Happy New Year!

Icy Front Arrives Here Along With New Year

IF THE NEW YEAR brings changes to Lubbock as dramatic as the weather change it brought with it. 1978 should be an interesting year for Lubbockites

After a high reading of 66 degrees Saturday afternoon, temperatures in Lubbock plummeted to meet the New Year Saturday night, dropping 19 degrees in less than two hours, from a 64 at 5 pm to a 45 reading at 7, and the momentum carried through the magic hour with freezing temperatures greeting New Year's revelers

The wintry chill which struck Lubbock had begun on the West Coast Thursday and Friday, moving through Washington and Oregon to the Rockies of Colorado by Friday night, bringing heavy snow to a wide area and creating dangerous driving conditions for holiday travelers all the way to the Great Lakes

The brunt of the storm bit Minnesota, Wisconsin. Indiana, Illinois, Iowa and Nebraska Saturday, with 2 to 3 inches of snow in Nebraska and more than an inch of snow over the greater part of the Midwest.

Meanwhile, Montana, Idaho, Wyoming, Colorado and South Dakota continued to receive new snow for the third straight day, with as much as a foot of snow already on the ground. Conditions were ideal for skiing, although the Weather Service said drifts could hamper travel to some ski areas.

Winter storm watches were posted for Saturday night for practically all of the Midwest with predictions of eight inches of snow in many places. Kansas also was placed on the advisory list for late Saturday as the center of the fast-moving arctic front moved steadily to the southeast

The National Weather Service looked for Lubbock and South Plains temperatures to drop to the 20s before climbing to a high of near 40 for the first day of 1978. No precipitation was in the forecast for the South Plains of Lubbook, although scattered snow flurries were forecast for the Panhandle by this morning

Winds were expected to continue from the north at 10 to 15 miles per hour today The National Weather Service predicted warming by Wednesday, with the strength of the front the unknown factor with regard to its effect on the South Plains between today and Wednesday

Carter To Visit Sadat

President Toasts New Year In Iran

TEHRAN, Iran (AP) - President Carter toasted the New Year with the Shah of Iran and Jordan's King Hussein after announcing he would meet with Egyptian President Anwar Sadat on Wednesday for critical dicussions aimed at advancing the stalled Middle East peace talks. Carter said the meeting would take place in Aswan in southern Egypt, where Sadat is currently vacationing. U.S. officials said the summit would be brief, probably lasting only a few hours, between his scheduled stops in Riyadh, Saudi Arabia, and Paris.

Seeks To Reassure Carter is seeking to move the stalled Egyptian-Israeli peace talks ahead and to reassure Arab leaders, including Sadat, of U.S. even-handedness in the Middle East. Carter is certain to report on the outcome of his meeting today with King

Hussein Carter and his wife, Rosalynn, arrived in Tehran Saturday afternoon for a heavily guarded 16-hour visit and saluted the Iranian people as "our close friends and allies "But several miles away scores of anti-American demonstrators shouted Yankee Go Home!

In an unexpected development, Hussein joined Carter and Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi for a lavish New Year's Eve dinner at the White Palace here. Cefebrating with champagne and caviar, Carter was joined at the banquet by Mrs. Carter and Empress Farah, wife of the Thousands of riot police and plainclothesmen blanketed Mehrabad International Airport as Air Force One landed at 4 35 pm. after a 41/2-hour flight from Warsaw, Poland. Iran was the second stop on Carter's nine-day world tour now stretched to seven nations.

Combat jeeps loaded with soldiers flanked the Carter motorcade as it sped along the six-mile route to the White Palace Tens of thousands of Iranians, waving American and Iranian flags, lined the streets and wildly cheered "Jimmy, Jim Before Carter's arrival, Iranian protes ters - some with signs saving "We Hate Americans, and "Down With Imperialists" - massed near the U.S. Embassy in downtown Tehran, on the campus of Tehran University and outside the offices of a jointly owned U.S.-Iranian company.

Windows Smashed

Witnesses said the demonstrators smashed windows at the company offices until riot police broke up the crowds. Many arrests were reported. At the university - often the scene of anti-shah protests - several disssenters were hustled into police vans and driven away.

When the shah visited Washir gton in November, demonstrators both for and against him clashed with police outside the White House.

In Washington Saturday, about 200 anti-shah Iranian students demonstrated outside the White House to protest Cart-

Within hours of his arrival, Carter and the shah immediately met for their first round of talks, described by U.S. officials as a "very substantial exchange of views" centering on energy and the Mideast.

U.S. official sources said the two leaders reached agreement on a nuclear nonproliferation arrangement paving the way for the sale of six to eight Americanmade light-water nuclear reactors to Ir-

The agreement was worked out by midlevel U.S. and Iranian officials in Washington, the sources said. Carter has sought to limit the spread of nuclear technology and has made acceptance of adequate safeguards a criterion for approving nuclear sales to foreign govern-

Officials also reported the United States and Iran agreed to take "constructive steps in concert" to further the cause of peace in the Middle East and the Horn of Africa, where Ethiopia and Somalibacked rebels have been fighting for control of Ethiopia's Ogaden desert.

U.S. official sources said Saturday it was their understanding that Sadat is not 'seriously concerned' about Carter's recent favorable statements about the Israeli negotiating position.

Lubbock Tax Base Soars Via Record Home Construction

RECORD-BREAKING construction in Lubbock in 1977 pushed the city's tax base to more than $1 billion, according to figures made available by City Planning Director Jim Ber-nantly financed from private sources, according to Bertram. The previous record for construction was $118,718.253, set in 1974, and included expenditures of local, state and federal tax monies for projects including the Civic Center, the county teaching hospital, the new airport and the new Social Science and Communications buildings at Texas Tech.

The 1977 construction figure of $131,951,646 not only eclipsed the previous high on predominantly private money, but also featured installation of five times as many water meters as was averaged the past five years and a 65 percent increase over the 1972 previous record for total dwelling units built,

During the previous five years, 4,400 meters were installed, an average of less than 900 per year. In 1977 alone, 4,400 water meters were installed.

The previous high for dwelling units set in 1972 and the 1977 record high include single-family units, duplexes and apartments. The 1977 figures were: single-family units, 1,713; duplex units, 144; and apartment units, 1,654.

Permits for construction of apartment houses totaled more than $13 million, by far the largest commercial expenditure. Residential construction costs exceeded $98 million

For three of the past four years, construction in Lubbock has exceeded $100 million, with 1974's $118,718,253 and 1975, when the medical school at Tech was constructed, the previous pa-

Farmers Reject 'Extras' At Meet With Bergland

Avalanche-Journal Staff A MEETING between Agriculture Secretary Bob Bergland and representatives of the American Agriculture Strike movement may be canceled if Bergland refuses to meet only with American Agriculture delegates, a spokesman for the farm group's national office said Saturday.

Bud Bitner of the Springfield, Colo office said American Agriculture delegates planning to attend Friday's Governors Confernce and meeting with Bergland in Omaha had agreed to boycott the meeting unless Bergland withdraws his invitation to non-striking farm groups he earlier asked to join the conference.

Bergland told 10 farm-belt governors Dec. 16 he would meet with American Agriculture representatives to discuss ways the government can help them get improved prices The conference, arranged by Nebraska Gov. James Exon. and that state's strike office, originally called for Bergland to meet with striking farmers only, Bitner said.

Turnaround Questioned

The meeting was requested through the governors who had called the conference," Bitner said, "and Gov. Exen got it set up for us to meet with Bergland.

We invited him and the first thing we know," Bitner said, "he's invited all these other groups. What we want to know is how the invited does the inviting. 'We feel like it (Bergland's invitations) is an effort by Bergland to start a row between ourselves and other so-called agricultural organizations," Bitner said Bergland On Notice

The Springfield office issued a notice to Bergland last week, Bitner said, stating the movement's disappointment and intention not to attend the conference unless it goes as originally scheduled.

But because of the holiday season, Bitner said, Bergland will not return to his office until Tuesday. Bitner said the national office expects a reply from the agriculture secretary then.

However, American Agriculture delegates from 42 states will go to Omaha Friday to discuss future movement plans, even if they don't meet with Bergland, Bitner said. About 10 strike representatives from Texas will leave Wednesday for two days of preliminary meetings with other American Agriculture members from across the nation, said Hereford strike leader Gerald McCathern.

McCathern has been selected as Texas's official delegate if the meeting with Bergland goes as planned, he said. There will be a luncheon with Bergland." McCathern said, "and we will be presenting our demands for 100 percent

Philosophies Readied

We will provide him with some basic philosophies as to how our problem can be solved," McCathern said, "rather than using the old-time policies that haven't

McCathern also noted the disapointment felt by South Plains farmers at Bergland's actions

'There's no way we feel we can have a productive meeting." he said, "unless it's with people who are in sympathy with our cause.

Before the Omaha meeting, South Plains farmers will meet with U.S. Representative Jack Hightower of Vernon. said McCathern's son, Mike McCathern, also of Hereford

Between 20 and 25 representatives of area strike offices will meet with Hightower Wednesday in Amarillo, the younger McCathern said, to express their points of view and to get an idea of where the representative stands on the issue of 100 percent parity

In addition, several local meetings are set for Monday, where area farmers will finalize plans for third phase activity on the South Plains

Spokesman Bob Blunt of Tulia said farmers there will meet at 7:30 p.m. Monday in the courthouse to discuss their participation in the six-point plan.

Blunt said he understood that farmers from Happy would add their vehicles to Tuesday's 261-mile tractorcade from

Goodfellows Grateful, Elated By Success

"THANKS! Thanks! and Thanks!" Chief Goodfellow was beaming as he closed the books on the 1977 Christmas program in Lubbock.

We made it!" he added, almost dancing a jig. He was referring to the 43rd time that children in the city who really needed a Christmas had, indeed, received one from generous and unselfish residents.

"Let me see," the chief said, glancing at his treasurer's report: "good, $15,-483.39 in contributions from Lubbock residents. Not bad, folks, not bad, and you wonderful people are among those I was thanking and thinking about when we started this article," he added, smiling.

"And more than 9,000 happy youngsters received Christmas packages Christmas morning. Wonderful, and all you people who had a hand in getting those packages to them, I was thanking you, too," the chief said proudly.

You know something, we've got us a real good town here," Chief Goodfellow said; "everybody came through in great effort. I was thanking the CB radio folks and policemen for helping us with the delivery. And individuals from all over the city and out to Reese Air Force Base who helped us screen the names and package the goodies, thank you one and all "

Minimum Wage Hike Takes Effect Today

WASHINGTON (AP) - Millions of America's lowest-paid workers, many of them working on farms, in department stores and behind fast-food counters, are getting a pay raise with the new year.

Under legislation approved earlier this year, the hourly minimum wage goes to $2.65 on Jan 1 an increase of 35 cents. The nike will affect 4.5 million workers and pump an estimated $2.2 billion into the nation's economy.

The legislation also provides for annual raises each Jan. 1. through 1981, when the minimum wage will go to $3.35, or almost $7,000 a year. The Labor Department says the increases eventually will affect the pay of 5.4 million workers and be good to the economy for about $8.5

President Carter, who signed the minimum wage legislation in November, said it would put money "into the hands of those who need it to buy the necessities of life."

In a statement last week, Labor Secretarv Ray Marshall said the higher minimuin wage will help lift millions of workers "out o. , poverty situation so they can maintain at least a minimum standard of

Marshall said his department would continue to enforce the minimum wage law vigorously so that all workers covered receive the protection they are due.

The employees included are farm workers, whose current minimum wage of $2.20 is a dirive below the figure for others. Labor Department officials say others who will benefit directly from the increase are many janitors, department store clerks, workers at fast-food restaurants and some employees in the manufacturing industry of the South.

The new hike will principally benefit young workers and women who have taken jobs recently after several years out of the employment market, said one offi-

Congress agreed to a change, however, that will mean that an estimated 650,000 employees who would have been covered under the old law will no longer necessarily receive the minimum wage

Under the current law, businesses with annual gross sales of $250,000 are not required to pay the minimum wage. The level goes to $275,000 as of July 1; $325,-000 on July 1, 1980 and $362,500 after Dec. 31, 1981.

Americans Greet New Year With Hope

By The Associated Press

With help from the likes of Lebert Lombardo, Ben Colli, Shah Mohammed Reza Pahlavi and Gertrude Stein, Americans celebrated New Year's Eve.

For ringing out old and ringing in new, there was help, too, from traditional nogs

AUSTIN (AP) — This must have been one of those thieves with more than just a little meanness.

A burglar or burglars broke into the Montopolis Boys Club in a poor section of town and took the entire stock of football uniforms belonging to the club's "Devil Dogs" team.

Jerry Bell, leader of the club, said the boys raise the money for equipment purchases. The uniforms cost about $600 but would cost about $1,000 to replace, he said

"We'll just have to raise the money to buy more," Bell said.

The losses included 20 pair each of shoulder pads and trousers, 25 boy-sized jerseys, 20 larger jerseys, 15 helmets and 45 pair of football shoes.

and grogs, smoothes and songs, resolutions and remedies, the latter both buffered and unbuffered, or homemade perhaps, concocted with hope and, sometimes, a hair of the dog.

President Carter was in Tehran at the stroke of midnight, celebrating in royal style with the Shah of Iran, formally Shah Mohammed Reza Pahlavi. The president an caviar and imported champagne with the Shah, Empress Farah and King Hussein of Jordan at a state dinner. Hours before, protesters at Tehran University shouted an unseasonable greeting: "Yankee go home.

At home. Carter's countrymen had these diversions:

At New York's Waldorf-Astoria Hotel. the traditional "Auld Lang Syne" meaning "old long since" and said by some to have been penned by the Scottish poet Robert Burns - was played by a band billed as "Lebert Lombardo presents Guy Lombardo's Royal Canadians under the direction of Victor Lombar-

What all that means is that Lebert, 70, who owns the band, and Victor, 66, who is the band leader, was carrying on the tradition started in 1929 by Guy Lombardo who died in November at age 75.

Another change for the millions who cap New Year's Eve with the television broadcast of the Lombardo band came before midnight at Times Square with the lowering of the lighted ball to mark the advent of 1978. Lee Jordan of CBS not Ben Grauer - was named to announce the countdown. Veteran announcer Grauer also died in 1977

For patrons in the Waldorf's Grand Ballroom, the Lombardo spectaçle cost $100 to $150 per person. In Atlanta, meanwhile, Ben Colli was providing his own spectacle for free, as was Gertrude Stein in New York

Colli, a window washer and daredevil who calls himself Spiderman, descended the atrium of the 23-story Hyatt Regency Atlanta Hotel - about 280 feet - dressed in white tights and diaper.

Gertrude Stein was, of course, not on hand for welcoming in the new year, having died some 31 years earlier. But a group of some 100 actors, writers and other artists were marking the occasion by reading aloud a book by the lady who wrote such lines as "rose is a rose is a rose" and "pigeons in the grass alas.

They began reading the 925-page "The Making of Americans" at noon Saturday and were expected to finish about 2 p.m.

less bizarre than Stein and less costly than Lombardo, the country offered many choices.

In Baltimore, the city gave a free light show and fireworks that officials said in observance look like "a moment of silence." Boston had a similar city-sponsored event, but a free show in New York was cancelled amid tight finances.

In Denver, a dinner, bottle of champagne and dancing to the Louie Kinman band cost $39.50 a couple. Another Den-

St. Louis' Chase Park Plaza offered a show featuring Temmy James and the Shondells and three other acts, plus two nights in the hotel, for $44.95 per person.

In Council Bluffs, Iowa, the Bittersweet Lounge advertised the "last chance to see the dancers as they really are, before Iowa's cover-up law starts Jan. 1." already making 1978 the year they kill topless.

New Orleans gave a party for the Sugar Bowl, meanwhile, and Miami a parade for the Orange Bowl. Somewhere en route, Gov. Dixy Lee Ray of Washington was leading a caravan of seven mobile homes to Pasadena, Calif., where it wasto be Washington-Michigan in the Rose Bowl football game.

Miami's Space Transit Planetarium had a UFO show for $2 or free for anyone in extraterrestial costume.

With its high ceilings, cracked marble paneling and red and white candy striped decor, the Grand Central automat was one of the attractions for New York tourists, and a constant delight for children who popped coins into the slots and extracted every kind of food - from salads to dessert.

"Now fast food like MacDonald's and Burger King is the thing the younger generation goes for," said Edward Rodino, the manager of the automat, as he presided over the last day of business.

After 27 years, the 100 little glass doors that used to dispense food at his restaurant will be closed forever.

Fast food counters are for "people who eat and run, but at the automats you could sit - that is sit alone at a table and they wouldn't rush you out," said a wizened old woman, who has patronized automats since she retired 35 years ago.

Media Pool Urged For Broadcasts

WASHINGTON (AP) - Rep. John B. Anderson of Illinois, chairman of the House Republican Conference, joined broadcast industry spokesmen Friday in urging that the expected television and radio coverage of House debates be handled by an industry pool.

Anderson, who ranks third in the House Republican leadership, made public a letter to Speaker Thomas P. "Tip" O'Neill.

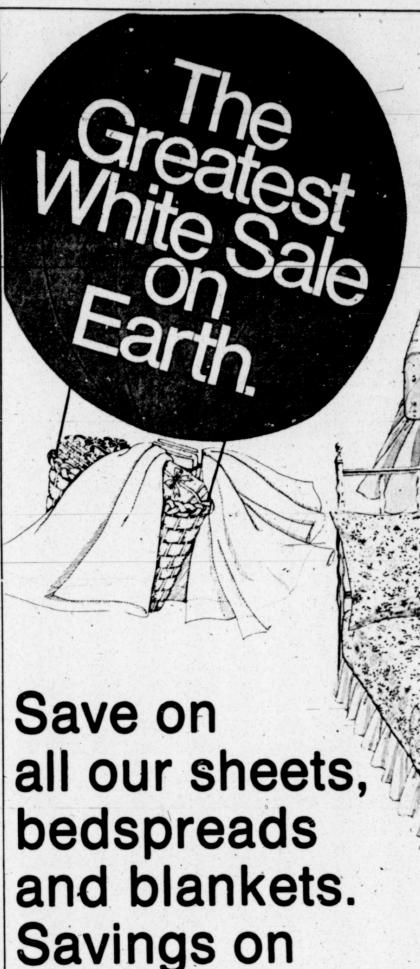

"No one has suggested that broadcast people should be permitted to dictate the timing and shape of our debates or somehow effect them as you would a play," Anderson wrote the speaker, who has indicated he favors use of House personnel to handle the broadcasts.

reg. $27, Sale 18.90

"There could be no delays for commercial messages, as you suggest," Anderson wrote. "... Any use of live coverage would be prohibited from interrupting that coverage with a commercial."

Anderson said electronic coverage of the House "should be provided by professional broadcasters, on whom the American people depend for their news about government, and not by the very people being covered."

The House has voted in principle to permit television and radio coverage of its proceedings. O'Neill is expected to decide early in 1978 how it is to be done.

Two Sensational Murders Held Crime Spotlight

TWO SINGULARLY vicious crimes shocked the community during 1977 - the slaying of attractive secretary Toni Dianne Kumpf and the kidnap-murder of six-year-old Johnny Turner Jr.

At year's end, suspects in each case remained behind bars awaiting trial. Ironically, Clarence Allen Lackey, accused in the slaving of Miss Kumpf, and Philip Carey Brasfield, charged in the Turner case, share a cell at Lubbock County Jail.

Both men were arrested within days of the crimes. Lackey, a 23-year-old construction worker was arrested at an Amarillo motel before dawn on Aug. 3, three days after the nearly decapitated body of the 23-year-old secretary was found on a dirt road south Shortly before 6:30 a.m. July 31 heighbors in the area of Miss Kumpf's 1001 Ave. W apartment called police with a report of a woman screaming.

Officers arriving at the seene a few minutes later found the front door kicked in and its wooden frame

Among the neighbors awakened during the nor mally quiet time of morning was a witness who said he saw a woman slumped in the cab of a white pickup parked in front of the residence. He also de scribed the man - her suspected killer - who then got in next to her and drove away

Following a joint effort by Lubbock police, Lubbock County Sheriff's Department deputies and Texas Rangers, Lackey was charged with capital murder the night before his arrest.

A change of venue motion has since been granted for the suspect, and his upcoming trial is set in San

Lackey repeatedly has been denied bond since his

Less than three months later, public attention was focused on a missing 6-year-old Lubbock youth, whose body finally was found in a deserted portion of Yellowhouse Canyon near Slaton.

The search for Johnny Turner Jr. ended Nov. 3. eight days after he reportedly was abducted from his eastside neighborhood.

The boy's mother, Mrs. Johnny Turner Sr., told police she had last seen her son about 6:20 p.m. Oct. 26 as he played in front of their E. 29th Street apartment. Following a futile all-night search, police expanded the effort, which ultimately involved scores

During the next week, the intensive search moved from East Lubbock to the rugged expanse of the

As the effort continued, Brasfield was charged with aggravated kidnapping and jailed on $100,000 bond. Two days later, within hours of the discovery of the child's body, the suspect was charged with capital murder and bond denied.

Earlier in the year, Brasfield had been indicted with aggravated sexual abuse of a child in connection with an alleged incident involving a 9-year-old Lubbock boy

In April, inmates told U.S. District Judge Halbert O. Woodward a history of beatings by guards and "authorized" atticks by fellow prisoners - iexisted in a 46-year-old facility that lacked security, safety and health provisions.

Woodward himself termed county jail conditions here "cruel and inhuman, and rebuked county officials past and present for "serious mismanagement" and "physical abuse" and degradation of guilty of "bad faith," and thus awarded no monetary damages to prisoners. But the judge laid down stringent rules for the continued operation of the jail and warned he would shut down the facility unless the county complied.

That by itself would warrant a ranking as one of Lubbock's top news stories of 1977. But what followed was perhaps even more spectacular

While upgrading the existing county jail, Sheriff C.H. "Choc" Blanchard and the Lubbock County Commissioners Court initiated plans for new detention

Hospital

LUBBOCK COUNTY Hospital District managers entered 1977 feuding with their administrator and Texas Tech University, facing a huge deficit for a hospital whose opening had been indefinitely delayed, and eyeing the grim prospects of a 50 percent tax hike

But they ended the year with a revamped administrative organization, at peace with the university over "shared" medical services, and ready for the Feb 1 opening of the county's just-completed,

245-bed Health Sciences Center Hospital. And they did all that without raising taxes or putting the district hopelessly in the red

The turning point in the hospital district's stormy history came during the 65th session of the Texas Legislature. District officials knew they would need an unprecedented injection of state aid to open the county's university-affiliated teaching hospital - and with the help of such lawmakers as House Speaker Bill Clayton, Reps. Joe Robbins and Froy Salinas and Sen. Kent Hance, they got

It didn't come easily. The district wanted two things from the legislature: a law specifically authorizing the state to pay some of the costs of medical school-affiliated hospitals, and a hefty appropriation for Lubbock.

that shot in the arm

The Senate and House passed different versions of the enabling legislation, and the bill died during the waning hours of the session, when opponents talked a compromise to death. The appropriation for Lubbock, however, got through. In its state appropriations bill, the House allocated $6 million over the next two years for Lubbock's teaching hospital, and the Senate, $8 mil-In conference committee, legislators agreed to go with the Senate's version. There was some doubt at the close of the session whether Lubbock could get the money, because of the failure of enabling legislation. But state officials from Gov. Dolph Briscoe to Comptroller Bob Bullock - said the money could indeed be disbursed.

On Oct. 25, the hospital district received a $4 million check from the state, the first installment of the appropriation.

The district's administration - now under Gerald Bosworth, who replaced controversial Harold Coston, assisted by consultants of Hyatt Medical Management Services Inc. - says that $4 million will be just enough to balance the hospital's first-year operating budget.

48 Lost Lives In City Traffic Mishaps In '77

TRAFFIC ACCIDENTS claimed 48 lives in Lubbock over the past year, setting a grim record for the decade. Only six months into 1977, the body count stood at 22, a figure that led police to predict a black year on city streets. The prediction held true and, as the death count climbed alarmingly, concerned city officials mounted a concentrated traffic safety campaign for the holiday season. Mayor Roy Bass implored the local news media to promote safety tips and defensive driving courses. He appealed to businesses to encourage driving safety among customers. The campaign theme of "zero traffic fatalities this month" was paraded around town on bumper stickers and billboards - all to no avail. Only five days into December, an 18-year-old man became the city's 44th traffic victim. And four more people died on city streets before the month's end.

Because of few similarities and com-mon factors among the fatal accidents, frustrated police officers and city officials said there was no way to predict where or when the next accident would

Police suspect alcohol played a part in some of the fatalities. And the fatalities occurred most often this year on Sunday, police records indicate. The most critical driving periods have been midnight to 2 a.m. and 4 to 6 p.m.

Of the 48 deaths, 10 occurred on Parkway Drive, a divided four-lane street on the city's east side. The other accidents occurred at disparate locations around

More accidents in 1977 than ever before seem to have been multiple-fatality crashes. In one accident, four persons died and in several other crashes, two people were killed.

gram for the construction of three elementaries and a junior high south of Loop 289, an elementary northwest of the loop, and numerous additions and improvements to existing schools throughout Lubbock.

The only organized opposition to the building program came from the local branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. The NAACP warned that the new southside schools would encourage white flight and hurt inner-city integration. The group vowed to fight the proposition in court. The NAACP's threatened intervention was unnecessary, however.

In late February and March, while school officials were naming architects. getting input from parents on new-school designs and preparing for a bond sale, Justice Department attorney Steven Gurwin was meeting with the district and the NAACP about the racial implications of the building program.

School officials characterized the meetings as "routine," but on April 7, federal government attorneys did something quite extraordinary and unexpected: They asked Woodward not only to block the new school construction but also order the implementation of a comprehensive, "systemwide" school desegrega-

In Woodward's courtroom in November and December, the Justice Department and school district presented their arguments. The department alleged that the district has tried to segregate minorities for years by manipulating attendance zones, closing schools in integrated neighborhoods and building new schools in predominantly one-race areas - and that the new southwest schools are an extension of that policy.

The district's rebuttal was that Lubbock always has provided schools where students live, and that there has been no intent to keep races separate.

Woodward is expected to rule on the case early in 1978. If he finds the district guilty of the Justice Department's allegations of widespread discrimination, further hearings will be held to devise a new desegregation plan for the city's public schools.

Philadelphia Celebrates 1978 With Annual Mummers Parade

PHILADELPHIA (AP) - In sequins made the point very clear in the 1976 and feathers, struttin' and swayin' to the "Oh Dem Golden Slippers" trademark tune, more than 15,000 costumed music merrymakers and clowns will welcome another New Year on Sunday in Philadelphia's 78th Mummers Parade

A sidewalk crowd of around 500,000 is expected along the five-mile route. The crowds numbered close to 2 million two decades ago, before television.

Costumes of silk and satin cost more than $1 million, and the $191,000 in prize money now offered by the city to the comics, fancies and string bands doesn't come close to covering expenses.

Mummer rules demand that everything must be new every parade, and competing clubs hold raffles, dances, and parties all year long to raise the loot.

The top string band wins $5,700 but Fred Calandra, president of the Philadelphia New Year Shooters Mummers Association, said it costs nearly $30,000 to dress the group, usually 60 men.

Officially, the Mummers began parading annually on Broad Street in 1901. There was no march in 1919, right after World War I, nor in 1934 during the height of the Depression. Rain or snow has also forced delay.

But, in truth, the New Year rite in the city where American independence was born actually dates back to colonial times when the Swedes and Finns formed roaming bands of merrymakers to celebrate a second Christmas on Jan. 1.

They'd paint or powder their faces, or cover them with masks, and rap on doors, kiss the girls, and fire off guns hence the nickname "Shooters."

It's still predominantly an all-male parade, with very few black participants. In 1975, worried about a civil rights lawsuit, the Mummers Association said women could participate. Last year four women did a "Bride of Frankenstein" sketch in the comic division and won a $350 prize.

Most of the females seen in the parade, however, are male impersonators. One

Physicist Immigrates To America

SOUTH BEND, Ind. (AP) - For about six month Kris Petrozolin was a man without a country. Now the 37-year-old Polish nuclear physicist and his family are settled in a small apartment near the University of Notre Dame and plan to become American citizens.

The saga began last summer when Petrozolin, his wife, Anna, and their fiveyear-old daughter. Olga, left Warsaw for a British vacation. They decided not to go

They declined to discuss why they defected, but stressed the decision was not hastily made

Two years ago, we knew we wanted to leave Poland," Petrozolin said. "But we couldn't leave then. We couldn't speak English and our daughter was too young

So they took English lessons and waited until Olga was five. Then they sold their car and left.

There was no certain country we wanted to go to. Just one in the west and where the facilities were modern enough for me to do my, work," he said. In Poland, Petrozolin worked as in a government-operated nuclear research institute and Anna was a chemist.

Once in London, they sent letters to friends in several countries looking for a nuclear research position. And by October, Notre Dame and a South African government institute offered Petrozolin a

A South African visa was obtained easily, but U.S. entry was denied. American clearance came Dec. 17 as the Petrozolin's were preparing to leave London for

Sitting in their sparsely furnished apartment, Petrozolin credited an anonymous Polish-American scientist living in Indiana for the U.S. change of heart. The unnamed scientist contacted Hoosier Sens. Birch Bayh and Richard Lugar, Rep. Andrew Jacobs, D-Ind, and state department officials about Petrozolin's

"It was incredibly ironic," said Mitch Daniels, a Lugar aide. "The Carter administration had just announced the U.S. was opposed to nuclear development in South Africa and here we were dropping a highly skilled nuclear scientist right in Petrozolin is one of a few persons worldwide trained to work with an electron linear accelerator, a highly advanced nuclear research device. Notre Dame has one of four U.S. linear accelerators. Mrs. Petrozolin said they miss their families and friends. "My mother, father and sister are in Poland," she said. "But you must understand that with us our work is the most important thing and Kris can do better work here than in Po-

However, the chance of that seems small - and Murphy sees no particular problems ahead for Texas carriers.

TAC also will be disbrusing around $1 million in aid for airport construction projects during 1978, Murphy notes.

That money will be matched in varying amounts so that total amount of construction involved will be considerably more than $1 million.

But, he adds, inflation has cut into the amount of work the funds will finance, even though the funding is at the same level as in earlier years.

Supreme Court Set To Hear Water Rights Case

By ROBERT E. HUBER

A-J Correspondent SANTA FE - A century ago, arguments over water usage in the West often were handled very simply and directly with no recourse to the legal arena. But in a few weeks, the states of Texas and New Mexico will be taking their wa-

The legal battle results from a claim by Texas that New Mexico has been in violation of the Pecos River Compact.

Briscoe Revives Board For Water Resources

A-J Austin Bureau

AUSTIN - Gov. Dolph Briscoe has signed an executive order re-establishing his water task force, and charging it to contribute work on "water development and conveyance.

Briscoe earlier appointed the Governor's Water Resource Conservation and Development Task Force to develop recommendations on vater matters working with the now-Department of Water Re-

In reconstitution the group, the governor charged members to:

•Work with his office and DNR in developing "recommended economic, social and environmental objectives to be met by development of the water resources available to Texas.

·Coordinate with and assist regional and local government units in "evaluation all feasible plans and proposals for water development and conveyance to meet both short and long-range water needs of Texas.

·Assist in "implementation of an acting program to assure timely implementation of water resource projects in Texas with and without Federal participa-

·Develop "a policy which will address current proposals for changing Federal policies and procedures in water resource programs

Members of the task force have not yet been named.

In issuing the order, Briscoe noted that President Jimmy Carter has ordered the Office of Management and Budget to study federal responsibilities relating to natural resources, and that efforts are going on towards development of a national water plan.

College President · Calls Limericks Bawdy, 'Folk Art'

NORWICH, Conn. (AP) - A college president who is organizing a national limerick competition says the idea was inspired by a book called "Lecherous Limericks," but that he is not interested in encouraging bathroom graffiti.

"A limerick ought to be bawdy but it should not be crude," said Robert N. Rue, president of Mohegan Community College and an avid limerick reader.

Rue has donated $50 of his own money for the competition's grand prize. The judging will be done by science fiction writer Isaac Asimov, the author of "Lecherous Limericks.

Rue, who got the book as a birthday present, said he contacted Asimov and corresponded through limericks to organize the contest.

The judging will be based on "adherence to limerick form, orginality, humor and delicacy," according to Rue's rules.

We're trying to discourage bathroom wall stuff, as well as sexism, racial and ethnic slurs," he said.

The five-line limericks are a "folk art." They tell a story, have the form's distinctive meter and rhyme and carry a punch at the end, Rue said.

The Encyclopedia Brittanica says limerick contests were popular early in the 1900s, and limericks have been collected since about 1820. As an example, the encyclopedia offers this

Airliner Makes Emergency Stop

CHICAGO (AP) - An Eastern Airlines jet, carrying 107 passengers plus crew, made an emergency landing at O'Hare International Airport Saturday with a malfunctioning nose gear.

Flight 637, bound from Chicago to Orlando. Fla., was forced to return to O'Hare after takeoff once the malfunction was discovered and passengers exited by way of emergency slides. No one was seriously injured, authorities said.

Emergency fire and ambulance crews stood by as the pilot and crew brought the 727 jetliner down on the pavement, scraping the nose along the concrete rungers who wished to resume their trip boarded another flight.

to the point where New Mexico now owes Texas a deficit of 1.4 million acre feet of water Although the affair technically now has landed in the highest court in the land, the matter is so complicated that the Supreme Court has followed a practice often used by district courts and has named a "special master" to hear the complex

He is Jean Breitenstein, a well-regarded Federal judge. The hearing is to begin Feb. 27 in Denver, Colo.

Richard Simms, legal director of the New Mexico State Engineer's office the state's water agency - says, in fact, that the dispute is so complicated that the case has been divided into "segments"

That February hearing, he says, will deal with the "first segment of the first

New Mexico's position, Simms says, is that "we have no deficit whatsoever:"

Another important water rights case involving the southeastern part of New Mexico is coming to trial in Chaves County (Roswell) April 17.

The Mescalero Apache Tribe, which has developed an elaborate tourist project in the Ruidoso area, is claiming all rights to the waters of the Rio Hondo at the headwaters. The project involves a ski system at Sierra Blanca and the plush resort hotel, the Inn of the Mountain Gods

The Mescaleros originally sought for the case to be heard in federal court. But, Richard Simms observed, both federal and New Mexico courts have held that state courts do have the right to adjudicate water rights for Indian tribes.

The Riq Hondo adjudication affects many water users. The stream begins in the mountains west of Roswell, flows through the rich orchard area of the Hondo Valley, and empties into the Pecos River at Roswell.

The New Mexico State Planning Office has launched a program to help rural New Mexicans take advantage of federal money allocated to the state for home

The state discovered that not all of its allocation of home loan funds from the federal Farmers Home Administration were being utilized, even though there were substantial needs for new homes and improvements to existing homes in New Mexico's rural areas.

So eight new state employees were trained in a three-month program and

A-J Austin Bureau AUSTIN - Farmers, so Daniel Webster once remarked, are the "founders of human civilization.

Nor was it so long ago, in terms of the historical perspective, that farmers were the majority - in Texas and elsewhere. But that hasn't been true in the lifetime of most Texans - and Texas has become not only an urban state, but one of the largest urban states - and that trend However, with the increasing urbanization of Texas, argiculture has continued to gain in importance, with agribusiness remaining the top industry for Texas, despite the growth of industry That fact is one that agriculture leaders are quick to point out - and it accounts in part for the frustration of farmers who ask why it is that they seem to end up with so little profit from such a large contribution to the state's (and nation's)

That frustration has boiled over into the nationwide "strike" by farmers, who have tried such measures as surrounding the offices of officials (such as Commissioner of Agriculture Reagan Brown) in

Brown says he can support "the call for 100 percent parity" if the goals of farmers and ranchers can be achieved "in the marketplace through the free enterprise system

Asked whether that means he would support legislated 100 percent parity, Brown said he thinks that would mean that the free enterprise system wouldn't be allowed to work.

But other statewide officials have been reluctant to make any firm committments, either - including rancher-banker Dolph Briscoe, who urged President Jimmy Carter to meet the farmers while hedging on the strike itself.

That hesitation must appear strange, and irritating, to farmers, who remember that Briscoe and Brown have stressed the theme of making Texas No. 1 in agricultural production

Both men could rightly point out that the farmers really need to be talking more in Washington than to them - but it also appears that neither wants to run the risk of upsetting large numbers of ur-

Whether such a program was run, and whether it is precisely correct, that does point up the fact that candidates will have to consider the metropolitian areas even more than in the past.

The declining political power of rural areas and farmers has been evident in the Legislature in the past several sessions.

Redistricting, following the "one-man, one-vote" ruling by the U.S. Supreme Court, cracked many traditional rural strongholds - and there will have to be another redistricting session in 1981, the regular session after next, to conform House and Senate districts to the 1980 census figures.

There can be little doubt that the metropolitan areas wili gain - and the rural areas will lose.

Senators Tough To Influence

WASHINGTON (UPI) - Organized labor usually won when it spent money to help House candidates in 1976, but its batting average dropped to .500 when union members tried to influence Senate elections with their political war chest. Big labor's candidates won 80 out of 100 House races where unions donated a considerable amount of money, a recent study shows But there were only 20 winners in 40 Senate races where labor contributions were significant.

This analysis of 1976 House and Senate races was made by the Republican National Political Action Committee, an arm of the GOP that is trying get big business to give candidates money for this year's congressional races on a level that would counter labor's millions.

Unions and big corporations are banned by law from giving direct contributions to federal candidates. But both can organize groups to solicit voluntary contributions from members or employ-

The GOP study, based on financial reports filed with the Federal Election Commission, showed organized labor spent at least $10.5 million on congressional races two years ago - and nearly all of it went to Democrats.

Labor's two biggest contributions were spent on losing causes

William Green, the Democrat who lost to Sen. John Heinz, R-Pa., received $245,480 from labor, while Sen. John Tunney, R-Calif., got $230,488 but lost to S.I. Havakawa, R-Calif.

Labor's big winner - and third largest recipient - was Sen. Daniel Moynihan, D-N.Y., who received $222,488 in his battle with Sen. James Buckley, R-N.Y. Fourth was former Sen. Vance Hartke, D-Ind., who received $210,754 and lost.

The study also shows labor spent a lot of money on "old friends" with safe seats who probably didn't need the money to win. This category included Sens. Harrison Williams, DN.J., $205,008; Hubert Humphrey, D-Minn., $125,321; Edmund Muskie, D-Maine, $77,321; Edward Kennedy. DMass., $76,901 and Majority Leader Robert Byrd, D-W Va. $49,866.

On the House side, 100 candidates ceived anywhere from $23,649 to $106,535 from labor - and 80 won. In several cases, labor spent the money where it was

Rep. Stan Lundine, D-N.Y., received the most - $106,535. Lundine's upstate New York district has always been Republican until he captured it four years

The second biggest House recipient of labor funds was Rep. Lloyd Meeds, D-Wash, who received $67,723. He won reelection by 542 votes.

Rep. Bob Gammage, D-Tex., received $64,225 — and won by a mere 268 votes. Rep. Abner Mikva, D-Ill., who won by 201 votes, received $40,867

But labor also gave $64,527 to House Speaker Thomas "Tip" O'Neill, who was not seriously challenged.

Deadly Danger Constant In Area Elevators

Avalanche-Journal Staff But for the tragic death 65 days ago of a Petersburg man, the South Plains has been spared the horrifying calamity this year of a major grain elevator explosion. On Oct. 26, the Petersburg Co-Op was rocked by an explosion that mortally injured 26-year-old Mike Morales, the father of three. Morales died about two hours later in a Lubbock hospital.

There are 11 grain elevators in the immediate Lubbock area, including two at Abernathy and another in Slaton. 'I

In the past week, the agricultural world as well as those outside have been stunned by four major explosions that have resulted in death at Courtland, Kan., Tupelo, Miss., Galveston and a mammoth explosion at the $100 million Continental Grain complex last week at Westwego, La.

