington State College surveyed 60 students to get at the truth about lying.

After politicians and little kids, the undergrads voted the most likely liars to be people aged 40 to 60, psychologists, high school teachers and medical doctors.

The editorial, insisting there could be no compromise on ideology, suggested that the only true Marxist-Leninist party today is the Albanian

Garage Sale

Patio Sale Yard Sale
Whatever item you use, it's an enjoyable and profitable experience. It's your opportunity to "clean up" while you "clean out."

You'll become re-acquainted with your neighbors and meet new friends, and the fresh air is good for your health.

Check your attic, closets, garage, for good, but no longer used items - furniture, tools, the list goes on and on. Every item should be priced, of course. You may want to combine your sale with a friend or neighbor. Choose your days, get your signs ready and place your ad in the Classified section. You ad should list a few key items, give the date, time, and good directions.

A friendly Classified Ad Wizard will help you word your Garage Sale ad for maximum results.

China likely to be directed by collective wisdom

Agence France Presses

PEKING — China now will be led by a triumvirate composed of Chairman Hua Kuo-feng and the two party vice-chairman, Yeh Chien-ying and Teng Hsiao-ping, diplomatic observers believe here.

The observers draw their conclusion from a joint editorial published Saturday in the party newspaper, The People's Daily, the party ideological organ Red Flag, and the People's Liberation Army Daily.

The editorial put emphasis on the merits of "collective wisdom" and "unity," recalling the thought of Chairman Mao Tse-tung which said: "It is reliance on the political experience and wisdom of the collective that can guarantee the correct leadership of the party and the state and the unshakable unity of the ranks of the party."

It went on: "With Chairman Hua as the leader of our party, and with vice-chairman Yeh, vice-chairman Teng and other central leading comrades working in concert with him, our party now has once again what Lenin described as a more or less stable group, composed of the most authoritative, influential and experienced members, who are elected to the most responsible positions and are called leaders."

This new Chinese-style trioka appeared on the front page of all Chinese newspapers.

It was already known that Marshal Yeh, 80, has had a major role since the ousting of the "Gang of Four," whose elimination he helped to bring about with the decisive support of the army.

Over the past weeks, directives on the elimination in the provinces of partisans of the "Gang" — a campaign that is still going on — carried the seal not only of Chairman Hua, but of vice-chairman Yeh as well.

It is believed in diplomatic circles that Marshal Yeh, a much-respected military leader, could be the future president, of the People's National Assembly.