The explosion there killed 35 persons, making it the most calamitous blast in recent grain elevator history.

In fact, an Occupational Safety and Health Administration official noted recently that only 35 persons had died in grain elevator explosions in the country between 1958 and 1975.

Last year, the official said, only eight major explosions occurred throughout the country. In six days this year, four have been reported, resulting in the deaths of at least 52 persons.

Ken Goughnour, manager of the Goodpasture. Inc., facility here said recently the danger associated with highly volatile grain dust is constant

We handle between 15 and 25 million bushels (of grain) during the harvest," Goughnour said.

Maintenance checks are daily, he said, indicating employees constantly monitor electrical shorts, motors, gear boxes and other mechanical devices that might

In Marijuana Raid

BANDON, Ore. (AP) - Five tons of marijuana were seized and five men arrested in a land and sea raid near a beach farmhouse on the Oregon coast

The U.S. Coast Guard chased and finally caught a 100-foot vessel that allegedly had been unloading bales of marijuana to two amphibious craft near the beach. Officers said the ship was abandoned when overtaken, but two persons were later spotted in a liferaft and arrested. The other three persons were ar-

Even the White House's choice of a name known to relatively few Wall Streeters for the chairmanship of the Federal Reserve Board failed to elicit much response from the market.

At mid-week President Carter nominated G. William Miller, chief executive officer of Textron Inc., to succeed Arthur Burns as the Fed's chairman when his term expires at the end of January.

The news sent Wall Street analysts scurrying for information about Miller, whose name had scarcely been mentioned in speculation about who might ers for his business career, there was little information at hand to suggest how he might influence the shape of monetary policy in Washington.

"It should be noted that all judgments on Mr. Miller's ultimate policies must be tentative at this stage," said Bache Halsey Stuart Shields economist Richard B. Hoey and Leslie M. Alperstein, the firm's director of research.

Nevertheless, they concluded that Miller "is likely to take a somewhat different view of Federal Reserve policy than did Mr. Burns, a deeply conservative business-cycle economist.

Hoey and Alperstein said they believed it likely that Miller would place less emphasis on managing the growth rate of the money supply for inflation-fighting purposes and pay more attention to industrial activity, including the amount of production capacity being utilized. If, in fact, there is a moderate deemphasis of money supply targets compared to the strength of industrial demand, the probability of major increases in short term interest rates in early 1978 should be much lower than if Mr. Burns had remained in office." "As a result of a probable shift away from monetarism," they said, "the risks in the economic outlook over the next 18 months will shift from fears of a stagnant economy to fears of a buildup of inflationary pressures.

The foreign reaction to Mr. Miller. who is relatively unknown abroad, is likely to be somewhat negative, if only because uncertainties about his future policies may take some time to be resolved.

"In addition, Mr. Carter's other appointment of a businessman to a high-level financial post (Michael Blumenthal of Bendix Corp. as Treasury secretary) has been disappointing to foreign investors.

The dollar policy of Mr. Blumenthal has not been well received abroad and on this precedent, foreign observers may hesitate to give Mr. Carter's latest nomination the benefit of the doubt until he proves himself."

Carter Nominee Puzzle To Many

guessing game is over about who President Carter will name to head the Federal Reserve Board, a new question has surfaced: How will Carter's nominee, G. William Miller, do in the job?

Carter's surprise apppointment of Miller this week to replace Arthur Burns left the business and financial world scrambling to get a handle on the man who will become the 11th chairman of the Fed since its inception in 1913.

Miller is respected as a businessman, coming to the new post from the stewardship of Textron Inc., a Providence, R.I.-based conglomerate that makes products ranging from Shaeffer pens to Talon zippers. But his monetary stance isn't widely known-

Although he said he has not yet formulated specific policies, Miller said he was interested in accomplishing three things.

"One is that we need economic conditions that will reduce the rate of inflation." Miller said in a telephone interview from Lyford Cay in the Bahamas, where he was vacationing. "The second interest of mine is to reduce the rate of employment. The third interest of mine is to get a stable dollar.

Burns' opinions, on the other hand, were very familiar. A staunch economic conservative, he believed in holding a tight rein on the nation's money flow-a flow which the Federal Reserve Board, with its control of the issuance of currency and bonds, has authority over.

But there were those who felt Burns was too reactionary, including President Carter. The chairman managed to step on several Carter programs during the president's first year in office.

Rather than emphasizing employment or economic growth, Burns put his chief efforts into trying to hold down inflation. Miller's background as a businessman is seen by many as possible switch away "I know Bill Miller very well and know-

The rates have gone up annually since 1970 and have more than doubled since 1972, when the maximum tax was $468. But Congress recently passed new legislation, signed by President Carter Dec. 20. calling for even steeper hikes in the coming years in an effort to keep the Social Security system solvent.

Carter and congressional leaders have promised a substantial income tax cut. totaling about $25 billion, to offset the Social Security increase and also the costs to consumers of any new energy taxes. But details of that package cannot be assured until the energy debate is finished, meaning that any relief, probably in the range of $150 for a family of four earning $10,000, would not be forthcoming until late in the year.

A worker making $10,000 will pay $605 in Social Security taxes alone this year, compared to $585 in 1977

The 1978 increase was already built into prior law, though the House wanted to boost the tax further to a maximum of $1,203.95. The Senate and Carter prevailed on the lower 1978 limit of $1,-070.85, however.

Farm Strike Effect Considered Mixed

Associated Press Writer

"nationwide farm strike," now more than two weeks old, may hold more terror for statisticians and linguists than grocers. It would be a pollster's nightmare to figure out how many farmers were really "on strike" as 1978 began.

If you look at demonstrations, picketing incidents, and expressions of sympathy, the strike appears strong in a broad . pattern that covers about half of the contiguous 48 states.

But do sympathy and demonstrations mean that farmers are holding goods off the market - or will, at the next harvest?

Nobody knows yet, according to officials in virtually all the states. And the moment of truth may not come until

The Associated Press asked agriculture officials in all 48 contiguous states how many farmers are curtailing activity. Texas Agriculture Commissioner Reagan Brown's answer was typical "It's hard to determine in Texas because much of the wheat has been plant-

The record number of persons who flew out of Lubbock during the holidays apparently had more difficulty locating a parking place than catching a flight.

An estimated 36,000 passengers boarded planes during December, leaving on flights which were either full or close to it. However, airline representatives indicated empty seats would have been more prevalent without the large number of passengers who decided to take their chances with stand-by status.

A. C. Steinbrink, Braniff lead customer service agent, said that airline experienced a 50 percent no-show rate during the holidays, which allowed almost all stand-by passengers to make their

the Lubbock office of Southwest Airlines, attributed the no-shows to "people making reservations on every carrier,' then claiming only one reservation.

As a result, Hargrove said, Southwest encourages stand-by passengers even when all flights appear completely booked.

Bill Greenhill, Texas International customer service representative, said the airlines respond to the no-show problem by overbooking, sometimes by 15 or 20

Although most travelers made it on a flight without a hitch, many of the airport patrons experienced difficulty with the overcrowded parking conditions at the facility. Hargrove labeled the airport parking "the worst situation I've ever seen. Everybody complains they can't find a parking space," he said, and "the overflow lot is entirely too far away.

However, the parking situation should be remedied by next Christmas with the planned construction of a two-level parking building near the terminal.

The estimated 36,000 boardings for December marked an increase of approximately 50 percent over that for the same

Ironically, the increase matches the estimated 12,500 boardings for Southwest Airlines in December. The carrier began service to Lubbock in May. Continental had boarded 11,192 passengers through Dec. 28, compared to its December, 1976, figure of 9,631. Through Dec. 29, Texas International had boarded 3,377, an increase over its 2.788 boardings in the same month last

However, Braniff's December boardings were approximately 2,900 below those for the same month last year. A Braniff spokesman estimated the airline would board 9,000 passengers this December compared to the 11,024 who flew Braniff last December.

Car Bomb Kills Two In London

LONDON (AP) - A bomb exploded in an automobile near central London's Piccadilly Circus shortly before midnight on New Year's Eve, killing two people in the car, police said.

Scotland Yard said the car belonged to the Syrian Embassy in London.

Piccadilly Circus was packed with revelers when the bomb blasted the car only five blocks away. A 17-year-old youth walking near the auto was knocked to the ground

Midway through December, at the behest of a group called American Agriculture, thousands upon thousands of farmers rode in tractor caravans, picketed food wholesalers and retailers, and announced that they would stop producing food and buying equipment in support of one goal: government action to raise farm prices to 100 percent of parity. At full parity, farmers theoretically have the same buying power as their forebears did at the turn of the century.

Farmers in the Hale County area also will meet at 7:30 p.m. Monday at the, Hale County Agriculture Center at Plainview, Meek said.

While some final phase three arrangements will be made then. Meek said, the Hale County meeting is primarily an "informative meeting aimed at the consum-

years, and grain prices were at about 49

Sympathy for the strike appears weakest in New England, in the states just south and east of the Great Lakes, and in California: the Southwest, and the Pacific Northwest. Many of those areas produce commodities such as fresh vegetables and dairy products which must be marketed quickly or spoil.

By contrast, the area of greatest strength is in grain country - although there is a belt of conservative grain farmers in Ohio, Illinois and Indiana, that isn't going along. They say they just don't like the tactic of holding goods back. Many of them also have fared relatively well economically in the past year.

Even in areas of strength, it is impossible to tell how much the strike is an economic boycott because of one question: What does a grain farmer mean when he says he is striking in the dead of winter?

For one thing, there is little for grain farmers to do. And prices are low now, meaning that grain - which can be stored easily - probably would be held off the market even if there were no

Business Down

In Louisiana some futures dealers say they are not doing as much business as might be expected, and some implement dealers report selling only a few items in the first days of the strike.

But Hugoton, Kan, strike organizer Jim Kramer admits there is just no way to measure the strike's economic muscle yet. The yardstick he offers is: "As of today, there are 82 (strike organizing) offices in Kansas and when you've got 105 counties, that's pretty good evidence of support, I think.

Strike organizers in many states offer such estimates of support - up to 100 percent of the farmers in some areas but those are often countered by lower estimates from groups not backing the

Arkansas Sympathetic

In Arkansas, for example, George McNeely of American Agriculture, the group behind the strike, estimates that 90 percent of southern Arkansas farmers sympathize. "From the way it looks now, a lot of them won't be doing any spring unless a settlement is reached," he says. But a recent convention of the anti-strike State Farm Bureau a well-organized national group — voted against endorsing the strike.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture also is shving away from estimates. Early in the strike, it monitored demonstrations through regional offices, but farmers howled that the keen eye of Big Brother seemed to be upon them, and now the USDA says the monitoring has

measure strike effects is the marketplace. Nearly all agricultural markets are

But even that doesn't necessarily mean anything. Grain market spokesmen point out that while some grain is being held back in farm silos, it could well be because grain movement is always slow at this time of year, especially when prices are low. In Virginia, on the other hand, striking farmers say that grain markets trade among themselves, and that could be keeping volume up.

So the real test - whether farmers will resist making a profit - may not come until grain prices begin to rise. And if that doesn't happen, the best indication of the strike's effectiveness may not come until spring, when it is time to

Dallas-Fort Worth Turnpike Ends Era, Becomes Free Road

DALLAS (AP) - And then there was one.

At 6 a.m. Saturday, the 30-mile, multi-lane stretch between Dallas and Fort Worth became a free road after 20 years, leaving the Dallas North Tollway as the lone payto-ride thoroughfare in Texas.

For some, it was a victory long overdue. For 200 of the 300 Dallas-Fort Worth Turnpike employees who lost their jobs, it was a sad day indeed.

"I'll never work with another group so close," said toll attendant Charlie McKnight. "That's the worst thing One woman ticket-taker wore an orchid in honor of the occasion, a bit like wearing black at a funeral. Another ran around snapping pictures of her fellow workers. "The worst thing about the last day was realizing that we're not going to come to work and then go home anymore," said attendant Carol Moroffko. Traffic seemed abnormally heavy shortly after 6 a.m. More than the accustomed number of passenger cars were seen easing through a light mist beside the familiar long-haul truckers. One attendant theorized some folks might have gotten up early just to see if the road "really is free after 20 years.

It was, but drivers approaching the toll plazas still slowed down almost to a stop as if expecting somebody to stick their head out of the tiny closet-like booths and take their money. When they realized it wasn't going to happen, they gunned their motors in glee and sped away.

For State Rep. Doyle Willis, D-Fort Worth, it was a day of mixed emotions. Willis was one of the turnpike's most "I feel sorry for anyone, anywhere who loses his job, but I'm just not for toll roads period," he said.

The toll road's demise was ironic. In 1953, it took a coalition of Dallas and Fort Worth businessmen and local lawmakers to convince the Texas Legislature there was a need for a road linking the two cities. Highway funds were scarce at that time so a turnpike authority was created and the state's first toll road was started.

Last year, when it became apparent the authority would pay off its bonded indebtedness 17 years early, the cry went up for removal of the toll booths. An eleventhhour effort by the turnpike authority to keep the tolls for another 20 years via a $300,000 expansion study failed when the legislature decreed the road should be free.

Howard Baker To Visit Panama In Pact Study

WASHINGTON (AP) - Senate Minority Leader Howard Baker, whose vote on the Panama Canal treaty is considered crucial, goes to Panama Tuesday, accompanied by a top White House aide.

Going on the five-day visit with Baker. a Republican from Tennessee, are Republican Sens. John Chafee of Rhode Island, who supports the treaty and Jake Garn of Utah, who opposes it; and Frank Moore. President Carter's chief congressional lobbvist.

'We asked the White House to send somebody along so there'd be no suggestion that we were going down there to try to renegotiate a treaty," an aide to Baker said Friday. But the administration - aware of complaints by some lawmakers that Moore's performance as Carter liaison man on Capitol Hill has been less than satisfactory - evidently hopes that by having visited Panama, Moore will become a more effective campaigner for the treaty when it comes to a showdown vote in the Senate early in the year.

However, the spotlight during the trip will be on Baker, who originally said he saw no need for a personal visit to Panama before deciding how to vote on the treaty. He changed his mind after receiving a written invitation from Panama's leader, Gen. Omar Torrijos, and told Torrijos he thought the visit would be "distinctly helpful. The Senate anticipates a month's dey, under which the Panama Canal would gradually be turned over to Panama by the year 2000. The pact provides that the United States and Panama would share responsibility after that date for defending the waterway. Baker has not taken a position on the pact, but his vote is considered crucial if Carter is to obtain the two-thirds Senate

support needed for ratification. Baker has said that when he does make up his mind, he will make an all-out effort to persuade other senators to join him. With most polls showing public opinion running strongly against the treaty, the issue is a particularly touchy one for Baker, who is up for re-election in 1978 and is widely considered to have future White House aspirations Under GOP Pressure He has been under pressure from GOP colleagues on both sides of the issue to take a stand, and has become a special target of anti-treaty forces who call the plan a "giveaway" that would endanger U.S. security and encourage the spread of communism in the Caribbean

Torrijos told Baker in the invitation that "you can play an immeasurable role in assuring one thousand years of peace in an area increasingly vital to the future of your country. But Baker said the decision to make the trip did not imply he had made up his mind, and added that he would not do so "until I am sure I have all the facts that are available to me on which to make a judgment Baker said several weeks ago he could do that without visiting Panama, even though a number of other senators including Majority Leader Robert C. Byrd, D-W. Va., had traveled there. Several members of the Senate Foreign Relations committee, led by Chairman John Sparkman, D-Ala., will visit Panama later next month. Baker is a member of that scouts, both boys and girls, stood five-deep along a quarter-mile driveway at the airport exit and waved at the presidential party. Welcoming Carter at the airport, the shah said he hoped the visit would "be marked by the best of successes." Carter, in turn, called energy the most importantglobal economic problem. Iran is one of the world's biggest oil producers.

"It is because I respect the shah's leadership in this area that I have come to him for consultation and advice," Carter

Associate White House Press Secretary Claudia Townsend said that as far as she knew Carter was not aware of the demonstrations here. But U.S. and Iranian authorities tightened the already massive security surrounding the president's visit and ordered additional measures.

As dusk settled over this city of 4.5 million, the presidential motorcade whisked past ultra-modern apartment buildings rising starkly from among makeshift wooden houses and tents.

Black-robed women, their faces partly covered according to Moslem religious custom, intently watched the motorcade along with clusters of men, some dressed in Western garb and others in anklelength tunics. The crowds were smaller, however, than those that greeted Richard M. Nixon when he made a presidential visit to Iran in 1972.

Scientists Seek To Read Genetic Codes

Researchers Probe Mysterious Origin Of Life

(EDITOR'S NOTE: Following is part one of a seven-part series dealing with the bizarra, behind—the-scenes genetic experiments being conducted in hundreds of university, government and private laboratories. The serialization is adapted from the book, "Who Should Play God?")

By TED HOWARD and JEREMY RIFKIN Pacific News Service

The year was 1953; the place a small "hut" in Cambridge, England. Two highly ambitious and imaginative scientists, James Dewey Watson, a 25-yearold American, and Francis Crick, a British biologist, were huddling over a tinker-toy style model of spidery arms and interlocking metallic clamps.

They tinkered all morning with the peculiar-looking contraption. Then, shortly before noon, the American and the Englishman glanced at one another, possessed by the sublime excitement of standing in the presence of something that no man had ever before seen.

By lunchtime Crick had drawn a great circle of his colleagues around him, telling everyone within hearing distance that we had found the secret of Crick's and Watson's announcement, offered with rather more scientific circumspection in the April 25, 1953, edition of the British journal Nature, thoroughly transformed modern biology. Immediately their discovery was hailed as the biological equivalent to the splitting of the atom. It was "the greatest achievement of science in the 20th century," claimed one British Nobel Prize

Certainly the discovery of deoxribose nucleic acid (DNA), the fundamental molecule of life, was one of the epic discoveries in the history of scientific

Located along the chromosomes of the cell, the DNA molecule takes the shape of a long, twisting, double helix, a kind of microscopic spiral staircase. The steps of the staircase, called "base units," are the most significant component of the structure and contain an endless variation of patterns that form the genes. The collective interaction of the genes directs the growth and development of living organisms.

String a few hundred genes together and the result might be a primitive bacteria. Hook a million genes together, and something else will result - man or a woman, or an elephant, or an oak tree or a polar bear.

Conceptually, DNA is a tiny computer, miniaturized beyond Sony's wildest dreams. If all the DNA in the cells of a human being were unraveled and strung together, it would stretch the distance from the earth to the sun and back, 400 times. Yet, in its natural state, the DNA contained in a human being is so tightly packed that it could fit into a cube measuring just one square inch

Programmed into this microscopic data bank is an almost inconceivable amount of information that spells out the biological and chemical functions of much information as 1,000 books, each 600 pages thick. A teaspoon of DNA taken from a simple bacteria has been equated to the storage capacity of a modern computer, 100 cubic miles in volume.

All of these bits of DNA information spell out the crucial instructions that determine everything from the color of your eyes and the numbers of toes and fingers, to the size of the brain. It is these bits of genetic data that molecular biologists are now learning to read. Once having learned the letters of the alphabet, they ultimately will be able to write.

Dr. Charles Price, former president of the American Chemical Association, hypothesizes that since the "DNA language on the simplest one-cell organism is exactly the same DNA language that duplicated a human being." then that one cell may have become "the progenitor of all life on earth.

For the genetic engineer, that is a heady thought. It means, quite simply that the Biological Revolution, with its ability to manufacture and alter DNA information, stands in command of both the evloutionary past and future. No modification of any life form is outside the eventual technological capability of the new genetics. We have aiready progressed to the point, says Dr. Robert

First In A Series

Sinsheimer, chairman of the biology department of the California Institute of Technology, where genetic engineering "makes available to us the gene pool of the plant — all of the genes developed in the varied evolutionary lines throughout the history of life — to reorder and reassemble as we see fit."

It all began over three billion years ago, in the primordial soup of the ocean. Something happened - cosmic radiation, perhaps, or tremendous electrical sparks - that caused inorganic gases and chemicals to come together and form life. At first, the organisms were barely on the edge of the living - bacteria and algae. But since that time, the rules of the game have remained the same: life growing and evolving, becoming increasingly complex, rising higher on the evolutionary scale through rare, but critical, mutations in genes.

The awesome slowness of the process is different to comprehend. For 21/2 billion years, these simple life forms were all that existed amidst the life-sustaining water. Then 600 million years ago, the first invertebrates - forerunners of jelly fish, sponges, worms and snails - began to take shape from the

Another 150 million years passed before fish and other vertebrates appeared. Fifty million years later, another development burst forth: fish began to grow jawbones, making them the first creatures capable of biting and eating other life forms. More important, (from our perspective on the evolutionary ladder, at least) a new type of life, the lungfish, emerged. Capable of breathing air outside the water, and blessed with muscled fins that could be used for walking, these lungfish eventually left the ocean to explore the land.

Next came the amphibians, 350 million years ago. Then came the reptiles—snakes, lizards, crocodiles, turtles; their skin mutating into scaly hardness to

After them the dinosaurs, those 70-foot long, 85-ton behemoths, roamed the land, dominating the world for 150 million years. Next, the age of the mammals, a new life form adapted to a drying and cooling climate, a climate that spelled extinction for the dinosaur.

Finally, just 2.5 million years ago, our closest ancestors, prehistoric man, emerged from the apes. Not until 35,000 B.C. did "modern man" appear. More than 30,000 years later, what we call civilization began to take hold.

Over these past three billion years, 100 million species have existed on this planet. Of those, 98 million are now extinct. Among the two million that remain today, only one, homo sapien (or "wise man"), has evolved to the point of being able to control and harness its own evolutionary future. Many biologists welcome this possibility, seeing it is as a great challenge that will enable and preserve our species. "Modern progress in microbiology and genetics suggests that man can outwit extinction through genetic engineering." argues Cal Tech biologist James Bonner. "Genetic change is not basically immoral. It takes place all the time, naturally. What man can do, however, is make sure that these changes are no longer random in the gigantic genetic lottery in nature... Instead, he can control the changes to produce bet-Bonner's view is seconded by Dr. Joseph Fletcher, professor of medical ethics at the University of Virginia School of Medicine, who sees in genetic engineering the fulfillment of our cosmic role on earth. "To be men," he believes, 'we must be in control. That is the first and last ethical word." Promises a third scientists, our newly developed eugenic potential will lead humanity to "a growth of social wisdom and glorious survival — toward the evolution of a

But what, the non-believer might ask, constitutes a "superman"? Who will decide on the traits and attitudes these "better individuals" embody? Who among us will be in control of securing our evolutionary future, and the evolutionary future of the other animals and planets that will be subject to genetic engineering? And how can we be sure that our tinkering and fixing with three billion years of evolutionary wisdom, we do not inadvertently join the other 98 million species that have passed from the earth?

Searchers Discover Last Two Bodies In Elevator Explosion

GALVESTON, Texas (AP) - The last two persons killed by a mammoth grain elevator explosion here were discovered under tons of twisted steel, concrete and grain late Friday

Capt. E.E. Burke of the Galveston County Medical Examiner's office said. "As far as we're concerned, that's it. According to the people at Farmer's Export (owners of the stricken elevator), there are no more bodies to be accounted for.

Eighteen people died in the Tuesday night blast that was heard 70 miles away. Harried doctors and nurses counted 22 injured before the ambulances stopped screaming up to the emergency entrance at Galveston's John Sealy Hospital.

Three victims were found Friday. The body of Larry Wayne Holmes, 22, of Galveston was found first.

Burke said the bodies of Holmes, Don Levis, 50, of Alta Loma and Mark Erhardt, 23, of Texas City, were discovered

With President Carter's nomination of former Texas Agriculture Commis-

"Number one, he's a political expert, Guest notes.

White, 53, was Texas Agriculture Commissioner for 26 years, leaving the post to become Carter's No. 2 man in the U.S. Department of Agriculture

His leadership potential was spotted by national party chiefs years ago - and confirmed by a willingness to back the disastrous McGovern ticket in 1972, a move imitated only by a handful of party faithful. And it was White's leadership that helped cinch the Carter nomination in Texas last year.

As President Carter places the committee's leadership into new hands, he might be considering White's diplomatic accomplishments - and hoping a Texan can help make up for a loss of support he has suffered among conservative Texas Democrats since the National Energy Plan was released last spring.

But Guest predicts White's reputation as a political fence mender will prove itself as his work gets underway toward three major goals.

"I think, number one, he must unify the party, get ready for the mid-term conference which will be next December, and get us ready for the re-election of Carter in 1980, he notes.

And, at the same time, Guest dismisses the possibility that White, a veteran of traditionally conservative Texas politics, will find the going rougher among more liberal Democrats.

"I see no problem with this at all," he notes. "John has always been able to work with all factions of the party and he'll be able to do so on a natural level." White will prove himself as the com-

Pistol-Packing Santa Robs Long Island Market

FRANKLIN SQUARE, N.Y. (AP) - A gunman wearing a Santa Claus suit robbed a 24-hour supermarket in this Long Island community of $1,500 early Saturday, Nassau County police said.

Steve Thilman, 22, a cashier at the Pathmark supermarket, was ringing up the Santa's $2.26 grocery order when the costumed bandit displayed a handgun and demanded money.

The robber, described as being in his early 20s, put $1,500 that Thilman handed him in the paper bag with his small purchase and fled on foot. No shots were fired in the 5:30 a.m. heist.

Episcopal Woman Priest Finds Church Ministry Challenging

year as an Episcopal priest, the Rev. Jacqueline Means learned to handle long hours, guilt and interviews. Now she just wishes the church would learn to handle

Since Mrs. Means became the first regordained Episcopal priest last Jan. 1, at least a dozen parishes have split from the 3 million-memdenomination issue of priests. Eight persons have left the inner-city

All Saints Episcopal MRS, MEANS Church, where she serves as an associate priest. But she says her ordination also attracted a few persons to the parish.

After a year of discussing and explaining. Mrs. Means, who became Indiana's first woman Episcopal deacon 312 years ago, said she still finds it difficult to understand the deep-seated reaction against women priests. "I've met with several bishops who oppose the ordination of women and it's my own need to say to these men that we can have differences of opinion but we can still be together in the church and make the church stronger "she said in an interview

Mrs. Means, 41, a mother of four and a licensed practical nurse, says she's eager for the novelty of her role to wear off so she can devote more time to her job as chaplain at the Indiana Women's Prison. Next fall she's planning to take some college criminal justices courses to make her more effective at the prison. She already has helped convince local Episcopal leaders to fund a halfway house for the state prison in Indianapolis.

'In some ways the prison has helped keep me out of trouble because as long as I'm working there I won't be asking for a parish of my own." As an afterthought, she noted that either the bishop or the parishioners make that decision.

Mrs. Means, a former Roman Catholic, says she's optimistic, predicting that women will become assistant Episcopal bishops within five years and that the Catholic church will be ordaining women priests within 10 years.

The Episcopal hierarchy approved the ordination of women at a September, 1976 meeting in Minneapolis, ending 200 years of male domination in the church. Mrs. Means said the decision helped reaffirm the important role women have always held in the church and family.

"Women are the ones that often get the family organized and into church on Sundays. They've always been the Sunday school teachers, the altar society and choir members," she said. "After a lifetime of seeing only men in leadership roles I guess some people just can't imagine a woman in a similar position." About two-thirds of the 75 women who have been ordained since Mrs. Means still don't have jobs, she said, and the strain has hospitalized one woman and sent others to psychiatrists. With no female Episcopal role model, Mrs. Means said this year she thought a lot about the Roman Catholic nuns she knew as a child. Raised a Catholic, Mrs. Means stopped attending church after she eloped at 16 with Delton Means, a Methodist, because they were unable to reconcile their religious differences. After they were out of the church for seven years the couple decided their four children needed formal religious training. They choose St. Matthew Episcopal Church near their eastside home and the family is still active

The year has meant adjustments for both Mrs. Means and her family.

"A lot were adjustments that every cleric must make, getting used to the night meetings, long hours and learning not to bring all my problems home." Others, like the year-long blitz of photogra-unique to Mrs. Means. "I had one reporter call and ask me how it felt to be splitting the Episcopal church apart. Well, I've learned not to accept the guilt implied in that question," she said. "Some people have been waiting for a long time to leave the church, and for them the ordination of women and changes in the prayer book are just

Schism In Episcopal Church Leads Survey

HOUSTON - Reporters who cover religion in the United States have voted the schism in the Episcopal Church as the top religion news story of 1977.

The schism in the church began taking shape in late 1976, but by Sept. 1977, was proceeding rapidly. Although it is widely believed that the schism results only from the Episcopal General Convention's 1976 decision to ordain women, Bishopelect James O. Mote of the breakaway Anglican Church in North American says there were more than a dozen issues that' brought about the division. In their year end poll, the religion reporters said the drive by homosexuals for understanding and acceptance by churches was the number two story of the year in religion news. Although the religious controversy over homosexuality took a variety of forms during 1977, key controversies swirled around the ordination to the Episcopal priesthood last January of an avowed lesbian and the anti-gay rights crusade launched by entertainer Anita Bryant, a ries of 1977 was conducted by the Religion Newswriters Association, the professional organization for religion writers and editors for secular newspapers, news magazines and news services in the United States and Canada. One hundred ballots were mailed and 48 were returned Each participating RNA member listed his or her Top 10 choices.

Results of the survey were released in Houston by Louis Moore, religion editor of The Houston Chronicle, who handled the year-end project for the professional orgaization.

The No.3 story of 1977, according to the RNA poll, was the boom of the evangelical "born again" movement in this country: Some reporters cited the influence President Jimmy Carter, a Southern Baptist, had on the boom.

The controversy-surrounding the socalled religious cults active in the United States today was voted the No.4 story of the year. The cult issue includes the disputes that swirl around the Rey. Sun Myung Moon's Unification Church and the deprogrammers

Cowboys, Vikings Bid For Return To Super Bowl

Avalanche-Journal Sports Staff

IRVING - Dallas thoroughly transported the Chicago Bears to the cleaning factory last Monday in a manner which caused even Tom Landry to crack a

Moments after greeting reporters in the Cowboy lockerroom, the veteran coach said, "That's the first time that this team has reached its full potential." And yes, Landry certainly did leave the door wide open when he used the words "first time." The coach only hopes his Pokes continue to ride the crest of a playoff peak today in the NFC championship game against the Minnesota Vikings. Most of the anticipated full house in Texas Stadium would like nothing

By that time, the Vikings and the Cowboys will know the AFC foe awaiting the 12th Super Bowl affair in New Orleans Jan. 15. And a return trip to the title game wouldn't fall into the category of a novelty for either Minnesota or Dallas.

Matter of fact, since the pro grid gods invented the NFC in 1971, either Dallas or Minnesota has carried the conference banner into five of those six Super Bowls. Make that six out of seven now, regardless of today's outcome. Only the Washington Redskins dented the Dallas-Minnesota dominance when they entered the game in 1972's season finale. Of course, the Vikings have become famous for losing the most Super Bowls - four for four, while Dallas won once in

However, neither of today's hopefuls resembles its predecessors in total appearance. The big obvious addition at Dallas carries the name, Tony Dor-SETT. Last season's his Heisman Trophy winner from Pittsburgh received his first yard rushing plateau

The big difference in Minnesota is the subtraction of scrambling quarterback Fran Tarkenton, who suffered a broken bone in his lower right leg in mid-November. The veteran all-pro has yielded his duties to Bob Lee, who pitched the Vikes to a 14-7 upset of the Rams in Los Angeles last Monday.

Lee's threat, halfback Chuck Foreman, rushed for 1112 yards to finish sixth in the season rushing figures. Viking wide receiver Ahmad Rashad ranked fifth among NFL receivers with 51 catches for 681 yards. Rashad and cohort Sammy White form a good pair of deep threats along with dependable tight end Stu

ously apply the pressure. Lee and the Vikings hope to nullify the pass rush with some rollout tactics.

On the other side of the two-platoon, Dallas quarterback Roger Staubach may need to scramble from the pressure of Minnesota chasers Carl Eller, Alan Page and Jim Marshall Staubach's favorite receiver, clanker Drew Pearson, finished ninth in regularseason NFL receptions with 48 for 870 yards. Tight end Billy Joe Dupree and fullback Robert Newhouse can be menacing, too, but the rookie tailback, Dorsett, really makes the D in Dallas stand for devastating.

"We have the gamebreaker we've needed. His running threat makes our playaction passes so much more effective than they ever were before," Staubach said about Dorsett.

Sloan Hires A&M's Slocum

HOUSTON (AP) - Texas A&M defensive ends coach R.C. Slocum has resigned to accept a position as linebacker coach on the staff of new Mississippi coach Steve Sloan, A&M officials announced

Slocum, 33, has been an assistant coach at A&M since 1972. He coached offensive ends and defensive ends during his tenwho made 22 tackles. 'You can't arm-tackle someone like Alexander," said Ceresino. "He's too strong. He has to be the best running

> "I felt he was super," McClendon said of Alexander. "He only had one easy gainer. On all the rest, he had to twist and turn. He got us four or five crucial first downs.

"I don't think you can find two more evenly matched teams," McClendon said. "This was just a great game and it was just like everybody said it would be our rushing against their passing."

It was strictly a duel in the sun between Benjamin, the nation's No. 1 passer, and the sophmore Alexander, who finished No. 2 to Texas' Earl Campbell as the country's top rusher.

LSU couldn't stop the Cardinals in the air, and Stanford couldn't slow down the Bengal Tigers on the ground in the first meeting in history between the two schools that both finished the season unranked with 8-3 records.

USC Hangs 47-28 Defeat On Aggies

Southern Cal rallied behind four touchdown passes by Rob Hertel and a 94-yard run by Dwight Ford and solved the problem of Texas A&M freshman quarterback Mike Mosley Saturday night to beat the Aggies 47-28 in the 19th Bluebonnet

Hertel, who set three school records during a checkered career with the Trojans, had thrown only two passes when the 17th-ranked Aggies jumped to a 14-0 lead on a 44-yard run by Mosley and a 4yard leap by 265-pound fullback George Woodard with only 8:11 gone in the

But on USC's third possession, Hertel unwrapped USC's passing game and the Californians ripped off 34 straight points before the Aggies got on the scoreboard

Kentucky Slips Past Notre Dame

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) - Just when top-ranked Kentucky appeared doomed, guard Kyle Macy provided the outside shooting that lifted the Wildcats to a pulsating 73-68 college basketball victory over Notre Dame Saturday afternoon.

The Wildcats trailed 66-63 when Macy, a 6-foot-3 sophomore transfer from Purdue, hit three baskets and added a pair of pressure free throws to put the Cats head 71-66 inside the last minute.

Kentucky Coach Joe Hall noted that the Wildcats' leading scorer, forward Jack Givens, "cooled off in the second half, and then Macy came on. His (Macy's) eight in a row there were the clinch-

Hall said that Kentucky used a time out to set up the strategy that paid off in victory in the nationally televised contest. '

"The thing we set up in the time out was to play inside to Rick (Robey)," Hall said. "If that didn't open up, we'd then come out to Macy. And Macy put the jumper in. He's an excellent shooter. 'And we couldn't have had any better person on the line," Hall added. "He's a 92 percent shooter

Hall was heartened by the Kentucky comeback despite an attempt by fourthranked Notre Dame, 7-2, to stall away the final six minutes.

"It's one of the few times we've been down like that, and I was glad to see we maintained our poise," said Hall. "Notre Dame was playing well and very alert, but to come back when we were down like we were was a great effort."

Notre Dame Coach Digger Phelps said the stall failed because "we just weren't moving enough. We had a couple key turnovers and we were missing foul shots, and Kentucky was making foul

After Hertel's touchdown passes to Sweeney and White tied the score, Frank Jordan booted field goals of 22 and 29 yards to put the Trojans ahead 20-14 at halftime

Woodard scored his second touchdown on the first play of the fourth quarter to cut USC's lead to 34-21, but on USC's next possession, Ford broke off left tackle and raced 94 yards for a touchdown and a Bluebonnet Bowl record.

Adger Armstrong tacked on A&M's final touchdown with a 4-yard run late in

The offense-oriented game riddled the Bluebonnet Bowl record book. The combined offense for both teams was more than 1,100 yards for a record, and four runners exceeded 150 yards rushing, including Mosley and Woodard for the Ag-gies and Ford and White for the Trojans. Mosley, a 9.4 sprinter and starting his first college game, rushed 107 yards in the first quarter before the Trojans started keying on his keepers. Later in the game, Mosley fumbled three times. Each miscue cost the Aggies dearly.

Southern Cal scored a touchdown and field goal after Mosley fumbles, and the freshman from Humble fumbled the third time at the Southern Cal, 9-yard

The total offensive output of both teams was 1,143 yards, breaking the old mark of 909 yards set in 1968 by Southern Methodist and Oklahoma. Southern Cal contributed 623 total yards, also a bowl record, and the Aggies furnished 520 yards. Other 100-vard-plus rushers included Woodard with 185 yards on 27 carries, White with 186 yards on 21 carries and Ford, who carried 13 times for 152 yards.

Mosely left the game with five minutes to play after rushing 180 yards on 20 carries and completing 4 of 10 passes for 33

Following an early second-quarter fumble by Mosely and a recovery by USC's Rick Dimler, Hertel hit White with a 25yard touchdown pass and Jordan's extra point tied it at 14. Jordan's field goals, which set a Bluebonnet Bowl record for most field goals in a game, were set up on a 62-yard run by White and a 42-yard pass from Hertel to Kevin Williams. Third-down passes into the end zone missed before each kick

LSU Coach Charley McClendon said. Oakland, Denver Battle For AFC Championship

DENVER (AP) - This mile-high city, its fans and its football team have come a long way since Sept. 10, 1967.

That was, for the Denver Broncos, the lowest point in their years of frustration, as a second, third or fourth fiddle to the Oakland Raiders, the San Diego Chargers or the Kansas City Chiefs. While each of those teams had won division titles, Denver never had been better than a runner-up. In fact, it would be six more years before the Broncos would manage to finish above 500 - and a full decade before they would stand where they do today - as division champions on the threshold of the Super On that September day 10 years ago, the Broncos played the Raiders - in a manner of speaking. The final score of that been more one-sided scores in the National Football League and elsewhere - but never has there been a poorer performance by a club in one game. The Broncos' total offense that day was an incredible minus five yards. They have, indeed, come a long way since then. Under Red Miller, in his first season as head coach, the Broncos ended Oakland's five-year reign as American Football Conference West champions by posting the AFC's best record, 12-2, forcing

the Raiders, the defending Super Bowl champions, to scramble into the playoffs as the conference wild-card team with an 11-3 Oakland beat Baltimore 37-31 in a double-overtime thriller on Dec. 24, then the Broncos took on Pittsburgh. The Steelers had been beaten 21-7 in Denver on Nov. 6 - and a repeat of that was unlikely, said most observers. How wrong they were. The Broncos, who owned the fourth quarter of almost every game they played this season, owned it against Pittsburgh, too, breaking away from a 21-21 tie and ripping the Steelers 34-21. Today, Denver must play the Raiders again - for the 37th time in the teams' history, for the third time this season.

For the loser, it means the end of pro football until next summer's training camps. For the winner, it's a date in the Jan. 15 Super Bowl in New Orleans against the winner of the National Conference title game between the Dallas Cowboys and Minnesota Vikings, the latter a 32-14 loser to Oakland in last January's

Oakland's domination of Denver is awesome - 27 victories in 36 games. This year, though, the teams split their meetings, Denver walloping the Raiders 30-7 in Oakland, the Raiders coming back for a 24-14 victory in Denver. And just what does all this familiarity breed?

'It is neither an advantage nor a disadvantage that we've already played twice," Miller observed. "The fact that we now know each other so well and have such a mountain of information on each other really doesn't change anything. It all comes back to execution - how you carry out what you try to do."

John Madden, the red-faced bear of a man who has guided the Raiders for the past nine seasons, has a similar assess 'How a team plays at the particular time the game is on is always the whole story. We make all sorts of plans and intentions and we analyze everything and that's what we're suppossed to do - but then it's a matter of doing it right, physically and mentally, out there on the field."

The key to any victory, of course, is the ability to stick to your game plan while neutralizing the other team's strength. Oak-land's biggest asset (besides Ray Guy's extraordinary punting) is its running game, the best in the conference, led by Mark van Eeghen's 1,273 yards during the regular season. Denver's strength is its rushing defense, the best in the league.

HONOLULU, Hawaii-Providence College coach Dave Gavitt earned stature as a minor prophet Friday night when his 'ugly man" guard Phil Oristaglio pumped in a jump shot from the foul line with two seconds left to give the Friars a 53-52 victory over Texas Tech.

The victory was worth third place in the 14th annual Rainbow Classic Basketball Tournament. North Carolina won the championship 92-61 over Stanford.

convert the first of their one-and-ones for a 51-45 lead, and that was the end of the Friars' scoring until Oristaglio's gamewinner.

But Tech wasn't finished. Huston tipped one in. Williams pumped in three of four free throws, and guard Tommy Parks had a chance to put the Raiders in command.

But he could hit only the second of a two-shot, free-shot opportunity, so it was 51-all with 45 seconds left. Campbell had left at 1:44, though, so the chances on the inside were dim for Providence.

With 16 seconds, Providence called time, and its out-of-bounds play was to get the ball to Dwight Williams. But the pass from Oristaglio was a bit wide, Williams had to lean and couldn't control it.

So Tech called time with 14 seconds and worked the ball into Parks in the key for a shot at victory. Myers got what he wanted-a foul by Dwight Williams-but Parks missed the first free throw. The second fell through, and Providence still had nine seconds

Oristaglio took the inbounds pass and raced to the key, trying to find the Friars' Williams but couldn't and sent his own shot toward the hoop. It fell with two seconds remaining

Grambling Players Lead West Victory

"I hope that fine young man doesn't think that I didn't play him more than that intentionally," said the Grambling coach who went mostly with his own Doug Williams, an all-America at quarterback

Williams threw 33 passes, completing 16 including one for a touchdown to Grambling teammate Carlos Pennywell, before leaving the game.

Tisdel, the college division passing star. had thrown only two passes before taking over on the last series and going 4-for-4 on passing attempts, gaining 73 yards and hitting Pennywell on a 21-yard touch-

"Sometimes people who pay admission want to see the more publicized players. and I might have overplayed one quarterback," added Robinson, who naturally leaned toward his own player after watching him throw 38 touchdown passes this season.

"Both quarterbacks are fine players. concluded Robinson. "I really wanted to play Jeff more.

Pennywell grabbed a 4-yard scoring pass from Williams in the first period and took a 21-yard touchdown pass from Tisdel in the final minute of the game. He also caught a 20-yard touchdown pass in the second period but the play was nullified by a penalty.

In the wonderful world of statistics. Oklahoma leads the nation in rushing with 328.9 yards a game and is fourth in scoring at 35.9 points, but the pass-hating Sooners are under 400 yards a game in total offense. Arkansas, meanwhile, is tied for 15th in total offense at 412.9 yards. 15th in rushing at 273.7 and 11th in scoring at 32.5

Defensively, Oklahoma isn't among the leaders but Arkansas has allowed just 8.6 points a game, third best in the nation, and the Razorbacks rank fifth in pass defense, yielding just 89.5 yards a game. Holtz calls it "the best secondary I've ever seen," but it might not mean very much since Oklahoma attempted only 68

We don't have a back who rushed for 1.000 yards, but we have four or five who rushed for 700 or so."

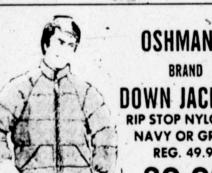

Switzer is going a little overboard there. Quarterback Thomas Lott is the leader with 760 yards, halfback Elvis Peacock has 695, fullback Kenny King 640 and halfback Billy Sims 406.

This is the best offensive team in my 12 years at Oklahoma," says Switzer, and over the last five games it's been the best team overall.

for Bowl left the Clemson Tigers with wounds to lick, but plenty of letterman eturning from the school's best team in early two decades.

Pitt, meanwhile, loses the seniors who played big roles in Friday night's 34-3 viclory over Clemson, just as they played big roles in Pitt's national title drive the year before.

"There were times on the practice field when it seemed like my college career would take forever, but other times went really fast," said senior quarterback Matt Cavanaugh, who finished the night with four touchdown passes, three records and the Most Valuable Player award.

"I know the seniors will miss it, but we did a lot of good things together here. added Cavanaugh, who completed 23 of 36 passes for 387 yards.

His passing yardage was a Gator Bowl and Pitt game record, and his 402 yards total offense was also a Gator Bowl high.

"Clemson is a good football team. It's just that the difference is No. 12," Pitt's Coach Jackie Sherrill said as he hugged Cavanaugh after the game

"This was a must game. It was a must game for our players, our coaches and our program," added Sherrill the firstyear coach whose Pitt team finished 9-2-1 and could move up a few notches from its No. 10 spot in the rankings.

GP Youth's Parents Sue School, Coach

GRAND PRAIRIE (AP) - The parents of a 17-year-old youth have filed a $125,000 suit against the local school district and the football coaching staff at Grand Prairie High School claiming their son has been denied his right to attend school and was humiliated by the coaches because he quit the team in mid-season. The complaint filed by Mr. and Mrs.

Douglas Self alleges the following: . Their son, Paul, quit the team when the coaches ordered the players to run wind sprints while fans were still in the stands after an Oct. 22 loss to Irving MacArthur 14-6.

· The following Monday a "Quitters Honor Roll" was prominently displayed at the school. Paul's name was listed.

· Young Self was harrassed by his coaches, and his former teammates were instructed to avoid him. Other students were ridiculed for talking to him.

• On Nov. 28, the youth's "girlfriend" was told by a member of the coaching staff that "anyone who would date Paul Self is ... worthless."

Johnny Majors, spent last season at Washington State, He watched from the press box at the Sugar Bowl a year ago as Cavanaugh and Tony Dorsett lead Pitt to the national championship.

"This season has not been easy for me. There was one heck of a lot of pressure," said Sherrill.

"Coming off a national championship. Coach Majors leaving, Tony leaving, losing 40 seniors. It was a must thing to come in and keep our program on top.

The players Sherrill will lose after this season include a pair of all-Americas, safety Bob Jury and center Tom Brzoza.

"I'm sure they'll do fine without us." said Jury, who had two of Pitt's four pass interceptions from Clemson quarterback Steve Fuller.

"I believed at the start of the season that we could win another national championship." said Brzoza. "It didn't work out that way, but I like going out a win-

Pitt's 10 senior starters also included fullback Elliott Walker who caught three touchdown passes, and 6-foot-6 defensive tackle Randy Holloway, a second team All-American.

Clemson meanwhile which finished at 8-3-1, started only six seniors on a team that won the Atlantic Coast title under first-year coach Charley Pell.

We were brought up to think you couldn't learn anything from losing." said the 36-year-old Pell, who played on a national championship team at Alabama. "But I learned some things tonight." Pell added. "I'm a better coach than I was two hours ago. Clemson safety Steve Ryan, part of a secondary that was picked apart by Cavanaugh, was already looking forward to his senior season after the game We just had a bad night and Cavanaugh had a fantastic night," said Ryan. "I know that we will be back and hopefully get a chance to show the true Clemson Cavanaugh noted that Pitt's play had brought a great hush to a record Gator Bowl crowd of 72,289 that was dominated by Orange-clad Clemson fans. I hope their supporters realize they are young and they are learning. They've got nothing to be ashamed about. "They've got an excellent football team when their turn comes next season

Big Eight's Kansas Wins Big, Close

proved at least two things in winning the 32nd annual Big Eight Holiday Basketball Tournament

The 17th-ranked Jayhawks can win big and they can win close.

And win they did, bombing Missouri in the first round, 97-64, then overcoming a 12-point halftime deficit in the championship game Friday night to edge past Kansas State, 67-62.

What ammunition does this give Big Eight prognosticators with the start of the official conference season looming in the near future?

It depends on your point of view. Kansas illustrated why they are the only Big Eight team in the top 20. But the Wildcats also proved that, with a little luck at the free-throw line, they could have won their first Holiday Tournament title since

Mike Evans, K-State's usually reliable senior guard, hit only 4 of 10 free throws and Curtis Redding, the stylish sophomore forward, was zero-for-3. Kansas Clint Johnson, on the other hand, was a perfect 6-for-6

Before you start talking about things you might could have done, you have to give the other team credit for the things they did to win it," pointed out K-State Coach Jack, Hartman. "When KU was making a run at us they went to the boards hard and went after the loose balls. They outhustled us during that pe-

AMARILLO (Special)-Lubbock High girls defeated Dunbar 64-36 for the consolation title in the gigantic Amarillo Basketball Tournament Saturday.

Regina Dudley and Mary Jones scored 25 points each for Lubbock High in the win. Sharon Thompson had 13 to pace the Dunbar scorers LHS jumped off to a quick 17-6 lead and continued to control the game.

In the championship game of the girls Div. I, Vega dropped Amarillo River Road 53-28. Hartley downed Groom 54-43 for the girls Div. II,

In the boys Div. I, Vega dropped Post 69-44, and Happy dropped Phillips 71-57 in the boys Div. II. The boys Div. III finals saw Balco, Okla, successfully defend its title with a win over Nazareth

Oklahoma was impressive in the tournament. The Sooners, with two starters out, had two other players reach their career highs before finally bowing to Kansas in the semifinals, 79-76.

Nebraska ran its season record to 10-1 by whipping Oklahoma in the third place game Friday afternoon, 75-68, and must be included along with the Sooners as darkhorse candidates for the 1977-78 Big

'I thought we did a fine job despite the injuries," said Sooner Coach Dave Bliss. The feam will be all right when the players who are hurt come back.'

Nebraska Coach Joe Cipriano was admittedly worried how his players, who were unbeaten before losing to Kansas State in the first round, would respond.

Muleshoe Fems Take Title In Overtime

MULESHOE (Special)-Evelyn Grace scored 23 points in leading host Muleshoe girls to a 63-61 overtime victory over Levelland and the championship of the Muleshoe Basketball Tournament Saturday

The title game was tied at 57 at end of regulation. Beckie Veretto scored 22 points for Levelland.

In the boys championship game, Far-well outscored Abernathy 65-55, with Kevin Kelley scoring 24 points. Lee

McCune had 11 for Abenathy. In the third-place girls game, Springlake-Earth tripped Shallowater 64-56. Christie Pittman scored 26 points for the winners, and Terri Stanton hit 29 for Littlefield girls won consolation with a 57-44 victory over Sundown. Wanda Wilhams netted 35 points for Littlefield, and Robi Carpenter accounted for 17 of Sundown's total.

Muleshoe boys won third in their division with a 56-48 verdict over Littlefield. Billy Vinson netted 20 for the winners, and Tommy Twitty scored 18 for Little-

Floydada, paced by Mac Collins' 17 points, won consolation with a 51-48 squeaker over Seagraves. Clarence Davis netted 18 of Seagraves' points.

Duhe, Dorsett Claim Pro Rookie Honors

DALLAS (AP) - Defensive end A.J. Duhe of the Miami Dolphins and running back Tony Dorsett of the Dallas Cowboys were honored Saturday as National Football League Rookies of the Year.

Duhe, named the top rookie in the American Football Conference, played an integral part in the reconstruction of the Dolphins defense. A first-round draft choice out of Louisiana State, Duhe led Miami with seven quarterback sacks. He was credited with 83 tackles, blocked a punt, recovered two fumbles and forced Dorsett, who did not become a starter until the 10th game of the season, nevertheless led the Cowboys with 1,007 yards rushing, only the eighth rookie in NFL nistory to rush for more than 1,000 yards. He also caught 29 passes for 273 yards and scored 12 touchdowns.

The rookie voting was conducted by the Pro Football Hall of Fame and was sponsored by the American Chile Company.

beats tennis balis relentlessly across the net toward the lithe, bouncing form.

The shorter, lighter man is Guillermo Vilas. Hé utters terse Italian curses as his backhands hit the net or his cross-court shots go astray. For every poor return, his tormenter hits another shot that requires Vilas to correct the return.

Frequently tennis fans watch the pros and say, "How easy that looks." At court level, with Vilas, it looks anything but easy during practice.

He looks angry and frustrated as Ion Tiriac plays upon his weaknesses. They speak little, communicating with signs when necessary. But for the most part, Vilas appears to understand what he must do, running only occasionally to the net and confering with his hulking mentor

They speak unsmilingly in Italian on the court, although the language is native to neither (Vilas is from Argentina, Tiriac from Romania). The conferences are short. This is business. Vilas looks grim.

But moments later, in the sunlight, the sternness is dispelled. Vilas, like a child, is begging a friend to pursue a contact about producing a record from some song lyrics he has written. Then he clowns with his tormenter-mentor, Tiriac.

Here, Father, Take this," says Vilas, handing him a bag, "Yes, Mother," Tiriac answers, tossing the baggage into a taxi.

'What should I call him, son?," Tiriac says. "I may have started young, but really!"

They babble in Italian, Spanish or in English with British accents as they return to the hotel where the 25-year-old Argentine ace is staying. Vilas spent Christmas here, without his family, but stayed with Tiriac, Tiriac's wife and 16-month-old son. 'That doesn't bother me," he says of the holiday spent without his own father, a mother and sister. "I don't like Christmas. It depresses me. 'Everybody has to be happy. The people expect so much of that one day," he says as though happiness were an obligation.

'People in New York are crazy," he says, maybe half-fondly. "For three days, they say 'Let me carry your packages for you,' 'Here, take my seat on the bus.' I walked around for a day. I know.

Until 1977, Vilas was known, even in his own country, as the Eternal Second, because he lost tournament after tournament to other top pros

Jimmy Connors which ended with a delayed line call - a call Connors disputed. The streak ended weeks later in France when Vilas retired from a match in which he was two sets down to Ilie Nastase, who played with the now-outlawed double-strung racquet. Vilas has not lost a match since then.

Some people ay the difference in Vilas is Tiriac, that Tiriac tells him when to sleep. when to eat, when to be friendly, when to close his mind and stick to tennis.

Certainly Tiriac has supplied the discipline that turned the promising Argentine No. 1 into a contender for No. 1 in the world.

The tennis comes from Vilas and Tiriac. But the ideas belong to Vilas. With his surprising success, many hastened to try and capture the essential Vilas the poet, the clay-court genius with a brilliant topspin forehand, the sensitive young

Some of the portrayals were of a lonely man with a tragic outlook, riddled with fear of flying and preoccupation with death.

But the man who prepared last week for the Masters tournaments, which starts Wednesday at Madison Square Garden, was content and cheerful. Yes, death has been in his thoughts because it presents an end to a life that he seems to enjoy fully. 'If Jesus came and told you you had three choices - to go to Heaven, stay on Earth forever or go to limbo - what would you do?" he asks. I would stay alive forever, to be a good writer, to play tennis very well, living and taking care of my family.

He says it with relish. I am often sad. I found I could not write when I am not sad."

But his definition of sad seems to differ from the ordinary. For him it means a seriousness, or an absence of joy

'You know how it is. You have those days when you put on a record and it doesn't sound good, when you don't want to do anything.

These explanations of sadness and death seem to satisfy him, freeing him for other pursuits. Vilas has a sense of nationalism and is one of the few top players who still return to their countries to play on national teams in the Davis Cup. It's the only time I can represent my country," he said: "I like that."

the only player in history to be sold twice and never go anywhere. In fact, the star pitcher of the Oakland A's may leave the Bay Area only because the sale of all the A's is approved by the American League and the club then is relocated in Denver. "

Blue was part of the famous summer sale of 1976, when Oakland owner Charles O. Finley sold three of his star players for a total of $3.5 million, only to have baseball Commissioner Bowie Kuhn void the checks. Blue was bought by the New York Yankees for $1.5 million. while Joe Rudi and Rollie Fingers were purchased by Boston for $1 million

Claiming that the sales dismantled the Oakland club, harmed the A's fans and were not in the best interests of baseball. Kuhn canceled the sales. No one was more shocked than Finley. He sued Kuhn in federal court for $3.5 million, claiming he was damaged by the commissioner's action and that Kuhn had exceeded his authority

Finley obviously was damaged since Rudi and Fingers, both free agents, signed with California and San Diego, respectively, following the 1976 season without a penny going to the embattled

But Judge Frank McGarr found that Kuhn's authority to act was nearly unlimited and ruled for the commissioner. Finley has appealed the case. He also has since agreed to sell his club to millionaire oilman Marvin Davis, who plans to move the franchise to Denver. And he also has sold Blue again.

This time, the classy left-hander has Cincinnati as his destination. In return, the A's would receive $1.75 million and minor league first baseman Dave Revering. Kuhn again has stopped the move, pending a hearing Thursday.

Kuhn maintains that he has not made up his mind yet, but most baseball observers feel the die was cast 18 months ago. Kuhn will block this sale because he blocked those sales. In law, it's called

NEXT STOP? WHO KNOWS - Vida Blue, ace hurler for the Oakland A's, was traded recently to the Cincinnati Reds. It came to Blue as a welcomed surprise. The lefthander added, "It's always a shock when you're traded, but it is always a welcome relief to know you can play with a contending clu." Blue suffered a 14-19 season last year.

The draft Approve the deal; 2) Disapprove the deal, or 3) Approve a deal that would send more players and-or less money to There isn't much difference between the two Blue transactions. A minor lea-

Besides the precedent for voiding the sale, the commissioner would seem to be leaving himself open on several fronts if he approved this deal. Wouldn't he be weakening his position on Finley's appeal in the 1976 lawsuit? And what would the Yankees do if their purchase of Blue was rejected while Cincinnati's was ac-

Yankees owner George Steinbrenner already has said he would raise a fuss. Another lawsuit would be a distinct possibility

The Cincinnati connection is an interesting one. The Reds have taken a consistently snobby attitude toward free agents in the two years of the re-entry

In 1976, the Reds didn't participate. Last November, they participated tacitly, passing on every round. Their contention in 1976 was that to give high salaries to free agents wouldn't be fair to their valuable players, meaning players like Pete Rose. Joe Morgan and Johnny Bench could demand more money and more seough thinking," he said, "We don't need as much as some other clubs. We have an established lineup, but we're not burying our heads in the sand. We're trying to put together the best ball club we can:

'A year ago is a little different than a month ago," he said. "In the fall of 1976 we had a number of players who could have opted for free agency. At that time we concentrated on signing the players

"Vida Blue has nothing to do with the re-entry draft. We've used the rules to help build the best team we can.

One difference is that money buying free agents goes directly to the player. while money buying contracted players - like Blue - goes to a fellow owner, a member of the family.

'It could be considered high hypocrisy," said one baseball executive. "But with this sale, the Reds don't have to renegotiate with the Morgans and the Roses. Blue won't be getting any money beyond his current contract. The Reds could live with that, and that's probably their rationalization

Wagner was asked if the Reds supported the Finley sales of 18 months ago. whether this transaction was different and whether they checked with the league and-or commissioner's office before the December deal. We have no comment on that in advTUCSON

PGA Tour Set For Record Year

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP)-The revamped, enriched PGA Tour, with a record $10 million up f schedule this week with the $200,000 Joe Garagiola-Tucson Open. The season - but not the schedule - ends with the $300,000 World Series of Golf in Akron, Ohio the first weekend in October. That's the 40th major event of the year, and all that have been announced at this time. At least three more events, and possibly five, will be added.

Under a new Tour rule, the 1978 season ends with the World Series. Any events after that, and any money won, count toward the 1979 season.

Although the prize money is a record this season, and a record 31 events will be given national televison coverage, "1978 is something of a year of transition for us," a Tour spokesman said.

It is the last year on the current televison contract. A new, three-year pact has been negotiated - primarily with CBS-TV - which will provide about $10 million a year beginning in 1979.

'Since most of that revenue goes back to the tournaments, we're looking at the possibility of a Tour offering $15 million in 1980 or '81," Commissioner Deane Beman said

And it is possible that the bulk of that money will be won by fresh-faced youngsters whose names are just now becoming familiar to the nation's fans.
"The game and the people in it are changing greatly," said veteran Art Wall, Masters winner and Player of the Year in 1959. "An awful lot of the older guys are going to be disappearing in the next couple of years."

While Jack Nicklaus hasn't exactly disappered, he's not quite so visable. Nicklaus, who has dominated the game since the early '60s, has announced he is cutting back on his schedule to concentrate on the Big Four events, the Masters, U.S. and British Opens and the PGA. That opens the way for the youngsters whose climb to star status formed such a large part of the 1977 season Among them is cross-handed putter Bruce Lietzke, one of a dozen first-time winners last season. Lietzke scored the first of his two 1977 victories in this event and is among the leaders of the youth movement.

Other top entrants here include Tom Watson, Johnny Miller, Jerry Pate, Lee Trevino and Tom Weiskopf. All have something to prove Miller, once the game's glowing Golden Boy, suffered through a winless 1977. The two Arizona events that kick off the season long have been his most productive tournaments. He is grimly determined to regain the awesome form that made him the best in the game just a few years ago.

Realistically, Watson can't seek improvement. He can only hope to equal his 1977 season in which he beat Nicklaus in-dramatic duels at the British Open and the Masters, won three other American titles, topped the money-winning list with more than $310,000, led the scoring average and took player of the year

Trevino and Pate both are coming off seasons in which they were slowed by injuries but still regained top form. Pate was a winner both before and after his problems, while Trevino recovered from back surgery with victories in the Canadian and Moroccan Opens.

Thompson Adjusts To Good Life

DENVER (AP) — David Thompson drives a Mercedes. He has a Rolls-Royce stored which he says is an investment and not a luxury.

He lives in an $85,000 house in Denver's Cherry Hills subdivision. It features wood paneling, a stone chimney and an elevated sun porch with blue umbrella tables outside. A sauna upstairs provides refuge against the chill of December.

"How is the chicken Kiev," he asks as he surveys the restaurant menu at a Sheraton Motor Inn. Ultimately he settles for a New York strip steak. And he adds, "How about the Roquefort dressing?"

Yes, Thompson has found the good life. It's a long way from the cinder block home where he grew up in Shelby, N.C. where he used to practice jump shots at night on a dirt court illuminated by the headlights of trucks.

Now, as a player whose flair ranks him with Julius Erving, Pete Maravich and Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, Thompson receives an estimated $435,000 annual salary from the Denver Nuggets. His pay averages $5,300 a game through an 82-game play guard. Logic guided Coach Larry Brown in making the change. At only 6-foot-4, Thompson was outmatched when assigned to defend against a typical NBA forward, a 6-61/2 Jamaal Wilkes

He's making the adjustment. "A season back," he explains, "they tried me at guard here and there. This time, it's for keeps, which means I've got to iron out my dribbling. A guard has to think about the way things are going, who's getting the ball when, who's hitting the boards. That doesn't come spontaneously. It's like learning a new game.

"David Thompson," says Brown, "gets more tough baskets than any player I've seen. He must learn to use picks and screens. And he's got to think the game when he's moving without the ball. He needs to score easy baskets. There are a lot of pressures on him I more than most players have, because he's expected to do spectacular stuff, all sorts of wild slam dunks, and in pre-game warmups.-He's got to save his legs. In the long run, that'll help his offense and his passing.'

"Sometimes," Thompson says, seems ridiculous that you can make a fortune just playing basketball. But if this is the way the world is, if that's what they're willing to pay, I'il accept.'

By MOLLY TYSON Associate Editor, womenSports magazine

A few months ago, when it was still warm enough to wear gym shorts and tank tops in New York City, CBS-TV challenged womenSports Magazine to a volleyball game in Central Park. Softball is really our speciality, be we took up the gauntlet when we learned that the CBS team played nine to a side instead of the usual six. How cut-throat could be the game be?

As it turned out, the most strenuous parts of the game were dodging empty beer bottles and making the volleyball net-which looked suspiciously like its badminton counterpart-stay upright after our valiant attempts to block what we loosely called "spikes."

The only thing that bore any resemblance to that West Coast phenomenon called power volleyball was the scoring. We played 15 points games. But even then we borrowed an idea from tennis - we allowed each person two tries per

HALFWAY THROUGH THE game, we were interrupted by Singer Williams, who introduced himself as "a certified United States Volleyball Association (USVBA) instructor." He walked up to the tallest member of our team, produced a business card and offered to give us volleyball lessons

It took the group some time to understand what he was offering. Being offered volleyball lessons seemed a little like being offered lessons in the threelegged race or the egg throw. We passed up Williams' offer and stumbled through the game.

When volleyball star Mary Jo Peppler was hired as the Utah State women's volleyball coach, her reception must have been similar to Singer's. "Volleyball?

Well, two years later, the Aggies have a pretty good idea. They defeated fifthranked Brigham Young University in the regional championships last November, and although they lost badly (15-1, 15-5) to second-ranked UCLA at last month's collegiate nationals, the fact that they earned a spot in the national draw at all was a giant step forward.

This isn't the first time that Miss Peppler has put a city on the volleyball map. There are Alpine, Tex., for example. When Miss Peppler and her friend Marilyn McCreavy decided to go to school down at Sul Ross State University in 1968, most of their classmates thought spiking was something you did to punch...

But though they didn't know much about volleyball, they were impressed when they learned that the two tall transfer students were former Olympians. Someone suggested an exhibition game.

"We got the whole gym full of fans to watch us play these big ole football players and cowboys," Miss Peppler gleefully told a Sports Illustrated reporter. The cowboys played with their hats on. We killed them. We bounced balls off

A month later, Miss Peppler and Miss McCreary formed a women's volleyball team at Sul Ross that won the collegiate championships in 1969. In 1972 the best of the Sul Ross players moved to Houston and formed a team called E Pluribus Unum that won the USVBA national championships two years in a row. It was the first time in 22 years that a non-California team had won the title

MISS PEPPLER's DREAM was to lead her Texas team to an Olympic medal, but the USVBA insisted that she open her lineup at the last minute to allstars from other parts of the country. This ran counter to Miss Peppler's concept of team unity. Rather than compromise, the moody Mary Jo quit amateur volleyball to play for a newly formed coed professional volleyball league.

But she left her mark in Houston. Two of her Texas teammates, Patty Dowdell and Flo Hyman, are the stars of the U.S. national team that still trains in the Houston suburb staked out by Mary Jo in 1972.

Miss Peppler quit playing pro volleyball when paychecks stopped matching preseason promises. She is now putting most of her energies into her coaching job at Utah State. The woman described so often as the uncoachable prima donna during the feuding days with the USVBA is singlehandely redistributing the balance of power in the world of power volleyball.

Camping Abounds In Winter

sequent crowding on bacteria-rich lakes and streams are just some of the factors which threaten greese, biologist C.D. Stutzenbaker stated in a fecent report.

If that's not enough, the controversial "short-stopping" of geese in certain refuge areas may have reduced the number of birds flying to Texas. Department biologists believe the feeding of large concentrations of geese on refuges to the north of Texas may have altered some birds' migration habits by enticing them to winter there instead of the traditional wintering areas along the coast.

Also worrisome to biologists are the vulnerability of the "young of the year" birds to gun harvest, and the vulnerability of certain species of geese compared to

This points up the fact that—as many veteran goose hunters know-the "dark" geese are easier to decoy and call up than the "white" species (blue and snow gee-

In fact, biologists note, snows and blues have even prospered to the point of overcrowding some of their Canadian nesting areas.

So smart and warv are the blues and snows that hunters along the Texas coast are trying full-bodied goose decoys instead of scattering white rags in the fields -and some are even resorting to sailing paper plates or flying white kites to simulate geese landing in the decoy spread.

Another "vulnerability" finding of the study was that "young of the year" geese -regardless of the species-make up a startlingly large percentage of the harvest every year. Of the 1,767 geese checked at the picking stations, 79 percent were young birds.

This high harvest of immature birds remains fairly constant, even when their numbers are relatively lower within the total population. 4

"In 1973-74, when immatures made up 54 percent of the total population, they accounted for 89 percent of the harvest, Stutzenbaker said, "and in the poor production year of 1974-75 when immature geese made up only 27 percent of the total population, they still accounted for 69 percent of the harvest.'

In other words, an old goose is a smart goose, and the ones which survive that first year stand a good chance of living as long as 10 or 12 years.

The vulnerability of yearlings and the relative vulnerability of "dark" geese compared to "white" ones both concern the department whenever bag limits and other regulations are adopted. The closing of the season on "dark" geese from Dec. 15-21 east of U.S. 81 this year was one step taken to ease the gun pressure on these species. The season on geese continues through Jan. 22 statewide

Vandals Jeopardize Sportsmen's Rights

Avalanche-Journal Outdoor Editor

Larry Rider stopped his car and pointed at a highway traffic sign near a curve in the country road

"That one has about five bullet holes in it

Rider, a 12-year veteran game warden with the Texas Parks & Wildlife Department, is responsible for an area 1800 square miles in size. Yet, he only had to drive a few miles outside of Dickens to show this writer plenty of hunter van-

"You should have been here during dove season," said the game warden. 'Not only were the signs shot up, but on both sides of public roads you'd see dove feathers and intestines, beer cans, sandwich and candy wrappers, plus used shotgun shells and boxes.

Rider stopped near some roadside litter. "The farmers around here complain about this problem quite often.

He turned on to a side road and continued, "Digging a hole and covering the remains of the birds and packing out the litter would be a good practice. The hunters could also dress their birds in the field where a possum or skunk would clean up the remains.

The state game warden described the worst case of vandalism he'd seen. "I remember going into a home that some hunters had shot up. The house was deserted but liveable till they blasted the doors and walls, and shot out all the windows. It made no sense at all.

Rider emphasized that most acts of vandalism and trespassing are committed by a small percentage of hunters, but all hunters suffer by more and more "No. ing posted

The warden reflected for a moment when asked to list some New Year's resolutions for all hunters. "Alcohol and gun powder don't mix. Respect the other guy's property. Don't throw trash around. Close gates that were closed; leave gates open that were open.

He concluded, "Trespassing is the major problem that has turned landowners

We passed a brand new highway sign. It replaced a sign that had been shot to pieces last year. The cost (it came out of your pocket) to replace the original sign was approximately $30. Happy New Year!

Guadalupe Elk Studied By Graduate Student

the Rocky Mountain elk in Guadalupe National Park might well be answered by a lengthy study underway by Texas Tech University researchers John D. Moody, a graduate student working under the direction of Prof. C. David Simpson, is trailing, observing and studying the elk population of about 104 animals in the park. He has spent more than six months camping out in a tent, and he expects to remain in the park on the project until the end of 1978. There are two major areas of concern: the possible lack of water, which could cause a decrease in the number of elk, and the low productivity level, with only about 12 calves per 100 cows. Other studies of elk hae reported ratios as high as 57 calves per hundred cows.

The Rocky Mountain elk are not native to the park, and, because many watering places have dried up for the animals. there is a question as to whether the herds will survive and multiply normally. Merriam's elk was indigenous to the Guadalupe Mountains and similar areas in New Mexico and Arizona before 1900. About 1905, they were reported extinct.

In 1928, a rancher brought 44 Rocky Mountain elk into the area and released them on his ranch in McKittrick Canyon. By 1931 their numbers increased to approximately 60 elk, and by 1939 the population was estimated at 400. Elk that had migrated from McKittrick Canyon found water at stock tanks dotting the region.

When the federal government established a park, the land was allowed to return to its natural state, and the stock tanks were not maintained.

"It appears that the present population of elk, reduced significantly from previous years, may reflect the scarcity of water that now exists on the elk range." Simpson said. He explained that the elk originally came from areas where water was no problem for the animals.

The elk range in the national park covers about 11,000 acres. The elk prefer the high land, but permanent water is available on the tip of the mountains only at the Upper Dog Canyon springs.

are found along the north and south forks of McKittrick Canyon, but Moody and Simpson said that the nature of the terrain make this water unavailable to elk on the high range. There is one stock tank on private property which some of the elk use, and some springs scattered along the lower slopes of the eastern escarpment serve a herd of 15 elk which remain near the park headquarters

In additon, temporary water is available in the park after heavy rains but is present for more than a few days only at two locations

In locating the carcasses of elk in the park Moody reported finding 31.

"It is significant," he said, "that 18 of the carcasses were found in close association to depressions that held water after rain. This may offer strong evidence as to the dependency of the Guadalupe elk on surface water

The age structure of these carcasses were one calf, two yearlings and 15 animals between 2 and 7 years old, he said. indicates a possible explanation for the mortalities

"Animals using the permanent water sources on the upper range must travel

several miles over steep, rock terrain to and 'rom feeding grounds. In the event that a sick or old animal remains close to one of these temporary pools until it dries, that animal may become too weak

It is Moody's job to track and watch the elk, sunup to sundown. Although he has an 8x18-foot bunkhouse near a ranger station in Dog Canyon, he uses it only for supply and data storage, and sleeps in his tent, even the one time it snowed.

By using a tranquilizer gun, he has managed to date to put radio collars on two elk cows so that he can keep track of them electronically. He has nicknamed them "Molly Brown" and "Lilly Dale."

Elk are naturally herding animals. During the breeding season, or rut, a bull gathers a harem. After breeding, the bulls joins bachelor herds. After a cow drops a calf, she remains separated with it about two weeks and then both rejoin a

Moody hopes, by close observation, to determine whether the elk cows are producing offspring and what happens to reduce the number that might grow to

Where They're Biting

Buffalo Springs Lake-Channel cat fishing is slow with most anglers reporting that the cats are biting "real easy" on stink bait. Whole kernel corn continues to bring in some nice size carp. Every once in a while a bass is brought in. Barnie Greenfield reports that most are 'keeper size" to 112 pounds. Crappie action is steady on live minnows. The lake is clear and has a surface temperature of 40 degrees.

Lake Colorado City-Ernie and Ellie Cantin from Idaho are fishing their way through the country on their way to Louisiana. The couple spent Christmas at Fisher Park and caught 12 bluegill, three catfish (the largest was 31/2 pounds) plus all of the crappie they wanted. Nine-yearold Amy and 6-year-old Jocarol Pinkerton of Snyder caught six bluegill; the largest was 112 pounds. Bill Wilinson of Crane landed a 512-pound black bass.

White River Lake-The largest black bass caught during the past two months was brought in by A.O. Gilbertson of Plainview. He used black spinner bait near the high lines to land the 8-pound 11ounce lunker. Frank Ellison of Crosbyton used cut bait to bring in a 5-pound 5ounce channel cat. There seems to be more than enough crappie for every angler. Mrs. Yeager at the marina reports the lake is in good condition and "smooth

Hunters End Successful Gemsbok Search

LAS CRUCES, N.M. (Special) - New Mexico's fourth annual hunt for gemsbok, a large African antelope transplanted to the desert of White Sands Missile. Range, has once again yielded a trophy for each hunter.

A dozen men and women whose names were drawn at random from a long list of applicants successfully stalked and took a gemsbok during the four-day hunt that ended last Tuesday. The past three hunts showed similar results, according to the Department of Game & Fish's southwest area supervisor, Ralph Little.

The gemsbok, first released on the range in 1969, now number close 200 head. The herd is steadily increasing.

The plants and terrain on the White Sands Missile Range are similar to those of the gemsbok's native Kalahari Desert, although the New Mexico habitat is relatively less harsh than the other.

Miss Lubbock Pageant Chairman Announces. Schedule For Finals

The 1978 Miss Lubbock Scholarship Pageant is scheduled for 7:30 p.m., Feb. 11, in the Municipal Auditorium, pageant chairman Cecil Caldwell has

"We are hoping to top our success of last year with the 1978 pageant," Caldwell said. "As those who saw r production last year know, the 'Salute to the Ziegfeld Follies' was great entertainment. This year, producer Janis Geddes has something even more spectacular planned."

"However, even before we begin to get ready for the big night, we have to prepare for the preliminary judging to select the top finalists for the pageant," he said.

The preliminary judging for the Miss Lubbock Scholarship Pageant will be at 1 p.m., Jan. 15, in the Hodges Community Center.

The deadline for the entering the pageant was changed recently from midnight Dec. 31, to Jan. 10, to accommodate Texas Tech University women who may not get to enter because of semester break, Caldwell said. A panel of five judges will select top finalists from the roster of entries after talent presentations and interviews at the preliminary competition. Caldwell emphasized the competition is open to any woman wishing to enter. However, he said the contestant must be available, and sometimes on short notice, to make appearances in Lubbock.

Also, the contestants must be between the ages of 18 and 28 and must nev er have been married Entry blanks are still available at Mr. Tom's Coiffures, 2721 50th; Mr. Tom's Cutters, South Plains Mall; Maxine's Accent, Briercroft Center; and the Student Life Center in the administration building at Texas Tech. For further information call 799-0336

Marijuana Smugglers Busy In Florida Seas

MIAMI (UPI) - Marijuana smugglers were out in force early Saturday and a Customs Service spokesman reported: "it seems like every law enforcement agency in south Florida is picking up

The Coast Guard reported it had seized a 79-foot fishing vessel loaded with an estimated 15-20 tons of marijuana. The boat Dona-Petra, which officers from the Coast Guard cutter Cape Shoalwater boarded 70 miles east of Miami late Friday night, was the third such smuggler's 'mother ship" seized by the Coast Guard in the past week.

A Coast Guard spokesman said the bbarding party arrested seven men five Colombian nationals and two from Barbados. The Dona-Petra was being escorted t

Miami where its contraband cargo will be unloaded, weighed and burned Tuesday

Shortly after Friday midnight, a Customs patrol boat boarded a 32-foot boat, prophetically named "Business Stinks" and discovered an estimated 4,000 pounds of marijuana. Customs officers arrested Michael A. Sorrentino, 27, and John N. Kleinschmidt, who will celebrate his 24th birthday in jail Monday. the day before appearing before a U.S. magistrate on federal drug charges.

Our New Year's Resolution is knowing the Savior ...

FOR GOD, the Lord of earth and Heaven,
SO LOVED, and longed to see forgiven,
THE WORLD, in sin and pleasure mad
THAT HE GAVE the greatest Gift He had;
HIS ONLY SON to take our place
THAT WHOSOEVER, oh; what grace!
BELIEVETH, placing simple trust
IN HIM, the Righteous and the just,
SHOULD NOT PERISH -lost in sin,
BUT HAVE ETERNAL LIFE in Him.

THE ONE GERMAN BUXURY CAR THAT PULLS YOU THROUGH THE SNOW.

When's the best time to go for a drive? When it snows. Don't laugh. That, believe us, is the best time to test drive the new Audi 5000. With the engine over the drive wheels, the Audi's tracking stability is sensational...through cross-winds, rain, sleet, and piles of snow. Bundle up, get out and test the largest German car you can get for the money... the only German luxury car with front-wheel drive to pull you through.

DEAR ABBY

DEAR READERS: Four years ago I published JUST FOR TODAY and suggested that it be used as "New Year's Resolutions." Since that time I have heard from a surprising number of readers (ages 12 to 82) telling me that they read the rules every day and are trying to live by them.

I am repeating them for those who have missed them. These rules are not original. I paraphrased them from the credo for Overeaters Anonymous - an organization of loving, caring, compulsive overeaters who have regained their self-esteem by losing weight, feeling better, looking better and helping others to do the same Overeaters Anonymous is patterned after Alcoholics Anonymous and Gamblers Anonymous. Both organizations have had extraordinary success in rehabilitating compulsive drinkers and gamblers when all other methods have failed:

JUST FOR TODAY

1. Just for today I will try to live through this day only, and not set farreaching goals to try to overcome all my problems at once. I know I can do something for 12 hours that would appall me if I felt that I had to keep it up for a life-

2. Just for today I will try to be happy Abraham Lincoln said, "Most folks are about as happy as they make up their minds to be." He was right. I will not dwell on thoughts that depress me. I will chase them out of my mind and replace them with happy thoughts.

3. Just for today I will adjust myself to what is. I will face reality. I will try to change those things I can change, and accept those things that I cannot change.

4. Just for today I will try to improve my mind. I will not be a mental loafer. I will force myself to read something that requires effort, thought and concentra-

5. Just for today I will exercise my soul in three ways. I will do a good deed for somebody - without letting them know it. (If they find out I did it, it won't count.) I will do at least two things that I know I should do but have been putting off. I will not show anyone that my feelings are hurt; they may be hurt; but today I will not show it.

6. Just for today I will be agreeable. I will look as well as I can, dress becomingly, talk softly, act courtesouly, and speak ill of no one. Just for today I'll not try to improve anybody except myself.

7. Just for today I will have program. I may not follow it exactly, but I will have it, therby saving myself from two pests; hurry and indecision.

8. Just for today I will have a quiet half hour to relax alone. During this time I will reflect on my behavior and will try to get a better perspective on my life. 9. Just for today I will be unafraid. I will gather the courage to do what is right and take the responsibility for my own actions. I will expect nothing from the world, test I will realize that as I give to the world, the world will give to me.

It makes sense doesn't it? And so does the Overeaters Anonymous program. It's free. For information about this wonderful organization, write to Box 34854, Los Angeles, Calif. 90034.

P.S. Have a happy, healthy New Year. And pray for universal peace!

Extension Update

The Christmas rush is over and you may well be shopped out. But, if you hap-pen to have a little extra money and a bit of shopping energy, most stores should be having sales on children's clothes.

This could be a great time to pick up some bargains. But remember, these purchases are bargains only if the clothes are comfortable and fit well, allow for some growth and are durable and easy boy's suits and shoes as well as general clothing items. Check these features for comfort and good fit: - Neckline does not gape or bind. - Shoulders are wide enough for freee arm movement - Sleeves are roomy and will not pull out with strain. - Shirts and blouses are long enough to tuck in at the waist and stay tucked in. - Pant legs are short enough so the child won't trip on them. - Fabrics are soft, not stiff or scratch-

- Elastic at the waistline or wrist is not tight enough to cause red marks in

. Look for these growth features in children's clothing:

sleeves can be lengthened as a child grows taller. Remember to use decorative stitching, rick-rack or trim to hide marks from the old hem if necessary. - Wide seams at the center back of

- Deep hems in skirts, pants and pants allow adjustments in width. - Two-piece garments usually have more room for growth than one-piece

- Adjustable straps and waistbands allow for increasing sizes.

- Garments without a definite waistline can be worn longer than those with fitted waists. - Stretchy fabrics and knitted gar-

- Elastic waistbands on skirts and pants provide room for growth For durability and care check these feaments have "give" to allow for growth.

- Wide seams that will not ravel or pull out, or on knits, narrow seams that are stitched and overcast securely. - Double stitched seams at pants' crotch or arm holes for strength. - Reinforcements or patches on the knees and elbows of clothes that receive hard wear.

- Evenly stitched buttonholes. - Reinforcement stitching, such as bar tacks, at points of stress, at pocket corners and the ends of flys.

Check the labels and hang tags for terms like "machine washable, permanent press, soil release, little or no ironing, crease resistant and stain resistant."

THIS WEEK'S HINTS

Read the recipe first and avoid surprises. Recipes usually list ingredients in the order of preparation before step-by-step instructions. This makes the procedure easy to follow.

SCARF STRATEGY

Scarves this season are shorter and lacier in pale, pale colors. But don't throw out your long, dark ones - they're bound to come back sooner or later.

However, poorly written recipes may list principal ingredients first and then give steps in random order, making instructions difficult to follow

Keep heat away from thermostats. Lamps. TVs and even candles can generate enough heat to cause the thermostat to overcool in summer and underheat in winter, so place sources of heat at least three feet from the thermostat.

Keep garments clean and dry to prevent mildew. Always dry clothing before hanging it in a closet or putting it in a hamper. Keep clothes and storage areas clean. Ventilate storage areas to help remove moisture.

"Damaged" foods may be poisonous Beware of leaking, bulging, or damaged cans, cracked jars, or jars with loose or bulging lids. These could contain the rare but often fatal botulism.

NOW Schedules Discussion On Abortion

The Lubbock chapter of the National Organization for Women (NOW) will meet at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday at the Wesley Foundation, 2420 15th St., for a program on the legal and medical aspects of abor-

There will be a slide show and a panel discussion immediately afterwards. Members of the panel will be Norma Porres, M.D., a local physician; Susan Oblekson, a counselor for the Planned Family Clinic of Lubbock; Linda Groves, a senior Texas Tech University law student who has completed extensive re-search on current abortion laws and related court decisions; and Brenda Morris, a Lubbock television news reporter.

The public is invited to attend; there is no admission charge.

Circus Crowds

Break Record

DETROIT (AP) — There's nothing like a circus to lift the spirits, and in this city a record run by the circus is being hailed as evidence of a dramatic crime turnaround.

More than 111,5000 persons jammed Olympia Stadium here in a recent sixday run of the Ringling Brothers Barnum & Bailey circus. — setting an all-time record for the circus in this city.

Last year only 73,000 persons attended during a two-week engagement and the circus played to several near-empty houses. Ringling Brothers and Olympia officials attributed the record attendance to new confidence in the safety of the city.

In 1976, some performances drew as few as 200 persons as Detroiters stayed away in droves during a period of gang violence. Since then, the city has rehired some 900 police who had been laid off and promoted veteran policeman William Hart, to chief.

HEW Seeks Funds To Combat Steadily Rising Teenage Birth Rate

By MICHAEL CASTLEMAN

Pacific News Service EDITOR'S NOTE: Michael Castleman was director of the Men's Reproductive Health Clinic in San Francisco, the nation's first birth control clinic for

An estimated 11 million teenagers are sexually active in the U.S. today. Studies show that more than half of them used no contraception the last time they had

And while the overall birth rate continues to decline in the U.S., the birth rate among teenagers is rising steadily with the most dramatic increases among mothers 13 and under.

Teen mothers have more children, more premature children, more miscarriages and more stillbirths than non-teen mothers. They have higher rates of death during child-birth and infant death during the first year than older mothers. The suicide rate among teen mothers is 10 times the national average.

Teen mothers tend to drop out of high school and survive on welfare. They rarely develop marketable job skills, and children who raise children are involved in an inordinate amount of child abuse and neglect.

Hoping to combat this "epidemic of premature pregnancy" across the U.S., the federal Department of Health, Education and Welfare (HEW) plans to ask Congress for $200 million for a four-year campaign to provide contraceptive methods and education to three millions teens - or about $75 per teen served.

While federal funds have been spent in the past on contraceptive programs for teenagers, to avoid opposition they were funnelled through drug abuse programs or under the carefully vague heading of vouth services.

But now HEW is "becoming a little bolder about teen contraception," says a department official in San Francisco. There is no question about the agency's long-term commitment to the reduction of teen birth and VD rates."

And Congress is expected to go along because federal funds are no longer available for Medicaid abortions, which were disproportionately used by teens. The federal emphasis is shifting to teen contraception.

"There'll be big bucks in teen clinics and programs," says a San Francisco family planning staffer.

But how effective will the new HEW campaign be in combatting teen preg-

Many informed observers, including several HEW consultants, contend that unless HEW goes beyond standard approaches to reaching teens - clinics and school-based educational programs then more money won't make that much difference.

"Although clinics contribute the major source of birth control for teens, they are not reaching large numbers of sexually active teens, nor are they reaching them soon enough," said a 1975 report by a consulting firm contracted by HEW to evaluate teen clinics funded under Title X of the 1970 Family Planning Act. "In many cases, ' the report adds, "they also fail to promote effective contraceptive use among teens they do reach.".

Family planning researchers from the San Francisco-based Urban and Rural Systems Analysts (URSA), interviewing 423 teen girls at 40 clinics in eight cities including New York, Atlanta, San Francisco, Oakland and Seattle, discovered that 94 per cent of those teens were sex ually experienced before they visited the clinics, and that 75 per cent had been sexually active for at least one year before first visiting the clinics.

One-third of the girls had already been pregnant. (The average age of puberty for girls in the U.S. has dropped to 12 and is decreasing.)

URSA's findings were echoed by the respected Johns Hopkins research team of Drs. Kantner and Zelnick, who recently reported that among teens there is a "pattern of having sex, becoming pregnant, and then going on to use birth

The URSA report also said that many clinics "do not reflect a knowledge of their patients' lives and feelings." Clinics are often inaccessibly located, with inconvenient hours, long waiting times and inadequate guarantees of privacy. And teen clinics rarely advertise enough to attract the attention of potential

The URSA report went on to criticize the Title X program for limiting funding strictly to contraceptive services and not to such necessary related services as pregnancy testing, problem pregnancy counseling, VD testing and treatment and emotional and sexual counseling.

And the report pointed out that as of 1975, only 23 states had granted persons under 18 the right to birth control services without parental consent. Since confidentiality of services was regarded as crucial by the teens URSA interviewed, it is questionable how effective clinics can be in states where minors still need parental consent for contraceptive serv-

School-based contraception programs also are misguided, according to Robert Heath, director of the Nomos Institute of Berkeley, which conducted an independent evaluation of one 1972-74 HEWfunded contraception education program called Project Teen Concern.

grams because many young people - especially low income teens - are often so turned off to school that providing contraceptive information becomes impossible in the institutional setting. And Heath encourages professionals to get out of their offices and workshops to where young people congregate: on streetcorners and in parks, parking lots, schoolyards, pinball parlors, fast-food outlets, record stores and boutiques.

'There is a tendency for professionals to talk only to other professionals," Heath said. "It's easier to do, professionals are trained to do that and you run fewer personal and psychological Indeed, most sex education classes use a clinical vocabulary that is foreign to the on-the-street experiences of most teens. "Kids don't 'have intercourse." says one San Francisco family planner.

"They 'screw, 'ball,' 'do it,' 'get down.' Adults who refuse to use the kids language might as well not open their

CHILDREN'S IMMUNIZATION CHECKLIST

One reason is that the fear of pregnancy is no longer the deterrent it used to be. Fifteen years ago, pregnant girls would almost invariably leave school for a semester. Today, they are a common sight in many high schools and even junior highs. A "good reputation" is simply considered less important than it once

Another reason is that to many teenagers, using contraception implicitly admits not only to sexual activity, but to the intention to plan in advance for sexual activity - often regarded as less 'romantic.'

You never see Robert Redford asking Julie Christie what method they should use," days Deborah Mandel of Marin (Ca.) Planned Parenthood. "He gives her that special look, their clothes fall off and no one has any regrets after-

"Adults can weigh their experience of negotiating sexual relationships against the 'swept away' romanticism on TV and films," one sex educator remarks. 'Kids don't have the perspective to distinguish media sex from real sex. They are very sensitive to media messages and they imitate what they see.'

A third and frequently overlooked reason why teens ignore birth control is that many actually want to have children. (According to a recent survey, more teen mothers than ever want to keep their babies.)

For many the teen years are frightening ones - the world looks huge, cruel and incomprehensible; jobs are hard to find. Having a child gives many teens a sense of personal dignity, a place in the limelight, someone to love and hold power over in a world where they feel powerless.

Thus the key to reducing the teen birth rate, many experts contend, is to develop new programs that more directly touch teens' lives.

A few privately funded programs have attempted to do just that - with highly favorable results.

In 1969 a public health student at the University of North Carolina designed a condom mass distribution program "to operate largely outside the official channels of the health, welfare and poverty agency." Besides the local VD clinic, condoms were distributed for free by high school drop-outs and by local merchants whose stores were teen hang-

The project distributed an outstanding 27,000 condoms in four months, about 240 per day. The merchants gave out 40 per cent and the drop-outs 38 per cent, while the local VD clinic ran a poor third with 20 per cent.

The program demonstrated that, contrary to popular belief, teen boys are ception - but that they prefer to take condoms from people they know and trust rather than from impersonal public health facilities.

In a similar program developed in Dillon County, S.C., project director Nick Mescia reported that boys were reluctant to come into the public health department to pick up condoms - but that they would call him with detailed instructions to meet them at lonely rural crossroads after dark.

The way to reach the broadest number of teens, however, is undoubtedly through the mass media. The average teen is absorbed in television, radio or print media for four hours every weekday - or 52 per cent of the teen's waking leisure time.

A San Francisco-based national media project has recruited rock stars like Linda Ronstadt and Alice Cooper to deliver pro-birth control public service messages called Rock Spots. Funded by a private foundation, Rock Spots is syndicated to 500 stations around the country. and, according to a survey of station managers, has had an "incredibly positive" impact on radio audiences.

Among the coversial resolutions endorsed were the favoring the Equal Rights Amendm legal abortions and homosexual rig The delegates' rec-ommendations be forwarded to the president and cress.

A major isseas the ERA, which so far has been red by 35 of the 38 states that must doby March 1979 for it to become a r of the Constitution. A counter-conace, opposing the amendment as we abortion and homosexual rights, was by Phyllis Schlafly, 52year-old A. Ill., writer, housewife, law studend founder of Stop-ERA.

Among e at the meeting were Betty Friedan, dited with giving birth to the women wement, and Eleanor Smeal, 37-year- Pittsburgh, Pa., housewife and mo of two who as new president of the ional Organization for Women vowed on the offesive for ERA.

ing of ERA, spoke in support of the amendment

In other ways White House women, present and past, were much in the limelight during 1977

Mrs. Carter, whom her husband has called his closest adviser and "political partner." made a seven-nation tour, meeting with heads of Caribbean and Latin American countries.

President Carter's mother celebrated her 79th birthday amidst the hubbub generated by the publication of a book of her letters from India which the president's sister, Gloria Spann, collected

Earlier in the year "Miss Lillian" had returned to India, where she once worked as a nurse for the Peace Corps. heading a U.S. delegation to the funeral of India's president. Later she visited Ireland, and during her busy year she became the first woman ever awarded the Synagogue Council of America's Covenant of Peace" prize.

'First Kid" Amy Carter started making news shortly after her father's inauguration, on her first day at the Thaddeus Stevens Elementary School, as the fist White House child to attend public school in seven decades. Media attention and cameras continued to focus on her as she read a book at State dinners, played in her treehouse and celebrated her 10th birthday.

Carter daughters-in-law also got into the family act. Caron joined her husband, Chip, to represent the president at Queen Elizabeth's Jubilee in England. The couple and their infant son, James Earl Carter 4th, lived for a time in the White House, along with Jeff Carter and his wife. Annette, but later they moved back to Plains, Ga., where Chip went to work in the family's peanut business, quieting reports of marital problems.

The third daughter-in-law, Judy, wife of the president's oldest son, Jack, became one of the leading spokespersons for the ERA, as well as a contributing editor of Redbook magazine

A former resident of the White House was also in the news as a writer. Julies, Nixon Eisenhower's book, "Special People," profiles, among others, her hus-band's grandmother, Mamie Doud Eisenhower, who celebrated her 81st birthday in November.

Lynda Johnson Robb, another young woman who once called 1600 Pennsylvania Ave. home, helped her husband, Chuck, in his successful campaign for lieutenant governor of Virginia.

Susan Ford, daughter of former President Gerald Ford, dropped out of the University of Kansas journalism school and worked as a still photographer during the filming of "Jaws II."

ter of the late President John F. Kennedy, worked as a summer "copy person" for the New York Daily News.

Rose Fitzgerald Kennedy, 87, the late president's mother, was awarded an honorary Doctor of Humane Letters at Georgetown University for her work on behalf of the mentally retarded.

Bess Truman, 92, affectionately referred to as "the Boss" by her late husband, President Harry S Truman, was a National Plan of on. Defeated was briefly hospitalized following a fall in her Independence, Mo., home.

In government, in business, in scientific fields, women acquired precedent-setting honors, achievements and jobs.

President Carter appointed two women to his Cabinet: Juanita M. Kreps as Secretary of Commerce and Patricia Roberts Harris as Secretary of Housing and Urban Development.

Margaret "Midge" Costanza was chosen presidential assistant for public liaison, and Esther Peterson was appointed special assistant for consumer affairs.

Other women named to high government posts included Anne Cox Chambers, ambassador to Belgium; Marife Hernandez, assistant chief of protocol for the United States; Azie T. Morton, U.S. treasurer; Stella B. Hackel, director of the mint; Eleanor Holmes Norton, chairman of the federal Equal Employment Opportunity Commission; Dr. Carolyn R. Payton, head of the Peace Corps; Lucy Wilson Benson, under-secretary of State in charge of security assistance.

Roberta Karmel, first woman member of the Securities and Exchange Commission, is in the highest post ever held by a woman in the agency's 43-year history. Dr. Edithe J. Levit was appointed president of the National Board of Medical Examiners, the first woman to head the board in its 60-year history. Elizabeth Ellery Bailey became the first woman to serve on the Civil Aeronautics Board.

Jill Wine-Volner, 33-year-old lawyer who served as an assistant special prosecutor at the Watergate coverup trial, became the first woman to be appointed general counsel to the Army. In another first during a year in which women continued to break barriers, Muriel Siebert, 47, the first woman to hold a seat on the New York Stock Exchange. became the first woman to serve as New York State Superintendent of Banks.

Rose Elizabeth Bird, chief justice of the California Supreme Court, not only is the first woman member of that court but is the second woman in the nation's history to be chief justice of a state supreme court.

Lucille Rose, 56, once a waitress in her mother's soul-food diner in Brooklyn, became New York City's first woman deputy mayor, named by Mayor Abraham Beame as Deputy Mayor for Manpower and Planning And New York's Mayor-elect Edward Koch picked 29-year-old Maureen Connelly as press secretary, the first woman and the youngest person ever to hold the job. Koch also appointed Ronay Menschel, 35, as deputy mayor. Carol Ballamy was elected president of New York's City Council, but Bella Abzug, 56-year-4 old former congresswoman who threw one of her many hats into the ring as a Democratic candidate for mayor, lost in

The Rev. Jacqueline Means, 40, in a dy Bird Johnson, a trio of First Ladies ceremony at All Saints Church in Indianwho have long been vocal in their back- apolis, became the first woman officially to be ordained an Episcopal priest. The nurse and mother of four had been a deacon of the church. Within the year, about 60 women were ordained. And the Rev. Beverly Mesenger-Harris, 30, who was ordained an Episcopal priest a few days later, became the first female priest to be a full-time rector of a parish when she became rector of the Gesthemane Episcopal Church in Sherrill, N.Y.

Dr. Rosalyn S. Yalow, one of three Americans awarded the 1977 Nobel Prize in Physiology or Medicine for pioneering research in the role of hormones in the chemistry of the human body, is the second woman ever to win a Nobel Prize in medicine.

From teen-agers to grandmothers, women continued to win ribbons, crowns and titles in competitions of varied categories. Janelle Penny Commissiong, 24-yearold fashion designer who competed as Miss Trinidad-Tobago, became the first black Miss Universe in the pageant's 26 years. Marie Stavins, 20, of Sweden, won the Miss World crown

In other annual competitions, Susan Yvonne Perkins, 23, a singer and biology graduate of Miami University of Ohio, walked down the runway at Atlantic City as the new Miss América. Kimberly Louise Tomes, 21, of Houston, was named Miss U.S.A.

Christina Ellen Moller, 17, or Jonesbor-, Ark., was named America's Junior Miss; Valerie Lynn Dunn, 17, a high school senior from Washington, D.C., was crowned Miss Black Teenage World; Claire Ford, an 18-year-old would-be lawyer from Memphis, an English major at Memphis State University, was crowned

Miss Black America. Leslie Owen Griffiths, 15, of Anchorage, Alaska, bcame Miss Teen-Age America, and Lavelda Fann, 16-year-old high school senior from Gadsden, Ala., Miss

ica Pageant. Rita Reutter, 58, a grandmother and mother of four daughters, who is studying for a master's degree in guidance counseling, was elected Homecoming Queen at Florida Technological University in Orlando.

A queen who has reigned for 25 years, 51-year-old Queen Elizabeth II of Britain, celebrated her Silver Jubilee. In the arts, too, women made news during 1977. At a concert at New York's Carnegie Hall celebrating her 75th birthday, legendary contralto Marian Anderson heard Rosalynn Carter read a congressional resolution honoring her for "her unstinting efforts on behalf of the brotherhood of man," and became the first black to receive a congressional medal. Famed artist Georgia O'Keeffe, celebrating her 90th birthday, was the subject of a Public Broadcasting Service special. At a Hollywood celebration of her long career, Bette Davis, 68, received the Lifetime Achievement Award of the American Film Institute. The award has been given only five times and she is the first woman recipient.

"Oscars" went to Beatrice Straight, best supporting actress, and Faye Dunaway, best actress, both for roles in 'Network." Tony awards went to Dorothy Loudon, named best actress in a musical, "Annie," and Julie Harris, best actress in a drama, "The Belle of Amherst." Lily Tomlin got a special Tony for her one-woman show, "Lily Tomlin -Appearing Nitely."

Crystal Gayle was named best female singer of the year at the Country Music Association awards show in Nashville, Nancy Hanks, chairman of the National Endowment for the Arts, was named the 1977 "Women of Conscience" by the National Council of Women. She was cited for turning "the performing arts from an" elitist exercise to a mass appreciation."

The American Academy and Institute of Arts and Letters for the first time elected three women in the same year: Hortense Calisher and Elizabeth Hardwick, novelists and short story writers, and Ada Louise Huxtable, architecture

In the military, women were flying high. Of the 157 women who entered the Air Force Academy last year, 130 made it to Recognition Day, the formal end of the first year.

Ten women received silver wings as the first of their sex to be trained as military pilots by the Air Force.

For the first time in the history of the Marine Corps, 22 female second lieutenants, participating in a 21-week officer training program at the Quantico, Va., Basic School, underwent combat training in a simulated two-day war.

The Pentagon announced that the Navv. making its first major changes in uniforms for women since 1943, will include slacks as well as skirts in the women sailors' and officers' uniforms

Though the ERA didn't make it in 1977, little by little sex barriers continued to fall in small but significant ways. A Treasury ruling discontinued the requirement that women co-owners of U.S. Savings Bonds, or women beneficiaries of the bonds, be identified as Miss or Mrs.

The Supreme Court ruled that employment requirements for height and weight discriminate illegally against women when employers fail to show that the tests have some real relation to the ability to handle the job. The ruling appeared likely to open more jobs for women in police, firefighting and similar fields by ending arbitrary eligibility standards that served to restrict hiring to men.

Britian's nationalized railroad system abandoned the 100-year-old custom of 'Ladies Only" compartments on trains. And in New York City the City Council Consumer Affairs Committee voted to lift a 115-year-old ban against women working as waitresses and food vendors at theaters, baseball parks and race tracks.

A case of discrimination dating back more than half a century was righted when the Army restored the Medal of Honor to a front-lines Civil War surgeon. Dr. Mary Edwards Walker, the only woman among the 3,000 medal winners. She was a feminist leader when her medal was removed in 1917.

Along with the gains, there were some setbacks for women. The Catholic Church, announced the Vatican, will not ordain women as priests no matter what other churches do. because Jesus Christ was a man and his representatives on earch must bear a "natural resembl-

And women were declared still unwelcome as Rotarians when the Council on Legislation defeated a constitutional amendment to allow women to become members of the organization.

The Veterans of Foreign Wars, at their national convention, rejected a bylaw change to allow eligible women veterans

A nationwide survey revealed that almost 30 per cent of 17-year-olds questioned believe that a woman's place is in the home. An additional 20 per cent think women should be allowed to work only under certain conditions. Nevertheless, according to new Labor Department figures, the percentage of working mothers has risen 7 percentage points since 1970 and 46 per cent of American children under 18 had mothers who worked outside the home last year.

"In company with the first lady ever to qualify at Indianapolis, gentlemen, start your engines."

The lady whose presence brought about the change in the traditional starting ritual of the famous auto race was Janet Guthrie. 39, the first woman to qualify for the Indianapolis 500. Earlier in the year she had become the first of her sex to start the Daytona 500.

In another sport, 48-year-old Patty Cox also chalked up a first. Named as general manager of the Oklahoma City 89ers, the AAA farm club of the Philadelphia Philles, Mrs. Cox became the first and only female general manager in AAA baseball. The younger generation, too, was making inroads on sports formerly reserved

her boxing debut against an 11-year-old boy, winning handily in three rounds. She is the first female ever to enter the Golden Gloves competition in the United States. Though she wasn't making waves by breaking a sex barrier, 45-year-old Stella Taylor did make waves of a sort by breaking a swimming record by more than four hours, swimming the 32-mile length of New York's Lake George in 26 hours, 51 minutes. Cindy Nicholas, 19-year-old Canadian, broke the world record for a nonstop, round-trip swim of the English Channel. Her 19 hours, 55 minutes, was 10 hours better than the previous record. She was the first woman to complete a two-way nonstop crossing of the channel. A new tennis queen was crowned at Wimbledon, as Virginia Wade of Britain won the women's singles title by defeating Betty Stove of Netherlands. The 31year-old Miss Wade had beaten Chris Evert, the defending champion, in the semi-

Despite this setback, the 22-year-old Miss Evert continued to rack up court victories during the year, including her third consecutive U.S. Open women's singles crown at Forest Hills

Her teeth in braces and her hair pulled back with ribbons, a new tennis star stepped into the limelight as Tracy Austin became, at 14, the youngest competitor in Winbledon's 100-year history. Though she bowed to Miss Evert in the third round, the schoolgirl from Rolling Hills, Calif., was a favorite of the press and the crowds.

Kathy Whitworth, 36-year-old Texan, won the biggest prize in women's golf when she took first place and $36,000 in the sixth annual Colgate-Dinah Shore Winners Circle tournament. Miss Whitworth, who has won more money than any other competitor in the history of the Ladies Professional Golf Association, also finished first in the Coca-Cola Classic.

Linda Fratianne, 16, of Northridge, Calif., won the women's world figure skating championship, succeeding American Olympic gold medalist Dorothy Hamill, who has turned professional, as the world's skating queen. The 20-yearold Miss Hamill, who gave up her amateur status to tour with the Ice Capades, was voted the 1977 athlete-of-the-year by readers of WomenSports magazine.

Hollis Stacy, 23, won the $100,000 Muscular Dystrophy golf tournament with a 17-under-par 271, a Ladies Professional Golf Association record for 72 holes.

Deaths for the year included: Anais Nin. 74, writer noted for her series of diaries, which she began in her childhood and continued through her life; Frances Payne Bolton, 92, Ohio Congresswoman who served in the House from 1939 through 1968; Lela Rogers, 86, editor theatrical producer and mother of actress Ginger Rogers; Marjorie Gateson, 86, an actress for nearly 60 years on stage, screen and television. Joan Crawford, 69, superstar of the screen for decades after Charlestoning her way to stardom-in 1928 in "Our Dancing Daughters"; high fashion milliner Sally Victor, 83; Ethel Barrymore Colt, 65, actress, singer, daughter of the late Ethel Barrymore and a member of the ninth generation of the famed stage fami-

Alice Hughes, 78, syndicated newspaper columnist and foreign correspondent; Geraldine Brooks, 52, Broadway, Hollywood and television actress and na-ture photographer; Sue Kaufman, 59, author of "The Diary of a Mad Housewife" and other novels.

Alice Paul, 92, a leader of the women's suffrage movement who was called the author of the proposed Equal Rights Amendment to the Constitution; Katherine Stinson Otero, 86, pioneer aviator and stunt flier who is credited as the first skywriter and the first woman to fly at night.

Jean Hagen, 52, radio, stage, movie and TV star, who appeared in the series, "Make Room for Daddy"; Ethel Waters, 80, blues and gospel singer and dramatic actress; Maria Callas, 53, opera singer; Mary Ford, 53, who with Les Paul, at that time her husband, rose to fame in the '50s as a singing duo; Maria Grigorievna Rasputin, 77, daughter of Czarist Russia's "Mad Monk" Rasputin.

HAPPY ACHIEVER - Janet Guthrie is welcomed back to the pit after becoming the first woman to qualify for the Indianapolis 500 auto race. Miss Guthrie set a new course record for women at an average speed of 188.403 mph on a trial run.

An old theory in furnishing was that rooms had to be decorated around some big center of interest such as a picture window, a fireplace or a large sofa, etc. But, actually, you can use a center of interest that includes none of these major items. One thought would be two love seats, or two chairs, and a table in a setting with an area rug and special lighting making it a successful "decorative island Or, you could use a long, low buffet accessorized with a lamp and pictures for an outstanding center of interest.

ALL MY CHILDREN: David and Chris

DAYS OF OUR LIVES: Laura spent Christmas at the Horton's while Bill gifted Kate with a present and a kiss. It was on again, off again when Chris discovered Neil on Mary's doorstep, unaware that she was kicking Neil out. Patti dated Ron on the sly. Larry wined and dined Jeri. David was suspicious when he overheard Margo tell Trish that Mike talks about Trish all the time. Samantha's doctor suggested Marlena come for a visit. Larry's spy tried to waylay Trish and was put on the carpet by Robert.

THE DOCTORS: Sarah and Mona did their best to reunite Jason and Nola. Carolee fretted about Eric's health which is on the burn. Kyle made a stab at setting Greta straight and she had the guilts for blabbing to Matt about Maggie and Kyle. Doreen had a lonely Xmas after being rebuffed by her father.

THE EDGE OF NIGHT: Mike and Laurie were exonerated when Steve realized she only fired one bullet into Beau. It was Ray Harper's additional two slugs that killed Beau. Tony proposed to Geraldine. Draper spent Christmas with April. Nicole left Claremont with Adam Jr. for the home that Geraldine found for them. FOR RICHER, FOR POORER: Les returned home while Tessa blamed Ellie for nagging their father to drink. Bill agreed to accept his responsibilities after Megan admitted that Connie proved she's pregnant. Laurie rebuffed Jason's advances and Viola warned her to steer clear of him. Edith urged Austin to help out at the company. Barbara asked George to be her lawyer

GENERAL HOSPITAL: Mark tried to stifle his growing attraction for Kate. Heather refused Jeff's offer to set her up in Port Charles, then skipped out on Mrs. Hadley. Peter put one and one together and suspected that Lana and Lisa are one and the same. Laura and Lesley fought over Laura's friendships with David and Scotty, who moved into his own apartment. Then Les found birth control pills in Laura's purse. Monica agreed to spend Xmas with Alan and his family. Gina didn't fall for Adam's threats to get a transfer unless she gives him a chance in her love life.

GUIDING LIGHT: Mike left Vancouver as Hillary joined Bill for the holidays but Mike kept Bill's secret from the other Bauers. Evie admitted at Ben's gallery opening that she has lost her sight and she can't marry him. Holly told Barbara she can't wait forever for Ed and has started dating Peter. The Spauldings moved into their own home. Alan offered Adam a job with his industrial development which Mike opposes. Ed related his annual Christmas story for the Children's that it's too late for an abortion. The Sterlings planned a big wing-ding. Andrew was reluctant to invite Mia for fear people would think they're reconciling. Michael remembered discovering about hanky-panky in his family when he was ONE LIFE TO LIVE: While Becky gave Richard the cold-shoulder, Edwina heated his fires. Lana's inquest began with Cathy's accusations against Brad. Vinnie was suspicious of Karen's fake ali-bi for Marco. Wanda attended woman's consciousness-raising sessions. Marco decided to come clean rather than go along with Brad's blackmail game.

RYAN'S HOPE: Bill's worse fears about Rae were confrimed when his detective reported on her rendezvous with her lover. The hospital settlement was ratified and provisions were made to changed disciplinary procedures for Pat and Faith. Faith was curious why Tom smashed a photograher's camera rather than have his photo taken. Mary and Jack sent Christmas gifts from Ireland, while Pat downed more pills. Seneca again proposed to Jill, who became ill.

SEARCH FOR TOMORROW: The gang held a song fest at Jo's inn. Bill hired Donna on Scott's recommendation. John and Suzi planned to spend Xmas with Stephanie and Wendy. Meredith tried a new ploy with Jo by pretending to be nicey-nice. Bruce felt discouraged that

Amy's job is taking her away from him. THE YOUNG AND THE RESTLESS: Greg returned. Leslie agreed to spend Xmas eve with Brad and Xmas day with Brock and Stu. Kay gifted Derek with a Jaguar, but was upset to learn that his ring gift was sent by mistake from the store. Snapper allowed Karen and Chris to think a toy he gave Karen was from him, but it was actually from Nancy. Jill admitted to Greg that she loves Derek.

Middle-Class Wealth In U.S. Given Boost By Liberation Movement

EDITOR'S NOTE — Financial results are coming in from the women's lib demand for equal pay for equal work, and women aren't the only ones benefiting. The biggest winners are professional couples. Their double incomes are creating a new kind of middle-class wealth

By DANIEL Q. HANEY

BOSTON (AP) - For many upwardbound middle-class Americans, Christine and Richard Lunt live a dream: At age 33 they have a $120,000 house in the suburbs, live-in housekeeper for their two kids, and an expensive foreign car. They take winter trips to Florida and are members of a tennis club.

Richard Lunt is an engineer for a consulting firm. His salary is good but not

How can they do it?

The answer is women's lib. Christine Lunt is a bank executive. Together, they earn $70,000 a year. A few years ago, many well-paying, men-only jobs began opening to women. Now the financial result is becoming clear. It is creating a new kind of middle-class wealth in America.

Women become professionals; professionals marry professionals; and between them, they join two medium salaries into a single fat one.

Though still small, this category is growing quickly. The federal Bureau of Labor Statistics estimates that there were 686,000 professional couples in 1965. By last year, th€ number had

New Protein May Help Fill World Needs

BY ROBERT C. MILLER

MCMURDO, Antarctica (UPI) - Scientists from a protein-hungry world have found in the dark, icy waters of the Antarctic a crustacean once judged edible only for whales and penguins.

Euphasia Superba, or krill, has suddenly become the biggest source of untapped. anima! protein in the world today. National Science Foundation authorities estimate there are 1.5 billion tons of krill available for harvesting off the Antarctic

West Germany: Taiwan, Holland, Norway and Chile have joined Russia, Japan and the Argentine in studies of how best to catch, preserve and utilize the fourinch shrimp-like crustacean.

One key problem is to determine how far man can go in harvesting the crustacean without damaging the delicate ecological balance in Antarctic waters.

The accelerated interest by the proteinpoor nations has been caused in part by the depletion of the anchovy catch off South America from which millions of tons of fish meals and fertilizers were produced. New fishing restrictions such as the 200-mile limits along with steadily reduced fish catches have suddenly made krill a popular word everywhere.

Little was known about the planktoneating crustaceans until Dr. Mary Alice McWhinnie of De Paul University, Chicago, began her research several years ago. Scientists found that krill was the natural food of baleen whales, seals, penguins and soahirds

Today, several countries are experimenting with the various ways of merchandizing the catch. The Russians produce a paste from krill that contains from 13 to 20 percent protein and sells for pout $1.25 a pound. They also produ krill butter and cheese spreads. The Japanese boil the krill and sell them in frozen blocks

They also have produced krill tempura. krill-mixed dumplings and meat balls. Chilean nutritionists have produced krill soup, pate and salami.

The harvesting is similar to shrimp fishing. Trawlers are used which drag nets along the sea floor. Now larger trawlers carrying more sophisticated gear are being used.

One of the problems facing krill fishermen is the long and costy voyage to the Antarctic waters where the trawling must be done in some of the world's stormiest seas and coldest weather.

Another factor is the need for immediate processing. Fisheries experts say the krill loses most of its protein content unless preserved within four hours of being Scientists at the NSF research station at McMurdo Sound said there is an apparent abundant supply along the entire Antarctic coastal shelf.

There seem to be large concentrations off the Waddell and Ross seas," said marine biologist David Karl from the Scripps Institute of Oceanography in La Jolla, Calif., "but that is probably only because we have done some rather heavy sampling in those areas. Later, we'll probably find krill just about everywhere down

All the countries researching krill in Antarctica are signatories to the 1959 Antarctic treaty which forbids any form of commercialism on or along the continent. All the Antarctic harvesting done thus far has been labeled "experimental" with catches limited to a few thousand

The marine biologists working in the Antarctic are convinced it is only a matter of time until the treaty is amended to permit krill to be taken on a commercial wouldn't have it any other way. "One of the most important things is the freedom from worry," she says, "We've never worried about whether we'll eat tomorrow. We've never worried about things that we can't afford. If we can't afford something, it's probably a luxury we don't need.

Her husband, Richard, adds, "It's not gross luxury, but we have enough money to do everything that we want to do."

The Lunts are typical of this new version of the good life. They are still young but well established in their careers. They have a big new house on a wooded lot in suburban Acton. They drive a Mercedes. They enjoy giving expensive presents to friends and relatives

Some of these couples already are or babysitters. But Christine Lunt Ithinking about building enough savings to slow down or ever, retire in middle

> This is a goal of Lucille Zanghi, 28, a Boston stockbroker. She and her husband, a computer salesman, will make about $50,000 this year. And next year, with higher commissions, they expect to

One of the reasons why I think it's worth working very hard right now and making a lot of money," says Mrs. Zangh-"is that we feel at some point in our ... maybe 20 years from now, we're going to be able to say 'To hell with it. Let's go to Martha's Vineyard and raise golden retrievers or live in Europe for a while.' We'll have freedom, and you can only have that if you have enough money to back you.

The Zanghis have no children, so their goals are a little different than those of Lita Nelsen, her husband and their two children. For Mrs. Nelsen, a chemical engineer in Bedford, Mass., the fun of two incomes is the little luxuries. She and her husband, an electrical engineer, have a combined income of more than $60,000 a year. She says she likes the idea of being able to serve wine to dinner guests without checking her bank balance.

It's very middle-class living, but the difference is the freedom to spend trivialshe says. "We can go out to dinner and not worry about it. If I want to buy expensive shoes, I just go out and do it. Those kinds of purchases are made much more casually, and that's probably what the money buys us more than anything

Patricia Light, a psychologist at Harvard Business School, says some members of this new middle class don't know the meaning of an important economic factor: "They can't believe there is something called disposable income."

She adds: "There are many young couples who will start out saving the entire second income until they get ready to buy a house.

One such couple is Amy Abrahams and her husband, two years out of dental school, who are building a house in suburban Sharon

Mrs. Abrahams worked as an insurance actuary while her husband was in school. After he went into practice, they found it easy to save money

"Space we were used to living on one income, that habit carried over," Ms. Abrahams said. Though they now make about $40,000. "we've tended to live on my income and save the other portion. Still other couples say that two good incomes allow them to take risks, such as starting new careers that can lead to even bigger salaries. In Newburyport, Linda Miller and her husband, Bill, both architects, are restoring a 250-year-old house. Instead of toiling nights and weekends, Bill quit his job and works on the house full time. His wife's $15,000 salary pays the bills. When the house is finished, Bill plans to start his own firm, while his wife keeps her job. Then, if the new business succeeds, she will join him.

It's a very big gamble," Bill says. The trick will be for me to go out and accumulate enough work to justify Linda leaving. She's giving me the freedom to

AP Newsfeatures Writer When Sydney P. Waud was a youngster, he liked to sit in the kitchen and watch his mother cook. He usually peppered her with questions. "I used to ask her why she added a certain spice or prepared a vegetable a certain way. Things like that," said the husky young bachelor. "I guess I absorbed a good deal of basic knowledge about cooking along the way.

As he grew older and took to traveling around the world on hunting safaris or picture-taking jaunts, Waud began to discover that both restaurant chefs and amateur cooks had a tendency to go in for fancy variations of dishes, even though the originals were simpler and usually

"I finally decided that old standbys are the best and most of these fancy frills can be junked," he said. "This doesn't mean I don't like authentic gourmet dishes." It's just the phony ones he objects to, he

Moving to New York after college, Waud soon found that he was running up large bills eating in restaurants, and decided to cook his meals at home. He had also acquired an intense dislike for watery scrambled eggs, overcooked vegetables and some of the other horrors that can confront those dining out. *

"I enjoyed cooking for myself and my friends and I kept learning new things, he said. "For instance, I found that if you chill an onion in the refrigerator before peeling, it won't bring tears to your eyes, and if you chill fresh vegetables before cooking, they stay greener.

As part owner of a New York skating

Waud is kept pretty busy, so he usually skips gourmet specialties.

"I'm fond of sweetbreads, for example, but I lack the time or inclination to remove the membranes, soak them in cold water, parboil them and all the rest. Bethat's what restaurants retain staffs for, so I eat dishes like that when I dine out.'

The fruit of Waud's culinary experiments is "Cooking Up a Storm" (Chatham Square Press, New York), an informative book that takes a no-nonsense approach to cooking. The book gives one way to roast a goose or prepare wild rice, instead of offering dozens of variations. The recipes are simple, but the dishes often fall into the gourmet category, like quail marinated in brandy, and roast pheasant. Here's a novel recipe for lobster and melon

English Teacher Explains Current Status Of Complex, Changing Job

UPI Education Editor

Darts tossed schoolward by taxpayers upset over the teaching of reading and writing hit English departments across

Rather than ducking attacks on their competence, the nation's English teachers these days stand, arms locked, chins

They're doing the best they can and are as good as ever, to hear their leader, Dr. Marjorie Farmer, of Philadelphia, tell it. But their job is bigger and more complex these days. Dr. Farmer, new president of the National Council of Teachers of English, has been on the school scene for 20 years. Currently, she is Executive Director of English and Reading Curriculum in the Philadelphia schools - 280,000 students, kindergarten through grade 12. During an interview the main focus was on poor performance by pupils taking tests measuring reading and writing competence. Slipping test scores are the reason taxpayers are down on schools.

Dr. Farmer was asked what's happened: Are the tests out of tune with the times? Are teachers not as good as those of 15 or 20 years ago or when the scores were high? Are the kids sour on school? Are parents out of touch with the printed Teachers, according to Dr. Farmer, are as good as ever, generally speaking. The trouble, as she sees it: "Some things are out of synch.

She sketched this scene: "Television has been moving into children's lives with tremendous impact but the curriculum in reading and English, transmitters of culture, has not kept up with the rapid changes in the electronic media. Bringing the two together will help to get the reading and English into synchronization. That's Dr. Farmer's theory.

This can be done in a "no budget" way. The Philadelphia schools, which recently had a payless payday, are showing it's possible.

Dr. Farmer said a "television reading program" - strange as that sounds! uses videotapes of television programs youngsters find interesting.

The reading part? Reading scripts of the programs. The writing part? Writing about both.

And, sometimes, dramatics is worked in - as youngsters stage parts of the show. This is no budget, Dr. Farmer stressed. That is, no extra school money had to be put into it. The program is working so well that other school districts across the nation are copying it - the ultimate proof of success in academia.

Sometimes parents are brought into the picture under another no-budget pro-gram in the Philadelphia schools: the Parent Partnership Project.

When, for example, a major network program of value is worked into the curriculum, teachers prepare instructional guides for themselves as well as parents. Dr. Farmer recalled that the "Eleanor and Franklin" special last year is one example of a program in which parental assistance was asked.

"In reading and writing and all school subjects the direct involvement of parents and the pupil's homelife make a difference," Dr. Farmer said.

"Our Parent Partnership program gives parents a chance to join in workshops with teachers and discuss ways to help children with language development - we listen to what the parents have to say and gain something, too.

"We're big on these nobudget programs in Philadelphia. Our schools are very poor.

Another part of the Parent Partnership program is to get parents interested in what books to select in the library.

"Reading and writing is a share responsibility - not just one for the schools, Dr. Farmer said.

But wouldn't the writing and reading er answered that at the recent annual problems go away if the English teachers and the schools answered the cries for a back to basics" - oldfashioned writing, reading, spelling and such? 'Part of what happens is how we English teachers answer that good call," Dr. Farmer said.

'We really do know very well what we teach, from preschool to university levels. We teach the English language, its structure, forms and uses.

"Our organization works together on the best ways of teaching English and of measuring the achievement of students.

'We will go on working together to identify, invent, and share better ways of teaching and of evaluating our work. Why teach English, anyway? Dr. Farm-meeting of the National Council of Teachers of English. She said:

'We teach English first because we love the English language, because its sounds and its forms give us pleasure, and because we want to share this pleasure with others.

'We teach English because we know that the continual effort to find and use the best words in the best way in order to communicate with one another is the real basis of all human society.

"We teach English because we know that the ability to read what others have written and to translate it into a personal meaning . . . can give our students access to all the information and skills that their schools, careers and lives will require.

We teach English because we know that writing gives our students control of the innate discipline of thought, that is the means of working through their ideas and giving them form and substance." Dr. Farmer said she sees the cry for a return to basics as an opportunity for English teachers.'

'Now that we have the critical attention of the community, let's practice the communication skills we teach, so as to

she said.

In a forceful command, Dr. Farmer told the English teachers in New York for the annual meeting:

"Communicate. She reminded - as only an English teacher could:

Heated Vitamin C Controversy Continues

By SIDNEY MARGOLIUS NEW YORK (WNS) — The season for colds having arrived, the controversy over the value of megadoses of vitamin C in their treatment has heated up.

Vitamin C is one of the two hotly debated vitamin supplements. The other is vitamin E, widely promoted as an aid for improving virility, relieving heart conditions, improving circulation, slowing down aging, and, most recently, preventing or curing some forms of cancer.

In relation to vitamin C (ascorbic acid), we've been keeping score on the various tests made to see if massive doses can reduce the incidence or severity of colds. The debate began in 1970, when Linus Pauling, a noted chemist, published a book recommending big vitamin C doses to fight colds.

Many doctors - but not all - think the claims in this book, Vitamin C and the Common Cold, are inflated. But Pauling's assertions did stimulate a humber of experiments trying anywhere from 200 milligrams a day to as much as 3,000 milligrams (3 grams) to see if big doses had any effect on colds.

The usual recommended daily amount of vitamin C is only 50 to 60 milligrams, about what you get from a 4-ounce glass of orange juice and; to a lesser extent, from other juices, fruits and many veget-

Our files, which are reasonably comprehensive, show that some 16 tests of varying extent have been reported here and in Canada. About half the tests indicate a small advantage for megadoses of vitamin C to fight colds.

One of the broadest tests, for example, found that big doses had "a minor influence" on severity of colds. This was National Instititue of Health study reported in 1975. Half of the 311 people in the test got a huge 3,000 milligrams; the others, a fake pill.

A six-months study by the British Medical Research Council on 1,200 volunteers disclosed no effect on colds between those given a huge 10-grams dose of vitamin C over three days as against those given dummy pills. Another extensive study done on 868 Arizona children, with half getting massive doses of vitamin C and the others, blank pills, found that after five months the number and length of colds between the two groups was much the same.

Several researchers have reported some relief of symptoms. Dr. John F. Coulehan of the University of Pittsburgh Medical School supervised the Arizona test. He said that some scientists theorized that the vitamin C had an antihistamine-like effect in drying up runny noses. But with other antihistamines available. Coulehan didn't think this was enough benefit to take massive doses of this, too, opinions conflict. There are opposite opinions on heart effects. Some protagonists of vitamin C megadoses believe they may help control hardening of the arteries. But Leslie Klevay, a U.S. Department of Agriculture scientist, has reported that vitamin C decreased the amount of copper that can be absorbed from food. He believes that the consequent imbalance of zinc and copper metabolism found in lab tests on rats may increase cholesterol levels with increased risks of heart disease, Klevay

Some medical authorities also have cautioned that massive doses taken over an extended period may cause kidney and blood problems, affect growing bone and induce menstrual bleeding in pregnant women. Large doses also may affect glucose tests of diabetics:

Perhaps the most rational or at least cautious advice is to take somewhat more vitamin C than the standard allowance say 100 to 120 milligrams - but avoid extended megadoses:

Good food sources of vitamin C, in addition to fruit juices, are tomatoes, cabbage, potatoes, broccoli and other green

If you do buy vitamin C supplements, you may as well buy the cheapest brand. Pauling himself has criticized the health food industry for promoting so-called "natural" vitamin C, notes a re-cently published book, "The Health Robedited by Dr. Stephen Barrett and Gilda Knight.

Pauling has said that "synthetic" vi-tamin C is identical to the higher-priced "natural" vitamin C. He also has said that the words "organically grown" are meaningless - just part of the jargon used by health food promoters."

more heated. It was first promoted as an anti-sterility substance, since deliberate withholding of vitamin E made rats sterile. But similar effects, have not been observed in humans, nor has any increase in sexual vigor. In any case, vitamin E is reasonably abundant in usual diets since it is contained in vegetable oils, margarine and several other foods.

Nor has there been any evidence so far in various tests that large doses of vitamin E will relieve heart conditions.

But there has been some indication of reduction of symptoms of intermittent claudication (the leg and foot cramps sometimes suffered by older people). Thus, the question of whether vitamin E has an effect on circulation is unresolved. reports the Institute of Food Technolo-

Vitamin E also has been shown to have possible usefulness in heavily polluted at-mospheres. As an oxidant, it helps protect lungs from air pollution.

CANCER ANSWER LINE

A manufacturer writes: "A business associate is to begin chemotherapy for cancer when he gets out of the hospital. I would like to know how physicians monitor these powerful drugs.

HAIR FASHION - Fashion's new soft looks are echoed in spring hairstyles. Here

hair from one side is braided away from face and pinned just behind the opposite ear. The rest of the hair is combed down and under into a soft pageboy or gathered into a chignon. Soft tendrils frame the face to complete the feminine look

ANSWERline: Chemotherapy is a form of treatment which is closely monitored because the drugs used are very potent, and it is important to tailor the dosage to individual response and needs. This is accomplished by doing blood counts, x-ray tests, special isotope scans, analyses of general body function and special blood chemistry tests of liver or kidney func-

A secretary asks: "Can you give me some concrete guidance about whether or not a woman should have mammography? I read recently some frightening news stories that said that mammography can cause cancer. I then cancelled my appointment to have it done.'

ANSWERline: Many women have "cancelled appointments" because of understandable confusion resulting from a decision to limit routine mammographic screening of women without symptoms to those women over 50. This is because of the slight possibility that a younger woman might develop breast cancer 20 or 30 years after routine mammographic xrays are done. There is absolutely no question of the importance of routine mammography for women over 50. Mammography can find possible breast cancer in an extremely early stage when it is most easily and successfully treated. And breast cancer risk increases with age. Mammography is also important for women under 50 who have certain physical conditions or risk factors. The decision to have mammography must always reflect careful discussion between a woman and her physician.

A photographer writes: "Because I am a free-lance worker. I have some time to call my own. I would like to do volunteer work for the American Cancer Society, but I want to do something meaningful. What can you suggest?"

'Self-Help' Books Stress Organization, Acceptance

By Janice Jarvis Family News Staff

An easy and economical way to happiness may be as close as the neighborhood bookstore, if your head doesn't "get rattled" by the many promises that self-help books make

Do-it-vourself psychiatry is becoming a big business, making it difficult for the consumer to wade through the many titles and promises on the book shelves. Finding a book which can actually help can be as challenging as self improve-

"Psychiatrists and psychologists are cutting into the big market of self-help noted Dr. Rolf Gordhammer, psychologist. Unfortunately only one out of every five books has something decent to say, he added.

Whatever your problem, it's easy to find a book aimed directly at it: a book on the shelf titled 'Guilt Free Living' targets the people who feel guilty, and the list of books goes on and on.

Self-help book's don't offer a guarantee. but the average reader can sort the good from the bad, just by thumbing through The books all have a common theme:

be more tolerant, get organized and accept yourself, noted Gordhammer. It's common to find religious quotes mixed in with philosopical ones, and most are set to an optimistic tune. Anything that promises more than that may actually give less. Books which are too intimate, or speak in general terms rather than specifics, usually lack the information that readers are looking for. Furthermore, a person should be wary of books which promise something that doesn't exist: promises of superlative sex or a high paying job through dream analysis are rarely helpful. If a person is serious about self imporvement, the books can be helpful, if chosen wisely It's unlikely that you'll get anything out of reading just one book, explained a reader who advises a person to read several books, examining the cover carefully before buying any. Most books will have a shortcut to a better life, she added. Even if the original book is good, the reader should not expect the sequel to be equally as successful, advises Gordhammer. Often they are repetitions of the Books that give a step-by-step plan for overcoming problems are the most practical. Some people find that books which give case histories are more helpful than books that just make suggestions. "After you read enough case histories you begin to see a pattern," noted one

"Reading case histories helps you realize problems that you were unware of,"

Because most self-help books are loaded with suggestions for self-improvement, it's sometimes takes several readings before anyone gets anything out of

"Don't expect results after one reading either. There is so much material it's easy to become confused," said one reader. The appeal for self-help books lies not so much in what they do but what they

'The biggest message is to be sympathetic with yourself," said Gordhammer. They give the reader what he's looking for: a systematic way to get what he wants out of life. What one person wants isn't always what the next person is looking for; that's one reason so many self-help books are being written. But it is possible to get help from the books, if one really wants to. After studying the books, the message often becomes repetitious, and soon, instead of reading about happiness, the reader starts living the new way. "If you want to be a certain kind of person, you can practice until you actually become that kind of person," explained one reader, but before improvement can be seen, the reader has to follow the books' directions.

The reader must be in a certain frame of mind to get anything out of the books; if he takes the attitude that they're just a joke, he won't see results.

Most readers agree the books do help to some extent, but many readers remain wary of getting carried away with the doit-yourself psychiatry.

"You can get really hung-up reading self help books if you're always looking for all the answers to your problems in the book," said one reader. "You have to be realistic when reading.

otherwise any happiness you get out of them is only superficial," noted another Dr. Gordhammer said the books pose little danger to the average reader. They're written to be attractive to everybody: they're simple to read, and they discuss common problems," he said. They don't show the reader enough to cause problems. Most readers get as much out of the books as they want to

Gov. Rudy Perpich says the aim is to reverse government policies which he feels are unsound because they tear families apart rather than promote family togetherness. In some cases, he said, a husband and wife might share a state job, each working half a day and each spending half a day with their children. The first reaction of one state employees' union was cool, although neither the can't spell names straight and pay attention to other small details in business. They're something like the young women these days who expect to get ahead on their looks, a college degree and having been hired.

Miss Trahey made the point about details and the spelling of names during an interview that focused on advice to young women in business.

She cautioned young women against expecting special treatment or quiek advancement just because they're females and many companies these days are looking for ways to place more women in executive jobs

If an executive, join the Women's Forum. If you're for the ERA, join NOW and work for that. Volunteering is a wonderful way to expand a network of contacts. Work for a political campaign or volunteer to work on your company's paper. Even working on a church bulletin can turn up interesting contacts. When you have built this network, you'll have a whole new support team. "You can pick up the phone and say - Hey, can you help me? I want to meet so and so or take a crack at that

Rolling Unit Saves, Organizes Space

By "Mr. Do-It-Yourself" Steve Ellingson

It's no secret that in today's small-bedroom homes, you have to make every square foot count! This is particularly true of children's bedrooms, guest rooms and dens...not to mention vacation cabins, mobile homes and apartments. This is why we designed this handsome 3-in-1 wallbed unit that gives you everything a lot of space.

Requiring the same floor space as a twin-size bed, this unit also provides 4 large drawers - the equivalent of a fullsized dresser. The wall shelves, which are attached to the bed, hold a generous supply of books, nickmacks and other conversation pieces. An added bonus is that the entire unit is on casters for easy mobility. We made this version from birch plywood, but the field of veneer finishes is wide open. The easy-to-follow plan for building this space-saver features stepby-step instructions and photographs, a complete materials list and handy finish-

Charles Russell Art To Hang In American Embassy In Tokyo

FORT WORTH (Special)—A Charles Russell painting from the permanent collection of the Amon Carter Museum of Western Art will soon be hanging in the American Embasssy in Tokyo, Japan.

The painting, "The Price of His Hide," was painted by Russell in 1915 and depicts a cowboys' narrow escape from a grizzly bear. The oil on canvas was originally part of the famous Mint Bar Collection in Montana. The collection was sold to the late Amon G. Carter in 1952 and was part of the Amon Carter Museum's original permanent collection when the museum opened in 1961.

The loan of the painting was arranged by the U.S. State Department's Art for Embassies Program and was instigated at the request of U.S. Ambassador to Japan, Mike Mansfield. The former senate majority leader from Montana was a friend of the Russell family as a boy in Montana and has long been an admirer of Russell's art, Richard A. Christenson, Country Officer for Japanese Affairs, said. The painting will be hung at Mansfield's official residence in Tokyo and will stay there for two years. The painting, like many by Russell, was inspired by a story told to the artist by one of his cowboy friends. The story was told to Russell by Hank Winters who had been prospecting in the Big Snowy Mountains with his partner, Bed-Rock Jim. According to Winters, after the bear had raided the two prospectors' camp, he determined to track the grizzly down and kill it for its hide. In his book, Charles Russell, Frederic Renner relates Winters' firsthand account of the incident: "I plunged into the brush through the timber lookin' for trouble, an' it ain't long till I find it. I hear a roar like all hells turned loose an' that bear's on me before I can bat an eye. I fire one shot, but I'm so rattled she goes wild. Before I can throw in another ca'tridge he knocks the gun loose from my hand and his claws tear my right sleeve from the shoulder down, cuttin' my arm plumb to the bone. Just as everythings turnin' black, I hear Bed-Rock's Winchester an' the way he throws lead shows he ain't no stranger to a gun. When I come to I ain't got rags enough on to pad a crutch.

"The Price of Hide," is Russells attempt to depict Winter's tale. The painting is a popular item in the Museum's Russell collection and has traveled widely throughout the country as part of loan exhibitions from the museum ity of viewing the Texas Tech Music Theatre's production of the English version of Mozart's "The Marriage Of Figaro." Those who remember last summer's very successful staging of Gilbert and Sullivan's "Patience" will not want to miss this latest venture in music theatre, directed by John Gillas of the Tech Music Faculty. The talented cast has spent the last several weeks in rehearsal, taking time out for the Christmas week and returning to school ten days early to put the final "stamp" on this, one of Mozart's most delightful operas.

The story of the opera is taken from a play by the French playwright, Beaumarchais and is the middle work of three plays, all relating to the peasant Figaro and his dealings with Count Almaviva, the local nobility.

When he was the "barber" of Seville, Figaro aided Count Almaviva in winning Rosina away from her guardian, Dr. Bartolo. Now, in "The Marriage of Figaro," the action has shifted to Count Almaviva's castle some distance away from Seville and several years have passed during which the Count and Rosina (now the Countess) have become estranged.

Figaro, now employed as the Count's valet, is engaged to Susanna who is chambermaid to Countess Almaviva. The Count also has his eye on Susanna and wishes to reinstate the right of the Lord to the first night with the new bride. When Figaro discovers the Count's intentions, he contrives with Susanna and the Countess to trick the Count into giving up his desings on Susanna.

In an elaborate series of disguises and mistaken identities in the fourth act, the Count not only is deceived but more importantly becomes aware of his callous disregard of people and a profound change takes place. The final scene, without giving away the dramatic climax, is one of celebration in which all the

This sketch of the action gives the basic plot line. There are several other characters to complicate the action and add to the fun. One of these in Cherubino, the Count's 14-year-old page. Cherubino is at the tender age when his voice is changing and he is falling in love with every woman he sees - Susannah, the Countess, Barbarina, the gardener's daughter - he loves them all madly.

Then, of course, there are the "bad guys" - Dr. Bartolo, the Countess' former guardian who is just itching to get even with Figaro for helping the Count win her away from him. Dr. Bartolo's housekeeper, a spinster named Marcellina, wants to prevent Figaro's impending marriage to Susanna. At one time Figaro borrowed a large sum of money from Marcellina and now she is demanding immediate repayment or else Figaro must marry her! In league with Dr. Bartolo and Marcellina is the oily character Basilio, the Countess' music teacher. Basilio, truly a dirty old man, is trying to convince Susanna to yield to the Count's When the play was originally produced, the noble houses of Europe were scandalized to see the peasant Figaro making a fool of his master. The work was banned all over Europe and when Mozart wanted to use it as the basis for an opera, the Austro-Hungarian Emperor, Joseph II rejected the idea immediate-

Revisions In Copyright Laws To Be Discussed

AUSTIN (Special)-In 1976, Congress enacted a detailed revision of the Copyright Act of 1909.

In addition to authors, publishers and readers, the new law, effective Jan. 1. 1978, affects "everybody who originates or uses or enjoys music, drama, dance, photographs, fine arts, motion pictures, or sound recordings," says James M. Treece, the Charles I. Francis Professor of Law at The Unversity of Professor Treece will discuss the impact of the new copyright act with two other University of Texas faculty members, and respond to their concerns about it, in the first of a two-part discussion on "The Next 200 Years," a weekly radio program produced by the Unversity. Joining Professor Treece on the panel will be Dr. Warren Roberts, director of the Humanities Research Center at UT Austin, and Dr. Roger Louis, professor of history at the University. The program will air the week of Jan. 2-8, to be continued on the following week's broadcast.

Dr. Louis identified three sides of the new law in asking how it will affect him in his various roles-as a researcher using original material, as a writer and as a teacher, reproducing material for classroom use.

As a librarian responsible for many original documents and other records. Dr. Roberts says the statue's implications leave him "in something of a ter-

Although the new act represents a "substantial revision" of the earlier one. Professor Treece responds, it "continues very, very many of its fundamental

Probably the most significant feature of the new law is that it federalizes

Any matter that is originated by a person and fixed in a tangible form is automatically protected," Dr Treece explains. "No other effort or no other formality is required to place that work in copyright.

However, to insure full protection for distributed copies, he adds, the author should mark each copy with his or her name, the date of publication and the word "copyright," or one of its two equivalents - the symbols "copr." or a

The other fundamental change wrought by the new law concerns the duration of copyright, according to Professor Treece. Where under the 1901 statue. copyright was granted for 28 years, with an option to renew, the act states that all original material is copyrighted for the author's lifetime plus 50 years, at which time it automaticaly enters the public domain, he explains.

"There is no renewal concept in the present act," Professor Treece adds. During the period that the copyright is in effect, he says, the author has exclusive rights under the new act, with very few exceptions

"Within these areas of exclusivity, no person may make use of the copyrighted work without consent," Professor Treece observes. "A person who does make such a use may be enjoined, and the evidence of his use, copies and things like that, may be seized and destroyed."

Libraries are specifically protected by the new act, he says, in that, by posting a notice beside each photocopy machine stating that photocopying may be subject to copyright law, the library is absolved of liability for any infringement of the law by its partrons.

The most significant exception to the rule of exclusivity, from the panelists points of view, is the doctrine of "fair use," which allows use without consent by teachers, scholars, researchers, critics, news reporters and the like, according to Professor Treece

'The new copyright act explicity mentions the doctrine of 'fair use'," he remarks, "and although it does not give much content to the doctrine, the mere fact that it is now in the statute is going to indicate that the law of 'fair use,' or the law of priviliged uses, is going to expand.

In general, the determination of "fair use" probably will hinge on the distinction between persons "who are exploiting copyright economically" and persons making single copies for their private use, involving "no further reproduction, no further distribution, no further multiplication of copies," Professor Treece observes.

Whether a use of copyright material is 'fair' is a judgment call, ultimately to be made by a judge and jury," he continues.

This seems to be a very generous interpretation of the new copyright law," Dr. Louis remarks. "In other words, it seems to be a statute which all of us, as teachers and writers, can comfortably live with."

"I believe so," Professor Treece responds.

"I don't think there will be any practical difference insofar as the way we are conducting our business," Dr. Roberts agrees.

"The Next 200 Years," broadcast nationally, is co-produced by The University of Texas News and Information Service and KUT-FM (90.7 MHz), the University's public radio station.

Dr. Robert Davis, chairman and professor of radio-television-film, moderates the half-hour program.

Soviet theatre, Miss Vance determined that the cultural exchange mission should continue. Galina Volchex, the artistic director of Moscow's Sovremennik Theatre. was invited to restage her premiere production of Mikhail Roschin's 'Echelon" in Houston with American Actors. On the eve of Miss Vance's departure, the U.S.S.R. ministry of Culture and the Bureau of Education and Cultural Affairs of the United States State Department Cooperated to make possible this uniqe and historic effort by the artistic leaders from two nations. "Echelon" makes its American debut undere the direction of Galina Volchek at Alley Theatre January 26 with a special benefit premiere performance January 25, and will run through February 26.

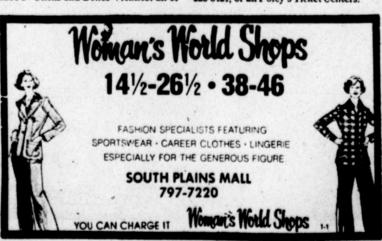

Madame Volchek was born in Moscow the daughter of an eminent cinematographer. From an early age her ambition was to attend the Moscow Art Theatre studio school, the Mecca of Soviet Theatre. Her dreams were realized. While at the Moscow Art, she met the young director Oleg Yefremov who organized the Sovremennik (contemporary) theatre with its stated ambition of creating a 'social organism" dedicated to the production of new, vibrant plays.

When Yefremov left for the Moscow Art Theatre seven years ago, Madame Volchek became the Sovremennik's Artistic Director. She made her debut as director with an American play, William Gibson's "Two for the Seesaw". She has included in her repertoire several American plays, among them Edward Albee's 'The Ballad of the Sad Cafe" and David Rabe's "Sticks and Bones". Almost all of ing on American stages were christened at the Sovremennik: Chingiz Aitmatov's "Ascebdubg Fujiyama" at the Arena in Washington and Mikhail Roschin' "Valentin, Valentina" at ACT in San Franciso. A popular performer on the Russian stage and screen, Madame Volchek has appeared in many movies including "Don Quixote" and "King Lear", and will return to the Soviet Union to appear as Martha in the Sovremennix's production of Edward Albee's "Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?

Madame Volchek has selected from her repertoire another Roschin play with which to make her American directorial debut: "Exhelon". When Hitler's Panzer Tankers were moving toward Moscow in the winter of 1941, a amssive evacuation of the Soviet capital was ordered. The men were on the front and the women were placed on special trains for Siberia. traveling dangerously in open country under the sights of the Luftwafe bombers. "Echelon" tells the story of the people on one such train. The author, Mikhail Roschin, is considered to be one of the five leading contermporary Russian novelists and playwrights.

The American premiere of "Echelon" at the Alley is truly an historic event. Never before has a Soviet director been invited to recreate with American actors a play precisely as it appears in the Soviet Union. It is to be hoped that this cooperative venture will lead to furture cultural exchange. Alley Theatre's production of "Echelon", currently in rehearsal under the direction of Madame Volchek, opens January 25. Tickets are now available at the Alley Box Office, 615 Texas Avenue, 228-8421, or all Foley's Ticket Centers.

Six Flags, Inc. Show Productions, the largest user of young performing talent in America, is responsible for casting shows at Six Flags Over Texas (Dallas/Ft. Worth), Six Flags Over Georgia (Atlanta), Six Flags Over Mid-America (St. Louis), And Astroworld (Houston). And talent auditions for 1978 shows will get underway in early January.

Each year producer David T. Blackburn and his staff view some 6,000 hopefuls competing for coveted performing positions in shows at one of these locations. Ultimately some 600, or one in 10, will be chosen. The competition is indeed tough, and the rehearsals are long and strenuous, but the end reward of applause is well worth the effort. With more than 2 million people visiting each of the Six Flags locations annually, Six Flags performers have the opportunity of appearing before some of America's most receptive audiences. And the experience of working with other performers in an all-new show, written, produced, designed, choreographed and arranged by professionals, is invaluable.

For many young performers, Six Flags shows provide fun summer employment. But for many other Six Flags alumni, performing in a theme park show proved

of TV's "Eight Is Enough" series, and Broadway's "A Chorus Line" performer Rene Clemente are just a few performers who turned their summer experience into a lifetime career. And during 1978, Six Flags performers will have the opportunity to be named the most outstanding performer of the year in the "First Annual Stairway to Stardom" contest. Finalists, chosen by celebrity judges, will be awarded numerous prizes, including a tour of Hollywood and an appearance with Dinah Shore on her television talk show "Dinah!"

Auditions for talented performers who hope to get started in the world of entertainment, or for those just wanting a fun job for the summer, will begin in January, continuing through April. Singers, dancers, and variety acts of all types are sought for spring, summer and fall entertainment. Auditions are open to anyone 16 years of age or older.

Houston Ballet 'In Black' For Fourth Year In Row

HOUSTON (Special)-Houston Ballet come raised from contributions was Foundation President Eugene F. Love- $605,000. Earned income last season was land has announced that Houston Ballet ended its 1976-77 fiscal year in the black, with a surplus of over $62,000.

Loveland pointed out that this is the fourth straight year for Houston Ballet to finish its fiscal year in the black. "We got rid of our last deficit in 1973," he said, " in order to qualify for The Ford Foundation's Cash Reserve Fund Grant of that year, and since then we have managed to show not only an operating surplus but also an excess of current assets over liabilities at year's end."

Loveland noted that importance of The Ford Foundation's Cash Reserve grant in determining subsequent fiscal policy that was prudent and forward-looking: "We still keep the Ford money which we accumulated over the four year grant period in a separate account and dip into if for emergencies. We will add to that reserve every year, as our operating expenses increase, just as if The Ford Foundation were still looking over our shoulder.

Houston Ballet's total expenditures were $1,320,000 for the season 1976-77. In-

59 percent of total expenses, a great increase over the 21 percent figure just six seasons ago.

A landmark grant in the history of Houston Ballet, The Ford Foundation's Cash Reserve grant period of four years covered a vital period of rapid development and artistic growth for the Houston company. Artistic Director Ben Stevenson, distinguished former co-director of the National Ballet of Washington, came to the company in 1976, and has presided over an artistic flowering of this classically-oriented resident professional compa-

The event is the January 5th gala Houston Symphony concert and champagne reception which Sun Line is giving as a gift to Houston. Mrs. Ch. A. Keusseoglou, President of Sun Line Cruises, and Mrs. Keusseoglou, will fly in from their home in Monte Carlo to host the evening. Potier stated that Sun Line is sponsoring the event as part of its cultural commitment to the city of Houston.

American clarinetist, Esther Evangeline Lamneck, has been selected to appear as guest soloist. She and the symphony will perform Mozart's Concerto in A Major for Clarinet and Orchestra. The Houston Symphony will also perform Dvorak's Carneval Overture, Opus 92, and the Symphony No. 9, F Minor, Opus 95 "From the New World." Conducting will be Michael Palmer, Guest Conductor for the Houston Symphony and Music Director of the Wichita Symphony.

Some of the most prominent people in Texas will be present at the gala concert. The black tie audience invited to Jesse H. Jones Hall for the Performing Arts that evening, are major benefactors and contributors to the Houston Symphony Marathon; those who worked on behalf of the Symphony; and merchants who participated in the Marathon.

Miss Lamneck is a Juilliard and Naumburg clarinet laureate who has won international acclaim. She has appeared as soloist under Pierre Boulez and performed in the Sienna, Spoleto, and Salzburg Festivals. She appeared in the Eight Musical FestivaL at Sea with Isaac Stern, Pinchas Zuckerman, Alexander Schneider and Jean Pierre Rampal.

The brilliant young artist performs under the auspices of the non-profit Pro Musicis Foundation

Founded by Father Eugene Merlet, a French Franciscan priest, Pro Musicis serves two purposes: it provides a concert hall for young soloists of proven exceptional talent and brings the joy of fine music to the poor, the infirm, the aged and the handicapped. For each performance of a major concert, a Pro Musicis artist contributes a free performance for the institutionalized. Artists are selected on the basis of highest international standards by members of the Pro Musicis Foundation. Active on the International Committee and Advisory Board are many musical greats including Rostropovich, Pierre Boulez, Yehudi Menuhin and Aaron Copland.

Miss Lamneck will contribute two free performances to the Houston community. Locations and times will be announced

Alley Theatre Offering Two New Productions

HOSTON (Special)-Alley Theatre has announced two new productions to compliment the American premiere of Mik-hail Roschin's "Echelon" directed by the renowned Russian Director Galina Volchek of Moscow's Sovremennik Theatre. Denise Lebrun: "Lifesize", an intimate musical review, opened December 27. Niccolo Machiavelli's hilarious "The Root of the Mandrake" opens January 19 and will play through February 5 on the Alley's arena stage.

At the top of the Alley in the Theatre's board room which houses the Tuesday Supper series, the Alley will present penthouse Theatre's Late show featuring the Petite Paisian Chanteuse Denise Le-Burn in "Lebrun Lifesize". A protege of the late Edith Piaf, Miss LeBurn has performed at such renowned Paris music halls as the Olympia, Bobino and the Moulin Rouge. She has participated in numerous concert tours and music festivals throughout Europe and has appeared on television in Paris, Berlin, Munich, Brussels, Rome and Genèva.

In contrasting style and subject matter, Niccolo Machiavelli's "The Root of the Mandrake" will open on the Alley's Intimate Arena State January 19, and will play though February 5, with two lowpriced preview performances scheduled January 17 and 18. Directed by Robert Symonds, associate director of the Lincoln Center in New York for eight years and director of last year's exciting pro-duction of Samuel Becker's "Endgame", 'Mandrake" is a delightfully bawdy of lascivious machinations in 16th century Italy. Seriousness is folly Machiavelli seems to say: one character is cuck-olded because he is a fool, another made mad by love and a third is manipulated simply because she is good. A wisely profound and hilariously funny comedy.

In announcing the contest, producingdirector Jory remarked: "The theatre has been delighted with the national attention given to last year's contest winners. The first Festival of New American Plays was so successful that we have increased the prize monies offered by $1000 and hope to double the number of entrants which last year totalled almost

The winners of ATL's first Great American Play Contest were Frederick Bailey's "The Bridgehead" and Marsha Norman's "Getting Oout" which have just completed runs at Actors Theatre as part of the Festival of New American Plays. Scripts submitted to the 1977 Great American Play Contest are not eligible.

New Opree To Resume On Jan. 7

ODESSA (Special)-The Odessa Brand New Opree, the Globe Theatre's beautiful stage show of country western entertainment will resume January 7 with an exciting lineap of talent. Because of the large number of entertainers slated to kickoff the new season, the show will begin at 7 p.m. ard run for about three and one-half hours it stead of two.

The Oddessa New Opree has skyrocketed in popularity throughout the region since its inception in the fall of 1975. Seats to the production are coveted as it plays to "standing room only" audiences.

The country music show is in direct contrast with the 16th century atmosphere of the Shakespearean theatre which is becoming known as the family entertainment center of West Texas with its year-round season of plays - musicals, comedies, educational and religious plays, as well as the Odessa Shakespeare Festival in the summer. The Odessa Brand New Opree is presented on Saturday nights when plays are not scheduled.

The "Ol' Frenz", group of talented businessmen, will return for their second appearance at the center stage spot, after numerous requests from the Opree audience. This band has performed professionally for a number of years for parties and private clubs. Members are Odessans Mike Spinks, manager of American Music Company (keyboard); Bob Trenchard, attorney (guitar); Al Davis attorney (harmonica); Dave Waters, American Music Company employee (lead guitar/lead vocalist); and their drummer, Lucky Floyd, who is music director for the Iraan public

"Just Plain Country," a newly formed band of young people will entertain from the balcony stage. Members are Odessans Rene Trolinder (singer); David Baker (lead guitar); Randy Dennis (bass); Mike Smith (drummer) and Ron Cole (steel guitar) who hails from Seminole

Cindy Lawrence Riggs, 18-year-old singer, is a freshman at Odessa College, cheerleader, and talent winner in the 1976 Miss West Texas Scholarship Pageant. Cindy was a member of the OHS choir and a girls ensemble "Renditions" for three years. She has performed for the Opree on several occasions

Randy and Rhonda Bucy, an Odessa father and daughter team, have antertained at the Opree with gospel music in the past. However, this week they will be singing country western tunes.

Christi Daniels, of Pecos, will be making her Globe debut. She recorded "In Love Again," "I'm So Afraid of Losing You Again," "You are My Everything" and "Touch my Heart" for Butter sound records

Twelve year old Lee Bir singing in the Globe for the first time this week. He will be accompanied by Billy D. Dueslar, well-known local singer, guitarist and banjo who will also be asked to entertain as a single.

"Cowtown Night," a double-header show set for January 14 features a bonanza of all professional talant from Fort Worth - "Tumblin' Creek," "Bill Brewer and The Bandera Express," "The Norwoods" (Gospel singers), Ty and LaRaye Kelly, and Ron Di Uilio, singer/pianist who directed the Louisiana Hayride for five years have been booked to date. The first show will begin at 6:30 p.m. and the second at 9:30 p.m.

Claudine Longet, Mountain Community Fashion Truce 'Of Sorts

By DEBORAH FRAZIER
ASPEN, Colo. (UPI) — Claudine Longet and the mountain community she calls home have fashioned a truce in the

Miss Longet and her three children from her marriage to singer Andy Williams live quietly in a Victorian-style home a few blocks from downtown. Other parents chat with the French-born singer at the ice hockey practices her two sons, Christian, 13, and Bobby, 8, attend. Greetings have replaced cold stares when Miss Longet shops or lunches in town ty after the chaos brought by the March 21, 1976, slaying and her trial, but she knows the $1.3 million damage suit Sabich's parents filed against her will prevent the case from remaining closed. In addition, a recent television series titled "Aspen" raised community hackles anew. And a book Miss Longet is writing about the trial will not strengthen her truce with the privacy-loving town.

By being charged in the shooting death of the former World Pro ski champion, Miss Longet, 36, shattered the solitude and wholesome image long-cherished by

The former mining town was a sanctuary where celebrities such as singer John Denver, actress Jill St. John and actor Jack Nicholson could dine, drink and ting off a salute of flash bulbs.

The shooting, the trial and the resultant one-month jail sentence brought hordes of reporters to the town and tarnished Aspen's image as a clean-living but sophisticated community.

Sabich, 31, was a local hero beloved for his charm and skiing prowess. Miss Longet and her children had lived with him in his elegant, $250,000 home for two years prior to his shooting, an arrangement the world outside Aspen found tended image melt. The area's reputation as a drug capital saw new life.

Aspen residents saw their carefully

By the time the January, 1977, trial opened, jury selection required a week because many of the prospective panel-ists had already decided Miss Longet was guilty as charged of criminally negligent

Reporters from all over the world came into Aspen for the trial, descending on residents already short-tempered by earlier publicity and made sullen by record low snowfalls.

The night after Miss Longet was found guilty of a lesser charge, local suggestions for sentencing included lynching and burning at the stake. She was given a onemonth jail term, which she served in Sabichs parents filed the suit against Miss Longet the day before she completed the jail sentence. Proceedings are stalled awaiting a ruling on whether the medical test results can be used.

The prospect of another trial is a miserable one for Miss Longet. Ron Austin, her attorney, said an out-of-court settlement would be considered at the appropriate time.

She, like most Aspen residents, would like to forget the 1976 slaying and the 1977 trial. But her book, due for completion in 1978, will help keep the issue alive and prevent a permanent peace between the former Las Vegas showgirl and many residents.

Black rolls 5-1. How should be play? ANSWER TO BACKGAMMON PROBLEM

Black is far ahead in the race. The "automatic" move is bring home the two from Black's outer board, so that Black can start bearing off with his next roll.

That would certainly be the right move if White did not have a man on the Black would have nothing to fear and he could go about his business witha care in the world. But with a man on the bar, Black's concern must be safety, for White has a formidable board. If Black leaves a blot in bearing If and gets hit, he could easily lose the game.

I Black brings both men home from his outer board, he would leave a shot at next turn were he to roll 6-6, 5-5, 6-5, 6-4, or 6-3. And even if he avoided leavshot at his next turn, his harzards would increase with subsequent rolls. Black do anything about it? Yes. He can break his 6-point, playing the men to his 5-and 1-points. Now, the only number that would leave a shot at Mack's next turn would be 6-1. Assuming that White does not come in, Black resid then play the 6 to his 1-point and the man from his 2-point to his 1-point for the 1. To hit the Black blot, White would have to roll specifically 6-1 at his best turn, and that is 17 to 1 against. And that will probably be the only chance

Even within the Yiddish theater's tradition of adding scenes and songs, there seldom can have been a production quite like that mounted for the New York Shakespeare Festival by Joseph Chaikin.

This version of "The Dybbuk," translated into English by Mira Rafalowicz and adapted by her and Chaikin, opened Dec. 22 at the off-Broadway Public Theater's Newman Theater.

Chaikin's "The Dybbuk" is director's theater, in the tradition of the now defunct Open Theater, which he headed.

It is a highly formalist production, with nearly half of it taken up with Hebrew chants, psalms and prayers, and much of the spoken English given a chanted delivery. The opening scene in a yeshivah is entirely in Hebrew.

"The Dybbuk" is the story of Leah, who becomes possessed by the Dybbuk of her dead love, the cabalist Chanon, as she is about to marry another man. The dybbuk is exorcised, but Leah dies as she is reunited with Chanon in death.

Chaikin is fascinated by the superstition with which Hebrew life became inand Russia. His production emphasizes the traditions, the old wives' tales, Chanon's obsession with seeking the good that he feels must lie in evil. Chaikin has rearranged the scenes of the play and their content considerably

For a non-Hebrew audience, the show fails to work as it should. There is too. much religious ritual and reference, too much unnecessary moving of the stylized set; having the Dybbuk's words spoken in unison by Leah and the dead Chanon seen onstage is irritating rather than hyp-

Frustration Led To Formation Of Women's Bank

By WILLIAM ADLER

RICHMOND, Va. (UPI) — Attorney Sylvia Clute was frustrated because banks would not give her a loan to open a private law office — at least not without her husband's signature — so she and a friend decided to start their own bank.

On Feb. 14, only a year after Mrs. Clute and Ann Duffer made that decision, Women's Bank opened for business, one of a handful of banks organized and run by women.

Some of those banks have had serious problems, but state chartered Women's Bank showed a profit less than nine months after opening and deposits are far more than anyone expected.

"We made about $700 in both September and October, whereas most banks are in the red the first year or two," said Sally Buck, the bank president. For November the profit was $1,252.

Mrs. Buck had told regulatory agencies deposits of $1.8 million were anticipated by the end of the first year, but said, "We currently have $3.8 million in deposits, well ahead of the projection and our private hopes."

The early success of Women's Bank seems incongruous in Virginia, a conservative state that balked at women's sufferage and that refuses to adopt the Equal Rights Amendment?

"The secret is we have enjoyed grass roots support from the community ever since we began," Mrs. Buck said. "We feel there are a great many women whose needs are not met by conventional banks, and Richmonders have been proving us right."

Women's Bank had difficulty setting loan policy because there was not a long history of other women's banks to rely on, but Mrs. Buck said basically conventional banking practices are followed. Women's Bank is not likely to give special treatment to women who apply for loans.

"That would be a mistake. We would not be inclined to offer a loan to a woman with no prior experience in her line of business, or if a firm could not put up some of its own money for a venture."

But unlike other Richmond banks, Women's Bank does not require husbands to cosign loans. Barbara Shocket, an original director, said there are no special promises to women except a fair hearing on "The bank treats women as individuals, and that's really all women want," she said.

Mrs. Buck recalled the frustration Mrs. Clute, 33, felt when five banks rejected her loan application and a sixth said yes only when her husband co-

"Neither her potential nor her prior earning power as a lawyer for Reynolds Metals carried any weight," Mrs. Buck said. "She was young, married, had three small children and little net worth — all negative factors in standard credit rating."

negative factors in standard credit rating.

After making the decision in February of 1976 to start a bank, Mrs. Clute and Mrs. Duffer recruited 49 organizers, including four men, and a dedicated all-woman board of directors with good community contacts.

They also recruited Mrs. Buck, who had just retired as senior vice president of Citizens Trust Bank in Portsmouth, Va., after 33 years in banking. Half of an offering of 100,000 shares of common stock was sold in just two months.

The stock, offered at $10 a share, rose to $13 after three months

"People really started believing in us as our office took shape," said Mrs. Clute, who still serves on the board with Mrs. Duffer, "Now we have over 3,000 stockholders, and most are ordinary people."

New Tourist Thrill: Up, Up, Away In Flowery Balloon

By ALINE MOSBY
PARIS (UPI) — Travel has become an ordinary affair. Everybody's been there. Tourists want to do something different these days instead of retreading the same museums and beaches, mused Buddy Bombard in New York one day.

Tourists have seen the sights of faraway lands by automobile, excursion steamer, bicycle, on horseback or camelback, etc. - but how about balloons? Bombard, an amateur balloonist, already owned an 85-foot hot air balloon, a beauty painted with flowers. He previously had organized boat trips on the rapids of the Grand Canyon and charter flights

Organizing the balloon tour was more difficult. Air authorities of Spain and Italy took a dim view of his project. But he easily won permission from authorities in France, where the balloon was invented by the Montgolfier brothers in the 18th century, to bring groups of U.S. tourists here by plane and then take them sightseeing up, up and away in his flow-

So this autumn farmers and villagers around France were treated to the sight of American tourists floating overhead, cameras around necks, guidebooks clutched in hands.

"Travel has become just transportation,"-reflected Bombard in Paris as he saw the last of his tourists off on a plane to the United States.

"The heart doesn't beat as much as it used to. Everybody's been there. But by balloon, sightseeing is different. These days you have to give tourists something to do when they get there:"

Furthermore, he went on, "The local people are jaded" in most countries about foreign tourists. But not the French, who saw visitors dropping from the skies into their fields and villages.

"What we did was drop in - literally - on French families," continued Bombard. "They couldn't believe what was happening. We had an incredible reaction from farmers who kept smiling and laughing when our balloon, printed all over with colored flowers, would float down near them.

"One day almost 200 people surrounded us. They could see us approaching and they jumped in their cars and came from all over the area. One man asked me to kiss his baby.

"Another fellow came up to us in the Champagne country with bottles of his own champagne. We made lots of toasts.

"It was a tremendous way to relate Americans to French people.

"A man from Texas in our group had been to Paris before, in fact about half the group had visited France before, and his idea of the French was the Parisians. He could not believe the warmth and friendliness of the people outside Paris.

"Not one farmer was upset if we landed in his field. We were careful to float over crops and land on fallow land or where a crop already had been housested. We sicked fields with an extent."

harvested. We picked fields with no cows."

Bombard took two groups of tourists from all over the United States on his 12-day New York-Paris package trips ($2,689). He organized 39 hour-long sightseeing balloon flights for each 12-day trip, with two passengers at a time in his balloon and two in a second rented balloon with a French pilot.

While four members of the group took turns ex-ploring the countryside by air, the others followed in a bus to be on hand with bottles of champagne when the balloon landed.

Bombard promised to organize more balloon trips to France next year. He also plans to show tourists Bali and Nepal from tree-top level.

The Caribbean: A World Of Perpetual Discovery

(EDITOR'S NOTE — It's something akin to climbing a mountain because it's there, the reason he spent the better part of seven mon ≥ sailing the Caribbean. But what he found of himself and others, of the islands intruding on the sea, of the many moods of the sea itself, left no need for a reason and made flotsam of any travel brochure.)

By SID MOODY

DOWN ISLAND (AP) — The Caribbean, a world of perpetual discovery. By Arawak Indians, Columbus, Conrad Hilton, Blackbeard, Teddy Roosevelt's Rough Riders, Horatio Nelson, Papa Doc, spice planters, Capt. William "Breadfruit" Bligh, the seven-day, six-night package tour, Sir Francis Drake, Princess Margaret, American Express, Ernest Hemingway, Fidel, cruise ships and slave ships, Rosalynn Carter, goats, Lafcadio Hearne, the Boeing 747, the U.S. Marines, Planters Punch, Napoleon's Josephine, cola companies and uncola companies.

And me.

It is dark outside, black as a vampire's heart. A gale. Waves crash against the hull, my wife says, like baseball bats. Somewhere off Hispaniola. We reduce sail to a minimum, go below, close up the cabin and people. A cat struggles for herself. Boats can be stronger than people. A sailor's thought, unspoken: why are we here?

Because, a year before, I had made my annual complaint, why do we endure another Ice Age when we could be in the Caribbean, sailing? Put up or shut up, chides our 20-year-old son. Now he's putting up, trying to get some sleep while hanging on to his bunk on our 36-foot wooden sloop-rigged cutter Dixie.

right. You can't get to the Antilles from Florida, our chosen point of departure, without bashing 1,200 miles into the trade winds which blow unimpeded all the way from Africa pushing statuesque rollers ahead of them.

Blam! The jib blows out like a cannon shot. The crusiing guides had been

But we've seen the pictures, heard the tales. The islands beckon. So we bash. Hope another jib holds and bash.

The Lesser Antilles begin beyond Puerto Rico and curve symmetrically like luxuriant stepping stones all the way to Trinidad and Tobago on the South American coast. A distance of some 650 miles. Islands are almost always in sight.

As one sinks in the creamy wake astern, fading from green to hazy gray, another focuses up ahead, first a distant silhouette, then a prodding, craggy sawblade of peaks. As the boat charges through cresting blue seas, the outline softens. Green jungles and palm groves become distinct, cascading down the slopes.

Then into port. Sometimes a fishing village with pastel boats drawn up on the beach, tawny nets drying under the palms and lanky dogs seeking shade beneath thatched huts. Or a harbor, a banana boat loading from rusting tinroofed dockside warehouses. An ancient block and tackle creakily swinging cargo of bottled gas or soft drinks or rum or a car aboard a high-prowed interisland sloop. And pink houses and brown stone churches rising into an amphitheater of hills.

Romance twines like invisible vines around the remains of Nelson's old dockyard at English Harbor, Antigua, where British men-of-war came to repair their wound. It is race week and modern yachts are tied to the old mooring rings of the ancient stone quay. In the moonlight a steel band pulses by the shadowy ruins of the Launch House. Romance has not died. My clearance papers for Guadeloupe identify me as "Master of yacht Dixie, 7½ tons burthen, mounting no cannon, bound for ..."

Sails reefed to the trades, we plunge though 10-foot seas toward Dominica, obscured in haze. Two fishermen in their small open boat disappeared here two weeks ago. Beneath us, hundreds of fathoms down, lie the rotting hulks of Comte de Grasse's battle fleet, victims of Admiral Rodney's brilliant maneuvering in the pivotal Battle of the Iles des Saintes in 1782.

The island itself is savagely rugged and inaccessible. It takes the bus more than three hours to grunt over the labyrinthian road between the two principal towns of Portsmouth and Roseau though they are only 20 miles apart. Way up the mountains in the slate gray clouds it rains almost constantly. On the windward side is the last stand of the once cannibalistic Carib Indians who wrested the islands from the peaceful Arawaks. Outlandish fauna abounds in the dark jungle. Huge land crabs. Two-pound frogs — crapauds — served by the whole side as a delicacy called "mountain chicken." A retired white couple was burned to death here, reportedly in a ritual murder.

Or that is the promise as Dixie bucks into the steep, confused seas of the Anegada Passage beyond the Virgins. Dawn breaks. Is that St. Martin ahead, its purple peaks almost a duplicate of the cresting waves? Yes, for there's Saba to starboard, a coolie hat of an island, an extinct volcano rising abruptly out of the sea. On course. Discovery begins.

Anguilla. Low, dusty, lazing in the sun. The constable who doubles as customs drowses behind a desk. "We're here." "I see you are." He doesn't even want to check our passports. A couple driving a pickup stop of their own accord. "Going to town? Hop in." All five of us. Angilla, the mouse that roared, had few cars, no roads, no electricity before rebelling against independence nine years ago. Now it does. The British Army couldn't stage a proper peace-keeping occupation without proper communications.

Threading on through foaming rocky islets into a quiet anchorage on Isle de Fourchue, barren but for wisps of brown grass and innumerable clumps of barrel cactus, their noses blooming red. Horned billy goats bleat defiance from rocky outcrops at intruders. Jolyon Byerley has written in a cruising guide: "For some reason, people always take their clothes off here. Maybe it's the solitude." Two young women on the only other boat lather their hair then dive, nude, overboard.

St. Bart's nearby, lashed by a gale, palm fronds rathing fiercely, waves being hurled up the steadfast cliffs. French now, once Swedish. Perhaps, says an American retired there, the only white tropical island in the world. An occasional Breton headdress bobs along the stone walls separating the treeless hill-side pastures. The village of Gustavia, the capital almost encircles the tiny harbor. Up on the hill, under a huge Tricolor, Madame La Perfecture asks only who's aboard. "Ah. un famille."

Slavery has left a mark that varies from island to island. There are no snakes, for instance, on St. Barts. "Planters," an American explains, "couldn't make a go here. Too dry. Other islands, they imported the fer-de-lance snake to discourage runaways. Here, no slaves, no runaways hence no fer-de-lances."

Nevis, a green cone two miles off the desert-like windward tip of St. Kitts, is another example of this abrupt diffshopping appy people. A cab driver loans my wife $10 to do her shopping. Another sees us loadingd." H jugs from a community spiggot. "Don't use that. It's bad." He drives home with our jugs.

En route to Montserrat we pass Ile Redonda, a solitary, forbidding, naked rock shouldering 1,000 feet out of the restless sea. Awed, I give it more sea noom than necessary.

Under the trees along a black sand beach on Montserrat the raw wood of a huge schooner a building glows a dull candle-flame yellow.

NAME:----SCORE:-----

SCORE: 0-14 Excellent, 15-22 Good, 23-27 Fair, Over 27 Poor. Correct Answer on Page 9-E The island is a garden where terrain permits. Unimaginably sweet grapefruit. The major supplier of Rose's Lime Juice. Yet it is desperately poor. Fruit abounds for the picking, but staples meagerly line the shelves in dark little shops. Sun and fresh air make the poverty tolerable. We anchor off a fishing village by the Layou River halfway down the leeward side of the island and portage the dinghy up the round-rock rapids where bare-breasted women are doing their laundry. We bathe by a bamboo grove. One of the women approaches. "You swine," she says.

Only 18 miles away is another world, Martinique, a department of France with glass high-rises, chic women, men at sidewalk cafes reading their papers over aperitifs, traffic jams. At the northern end of the island Mount Pelee rises in verdant repose, its peak just snagging the fleecy clouds blowing past in the trades. In 1902 Pelee erupted killing all 30,000 inhabitants of St. Pierre at its base save one, a convict jailed in a deep cell. We anchor there for the night, uneasily. On Pelee's other side we struggle up a torrent-filled arm-wide gorge into a high cave where a waterfall thunders from a cleft with a swatch of distant sky and jungle growth visible beyond. We dive into the pool and drink the cool water.

Another leap through thrashing seas to St. Lucia. The boat has earned our trust now. It is home, but more than that. It serves us, and we serve it, in common toil, together. Dixie, wood and metal, has grown a spirit, is one of us.

We are in the rhythm of the islands now. The larder is a polyglot of cans of French guava juice from Guadeloupe, Irish stew from Liverpool, Dutch powdered milk, hash from New Zealand and fresh breadfruit, a descendant of the seedlings brought from Tahiti by Captain Bligh on his second try.

We moor in St. Lucia stern to a palm on the crescent beach between the vertical flanks of the Pitons that soar more than 2,500 feet into the stars. Three men lead their goats home through the night, lighting their way with torches of dry palm fronds. For various reasons three yachts in the last year have sunk in the deeps off the Pitons.

Far at sea off the windward side of St. Vincent fishermen in tiny open boats much like the old log canoes of the Caribs troll in heavy seas, disappearing in the troughs. One man bails constantly with a calabash gourd. One canoe whose outboard failed was rescued 30 days later off Venezuela.

Porpoises spot us. They come leaping down the waves like schoolboys after an ice cream wagon to dart to and fro in our bow wave. The sport palls, and theyleave.

The fishing reel whirs shrilly. Clarke, our son, asleep off watch, leaps to the rod and boats a 36-inch wahoo. We eat it for three days: steaks, then salad and finally chowder.

In the 1760s a Dr. Young started a botanical garden in Kingstown, St. Vincent, to supply berbs for his practice. It is now one of the glories of the Caribbean. A

In the 1760s a Dr. Young started a botanical garden in Kingstown, St. Vincent, to supply herbs for his practice. It is now one of the glories of the Caribbean. A guide snips samples from the trees for us to smell: fresh ginger, mace, nutmeg, allspice, cinnamon, bay leaves. The islands are a bouquet of fragrance. Cognaclike fumes of 15-year-old rum on a plantation on Martinique. Mountain chicken frying in the kitchen. Jasmine perfuming the evening.

The names, too, have an aura. Center of the World Rock in the Bahamas. End of the World Reef, a constantly sea-foamed necklace of coral menace, in the Grenadines. Kick 'Em Jenny, the heaving channel north of Grenada. Saltwhistle Bay. Cannouan, an island where a turtle fisherman named Benny Snagg befriends us. Benny knows the indifferent sea like Hemingway's old man, but does he know what snow is? "Uh, unhuh," he says. Then, coming clean: "Well, I should, but I don't."

The moon nudges aside the ghostly clouds above Admiralty Bay, Bequia, silvering the shoreline like a crystal chandelier. The Association, three youthful troubadors in a rowboat, ease alongside and sing "Islands in the Sun," keeping time by drumming softly on a coffee can and the sides of the boat.

The hurricane season is approaching, and we begin listening to the evening weather on Radio Antilles. "Conditions are unfavorable for the formation of tropical disturbances tonight and tomorrow," is as far as they commit themselves

Unlike American stations, "The Big RA" has a definite tinge to its news, keeping in tune with the slight socialistic orchestration of the island governments. No party in the former English colonies, whatever its philosophy, can survive without including the word Labor somewhere in its title.

The Big RA broadcasts from Montserrat, along with Anguilla an island that is not seeking complete independence from London, which handles their foreign and defense matters. The blessings of independence seem largely emotional for the English-speaking islands dependent solely on tourism and the yield of fertile fields and groves.

How islands that can scarcely support a road system can expect to afford independence is a serious question. What with sky-high import duties, cars cost upwards of $10,000 and soon rattle like ill-tuned steel bands from bucking through the pot holes. The French legacy in general and in roads in particular is more advanced. Of course, in the old days Britannia usually ruled the waves, so the French had to build efficient roads to trundle their cannon about fighting off the encircling English ships-of-the-line.

Ah, the French. A Gallic couple own an inn on Union Island in the Grenadines that straddles the path to the landing strip. They resent intruders. Madame only grudgingly deigns to sell us ice, ice, along with seashells, being an almost daily quest. We order sandwiches in a nearby restaurant which in turn orders them from a supermarket down the road.

An afternoon squall pelting from bruise-colored clouds sweeps over the southern tip of Grenada. Two blond boys who have been living for a year with their American parents on a yacht in a deserted cove take shelter in tiny caves, grinning mischievously like cherubs carved in a Gothic church facade. The exquisite beach is a playground all to themselves.

We have been heading "down island," as they say, to 11 degrees 58 minutes

North latitude, 718 miles from the Equator. We round Grenada and, looking back more than once, head "up island."

The last leg is 340 miles across the Gulf Stream to Charleston, S.C. After 6,000 miles in a 36-foot boat there are no heroes. Quarters are too close to hide the warts, even in a family. But now we know each other as individuals, not just family figures. This, too, is a voyage of discovery.

Landfalls early on tensed my gut. There have been too many since for that.

Sextant sights of the North Star, the Moon and the Sun indicate we will pick up a sea buoy at 3:40 p.m. local time. I don't wait but go below for a nap. We are five minutes and a mile and a half off.

We slip in from the sea past Fort Sumter, mingling with homeward bound day sailors. The next day U.S. Customs comes aboard for routine paperwork. The inspector spots a lemon in the vegetable bin, a small hammock.

"That'll have to go," he says. "Uncle Sam don't 'low no foreign fruit flies."

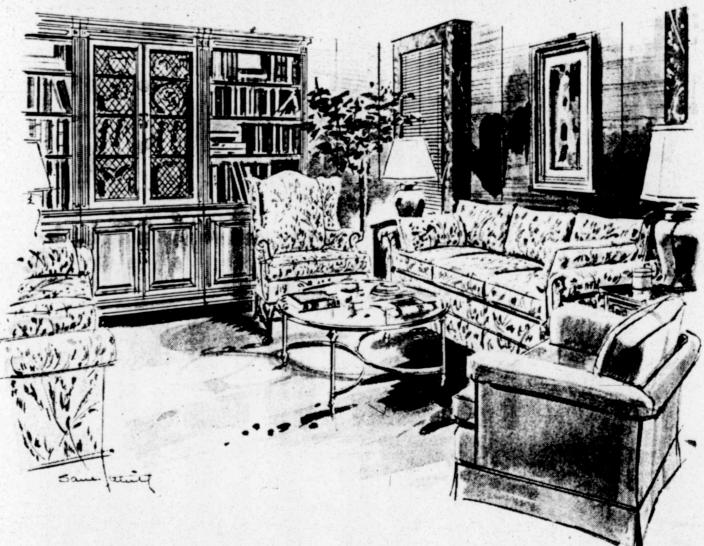

"Oh darn," says my wife, "I was going to squeeze it on the fruit salad."

"Fruit salad? That goes, too."

Home is the sailor.

New Look At Army: Charlie Company Revisited

(Editors: UPI Pentagon cerrespondent Rebert Kaylor visited Fort Bragg, N.C., to look at the all-voluntier Army. To see what GI life is like today, he spent a day and night in the same barracks of the 82nd Airborne Division where he served as a private prior to the Vietnam war. Here is his re-

By ROBERT KAYLOR

FORT BRAGG, N.C. (UP!) - What used to be the mess hall is now a"dining facility" with real china dishes instead of tin trays. No one blinks if a private brings a beer to lunch and the ordered rows of double deck bunks are

The barracks have been remodeled and divided into two-man rooms. There are drapes on the windows and Playboy centerfolds on the walls. Individual touches like a fishnet hanging from the ceiling to break up the drab green

Somebody's stereo is playing down the hall and it seems more like a college dormitory than Charlie Company, a military unit under orders to be ready to go to war anywhere within 18 hours.

To a civilian who servd here before the era of the all-volunteer Army, surface differences are startling enough, but some changes go deeper than cos-

Bitter m e m o r i e s of "McNamara's 500,000" and Vietnam have receded. You don't hear career soldiers called by the derogatory term "lifer" any more. The 18 to 21-year old soldiers here today have all joined the Army will-

Still; some of the gripes, first heard about army life "when Christ was a corporal," will probably never change.

"The Army's all right," says Spec. 4 James Pearce, a 19-year-old machine gunner, leaning back on his bunk. "Some things are screwed up and some people in it are screwed up, but once you get around them it's okay.

Fort Bragg is the home of gung-ho paratroopers who say "All the way, sir," when they salute. As the second biggest military base in the United States with 38,000 troops, it also provides a cross section of the all-volunteer Army. c Charlie Company is in a week of guard duty and work details with some military training squeezed around the edges. It doesn't have much of the adventure the Army glamorizes to lure recruits. It's the way a GI here spends a third of his time The day starts with wakeup at 6 a.m. - a tap on the door nowadays and not a teethjarring kick on the end of the bunk. Outdoors for an hour of physical training, muscle-numbing "log drill" with each eight men matched up to a 300-pound length of Carolina pine to be tossed in the air, followed by a fastpaced run of up to four miles. Four troopers of Charlie's approximately 170 miss the P.T. formation. One is an "AWOL" who has gone absent without leave before but the other three are still in the barracks. Nobody bothers to chase them out. The AWOL, if he ever appears again, is on his way to a court-martial and probable discharge. But the Army doesn't push as hard on discipline for less serious offenses these days. The other three will get what one GI calls "a tap on the wrist" — some informal evening calisthenics — if it's a first offense. "KP," the 16-hour day of cleanup duty in the kitchen that the average GI used to expect about once a month, is also a thing of the past in today's peacetime environment. It's now done by civilian hired help.

"It was a concession to the modern volunteer army a few years ago," says Lt. Col. James Arthur, the battalion commander. "It was an irritant, and it

Other encroachments of today's society are the unclad pinups that grace many rooms, although occasionally generations clash.

"The colonel came through a couple of weeks ago, took one look and I guess he got mad," a private first class said of a photo of a well-endowed model that leaves nothing to the imagination. "He told me 'She's got to go. We've got to draw the line someplace.'

Still on the wall, it will presumably be placed out of sight for the colonel's

Charlie Company's men keep their rooms clean and take turns at latrine duty, but there's not as much late night shining up of the barracks and ceaseless inspections as in former years. "Knowing how to spit shine your boots isn't enough to get you promoted now if you get lost in the woods," says Sgt. Broderick Crump

There's more emphasis on physical conditioning. Troops are on the rifle range as often as four times a year. GI's take a test on military knowledge each year and commanders say they are seeking to make field exercises more demanding. Live ammunition is often used, with artillery sometimes fired "danger close" a few hundred yards away to create as much as possible of the feel of actual combat. In one incident last year a group of several officers was accidentally wounded by mortar shrapnel. Everyone agrees that was too close, but the idea is to "get away from the flagpole" and push the extra mile for realism. "The field is most important and if they know what they're doing out there, I won't bug them too much in garrison," says a senior officer.

Some things don't ever change in the Army despite the new look. Standing in line. Hurry up and wait. The feeling that what you're told to do is just so much

Spec. 4 Aubrey Butts, 19, of Elizabethtown, N.C., makes a wry face on learning he'll spend the afternoon picking a zigzag course through the woods to find small stakes planted in the ground with only a compass as his guide. "It's repetitive, it's boring," complains Butts. "I've gone through this thing three times in the last year." Boredom is what some commanders regard as their worst enemy. Arthur sees it as no coincidence that his battalion's AWOL rate tripled to about 6 per cent during a slack period last summer.

In an effort to keep things new and challenging, the Army now flies units to other bases for training. Charlie Company has been as far afield as Panama and

But there isn't much way to make work details interesting. "Getting over" escaping by hiding in a wall locker, going on sick call or finding some legitimate excuse — remains a game that is played by some GI's.

For those of Charlie's men who get caught in a nighttime parachute issue and recovery detail, it means reporting hours early and then waiting. First at the battalion supply office, then at a parachute warehouse at the airport, and finally out on the drop zone until the jump takes place around 10 p.m. There's about five hours wait with nothing to do and a total of 20 minutes work.

Sgt. James Pinnix, 27, of Pittsburgh, Pa., thought when he joined up he was headed for an advanced carpentry school that would have put him in line for faster promotions. Instead he's in the woods with a rifle, his face daubed with black and green camouflage paint.

"I guess the recruiter handed me some bull," said Pinnix. But he's made sergeant in his first three years — it used to take about twice that long — and is thinking about reenlisting when his hitch is up next year.

"It's all in playing the game," he said. "Do as you're told. Be where you're supposed to when you're supposed to. And the money's not bad after you get some rank."

A 21-year-old Spec. 4 — the same thing as a corporal — agrees. "You can leave the Army with money in the bank and a good car," he says.

But if you're low-ranking and have a family, like about one-third of today's enlistees, the raises that have helped higher ranks move abreast of civilian pay in the . st six years don't help much.

Pfc. John LaFavor, 19, of Tampa, Fla., grosses about $750 a month, including allowances for housing and food. After income taxes, rent of $135 for a house trailer off the post, gas, electricity and other monthly bills, he and his wife have about $200 left to eat and live on.

LaFavor's eight-year-old car has just given up and he can't afford the $35 de-posit for a telephone he's supposed to have so he can be called in case of an alert. He's been married six months and doesn't have children, but if he did he might be on such welfare assistance as food stamps, as some GI's are. Barbara, his wife, isn't very happy about Army life although she convinced her husband to enlist. 'John couldn't keep on at the technical school he was enrolled in and he didn't have much of a steady job, so there really wasn't much choice," she says. Lt. Gen. Volney Warner, who commands all the troops at Fort Bragg, says the Army is going to face stiffer competition for personnel, particularly if the economy improves. Warner and other Army commanders are urging a package of benefits aimed at keeping young people: "I've had too many young soldiers tell me they can't afford to go the second three years." "There are 4,800 government housing units on Fort Bragg and 38,000 sol-diers," he says. "It's the young marrieds who can least afford it that are on the bottom of the waiting list and are forced out into the rental market off post.' The number of women in Army ranks is steadily growing and there are fem-ales at Fort Bragg who have been through parachute training, although recently women were removed from the few jobs they had been assigned in the 82nd

"We don't want them in the division because of some of the situations it might find itself in in combat," says Warner. "How long we'll be able to keep

Spec. 5 Sharon Lewis, 24, of Chicago, a cook in a headquarters unit on the post who plans an Army career, doesn't rule out the possibility of a combat job. "If it were left up to me I'd say no, just like a lot of guys would," she says.

"But if I was told to, I'd do it without making any big deal about it." Women still have a long ways to go for full acceptance even in behind-thelines jobs. "There's no way they can handle the heavy equipment," says a crusty warrant officer who runs a parachute warehouse A young soldier tells how women in his parachute training class were given less strenuous P.T. classes. "They should have given them smaller jump wings than the rest of us when we graduated," he says. Capt. Scott Daniel, 29, has a shelf full of books on drug abuse in his office and he's read them all, but says there hasn't been a single case involving hard drugs in the year that he's commanded Charlie Company.

WOOSTER, Ohio (AP) - Randy Hinerman is student of the year in the horse technology program at Ohio State University's Agricultural Technical Institute.

Answer to Puzzle on Page 8-E

Less than a year away from earning an associate degree in horse management from the two-year school, he can bridle, harness, boot, exercise, jump and show a horse with the best of budding horse

The only difference between him and the rest of those in the program is that Hinerman has cerebral palsy and has little use of his left arm and leg. "I can tell you when Randy earned my respect - the very first day he started here," says Duane Thomas, program coordinator. "It was so cold that day, about half the kids didn't show up. When the other two faculty members and I got to the barns it was 7 a.m., and there was Randy, sweeping the floor.

HY GARDNER HAS THE ANSWER:

Glad You Asked That!

Q: You recently mentioned that Henry Winkler's mother wears a T-shirt identifying her as "Fonzie's Mother." Isn't this likely to start a new fad - other mothers of stars, proud to flaunt their son's or daughter's success? - Mrs. B. Delray, Youngstown, Ohio.

A: Could be. If they're as extroverted as Mrs. Winkler or Jacqueline Stallone. Jackie's already modeling a robe emblazoned words "Rocky's Mom" across her

Q: Is it true that George (Stavors) Savalas once drove a cab in Hollywood? If so, why did he quit? - A Greek Fan. Oakland

PROUD OF SON-Jacqueline Stallone wears a robe that identifies her as "Rocky's Mom." With her is her voice coach, Lenore Steven.

A: After surviving action as a U.S. Navy air gunner, Kojak's brother found hacking even more dangerous. Especially after a fellow hackie was murdered by a mugger concealed in the rear of his cab. He decided he'd rather return to his first love, acting. Which he enjoyed doing in grammer school, later at naval training station and still later attending drama classes.

Q: What was the title of Elvis Presley's first record on the Sun Label? - Matilda R., Memphis.

A: "That's All Right, Mama."

Q: They looked and sounded so much alike, I wonder, weren't Lou Costello and Mayor LaGuardia related? -Marie Castalucci, Staten Island, N.Y.

A: No. Though both were of Italian extraction, wre look-and-sound-alikes and even close friends. When LaGuardia first ran for mayor, Costello volunteered to mount the soap box and electioneer for him. "I appreciate it, Lou," fiery Fiorello said, "but I don't think it's good for an actor to get into politics. It's such a rough and filthy business. And besides, the only chance I get to relax is watching you. So I'd appreciate it if you didn't campaign for me!

Q: Is Tom Ewell so friendly with Fred, the Cockatoo in "Baretta," he even takes the bird home with him on weekends? - Robin Smith, Indianapolis.

A: Definitely not! "Tom hates that bird," Robert Blake says. "When we use a stand-in for Fred (a nice, dull bird) Tom will let him sit on his shoulder. But if it's Fred, he just says, 'Let somebody else do this trick." Countered Ewell: "Fred's a mean bird. He bit the hell oput of Robert, so he's always trying to foist him off on me." (Footnote: Before Tom Ewell costarred with Marilyn Monroe in "The Seven Year

Q: I still say that Willie Mays was one of the best showmen in baseball. Otherwise why would be keep losing his cap while chasing a fly in centerfield? - Pete Donahue, Pittsburgh.

A: "Once, years ago," he explained, "my cap flew off when I chased a fly ball. The fans loved it so much I started buying a cap that was a size smaller than what I needed. It sat on top of my head and when the wind caught it right, off it came.

Q: Why didn't our former first lady, Betty Ford, ever mention that she was once a lady bullfighter? - :s. B.D., Austin, Texas.

A: Because she wasn't. The lady bullfighter's name was the same but spelled Bette Ford. She retired from the arena in 1960 to marry John Meston, creator of TV's "Gunsmoke." They now live in New York.

Personal Recollection: Back in the '60s when the late Sn. John L. McClellan, then chairman of the Senate rackets committee, was "at war" with Jimmy Hoffa, we asked how he felt about Hoffa. "It would be foolish or unwise not to respect ability in enemies," the racketbuster answered. "You must remember that's it's no contest between the committee vs. Hoffa, either in time or money. Our budget is $400,000 annually. Hoffa's budget is without limit. I am disappointed, though, at the lack of sufficient cooperation on the part of the judiciary; their failure to measure up on cases that grew out of evidence unearthed by us. We've done pretty well, though, with those witnesses we cited for contempt. One-third were convicted." When we asked if, considering what a target McClellan was, he was ever threatened, he stoically replied: "Not really. No one is stupid enough to fool around with a U.S. Senator. I do get plenty of crank letters and sometimes crank telephone calls late at night. I don't let the calls rattle me. didn't even bother changing my number. And if I answered crackpot letters, there'd be no time left for work.

Q: My uncle, a chicken-colonel, insists Eisenhower was the first President to pilot a plane. I disagree. Wo's right? - Pvt. Bud W., Phoenix, Ariz.

A: A private can't win when he disagrees with a chicken-colonel. Ike, serving on the staff of Gen. MacArthur, learned to fly in the Philippines. On Nov. 30, 1939, he was awarded pilot's license, No. 93258.

Q: Who was it who wrote: "A critic is a newspaperman whose sweetheart ran away with an actor?" Paula Glason, Milwaukee.

A: The late Joe Laurie Jr., a vaudeville headliner, wit-about-town and columnist for Variety.

WATCHING "POP GOES THE COUNTRY" being filmed for national television syndication is like being at a circus when the clowns run up your aisle: You don't know whether to laugh, get involved in their actions or duck out of With the country music show seen by millions of viewers each week, the in-studio audience often becomes a part of the action, between watching the taping with respectful silence and applauding the performing talent. This writer managed to view a taping of the show, while attending the Earlybird Bluegrass Concert held in the Grand Ole Opry house during Opry anniversary week. The series was being filmed in the Opryland television studio (located at the rear of the Opry house) before an audience of several hundred people, while the bluegrass show was under way in the main Opry House auditorium.

RALPH EMORY, well-known WSM television and radio₀ personality, is a masterful host for the show. He combines good interviewing ability, a natural flare for showmanship, excellent camera work and top guests to produce one of the best exports ever to come out of Nashville The show I viewed turned out to be one of his best. Guest stars were Charley Pride, Merle Haggard, Leona Willams (Haggard's new lady) and Dave and Sugar (the trio responsible for such hits as "Queen of the Silver Dollar," "I've Gonna Love You," "That's the Way Love Should Be" and the latest, "Knee Deep in Loving You"). Haggard wore a long wig in one comedy

One of the most unusual aspects of the taping was the deep love for music vividly displayed by Pride. Even when the cameras were off - while technicians were getting ready for other segments and checking the film quality of previously recorded numbers - Pride kept the in-studio audience entertained by performing his old hits with his band.

IN FACT, HE sang more songs to the studio audience off-camera than he sang on-camera. It reached a point where members of the audience were calling out requests, with Pride putting all his heart and soul into top perform-

He also kept the audience in the palm of his hand by telling stories about his early life. "I used to pour cold water on my grandfather and watch him shiver," he confessed. "I also used to catch his suspenders from the back, and pull them to make them go pow. My mother used to tell me, 'I hope you have 20 kids, so you can know what you put me through."

When the laughter quieted, Pride said, "I wasn't a bad boy. I was just mischievous." Appropriately, the next song he did just for that audience was "I'm Just Me." Later when Pride learned this reporter had been present, he said, "I hope people won't mistake what you write. I'm not a mean person." Pride was informed his antics were not unlike those of other youngstes past or pre-

Still while the cameras were off, Pride told the audience, "I want to sing you two pretty new songs." He then did one called, "The Rose is for Today (But My Love is for Always") and "The Hunger." A memorable line of the latter goes, "The reflection in the mirror is not the image she remembers in her mind."

1978 Economic Outlook: More Jobs, Higher Prices

AP Business Writer
The coming year will bring jobs to thousands of unemployed Americans and continued growth for the economy, although at the cost of higher interest rates on loans and higher prices for most goods. Many of the nation's businesses, however, don't expect much respite in 1978 from the squeeze on sales and profits being caused by foreign imports. That's the picture outlined by more than two dozen businessmen, bankers and economists interviewed in a nationwide survey by The Associated Press. The corporate executives included officials of the auto, petroleum, textile, steel and agricultural-equipment industries. The survey found many expecting a decline in the nation's unemployment rate from the current 7.5 percent to 7 percent or less. Economists say the decline will occur because of a rising Gross National Product and a leveling off in productivity, requiring more workers to meet production goals. Especially optimistic employment notes were sounded by both the auto and farm-equipment sectors, despite the competition from foreign auto makers. However, those surveyed also contended that Americans will be faced with slightly higher prices-especially for food-and growing interest rates, largely as a result of the charp rise in the nation's money supply this year. The inflation estimates ranged up to 8 percent, compared with 6 percent this year. Some corporate executives said it was difficult to foresee what will happen in 1978 because of the uncertainties of foreign competition and of foreign competition and of congressional action on President Carter's various economic plans. Steel and textile executives, for example, are adamant in their conviction that

Washington must help control imports if their industries are to prosper Economists and bankers generally agree that the economy is growing fairly well. They expect a 4.5 to 5 percent annual GNP growth rate in 1978 compared with 4.7 percent in this year's third quarter. That would mean the growth rate will level off or begin to rise after dropping from 7.5 percent in this year's first

The businessmen disagreed on some specific steps that President Carter should take-tax cuts and tax reform, for examples-and they wondered whether the President and the business community can develop a wroking relationship satisfactory to businessmen.

From the interviews, these are the factors considered most likely to affect the nation's economic performance next year:

Perhaps the most optimistic view came from Lawrence Klein of Wharton Econometric Associates of Philadelphia, who was President Carter's chief economic adviser during the 1976 election campaign. He sees a drop in unemployment to around 6 percent. "We're probably getting to the point where productivity gains are smaller, which means you'll need more people for the same amount of work," he says.

Others predicted unemployment in the 6.5 to 7 percent range, dropping from this year's level despite the inroads of foreign imports on such labor-intensive industries as textiles.

General Motors Corp., the biggest auto maker, expects to set a record for employment next year, surpassing 1973's previous high.

And there is optimism among manufacturers of farm equipment, many of whom said they're rehiring employes laid off in recent years. MPBXL Corp., a major beef processor, expects a 10 percent increase in work force due to the opening of a new processing plant.

Economists offered mixed opinions on the inflation rate next year, with estimates ranging from 4 to 8 percent.

James M. Dawson, economist at National City Bank, Cleveland, expects an inflation rate near the current 6 percent, while people like William Bryan, head of the finance department at the University of Illinois, say that inflation might be as low as 4 per cent because there is enough excess plant capacity to increase production at a faster rate than the rise in demand.

"I expect compensation per worker to go up 8.5 percent, including fringes, and production to rise 2.5 percent per worker," said Dawson. "That means the unit labor cost goes up 6 percent, and you'd better look for prices to go up the

On the high side is Carl Arlt, professor of money and banking at the University of Illinois. He sees a gain as high as 8 percent, due to sharp rises in the money supply in 1977, the higher minimum wage, and increased Social Security taxes that employers will pass on to consumers.

INTEREST RATES

Interest rates on loans also are expected to climb.

"I think we're going to see short-term interest rates moderately higher by mid-1978, perhaps 1/2 to 3/4 of a percent higher than now," says William Eagleson Jr., president of Philadelphia's Girard Bank.

In all cases, economists agree the increases will be the result of continued demand for credit and increases in the nation's money supply

Adds Bruce Williams, vice president and economist for First National Bank of Atlanta: "We expect to see the prime rate on commercial loans rise from 7 3/4 percent, where it is now, to about 8 1/4 percent by mid-1978." Most other bank-

Merrill Lynch's Analysts Expect Moderate Growth

rill Lynch analysts look back for perspective on the old year and ahead at the prospects for the new

The economy grew at a brisk pace in the early months of 1977, with a 7.5 percent gain in real Gross National Product (adjusted for inflation) in the first quarter, followed by a 6.1 percent advance in the second. In the third quarter, real growth in GNP came in at a more moderate - but still quite healthy - 4.7 percent rate. This is more subdued pace reflects, in part, the outsized gains earlier in the year

Merrill Lynch economists look for continued moderate growth in real GNP for the new year, with the quarterly gains becoming progressively smaller between now and the end of 1978. At the same time, they also expect a modest uptrend in the rate of inflation, which will require careful watching if we hope to have the current expansion carry through into

Our economists also expect consumer demand to remain reasonably strong, though the consumer dollar is more likely to go toward household goods like appliances and other durables as demand for new cars tapers off. At the same time capital spending, despite many confusing reports, has moved ahead at a healthy pace all year. When the final figures are tabulated, capital spending should show a 14 percent increase (about 8 percent when adjusted for inflation) for 1977 as a whole, and a similar gain on top of that

Ovefall then, our economists believe the odds strongly favor continued expansion in 1978, though at a more subdued pace. And aside from imponderables which could alter the outlook one way or the other - most prominently, the final form of pending changes in federal taxation - they look for a rise of perhaps 4to-41/2 percent in real GNP in 1978, with inflation, on the total GNP basis, around the 6 percent mark.

While the economy made solid progress in 1977, the stock market moved in a dual pattern. Throughout the entire year, the two-tier market prevailed. And since many investors think of the market as a single entity, reflected in the performance of the Dow Jones Industrial Average, the divergent market trends have, understandably, caused some confusion.

The path of the Dow Jones in 1977 is well known. Heavilŷ influenced by top-tier stocks and by big capitalization cycli-cals, the DJIA has engaged in a long se-ries of widening trading swings which began back in 1976 and continued all through 1977. As a result of this meander-

In the season of many traditions, Mering, the score card for the year is dismal, with the DJIA at mid-December off approximately 18 percent since the start of

In contrast, the vast majority of stocks, the socalled second tier stocks, have moved along in a basic bull trend. Between July and October, this sector did have an average correction of around 10 percent, but this was a relatively minor pullback considering the strong, threeyear advance of secondary stocks as a whole. And since late October these second-tier stocks have again outperformed the top-tier. As 1977 drew to a close, the American Stock Exchange Index had climbed to a new, four year high while the NASDAQ Composite of over-thecounter stocks and Value Line and Barron's Low Priced indexes were just a few percentage points short of similar highs. These four indexes reflect the trend in secondary stocks.

Merrill Lynch's analysts continue to view these divergent trends within the market as a transitional phase designed to put the top-tier back in gear with the majority of stocks and to rebuild demand for stocks as a whole. With that accomplished, the stage should be set for the market to launch a major, "in-gear" adv ance. But before that happens, our mar ket analysts think both sectors - and es pecially the second-tier - may still re quire further correction

So, in the early months of 1978, w should probably see a continuation of th trading range market. This would prov ide the occasion for further correctio among secondary stocks while the top tier pauses to stabilize. This will result i a dull rather than climatic resolution t the transitional phase; but it is one out o which the long term bull market shoul re-emerge in earnest.

Met Producing Works Of Lotte Lehmann

The recording is from the Jan. 7, 1939, live broadcast, with Miss Lehmann as the Marschallin, Rise Stevens as Octavian. Emanuel List as Baron Ochs, Marita Farell as Sophie, and Friedrich Schorr as von Fanimal. The conductor was Artur Bod-

The recording will be available only to persons contribkting $100 or more to the Metropolitan Opera Fund.

Capital spending for plant and equipment, a key indicator of national economic health, is one area in which the impact of foreign imports and government

U.S. auto makers, battling costs to keep pace with less-expensive imports, don't plan increases in what they describe as already large annual outlays. GM says 1978 spending will remain at 1977's $3.5 billion level, itself a record. Ford Motor Co. plans to stay at $2.4 billion annually the next four years, and Chrysler Corp. sees only a slight increase next year from 1977's $700 million mark.

"Our profits had better stay at record levels because our expenditures sure as heck will. The government has given us emissions and fuel-economy tasks that guarantee it," says William Bourke, Ford's executive vice president

Most farm-equipment makers wouldn't speculate on future capital spending. A spokesman for International Harvester Co. said this major company's new spending will be very limited until sales actually improve

The ailing steel industry, hard hit by imports, needs to invest $3.5 to $4 billion a year to improve and expand production facilities, executives say, but they add that depressed 1977 earnings make it doubtful that level can be reached next

Oil companies will hold of on more spending until Congress and the President settle on an energy bill. "Future commitments to make the additional investments required by our nation's energy needs will be dependent upon the incentives provided under the national energy policy," says Maurice F. Granville, Texaco Inc. chairman.

ORDERS AND PRODUCTION The outlook is for a rise in orders and production in some industries compared with 1977, with car makers using the most builish language 'The economy is in the midst of a balanced expansion," GM Chairman Thomas Murphy says. "Thus, we are confident that the over-all economy will remain healthy, and that consumers will continue to benefit from many of the same factors that laid the groundwork for the high level of demand for new cars and trucks evidenced in the 1977-model year."

Farm-related firms are forecasting, at best, flat production and consumption next year. D.E. Ewing, financial vice president of Farmland Industries Inc., Kansas City, Mo., says, however, that his firm will try to counteract any de-

"Maybe an individual farmer's needs won't be as great, but we plan to expand into other geographic areas and more intently in areas we already cover," he says. For that reason, Farmland is predicting a production increase of about 10

The steel industry expects a 4 to 5 percent gain in consumption next year, mostly as a result of industry and government efforts to limit imports. But executives doubt that a pickup of that magnitude will be enough to restore profits and meet capital needs. U.S. Steel Corp., the nation's top steelmaker, expects domestic consumption to climb 4 million tons to 112 million tons, the prospect of foreign producers capturing 20 percent of this U.S. market remains a problem. American companies can produce about 110 million tons annually at full

INVENTORIES

Inventories are building up, indicating a lack of consumer demand. At Hesston Corp., in Hesston, Kans., Chairman Lyle E. Yost says most farmgear makers can expect a carryover of 30 to 40 percent from 1977. At Hesston, it is even worse, with a carryover of nearly 70 percent expected Haven Newton, a vice president with Fieldcrest Mills of Eden, N.C., says inventories at that home-furnishings firm are being kept at minimum levels because of the economic woes plaguing that industry. The industry learned a lesson during the 1974-1975 recession, when many companies were caught with high inventories and slumping sales, he says.

Steel producers expect that the high level of current inventories probably will result in stable prices through the first quarter, but that as inventories shrink, pressure will build for price increases. U.S. Steel has announced its intention to boost prices in the near future. LOAN DEMAND

Overall, bankers expect an increase in loan demand in 1978.

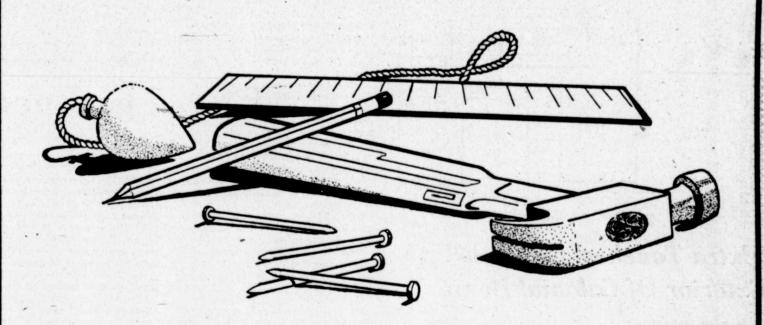

John Bunting, president of First Pennsylvania Bank, says, "I'm thinking particularly of loans to business. Corporations, after the severe recession and the period during which they weren't spending much in new plant and equipment or inventory, have worked down their liquidity. They will have to borrow."

Adds Dick Larsen, vice president and senior economist for Bank of America: "We can expect to see a 9 or 10 percent increase in commercial and industrial loans next year. Consumer loans have also been picking up at a good clip and I foresee steady growth there.'

"THE ELECTRIC SAVINGS MACHINE"

BUYING, BUILDING, REMODELING?

It's time to consider the heat pump. Southwestern Public Service Company can suggest the system that will give you the most for your energy dollar, and come up with some accurate information on installation and operating costs.

The heat pump is the electric savings machine. And usually a machine of such sensitive operation calls for a lot of space and some pretty technical installation procedures. NOT SO WITH THE HEAT PUMP! "Split systems" - most adaptable to homes - consist of an outdoor and indoor section, easily tucked away in a closet, garage, basement or attic. The single package unit looks very similar to a central air-conditioning unit that's placed outdoors. Both systems can be installed in most every home or office that has central air ducts. If you're buying, building or remodeling, it's time you said . . .

"Yes, the heat pump!"

Additives: Yesterday's Technology Hobbles FDA

By DALE SINGER United press International

— "Repeal the Delaney Clause."

A low-calorie sweetener, miracle flavor enhancer or long-established food coloring is swept into the headlines by a consumer group with data showing the additive causes cancer in laboratory rats.

The Food and Drug Administration seeks further tests. But the move is denounced by consumer groups as stalling and by the food industry as unnecessar-

After further delay the FDA finally bans the product, citing its inescapable legal responsibility under the so-called Delaney Clause - additives shown by appropriate testing to cause cancer in man or animal must be removed from the

The move stirs howls of protest, sometimes short-lived, sometimes taken up in Congress. Cartoons of rats swilling gallons of diet soda appear in the press, and everywhere calls are heard:

"I've been using saccharin (or nitrites or monosodium glutamate) all my life and there's nothing wrong with me.

- "If we can put a man on the moon, why can't we find a safe substitute for

Chemical food additives are not new, but they are big business. In 1976 $1.2 billion worth of more than 2,000 additives was used in the United States. Industry officials estimate that developing and winning approval for a new additive takes several years and costs more than $3 million.

A major problem with additives, according to scientists, chemical industry spokesmen and government leaders interviewed by United Press International, is that increasingly sophisticated tests make the 20-year-old Delaney Clause too

Critics said the law should not force an automatic ban on additives shown to produce cancer but should allow the government and all Americans to weigh the risks and the benefits of using the chemicals, then decide what is best. What we ought to do is to permit some discretion on the part of the regulatory bodies, in this case the FDA, to interpret the data," said John W. Hanley, chairman, president and chief executive officer of Monsanto Co., a giant chemi-

"The FDA should be able to make use of our advancing technology rather than be hobbled by yesterday's technology. They've got to have some discretion. They've got to use their God-given good judgment When public awareness of links between cancer and the environment increased in the late 1950s, Rep. James J. Delaney, D-N.Y., pushed through the clause which bears his name and has been a battleground of the food additive controversy. It provides

"That no additive shall be deemed to be safe if it is found to induce cancer when ingested by man or animal, or if it is found, after tests which are appropriate for the evaluation of the safety of food additives, to induce cancer in man or animal.

The concept seemed simple enough — if a food additive causes cancer, get rid of it. But the phrase "man or animal" and the question of what is appropriate testing cloud the issue

Many scientists feel that, just as one aspirin can cure a headache but a larger dose can kill, common substances causing cancer at high levels can be used safely as food additives if the dosage is low enough. A threshhold must be reached for them to become harmful.

Since the Delaney Clause became law, scientific tests have become as much as 10,000 times more sensitive. Critics said just because tests can detect a trace of a known cancer-causing substance, or carcinogen, it doesn't follow that such a small amount will cause cancer.

Other experts think cancer may defy the apparent logic that large doses of carcinogens are more likely to cause cancer than small doses. They believe one molecule of a carcinogen may be enough to begin a timebomb process that could end years later.

If widespread cancer hasn't shown up yet, they said, it may be only because the substance in question hasn't been in use long enough. And, if a substance is not a carcinogen, they said, it won't cause cancer no matter how much you eat.

"The main problem is nobody is able to pinpoint at what level a chemical becomes a carcinogen," said Dr. Balasubramanian Swaminathan of Purdue University. "This is where more attention and more research has to be directed. Once we find that, the problem will be much more clear.'

All food is made up of chemicals. Monsanto's Hanley often notes that anyone worried about food additives should avoid coffee because it's made up of methanol, acetone, isoprene and other evil-sounding substances.

'Just because a substance has a tongue-twisting chemical name doesn't automatically make it bad," he said in a recent speech Miss Crocco agreed, adding, "Many consumers indulge in a guilt-by-association concept. They think if some additives are bad, all are bad. This can create But compulsive label-readers can't help being somewhat confused, if not instances they're still arguing over the questions. But Hanley said he doesn't hesitate to eat something with ingredients that sound like a chemistry set. He puts saccharin in his tea every morning without a second thought, and he doesn't want the government dictating what goes into

'I would say if we lay out to the American people what are the benefits and what are the risks, most times they'll come to a decision-that's right for them. 'That's what historically our country has done. We've worked for the preservation of freedom of choice by the individual." With today's increasingly sophisticated testing techniques, Hanley said, scientists will eventually be able to find one molecule of every substance in everything. He is also satisfied that it is high dosage of a chemical that causes cancer,

Asked if his confidence is any different from that of past scientists and government officials, who approved of such chemicals as DES or thalidomide with disastrous results, he replied:

"Certainly our technological data base has been enlarged. Look, I'm not excusing the tragic results of incomplete information or misinformation. But, jeepers, just because we've had some problems in the past is no reason to over-

Food additives aren't the only chemicals being questioned. Substances such as chloroform and asbestos, long in common use, also are under attack. If scientists are right in saying that most cancer is caused by the environment, we may all be in trouble. But MIT's Tannenbaum agreed with Hanley and many others involved in the controversy: the ultimate decision requires the balancing of risks against benefits. More attention should be paid to the overall question, not to each individuers predicting a banner year and with housing prices continuing to increase sharply, some officials of the home mortgage industry are calling for federal approval of new types of mortgages.

New Type Mortgages Discussed

"Families aren't all the same," says Stuart Davis, president of the 4,800-member United States League of Savings Associations. "They have different housing needs, and they have different financing

"What mortgage lenders need is the ability to offer mortgage loans which meet some of those differing situations." But others in the industry say the new types of mortgages could severely complicate the already often-confusing task of home buying, and they add that con-sumers probably would have to pay a premium for the new mortgages

Among the new types of mortgages suggested by Davis are

The variable rate mortgage, under which a homeowner's interest rates can move up or down depending on the current cost of funds.

-The graduated payment plan, under which monthly payments start at a lowerthan-normal rate and increase, theoretically at a slower rate than a family's income. This plan is said to benefit younger families.

-The rollover mortgage, which features a loan rate set for a specific period (such as three or five years) and then is renegotiated at current mortgage loan

-The reverse mortgage, under which older people who have built up equity in their homes can receive monthly payments. Settlement of the loan is made when the owner the estate finally sells Several of these mortgages are already available in some areas. For example, Davis said that his own savings and loan association, Great Western Savings of Beverly Hills, Calif., has written $3.4 billion of variable rate mortgages since 1975.

But officials say widespread acceptance is dependent upon approval by Congress and the Federal Home Loan Bank Board.

'The fully amortized mortgage loan (conventional loan) has served home buyers well since savings associations pi-oneered the concept back in the 1930s," Davis said. "... We think that many of these alternative mortgage plans- and maybe some others we haven't even thought of yet- can help even more families purchase homes.'

But John Wetmore, chief economist for the 2,500-member Mortgage Bankers Association of America, isn't sure that the new types of mortgages are such a good

"One of the things we need in order to have a market that works easily and well is standardization," Wetmore said, "and to some extent, introduction of these diverse types of instruments work against the concept of standardized instruments.

What will happen is that it will make it a little more difficult for the system to work well and it will cost a bit more, and the consumer is going to have to pay a slightly higher price for all the diversity.

Wetmore said he was unable to estimate the premium that a homeowner might have to pay for anything other than conventional mortgage. Wetmore and some other experts estimate that builders will start 2.1 million

Would the new types of mortgages put private homes within reach of people who could not otherwise afford them?

"I find it very difficult to relate the availability of these different types of mortgage to what goes on in the housing

"There seems to be a prevailing feeling

Dollar Stands At Record Low At Year's End

By MARK POTTS

NEW YORK (AP) - Distressing news about the U.S. balance of trade and uncertainty over U.S. economic policy combined to send the dollar to new lows on world foreign exchange markets in

By the end of December, when the dollar stood at record-low levels, it had depreciated an average 4.3 percent during the year against foreign currencies. The decline is adjusted to reflect the amount of trade done between the United States and each country. The drop swells to 10 percent if the Canadian dollar is excluded.

The sharp difference is due to the fact that Canada is the United State's largest trade partner, and the Canadian dollar itself plunged to new lows, dropping 6.7 percent against the U.S. currency.

But the dollar wasn't as lucky against other major foreign currencies. The U.S. currency lost 18 percent against the Japanese yen, 13 percent against the Swiss franc and 7 percent against the West German mark.

The biggest drop came in the last five months of the year. From July to December, the value of the dollar dropped from 265 to 240 Japanese yen, from 2.40 to 1.99 Swiss francs and from 2.28 to 2.10 West German marks. All three were new lows.

The key problem was the imbalance in foreign trade accounts, dealers said. Japan's and West Germany's emphasis on fiscal austerity and promotion of exports has given those two countries healthy trade surpluses. Japan, for example, exported $14 billion more than it imported in 1977, twice what Tokyo economists had estimated.

The United States, meanwhile, had a record trade deficit in 1977 estimated at $30 billion-compared to $9.2 billion in 1976. Part of the reason for the deficit was the growth in oil imports; another was increased demand for foreign goods.

The dollar's decline will have a slightly positive effect on the deficit next year, however, Because

"Only such dramatic action can restore health to the domestic industry," he says.

"Otherwise, the excess foreign supply

hangs over the head of the U.S. industry

sion is expected by month's end. If favor-their dollars buy fewer yen, Japanese exporters were forced to raise prices as the dollar fell. Prices of goods exported to the United States grew 11 per-cent between November 1976 and mid-October

The Japanese, Swiss, British and West German governments also attempted to slow the dollar's decline by buying large quantities of U.S. dollars on foreign exchange markets. One day in De-cember, for example, the Bank of Japan bought $490 million and the West German Bundesbank purchased $146 million.

This strategy of intervention raised the price of the dollar and offset large-scale panic-dumping of dollars by speculators and large multinational companies eager to get out of what they consider a bad

Official U.S. support of the dollar, or the lack of it, also played an important role in the fluctuations of the currency. A pessimistic remark by Treasury Secretary Michael Blumenthal in August sent the dollar skidding, for example, until other officials hurried to express their optimism about the curren-

Conversely, it took a vote of confidence from Carter, which amounted to little more than a reiteration of previously announced U.S. policy favoring intervention on money markets, to end the dollar's slide in December and leave it with some semblance of stability at year's end.

The impact of the dollar's decline on U.S. business has been mild. Retail stores dealing in imported shoes and clothing say price increases on those items have been no worse than on domestic apparel. "To us, it's just coping with one type of inflation instead of another," says one store official.

Automobile importers are also having little trouble. Despite the rise in prices of foreign cars, imports made up 19 percent of the U.S. market in 1977, a rise from 1976's 15 percent. And automobile imports in the first 10 months of the year exceeded the record 1.8 million imported in all of 1973.

And most major American exporters say the dollar's drop has had negligible effect on their business, for various reasons

A Japanese surcharge on imported beef, for example, "effectively eliminates the effect of exchange rate changes," according to an industry official. The grain industry has had few problems either, because foreign countries, which have low storage capacities, tend to buy grain as they need it

Perhaps the hardest hit by the decline of the dollar are Americans traveling overseas. The drop in value of the dollar leaves them with less to spend on their trip, while the fluctuation of currency rates can make it difficult to exchange dollars for foreign currency because of uncertainty over the going exchange rate.

The outlook for the dollar in 1978 is a little bit better, although the trade deficit will probably be about the same size as it was in 1977, according to analysts. "There's no way there's going to be a dramatically sharp turnaround" in the trade balance,

But the Carter administration is taking steps to hedge against the deficit. Government officials are attempting to get countries like Japan to limit their exports to the U.S, while accepting more American

Continued emphasis on a tough energy program also could have a beneficial effect, by signaling foreign exchange markets that the U.S. is really serious about cutting down on oil imports and thus decreasing the trade deficit.

In any case, the dollar should become firmer in 1978, experts believe.

"I think we're seeing some rather nonsensical exchange rates," says one observer. "We'll go back to some sort of sanity sometime in the first quarter of

The U.S. International Trade Commission will decide sometime this month whether the American CB industry will survive or be driven out of business by a flood of imported CB rigs.

For although the U.S. consumes over 90 percent of the CB world market, only six percent of the 9 million CB sets sold last year were made by American companies. Not one of the leading CB producers in Japan, Taiwan, Korea and Hong Kong can sell their sets in their own countries. Only the U.S. and a handful of other nations allow their citizens to use CB.

Indeed, so devastating is the impact on foreign-made CB's that American manufacturers are literally being driven out of business. In the early sixties, there were 10 domestic CB manufacturers. Today, there are only four- the E.F. Johnson Co., Pace-Pathcom, Hy-Gain and Motorola, Inc. And all four are in deep financial troubles.

A look at the figures shows why. Last year (1977), about 9 million CB transceivers were sold in America. Yet 10 million CB rigs were imported. And added onto the "overhang" from 1976 when 16 million units were imported to satisfy a 12 million unit market, the current inventory on the CB pipeline would satisfy the expected demand until 1979.

That's right. The 1978 market is expected to be between 5 and 6 million units. And already, there are 5 million CB sets

"The injury is overwhelming," says Richard Horner, president of the E.F. Johnson Co. and chairman of a hastily formed industry group called the Committee to save American CB's. "There has been a dramatic decline in employment directly attributable to the surge in CB imports. The lives of many of our workers and their families are being devastated.

Horner says the typical U.S. CB industry plant is located in a small town. "As these plants close, the entire economy of the community is disrupted because there are few employment opportunities available and the families affected have no choice but to move elsewhere.

In the first half of the 1977, the four domestic CB manufacturers lost $20 mil-But, says Horner, the issue is more CINCINNATI (AP) - He's no longer referred to as "Young Bob," although Robert Taft's name is now into a fourth consecutive generation of politics.

And though his bid for re-election to the U.S. Senate a year ago ended in bitter defeat, he hasn't slammed the door on another campaign.

For now, this son of a senator, grandson of a president, has put his political career in neutral. He just likes being a lawyer and his practice maintains offices here and in Washington. "I've been holding office or running for office 20 years," said the 60-year-old Taft. "It seems to me that's enough for any citizen to fulfill his obligations. But I haven't ruled out the possibility of seeking office again, if the opportunity presents

Taft's law and political lineage traces at least to a 19th-century Vermont judge. His grandfather, William Howard Taft, was elected Republican president in 1909 but let it be known he would rather be a judge or a practicing lawyer. He died in 1930, a month after retiring as chief justice of the U.S. Supreme Court.

CB Static: Readers Air Gripes

Dear Mike: I'm a amateur radio operator and while I wholeheartedly agree with many of your readers about the mess that CB has become, I think you should also point out that amateur radio, while generally much better opearted, does have its problems with rude, inconsiderate operators, too. Each afternoon, I listen and try to get in on a DX net on 15 meters that sees hams from all over the world making contact. At least a dozen times each afternoon, communications are disrupted by immature louts who deliberately throw carriers and tune up on top of whoever is on the air. So you can see that rudeness is not just a CB problem. B.J., Cleveland, Ohio.

Dear Mr. Wendland: I think the FCC should outlaw AM CB sets. The only mode that is efficient and reliable is single sideband. Sure, it costs more, but it sure works better than AM. CB is just too crowded to waste valuable air space with outdated AM signals M.B., Boston, Mass.

COMPETITION DOES MAKE THE DIFFERENCE

Did You Know . . .

That the new power plant for LP&L now under construction will be operational by June, 1978, and will increase LP&L's maximum generating capacity by approximately 27%.

Since 1916, when the City of Lubbock got into the electric utility business to provide service to its citizens, LP&L has been constantly upgrading its facilities to make it competitive.

The service you receive in Lubbock is proof of that achievement. Doesn't that make LP&L's operation important to you?

Think about it.

TODAY'S EDITORIAL:

1977--A People Year--1978

New Year pass without taking a look at the still far away. year just past and the one ahead.

Actually, if there is any one common denominator which marks the past 12 months of 1977, and 1978, it is that in reality there are no "uninvolved" persons anymore.

No matter where we may be or what our status, politically, economically, racially, religion or nationality, the inescapable truth of the past year is that we are all involved with Planet Earth and One Another.

THE INHABITANTS of the shrinking globe which we call home became a few hours and a few "miles" closer to one another as 1978 dawned.

The problems of people in the Third World, the Mideast, Southern Africa, India, China, Russia and behind the Iron Curtain -all became more entangled and interdependent.

The solutions to meet the problems of each of those groups, and all of them together, also became more common.

ON THE LOCAL, state, national and world scene, 1977 was a year to remember.

It was not a thing apart. The year started with the inauguration of a President who had been chosen in the Fall of the year past. He promptly set a precedent of sorts by walking the length of the Inaugural Parade

The year is ending on a dramatic note involving an unprecedented face-to-face peace mission by leaders of longtime enemies, Israel and Egypt, and a journey abroad by the President of the United States.

IN BETWEEN those two events, much happened which is changing the course of

And in so doing, how people live, think, act and react.

There was the so-called "New Spirit" of Jimmy Carter's new administration. The new President, like many before him, has soon learned that there are no easy problems any more than there is a free lunch. The verdict on his performance as a President is still some distance away.

In seeking to implement his own brand of politics and "human rights" the new Presi- is best for the whole community, both city home, but abroad as well. Like many new- and understand one another's needs and comers of a new year, some of it could be

> The "human rights" crusade, though noble in thought, became mired in what many at home and abroad perceived to be a hypocritical double standard, to be applied to some and not to others.

> Inflation, that hungry giant, kept gnawing at the paychecks and savings of the American people, leaving many, workers, farmers, consumers, in economic trouble.

THERE WERE many strident voices heard across the land and not enough words of reason and calm

The U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations, Andrew Young, stirred rancor and bitterness abroad instead of sewing seeds of compromise and understanding. A man by the name of Idi Amin represented a growing Reign of Terror in the world, and Anarchy stalked the airways and streets of many na-

New York City, the nation's largest metropolis, continued to stagger through a financial and moral morass which saw thousands turn a night of darkness into a night of looting and terror. It also was the stage for the "world of the Son of Sam," a sick killer.

CLOSER HOME, residents of Texas and specifically Lubbock and the South Plains enjoyed, in comparison, the best of all worlds and a hint of the other.

The state continued to boom as one of the bright spots of the nation's prosperous Sunbelt. And Lubbock itself shared in the "grow and glow" economic sun by chalking up $131 million in construction permits, expanding its diversified economy and seeking solutions to nagging problems which affected all.

But, in the midst of a Good Year, the City also experienced its worst year ever for traffic deaths, added up more than 280 armed robberies and 31 murders.

The city also faced challenges to what many regarded as one of the last bastions of freedom by an onslaught of suits from the Federal government.

What the New Year 1978 brings remains to be seen. But whatever it is, if those of us who live in this area seek to work for what dent not only ran into major hurdles at and area, and are willing to communicate problems, then 1978 can be not only a Happy

Hey, Ol '77, They're Playing Your Song...

WASHINGTON-"You can go in now," the secretary told 1977, who was nervously sitting on the couch in the outer office.

He went into the large office where the chairman of the board was signing some letters. "I'll be with you in a moment." he said. When he finally looked up, his eyes were gla-

"No one is criticizing you, '77," the chairman said. "But we have to go by the ratings." He picked up a chart.

'In January hopes were high, and we were No. 1. But by March we began to slip. People started tuning out on us this fall. "Now we're at the bottom of the chart. We have to think of the advertisers.

"But I gave you a new President of the United States, a dramatic meeting between Sadat and Begin, a possible SALT treaty and a blackout in New York City. If that wasn't good programming I don't know what is."

"It didn't play in Peoria," the chairman said.

"IT HAD A LOT of style, but no substance. Maybe it was in the casting. But except for the World Series and a few football games, the public

"I tried to keep down the violence," '77 protested. "We had no major wars to speak of. I threw in a drought or two for excitement and a couple of earthquakes. "But you yourself said the people were tired of seeing so much bad news on television."

"Perhaps we were wrong," the chairman said. "But we gave you the ball and told you to run with it. You didn't score with anybody. "I only had 12 months," '77 protested. "What

'You're making this very hard on me," the chairman said. "Personally I like you, '77 and I'm sorry to see you go. But we have to think of the network.

Someone has to take the blame for the apathy of the people. "Just before you called me down I had a great idea for a show," '77 pleaded. "You know the old Student Prince uniforms that Nixon bought for the guards at the White House? "Well, I was going to have Carter bring them back and revive the Imperial Presidency. Then I et us out of the doldrums they think he can. "I guess that's it," '77 said, getting up.

'There's one more thing. We would like you to okay this joint press release. It says you are resigning for personal and health reasons, and you wish your successor 1978 all the luck in the coming year." Isn't that the same press release you issued when I took over from 1976?

"Come to think of it, I believe it is."

Hart Man Gives Farmer Views On Prices, Costs

Editor, Avalanche-Journal:

In response to your editorial, "One 'Strike' Against Farmers," I would like to say for anyone to place labels on us is totally irresponsible. When you label the striking farmers then you label all farmers and agribusinessmen who support

You could be of help to us by supporting us in your editorials. You may think the farming communities of Hart, Ropesville, and Idalou revolve around you: but, where would Lubbock's economy be if all farming communities moved their business elsewhere?

The next time you go to a Tech football game, stand at any entrance gate, introduce yourself to a few people and see where they come from.

I would suggest you and other businesses cut your revenue in half while keeping your same expenses rising and you will have some idea how We're also criticized because we drive $25,000 tractors. The American people and the world told us to grow more food and better food. Our farm technology has kept up with our rising popula-We have to have highly efficient equipment and labor to produce enough food to feed the world. However, if the people want us to revert back to 1940s style farming we can, but the consequences will be less food and higher prices.

We're asking the people and government to support us so we can continue to feed them.

While Nixon and Ford were telling us to plant fence to fence they were embargoing our commodities, thus ruining our foreign markets. All of us in agribusiness must unite to force the Carter administration to, at least, give us a fair deal. Remember-a broke farmer can eat but he

Lubbock Man Says 55-MPH Limit 'Based On Blackmail'

Editor, Avalanche-Journal: Reading the editorial in Thursday's evening paper reminded me of several things.

First off, the federally mandated 55 mile-perhour speed limit is based on blackmail and fraud. The fraud part is that there is an energy shortage, and specifically gasoline-which you pointed out that there is currently no such shortage.

Blackmail in that the federal government will withhola highway funds from those states which don't require and enforce the speed limit imposed by the bureaucrats.

Any one of those reasons makes it an invalid law, but there are two reasons which compound

Also, as pointed out, the 55-mph limit is unrealistic in this part of the country. In addition, when a person (family) has only two, or perhaps three at the most, weeks of vacation, the 55-mph limit puts an unnecessary hardship on the time to do what a person or family would like to do. In my case, we'd like to take a trip to Alaska this summer, and the low speed limit adds several days to the time it takes to get there and back. Back when the speed limit was 70-mph, I was able to drive to Seattle from Lubbock in under 30 hours, but now it requires at least three full days if one is to observe the speed limit of 55. That's unrealistic! Yours for a happy and prosperous New Year in

Editor, Avalanche-Journal:

Hooray for the farmer! Hopefully, the farmer's

It is regrettable that the farmers had a confrontation with your great newspaper. It seems that peaceful negotiations could have been made instead of interfering with the distribution of your

Whether or not the farmers were justifiable in their actions, they could defeat their purpose by resorting to such tactics. The beautiful city of Lubbock owes its origin to agriculture. The Avalanche-Journal has alway been for the farmer.

It is unfortunate that the farmer is having to strike in an effort to get Congress and the Nation to recognize his problem and do something about it. The farmer has been the underdog of our economy much too long. Affluent America has lived high on the hog too long, and left the farmer holding the short end of the stick. The farmer works hard and long hours and has a tremendous investment of money in equipment, etc. It is not Government loans that the farmer needs. It is 100 per cent parity.

When the average farmer gathers and markets his products and pays the interest on his loans, (if he can), he is broke again. There is something drastically wrong when the wholesaler, processer, retailer, etc. makes a profit and the farmer We spent many billions of dollars, man-power, research, etc., to put man on the moon. It is time to help the farmer. We should remember that the farmers are the backbone of our economy and do all we possibly can to help them. It might mean a little inconvenience and sacrificing and it might hurt our pride, but it will be worth it. In fact, it could keep our nation from becoming weak economically and politically and from going bankrupt Wake up America, before it is too late!

Paul Rucker, Dallas

She Says Magazine Erred In 'Subsidy Checks' Term Editor, Avalanche-Journal:

I take issue with the Dec. 19 article in Newsweek magazine, "The Tractor Rebellion. As a woman who is an active farmer, I resent the term, "annual subsidy checks." In reality, these checks are necessitated by the government embargoing our "free, supply and demand" market, and placing an effective ceiling in the form of loan and target prices on our crops

These ceilings are not even our cost of production. When the middleman and buyers won't even give us these ceiling prices, the government makes up the difference. In effect, the government is paying some of our loss (that they caused), and we, the farmers, are subsidizing your food! I might add that I don't want any thanks, for it's not freely given.

Also, the American Farm Bureau has not ever, in my opinion, been for the farmer. You may sign me: A Fed Up Farmer, On Strike For: "Human Rights For Farmers Too!"

VIRGINIA PAYETTE:

There Is No Who?

CHRISTMAS WAS A little different at our house this year. One of the true believers Found

It's one of those moments the grown-ups in every family dread, no matter how often they tell themselves it happens everywhere, to every child. Santa Claus is a fragile fellow, indeed.

Our moment of truth came shortly before the big day when Amanda, aged 7, caught her mother in an unguarded moment with the "is-he-really-Susie did what most every parent does the first time around: She said yes, he was But she knew the subject would come up again and it did, a day or two later.

Amanda: "Who is Santa Claus, Mom? Tell me the truth: I just want the truth." Susie (parrying): "Who do you think he is?"

"You. You're really him, aren't Amanda: Susie: "Yes."

AND THAT WAS IT. No disappointment, no tears, no more questions, no nothing. Just a knowing nod and up the chimney went one more child's faith. To be replaced with a solemn promise not to tell the younger ones, who at 5 and 2 still believe.

'You will too, in a way," Susie told her. 'Santa's just the spirit of love and kindness and generosity, and by the time Christmas Eve gets here you'll believe in him all over again. I do, every year.

Whether Amanda bought that or not, we couldn't tell. But she kept the faith with Heather and Gillian, and on Christmas morning she was down at dawn with them, squealing over her stocking and gifts. And pointing out to them that Santa had eaten all the cookies and finished the milk they had put out the night before. It made a difference with us big folks, though

We knew that she knew and there was a momentary pang that a very special little girl had crossed one more boundary on her way to becoming a big girl.

AND WE REMEMBERED, Old Dad and I, how it was the season Susie was 7 and asked me the same question. I went through the usual stalling act for a day or two and then, when she persisted, bit the bullet and fessed up. She smirked the way Kojak does when he gets a confession. But then the dialogue took a strange "You're the Tooth Fairy, too, aren't you?" she grilled. I nodded

"Aha!" she gloated. "I knew it." Then her eyes filled up. "Don't tell me you're the Easter Bunny, too? I said yes, even that, and hee burst into tears.

How do you figure kids? With our son it was different. He knew for years who brought all that loot, but you'd never catch him asking the big question. Why bite the hand that fills the stocking?

Things got to the point where, by the time he was 9, we told ourselves if he didn't come out and admit he knew, we were going to tell him ourselves. He finally took us off the hook, but you could tell he hated to let go of a winner.

AND THAT'S PROBABLY the secret right there. Most folks are reluctant to give up a good thing and, let's face it, Santa is a good thing. Which could be why, when we are forced to reveal that he's only a myth, grown-ups feel worse about it than the children do.

Never mind all the modern jabber about building them up to a terrible letdown when they distruth. The truth is that reality cover the real a confusing and threatening thing and kids need fantasy to help them cope

It's the only weapon they have to fight the helplessness they feel in a world they are just beginning to explore.

Psychologists tell us people need to think they have some power to shape and influence their lives, and the only way children can do this is through make-believe.

Fantasy lets them escape to an ideal world of their own where they can find reassurance and security. That's why fairy tales are so universal. And games of let's-pretend. And anything that helps the little ones handle their fears and uncertainties should be nourished as long as possible.

THE TIME WILL come, almost too soon for the adults around them, when they make the inevitable transition from fantasy to reality. It's called growing up.

But even then we cling to our most cherished images. And one of them, for any parent on Christmas morning, is that the shiny-eyed moppets around the tree have visions of Santa Claus dancing in their heads Or, if not in their heads, in their hearts.

And so it was with us Christmas morning. Packages were opened, love bounced out of every box, and, for a few magic moments, everyone truly believed. Even the 7-year-old. Yes, Amanda, there is a Santa Claus.

As the youngster grew his values became twisted. Judgment became a thing of emotion, and human dignity gave way to greed. It has become all too easy to blame "society" for our own ignorance, and find excuses for our failures in the questionable conduct of other people.

In most all instances of criminal behavior it can be traced back to what was or was not taught in the home. Therefore, what is needed across America is a new committment to true family togetherness and an unrelenting drive to up-grade the quality of family life.

Of course, it is basically just such a committment that will produce the next generation of young citizens. As for the problem people we presently have ravaging the cities and countryside, we must continue to cope with them with whatever means available. Socialite Running Against Bella Abzug For Congress Post

By GAY PAULEY

NEW YORK (UPI) — The delicately beautiful Mrs. Angier Biddle Duke of the Social Register and best-dressed lists knows that she faces immense chalienges in seeking the U.S. Congressional seat to be vacated in January by Edward L. Koch.

The paramount one, she acknowledges, is Bella Abzug. Bella of the bellowing voice, the strident personality, Bella with an already impressive congressional record, Bella of the activist role in the feminist movement, and Bella of the big-brimmed hats, her national signature.

"Well," said Robin Chandler Duke of River House, New York, and Southampton, "I know I'm up against some toughies. Mrs. Abzug will be the toughest. But I've had some pretty good survival re-

About hats? Said Mrs. Duke, "I've always been a hat wearer. But I know the minute I put one on, people will say, 'Uh, huh, she's just imitating Bella.'

"I'll just wear a hat when I want and need to. Pe-

Another challenge is the fact that Mrs. Duke, 54, is seeking political office for the first time. She is one of the first to announce candidacy for the congressional seat which will be vacated when Koch becomes New York's Democratic mayor January 1.

New York State assemblyman Peter Grannis also has announced formally. He's considered a potentially strong candidate.

Mrs. Abzug has not announced, but her campaign headquarters said she definitely will not leave politics. The other woman mentioned for the Democratic candidacy is Carol Greitzer, of the New York City

Mrs. Duke thinks, however, that the field of Democrats will grow to eight or more in the special election which New York's Gov. Hugh Carey must call after January.

There will, of course, be both Democrats and Republicans seeking to fill Koch's unexpired term and ultimately run for a full two-year term. For Mrs. Abzug, 57, the race will be one for political comeback. She received two major defeats after her six years in the U.S. House of Representatives. She lost by a skinny (9,000 votes) margin in her run for the U. S. Senate against Daniel Patrick Moynihan. And, although favored in polls for the mayoral candidacy of the nation's largest city, she lost in a primary runoff to Koch.

The contrast between Mrs. Duke and Mrs. Abzug obviously will be a major factor in voter preference in the 18th congressional district. This district now embraces a mixture of class and economic strata, including what once was the "silk stocking" (wealthy) 17th, to less affluent lower East and West Sides.

Robin Duke is a Baltimore-born blueblood, and her husband's name represents banking and tobacco company inheritances.

He has served as U.S. Ambassador to Denmark and Spain and as chief of U.S. Protocol. Currently, Duke serves as president of the Spanish Institute and on the board of the International Refugee Com-

Home for the Duke family is a 10-room apartment furnished in artiques and overlooking the East River, in one of the most exclusive residential buildings in the city. Semmers are spent in Southampton, N.Y., an equally exclusive area on Long Island.

Mrs. Duke, 54, is a tall (five feet eight inches, 130 pounds) blonde with classic features and a style sanse that landed her on the annual best dressed list of 1967. Duke is her second husband and the couple has one son. Mrs. Duke also has a son, 30, and a daughter, 28, from a previous marriage.

What qualifies her for congress? Answers ranged from her role as a working woman most of her adult life to contacts made in Washington and internationally with her husband's ambassadorial roles to her world travels in her job as chairman of the Draper World Population Fund and national co-chairman of the Population Crisis Committee. As a candidate, she has taken leave from the Draper Fund.

"Listen," said Mrs. Duke, as she relaxed one morning in her apartment library. "I've known what it's like to work to support my children. At 54, I've got a good handle on life.

Once after her divorce, she was partner in a piece goods business, worked in sales at department stores, was a reporter on the now defunct New York Journal-American, and was a licensed stockbroker.

Her Wall Street specialty was commodities (she took economics courses at night at Columbia Uniyersity) and that led to a job as an executive in international public relations for Pepsi Cola, a commodities user. It was in this job that she met Duke. Both were in Moscow for the visit of the then Vice-President Richard M. Nixon to an international trade

"I've not come up through the ranks running for political office," said Mrs. Duke, "but my back-ground is sold. I campaigned for Lyndon Johnson, for Hubert Humphrey.

The advantages of the Duke name?

"I don't know," she said. "But remember, my husband has worked hard all his life too.

"I'm going to run as Robin Duke, that's all.

North Pole Church Attendance Outstanding Considering 58 Degree-Below-Zero Weather

NORTH POLE, Alaska (Special)-If you live in Lubbock or the South Plains and you skip church when the temperature dips below freezing (32 degrees above zero), then read this

Dear West Texas Presbyterians, the temperature here this morning was 58 degrees below zero...Yet we had 56 total attendance at Church, including 40 in Sunday School.

This was in a letter to the Rev. Henry Chisholm, pastor of Lubbock's Grace Presbyterian Church. and who also ministers to the First Presbyterian Church at Slaton.

The letter was from the Rev. Claude Klaver, pastor of a recently-started Methodist-Presbyterian Church at North Pole, Alaska.

Rev. Klaver in another letter wrote: "Thank you for your concern and support. This is an exciting new ministry and I'm having the time of my life. We have had 60 in attendance, including lots of

This letter moved Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Maxey of the Slaton Presbyterian congregation to gift a playpen for the nursery of the North Pole church. Not only that, the Maxeys currently are in Alaska and

If area Baptists are shivering just thinking about this Methodist-Presbyterian church at North Pole, Alaska, then consider this news release by Baptist Press, datelined North Pole: "With the thermometer stuck at 55 degrees below zero, even the staunchest Southern Baptist might be tempted to stay in on Sunday morning, but Johnny Lee McCoy, assistant pastor and bus director of the North Pole Baptist Church, considers it 'just another Sunday. Rev. McCoy went on to relate that on such a Sunday (55 below and stuck), the North Pole church's seven buses all were in operation, helping swell attendance past 400, And about 180 persons made it back for Church Training Union that night.

'The cold doesn't slow anything down," Rev. McCoy related, "We just go right on.

He said that the church attendance is drawn from two nearby military installations, and thus the church attendance almost equals the total population of the small town of North Pole, located 12 miles southeast of Fairbanks, Alaska.

23 To Attend Methodist Meet At Miami Beach

Twenty-three persons from the Northwest Texas Conference of the United School of World Mission; Dr. Larry La-Methodist Church are expected to attend a Congress on Evangelism to be conducted, next Monday through Friday at the Fontainebleau Hotel, Miami Beach, Fla.

The purpose of the meeting is to present to United Methodist leadership across the nation workable evangelistic concepts. The congress is held each year and is based on broad theological con-Featured speaker will be Dr. Michael Green, who will deliver the 1978 Denman Lectures each morning on the theme Foundations for Evangelism from the New Testament Churches.

Bishop Roy C. Nichols of Pittsburgh, Pa., will be keynote speaker. In addition, there will be a widely divergent group of church leaders including Dr. Robert H. Schuller, founder and senior pastor of the internationally-recognized Garden Grove Community Church in the Los Angeles area: Bishop Finis A. Crutchfield of Houston: Dr. George Hunter, executive for evangelism for the United Methodist Church; Bishop Kenneth Goodson of Richmond, Va.; Dr. Donald McGavran,

New Year's Services Slated

Once again, as they did on Christmas Day last Sunday, Lubbock churches will have varied services on New Year's Day this Sunday.

Some churches will stick with regular Sunday services and times. Others will have only one service. Holy Communion will be served at many churches. Many churches scheduled watch night services Saturday with youth groups

Different church times and schedules have been announced prior to the holidays as many churches do not issue bulletins and newsletters during the week

Some Lubbock pastors and ministers complete vacation time the last week

Several youth groups from Lubbock churches are participating in ski trips or

Special sermons themed to the New Year are scheduled at most churches

World Evangelism'Special' Set

China will be seen and heard during a five-hour TV presentation called "1978 World Evangelism Special" from 6:30 to 11 p.m. January 10 on KLBK Channel 13.

Dallas Baptist College Back In Good Standing After Move

NEW ORLEANS (Special)—The Southern Association of Colleges and Schools has reaffirmed the accreditation of Dallas Baptist College and restored the Texas school to good standing.

President of Dallas Baptist College is Dr. W.E. Thorn, former Lubbock, Tex., pastor (Trinity) Calvary Baptist Church

The accrediting agency had placed the college on public probation a year ago, contending that too much of its revenues were going to debt retirement.

A week before the Southern Association acted, the 192-member Texas Baptist Executive Board approved a $2.9 million package, which college and Baptist General Convention of Texas leaders hoped would solve the school's financial and accreditation problems.

Dr. Thorn called the financial plan "a miracle" and said that it was a key in the Association's decision to take the school off probation. Dr. Thorn said loss of accreditation would have rendered degrees worthless, and "there would have been no alternative but to close the school.' He added the college has already raised $675,000 of the $1.2 million which it pledged to raise in three years and that it has paid off the remainder of a $1 million loan to Civic Savings and Loan, Inc., of Irving, Tex.; and a $300,000 loan to a Dal-

Group Affirms Integrity Of Graham Organization

NEW YORK (Special)-"The financial integrity and accountability" of the Billy Graham Evangelistic Association has been affirmed by seven well-known Christians, some of whom have been critics of Graham in the past.

David Poling, United Presbyterian minister, drafted the statement and contracted other signers: William Sloane Coffin Jr., pastor of The Riverside Church, New York; attorney and lay theologian William Strinfellows; Union Theological Seminary professor Robert McAfee Brown; former Black Panther Eldridge Cleaver; Father Theodore M. Hesburgh, president of Notre Dame University; and Davis Hyatt, president of the National Conference of Christians and Jews.

"Misleading and often false interpretations have been circulated concerning the finances of the Billy Graham organization," the statement read. "These published insinuations of wrong-doing or implied malfeasance cannot go unchallenged. We are familiar with the ministry of Billy Graham and join together to publicly affirm the financial with the integrity and accountability of Dr. Graham's en-

Poling, author of a new book on the evangelist entitled "Why Billy Graham? " also released some additional com ments made by signers.

Coffin said he still is a critic of Dr. Graham for "his Vietnam confusion and his tardiness in seeing the disaster of Richard Nixon and Watergate.

But, he said, "the personal integrity of Dr. Graham has never been questioned by those who know the operations and management of the association's fundraising-it is honest and responsible. Apparently some headline hunters have turned head hunters, with Billy Graham now their prime target," he said, referring to recent charges Dr. Graham covered up a fund and application of the gospel-or non-application-I have never doubted the veracity of his organization or the exemplary style of his personal-

Country Singer Jimmy Angel Just Trying To 'Wake Up America

NEW YORK (UPI) - After a group of youths threatened to burn "Old Glory" down during a Chicago Cubs game last year, country singer Jimmy Angel decided it was time to "wake up America.

The Memphis-born songster, hailed by some show business people as the next Elvis, condemns high baseball salaries, dirty movies and Gary Gilmore and ap-plauds the Chicago Cubs, King Kong and Rick Monday in his recent hit single

The Stars and Stripes. John Wayne. Apple pie. Baseball. Fried chicken. They are all a part of Angel's repertoire. The 26-year-old singer says he was "raised on guys like Mickey Mantle and Phil Rizzuto.

At 19, he had played shortstop for a Yankees farm team in Johnsonville, Tenn. His aspirations to become a career baseball player faded when Ted "Eddy" Simonetti of De-Lite Records walked into a Memphis record store, noticed Angel's resemblance to Elvis Presley and asked: "How would you like to be a

by Norman Vincent Peale

THIS FELLOW really threw me. It was the day before New Year's one year ago and I met him on the street in New York. "Happy New Year!" I said routinely though sincerely. He grunted something in return. And as I passed down the street what he said sounded different and rather strange. Then I got it. What he actually said was, "Happy New You." I looked back at him, puzzled. But he just grinned and disappeared into the subway.

"Happy New You." I repeated. "Where does he get that stuff," I furned resentfully. "What is he trying to do? Get a message over to me? What's wrong with me? What is that all about-'Happy New You'?'

Later I discovered that this phrase isn't all that original. Other people have used it. Though it may seem a bit gratuitous, still it makes a point. If I want a happy new year, am I going to get it by being the same old me that I lived with last year and the year before and the year before that? I can talk about a happy new year until I'm blue in the face but if I take the same old errors and faults and dumb actions into the new year, it's for sure hot going to be any better than the year that has gone by. So maybe that oddball kind of greeting, "Happy New

AS I GOT TO THINKING about it, I remembered a man I knew when I was a young boy back in a small Ohio town. He was a mean guy and I mean really mean. He seemed to take a delight in making it tough for a lot of people, particularly those he did not like. It seems he had known a pretty rough time as a kid and had a drunken father who beat him unmercifully. So now in later years he was taking this hate out on everyone else. Probably he didn't even know he was that way. If you had the temerity to wish him "Happy New Year" you would no doubt get told off plenty. Every year he was more and more unhappy and, if anything, meaner and meaner.

Then along came my father, a pastor but a real man's man. Now my father could act tough when toughness was required, but it was always a strategy with

So he stood up to this mean guy and told him just about what he thought of him. And, strangely enough, the fellow liked it and thought my father was wonderful. "Only person in town who amounts to anything." the mean guy growled. My father actually got the old boy coming to church. It so happened that my father was a terrific speaker and his message was winsome and persuasive. If my Dad had been a salesman he could have sold snow shoes to the South Sea islanders. But he was sincere. He knew that forgiveness and love really work fact, he became one of the most lovable men I remember from my youth. Next New Year's he was for sure a "new you" and, as they used to say in the old fairy tales, he lived happily ever after. But that was no fairy tale, for he was and finally he sold his message to this mean character. And was he changed. And how! It was complete. He quit hating people, quit being a mean devil. In

THEN I REMEMBER Fred. He was a salesman, or at least he was called a salesman. But actually he was a flop; one company after another took him on, for he had a personable way about him. But one company after another fired him, for he was just no good. His sales record was always scraping bottom. He was the lowest man on the totem pole. And nobody could figure out quite why. But then along came a sales a manager who saw through Fred and it was clear to him that this man was negative thinker nunber one. He imaged failure so he

The sales manager went to work on Fred. He showed him what he really was despite his big front. Firmly but with kindness he made the man aware of just what his negative thought pattern was doing to him and how it was cancelling out the potential he had. Fred got the message. He did a thorough and construc tive job on his thinking and gradually became more affirmative and positive. He lost his self doubt, not all at once, of course, but change did take place. He moved up in business and is now doing a creditable job. He can also greet the new year as a "Happy New You." I'm sort of glad I met that man on the street on New Year's Eve. He made me think. And that is always a good thing any way

Before coming to New York, Angel had never before sung a note professional. "I told him he was nuts," said James Oliver "Blue Eyes Angel" Tyler. But playing baseball for $50 a game did not compare with a $100-a-week ally. He did sing along with Presley's records and practiced lyric phrasing by listening to Frank Sinatra tunes, Presley's long-time idol.

Movie magazines are having a free-for-all with the similarities. Cover photographs feature Angel in a '50s style setting, his black hair combed back in a pompadour, his name in neon lights. A chain of "Jimmy Angel" fan clubs stretches across the country. He receives 1500 letters a week from teaching stretches across the country. He receives 1,500 letters a week from teenagers

But the polite, shy Angel wants no part of the Presley legacy. "Are you crazy? Do I want to be like Elvis? No way," Angel said.

Fritz Feld Proves Point: Character Actors Last Longer

By VERNON SCOTT HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Fritz Feld, 77, celebrates 60 years in movies playing yet another outraged hotel manager in "The World's Greatest Lover," his 425th mov-

Feld, perhaps the last of the old film character actors, made his acting debut in his native Germany in 1917 in "The Golem." Audiences may not know his name but his face is as familiar as a favorite uncle's.

Not once in his long career has Feld played a leading man or received star billing. But he has appeared in more pictures than any star who ever lived.

An elegantly comic man, Feld exudes old world charm. He's best known for his heelclicking and a popping sound - like a champagne cork - he makes by clapping the palm of his hand to his mouth. He is a polished actor who played villains in early Hollywood silents, switching to foreign zanies in the 1930s. "I recognized my talents immediately." Feld said, speaking English with a horrendous accent. "I knew I was not a leading man.

"In Germany I played devils, hunchbacks, witches and second grave-diggers. I worked all the time while leading men were unemployed. I came to Hollywood in 1923 with the same thought in mind. Character actors have longer careers."

Feld estabished a variety of images at the studios.

At Paramount he specialized in arrogant counts and hotel clerks. MGM hired him to play magicians and inept orchestra conductors. He played servile or snobbish butlers at Universal-International.

In the eyes of 20th Century-Fox he was the perfect gendarme, Peruvian pimp or malevolent, bungling crook.

Sam Goldwyn cast him as elegant but nervous hairdressers and anguished floorwalkers.

At Columbia he inevitably played foreign cops.

Warner Bros. typed him as an apoplectic French citizen.

But all the studios had him playing waiters or head waiters which have become Feld's specialty because, he says, hardly any butlers, counts or comic European spies can be found in movies these

In addition to his 425 movies, Feld has appeared on more than 1,000 radio and television shows and some 80 TV commericals. His wife of 37 years, Virginia Christine, is "Mrs. Olson" on the tube's coffee commercials.

"I've played waiters and maitre d's at least 50 times, Feld said, grinning.

Feld laments the passing of the great old character men of the screen. In bygone days studios had as many character actors under contract as stars.

Feld recalled Hugh (woo woo) Herbert, Jack Norton (the hilarious drunk), Mischa Auer (the pop-eyed Russian) Billy Gilbert (the explosive sneezer), Henry Armetta (the Italian nervous wreck), Franklin Pangborn (the effete desk

Along with them were such memorable faces as Frank McHugh. Allen Jenkins, Eric Blore, Herman Bing, Arthur Treacher and Donald Meek.

They enriched every movie in which they appeared, running through their familiar specialties in virtually hundreds of "Most of them are dead now," Feld said sadly. "I guess I'm the last one. Twentieth Century-Fox sponsored a

"In most movies I only work a day or two, but usually with a five-day guarantee. I never think about the size of my roles. No part is too small if you do it "With Mel Brooks and Gene Wilder making comedies in the old tradition, I expect to keep just as busy in the future. Maybe another 60 years.'

'Cavities' In Shape Of Carrot Hold Oil

FINDLAY, Ohio (Special) -What do you do with enough crude oil to make a respectable Minnesota lake? Easy. You out it in a 4-million-barrel carrot.

Although this sounds a bit like the "elephant" jokes of several years ago, it is no joke to engineers working for Louisiana Offshore Oil Port, Inc. (LOOP), a consortium of five companies including Marathon Pipe Line Co., a wholly-owned subsidiary of Marathon Oil Co.

Now that LOOP officials have signed federal and state licenses, the company will soon begin construction on the United States' first offshore superport in the Gulf of Mexico 18 miles south of Grand Isle, La. The deepwater facility is designed to bring imported crude oil onshore from supertankers too large to be handled in any existing port facility in this country.

Construction of the port, its pipeline system and storage facilities ultimately could cost about $1 billion. When fully completed, LOOP will be capable of unloading 3.4 million barrels of oil per day.

The LOOP engineers had to find a place to store all that oil. And their solution is to utilize what may turn out to be cone roof tanks, floating roof tanks, and salt domes. When they decided on salt, they decided on what was actually an old standby. For the salt caverns in the U.S. have been used for 30 years for storing liquid petroleum gases such as propane and butane.

and marsh grass of Golden Meadow, La.

Salt is very attractive. It doesn't leak; it doesn't react with the oil. And there are environmental considerations, as well. In underground salt storage, there are no vapors that escape into the air, as is experienced with conventional floating roof tank storage.

Furthermore, underground salt storage is safe. Louisiana is hurricane country. While it would be difficult to guarantee a partially empty above-ground tank against the explosive force of hurricanevelocity winds, salt storage poses no such problem

The Clovelly Dome area is a brackish marsh with ground elevation at approximately one foot above sea level. Consequently, the ground is covered with about six inches of water. Typical marsh deposits cover the site-marsh grass and some five feet of decomposed vegetation. The area is bordered and traversed by canals and slips which provide access to the numerous oil and gas wells in the area. Some of these canals will be filled and additional canals dredged to provide access to the storage cavity sites

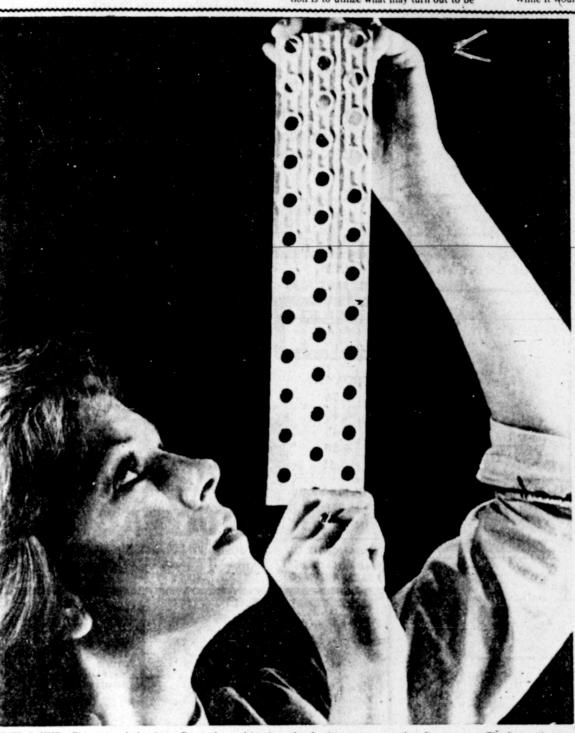

The soil in the area provides very poor foundation. Like a city on stilts, pipe runs, pumps, buildings and other facilities will require pile support.

Clovelly storage will utilize brine displacement, in which crude oil pumped into the cavity will displace salt water brine into a storage reservoir on the surface. Conversely, brine from the reservoir, when allowed to flow down the brine string or pipe to the bottom of the cavity, will displace the crude oil to the surface.

Why carrot-shaped cavities? Water and brine collect in the bottom of the carrot. In time, this will leach away additional salt, expanding the capacity of each cavity to perhaps 4.5 million barrels. The carrot shape merely anticipates the cylindrical shape of the future.

Leaching of cavities will be performed by injecting fresh water from surrounding marsh and canals into the bottom of the cavity at a rate which will allow the water to dissolve salt as it is piped upward. More than seven barrels of water must be introduced to leach away one barrel of space. The operation will require 24-hour pumping and leaching for a year's time. To prevent leaching above the design top of the cavity, a blanket of material such as propane will be maintained in which salt is not soluble.

When finished, the Clovelly terminal will contain 14 storage cavities and necessary support facilities to accomodate a throughput of 3.4 million barrels per day. Included are facilities for fire protection, power and communication, an operations center, and the 15-million-barrel brine storage reservoir

Gulf Drilling Activity Up During 1977

TULSA, Okla. (Special) -Gulf of Mexico drilling rights attracted a whale of a bonus at a record-breaking lease sale 3 1/2 years ago, and the investment is beginning to pay off, according to the Oil and

A survey of 17 operators, who in march, 1974, paid a total of $2,092,510,854 for 91 tracts off Louisiana, reveals production has begun on 15 tracts, with start-up scheduled next year on six more. In 1979, five more tracts will begin producing

The surveyed operators paid $1,853. 602,626 for leases on 58 tracts. Since then they have spent at least $417 million on rentals, drilling and platform construc-

The 15 tracts already producing are averaging 66,358 barrels a day of oil and other liquids and 904.48 million cubic feet per day of natural gas. Next year those production rates are expected to increase by 2,500 barrels a day and 170-270 million cubic feet daily.

Most development activity has taken place in water between 200 and 300 feet deep. Shell Oil Co., however, is installing a $275 million platform in a record depth of 1.025 feet.

So far, operators have drilled some 190 exploratory wells and 213 development and platform wells. About one-third of all wildcat wells drilled have been dry holes. Payout of the big leasing, exploration and development costs is not expected for many years. And, because most of the current production has begun only in the past 12 months, incomes are just begin-

Four operators estimate gross income of about $200 million, including tracts that began producing in 1975.

And they're watching closely the amendments proposed for the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act, which would delay exploration and development.

Another $2 billion lease sale would be mpossible, operators say, if the already long payout period were extended even

New Fuel Sources Explored In '77

One year ago, two alternate energy sources-nuclear and coal-were seen as saving the country in the near future. Solar was scheduled to save us all later in the century.

Today, there has been a perceptible shift in this view. Coal and nuclear energy have encountered incredible snags while massive funding has been poured into solar energy to speed it up. One unfortunate result is we're still about as dependent on oil and natural gas as we were at the start of the year. Some progress, nonetheless, has been made this year in alternate fuels, several seasoned observers agree. The biggest leap has been in educating

development) has increased the general level of awareness. Yet, there are still a lot of people out there who just don't know about the nation's needs or care," emphatically noted one Texas observer. "Even worse," he continued," in my opinion, a lot of decisions are being made on the basis of emotion, rather than reason.

Joe Ventura, formerly of the Texas Governor's Energy Advisory Council and currently a chairman of a solar committee for the Texas Governors Council, agreed in Austin: "There has been some progress (in 1977) and I think the producing states are still making progress

Conversion to coal usage in industry is one of the advancing areas, enumerated Ventura, and there is new appreciation today of the capital costs involved in such conversions

"Cost factor is a key issue in these conversions," he continued," and I feel that exceptional circumstances" could be fairly met with a delayed timetable or with relief of taxes to be imposed.

'Aiso, we need a lot of time with experts to make specific decisions on the scrubbing techniques ordered for coal and even the need for the scrubbers," he further assessed present obstacles for coal usage

In the production of coal and lignite, one watcher in New Mexico said this week: "In general, it can be said while plans are going forward to (further) mine coal in Northwest New Mexico, some uncertainties still persist as to what delays are to be encountered because of the new federal surface mining act and environmental requirements." Such federal delays were not fully anticipated a year ago.

Another general occurence this past year in almost all states was to increase the severance tax on the new energy sources-coal in particular -in the producing states. Further such action always exists as a possibility as new sessions start up in 1978, acknowledged one source.

In the Southwest, the major story in the field of nuclear energy has been the study for waste disposal of radioactive material envisioned in both New Mexico and Texas.

In Carlsbad, N.M., one of the proposed sites for nuclear waste disposal, there is "The feeling, in my opinion, that people feel about the same as they did before: if all the facts and the environmental statements indicate no harm to the environment or the people, there will be little opposition here," summed up Mayor Walter Gerrell.

"It is a test basis only," he continued "and we're interested in the facts. We will evaluate the proposal that way.

Energy Policy Still Goal Of Oil Industry

By MAX B. SKELTON

HOUSTON (AP)-The president of the American Petroleum Institute says oil's largest trade group will continue in the New Year its stated position on a national energy policy.

The API has worked privately and publicly for development of a national energy policy," said Frank N. Ikard.

We have not urged defeat of the plan proposed by the President. We have recommended improvements. That is our position today; it will continue to be our

Ikard, a former Texas congressman and member of the powerful House Ways and Means Committee, made the observations in a year-end statement that was a departure from tradition

The statement normally is a statistical review placing emphasis on exploration and supply and demand trends with very rare comments on political developments

The 10-page 1977 year-ender was devoted exclusively to the National Energy Plan that was deadlocked in Senate-House Conference Committee as Congress recessed for the holidays until Jan.

Ikard said that after passage of the House bill that accepted most of President Carter's recommendations the APIpointed out what it considered to be the

We said, plainly, that it needed revision and improvement," he said.

Ikard said portions of the five energy olan bills passed by the Senate appear to be designed more for Conference Committee negotiations than as a balanced energy plan.

On the Senate's natural gas decontrol bill, Ikard said the API stated publicly and privately that the petroleum industry has fought vigorously for decontrol for

"As for the other four Senate bills, we made it clear we hoped the Senate and conference committees would come up with a plan with balanced emphasis on energy conservation and energy supply," he said.

While having expressed its views to senators and their staffs and to the executive branch, Ikard said, "API has not been involved in the legislative tactics which brought the bills out of the Senate. or the Conference Committee tactics and strategy.

"Such efforts on our part obviously would have encountered resentment and resistence from members and conferees, including those representatives who shared some of our fundamental views," he said.

Ikard said there have been printed reports that API helped lead the publicized efforts in the Senate to eliminate the House-approved crude oil equalization tax that would average $18 billion a year once in place.

"This is not accurate," he said. "There was an effort in the Senate to kill the crude oil equalization tax, led by a combination of labor and consumer groups which were objecting to the higher energy prices which would result from the

He said API was not part of that effort. 'As our testimony before both House and Senate clearly shows, we proposed several alternatives to the crude oil equalization tax," he said.

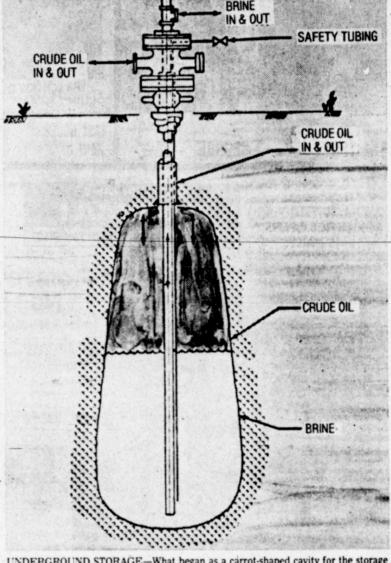

We knew it would not give the people extra energy for the extra money they were not spending for today's energy. Ikard said Congress will address the energy plan again in 1978 and that API continues to hope a workable bill can be

'We believe now, as we did last spring and as we have for years, that the country dare not continue to drift into energy shortages and economic disaster with patchwork measures," Ikard said.

The complaints involve plans by Carter to overhaul the federal bureaucracy by combining some of its agencies and possibly eliminating others in an attempt to make the government more effective and streamlined.

No specific blueprint is expected for at least several months but there have been some signals that the Agriculture Department is in for major changes if some proposals already made are carried out.

One of the most forceful opponents is Sen. Herman Talmadge, D-Ga., who is chairman of the Senate Agriculture and Forestry Committee.

Talmadge last week said that "concerted and serious efforts are under way to make the Department of Agriculture a minor agency unworthy of even cabi-

Specifically, he mentioned a report released by the Government Affairs Committee, which is headed by Sen. Abraham Ribicoff, D-Conn., and its senior minority member, Sen. Charles Percy,

These senators have recommended taking all of the food inspection functions out of the Department of Agriculture and putting them in the Department of Health, Education and Welfare," Talmadge said.

Another development which has raised the ire of Talmadge and others was a statement by HEW Secretary Joseph A. Califano Jr. urging that Agriculture's food stamp, food inspection and other nutrition programs be transferred to his Talmadge called Califano's recommendation "especially ironic" because "he has more than he can do" in managing the sprawling HEW.

Most people would agree that HEW one of the worst run bureaucracies in government," Talmadge said. "Both farmers and consumers can get a fair hearing in the Department of Agriculture. In the HEW, their problems would get lost in the shuffle.

Sen. Robert Dole, R-Kan., the senior minority member of Talmadge's committee, expressed similar objections. Besides criticizing Califano's recommendation, Dole said that Interior Secretary Cecil Andrus also has "made an obvious move" to get the Forest Service and the Soil Conservation Service switched to his department.

'If the efforts now under way are successful, the department will no longer be a major agency and I doubt if the the Senate and House agriculture committees could ever get another farm bill passed," Dole said.

Since farmers represent such a small minority of the population - less than four percent - their clout in Congress has been eroding for many years. But political coalitions with consumer groups, labor and others have helped push through important farm bills.

Thus, many in Congress and elsewhere feel that Agriculture's broad-based functions - including food stamps, forestry and others - give it an effective lever on Capitol Hill.

Others in Congress are raising similar objections about prospective transfers of . Agriculture Department functions, sincluding Rep. Thomas S. Foley, D-Wash.. chairman of the House Agriculture Com-

Sen. John Melcher, D-Mont., the only veterinarian in Congress, said that the transfer of meat and poultry inspection to HEW "will be the final step in tearing apart this nation's world renowned animal disease control machinery.

Melcher also said that he will oppose any effort "to reduce the Department of Agriculture to a skeleton and then transfer the remains to the Department of Commerce" as he said was once a goal of the Nixon administration.

"Food production is considerably

pogo sticks and skateboards which come under the consumer goods and services division in the Bureau of Domestic Commerce in the Department of Commerce, which is what farmers produce - consumer goods," Melcher said.

Further, he added, HEW is "already the biggest bureaucratic mess in Wash-

Agriculture Secretary Bob Bergland, who served three terms in Congress from Minnesota and gained the reputation as a cool-headed mediator in legislative squabbles, is trying to maintain a calm about the pending reorganization

Asked about Califano's proposal to shift food programs and other functions to HEW, Bergland told reporters during a year-end interview that he intended to respond "point by point" to the state-

"The bottom line is that I think the Department of Agriculture is rapidly becoming the best department in all the federal government, and that we can run anything as well, as well as anybody, and better than most, and if we can't, we soon will," Bergland replied.

However, he added, there is a need to consolidate some functions of the government and it may be that Agriculture will lose some of those to other agen-

"My attitude in this matter will be to be as helpful as possible in building a management system in this government that is more effective," Bergland said.

"I suspect when all is said and done that we will lose some of the responsibilities that we now have and will gain others. I don't know where this is all going to begin and end. This is going to be an enormous undertaking."

In any case, Bergland said, reorganization probably will "take care of all of Carter's first term" before all the kinks

Farmer Borrowing Hits Record Pace

WASHINGTON (AP) - Farmers are borrowing money from the government at a record pace to build new bins and other facilities to help store this season's bumper grain crops.

The Agriculture Department says that new loans for storage and drying facilities totaled more than $74.9 million in October, compared with less than $11.5 million in October of last year.

During the 1976-77 fiscal year that ended Sept. 30, loans financed by the department's Commodity Credit Corp. for grain storage and drying amounted to a record of $156.9 million, against $50.9 million in 1975-76.

The loan program has been available since 1949. As of Oct. 31, loans outstanding totaled $301.8 million, compared with a balance owed a year earlier of $150.7 million, officials said. Earlier this year the department liberolized the loan program to encourage more farmers to build grain bins on their farms to help handle the big wheat and corn crops.

The repayment period was extended to eight years from five years, the maximum loan was increased to $50,000 from $25,000 and the downpayment reduced to 15 percent from 30 percent.

Since the loan program began 28 years ago, farmers have borrowed more than $1 billion and have built more than 2.4 billion bushels of storage space.

et scientists say they are succeeding in creating new strains of high-yield winter wheat with a process first developed by Trofim D. Lysenko, once the virtual czar of Soviet biology until he was denounced

By treating sprouts of wheat with cold, moisture and fertilizers, the scientists maintain, they are able to change the wheat's chromosomes to make it sturdier and more productive in a process called transformation. This process is used in conjunction with the classical plant-breeding method of individual selection.

The work is directed by Vasily H. Remeslo, a member of the Soviet Academy of Science and protege of Lysenko's at the 5.000-acre Scientific Research Institute for the selection and breeding of wheat 60 miles south of Kiev in the heart of the Ukraine, the Soviet Union's breadbasket. The government press department took a group of newsmen to the institute recently

Remeslo's associates said that even though Lysenko, a Ukrainian peasant with a university education, finally was discredited by the scientific community, they were not at all bashful to have his name associated with their methods.

"Lysenko had a rational grain of truth in his theory that is used by scientists all over the world," said Vitaly Sherbicherko, head of the institute's genetics laboatory. "His theory is about the stages of development of plants. We research these stages and develop a selection process.

Sherbichenko added: "It doesn't make any difference" what name is applied to the research "if we have an abundant table of food."

Lysenko, who died a year ago, named his procedure "vernalization" in 1938. His thesis that one could obtain a good not believe the institute can produce a theoretical model of its research. Vitold Fokin, deputy chairman of the Ukraine State Planning Commission, waves aside the scholarly dispute.

"What matters is not how he does it but what he does." By that measure Remeslo is a successful plant breeder whose discoveries have been responsible for production of an additional 23 million tons of wheat over the past 13 years, the institute said.

Week's Meat Output Up Over Year Ago

WASHINGTON (AP) - Meat production by the nation's packing companies was up substantially the week before Christmas, compared with a year earlier, according to the Agriculture Department.

The department's Agriculture Marketing Service said beef production was an estimated 428.5 million pounds, up 20 percent from 355.7 million turned out by plants in the week before Christmas last

Pork production was about 233.9 million pounds, up 24 percent from 189.2 million a year ago.

Calf and veal output rose 1 percent, but lamb and mutton production was down 4 percent from a year ago.

sponsible for 45 percent of the winter wheat crop in the U.S.S.R. and 11 percent of world production, according to these figures.

These strains, particularly Mironovka 808 and a new, intensive type called Ilvchovka, can produce yields of up to 178 bushels an acre. In the institute's fields, the yield is 118 bushels an acre.

This compares with the current average for the Soviet Union of 29 to 32 bushels an acre, which is a fraction higher than production of U.S. winter wheat.

The entire Soviet grain crop last year was a disappointing 194 million tons, of which one-quarter was winter wheat. If the new strains were planted in all the area sown to winter wheat, the optimal yield would soar well above 200 million tons, enabling the Russians to save the currency they use to purchase Western

But conditions can be carefully controlled on a state experimental farm with a staff of 340 and 14 laboratories.

The institute has found that the strains it has developed are not adaptable in other areas of the Soviet Union, where winter wheat is sown such as the Baltic States because of climate and soil condi-

Even in the Ukraine, the best wheat growing area in the country, yields of winter wheat in a good year average only 52 bushels an acre and some years they drop close to the national average if the weather is bad.

Another factor is the conservatism of the directors of state and collective farms who are difficult to talk into trying a new seed, the scientists said. It usually takes a year of convincing before they will change.

County Agent's Report

By KEN COOK Lubbock County Agent

A SURVEY OF COTTON VARIETIES REPORTED in the 1977 Result Demonstration Handbook for Lubbock County reveals excellent yields from most of those tested. The purpose for conducting on-farm demonstrations with county producers is two-fold. They provide visual observations during the growing season and at maturity or harvest, and they provide producers information on new and promising varieties. O. R. Hitt Jr., James Mitchell, and Bobby Richey, all of Wolfforth; Jim Faulkner, Buddy Hettler, and Joe Anthony of Idalou, along with Roy Railsback and L. V. Pounds of Acuff and Doug James of Lubbock, provided demonstrations for the 1977 season. Fiber, grade and value data were recorded in each of the variety test plots.

VARIETIES THAT VIELDED WELL INCLUDED Dunn 118 with 1.124 pounds of lint per acre on Buddy Hettler's farm. Others included Tamcot SP37, which yielded 1,004 pounds per acre on L. V. Pounds' farm and Coker 5110 which yielded 933 pounds per acre on Doug James' farm. Nematode control was studied on the Joe Anthony farm. A known nematode infested area was chosen for this test. Applications of 1.7 pounds per acre of Temik and 3.5 pounds per acre were studied.

Yield differences on the four varieties at the low and high rates averaged 203 pounds of lint per acre in favor of the higher rate. Susceptibility and tolerance to nematodes should be considered, although with Paymaster 18, G.S.A. 71, Lockett 77, and Auburn M showed some tolerance to nematodes.

The University of Minnesota professor, who also serves as chairman of the Committee on Urban Environment, took on the job of trying to get Minneapolis to think and look warm - no mean job in 80-below wind chill weather.

He threw out suggestions, some facetious and some for real, about the use of pink steam, disco-decorated ice fishing houses, heated bird baths and even outdoor cafes.

"We want ideas from everybody." he said. "Even the Russians.

After a nationally circulated story on his efforts, Rogers got ideas from just about everybody, including the Russians indirectly.

"Do you know," wrote a "friend from "that throughout the entire length of 'War and Peace,' Tolstoy never once mentions the weather in any way?

Joan Brigham, a sculptress of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, informed Rogers pink steam was not so fanciful. She has set up colored "steam sculptures" in Europe and sent slides, one of "Pink Steam — Steam and Water Prism" in Kassel, Germany.

Jeanne Herberger, president of the Phoenix Symphony Association and a refugee to the sunbelt from her home state of Minnesota, offered a concert by the orchestra in the IDS building's Crystal Court where Mary Tyler Moore once romped.

"Along with the Orchestra (who will perform only warm sounds)," she wrote, We will bring along our 'Super-Woman,' Mayor Margaret Hance, to exchange grapefruit and oranges for snowballs with the mayor of Minneapolis."

Prof. William M. Rolofson of Widener College, Chester, Pa., urged Rogers to use Reykjavik, Iceland, as the model for a think-and-look-warm Minneapolis. "Use vivid colors," he said. "Be Bold:
