

Soviets Complete First Work Day In Space Lab

MOSCOW (AP) — Four Soviet cosmonauts carried out a full and varied program of scientific and technical experiments aboard an orbiting space lab today after the first linkup of three space ships in history, Tass reported.

The Soviet news agency said the four-man experiments would continue for five days, then the cosmonauts who arrived aboard the space station Wednesday would return to earth with mail from their comrades and scientific materials.

It was not known how long the two other cosmonauts would stay aloft. They have been in space 33 days, and Western space experts in Moscow said now that their supplies have been replenished, they might try to break the Soviet endurance record of 61 days in space or the U.S. record of 84 days.

Tass said the work day for the four men began at 8 a.m.

"The program of the day includes medical and biological research, technical experiments, preventive inspection and checkups of individual-on-board systems of the station and the space ships, movie and still photography and television reportages," Tass said.

The report said the equipment aboard the "space complex" was functioning normally, conditions close to those on earth were being maintained, and "the cosmonauts are feeling well."

"The program of work in the terrestrial orbit is being implemented successfully," Tass said.

The linkup occurred Wednesday when the two-man Soyuz 27 capsule docked with the Salyut 6 lab, where the two cosmonauts sent up a month ago aboard Soyuz 26 awaited them.

It was the first time two space capsules were connected with the same space station.

The smiling newcomers brought mail, newspapers and supplies to the veterans, then telecasts beamed to the earth showed all four drinking a cherry juice toast squeezed from small tubes.

The Soviets did not say where the linkup occurred in relation to the earth, but a television diagram of the procedure appeared to show it taking place over the Soviet Union.

The newcomers are commander Vladimir Dzhanibekov, a 35-year-old air force lieutenant colonel on his first space voyage, and flight engineer Oleg Makarov, a 45-year-old civilian and space veteran.

Waiting for them were Commander Yuri Romanenko 33, and Georgy Grechko, 46, who were fired aloft aboard Soyuz 26 on Dec. 10 and docked the next day with Salyut 6.

Grechko took a space walk Dec. 20 to determine whether an abortive docking try by Soyuz 25 two months earlier had damaged the ports of Salyut 6.

He said the ports of the space lab, launched Sept. 29, were in good shape. The space station is the first Soviet one to have ports capable of handling more than one space capsule at a time.

Three American Skylab missions in 1973-74 involved a station that could handle three spacecraft, but only one at a time docked.

Soviet commentators say they envision colonies of space capsules, linked together sausage-fashion, as the wave of the future in space exploration.

Gales Batter Parts Of Northern Europe

LONDON (UPI) — Record gales and severe storms battered lowlying areas of northern Europe today, destroying life and property, stranding hundreds and threatening downtown London with flooding.

At least three people died in road accidents on snow-covered British roads and 12 men were feared lost at sea after the Dutch coastal freighter Holmar and another unidentified ship went down in what were called "atrocious" North Sea conditions.

Gales with gusts up to 90 mph sent waves crashing over dikes in Belgian coastal towns. Shipping was disrupted in Dutch, Belgian and French ports. But Britain was hardest hit.

The worst floods since 1953, when 307 people died, swept the east coast during the night with floodwaters up to five feet deep rushing inland. Waves 50 feet high lashed the Kent coast at Deal, near Dover.

In central London the level of the Thames peaked at just 18 inches short of the officially designated "disaster line," which would send floodwaters rampaging through the center of the city.

The London Flood Control center was on alert and said a new crisis could develop at high tide in the afternoon.

"We are keeping our fingers crossed about today's weather," a spokesman at the Control Center said.

But flooding already hit some London suburbs as well as coastal areas.

"There has been tremendous damage. All the low-lying areas of the county have been hit," said a police spokesman in Norfolk.

In the coastal town of Cleethorpes, in Lincolnshire, heavy seas crashed through a wooden pier, stranding some 300 people — including many disabled and children — who had been watching a pantomime show at the pier concert hall.

Flooding in Kent forced the evacuation of hundreds of homes and in one town stranded eight people on the roof of a pub. The heavy gales prevented rescuers from reaching them for more than nine hours.

Britain's Automobile Association said road conditions across the whole of southeast England were "absolutely diabolical. There is snow, ice, mist, rain, fog, surface water and fallen trees and driving conditions are terrible."

A tree knocked down by the 82 mph gusts — strongest since records began in 1954 — disrupted some London subway services and collapsed scaffolding in the Kensington area.

French authorities reported winds gusting up to 110 miles an hour and said the storm sank a container ship in the new West Dunquerque port and a scow near Tours and flooded a seaside casino near Le Havre. No injuries were reported.

Oil Official Claims Price Controls Discouraging

(EDITOR'S NOTE — This last part of a two-part series examines the petroleum industry's argument for higher prices and the scant information that Congress must rely on in deciding whether the prices are deserved.)

By STAN BENJAMIN
WASHINGTON (AP) — Energy Secretary James R. Schlesinger treats the petroleum companies, pleading for higher prices, with a fine professorial sarcasm these days.

"They have," he murmurs, "a public passion for confusing themselves with the deserving poor."
The companies, whose yearly net income was at least $7 billion in 1972 and averaged more than $13 billion through the next four years, do not pretend to be poor. But they do claim to be deserving of higher income.

President Carter and consumer advocates say that would produce a multi-billion dollar "ripoff" — as much as $183 billion in a rough estimate by The Associated Press. Oil and natural gas companies call it a vital business incentive.

"We must increase domestic supplies," argues Charles J. DiBona, executive vice president of the industry's American Petroleum Institute.

"Price controls discourage exploration. They should be lifted so that investment risks pay off. ... If oil and gas prices don't justify the costly efforts in-olved, development of new supplies will be severely inhibited."

But how much profit does it take to "justify" oil and gas investments?

The absence of a trustworthy answer to that question has stalled the passage of a comprehensive national energy plan in Congress, where the House has voted to extend natural gas price controls while a divided Senate has voted to remove the controls from new gas.

There has been no direct move to end price controls on oil immediately. But there has been talk, in the Senate and even by Schlesinger, of increasing oil revenues indirectly — "plowing back" a proposed oil tax or shifting low-priced oil into a higher-priced category.

As recently as 1973, by industry figures, U.S. crude oil sold for about $3.89 per barrel and foreign oil for less, while natural gas cost about 22 cents per thousand cubic feet.

Then the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, the foreign oil cartel, jumped the imported oil price to $11.50 a barrel, and later to $13.50.

Trying to avoid windfall oil company profits and a massive shock to the U.S. economy, the government found itself imposing a series of price-frees on each new round of domestic oil production.

"Old" U.S. oil, developed before the OPEC price shock, was limited to about $5.25 per barrel. "New" oil was limited to $11.28. And the most recent "new-new" oil was granted the full $13.50, the same as foreign prices.

John Lichtblau, a well-known economist with the Petroleum Industry Research Foundation, admitted in a recent interview that those are pretty good prices.

"The old oil price is probably not too far off" from what it should be, Lichtblau said, while "at $11.28 per barrel, most companies do well. ... Most of that oil is quite profitable."

"There is no question," Lichtblau added, "that if you find oil in conventional areas at $13.50, you'll do well."

President Carter's energy plan accepts those prices as incentives for the industry to find more oil. But Jim Flug, director of the Energy Action consumer group, believes they are already far too high.

The evidence is, at best, sketchy:
—In a letter to President Carter last Aug. 2, independent oil producer W. T. Blackburn indicated that his $5.25-per-barrel oil cost only about $2.75 to produce.

—The Department of Energy has estimated that, in view of its high transportation costs, oil from Alaska's North Slope, one of the most difficult drilling areas in the world, will bring its producers a well-head price of only $7.73 per barrel.

Even at that price, Lichtblau said, Alaska oil is "reasonably profitable," and he estimated that "most of the oil in the United States would be (profitable) at or below that."

—Les Goldman, a key Schlesinger policy aide, said in an interview that future oil, granted the $13.50 price, can be found for about $9 to $11 per barrel.

Similarly, in natural gas, the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission staff has estimated production costs of around 60 cents per thousand cubic feet. An Oklahoma state study also reported actual costs of about 60 cents, and a report from Gulf Energy and Minerals Co. last year cited gas production costs of 28 to 40 cents.

But the commission now allows up to $1.48 per thousand cubic feet for new gas, and President Carter proposes to raise this ceiling to $1.75. The Senate voted to remove the price ceilings, keeping a temporary "lid" at $2.48 per thousand cubic feet.

Flug, reviewing the actual cost estimates, figures a price ceiling of 75 cents to $1 would be more reasonable.

Since oil and natural gas are often found together, the same companies generally produce and profit from both.

Such bits of evidence are far from solid proof of a "ripoff." How much petroleum companies actually spend and earn on the drilling and production of oil and natural gas — apart from their refining, transportation, marketing, petrochemical, mining, real estate, merchandising and other operations — they do not reveal.

Yet Congress must try to decide whether present prices are enough for these companies or whether, as they claim, they need more money to develop new fuels.

"We shouldn't have to operate on this skimpy data base," Flug complained, "We are operating in the blind."

Lacking convincing proof either for or against higher prices, the public apparently remains confused and skeptical, making it difficult for congressmen facing an election year to reach even a politically motivated decision.

A poll last August by CBS and the New York Times found people thinking the nation's energy crisis "is an excuse for energy producers to charge more for their products."

A Canadian visitor, Energy Minister A. W. Gillespie, who thinks higher petroleum prices are the key to new supplies, nevertheless told a New York audience last November that the oil and gas companies "have failed to make the case that higher prices are required."

"Even they admit they have little credibility," Gillespie said. "Their secretiveness encourages the public perception of an industry that is engaged in a ripoff."

Lichtblau said the federal government could force the oil companies to reveal cost and profit information. "They may not want to, but you can make them give it up," Lichtblau said. "The public has a right to know that."

International Atomic Safeguards In Effect

WASHINGTON (AP) — New international safeguards, agreed to by the world's 15 nuclear material suppliers to prevent military use of atomic exports, are now in effect, the State Department says.

The United States and Soviet Union are part of the agreement, the first publicly announced result of meetings that began in London in April 1975.

The safeguards cover such matters as the transfer of sensitive material, physical protection of materials by the customer countries and sales by a purchasing country to a third nation.

The agreement also provides for onsite inspections in purchasing nations by the International Atomic Energy Agency, based in Vienna, Austria, to assure compliance with its terms.

U.S. officials say they welcome the agreement, although the guidelines are less stringent than the Carter administration has recommended.

Joseph Nye, chairman of the U.S. delegation to the suppliers conference, said while the discussions still were underway: "The talks have proved that ... the participating countries decided their larger concern in non-proliferation (of nuclear weapons) was more important than commercial considerations."

However, analysts said the agreement would not be retroactive, and therefore would not cover some deals that President Carter has criticized. Among them are agreements between France and Pakistan and between West Germany and Brazil.

The London talks began after suppliers became concerned over India's explosion of a nuclear device in 1974 using Western-supplied technology.

Some major provisions of the agreement include:

- Importing countries must guarantee that the materials will not be used for weapons production.
- Customers must accept international inspection of the imported material and similar items produced locally using the same type of design.
- Purchasers must place the material or facilities under effective physical protection to prevent theft or sabotage.
- Suppliers must exercise restraint in selling sensitive facilities, materials and technology.
- Customers must agree that any re-export or sale to third countries must be covered by safeguards applied to the

Tanker Freed From Sandbar

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (AP) — The oil tanker Exxon Chester, which ran aground twice with steering problems, has been freed from the sandbar that had held it captive for about 22 hours.

The Coast Guard said the 628-foot tanker floated off the sandbar shortly after 7 p.m. Wednesday after about 3,000 barrels of its 180,000-barrel cargo of fuel oil was transferred to a barge, Coast Guard spokesman Gary Howard said.

He said the ship was anchored about two miles off the coast of Ft. Lauderdale after it floated free of the sandbar in the Port Everglades channel.

After an inspection of its hull, Howard said the tanker would be allowed to dock at Port Everglades despite an earlier statement from Port Director Paul DeMariano that the ship would be barred from entering the port.

The Exxon Chester ran aground first early Tuesday when it detoured from a northward trip to tie up at Port Everglades for repairs. It was freed that night, but ran aground again on the opposite side of the channel.

Biologist Cites Bad Condition Of Sea

MONTE CARLO, Monaco (AP) — Marine biologist Jacques Cousteau told a U.N. conference that a five-month study he made shows the Mediterranean is "sick," and even its cleaner open waters are threatened by wastes from Italian and French ports.

"The size of fish in the Mediterranean has greatly decreased: the polluted coastal zone has extended itself, and the level of chemical pollution is enormous at Fos," an industrial zone north of Marseille, the French ecologist said.

Vance Touring U.S. To Support Treaty

CHARLESTON, W. Va. (AP) — Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance, trying to counter criticism of the Panama Canal treaty and rally the popular support necessary to win Senate approval of the pact, is traversing the country to tell the administration's side of the debate.

Launching a drive to win the necessary Senate votes, Vance traveled through southern and border states on Wednesday, stopping in West Virginia, Kentucky and Louisiana.

In an appearance Wednesday night at Morris Harvey College in Charleston, Vance touched on many of the issues raised by treaty opponents.

Among the points emphasized by the secretary of state were:

— The United States would have an obligation under the treaty "to defend the neutrality, openness and security of the canal. . . . We do not take these obligations lightly."

— The Senate should not write into the treaty a provision formalizing an understanding reached by President Carter and Panamanian leader Omar Torrijos, which stated U.S. vessels would have priority passage through the canal in any emergency.

— While declining to predict unrest in Panama if the Senate refuses to approve the treaty, Vance said that in the event of rejection, "we would face a very serious situation," not only in Panama but elsewhere in Latin America.

The Vance speaking tour marked an intensification of the canal treaty debate as the 95th Congress prepared to convene the second half of its session next week.

Senate debate on the canal treaty, which requires a two-thirds majority for approval, is expected to begin late in February with the vote occurring a month later.

Two more Senate delegations plan trips to Panama in the coming weeks. Six senior members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee plan to fly to Panama Sunday and return to Washington Wednesday night.

Another Senate group led by Assistant Majority Leader Alan Cranston, D-Calif., will visit Panama later in January.

Treaty opponents have formed what they call a "truth squad" which will begin a cross-country speaking tour on Monday.

The opposition group plans to begin its tour in Tennessee, the home state of Senate Minority Leader Howard Baker, a special target of treaty opponents. Baker, who is up for re-election this year and who is expected to seek the Republican presidential nomination in 1980, has refused to commit himself on the treaty.

The canal agreement provides for turning over operation of the waterway to

Woman, Daughter Recovering From Attack Injuries

PORT CHESTER, N. Y. (AP) — A 29-year-old woman and her 4-year-old daughter were in fair condition Wednesday, recovering from burns suffered in an unexplained attack with a caustic substance, United Hospital said.

A hospital spokeswoman, Edwina Moorehead, said it was too soon to determine whether either Ella Jacobs or her daughter, Kanika, was blinded.

"At this point we don't know, and we won't know for some time," she added.

Mrs. Jacobs was planning to marry this Saturday.

Port Chester detectives said they were unsure whether lye or an acid was used in the attack, which occurred about 4:30 p.m. Monday on Sherman Street.

"I don't think she was a random victim," a police official said. "It wasn't just a prank." But he said the motive remains a mystery.

He said two bystanders who saw the attack described the assailant as slight, wearing dark clothing and a ski mask. They were unsure whether the individual was a man or a woman.

Marston Decision Draws Fire

By H. JOSEF HEBERT
WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter's decision to replace another Republican U.S. attorney is drawing heavy fire, including a charge by two GOP senators that Carter reneged on a pledge to keep politics out of Justice Department appointments.

The administration said this week it will replace David W. Marston, the aggressive U.S. attorney for eastern Pennsylvania who has gained key convictions of politicians and reportedly is investigating further cases involving both Democrats and Republicans.

The White House on Tuesday conceded that politics entered into the decision, but press secretary Jody Powell insisted that Marston's record as a prosecutor was not the reason. "As administrations change, so do these jobs," Powell told reporters.

Pennsylvania Sens. Richard Schweiker and John Heinz, both Republicans, said Wednesday night that the administration is rejecting Marston despite Carter's campaign promise to make such appointments on merit.

"I'm not going to be a party to undermining the U.S. attorney's job in Philadelphia," Heinz said in a telephone interview, adding he would block the move. Schweiker and Heinz said they might oppose the nominations of anyone nominated to replace Marston in an attempt to block the change.

Congressional sources concede such a tactic might not stop the new nomination, but it could focus attention on Carter's record on presidential appointments.

Traditionally such appointments are not made over the vocal opposition of senators in the involved state.

Since taking office a year ago, the administration has replaced 72 of the nation's 94 U.S. attorneys. The firing of Republican U.S. Attorney Philip Van Dam in Detroit attracted controversy last summer when Van Dam fought the move.

But Marston's ouster has prompted a bigger protest.

The White House said Wednesday it has received more than 2,000 telephone calls and 1,208 pieces of mail, almost all critical of the firing.

An ad hoc group of lawyers in Philadelphia told Carter in a letter that the decision "betrays your promise to the people to remove politics from the operation of our justice system." And one of five lawyers selected by the administration to find a replacement announced he will not participate because, he said, Marston has done a good job.

The 35-year-old prosecutor, who is trying to keep his job, said he has gotten support from Republicans and Democrats alike and called the Carter move "another instance where the politicians have pulled the strings because a prosecutor was getting close to something."

Marston has declined to talk about pending cases, but published reports have said that two of his targets have been Reps. Joshua Eilberg and Daniel Flood, both Democrats. Neither congressman could be reached Wednesday night.

During 18 months in office, Marston has successfully prosecuted two of Philadelphia's most powerful Democratic politicians — Herbert Fineman, the former speaker of the Pennsylvania House, and Henry J. Cianfrani, former chairman of the state Senate appropriations committee — on corruption charges.

U.S. attorneys have long been part of partisan politics, being subject to ouster as new administrations come into office. "I've been looking for a Democrat appointed by the last administration because, if I can find him, I'll leave him in office," quipped Attorney General Griffin Bell at a luncheon with reporters earlier this week.

But critics of such moves, including Heinz and Schweiker, have noted Carter's pledge during his presidential campaign and afterward to end political appointments in the Justice Department.

"I intend to go forward with my campaign commitment to remove the attorney general and his immediate subordinates from the political realm, and assure that all the appointments are made on the basis of merit and merit alone," Carter said when he named Bell to be attorney general.

Teen Population Hike Reaches Peak

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Carter may get help from an unlikely group — teenagers — in further reducing the nation's unemployment rate this year.

Officials of the Bureau of Labor Statistics told Congress' Joint Economic Committee Wednesday the increase in the teen-age population over recent years, caused by the post-World War II baby boom, has about reached its peak.

As a result, BLS expects the nation's total labor force to grow significantly more slowly in 1978 than in 1977, increasing only 2.3 million averaged over the year as a whole, compared to 2.6 million last year.

Bureau head Julius Shiskin said this in turn will make it easier to reduce the overall unemployment rate for all ages, since the essence of that battle is to try to increase jobs faster than the labor force grows.

The dramatic drop in the unemployment rate from a revised 6.7 percent in November to 6.4 percent in December involved a decline of 72,000 in the labor force between those months, according to Shiskin. Total employment rose by 409,000, so unemployment declined by 481,000.

Based on the projected labor force growth, and on current estimates of economic growth, Shiskin said it should be possible to reduce overall unemployment below 6 percent by the end of 1978.

Courtenay Slater, chief economist of the Commerce Department, offered a less optimistic guess of slightly over 6 percent.

The nation's population of youngsters

16-19 increased from 14.5 million in 1970 to 16.4 million in 1977. It is projected to remain near that level until about 1980, then decline to 13.9 million by 1985.

The labor force projection assumes a continuation of recent trends in which jobs are sought by a greater percentage of women and teen-agers compared to a decade ago. BLS analysts stress it is a projection of trends, not a prediction.

If it comes true, it will be ironic that teen-agers, the group hardest hit by unemployment during the recession, will help the overall jobless rate recover.

Teen-age unemployment was 15.4 percent in December. For black teen-agers it was 37.3 percent.

Andrus Likes Administrative Process

GRAND JUNCTION, Colo. (UPI) — Interior Secretary Cecil Andrus says the way to solve Indian problems ranging from massive land claims in the East to water problems in the West is through administrative process rather than litigation.

Andrus said the Interior Department's solicitor should make a determination on whether an Indian's tribe claim to land or water is legitimate.

"I would rather bring people to the table and get an answer to the problem now instead of going to a court where the answer will come 10 years from now," said Andrus.

He cited a recent problem involving Indian water rights at the Kennicott Copper Co. where the company agreed to pay for the water and negotiated with the Indians an agreement on employment and other issues.

Andrus said he preferred to stay out of litigation because court battles are expensive and time consuming.

Andrus is on an inter-agency task force which is trying to come up with solutions to problems involving Indian claims of millions of acres of land in the East, including some in New York, Maine, South Carolina and Massachusetts.

In the West, Indians are trying to settle their claims to water rights which in some states may have been allocated for other uses.

Israel Outlaws Inducements Given To Converts

JERUSALEM (AP) — Israel is making it a criminal offense for missionaries in the Holy Land to pay a Jew money to convert to Christianity.

Christian clerics are in an uproar, claiming that the new law is an insult that could shatter the delicate relationship between the Jewish state and its 650,000 Christian residents.

The churches unanimously deny offering material inducements to prospective converts. They call the notion abhorrent.

But Israel's rabbis insist the practice is widespread. "We are a small nation and every Jewish soul is dear to us," says Rabbi Yehuda Meir Abramowitz, a member of parliament who sponsored the law. "There are hundreds of missionaries operating here, and it has to stop."

The law, which takes effect April 1, imposes a maximum five-year prison term on anyone offering "material inducement" to convert, and three years on the recipient of a payoff.

Israeli liberals who oppose the law say it will be toothless.

"How can you prove anything?" asks Yosef Immanuel, secretary of the Israel Interfaith Committee.

Immanuel says his government-backed organization has examined innumerable allegations of conversion-for-money, "and nothing ever comes out of our investigations."

The question is also one of definition. To Jewish diehards, maintaining a nursery that admits Jewish children is "a material inducement" to conversion. To legal sticklers, it would take an eyewitness to money changing hands to prove a case in court.

Abramowitz says only 70 to 80 Jews convert annually to Christianity, and civil rights crusader Shulamit Aloni, also a member of parliament, contends that far more Christians convert to Judaism.

The life of an active Christian in Israel is not always easy. Many institutions have suffered rocks and firebombs. The Baptist Center in Jerusalem recently had its windows smashed. Protestant Warren Graham says graves in his Jerusalem community's cemetery frequently are vandalized, and the culprits never are caught.

In the forefront of anti-missionary activity is a well-organized group of religious Jews called "Pe'ilim" (activists). "We don't go in for violence, but we aren't 100 per cent against it," says Pe'ilim leader Haim Kimche. "No missionary will admit he's seeking converts," he says. "They're afraid of us, so they do it in secret."

Immanuel, a Jew whose Interfaith Committee fosters comradeship among Jews, Christians and Moslems, ridicules the whole concept of "buying souls," saying the established church long ago stopped proselytizing and opted instead for dialogue with other faiths.

He worries that the new law will alienate Israel's Christian friends and damage its claim to be a reliable guardian of all faiths practicing in the Holy Land.

"Can you imagine such a law being passed abroad about Jewish activities?" he asks. "It would be condemned as downright anti-Semitism."

Pe'ilim's Israel Bar-Nathan insists that his group "is not, God forbid, against Christianity as such. We say: Be a Christian in your own home, don't try and spread it around."

Bar-Nathan has a list of 20 organizations he says seek converts. They range from the Baptist and Anglican churches to such fringe groups as "Jews for Jesus" which believes Jesus was the Messiah and is abhorred by Orthodox Jews because, as Bar-Nathan puts it, "they try to improve upon our religion."

Immanuel dismisses the Pe'ilim list. For example, he points to Nes Ammin, a Dutch colony in the Galilee which

Pe'ilim says is missionary-oriented, and which Immanuel says "is dedicated only to propagating Israel's cause abroad."

David Jaeger, a Roman Catholic activist in Israel, calls Pe'ilim "a vicious minority attempting to alter Israel's democratic nature by political trickery."

He charges that the new law denies religious freedom to Christians "and will expose Christians to harassment."

Jaeger argues that existing legislation already makes proselytizing difficult. A 1965 law forbids Christians to maintain institutions in Jewish centers, so that charity missions operate primarily in Arab areas, such as the Tel Aviv suburb of Jaffa.

At l'Ecole des Freres, a French Christian school in Jaffa where only a handful of Jews study, teachers have even abandoned clerical garb to avoid provoking friction, he says. Immanuel concurs. "They go as far as to excuse Jewish pupils from lessons that touch on Christian matters," he says.

The Scottish Christian school, next door to l'Ecole des Freres, has huge iron doors, installed to fend off a recurrence of violent Pe'ilim-led demonstrations against the school in the 1960s.

"Jewish parents send their children to these schools to give them the same education they would get in a good English or Scottish public school," says Jaeger. "There's no proselytizing in there."

Kimche of Pe'ilim counters: "They want the snob appeal of learning French and English. A Hebrew Jewish education isn't good enough for them."

Still, Kimche is no happier with the new law than Jaeger. He argues that it will not work, because no recipient of material inducement will admit it for fear of being jailed.

The real problem, says Immanuel, is that "Israelis know almost nothing about Christianity." Only a few pages of their history schoolbooks are devoted to Christ, "and the result is superstition and hysteria which breed laws like this one," he adds.

The new law reflects the increased power of Israel's religious politicians, on whom conservative Prime Minister Menachem Begin leans for backing in his coalition Cabinet.

In the past, the socialist-led governments of Israel blocked passage of numerous anti-missionary bills.

Desert Outpost Offers Escape

By STEVE GRAHAM
BROTHERS, Ore. (AP) — Looking for a place to visit outside the plastic world of franchised motels, restaurants and campgrounds?
 Well, here it is — Brothers, Ore., an outpost on the high, bleak desert between Bend and Burns on U.S. 20.
 Not that Brothers, elevation 4,653, population not many, isn't a full-fledged town. It is, complete with post office, airport, store, restaurant, gas station, highway garage and wonderful, bright-red, one-room school house.
 And, oh yes, a telephone. It's the hand-cranked kind and the only one for 20 miles or so in any direction.
 Marilyn and Loui Constable, who like their town just fine, are keepers of the town telephone (and the post office-gas station-store-restaurant).

Want to make a phone call?
 Just lift the receiver, whirl the crank and tell the operator the number you want. That is if the line to Bend, 43 miles to the west, happens to be working.
 "They can talk to the moon, but we can't always talk to Bend," says Mrs. Constable. "Some of the ranchers come from 20 miles away to use the telephone. We have CB radios, but now, with all the interference, they're just about useless," she says.
 Lonely out here? Don't ask.
 "No, I do not get lonesome out here!" admonishes a wooden sign hung over the lunch counter by Constable's mother.
 Constable's parents ran the Brothers store for 17 years until the son and his wife took over a couple of years ago. Mrs. Constable's parents ranch nearby.
 Constable taught flying in Bend and Medford for a time, but gets close to airplanes now only when friends land on the emergency air strip behind the store.

 "We'd like to have a plane, though," says Mrs. Constable as she pours steaming black coffee to travelers taking respite from a driving Oregon snow storm.
 There's a Sisters, Ore., off to the west, near the Three Sisters Mountains, but Sisters and Brothers aren't related, says Constable.
 "The story around here is that during homesteading days, different family members all signed up for adjoining 160-acre parcels. So when it came time to name the town, all they could find were brothers, so that's what they named it."
 Across the road, a sign with "BROTHERS SCHOOL" in big letters identifies the freshly painted red building that serves the children of the area — all six of them.

 The school is independent, too — like the people. Just to make sure educators in Bend don't decide buses are better than one-room school houses, folks in Brothers maintain a separate school district.
Ownership Claimed At LA Observatory
 LOS ANGELES (UPI) — And the Brooklyn Bridge too?
 There was this entry in the log book of the park ranger's office at the Griffith Park Observatory on New Year's Day:
 "A disturbance occurred when a man claimed that his father had bought the observatory for him and he was there to take possession."

Worker Incentives Needed In Industry

NEW YORK (UPI) — The United States cannot continue to tolerate industrial productivity gains of 2 per cent or less annually and must adopt worker incentives to boost productivity sharply, says a leading management consultant.
 Edward B. Luftig, who operates his own consulting firm and teaches at New York University's graduate business school, has been preaching worker incentive plans for the past 20 years and has sold quite a number of them.
 He says American industry must get 70 to 75 per cent of its workers under productivity incentives as against the present 20 to 25 per cent because the nation's big competitors, the Soviet Union for example, have at least 60 per cent of their workers on such plans.
 Luftig concedes that productivity incentive plans, often loosely referred to as "piecework," have had a checkered and sometimes evil history in the United States. In the 1920s and 1930s, the late Charles Bedaux and other management consultants aroused the bitter enmity of labor and liberal politicians by introducing time study and incentive compensation methods that were attacked as "stretchout" and "sweatshop" practices.
 Bedaux's flirtation with pro-Nazi politics in England and France further discredited his incentive compensation system and ultimately led to his suicide.
 "Things are exactly the opposite today," Luftig told UPI. "It is management that is apathetic or even hostile to worker productivity incentives. Management consultants have had little trouble selling the plans to unions once a company's management became seriously interested."
 The reason for this, Luftig said, is that the plans are being offered as a way for conscientious and intelligent workers to increase their incomes 25 to 50 per cent without going on strike or changing jobs.

 Contrary to the social and economic conditions of Bedaux's time, Luftig said, American workers today know that, despite the high statistical level of unemployment, there actually are shortages of workers in nearly every skilled and semi-skilled category, so they are not afraid a productivity incentive plan will threaten their jobs.
 On the other hand, Luftig said, management is very timid about adopting incentive plans for workers as much as the executives want such plans for themselves.
 Although productivity incentives obviously reduce unit costs when they succeed, Luftig said this is not what brings companies to him and other management consultants for advice on worker incentives.
 "Most of the companies finally begin considering worker productivity incentives because they simply can't get enough good workers or enough productivity out of their workers to meet their order backlogs," he said.

Georgian Picked For White House Job

By HELEN THOMAS
WASHINGTON (UPI) — Backstairs at the White House:

Rosalynn Carter has picked Georgia interior designer Wayne Dean to renovate the family quarters of the White House, particularly the solarium and the bedroom suites on the third floor.

Dean, who has redone many old homes in Americus, Ga., is closemouthed about the first lady's project. Most president's wives have done over the family quarters as soon as they moved in, but Mrs. Carter has bided her time.

In Lyndon Johnson's day, the upstairs of the White House was on the tour for close friends and reporters who often were invited to see the family in their less official moments.

Pat Nixon held her interviews in the yellow Oval Room on the family floor and gave small gatherings there.

Betty Ford also showed off the family quarters to friends and had no strong feelings about her privacy on that score.

But in the Carter White House the family quarters are off limits even to the staff.

Mrs. Carter is beginning to use her private sitting room more and more for her paperwork, rarely going to her private office in the East wing.

She is the first president's wife to set up an office where she would appear regularly.

Her predecessors have used the sitting room off their bedrooms with French desks which look out the windows to the Washington Monument.

Jacqueline Kennedy used to work with her personal secretary, Mary Gallagher, in the Treaty Room which also is in the family quarters.

There is a feeling President Carter may start going home to Plains more often.

He found his hometown a little more to his liking over the Christmas holidays when he was not besieged by tourists.

"This is the way Plains used to be," he said. "This is the way Plains ought to be."

Nevertheless, the merchants on Main Street are hoping the slack in business will pick up in January and February. It's all too quiet for them after the boom months following Carter's inauguration.

Reporters have decided they cannot cut a deal with Carter, who like all presidents wants his privacy at times.

Under an agreement with the president, reporters promised not to stake out his compound in Plains. He, in turn, through aides, was to alert the press whenever he decided to move in public.

Reporters decided there was no deal when the president and Mrs. Carter drove off in a Secret Service station wagon, instead of the presidential car, to a florist shop in town. The press was not informed and it was clear Carter did not want any reporters around.

In late afternoon on Christmas Day, Carter went to visit ailing "Uncle Buddy," his father's 89-year-old brother, who lives about a half block away from the president's home.

Asked whether he had any other outings planned, Carter got a faraway look in his eye, and told reporters, "I don't know. I'll have to ask Rosalynn."

Ten minutes later, he was on his way out of the compound in his car to pick up "Miss Lillian," his 79-year-old mother, and then they went to Billy's for dinner.

Hugh Carter Jr., Carter's relative and the man in charge of White House administration, has become friends with Bob Barrett, former President Gerald Ford's aide de camp and may join him on the ski slopes at Vail, Colo.

Hugh, known around the White House as "Cousin Cheap" for wiping out many of the staff perquisites, met Barrett on a trip to Vail last August to discuss liaison with the Ford staff.

Former deputy appointments secretary, Timothy Smith will be married in January to Cynthia Wilkes, of Lyon, Ga., who works for presidential assistant Jack Watson in the White House.

Billy Carter is his own best promoter. Several times over the Christmas season, Billy came to the Best Western Motel where the press was encamped, usually with a can of "Billy Beer" in his hand.

Change Due In Shipping Methods

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — With hundreds of grain-laden trains rolling across Nebraska hauling commodities to ports on the West Coast, a major change in the way crops from the Nebraska get to market may be in the works.

Major factors in the switch from Gulf Coast ports to the west are newly reduced freight rates on certain commodities, uncertainty by foreign buyers over the Panama Canal and increasing congestion at storage and loading facilities along the Gulf Coast, according to a copyrighted article in the Omaha World-Herald.

In addition, Gulf Coast ports were congested and grain elevators already overloaded before two big elevators were destroyed by explosions last month.

Some grain buyers say the explosions reduced grain handling ability on the Gulf Coast by 25 percent.

Previously, some of the grain produced in western Nebraska was sold only in nearby by Colorado as cattle feed. Now, with the reduced rates for multiple-car loads, grain buyers and exporters are increasing their use of transcontinental trains.

Some of the lower freight rates are passed along to farmer, but there is disagreement among buyers as to how much farmers stand to gain from the switch from south to west.

The benefit may be as much as 10 to 15 cents on the bushel, while others say it could be as low as two to four cents and claim the main beneficiaries are buyers and exporters.

Although the grain prices vary, exact figures are available from the Union Pacific railroad listing the increase in multiple-car trains during the past three years.

There were 12 multiple-car trains from Nebraska to the west in 1975, 36 in 1976 and 172 in 1977, according to Ronald Guelzow, UP's grain market manager.

"We expect to be organizing more than 300 grain trains from Nebraska to the West Coast in 1978," noted Guelzow.

The lower rates have attracted the new business Guelzow says, and are 35 to 40 percent lower than the old single-car rates for corn, sorghum and soybeans.

While the new rates do not apply to wheat, Guelzow said the railroad hopes to have a new multiple-car wheat rate in effect before the first 1978 crops are ready for harvest. Even lower rates to the West Coast are available for shippers who use 50 or 75 cars, he said.

Another major carrier of Nebraska grain to the West Coast is the Burlington Northern Railroad which has different requirements than the UP and does not run grain trains.

"We have reduced rates for 15-car orders that equal the UP's 25-car rate," said Larry Kiser, assistant vice president-grain.

Kiser said most of the elevators served by the BN on its branch lines in Nebraska do not have facilities to load a large number of cars.

"The trend certainly has been to develop westward movement of grain instead of moving it to the Gulf Coast," Kiser said.

Israeli Parliament Given Tight Budget

JERUSALEM (AP) — Finance Minister Simcha Ehrlich presented parliament with a penny-pinching budget for $11.9 billion, $800 million less than 1977's expenditures, and warned that "1978 will be a hard year."

Requests of virtually all government offices were trimmed. The defense budget totaled $3.55 billion, down from $4.2 billion for 1977.

The Suez Canal was formally opened in 1869.

Writer Sees Benefit In Solon's Woe

By HUGH A. MULLIGAN
WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Alan Cranston, the liberal Democrat, has worried out loud on several occasions about California voters thinking they've been shortchanged in the U.S. Senate because he and conservative Republican S.I. Hayakawa disagree so often.

"I keep hearing we cancel each other out," Cranston recently complained to an interviewer. He said he found the phrase "cancel out" particularly irksome because it implied that Californians wound up without a say on many issues.

Instead of fretting about California's one-on-one situation in the U.S. Senate, it seems to us here in the Think Tank at Column Control (the nerve center for ideas whose time has not yet come and may never) that the good senator could be onto something really big.

Some serious thought should be given to the prospect of more senators canceling each other out more often.

Cranston came up with some statistics on roll calls showing that he and Hayakawa really only disagreed about half the time, or on 55 percent of the votes, but his legislative aides, probably out of fear of being canceled out themselves, failed to come up with any solid research on what the nation and its taxpayers would gain if senators were permitted to cancel each other out like old postage stamps.

Surely there must be other combinations of senators, even within the same party, who disagree often enough to cancel each other out and thereby spare the nation their oratory and their franked handouts on the great issues of our times. If half the senators canceled each other out even half the time, Washington wouldn't be a half-bad place.

In almost any session of Congress, even with a new man in the White House, only about a half dozen really major issues stir up the populace enough to get a conversation going in the lull between Sunday afternoon pro football and the "Six Million Dollar Man."

So far this session the real lapelgrabbers seem to be the Panama Canal, abortion and welfare reform, President Carter's energy package, his urban policy and his assault on the three-martini lunch among other tax havens.

Think of the newsprint, the banquets, the paid political broadcasts and the travel expenses that could be saved, plus the wear and tear on speech writers, reporters and anchor men, if all those senators whose minds were made up in advance on any issue just canceled out with a distinguished colleague on the opposite side and both stayed home mending their fences, tending their rose gardens or denying all in their memoirs.

Senatorial tick-tack-toe could even cross state lines to find another zero worthy of canceling out, and if applied to the House of Representatives with its membership of more than 400 the canceling-out process could save enough money for everybody on the White House staff to get his limousine back.

Canceling out is nothing but a refinement of "pairing," the custom borrowed from the British House of Commons whereby U.S. congressmen overdue at the dentist or their lovenest or the divorce court during a key roll-call vote pair off with an absentee on the opposite side of the aisle.

Canceling out on issues, rather than just pairing off for voting, would bring the added fallout of canceled speaking engagements, canceled hearings, canceled TV talk shows and canceled junkets (since all those in favor of and opposed to the Shah of Iran, the devolution of Scotland, the new or the old regime in Namibia could cancel their reservations and stay home).

An emotive issue with a wipe-out factor might leave either chamber without a quorum on roll-call days when party discipline cancels out all but the mavericks and the uncanceled majority, but those left would face the challenge of debating with members whose minds hadn't been made up in advance. There might even be days when senators were on the edge of their chairs in rapt attention while someone had the microphone instead of waving at hometown delegations passing through the gallery or studying the chandeliers in deep meditation.

African Companies Hike Labor Force

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — More South African companies are planning to expand their labor forces than at any time in the last two years, an employment survey reports.

The International Manpower Group canvassed 1,200 commercial and industrial companies employing more than 750,000 workers. It is estimated unofficially that 2 million of South Africa's 19 million blacks lack fulltime jobs. Government figures for November said 31,244 of the nation's 2.5 million whites were jobless.

Successful Restaurateur Changes Jobs

By JACK SCHREIBMAN
SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — "Basta Pasta!" he cried one day. "Enough with the spaghetti, already!"

So Bruno Viscovi, who ran one of the best little Italian restaurants in San Francisco, decided to end his slavery and become an apprentice barber.

For nine years, the dark-headed, Italian-born man ran the 19-table Trattoria, out near the end of Lombard Street where it runs into the Golden Gate Bridge approach.

The little place never made the restaurant review columns, nor was it named in one of the many books that crow about "the best restaurants" in this eaters' town. But Bruno's food was legend to a small, dedicated band of trenchermen.

The king of his small bill of fare was his life-sustaining veal parmigiana, steeped in drippy cheese and steaming sauce. It was nearly a religious experience to some of his customers.

Equally fascinating were some of the mad happenings in the place, such as Bruno dashing through the dining room, trying to dodge violence at the hands of one of his more volatile Italian associates in the kitchen. Or the Sicilian brothers who insisted on going back home during Bruno's busiest months, leaving the boss holding the broccoli.

At first, Bruno did the greeting and waiting on tables, but in later years, he did much of the cooking. Bruno always went out himself and did the shopping.

Early last year, when he decided to hang up the olive oil can, shock waves spread throughout his clientele. "Say it isn't so," one fellow pleaded, tears in his beard. But it was ciao Trattoria, all right.

"I went through all the agonies of an Italian restaurant," said 40-year-old Bruno as he snipped away at the head of a professional male model.

After nine years, Bruno, with a new wife, called an end to working 15-18 hours a day, falling exhausted on one of the tables after closing time, using his "day off" to take inventory and keep the

"When I saw the possibility of changing my life, to accommodate my life with my wife Rae, I took it," he said, concluding there was no way he could have his nights off and remain in the restaurant business. He passed his state barber examination and went to work for the Shear Bliss fashion barber shop a few blocks from his old restaurant, now specializing under new ownership in Hungarian cuisine.

"What do you know? I actually get days off now," he noted happily.

So what does the ex-restaurant man do with his day off?

"Well, I go shopping during the day and cook for my wife at night," estimating he cooks 65 hours a week at home.

'Real' Germany Seen In Village

By TED J. SIMON
A-J Travel Editor

Roberta Ogle, manager of AAA Travel Service in Lubbock, believes the real Germany is to be found in the small towns and villages. The Lubbockite lived for a while at Buchenbeuren, a small town in the countryside of West Germany where villages are accented by gingerbread houses and cobblestone streets reminiscent of Hansel and Gretel.

All of West Germany, from the beautiful Black Forest to the sunny beaches of the North Sea, is becoming more and more popular for tourism.

The travel agency manager found the real charm of the country, located in the heart of Central Europe, to be its energetic, friendly and hospitable people.

"Visitors to the smaller towns and villages," explained Roberta Ogle, "will find the villagers to be pastoral, earthy and appreciative of anyone who attempts to speak their language." Although the American language is spoken and understood in most of the large cities, American may not be understood in the countryside.

"I took a conversational German speaking course. You can learn a lot of phrases, and the phrases help a lot," explained the travel agent. "The people are always patient with anyone trying to communicate in German."

Perhaps the first impression a tourist has in the German villages is how clean the villages are kept. "When a person rents a house over there, noted the Lubbockite, "an agreement is signed by the renter to keep the sidewalk, curb and street in front of the house clean at all times."

A lot of Germany's most interesting history will be found in the countryside. Trier, Germany's oldest town, was just a short distance from where the Lubbock woman lived. An inscription in the old town's market place boasts: "Before Rome existed, Trier was standing a thousand and three hundred years!"

Originally the town of Trier was named Augusta Treverorum in honor of Emperor Augustus about 15 B.C. Today, there are Roman ruins from that period in the small town.

"Till I went there, I had no idea that the Romans had gone that far north," remarked the travel agency manager. "The Roman ruins were very interesting to me. The baths, amphitheater and coliseum are a lot like what you would see in Rome, Italy. You can still see how they built fires to heat the water for the baths, and the throne room for the emperor still stands."

Trier is also famous for its candies. "They make many beautiful candies. Some of the elaborately carved candies are real works of art. Visitors to the town can also watch the candies being made, and some of the candies are still dipped by hand."

The world traveler continued, "Many people like to shop for the famous Hummel figurines when visiting West Germany. I have some figurines of a musician, a hunter with a gun, and another carrying a lamb in his knapsack."

Summer visitors to Germany should do their best to take a boat ride on the Rhine River during the "Rhine in Flames" celebration. "The cruises are during the night," explained the Lubbock resident, "and as you pass by the many old castles, the people shoot off fireworks and burn flares as if the castles are being invaded. It's very spectacular!"

One of the oldest German castles is the "Ehrenburg" built in 1120 using Roman ruins for a foundation. The castle was surrendered to the troops of Louis XIV without a fight in 1687. In 1689 the French tried, unsuccessfully, to blow up the rampart. The breach in the thick wall is now the main entrance to the castle.

"It's not a furnished castle," noted the travel agent, "but the present owners do live there in a small section they have furnished."

Tours of the large castle include a visit down to the two wine cellars constructed during the Middle Ages. According to records, when the French occupied the castle, there were more than 86,000 quarts of wine in the cellars. Twenty-five Frenchmen drank every drop in two years. "They must have had the worst hangover headache known in history!" exclaimed the Lubbockite.

Roberta Ogle concluded, "I found living in the small towns so much nicer than being in a city like Frankfurt."

The AAA Travel Service manager welcomes questions regarding travel in the countryside of West Germany. Information is also available from the German National Tourist Board, 630 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y. 10020. A passport is required for entry.

BRUIN FOUNTAIN — Berncastel is one of West Germany's most favored resorts. The town specializes in health spas and baths for rest and relaxation. The hospitality and charm of the German people is something visitors will long remember. The shops in the town also are an attraction to tourists.

CITIFIED COUNTRY LIFE — Although Baccarat, West Germany, has many shops for visitors, the town is surrounded by steep hills covered with vineyards.

LIMITED PARKING — Many of the cobblestone streets in German towns are so narrow that one-way traffic is a necessity, and some streets are only for pedestrians.

FAMOUS RIVER — The Rhine River is famous for its pastoral scenery and old castles. The river cruise is a highlight for many visitors to Germany during any season of the year. (Photos by Roberta Ogle)

HISTORICAL RAMPART — Ehrenburg Castle, built in 1120, is one of West Germany's most treasured and interesting monuments. The castle has seen many invading armies, but has defied total destruction.

TV Safari Suit Becomes Tailor's Trademark

By HUGH A. MULLIGAN
BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) — Minh the Tailor, wherever you are, will you sign in, please.

For a decade or more, during the Vietnam War, Honorable Minh was couturier to the world of journalism, the Bill Blass of the boonies, stitching up the double knits of such luminaries as John Steinbeck, James Jones, Dan Rather, Mike Wallace and the Kalb brothers, Marvin and Bernie.

Little did Minh realize when he designed the first TV safari suit, with wide lapels for press credentials, epaulettes for sun glasses, sleeve slots for grease pens, and bulging flap pockets for notebooks and hero-grams from the Seven O'Clock news that all the world would want to dress like Bernie Kalb and beat a path to his cluttered shop at 52 Tu Do Street in Saigon.

The Minh safari suit became de rigeur for media persons in combat situations, so that it was widely copied by both Arab and Israeli tailors in the 1967 Six Day War and penetrated into Africa during the wars in Biafra and Angola. Legend has it that Henry Kissinger wore a Minh creation on his secret mission to Peking setting up the Nixon trip in hopes of being mistaken for a TV-type at airports along the way.

Pulitzer Prize winners from Malcolm Browne and David Halberstam to Peter Arnett and Horst Faas have flaunted Minh's livery on battlefields and at press conferences around the world. When cloth was cheap, he once whipped up a stylish stout number for Jimmy Breslin, reportedly the only order he was not able to finish by the next morning.

Minh had a good thing going, until it all came apart at the seams, militarily speaking.

A born capitalist of the old cross-legged school of tailoring, Minh knew he never would be able to hack it in the communal clothing factory. He took advantage of the American evacuation to leave Saigon before it became Ho Chi Minh City on the sound notion that the conquering press corps would hardly want to dress like Mike Wallace in making their rounds in the loudspeaker propaganda trucks.

Minh settled for a time in Beverly Hills working as a chemist, a shirt maker, to support his wife and nine children. Then he moved on to San Francisco and somehow disappeared in that city's large Oriental population. I tried tracing him through a number of Vietnamese friends.

All had heard of him, including the editor of a Vietnamese magazine who closely follows the progress of the refugees, but no one could come up with a home or shop address.

Wherever he is, I'm sure the Honorable Minh is at his cutting table promising "sure sure ... no sweat ... right on, man" and other GI affirmatives that your threads will be ready on the morrow, unless his wife happens to be pregnant again.

"Every afternoon she have morning sickness," he once explained a delay in the production line.

When I first went to Saigon in the summer of 1965, Minh, whose French was exquisite, seemed to know only one word of English. "Thursday." If you were measured for a TV suit on Wednesday evening, you'd have it next morning to keep with his linguistic ability.

Minh, a master craftsman who hand-sewed all his buttonholes, had one quirk that became the benchmark of a Minh suit. After carefully singeing out your measurements to a diminutive assistant, who jotted them down in long lines of Chinese figures, Minh at the cutting board never could bring himself to believe that Americans really were that tall and had such long arms. So he second-guessed himself and cut back an inch or two.

As a result, the wearer of a Minh suit displayed generous areas of sock and ankle and tended to flash his cufflinks and wristbones, as sleeve and trouser leg crept up toward the DMZ. Safari suits bearing the Minh label, an embroidered globe inside crossed palms, were always short and simple like the flannels of the poor, to borrow a line from the late Joe Palmer.

When James Jones came out to Vietnam for a series of articles, Charlie Mohr of the New York Times and I went out to Tan Son Nhut Airport to meet him. We were anxious to get his first war impressions as he stepped down from the plane into that chaos of whining jet fighters, assault teams piling into helicopters and ammo trucks rushing everywhere.

"Say," he said, chomping on an unlit cigar, "where do you get one of them suits made?" Straight off, we took the author of "From Here to Eternity" to Honorable Minh's. As was the case with Nobel laureate John Steinbeck, Minh made the pants too short.

JUMPING FOR JOY — Director John Landis, 27, jumped for joy during the recent filming of his third feature movie, "National Lampoon's Animal House," in Los Angeles. Landis' film comedy, "Kentucky Fried Movie," sprang from the humor of college campuses and has become a surprise hit movie. "Kentucky Fried" was filmed in 23 days at a cost "well under a million dollars." (AP Laserphoto)

Gas Bought For Peak Use

SANTA FE, N.M. (AP) — The state Finance Board approved an agreement between the Jicarilla Apache Tribe and the state Energy Resources Board for state purchase of natural gas from a new reservation well for a 60-day period.

Paso's northern pipeline and will be made available to the southern New Mexico communities through displacement.

The gas will be available to meet the supplemental requirements of several communities which receive their gas supplies from interstate pipelines. The Federal Power Commission has allocated the amount of gas each customer on the interstate pipelines can receive.

The Energy Resources Board already is providing these communities with a supplemental supply of gas through purchase of the state Land Office's royalty gas from several wells in southeast New Mexico. The FPC has given the state authority to transport this supplemental supply through El Paso Natural Gas Co.'s interstate pipelines.

The contract with the Jicarilla Apaches, approved this week, will give the Energy Resources Board another source of supplemental gas during the next 60 days, which is the period of peak usage because of cold weather.

The board will pay the tribe $1.49 a thousand cubic feet for the gas, which is the ceiling price for new gas put into interstate commerce.

It will sell the gas to the communities at the $1.49 a thousand cubic feet cost, plus a transportation charge.

El Paso Natural Gas has agreed to transport the reservation gas at a nominal cost and to buy from the state any excess that is not needed by the communities.

Last fall, the communities estimated their need for the supplemental gas at about 2,500 thousand cubic feet a day. The state has been able to meet this need with the royalty gas bought from the Land Office.

Energy Resources Board Director Fred O'Cheskey told the Finance Board the affected communities haven't been in too much trouble so far this winter because of the mild weather.

"But the winter season may hit us," O'Cheskey said. "This might bail out those communities if the weather turns sour."

The communities which are on an allocation schedule include Las Cruces, Deming, Lordsburg, Silver City and Socorro, he said.

O'Cheskey said the Jicarilla Apaches deserve commendation for their offer.

"They approached us on this sale, so I give them credit for it," he said.

The Energy Resources Board will be able to buy the first 60 days production from a new well on the reservation, to the extent requested by the board.

O'Cheskey said the gas will flow into El

President's Chosen Successor Leaves Questions For Brazil

By GUY GUGLIOTTA
RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil (UPI) — Gen. Joao Baptista Figueiredo, Ernesto Geisel's personal choice to succeed him in the Brazilian presidency, is a hand-picked man. But handpicked for what?

In recent months, Geisel has opened informal talks with civilian politicians on ways and means to open up the military government to non-military sectors of society and has given broad hints that special decrees designed to mute political opposition may have outlived their usefulness.

The message that Geisel has been passing along, at least in the eyes of politicians, the media and other observers, is that the military is getting ready to open the government to more civilian participation.

But how this will be accomplished, how long it will take and what form the finished product will have are questions that thus far have no answers.

Geisel has avoided specifics when talking about the possibility of what the media has dubbed "redemocratization," preferring to couch the issues in opaque generalities.

Barring a major upheaval in the system, Geisel's choice of Figueiredo virtually guaranteed that he will take office and the military will remain in power until at least 1984, when Figueiredo ends the five-year term that begins next March.

Figueiredo, a reluctant candidate who agreed to stand for president only when Geisel ordered him to do so, is head of the national information service, Brazil's main intelligence arm, but little of consequence is known about him beyond that.

Civilians clamoring for a bigger voice in government expect Figueiredo to lead the country's redemocratization process, giving force to his predecessor's fuzzy outline.

But Figueiredo, like Geisel, is not a big talker and has given no indication how he will proceed, or indeed, if he will proceed.

Pressure is likely to fall on Figueiredo not only from civilians but within the military hierarchy as well because the new man's road to power did not follow historical precedent.

Although the military problem is supposed to be resolved by negotiation before the president announces the official candidate, there are indications that Geisel, in a move unprecedented since the army took power in 1964, tapped Figueiredo without first achieving the desired consensus among the top generals.

In October, Geisel, in what he called "a decision of a personal nature," fired army minister Gen. Sylvio Frota, the army's leading hardliner and Figueiredo's principal rival in the succession race.

The media speculated that Frota's exit made a Figueiredo candidacy difficult if not impossible since the intelligence chief was unacceptable to hardliners. Newspaper reports said Frota was trying to organize a right-wing coup when he was sacked.

Geisel and Figueiredo will have more than a year to heal the wounds of the succession dogfight before the inauguration. But if they are unsuccessful, the new president could have his hands full trying to cope with his colleagues' hostility.

Document Reveals Revolutionary Life

ATHENS, Ga. (AP) — An American Revolution soldier received wages of nine pounds, 15 shillings and eight pence — about $200 — for the period of March 29 until Dec. 1, 1777.

And two soldiers each received "one jacket (sic) without sleeves" to help them survive the cold, snowbound winter at Valley Forge.

These examples of life in the Continental Army of George Washington are revealed in a Revolutionary War document which University of Georgia librarians say is one of their most prized recent gifts.

The tattered and yellowed document is an original manuscript of an account book kept by Capt. Thomas Cole and donated to the school by Felix Hargrett of Roanoke, Va., a long-time patron of the library and a 1924 graduate of the university.

The quartermaster and commissary report details the supplies issued to Continental soldiers between an unspecified date in 1777 at Peeks Kill, N.V., and March 28, 1778, at Valley Forge, Pa.

The total amount of clothing issued to four companies of Continental soldiers at Camp Valley Forge in February 1778 included three caps, eight shirts, nine pairs of shoes, 26 "hoazes," two mitts, one "briches" and three blankets, the report says.

Most of the 24 pages cover the painful winter encampment when Washington held together a ragged army of 11,000 during a bitter cold winter.

By INK DIPPER

It was in April, 1976, that John Johnston, chief of the Personal Radio Division of the FCC, and his staff decided that the booming field of citizens band radio needed more attention. The result of this meeting was the creation of the Personal Use Radio Advisory Committee, or PURAC as it is called in the corridors of the FCC.

"It was felt that in order for Chief Johnston to properly administer CB as it began to boom, it was necessary to involve the public as much as possible," Bob Cassler, legal counsel for the division, explained. "To do this in an orderly manner and to get organized input, an Advisory Committee made up of individuals from all segments of the CB world could be greatly beneficial."

An announcement of the creation of the PURAC organization was made and all were invited to respond. From the many volunteers, 180 persons were selected. The group represents individual users, manufacturers, CB clubs, retailers, traffic safety people, law enforcement agencies — people from all walks of CB life. It's really a great cross section.

The project is worth mentioning, as we review 1977, because the first results of PURAC became evident last year. PURAC provided pressure for adding the 13 channels. It was a direct result of PURAC that Part 95 was rewritten in understandable language. The technical standards for manufacturing both mobile and stationary units involved some recommendations of PURAC.

As this column is being written four papers about areas of concern for all CBers are in the process of completion. They cover: the dissemination of information to the public, operator training programs, public safety uses, and local interference. The full committee has moved to have the four task forces' recommendations transmitted to the FCC for its action.

Though problems like CB equipment thefts, electron magnetic compatibility, channel clutter, etc., have not been completely studied, or at least sufficiently to bring specific recommendations, it is on PURAC's agenda. The present specifications for CB manufacturing will make a giant step forward in combating television interference which has caused so many complaints. Now, PURAC is urging that television set manufacturers make further technical corrections in television receivers to guard against CB signal invasion. The combination of both efforts should eliminate this problem within a few years as the proliferation of new set and units becomes evident.

One of the steps taken in the area of public safety has been the development of the 0911 call sign for state police. Though the FCC has had a million requests from local, state county and other law enforcement agencies for uniform call sign, no single one that would serve all could be devised. So, the start was for the state police with the formula of K (two letters for state) and 0911 (KTN (Tennessee) 0911) in all states. A search is on for other formulas for other agencies. An operator training program has been high on PURAC's list of problems.

The FCC has consistently refused to require tests before granting licenses, a very common suggestion. However, PURAC will recommend that a comprehensive training program be developed and, then, disseminated throughout the country, utilizing CB organizations, high school driver classes, civic clubs and police and fire departments. It has been obvious to FCC regulators that the development of a uniform broadcasting discipline will greatly aid CB's health. The patient right now, they say, is suffering from the growing pains of youth. A trained operator who knows how to handle his strength will be a valuable and helpful citizen.

PURAC's charter ends in April, 1978. Like all volunteer groups, it has been difficult to keep viable. But, it has made some very worthwhile contributions to the nation's most personal medium — CB.

Tractorcade Pays Visit To Austin

By FRANK E. GRIFFIS

Striking farmers in West Texas were disappointed their train-stopping efforts didn't produce more publicity but the hundreds of strikers who surrounded the state capital fared a little better in attracting attention to their problems.

The West Texas farmers stopped nine different trains for brief periods of time at Hale Center, Bovina, Posey, Baynard and Ropesville. But they gave up when they realized they weren't attracting the attention they wanted.

"When we found out we couldn't get the news media out here like we had planned, it was no use to keep harassing these people," said spokesman Ralph Roming in Bovina.

Roming said three representatives of the Santa Fe railway met with the farmers, who urged the rail line to temporarily shut down in sympathy with the growers. The farmers dispersed without reaching a shutdown agreement.

The freight trains were stopped either with flares or farm machinery on the tracks.

"We just told them (engineers) we were picketing their Santa Fe railroad. We tried to get them to get out and eat our sandwiches and drink our coffee. They didn't get out. It was cold," said American Agriculture spokesman Tommy Applewhite.

The tractorcade in Austin stretched for three miles along busy Congress Avenue, stalling rush hour traffic already encumbered by streets slick with sleet and rain. The farmers parked their enclosed-cab tractors on the capital grounds and crowded the Senate chamber for a public hearing of the Senate Subcommittee on Agriculture.

"We demand a pay raise," said Victor Marek, a Bartlett farmer and spokesman for the American Agriculture movement said to cheers and applause of more than 250 farmers. "You Texas legislators voted yourselves a raise. Now vote the farmers a raise."

Halfway House To Help Mental Health Clients

By JEFF SOUTH
Avalanche-Journal Staff
Mental health clients coming home from Big Spring State Hospital soon will have a halfway house here to help them make that transition.

And the Lubbock Regional Mental Health-Mental Retardation Center says such a residential program — the only one of its kind in the city — may be just the thing to keep former patients from being re-admitted to the state hospital system.

The MHMR board of trustees has agreed to lease a building near the downtown area for a halfway house for persons who need additional care, vocational training or other rehabilitative services before they can return to private living.

The program, explained Dr. Ron Whittington, executive director of the local MHMR agency, is intended especially for persons who are returning from Big Spring State Hospital but "may not feel quite independent enough" to live on their own immediately.

The halfway house will channel services, available through MHMR and some other agencies, including the Texas Rehabilitation Commission, to help clients make that adjustment, Whittington said. "It's a project I'm most enthusiastic about," he said. "I just can't feature a city the size of Lubbock not having a halfway house for mental health clients."

Not too long ago, a similar program was started by a private group in Lubbock, according to an MHMR staff report on the matter. The agency had considered contracting with this group for service to MHMR clients.

But the privately operated halfway house "has since closed down, leaving the responsibility for mental health intermediate care services solely with our agency," the report said.

The report said permanent facilities for a halfway house here are sorely needed. Last year, 124 persons were released from Big Spring State Hospital to the South Plains region — with 84 of them returning home to Lubbock County.

Without a halfway house, a substantial percentage of these clients may end up being readmitted to Big Spring, the report said. It noted that of all state hospital admissions last year, about half were readmissions — persons who had already been there.

"What seems to be happening is that the number of first admissions is dropping significantly and the readmissions are staying about the same," the report said.

"In other words, the (regional MHMR) center seems to be having an impact in terms of keeping people out of the hospital system, but is having less of an impact on those who have already been to the hospital."

"The transitional services being proposed might be the key to unimpacting the clients who are already part of the system."

The halfway house will have an annual budget of about $100,000, according to Dr. John Morris, MHMR director for mental health programs. The house will have accommodations for 16 persons, he said.

Funding already has been authorized by the state. Whittington said he hopes to have the halfway house in operation in 30 to 45 days.

The halfway house also will headquarter MHMR's "partial hospitalization program," workshops and other daytime services for mental health clients who live at home.

Jail Changes Get Approval

By JEFF SOUTH
Avalanche-Journal Staff
With problems over safety codes and the size of dayrooms now resolved, state officials say Lubbock County may "progress immediately" with construction plans for a new, but slightly smaller county jail.

To get that approval, county architect Arnold Maeker had to cut the long-term detention capacity of the proposed facility from 270 inmates to 267.

That minor change, coupled with other modifications, enabled Maeker to design larger dayrooms for the project, in compliance with specifications of the Texas Commission on Jail Standards (TCJS).

Maeker met Monday in Austin with Guy Van Cleave, executive director of the state agency, and other officials to discuss revision of the jail drawings and resolve issues concerning "life safety rules" — primarily, emergency evacuation in case of fire.

Van Cleave reported in a letter to Lubbock County Judge Rod Shaw: "Concerning the lack of space in dayrooms, Mr. Maeker presented a revised drawing wherein the minimum standards are met."

"With this revision and the resolution of life safety rules questions, Mr. Maeker was informed he could progress immediately to construction drawings and bid documents without the intervening submission (to the TCJS) ordinarily required."

Maeker's suggested changes in the original design for the new jail still must be approved by the Lubbock County Commissioners Court.

On Wednesday, Commissioners Alton Brazell and Edgar Chance, who compose the court's subcommittee on jail construction, met with Maeker and endorsed the revisions.

Afterward, Brazell said the plans "look good. I'm glad to see we were able to comply with the state standards and yet only lose three inmate units" in the revision.

He said he will recommend to his colleagues that the commissioners court "give Arnold (Maeker) the go-ahead to proceed with the plans as revised."

If the court concurs, Maeker said he should be able to stick to his timetable of getting the plans out to bid by March and getting the new jail built and ready for occupancy by January, 1980.

As originally drawn, the new jail was to have a 65-inmate holding area and three 90-inmate cellblocks for long-term detention. But Maeker was unaware at that time of state rules on the size of dayrooms.

To make the dayrooms comply with those rules, commissioners feared they would lose about 10 cells — reducing the efficiency of the new facility.

But Maeker found a way to enlarge the dayrooms by cutting the capacity by just three prisoners. Under the plan, some space that originally had been allocated as a corridor also was converted for dayroom use.

The new jail as revised, Maeker said, will have three long-term cellblocks with capacities for 91, 88 and 88 inmates respectively.

Van Cleave had discouraged the county from seeking a variance to the state rules so that the original plans, with the smaller dayrooms, could go out for bids. The chances that TCJS would approve such a variance are "minimal at best," and it would be at least a month before such a request could be considered, he said.

The new Lubbock County Jail, to be built east of the old jail downtown, is expected to cost about $3.6 million. The county hopes to pay for the project out of available federal revenue-sharing funds.

Commission Reports Liquor Law Cases

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Alcoholic Beverage Commission reported Wednesday its agents filed 3,695 criminal cases in fiscal 1977, resulting in 2,775 convictions.

Fines paid for liquor law violations totaled $239,745, the commission said in its annual report for the year that ended Aug. 31, 1977.

The Houston district led in cases filed, with 649. But other major population centers lagged far behind — Dallas, for instance, with 192. San Antonio with 94 and Fort Worth with 107.

On the other hand, the Paris district with no major urban centers trailed the Houston office by only a small number, filing 596 cases.

West chose to ignore his partner's lead directing double and allowed the declarer an opportunity to give a dazzling display of technique at his grand slam in hearts.

South's decision to bid the grand slam was quite a shot in the dark, for North might have raised to six hearts on a somewhat weaker hand. East made a Lightner double to suggest an unusual lead, usually the first suit bid by dummy.

However, West was not content with a mere one-trick set—it was obvious from his hand that his partner had to want a club lead and should be able to ruff. He must have presumed that declarer had gone entirely out of his mind, for he decided to lead the ace of spades. His folly was soon brought home to him. Declarer ruffed with a low trump and entered dummy by leading the seven of trumps to the jack. He noted that East dropped the ten and, in view of the opening preempt, there was no reason to doubt that it was a singleton. Declarer crossed back to his hand by ruffing a spade high, then entered dummy with the jack of diamonds for another spade ruff with a high trump. Next, he led a low trump. When West followed with the five, declarer finessed the six!

When this held, the contract was virtually home. He ruffed dummy's last spade with his own last trump, the ace. Now declarer crossed to the king of clubs and used dummy's nine of trumps to draw West's last trump. On this trick declarer sluffed his club loser.

Four tricks remained to be played. They were won by declarer's three high diamonds and the ace of clubs. Instead of down one, the grand slam rolled home for an enormous swing.

There is a moral to this story. If partner suggests a line of play and you choose to ignore him, you had better be right. After all, if you hearken to him and go wrong, you know where to put the blame.

Your play to the first trick could decide the fate of the contract! A writer once remarked: "There's no such thing as a blind opening lead, only deal opening leads!" Pianos Add Life To Many Parties

NEW YORK (AP) — According to people who give parties often and successfully, a piano can make the difference between a humdrum get-together and a memorable bash.

"A party in a private home needs a piano," says professional party planner Marilyn Perry of New York City. "It mixes people together better, and adds gaiety and unity. In fact, for a very large party, I recommend that my clients rent a piano if they don't already own one."

Marilyn says she often plans parties with diplomats, business people and society people who may have very little in common. "But they can all sing along or comment on the music."

Sandy Shire, a young Los Angeles music arranger and pianist who's entertained at a lot of parties, says, "Live music gives a party a lift. People from 25 on up almost always like to sing along with current show tunes and the oldies like Cole Porter."

Sandy has a few tips for piano-owning party givers: "Buy some songbooks, type up the lyrics of old favorites, make copies and leave them lying around on top of the piano. That way, people are likely to spontaneously start playing and singing. It works much better than if the hostess tries to coax them."

Chicago society orchestra leader Stanley Paul advises, "Make the piano part of the party setting. Cover the top with plexiglass, so people won't be afraid to put their drinks on it. You won't have to ask people to play, they'll do it on their own."

Pianist and party giver Janet Sielaff of New Haven, Conn., recalls going to a party at a beautiful home with a grand piano which no one played.

"The keys were covered and there wasn't a single piece of music around," she says. "We sent the host and hostess a songbook of old favorites as a bread and butter gift." Janet recommends the Rodgers and Hart, Rodgers and Hammerstein and Jerome Kern songbooks.

DEAR ABBY

DEAR ABBY: I am a 13-year-old girl with a problem that may not seem important to some people, but it is to me. I have gym three days a week, and after gym everyone has to shower or they get an "F." The gym teachers stands right there and watches you, so there is no way of getting out of it. Abby, there is one big room with four nozzles coming out of the wall, and 35 girls have to shower together.

I was raised to be modest and I just die when I have to stand naked in front of 34 other girls.

I have talked to my mother about this and she doesn't like it either, but she doesn't know what to do. Can you help me?

Must Group Shower

Dear Must: No girl should be forced to stand naked before other girls if it disturbs her. Your mother should go to the school and talk to the principal. Even though a private shower cannot be provided for each girl, for the modest ones who "just die," perhaps a little more privacy could be arranged.

DEAR ABBY: What is a man, who has been married for almost 18 years, supposed to think when he accidentally finds hidden in his wife's closet six beautiful sheer, shortie nightgowns and negligees he has never seen before?

They are certainly never worn in my presence.

Perhaps that explains why she slips her luggage in and out of the house when making increasingly more frequent out-of-town trips — alone, to "visit her mother."

Please answer in your column, as I am beginning to be...

Suspicious

Dear Suspicious: Either your wife is taking in laundry, or you've caught her with evidence that anyone can see through.

DEAR ABBY: I'm really ticked off at my husband for telling everyone at work that we own our own home. It's not true — we're only renting. He just got transferred and we're new in town.

He justifies his lying by saying that a home owner comes across as being more stable and solid, and it adds to his prestige. Abby, there's no way we could have bought this house because we didn't have the down payment for this (or any other) house!

Every time I hear my husband repeat that bald-face lie I feel like a louse for keeping quiet, but I certainly can't call him a liar in front of the people he works with, can I?

I could just wring his neck. In the eight years we've been married, I've heard him tell quite a few whoppers, but none has upset me like this one.

Any suggestions? Sign me...

Biting My Tongue

Dear Biting: Of course you shouldn't publicly call your husband a liar. But do tell him that the fact that he's renting the home he claims to own is almost certain to be revealed eventually. And then he'll be exposed for the phony he is.

If you feel left out and lonely, or wish you knew how to get people to like you, my new booklet, "How To Be Popular, You're Never Too Young or Too Old," is for you. Send $1 along with a long, self-addressed, stamped (24 cents) envelope to Abby, 132 Lasky Drive, Beverly Hills, Calif. 90212.

Busing, Low Test Score Parallels Drawn

By DR. HOWARD L. HURWITZ
NEW YORK (WNS) — Slumping test scores of college-bound students sadden a public that is losing confidence in our schools. A major factor in the decline of test scores has been the continual disruption of our schools, especially in our largest cities, over the past 25 years. It is during this period that Scholastic Achievement Tests (SAT) scores have plummeted 49 points in verbal (reading) achievement and 32 points in mathematics.

SATs, sponsored by the College Entrance Examination Board, have been administered for more than a half-century. The tests, which take about a half-day, are given to some one million high school seniors each year.

SATs have become the single most important determinant in college admission, especially to selective colleges. Inflation of school marks in the 16,000 public school districts, not to mention private and parochial schools, has weakened the report card as the decisive factor in college admission.

The most common explanation for the significant slump in SAT test scores (marked on a 200 to 800 scale) from the average verbal score of 478 and math 502 is the expansion of the college-bound group.

Yes, there has been an increase in the number of poor, racial minorities, and women entering colleges. It happens, however, that there is also a sharp drop in the average scores of the brightest taking the tests. I remember well the significant numbers, nationwide, who achieved between 700 and 800 on the SATs. They are scarcer now.

True, some attention has been paid to the possible impact on the schools of political assassinations, the Vietnam War and the increase in the number of broken homes.

Other explanations of declining SAT scores include failure to teach basics, excessive student absence, the watering down of curricula, poor teaching, a decline in professional standards, reduction of homework, written-down-to-the-students textbooks — all adding up to a "decade of destruction." But, little attention has been given to school disruptions induced by forced busing to achieve racial integration.

City school systems struck by conflict over busing range from Los Angeles to Boston, with Chicago, Louisville, Columbus, Kansas City, and Atlanta somewhere in between. Just the recital of white flight from the public schools of these and other cities is awesome: In Atlanta, when court-ordered forced busing was initiated in 1958, there were 115,000 pupils, 70 per cent white; now there are 80,000 pupils, 15 per cent white. In Charlotte, N.C., one in every nine white children has left the public school system. In Boston, 35 per cent of the white students have gone.

During a recent five-year period, the number of white students dropped by 41 per cent in San Francisco, 32 per cent in Houston, 40 per cent in New Orleans, 21 per cent in Denver. In New York City, of 1.1 million students, 70 per cent are black and Puerto Rican, compared with about 30 per cent black and Puerto Rican 10 years ago.

A slightly publicized study by the Syracuse University Research Corporation states: "Disruption is positively related to integration." Two national surveys by the Carnegie Commission and The New York Times reported increased racial hostility and violence in racially balanced schools throughout the country.

The pathetic part of all this is that the very children who are supposed to benefit from forced racial integration suffer. Yet, forced busing is reported almost daily in the news; invariably with reports of school disruptions. This goes on despite the clear expression of public opinion in the Lou Harris survey two years ago that 75 per cent busing as a means toward integration. In the same poll, 51 per cent of blacks opposed forced busing, and more join these ranks every day.

The idea that blacks can learn effectively only if they are intermixed with whites is in general discard. Few, however, would oppose integration if it were in the neighborhood school.

The much publicized Coleman Report would have us believe that the single most important factor in learning effectiveness is the home environment. If you accept this, and then add to the amalgam disrupted schools for those who must come to the classroom to make up for home deficiencies, you have hurt innocent kids.

Increasingly, they are victims of social engineers in judicial robes. Forced integration as a factor in school violence may not be subject to precise statistical measurement. But, the U.S. Senate Subcommittee Report on Violence in the Schools showed in a three-year period that 100 students were murdered, 70,000 teachers and hundreds of thousands of students seriously assaulted. Not only had violence skyrocketed, but rackets such as extortion, drugs, and prostitution were flourishing on school grounds.

The National Education Association reported 63,000 assaults on teachers in the single school year 1975-76. Legislative wrath has been aroused by forced busing. Bills to end it proliferate in Congress and in state legislatures. Even a constitutional amendment has been proposed and pushed. The amendment route is too long, however, when first aid is required. State legislatures may be more effective.

In New York, as a single example, Nassau County has retained a Texan expert to draft legislation that will prevent busing across county lines, a direction in which a federal judge is moving. The bill would prohibit students from being "assigned or compelled to attend any public school in order to satisfy any quota, percentage, or related basis of assignment because of race, color, creed, economic status, or national origin."

Is there statistical proof of a positive correlation between forced busing and declining test scores? A fool would invest the dollars necessary to come up with the findings. I intend by this caveat to ward off the Department of Health, Education and Welfare and foundation funds for documenting the obvious.

Common sense and the local experience in many cities and towns make it clear that there is a close connection between forced busing and school disruptions. The disruptions are a major cause of the lack of learning in the schools. The end of disruptions alone will not automatically reverse dipping SAT scores, it will be a corrective in the right direction.

Houston Man Opposes Space Colonies

HOUSTON (UPI) — A University of Houston futurist believes trading the problems of life on Earth for the luxury of colonies in space is a Hollywood fantasy man may never realize.

Dr. Jib Fowles, chairman of UH-Clear Lake graduate studies of the future, said movies like "2001", "Star Wars" and "Close Encounters" and television shows like "Star Trek" often suggest that space can be liberating for people.

"In my eyes, the answer is crystal clear that it simply cannot be," Fowles said. "Of all the environments that we are aware of, space is the most confining because it's the most unfriendly to human life."

"In order to survive, it's going to have to be a thoroughly technologized life. That means the sacrifices to technology are going to have to be severe, (with) very little free choice."

Quality of life aside, Fowles questioned whether science and technology will ever deliver permanently populated space colonies because of human physiological and psychological problems.

He cited the fact that the Skylab astronauts who remained in space 84 days suffered losses in red blood cells and key minerals. He pointed to mental difficulties among residents of isolated scientific stations on Earth.

"People who think about these (Skylab) problems say they'll disappear when they're put into artificial gravity. We don't really know how much 'hat resembles real gravity,'" he said.

The black-footed ferret, a small furry animal related to the mink and the common European ferret, has black feet and masked eyes like a raccoon.

"We have some evidence from (life on stations) Antarctica. The system begins to degenerate. They (residents) begin to lose their memories. About 50 per cent seemed simply to turn their brains off."

Further, he said such key elements of successful colonization as food and raw materials may be major problems.

"It's quite possible that we're not going to be able to grow food. No one knows how to make a closed ecological system. The Russians have been working on this for 10 years. All their experiments have been failures."

"The source of raw materials is problematic. All the lunar surface that we've looked at so far has only a little more mineral content than average earth soil."

Fowles conceded the possibility of major technological breakthroughs, but argued that even then space colonization will remain unlikely because of high cost.

"Economics in the end determines a great deal if not all of this. We could live any place we please, assuming advances, if people were willing to be taxed to the level necessary. But the questions of cost are just prohibitive."

He estimated the cost of a full-fledged, space colony orbiting Earth at $200 billion. That's about half the federal budget for 1977.

"That's just the first one up there. One that could only handle 10,000 people. If we have more than one, the costs are going to be enormous."

He questioned whether the productivity of space stations could justify such costs, pointing to the popular idea of energy from solar powered satellites as an example.

"Although it seems very attractive at first glance, it turns out to be not so feasible. It's very unlikely that solar power satellites will be cost effective."

"I think we will continue to explore. But if we are to have space installations, we're probably going to have to have them run by computers and not have people on them at all, at least not for very long."

Ag Committee Hearings To Focus On Problems

By CHARLES J. CANNON
United Press International Writer

The Senate Agriculture Committee chairman says hearings later this month will focus attention on the problems of American agriculture, but strikers already are attracting plenty of notice with blockades of livestock markets and trains.

Sen. Herman Talmadge, D-Ga., said Wednesday Agriculture Secretary Bob Bergland would testify in Washington Jan. 24 at the first in a series of hearings to determine "what constructive steps can be taken to help our producers bring demand and supply into balance."

Talmadge, who helped guide a four-year farm bill through Congress last year, said he had no ideas for new legislation but wants to study steps that can be taken under discretionary powers included in the act.

Meanwhile, a judge ordered strikers to lift their blockades which had closed two livestock markets in Michigan and farmers stopped 11 railroad trains in Texas and New Mexico to gain support for their strike but were prevented from driving their tractors on Missouri interstate highways to a scheduled rally in Tennessee.

Strikers placed red flares on railroad tracks west of Cannon Air Force Base, N.M., and halted two Santa Fe freight trains for about 20 minutes. They plastered the engine with signs demanding 100 percent parity, then allowed the train to continue.

Railroad officials knew of the stoppage beforehand and warned the engineers by telephone. There were no incidents and farmers thanked the railroad men for their cooperation.

In Texas, nine different trains were forced to make 11 stops.

Near Hayti, Mo., farmers blocked an entrance ramp to Interstate 55 for several hours after state police refused to let them drive tractors onto the highway en route to Dyersburg, Tenn. Several Missouri Highway Patrol cars suffered minor injuries when a tractor equipped with a blade shoved them out of the way.

There were no arrests and no violence, but several tickets were issued for traffic violations.

A judge Wednesday issued permanent injunctions preventing strikers from blocking entrance and exit points at two major livestock markets in southwestern Michigan. And Minnesota police escorted three truckloads of Canadian cattle on a 400-mile trip after protestors would not allow the animals to be unloaded at a packing plant in Long Prairie.

The cattle were unloaded at South St. Paul and fed and watered before being loaded for shipment to a packing plant in St. Cloud.

Farm Group Demonstrators Greet Talks Set To Resume

HOUSTON (AP) — Voting delegates to the American Farm Bureau Federation were to resume debates today on whether or not to lend support to striking farmers.

Delegates kicked the issue around for more than three hours Wednesday night and then adjourned without reaching a decision.

A policy statement prepared by a committee headed by Iowa Farm Bureau president Dean Kleckner said it would be illegal for the federation to support any action that would restrain marketing or pricing of farm products.

Doyle Radghe, a Phillipsburg, Kan. delegate, then introduced an alternate resolution that would allow federation members to decide for themselves what action to take concerning the American Agriculture movement.

"Farm Bureau, as an organization, cannot legally endorse any agreement or understanding which limits the marketing of commodities or controls the price to be obtained for such commodities without violating the antitrust laws and subjecting itself and its members to severe criminal and civil penalties," the policy statement said in part.

The statement further stated the Farm Bureau has accomplished much in obtaining higher incomes for agriculture but added... "We believe that if improved net incomes are to be long lasting, they must be achieved through market prices obtained in the marketplace and must not be dictated by government or arbitrarily set by individuals or groups of individuals."

Many farmers taking part in the American Agriculture strike said the Farm Bureau does not represent most of the country's farmers.

Former Secretary of Agriculture Earl Butz, in an impromptu speech before the delegates Wednesday, discouraged any participation in the farmers strike.

"I think these people have served a useful purpose in pointing up to the people of this nation the serious economic crisis of the American farmer," Butz said, in referring to the agriculture strikes. "Beyond that, I think it might become counterproductive. The country soon will turn off any sympathy it might have had."

Mondale On Tour

GREAT FALLS, Mont. (UPI) — Vice President Walter Mondale was greeted in two Western cities Wednesday by farm strike picketers carrying signs calling him "Carter's comedy team" and telling them to "Go Home, Three Stooges."

Mondale, who swung from Grand Junction, Colo., to Great Falls, Mont. in his tour of the West with Agriculture Secretary Bob Bergland and Interior Secretary Cecil Andrus admitted at a meeting with about 250 Montana farmers that the administration's farm bill and other actions "don't get an A."

Joyce Robinson, of Teton County Mont., called the administration farm bill, "at best planned poverty and at worst suicide."

In a Great Falls agricultural conference with Bergland and Andrus, she called for 100 percent parity on farm prices and for a halt to farm imports until such parity is reached.

As Bergland drove from the airport to the meeting, trucks lined the roadway for a quarter of a mile. Some signs demanded his resignation and another said "Mondale Go Home — We Can Find Our Own Way."

Another sign said "Dying farmers are sick of 'floury' speeches."

In Grand Junction, 20 farmers gave Mondale a bumper sticker saying "Crime Pays Better Than Farming: Strike!"

They parked a dozen tractors across from a convention hall where Mondale held a town meeting to discuss water and other issues with community leaders. A Colorado farmer told Mondale the Carter administration has made him "ashamed to be a Democrat."

Montana farmers complained about beef imports and called for formation of an international group for regulating wheat and other prices.

Mack Quinn, of the Montana Farm Bureau, complained about the appointment of former consumer advocate Carol Foreman as assistant secretary of agriculture, saying she represents the consumer, rather than the farmer.

Bergland, however, said he recommended her appointment, and that in 27 years as a farmer, he considered "the consumer my customer — the person who uses those things we sell."

Water Authority Denies Motions

PLAINVIEW (Special) — The Canadian River Municipal Water Authority board of directors in a regular meeting here Wednesday denied a motion to increase the authority's water allocation to its member cities for this year.

J. Ray Dickey, representing Lubbock on the board, made a motion to increase water allocation supply to 86,000 acre feet.

However, the motion was denied and directors then approved keeping the supply the same as last year, 72,000 acre feet.

The board also denied a request for water by Hale Center, which is not a member city.

In making their decision, board members said the authority could not allocate water to a non-member city unless a surplus first is declared. But Hale Center could make a deal with one of the member cities to borrow water, directors said.

The board did approve transferring 30 million gallons of water from O'Donnell to Lamesa, both of which belong to the authority.

The board also elected director Ray Renner of Lamesa as president and Jack Skaggs of Plainview as vice president.

Strike Follows Bergland

By The Associated Press

It seems that wherever Agriculture Secretary Bob Bergland goes these days, protesting tractorcades start to form.

Today it was to be Dyersburg, Tenn., weather permitting. Bergland was to speak to the Tennessee Soybean Association and supporters of the American Agriculture movement were "looking for a tractorcade if at all possible."

Snow and sleet made roads slippery but farmers from three states were still trying to drive their farm equipment to Dyersburg to demonstrate support for the national farm strike.

But, while farmers showed once again that they were willing to protest to emphasize their demands for more money for their crops, it was uncertain just how far they would be willing to go in the strike.

Leaders of the effort said this week that it would succeed if farmers in Kansas would follow a recommendation to destroy one-third of their winter wheat crop. That suggestion was not greeted enthusiastically.

Strike Follows Bergland

"We can make this thing work," said Bill Nicholas of the American Agriculture state office in Johnson, Kan. "If Kansas can plow up its wheat, we're home free."

But Earl Hunt of Arkansas City, vice president of the Kansas Association of Wheat Growers, responded at a meeting in Great Bend, "It's been historically true in the past that farmers do a lot of talking but when it gets down to action, they wait for their neighbor to take the first step."

one of the three subcommittee members at the hearing, also heard testimony from state officials and agriculture experts from Texas A&M University. Sen. Carlos Truan, D-Corpus Christi, was unable to attend the hearing because his flight was canceled due to an ice storm and the other committee member, Sen. Max Sherman, D-Amarillo, has resigned from the Senate.

Gov. Dolph Briscoe, Attorney General John Hill, House Speaker Bill Clayton, and Rep. Joe Hubenak, D-Rosenberg, chairman of the House Agriculture and Livestock Committee and a candidate for Texas Agriculture Commissioner, issued statements announcing their support of the farmers.

"I think we (state officials) ought to get down to realizing that either we want to speak to the goals of full parity or we don't," Hill said as the farmers cheered and applauded. "I, for one, want to speak to them."

Clayton and Briscoe, in a joint statement, said they endorsed the farmers' movement for 100 percent parity and would urge Congress and the Carter Administration to act immediately to remedy the situation.

"Here we live in a country where we are so efficient that the farmer is penalized for it," said Clayton, who read the statement.

Hubenak said the state needs less government and more qualified agriculture leaders.

"I don't think you can make farm policy unless you have leaders that chopped cotton, hauled hay and milked those cows seven days a week," Hubenak said.

Newspaper Says Charlie Chaplin To Be Missed

By United Press International
Following is a sample of what the nation's newspapers have been saying:

The Springfield (Mass.) Morning Union
Charlie Chaplin's knack for conveying pathos as well as humor in a time when the movies were silent and had yet to achieve technical excellence, remained unique even to his death.

As a master of pantomime, Chaplin probably did more than any other Hollywood figure to build the early movies into an art form with broad appeal.

It was unfortunate that so great a career was marred in its later stages by a perjury suit and by charges he was a Communist sympathizer. As a result, while he was on a trip to England in 1952, he was denied re-entry to this country on grounds of moral turpitude and political affiliations.

A British citizen, he remained abroad, returning only in 1972 to receive an honorary Oscar award.

But Charlie Chaplin's artistry had a brilliance that couldn't be dimmed by the clamor of moralists or politicians. The "little tramp" of his movies will remain a giant in the history of entertainment.

The Pittsburgh Post-Gazette
Usually when a federal tax-cut proposal is made, it is easy for economists to figure its impact upon the economy. Not so this time with President Carter's $25 billion tax reduction and revision package, said to be in the works for submission to Congress.

It is impossible at this point to make an assessment because the tax package does not stand by itself. It is but one part of a three-legged stool.

Another leg is the proposed payroll tax increase for Social Security approved by Congress just before it adjourned for the holidays. The third element is the energy bill which contains three Carter tax proposals.

Reports about the tax-cut package Mr. Carter is expected to unveil next year say it calls for roughly one-third of the tax relief to go to business and two-thirds to individuals. This was a change from earlier versions which called for about $5 billion less in cuts, with business getting only one-fourth of the total.

The Atlanta Journal-Constitution
Back in the early days of his administration, President Carter startled government employees by expressing dismay that some of them might be "living in sin." They should get married, he said.

Well, the Social Security bill he has now signed takes a big step against sin among the elderly. It removes the provisions under which Social Security benefits had been reduced if a widow or widower remarried, as far as people 60 years or older are concerned. It had been argued for years that the old law was actually an incentive for elderly persons to cohabit without marrying, and it gave Johnny Carson some jokes about Sun City turning into Sin City.

At long last the government has made it possible for the older folks to set a better example.

Los Angeles Times
Gerald R. Ford frequently talks like a man who is thinking about running for President in 1980, but he is clearly not impressed by warnings from Republican ultra-conservatives that no one who supports the Panama Canal treaties can get the party's nomination.

When the former President was in Washington recently, he used the occasion to criticize the current occupant of the White House for not conducting a vigorous enough campaign in behalf of the treaties. President Carter must do more, he said, to get the treaties ratified by the Senate next year.

No doubt some politics was involved in the criticism. Because Ford is the most important figure in the party out of power, fault-finding with the incumbent President is part of his job.

He's right, though. The White House is conducting a determined campaign to persuade opinion leaders of the treaties' merits, but so far it has not done nearly enough to persuade the American people, most of whom, according to polls, still oppose Senate ratification.

Gen. Omar Torrijos, the Panamanian strongman, is said to have warned Washington that he cannot hold Panamanian support for the treaties unless they are ratified by April 1.

We like the way Ford is sticking by his support of the treaties, which would transfer control of the canal to Panama by the year 2000, but give the United States the permanent right to defend the canal.

Ford's support of the canal treaties comes naturally. Their essentials were negotiated by his own administration; he knows personally that the agreements are in the best interests of the United States.

The Philadelphia Daily News
In these days of high unemployment, it's good to see that one category of American seems to have little difficulty finding work — public servants who left office under a cloud.

The jobs, mostly rather remunerative ones, usually are given by foreigners who'd like a little influence with the American government. And who would know better how things work than a semi-idle pal of the people in power?

Spiro Agnew, the great statesman, orator and bribetaker of the Nixon regime, showed the way. Agnew has been doing quite well, thank you, representing every one-camel sheik and would-be Greek dictator who has the money to buy a Maryland politician.

Guess who the big money headhunters are after now?

Bert Lance.

Same guy. Bert (Overdraft) Lance, the President's good buddy from Georgia, the guy who went home after his ability to enrich himself through the leverage of money people had deposited in his bank, is being considered by a bunch of Arab financiers as the man to take care of their investments in the United States.

The Parkersburg (W.Va.) News
We are among the millions of Americans who are more than a little confused over the farmers' strike. That they are aiming at better economic conditions for themselves is easy to ascertain. But at which party or parties are the aggrieved toilers of the soil the attack directed?

Only one thing is clear as crystal; that the disturbed farmers are going to withhold crops and livestock from the market until the price level is raised.

Recognizing as we do, the plight of the farmers, they have but to look toward Washington to vent their anger. Candidate Carter in his many speeches in the farming country of the Middle West promised his listeners dozens of things he know he could not deliver if elected. He assured them they would get higher prices for all of their products and that the farmer would become a political power. None of these promises have been kept.

Nashua (N.H.) Telegraph
Ronald Reagan's announcement that he won't take part in any further Republican fund raising activities should come as no great surprise. The pique of anger was forthcoming after Republican National Committee Chairman William Brock refused to disperse party funds for the purpose of opposing the proposed Panama Canal treaties.

Governor Reagan should know full well that there is anything but unanimity within the GOP concerning the canal treaties. Has he forgotten that it was under two Republican presidents that most of the negotiations were carried out?

In sharp contrast to Governor Reagan's "my way or else" attitude is former President Gerald Ford campaigning on behalf of some of the very Republicans who engineered his defeat.

Washington Post
The tribulations of Yale University have become extremely public in the course of its embarrassing attempts to recruit a new president. The man who finally agreed to take it, A. Bartlett Giamatti, professor of English and chairman of humanities at Yale, is not the first person to whom it was offered. But the friends and admirers of the university will not necessarily be sorry to see that the corporation was finally driven, in desperation, to turn to a scholar and teacher from its own faculty. Yale's troubles deserve attention precisely because they are shared, in one degree or another, by all of the country's first-rate universities.

Eagleton Episode Still Unclear

By WALTER R. MEARS
WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. George McGovern says Sen. Thomas F. Eagleton would have defied him and refused to withdraw as his vice presidential nominee in 1972 "if I so much as hinted publicly" at concern about his ability to cope with the stress of national office.

McGovern now says that was the concern that finally convinced him Eagleton should quit the Democratic ticket. But he says Eagleton's price for withdrawal was a guarantee that his health would not be blamed.

In his newly published autobiography, "Grassroots," McGovern writes that he complied because he had no power to force his running mate to withdraw.

"I did what I had to, but the Eagleton matter ended whatever chance there was to defeat Richard Nixon in 1972," says McGovern, whose Democratic ticket was defeated overwhelmingly.

Sargent Shriver took Eagleton's place on that losing ticket.

Eagleton withdrew as Democratic vice presidential nominee on July 31, 1972, a week after disclosing that he had entered hospitals in 1960, 1964 and 1966 to be treated for nervous exhaustion and fatigue, and on two of those occasions had undergone electric shock therapy.

McGovern also writes that Eagleton threatened to turn against the ticket he was leaving and "fight me" during the campaign if the health issue was raised later to explain the vice presidential switch.

McGovern quotes two doctors who had treated Eagleton as saying privately they were concerned about his ability to withstand the stress of the presidency should he ever succeed to that office. McGovern does not name the doctors.

Eagleton would not discuss the McGovern account, but disputed it indirectly by saying that the fairest and most objective version of the episode is that of author Theodore H. White in "The Making of the President -1972." White wrote that Eagleton volunteered to withdraw after trying unsuccessfully to persuade McGovern that he should stay.

In addition, White's book reports that McGovern said after talking to the doctors that "the bill of health was clean."

Eagleton, re-elected to the Senate in Missouri by a landslide two years after the vice presidential episode, suggested that he may yet have the last word. "Should I ever write my autobiography, it will no doubt include my recollections" of 1972, he said.

McGovern recounts the chaotic and confused series of staff and personal contacts through which he learned of his running mate's medical record, and his own mishandling of the problem. At one point he had said he was 1,000 percent for Eagleton and had no intention of dropping him. But the pressure for a change in the ticket intensified steadily.

Finally, on July 31, Eagleton and McGovern met in a Senate anteroom, joined by Sen. Gaylord Nelson of Wisconsin, a mutual friend.

According to McGovern, Eagleton said then that he was resigned to leaving the ticket, but insisted that his health not be cited as the explanation, and said that he and his staff had drafted a statement to that effect for McGovern to use in announcing the withdrawal.

"I was troubled by all this, but I knew I did not have the legal authority to force him off the ticket," McGovern writes. "Either he would leave on his own terms, or not at all."

Eagleton had agreed earlier to contact his doctors that night and arrange for McGovern to talk with them. McGovern says he talked with a doctor in St. Louis and another at the Mayo Clinic, in Rochester, Minn.

McGovern says that both were psychiatrists, and both were cautious about discussing Eagleton's case.

"Despite their reluctance, they finally offered specific details of Eagleton's medical history which I thought raised serious doubts about his capacity to carry the burdens and responsibility of the presidency," McGovern writes. He says they asked him not to disclose those details.

He also says that both doctors expressed concern "when I asked what the risks would be should Tom have to take over the presidency."

McGovern says that left him with no doubt that Eagleton should withdraw.

"But I also knew that if I so much as hinted publicly about the doubts concerning his future mental stability, he would not leave the ticket," the South Dakota senator writes. "Indeed, when I returned to the discussion with Nelson and Eagleton, the latter said bluntly that if I or any of my aides publicly raised the issue of his health at any point, he would fight me 'right through to November.'"

McGovern says Eagleton then handed him a statement saying that "while health was not the issue, it had so diverted attention from the true problems before the nation that I was, therefore, asking him to resign ..." Eagleton was to respond with a statement saying that he didn't agree, but was resigning for the sake of party harmony.

"It was, he repeated, the only condition under which he would resign."

White's book tells a different story. "Eagleton said to McGovern, 'George, if my presence on the ticket causes you any embarrassment or hindrance, or an impediment, I'll step aside,' McGovern said. 'Yes.'"

In any event, the matter was settled, and Eagleton left the ticket.

Nelson, the only other witness to that final meeting, said he did not want to add his recollections because he had been there only as an invited friend of the two principals. "I don't feel very comfortable with the idea that I inject myself as an interpreter of one side or the other," the Wisconsin senator said.

Information Sought In Horse Killing

GREEN FOREST, Ark. (AP) — A prize-winning Arabian horse valued in excess of $150,000 was killed New Year's Eve, apparently by a hammer-like blow to the head.

Mr. and Mrs. Jearl O'Brien of Hi-Pocket Farm near here have offered a $10,000 reward for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the people responsible for the killing of Hi-Borr, an 18-month-old stallion.

A veterinarian who performed an autopsy at Oklahoma State University told the O'Briens that the person who hit the horse had to know about animals to kill it with one blow.

She said an offer of $150,000 for Hi-Borr was turned down recently. The horse was the most valuable animal on the farm, she said. Hi-Borr recently placed third in the Arabian American Royal Horse Show at Kansas City and had won the Get of Sire Class in an Oklahoma horse show.

Harris Employees Given Salary Hikes

HOUSTON (AP) — A nine percent across-the-board salary raise for county employees has been approved by the Harris County Commissioners Court.

The measure passed without a dissenting vote Tuesday.

Commissioners' salaries will go to $40,138 a year, an increase of $3,314.

To benefit low-salaried employees who would gain little from the 9 percent raise, the commissioners set $75 as the minimum monthly raise.

Argentina Must Reach Decision

By United Press International
BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (UPI) — Argentina must decide soon whether to accept a ruling by an international court that Chile is the rightful owner of three disputed islands near the Beagle Channel at the southern tip of South America.

Diplomatic sources say the government has already warned Santiago it will reject the verdict unless Chile's military regime agrees to negotiate soon aspects of the court's findings.

Should Argentina formally turn down the ruling, relations between the two countries would almost certainly deteriorate rapidly. It has until Feb. 2 to announce its stand.

OAXACA, Mexico (UPI) — Getting elected mayor in the impoverished southern state of Oaxaca can be more a punishment than an honor.

Of the 570 winners in elections late last year, 50 fled the state rather than take office, 20 appealed to the courts to relieve them of their posts and 50 were thrown in jail to force them to fulfill their civic duties.

Mayors have it tough in Oaxaca. On municipal budgets that can dip below 5 cents a day, they aren't able to finance projects or even promise to do so.

And, torn from their farms to perform office work that often pays next to nothing, they have on several occasions been sued for divorce on grounds of non-support.

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brasil (UPI) — Brazil is rapidly building more ships in a drive to double the tonnage of its young merchant marine in the next two years.

Authorities have announced plans to construct more than three-quarters of a million tons of shipping this year — a large step toward their goal of making the national fleet 90 percent Brazilian-built by the end of 1979.

Under the second national ship building plan, which ends then, $1.4 billion is being invested in the construction of 5.3 million gross tons of new shipping.

Brazilian tonnage has more than doubled in the past six years and should double again before the end of the decade, planners say.

The current Brazilian merchant fleet consists of 247 ocean vessels and 799 coastal and river freighters, making it the seventh largest in the world.

CARACAS, Venezuela (UPI) — President Carlos Andres Perez says a special meeting of the oil cartel will be held early this year to discuss his call for an immediate price increase of at least 5 percent. The 13 members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries announced a de facto six-month price freeze at their December meeting because they were unable to reach an agreement on the issue.

Their next scheduled get-together is June 10. But Perez insists OPC will call a special session sometime in April to examine his proposal for a price hike of 5 percent to 8 percent, with the proceeds going to poor countries.

There has been no confirmation from any of the other 12 OPEC capitals.

Call By Irish Leader Irks British Officials

LONDON (UPI) — British and Northern Ireland officials and politicians reacted with anger today over a call by Irish republic Prime Minister Jack Lynch for Britain to pull out of Ulster.

British officials branded the proposal "disturbing" and "unhelpful."

Harry West, leader of the Protestant Official Unionist party said he is pulling out of talks with other political groups on restoration of power-sharing local government in the province until the British government has made it clear it has no intention of abandoning Ulster.

Lynch touched off the furor in a Dublin radio interview Sunday.

He said he would like to see "a form of administration, North and South, that would be acceptable to the majority of the Irish people, if not complete unity under one government, even if it were an interim acceptability, during my lifetime."

Lynch also hinted at the possibility of an amnesty for members of the Irish Republican Army when the violence ends.

Northern Ireland Secretary Roy Mason refused immediate comment until he has had time to study the text of the Lynch statement.

Mason has been involved for some weeks in delicate talks with leaders of all Northern Ireland's political parties to see whether it is possible to restore some form of local government in the province with both the Protestant majority and Roman Catholic minority sharing power.

Rhodesian Rule Talks Bog Down

SALISBURY, Rhodesia (UPI) — The majority rule talks between Rhodesian Prime Minister Ian Smith and three black leaders have bogged down in an argument over numbers.

The two sides have already reached substantial agreements on several constitutional questions about a future black-ruled Zimbabwe, as the nationalists call Rhodesia.

Now they must decide how many whites will sit in Zimbabwe's parliament. Smith insists they be given one third of the seats. Two of the black leaders have offered them one fifth.

Unless some sort of compromise can be worked out on this key issue, political observers say, the negotiations could break down.

Smith originally made eight demands, six aimed largely at ensuring a smooth power transfer and efficient, democratic institutions. After some haggling over semantics, the blacks accepted those six.

The seventh says: "The above provisions must be entrenched so that a majority of two-thirds plus one of the membership of parliament is required for their agreement."

And the eighth says one third of the future parliament's seats must be held by whites who have been elected by whites.

Disputing those figures are two recognized black nationalists: Bishop Abel Muzorewa of the United African National Council and the Rev. Ndabaningi Sithole of the African National Council.

The third black taking part in the talks — Jeremiah Chirau, president of the Zimbabwe United Peoples' Organization and an anti-guerrilla tribal chief who once served in Smith's cabinet — apparently has no real arguments with Smith.

Muzorewa initially agreed to give whites one third of the seats in parliament but rejected the notion that whites be elected only by whites. He wanted a common black-white voters' roll.

No, said Smith. Blacks outnumber whites 30 to 1. Any white elected to parliament by blacks would be regarded as a stooge by the bulk of white voters.

Sithole agreed to separate voters' rolls, which, given Smith's popularity, would probably give candidates of his ruling Rhodesian Front most of the white seats.

But Sithole said whites should have only a parliamentary fifth. Constitutional safeguards could be amended, he said, only by a vote of four fifths plus four members of parliament.

Additionally, the safeguards would not be debated during the life of the first parliament, according to his plan.

Muzorewa then agreed to a blocking fifth and separate voters' roles — plus a requirement for a vote of four-fifths plus one vote to amend constitutional safeguards.

But Smith has been holding out for a third and has offered a compromise — of sorts. He proposed a common voters' roll for whites but said the candidates should first be selected in all-white primary elections.

The prime minister has advanced several arguments to back up his insistence on reserving one third of parliamentary seats for whites. Such a setup, he said at first, would protect the constitutional safeguards he is seeking.

Now he claims white voters — who must approve any agreement in a referendum — will accept nothing less than one-third. Having had 100 percent for so long, he argues, they might now be willing to settle for 33 percent but not just 20.

Black nationalists counter they will be unable to sell a white parliamentary third on Smith's terms, especially to the guerrillas who are not even represented at the talks. Giving a 20 percent block to white voters who only make up three percent of the population is already generous, they say.

DR. LAMB

Hydergine Ineffective

By LAWRENCE E. LAMB, M.D.
 DEAR DR. LAMB — My husband and I are both 64, and our doctor, who retired a year ago, prescribed Hydergine for use. I still have some and can also get refills.
 Will you please tell us about Hydergine and what it is supposed to do for aging persons? Any ill effects?

DEAR READER — I'm afraid there is no good evidence that the medicine is really effective. There are some short-term studies to suggest that it may be helpful in decreasing confusion (in which case it should be used at all ages if my observations are on target), mood-depression and unsoviability — all attributed to old age.
 Fortunately there are no important side effects, and the few that have been noted would have already bothered you if you were going to have any problem taking the medication.

Therefore, I don't see any reason you can't have a refill, but considering the lack of demonstrated effectiveness of the medicine and because the symptoms the medicine is used to treat are often of obscure origin — not just old age — I think you really should see a doctor. You need a doctor who is familiar with your husband's and your medical status. It is a bad thing to start looking for a doctor when you have an emergency.

One of the difficulties in evaluating medicines that are supposed to help in aging is that any program that involves the patient or gets him active again will often benefit him. Just having someone interested in you often has a remarkable effect. The patient, in thinking medicines are helpful, may really be having a psychological response.

To give you information on what we really know about aging I am sending you The Health Letter number 1-7, Perpetual Youth Aging. Others who want this information can send 50 cents with a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope for it to me in care of this newspaper, P.O. Box 1551, Radio City Station, New York, NY 10019.

DEAR DR. LAMB — My daughter is a teenager, and when she is home she watches TV 10 hours a day. I have told her she will be wearing glasses very soon if she does not turn off the TV, but he does not believe me.

Her big excuse is she watches it from a distance so it will not harm her. Please tell me does watching so much TV harm her eyes? Does the distance from which she watches matter? How long should she watch TV?

DEAR READER — TV will not hurt her eyes. If children insist on sitting close to the TV set you might suspect they are nearsighted and need an eye examination.

The problem with too much TV is not that it will hurt the eyes but what sitting inactive so long does to the rest of the body. There are studies that show that inactivity from watching TV leads to loss of muscle strength, and symptoms of fatigue. Such people become what doctors call deconditioned, somewhat similar to a person who lies in bed all the time.

I think the answer to how much TV she can watch is the amount of time that is left after a good amount of physical activity everyday and some involvement with other people her own age, plus accomplishing her school work in good order. In other words, there is not set number of hours but she should be encouraged to develop more balanced, good, healthy life style that helps her to develop her body and her mind normally.

Police Holding Man's Remains

FORT WORTH (AP) — Walter Claude Blount — or at least the copper urn containing his ashes — resides amid the bicycles and television sets in the property room of the Fort Worth Police Department.

And mystified police have no idea what to do with him. They don't even know who he is.

A notation on the bottom of the urn says Blount died in Los Angeles on June 18, 1932, at age 59. His body was cremated at Inglewood Park Cemetery there.

Police know nothing else about him. Nor do they know why someone left Blount's ashes in a room of the now-vacant Westbrook Hotel in downtown Fort Worth.

Fort Worth policeman Joe Remza said authorities have no idea how long the urn was left at the Westbrook, which closed two years ago, or why it was left there.

"We've asked the Los Angeles police to try to trace Blount's background and determine whether he had any close relatives," said Remza. "We're hopeful that we can locate members of his family and turn over his remains to them. They should stay with the family."

A spokeswoman for the Los Angeles cemetery could provide little help in solving the mystery.

"Our records show that Mr. Blount's ashes remained with us until May 9, 1933," she said. "Then they were claimed by an Etta Blount. Although the records don't identify her, we assume she was his widow."

"We have no way of knowing what became of her. Nor do we have other information which might help police determine whether there is anyone still alive who would want to keep the urn."

Workers found the urn as they prepared to demolish the once-opulent hotel. Uncertain what to do with Blount's ashes, they delivered them to police.

Officers duly tagged the urn and place it in the property room, then began their search for Blount's relatives.

Police noted that the Westbrook operated briefly as a retirement center before closing and speculated that Blount's widow, or another member of the family, lived there and kept the urn until either dying or becoming too ill to keep track of their property.

Suppose the effort to find a next-of-kin proves unsuccessful. What happens to the urn containing Walter Claude Blount?

"We haven't given any thought to that," said Remza. "I guess it could become a permanent fixture in the property room."

Tut To Get Traditional Jazz Rites

NEW ORLEANS (UPI) — It will be a little more than 3,000 years late, but King Tutankhamun of Egypt will receive a traditional jazz funeral.

Officials announced plans for the funeral which will mark the end of the exhibit of artifacts from Tut's tomb at the New Orleans Museum of Art.

The officials said Tut would be eulogized and a brass band would play dirges and more upbeat tunes — just like at any jazz funeral — when the last of about 850,000 visitors view the 55 gold and jeweled artifacts Jan. 15.

"We really thought it was a great idea, especially since jazz is known as New Orleans' best local tradition," said exhibit coordinator Barbara Neiswender.

"Jazz is part of our heritage. It's also not inappropriate in regard to the way an Egyptian funeral would have been conducted. They had processions, too."

The closing of the Tut exhibit in New Orleans coincides with the Super Bowl, which will be held just a few miles away in the Louisiana Superdome.

"I'm sure there will be a lot of people from out of town who will be coming to see the exhibit," Mrs. Neiswender said. She said the jazz funeral would tie in with Egyptian philosophy about death.

"It's the whole idea of death not being the end, the whole idea of our jazz funeral tradition being like their feeling that there's a life after death," Mrs. Neiswender said.

After New Orleans, the display moves on to Los Angeles, Seattle, San Francisco and New York.

GETTING READY FOR JAIL — Mary Gregory, 46, of Keene, N.H., and Kevin Hopkins, 26, of Loudon, waited for sheriff's deputies to take them to jail Wednesday. The two have decided to accept three-month sentences stemming from a 1976 demonstration at the Seabrook nuclear power plant. (AP Laserphoto)

Woman Accepts Jail Term For Protest

EXETER, N.H. (AP) — Forty-seven-year-old Mary Gregory says she decided to serve a three-month jail term for demonstrating against the Seabrook nuclear power plant to show that older people are willing to take a stand.
 "We tend to let young people do our protesting for us," she said. "That may not be as significant because they do not have as much to lose."
 Mrs. Gregory was interviewed Wednesday outside a courtroom, waiting to surrender to the Rockingham County sheriff.
 With her was the reading material she was taking to jail — the Bible and texts on philosophy and the dangers of nuclear power.
 A slight, fair-haired woman with six children, Mrs. Gregory said she decided to drop her appeal and serve her sentence "to show that older, more established people are still willing to disrupt their lives to take a stand for something they believe in."
 Mrs. Gregory and 10 others are appealing contempt of court convictions for their role in an August 1976 demonstration to protest construction of the $2.3 billion plant. A year later, 1,414 protesters were arrested in a larger demonstration at the plant site, where construction is still underway.

On Wednesday, Mrs. Gregory and Kevin Hopkins, 26, opted to revoke their bail and begin their sentences before the appeals are completed.
 Mrs. Gregory and her husband, who teaches biology and ecology at Keene State College, decided their children would fare better if she served her sentence now so she would be home during the summer.
 Mrs. Gregory has taken a semester's sabbatical from her job teaching pottery at Keene State.
 "When I trespassed on the site of the Seabrook nuclear power plant I saw it as civil disobedience and I am willing to pay the penalty," Mrs. Gregory said before surrendering.
 "I didn't feel I had the right to condemn future generations to cancer and genetic damage, to the constant threat of nuclear catastrophe, without doing anything," she said.

Shopping Spree During Holiday Noted in 1977

WASHINGTON (AP) — Christmas shoppers spent 15 percent more at department stores last month than during December 1976, but the holiday spree failed to spur the economy, government figures show.
 The Commerce Department reported Tuesday that department store shoppers spent $11.3 billion in December, up from $9.8 billion the year before. The percentage increase outpaced the rate of inflation, which was about 6 percent during the same period.
 However, the rise in sales from November to December in 1977 was very slight, mainly because October and November were strong months, the department said.
 After making seasonal adjustments, economists found that department stores sold only 0.5 percent more in December than in November.
 Total retail sales in December declined 0.7 percent from November, the first monthly drop since a 0.3 percent decline in June. December sales were up 8 percent from December 1976, just ahead of the rate of inflation.
 Courtenay M. Slater, the department's chief economist, said retail sales for the fourth quarter of 1977 were particularly strong because of increases of 2.7 percent in October and 1.5 percent in November.
 She said a comparison with December 1976 may be misleading because that was a particularly strong month in the economic recovery: Auto sales were strong then, unlike this past December, when sales fell 0.2 percent from November. They are expected to decline further this year.
 The department did not provide a full breakdown of goods, but it reported that furniture sales were up 12 percent from December 1976 and clothing store sales were up 5 percent.

Teachers Group Selects Slogan

By PATRICIA McCORMACK
United Press International
"I love kids and so does my profession," it says on a T-shirt Larry L. Bateman sometimes wears to his office in Washington.

Bateman is president of the Student National Education Association — membership, 50,000 future teachers from colleges across the nation.

The shirt advertising sentiments motivating Bateman and others in a field where pay is relatively low and opportunities few is being sold these days by the Student Virginia Education Association.

Profits from the shirt sale are helping to pay expenses for Virginia delegates to the annual meeting of future teachers next week in Philadelphia, Pa.

The biggest payoff in the shirt sale, according to Russell Smelley, SVEA president, is "advertising the spirit future teachers stand for."

Bateman, a graduate student on leave from the University of Arkansas in Fayetteville, said most future teachers feel that the slogan on the shirt says, "Teaching is not so much for the money but to experience the rewarding feelings of teaching and seeing the students grow," he said.

"There are not opportunities in every field but in math and science there are shortages."

In an interview Bateman, from Westminster, Calif., talked about issues in education — from a teacher's standpoint.

As with "working" teachers, Bateman said there would be no surplus of teachers if the class size were lowered to 24 pupils per teacher nationwide.

Some 300,000 teachers are jobless.

On other issues, including most to be addressed at the annual meeting, Bateman said the future teacher organization stands this way:

- Corporal punishment "We believe corporal punishment should be outlawed."
- Violence in the classroom. "It is the biggest thing facing teachers today. It is not just in inner city schools but in suburban schools as well — all over the nation."
- College student's rights. "Our members as average college students have rights. When paying tuition to a university we expect a tright to career guidance and to courses that live up to their description in college catalogues."
- On student responsibilities. "Colleges have the right to expect certain things from students: attendance and the completion of assignments." In tours of dozens of college campuses Batemen has learned teachers gripe honestly when they complain of students not showing up for classes and not doing outside work. "Students are not as enthusiastic or as dedicated as they should be these days," professors told him.

- On practice teaching. "Practice teachers sometimes are used as substitute teachers or as strike breakers. Our association opposes both practices."
- Proposed resolutions at the annual meeting of the Student National Education Association include the following:
 1. Sexism in Education. "The association believes that educational materials and processes should accurately portray the contributions of women both in the past and the present."
 2. Competency-based programs. "The association believes that competent teachers employ the most appropriate processes known for the promotion of learning. It opposes models that prescribe single limited definitions of competence that reduce the process of teaching to mechanical, nonprofessional acts, or that seek to measure teacher competence on the basis of student achievement."
 3. Mainstreaming (handicapped students coming into the regular schools as required by federal law). The association supports the idea of mainstreaming handicapped students.

Six Persons Wounded During African Unrest

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Police opened fire and wounded six persons stoning them during funerals for four blacks believed killed by security forces in recent unrest, newspapers said today.

The shooting occurred Sunday in black townships around Port Elizabeth. Unrest began in the area after the death of black leader Steve Biko in police detention Sept. 12.

A white man and a black man who both opposed South Africa's racial segregation policies also were shot in the Durban area, but detectives said there was no link "at this stage" between the shootings.

Richard Turner, a white university lecturer banned from teaching for five years for his views, was killed Sunday night by a gunman who fired through a window of his suburban Durban home.

Stephen Mtshali, former black nationalist guerrilla who turned state's evidence in several cases, was shot and wounded by a hooded gunman as he repaired his car in a nearby township.

Protester Celebrates Victory

SEATTLE (AP) — Jeff Dowd, one of the Seattle Seven charged with conspiracy in a 1970 anti-government protest, is still organizing demonstrations.

His latest was a colossal bash Sunday night to celebrate the University of Washington's 27-20 victory over Michigan in the Rose Bowl.

A demonstration is a demonstration, he explained: "If you can't organize a victory party, you'll never organize a communist party."

Dowd, 27, was the brains behind the hastily organized rally at the Edmundson Pavilion. Within three days he arranged for a showing of the game's filmed highlights, hired two bands for a dance, signed-up the marching band and cheerleaders for a performance and arranged for speakers including Mayor-elect Charles Royer.

He nearly booked the rock band Tower of Power for the celebration dance.

It was far cry from Feb. 17, 1970, when about 1,000 demonstrators, watched by another 1,000 sympathizers, lobbed tear gas and paint bombs and smashed windows in the U.S. Courthouse and Federal Office Building to protest contempt-of-court sentences given in the Chicago Seven federal conspiracy trial. Damages were estimated at $30,000.

Dowd and six other members of the Seattle Liberation Front faced charges of destroying government property, conspiring to destroy government property, inciting a riot and interstate travel with intent to incite riot. Eventually the charges were dropped and the defendants pleaded no-contest to contempt-of-court charges.

Dowd, an avid sports fan, believes the Rose Bowl celebration was a political event.

"Sports is one of the few times people get together behind anything these days," he said, shouting over the screams of fans who packed the pavilion.

"The only times I can really feel loose is at a good concert where I can dance or at a sporting event where I can yell. If you can get people together to do this, why can't you get them together for something political?"

The trick to political success, Dowd said, is the same as for success in sports — organization and making people want to get behind a cause.

"At Cornell SDS (Students for a Democratic Society), we had dances every week," he said. "We were one of the best SDS groups in the country because we were a political and a social organization."

He said watched the Rose Bowl at home with "two televisions, about 40 friends and lots of hotdogs."

A political lesson can be learned from organizing in sports, Dowd said.

"The Trail Blazers are the most together team in a long time," he said of Portland's National Basketball Association team. "It's not because they have stars, it's because they work together as a team. Whoever is organizing down there must be a socialist."

Air Crash Victims' Bodies Recovered

BOMBAY, India (AP) — Searchers say they have recovered the bodies of 92 of the 213 persons killed when an Air India jumbo jet crashed into the Arabian Sea off Bombay on New Year's Day.

Seventy-one of the bodies were cremated unidentified. The rest were turned over to relatives. The search by Indian navy divers and fishermen is continuing.

The Boeing 747 exploded and plunged into the water five miles offshore after taking off for Dubai. The cause of the crash is still unknown.

Lesser Known Stocks Show Gains In 1977

By JOHN CUNIFF
NEW YORK (AP) — The past year was a poor one for the stock market in terms of dollars lost, but for some of the lesser known issues it really wasn't as bad as you might have believed.

A study of the year's activity shows that some of these stocks, such as those traded over the counter, attracted more buyers than sellers, contrary to the performance of a lot of blue chips.

The strength of some less well known stocks, in fact, casts a degree of doubt on the contention of certain critics that activity is becoming concentrated in only the top 100 or so blue chips.

The study by Interactive Data Corp., shows that the average share price on the American Stock Exchange rose 15.6 per cent and that industrial issues traded over the counter advanced 15.6 per cent.

Even some so-called second tier stocks on the NYSE rose during the year, as indicated by an average per-share decline of only 1.3 percent, compared with a much greater decline in the popular averages.

The Dow Jones industrial average, made up of 30 blue chips traded on the Big Board, fell 17.27 percent. The NYSE composite index fell 9.3 percent, and the Standard Poor's 500 lost 11.50 percent.

Eighteen of the twenty largest capitalized corporations lost ground in the year's trading, the study shows, but some of the lesser known names reported some startling gains.

On the Big Board, which the New York Stock Exchange's list of more than 1,500 companies entitles it to be called, Great Lakes Dredge & Dry Dock Co. showed a gain of 176.34 percent, rising from a low of $11.62 to a high finish of $32.12.

But if you consider that a spectacular accomplishment, what do you call a gain of 408.33 percent, scored by the American Stock Exchange's Friendly Frost, Inc., which climbed from $1.50 to $7.62?

Or the Amex-listed Republic Housing Corp., which advanced 381.82 percent to $6.62 from $1.50? Or another Amex issue, Reading Industries, Inc., which rose 357.14 per cent, from 87 cents to $4?

Meanwhile, says Interactive Data, Eastman Kodak suffered a $5.63 billion loss in total market value, while General Motors gave up $4.47 billion and Dow Chemical fell $3.08 billion.

Such numbers seem to indicate that companies with less well known names can attract large numbers of investors if they show promise of strong earnings and prospects for price appreciation.

U.S. To Send Artillery To Forces In Germany

By FRED S. HOFFMAN
 WASHINGTON (AP) — The Army plans to strengthen its outgunned forces in West Germany this year by sending them several additional battalions of heavy and medium artillery capable of firing atomic shells.

Still further artillery reinforcements are expected to be sent from the United States next year.

Pentagon sources said the 8-inch heavy howitzers and 155mm medium guns will be taken from U.S.-based regular Army units.

Some of these weapons could be armed with the controversial neutron warhead, if President Carter approves production. Their present ammunition includes both high explosives and certain types of nuclear shells.

U.S. forces in Europe now have about 7,000 nuclear weapons, including bombs, shells and missile warheads.

The artillery reinforcement is part of a major U.S. effort spurred by President Carter and Defense Secretary Harold Brown to shore up Western Europe's defenses.

A significant part of the estimated $1.6 billion in "real growth" in Army resources to be proposed in Carter's 1979 defense budget is reportedly earmarked for this purpose.

But this appropriation will not be translated into additional military hardware for at least 18 months, and defense officials believe some near-term measures are needed to beef up American forces facing the Soviets in central Europe.

Last fall, Gen. Bernard W. Rogers, Army chief of staff, said that "we must sacrifice a bit of unit readiness... here in the continental United States" in order to increase the ability of Army divisions in Europe to meet and blunt any Soviet attack in the critical first 30 days of any European war.

Western intelligence has estimated that the Russians enjoy a 2-1 advantage in artillery over North Atlantic alliance armies in the vital central region. U.S. Army forces, totaling nearly 200,000 soldiers, form the backbone of NATO defenses there.

U.S. Army commanders in Germany have indicated that a shortage of artillery is one of their biggest worries because of a growing Soviet ability to launch a heavy tank-led attack with only a few days of warning.

Massive fire by allied artillery and anti-tank weapons would be required to halt such an attack before it penetrated deeply into German territory, U.S. experts say.

U.S. and allied military officials, including the head of NATO's military committee, have said a principal purpose of the neutron warhead would be to cripple Soviet tank columns quickly by killing their crews with intense radiation penetrating their armor plate.

The neutron warhead produces twice the deadly radiation of a conventional nuclear bomb but less than a tenth as much blast power, head and fallout, limiting destruction.

The deadly radiation level produced by a neutron warhead probably would last no more than a few hours, compared with months from a conventional atomic bomb. Thus, allied troops would be able to move into a bombed area quickly.

NATO defense ministers have not taken a position on deployment of the neutron warhead in Europe.

Pope Asks Access To Holy City

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Pope Paul VI, meeting today with Israeli Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan, called for international guarantees for access to Jerusalem's holy places and also for "participation by all the interested parties" in Middle East peace talks.

While these parties presumably include Palestinians, they were not mentioned directly either in the Vatican communiqué, in the pope's speech or in Dayan's reply. But Vatican sources said the Palestinian issue was discussed, with the pope and Dayan expressing different views.

The Israelis have declined to negotiate with independent Palestinian representatives.

Regarding Jerusalem, the pope said, "In the complex problem of the Middle East we have particularly at heart the question of Jerusalem and the holy places; and we fervently hope for a solution that will not only satisfy the legitimate aspirations of those concerned, but also take into account the pre-eminently religious character of the Holy City."

In addition to Christian shrines in the city, there are such traditional prayer sites as the Walling for the Jews and the Al-Aqsa mosque for Moslems.

The pope restated to Dayan his view that free access to the city for all believers — Catholic, Jewish and Moslem — should be assured through "a special statute with international guarantees." The Vatican has never spelled out in detail how its proposal could be realized and what international bodies should provide the guarantees.

In his 55-minute audience with Dayan the pope praised "the courage and far-sightedness" of Israeli and Egyptian leaders in starting talks and said he hoped any Middle East settlement would assure "both security and justice for all the peoples of the area."

Dayan thanked the pope for his words and said, "They encourage us and we need this."

The foreign minister's visit to the Vatican ended a four-day stay in Italy. In earlier talks with Italian Foreign Minister Arnaldo Forlani, Premier Giulio Andreotti and President Giovanni Leone the Israeli minister urged Italy to help avoid any statement by the European Common Market overly favorable to the Arabs.

The Vatican communiqué issued after the meeting said the pope called for "a rapid and just solution of the crisis in order to put an end to the conflict and the suffering of all the peoples of the Middle East by honoring their respective rights and to lay the basis for fruitful coexistence among them."

The Vatican and Israel maintain contacts through the Israeli ambassador to Italy since they do not have direct diplomatic relations. The Vatican, however, has long established diplomatic relations with Israel's Arab neighbors.

Former top Israeli officials received by the pope were Foreign Minister Abba Eban in 1969, Prime Minister Golda Meir in 1973 and Tourism Minister Moshe Kol in 1974.

Woman Named Head Of Clergy Union

COPENHAGEN, Denmark (AP) — For the first time in the 44-year history of the Danish Lutheran church, a female minister has been named president of the 2,000-member clergy association, the ministers' labor union.

She is the Rev. Karen Horsen, 45-year-old vicar of Copenhagen's Church of Our Savior.

The clergy association deals with wages and working conditions, not theological matters.

Mayor To Attend Rock Concert

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP) — This city's new mayor says he won't knock rock until he's tried it.

Theodore Dimauro said he will attend at least one rock music concert this month at the Springfield Civic Center.

Dimauro has criticized rock concert crowds, claiming they scare people away from downtown Springfield with rowdiness, drinking and noise.

The mayor appeared before the Civic Center Commission on Tuesday, and received tickets to hear the punk rock group "Kiss" and an "Emerson, Lake and Palmer" concert at the center.

Dimauro said he never has been to a rock concert, and wants to "dispel any preconceived notions" he has about them.

ACLU To Oppose Meditation Bill

TRENTON, N.J. (UPI) — The American Civil Liberties Union says it will fight any attempt by New Jersey public schools to turn silent moments of meditation into prayer sessions.

The state legislature Tuesday passed a bill to require students to participate in a minute of silence before the start of classes. The measure has been viewed by many as an attempt to restore prayer in public schools.

"If a school undertakes a religious exercise under the cover of this legislation — which they should not do — then they are simply buying themselves a lawsuit," Steven Nagler, head of the New Jersey Chapter of the ACLU, said Wednesday.

Gov. Brendan Byrne has not decided whether to sign the meditation bill. His staff is reviewing the legal ramifications of the proposed law.

You And Your Federal Income Tax

(EDITOR'S NOTE: The following article is presented as a public service. Information provided by the Lubbock Chapter of the Texas Society of Certified Public Accountants, is in compliance with current tax laws.)

QUESTION: I run a small business and expect a loss this year. Since it was my first year in business, I would like to use it to offset next year's income. Is this permissible as I understand that you must first carry back the loss?

ANSWER: Prior law provided that taxpayers were generally allowed to carry a business net operating loss back to the preceding three years and forward to the five years following the year of the loss. Different carryback and carryover periods are allowed for certain specific types of taxpayers and certain types of losses.

The new law provides two additional carryover years for business taxpayers in general and insurance companies (making a seven-year carryover), as well as for regulated transportation corporations (making a nine-year carryover). In addition, all taxpayers presently entitled to carryback periods for their net operating losses may elect to forego the entire carryback period for a net operating loss in any taxable year. These provisions apply to net operating losses incurred in tax years ending in 1976 or later.

QUESTION: I wrote several checks at the end of last year that did not clear the bank until 1978. Do I deduct these in my 1977 or 1978 tax return?

ANSWER: Payment by check by a cash-basis taxpayer can be deducted when the check is delivered, if paid on presentation.

Fathers Stay Home Under Swedish Law

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (UPI) — More than 10 percent of the fathers of Swedish babies born in 1977 made use of their legal right to stay home and take care of their toddlers.

A government report Wednesday said 6,000 fathers stayed home an average of 40 days of the 210-day parental leave allowed by a 1974 law.

Within a year of the baby's birth, more than 60 percent of their mothers have returned to work, double the number of working mothers 10 years ago, the report said.

Peru To Remain Under Military Control

LIMA, Peru (UPI) — Blunt words by the leaders of Peru's military government have vividly reminded democrats that any future Peruvian democracy is likely to exist only by sufferance of the armed forces.

At his year-end news conference, Gen. Francisco Morales Bermudez, president of Peru, declared that the changeover to civilian leadership in 1980 will be "a change of government, but not of power."

"There is no armed forces who are not intimately tied to their people," the president explained.

All last week the political parties of Peru bitterly protested the president's statements. The parties, preparing for the presidential elections scheduled in 1980, are running slates of candidates for delegates to a constitutional convention, in balloting scheduled June 4.

The parties also protested Morales Bermudez's statement that the military, if it disapproves of the constitution produced by the elected delegates to the constitutional assembly, will simply cancel the new constitution, cancel the elections for president, and continue in power.

Accion Popular, the party of former president Fernando Belaunde, who was overthrown by the military in 1968, contended that the June 4 elections would be a farce unless the constitutional convention had a clear mandate.

The 82-year-old leader of the largest political party, Victor Raul Haya de la Torre, told a rally of 50,000 of his "Aristas" that "there can be no government without power, no change of government without a change of power."

Saturday, the commanders of the army, and air force issued a statement supporting the president. The statement said, in part, that the president "merely said what the armed forces have been maintaining all along."

One political observer noted that the president said what most people had known all along. He added: "No one assumed that the armed forces were going to disappear after 1980."

For half a century Peru has been ruled by military governments or by civilians who achieved the presidency because they and their policies were acceptable to the military.

Haya de la Torre's Apra political party has been the strongest in Peru since the 1920s, but implacable opposition by the military kept him from running for president for three decades. When he finally ran and appeared likely to win in 1962, a military coup annulled the elections.

Despite the obviously limited and controlled manner in which the military is returning the country to democracy, it has been increasing freedom in Peru.

Scores of political parties, ranging from the far right to the extreme left, are busily collecting signatures to qualify to run slates of candidates for the June 4 elections. At political rallies, the government is being roundly criticized from every perspective.

The government has dropped prior censorship of the lively political weeklies, a dozen journals representing every shade of opinion. Newspapers remain under the control of government appointed editors.

Carter To Suggest Increase In Budget

By WALTER R. MEARS
WASHINGTON (AP) — According to the White House, President Carter already has met his promise to cut defense spending by $5 billion to $7 billion. By Republican accounting, he hasn't. Either way, he is about to recommend a substantial increase in the Pentagon budget.

There are numbers to support both cases. And there are more numbers with which the administration can maintain that, even as spending goes up, Carter is standing by his commitment to rein in defense spending.

Behind the figures there is evidence of the distance between the view from the campaign platform and that from the White House. Few items in Carter's catalogue of campaign promises have been cited more often than this, prior to the Democratic National Convention:

"Without endangering the defense of our nation or our commitments to our allies, we can reduce present defense expenditures by about $5 billion to $7 billion annually."

That seemed clear and simple enough. But Carter later said he couldn't foresee precise budget figures, and that what he had in mind were reforms and efficiency measures to save about 5 percent of defense spending, whatever the total figure.

But his more specific pledge was logged in the White House catalogue of his campaign promises.

When Carter presented his amendments to Gerald R. Ford's final budget, he recommended cuts of about $2.8 billion in defense spending authority, to a total of $120.1 billion. He said there had been little time to work on those recommendations, and added that a major review of defense programs would be reflected in his own budget this year.

At the Republican National Committee, which is keeping book on Carter's campaign promises, GOP scorekeepers marked that one broken.

But the defense budget Carter recommended was pruned again in Congress. "The Carter budget is about $117 billion as approved by Congress," the White House said, in listing fulfillment of the campaign pledge as one of the accomplishments of his first year in office.

Now Carter is about to present his own defense budget for the year beginning next Oct. 1, and it will be about $126 billion.

"The defense budget that I will be submitting to the Congress later this month will provide for real increases in U.S. defense spending, more than compensating for the effects of inflation," Carter told the NATO Council on Jan. 6.

He said U.S. forces in Europe will be increased by more than 8,000 men over the next 18 months, "and we will substantially improve our reinforcement capability."

The troop increase had been planned for some time.

While the new budget will be about $9.3 billion higher than the current one, it also is about $9.4 billion below the level Ford had projected.

Ford had forecast a defense budget reaching $135.4 billion in fiscal 1979, and the administration can cite that evidence that Carter has kept his commitment to rein in spending.

But whatever the budget might have been without Carter, his proposed increase will be real and substantial. The demands behind it are more important now than that campaign pledge.

Zbigniew Brzezinski, the president's national security adviser, cites a major one, saying the Soviet Union has built up its forces in Europe and the United States must respond.

"... Over the last decade or so, in part as a consequence of the strains in our economy and in our defense budget of the Vietnamese war, the Soviet Union has relatively improved its military position in Europe."

Myers Remembers Past Bear Tilts

By DON HENRY
Executive Sports Editor

WACO—There's something ominous about Texas Tech playing a basketball game in this central Texas city, and Raider coach Gerald Myers is not even considering the weather as part of the matter. Tech plays the Baylor Bears in Heart O' Texas Coliseum tonight, beginning at 7:30 o'clock, and icy conditions just bring back memories of past trips here—as if the present weren't enough of a concern. Tech and Baylor collide with 1-1 records which puts additional pressure on the contest. Both teams won where they were supposed to—at home—and lost on the road, which adds to Myers' concern. But, looking back, one of the two losses the Raiders absorbed in 1973, the year it won the championship under Myers, came in Waco. And, in 1965, when Tech assembled one of its greatest teams—only to lose it all on an eligibility case—its only conference defeats came at the hands of the Bears. In 1970, a loss here was a key factor in Tech's unsuccessful bid for the SWC title. Why, even three years ago, Myers remembers that a loss here cost Tech a share of the title. The icy conditions which hit Waco Wednesday is just another one of those coincidences which seems to pop up when Tech comes to town. But, "I try not to think about those things," said Myers. "You can get to thinking that way (about the past). But, I don't even mention to the players (whether) we won or lost in a certain place. The ball club is the big thing, and stopping Vinnie Johnson is a whole lot more important than what happened last year." Vinnie Johnson is a 6-1 junior college transfer from McLennan Community College here who was voted the preseason newcomer of the year in the conference, and he has responded with a 23-point scoring average, best in the league. He has scored as high as 43 points in a game this year. "We just hope we can contain him," said Myers. "No one can stop him. We just can't let him get 35 on us. If he doesn't have any turnovers, gets ten assists and 20 points, Baylor will be hard to beat." Myers indicated he will start 6-3 Mike Edwards on Johnson, although "We might have to use Geoff (Huston) or Tommy Parks on him. "And, the thing is, Baylor has three others scoring in double figures and (the fifth starter) Mike Little is hitting about 8 a game." Tech will go with the 6-1 Huston at the quarterbacking guard spot, Edwards, 6-7 Mike Russell, 6-5 Kent Williams and 6-9 Joe Baxter. Baylor will call upon Johnson and Little at guards, 6-6 Art Edwards, 6-5 Russell Oliver and 6-9 Wendell Mays as starters. Baylor rebounded from an opening-SWC loss to Rice to clip the Aggies 77-61 Monday night, and, said coach Jim Haller, "We had a lot to prove after the terrible showing at Rice. "We played hard against the Aggies. They were very physical and we were ready to get with them. It was definitely one of the best, aggressive, enthusiastic efforts of the year. From a skill level, it wasn't a good game, but I'll take that game we put on the floor every night out." Baylor even whipped the Aggies on the backboards, a feat which pleased Haller. "Mays had 11 rebounds, but what helped was that Edwards, Vinnie and Oliver had nine rebounds each." From here, Tech will head on to Houston and a Saturday afternoon date with Rice in a regionally televised contest. Also tonight, Arkansas, unbeaten for the year and 1-0 in conference, will play at Rice, and Houston will play the Aggies at College Station.

Carter Cromwell Two SWC Cagers In Top 20?

HAD IT BEEN an earth tremor, the shock would not have registered 10 on the Richter Scale. It's highly doubtful that anyone jumped off the Empire State Building or the Golden Gate Bridge when he heard the news. It is, however, worthy of mention. The news is that two (2) Southwest Conference basketball teams are ranked in the nation's Top 20 this week by United Press International. Arkansas is third and Texas is 20th. It's anybody's guess when that happened last, but it most likely has rarely occurred, if ever. Actually, it's been tough enough for just one SWC club to crack the Top 20 list. Few come to mind. The Jim Krebs-led SMU teams in the middle 1950s did—the 1956 unit finished third in the country—and Texas was rated in the Top 10 early in the 1963-64 campaign when it had much of the personnel returning from the club that had nearly defeated top-rated Cincinnati in the semifinals of the Midwest Regional the season before. But the Longhorns faded after a 5-0 start and finished 15-9. Texas Tech was in the Top 20 briefly when it had Norman Reuther, Dub Malaise, et al in the middle '60s and reached the 16th spot at the completion of the 1975-76 campaign, in which it posted a 25-6 mark. Texas A&M made it to No. 20 at the tail end of that regular season. Then, of course, there has been Arkansas' ascent into the Top 10 the past two seasons.

STILL, IT'S BEEN a tough go for the SWC teams, as everyone is aware. Usually, the conference hasn't had teams worthy of much national recognition. When it has had an outstanding club, the league's poor reputation has kept the team from getting the notoriety it deserved. Arkansas is a case in point. Despite its 25-1 regular-season mark last season, the Razorbacks' rise in the polls was painfully slow. They finally reached the No. 7 spot, but fell all the way to 18th after their loss to Wake Forest in the first round of the NCAA playoffs. Admittedly, Arkansas should have won the game—it led by 13 points at half-time—but it only lost by six points, and 10 places is a long way for a team to drop after just one defeat. But it appears that things are changing for the better—on the court and in the polls. The Razorbacks have been in the Top 10 all season, and the addition of Texas to the Top 20 indicates that the pollsters are looking at SWC basketball more favorably. AND THEY SHOULD be thinking more highly of it. Unquestionably, the league has improved the past few seasons. It is still not a really strong league, but it far outstrips its product of several years ago. More out-of-state prospects are showing interest in visiting campuses of SWC schools. And the quality of high-school players in Texas is improving, as evidenced by the increasing number of out-of-state universities that are recruiting in the state. However, they aren't getting all the really top players here. Previously, if a schoolboy was a truly fine prospect, it was an excellent bet that he would attend an out-of-state institution. This is showing on the court. Arkansas has an excellent team, of course; Tech has been consistently competitive for the last several seasons. Houston usually manages to corral a good group of athletes, A&M and Baylor are competitive, and Texas has recruited well recently. THE LONGHORNS HAVE only completed half of their regular season, so it's too early to tell for certain if they are definitely Top 20 material, but they have made a strong case for themselves so far. Their losses were by one point to Southern Cal in Los Angeles and by nine points to Marquette in the finals of the Milwaukee Classic—on Marquette's home floor. Texas has been impressive in its initial two SWC outings, whipping Tech and Houston and scoring 101 and 100 points, respectively, in those games. The Longhorns' biggest test thus far will come Saturday against Arkansas in the Super Drum. Hopefully, for the conference's sake, they won't flunk it badly and lose the esteem they've gained from the pollsters.

Knox Departing LA For Buffalo

By The Associated Press
Tom Landry and Red Miller, the Super Bowl coaches, will be around to whistle at their teams for another season, but few other members of the profession can be so secure. If a man like Chuck Knox, who was 5-for-5 in getting his Los Angeles Rams an NFC Division title, can be gently pushed out for not winning enough, then who can feel safe? Knox, whose five-year stint with the Rams produced 54 victories in 70 games but no Super Bowls, left the club and signed a multi-year contract with the Buffalo Bills Wednesday night. The surprise signing came one week after Knox had reached a five-year agreement with the Rams. Rams owner Carroll Rosenbloom soured on Knox for the team's failure to win the big playoff game—the latest post-season loss was a 14-7 upset to Minnesota—and for its conservative offensive philosophy. "Chuck Knox was not let go," Rosenbloom said. "We met last week and came to an understanding. It was decided then that we both would take a week to think things over, during which time he was given permission to talk to other clubs and we gave him to understand we would talk to other coaches." Knox realized his days in Los Angeles were probably numbered when Rams management met with earlier this week with Don Coryell, the estranged coach of the St. Louis Cardinals whose contract extends through 1980 but whose heart doesn't have the same commitment. At the moment, the Los Angeles job is the only vacancy among the 28 National Football League teams. If the disenchanted Coryell and the Rams do marry, the Cardinals would extract a divorce settlement—namely a No. 1 draft choice, according to Joe Sullivan, the Cards' director of operations. Coryell said the Rams told him they would be very interested in talking to him again if he could free himself from contract obligations with the Cardinals. Other coaching hats being thrown around in the Los Angeles smog are Washington Coach George Allen, a former head coach with the Rams, and Stanford's Bill Walsh. "We will make haste slowly," Rosenbloom said of the search for Knox' successor. Knox' hiring by the Bills was the fifth See THREE NFL Page 2

NCAA Defeats Proposal Sought By Grid Powers

ATLANTA (AP) — The National Collegiate Athletic Association today defeated a proposal sought by major college football powers to divide its top division. The proposal was rejected by a vote of 142-115 and parliamentary proceedings attempting to overturn that vote also were rejected by delegates to the 72nd NCAA convention. The major football powers had hoped to divide Division I into Division I-A and I-AA, so that the larger schools could vote separately on matters concerning football during future conventions. In another matter, the NCAA approved a proposal that would designate as professionals any college basketball player who allows his name to be placed on a hardship list by the National Basketball Association. In previous years, a collegian could be placed on the hardship list, withdraw his name before the draft and retain his eligibility. The nation's traditionally powerful conferences and major independents led the opposition to the arguing during a roundtable discussion of the proposal Wednesday. That group has been busy here during the pre-convention activities, saying passage of the proposal would virtually kill several conferences. The proposal would divide the 145 Division I membership into I-A and I-AA divisions. To remain in the top division, a school would have to participate in at least eight varsity Division I sports, have See GRID POWERS Page 6

80 Million Bets Down On Super Bowl

By WICK TEMPLE
AP Sports Editor

NEW ORLEANS — Got a bet down on the Super Bowl? Many, if not most of the 80 million Americans who will watch Sunday's 12th pro football classic, will have. For some, it's just a buck wagered with a friend at the office. Others put down thousands with a legal gambling operation in Nevada or the illegal bookmakers who operate in every city in the country.

It is impossible to estimate how many millions of dollars will change hands on the outcome of the Cowboys-Broncos match in the Superdome. What is obvious is that gambling on pro sports, especially football, is growing at a tremendous rate.

If you don't believe that, try this test: bring up the Super Bowl in a crowd and suggest that you believe one team or the other will win.

Someone will offer "Maybe so, but they won't beat the point spread."

The spread — the bookies' accepted gambling line — has taken on almost as much meaning to a large segment of the citizenry as who wins. This does not mean that most Americans are gamblers or even that most have any sizable amount bet on this or any other game.

By playing the spread and betting with bookies or friends, the average guy can participate in the big, glamorous game. If he has a stake in it, he is part of it and not just a passive observer.

Most Americans don't really care whether the Cowboys beat the Broncos or vice versa. The 80 million who watch on TV will be entertained, but they will have more fun if they can be part of the action. So they bet.

National Football League Commissioner Pete Rozelle has for some time expressed alarm at the rise in betting on pro sports. So have other sports leaders, including baseball's Bowie Kuhn and Walter Byers of the National Collegiate Athletic Association.

Some of their detractors have suggested that Rozelle, Kuhn and the others are hypocrites because, deep down, they know that betting means increased public attention to their sports.

This observer takes seriously the warnings of the sports figures about the growth of big-time gambling.

A made-for-TV movie shown on ABC Monday night depicted members of a gambling syndicate trying to fix the Super Bowl game. I lost count of the number of murders but the point was made — it could happen here.

Certainly, widespread gambling can lead to attempts to corrupt the various sports by pressuring players to throw games or shave points.

A distinction must be made between gambling in its pure — and usually illegal — form or simple betting in office pools and between friends. No one suggests that the literal millions of dollars that will be bet on the Super Bowl in small amounts among friends indicates a breakdown in morality or a threat to the peace.

Betting in this sense is only a form of entertainment that should be accepted in a country as affluent as this. Certainly much more money will be spent on food and beverages by those 80 million in front of their TV sets than will pass among them in bets.

Most of the 75,000 people in the Superdome in New Orleans will spend hundreds of dollars to attend the week-long party and the game at $30 a ticket. The average tab will be far outweigh the average bet.

But experts in Las Vegas estimate that more big-money betting will be done on this Sunday's game than on any of the previous 11 Super Bowls. It is this growth that bothers Rozelle because it points toward government-sanctioned sports betting so that state and local coffers can get a piece of the action.

Off-track horse race betting in New York and other states is the best example of this. The chief criticism of OTB is that it puts the government in the position of preying on a weakness in society.

One curious note in this trend, though, was the miserable failure of a state betting system on pro sports in Delaware. As the saying goes, the people will bet, one way or another. That brings us to the question: Why are the Cowboys five-point favorites over Denver in the Super Bowl?

Dallas beat Denver 14-6 in the final game of the season, but that game didn't mean anything and Denver quarterback Craig Morton played very little.

Robert Martin, who sets the betting line for the Union Plaza Hotel in Las Vegas and who is recognized as a very sharp observer indeed, explained it this way:

- Dallas gets a point at quarterback with Roger Staubach having the edge over Morton.
- Dallas gets a point in the running game because Tony Dorsett, Preston Pearson and Robert Newhouse mount a more formidable attack than Otis Armstrong, Rob Lyle and Jon Keyworth.

- Dallas gets a half-point for its pass receivers.
- Dallas gets a half-point for its defensive secondary.
- Dallas gets a point on its offensive line.
- Dallas gets a half-point on place kicker Efren Herrera over Denver's Jim Turner.

• The teams tie on coaching strength for different reasons — Tom Landry's experience and Red Miller's hype. They tie on punters and on defense — Denver has better linebackers but Dallas is better up front. They tie on special teams. That should total 4½ points for Dallas, right?

Not quite. The oddsmakers give Denver a point and a half because the Broncos played a stronger schedule and AFC teams beat NFC teams 19-9 in meetings this year.

That should be three points for Dallas, but now it gets confusing.

Martin says Dallas is what is called a public team — it will draw bets no matter what line is put up. "So we impose a tax of two points as an incentive to lure the Denver side. By the same token, if you make Dallas a 6-point favorite, the money will show on Denver. So we reach a happy medium at 5, and then let the money move it one way or the other."

He thinks the professional betters will go with Denver if the line stays at five.

Are you ready to say, "Aw, nuts" and bet your hunch? Then bet Dallas by three points — a field goal by Herrera in the last minute after a boring defensive standoff.

And don't bet with the boss. That's bad policy. If you lose, you have to pay off. If you win, you can't send Big Louie around to collect.

Broncos To Try 'Poke Weakside

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Joe Namath most often gets the credit, but fullback Matt Snell also played a major role in the New York Jets' upset victory over Baltimore in Super Bowl III.

Snell, running mostly off the weakside, rushed for 121 yards on 30 carries and scored the Jets' only touchdown.

In Sunday's Super Bowl here, the Dallas Cowboys can expect to see Denver run to the weakside, especially in long-yardage situations.

"This play has been a consistent ground-gainer for us," says Broncos Coach Red Miller.

Denver's basic play calls for the fullback to run to the side opposite the tight end, with key blocks thrown by the halfback and one of the tackles.

In the usual setup, Jon Keyworth would carry. Halfbacks Otis Armstrong or Rob Lyle would block on the outside linebacker, and tackles Andy Maurer or Claude Minor would hook the defensive end.

The Broncos gained large chunks of yardage on the play in games against San Diego and Houston this year.

In last week's playoff game against Oakland, the Broncos ran a variation of the play.

COWBOYS' GROUND-GAINER — This is a play described by Dallas Coach Tom Landry designed to use the blazing speed of Offensive Rookie of the Year

in front of the quarterback and around the corner. (AP Laserphoto Diagram)

T.D. Sweep In Dallas Shotgun

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — When the Dallas Cowboys need a big play on third down, the Denver Broncos can be ready for a blast from Coach Tom Landry's "Shotgun" offense on Super Sunday.

However, the Cowboys have such a varied arsenal you never know where the buckshot will strike.

For example, consider Minnesota's plight in the National Football Conference title game. Dallas was leading 16-6 and driving. It was third down and six from the Vikings 11. The clock was ticking late in the fourth quarter. A touchdown and the game was over.

Quarterback Roger Staubach lined up the Cowboys in the Shotgun then called the out. Landry had called a play but Staubach saw something more vulnerable in the Minnesota prevent defense.

Staubach wanted the "T.D. Sweep."

This play is designed to get The Associated Press Offensive Rookie of the Year, Tony Dorsett, outside where he can use his blazing speed that made him a 1,000-yard gainer.

Staubach lined up some 5 to 6 yards deep in the Shotgun. He took a direct snap from center John Fitzgerald.

Dorsett was spread to the left side of the Cowboy formation just outside offensive tackle Ralph Neely. Runningback Preston Pearson (No. 26) and wide receivers Golden Richards (No. 83) and Drew Pearson (No. 88) were flanked to the right. Staubach faked a pass as offensive guards Burton Lawless (No. 68) and Tom Rafferty (No. 64) pulled. Dorsett (No. 33) then swept by in front of Staubach (No. 12) for a handoff.

Preston Pearson sealed off the end (Carl Eller No. 81). Richards and Lawless double-teamed a pursuing linebacker. Rafferty cut down defensive back Jeff Wright (No. 23) of the Vikings.

As Dorsett turned the corner only Nate Wright (No. 43) appeared in the picture. He was playing Drew Pearson to the inside — perfect for Pearson's clearing block at the flag as safety Paul Krause (No. 22) came up too late.

The 11-yard touchdown run made the final score 23-6. Dorsett handed the ball to a cheerleader. And the Cowboys were in Super Bowl XII.

BRONCOS PLAY — Denver Coach Red Miller describes a weakside run which he says has been a consistent ground-gainer for the Broncos this year. The basic play calls for the fullback to run to the weakside with key blocks thrown by the halfback and one of the tackles. (AP Laserphoto Diagram)

Fans Enjoying New Orleans' Parties

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Darrell and Betty Ray love the partying that goes with a Super Bowl in New Orleans. But they're heading back to Hemphill, Texas, to watch the game.

The Rays and three other Texas couples — all true Cowboy blue — braved the orange decor of Molly's Irish Pub here Wednesday for lunch. The pub advertises itself as Denver Broncos headquarters, and all its personnel wear Denver-orange T-shirts.

"We love the Cowboys," said Mrs. Ray. "We go way back with the team. We got here Tuesday, and we're going home Thursday to watch the game on television. I'm serious, that's what we're doing."

The bulk of the Super Bowl crowd isn't expected until Friday, but there were still a lot of Denver Broncos fans sporting big orange buttons roaming the streets of the French Quarter Wednesday. There were almost as many Dallas fans braving the chill winds of the narrow streets.

Sam Jones, one of the Texans in town with the Rays, dashed outside and corralled Darrel and Mary Moberly of Colorado Springs, Colo., both sporting badges declaring their allegiance to the Broncos.

The Moberlys were 21,340th in line for tickets for the Super Bowl when they went on sale in Denver, so they didn't have much hope for seeing the game.

"We got lucky," said Moberly. "My boss' son is getting married Sunday, so we go to use his priority — No. 613. I guess he couldn't postpone the wedding."

Moberly, a construction supervisor, is a four-year season ticket holder for Broncos games. "I used to work in the football games around hunting and fishing," he said. "But hunting got so involved with regulations that I bought a set of season tickets, and now I work hunting and fishing in around the football games."

He estimated that his trip to the Super Bowl will cost about $1,200.

"My friends tease me about hocking my jewelry and mortgaging our home, but we've saved for a vacation, and this is it," said Mrs. Moberly, a third-grade language arts teacher.

She said her 8-year-old pupils are avid Broncos fans, and this gives her a ready-made teaching aid.

"She goes around after every game collecting those plastic glasses that they sell soft drinks in," said Moberly.

"He teases me about knocking down little kids and taking their glasses away from them," said Mrs. Moberly. "But I take them home and wash them, then use them as rewards for good work."

She said a tyke named Kevin has earned six of the Bronco-stamped glasses — one for every three book reports. "You'd be amazed at how hard they work for those things," she said.

As the Moberlys were served their lunch, the Rays and their party downed a round of after-lunch drinks.

"We planned this trip months ago — before anybody knew for sure that our Cowboys would be in the Super Bowl," said Mrs. Ray. "Really, we came in for the King Tut exhibit, but the lines were too long and we couldn't get in. We're not even going to try to get in tomorrow. We'll just enjoy ourselves tonight and drive back tomorrow."

The Moberlys said they planned to see the game before flying back to Colorado.

EVERT HONORED
NEW YORK (AP) — Tennis queen Chris Evert, the 23-year-old millionaire, has been named the top performer in her sport for the third consecutive year by Sport Magazine — the only woman so honored by the monthly publication.

Three NFL Coaches Said Discontented

by an NFL club since the regular season ended a month ago. Other new head coaches are Marv Levy at Kansas City; Sam Rutigliano at Cleveland; Pete McCulley at San Francisco, and Monte Clark at Detroit. Clark was given the job Wednesday and McCulley got his new playbook on Tuesday.

Last in the shuffle were Tom Bettis at Kansas City; Forrest Gregg at Cleveland; Ken Meyer at San Francisco; Tommy Hudspeth at Detroit and Jim Ringo at Buffalo.

These new coaches can be considered safe for one year — no matter how long their contracts are — and thus fit into the NFL's secure coaches category. Included in this group are Landry, Miller, Ted Marchibroda-Baltimore, Chuck Fairbanks-New England, Walt Michaels-New York Jets, Dick Vermeil-Philadelphia, John McVay-New York Giants, Chuck Noll-Pittsburgh, Bum Phillips-Houston, Bud Grant-Minnesota, John Madden-Oakland, Tommy Prothro-San Diego, John McKay-Tampa Bay, Leeman Bennett-Atlanta and Jack Patera-Seattle.

Until they get axed and then fall into the category of coaching victims, several coaches are in limbo, knowing they are in immediate danger and, if they make it to the 1978 season, probably must win quickly.

These coaches would be Hank Stram at New Orleans, Bart Starr at Green Bay and Bill Johnson at Cincinnati.

Another category — coaches who seem discontented with their present jobs — includes Allen at Washington, Don Shula at Miami and Jack Pardee at Chicago.

It's unlikely, however, that any of these three men would give up a job without having another one in his pocket.

Morton Welcomes Cowboys' Blitzes

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — When Denver quarterback Craig Morton barks out the Broncos' signals in Sunday's Super Bowl, he'll also be hanging out a sign: "Blitzers Welcome."

The man who spent the first 9½ of his 13 National Football League seasons in a Dallas uniform would be delighted to see a bunch of Cowboy defensive backs and linebackers roaring in on him.

"Dallas doesn't blitz very often and I don't expect they'll do it any more than usual this time," he said. "But I'd like nothing more than to see (safeties) Charlie Waters and Cliff Harris and maybe one or two others trying to climb into my lap, 'cause if they do, that means there's single coverage out there, that someone's isolated one-on-one."

And that kind of situation is Morton's meat. He's a master of the dump-off pass and, occasionally, of the pinpoint bomb when it's man-to-man 30 yards downfield. He'll never run the ball, save for a rare bootleg down around the opposition goal line or a scramble when his protection breaks down.

"Yeah, I've heard that. I've heard he doesn't run. Hmhmhm!" snorted Dallas defensive tackle Jethro Pugh. "Hey, listen, maybe he's no runner, maybe he's hurt like they say—but this is the Super Bowl. Ain't no saying what he might try just to shake us up."

But Ed "Too Tall" Jones, Dallas' mammoth defensive end, figures Morton will stay wrapped in his pocket of protection no matter what opportunities to run are present.

"He's no dummy. He's not 'stupid,'" Jones said. "He's too smart to take any kind of chance that might get him hurt. If he gets hurt, it could just about destroy their offense. They might get some good plays out of whoever they bring in to replace him (youngsters Craig Penrose or Norris Weese), but with their inexperience the pressure of a game like this has got to get to them sooner or later and things have got to start going wrong."

"We don't plan to blitz him much, but we're going to try and keep the pressure on him," Jones added.

And that, linebacker D.D. Lewis said, could be the difference in the game. "Pressure, a lot of pressure, that's what we need. We feel Morton's not that good under pressure," Lewis said. "So we're going to keep coming at him. Not everybody, you understand. Just all the time."

"And we're going to have to disguise our defenses a lot," he added. "He's real smart at reading defenses, at knowing where and when they're coming."

So is Roger Staubach, Dallas' starting quarterback since he finally beat out Morton for the job midway in the 1971 season. Roger the Dodger is one of the game's most adept running quarterbacks, occasionally calling his own number in a scrimmage-line audible when he thinks good yardage is available up the middle.

"That's what makes him so tough. He's such a good passer plus he runs so well," said Barney Chavous, who anchors the left end of Denver's three-man defensive line.

"He's got more than just one dimension. He's not like (Oakland quarterback) Ken Stabler. Stabler won't run very often and he's got such a huge line in front of him that he really doesn't have to. So you know where he's gonna be on almost every play," Chavous said.

"But Staubach—he can take off on you almost any time. If we lay too far back or get too spread out, he can be up the middle in no time."

In fact, added Broncos linebacker Joe Rizzo, Staubach would rather take off and risk a collision with a lineman or linebacker than take a loss. "I don't think he's willing to accept a conventional sack if he thinks there's any possible way for him to run for the yards he needs," Rizzo said.

But Rizzo also believes if Staubach tries to scramble for yardage against the Broncos, he's going to be brought up short—quick. "If he tries it, he's not gonna get more than maybe four or five yards, not with four linebackers gunning for him."

Staubach wouldn't say whether he plans to run more or less than usual, but he did acknowledge that the Cowboys' running game in general would have to be in top form. "If you run the ball well, you can beat the 3-4," he said of Denver's defense.

A WORD FROM TONY — Dallas rookie runningback Tony Dorsett has a few words for the press during an interview session in New Orleans Wednesday. Dorsett, the offensive Rookie of the Year, will be trying to do his number against Denver Sunday in the Superdome. (AP Laserphoto)

TD's Interview Entertaining

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Tony Dorsett, fingering his 35-diamond necklace and handling questions with poise a decade beyond his 23 years, recalls his first meeting with the 13-year veteran he replaced in the Dallas Cowboy lineup.

The National Football League's Offensive Rookie of the Year said Preston Pearson visited Hopewell (Pa.) Township High School 10 years ago when the young millionaire was a mere sophomore.

"He looked at me and said I was too small to be playing football," said Dorsett. "Maybe he was right then. I only weighed 145 pounds."

Pearson, later obtained by Dallas in a trade from the Pittsburgh Steelers, lost his starting tailback job to Dorsett this year in the ninth game of the season, ironically against the Steelers.

"There have been no bitter feelings between us but I don't know what to say to him," said Dorsett. "It's still hard for us to communicate."

Pearson was shaken because he didn't start in his hometown and Dallas Coach Tom Landry admitted Wednesday he had "made a mistake" by choosing the Steeler game as the time to start the rookie.

Dorsett says, "Preston was playing exceptional football. I just knew I had the talent to be starting."

Dorsett mesmerized the Super Bowl XII media like he would a tackler in a one-on-one situation.

Example: Denver linebacker Tom Jackson says he can't wait to get you in a head-on confrontation, Tony.

"I'll be there, head-to-head is the name of the game," answered Dorsett, who then gave his quick Flip Wilson look-alike smile and added, "Of course, to tell you the truth, I don't like being hit by anybody."

Dorsett, the most glamorous rookie to play in a Super Bowl with his Heisman Trophy at the University of Pittsburgh and his 1,007 yards as a rookie Dallas Cowboy, flashed a range of moods beyond his quick humor.

He was candid: "I'm blocking better than I did in college but it still isn't exceptional. If I give 100 percent effort, which I do, it still isn't good enough."

MOB Signup Ends Tonight

Final registration for the Monterey Optimist Basketball (MOB) program is scheduled tonight at Smylie Wilson Junior High, league officials announced.

Boys in grades three through eight are eligible to participate in the program, which is launching its eighth season here.

Tonight's session will be from 7 to 9. Players should be accompanied by a parent or guardian, and those entering the program for the first time should bring a copy of their birth certificate.

Following registration, tryouts for fifth and sixth graders will be held Jan. 21 and for seventh and eighth graders on Jan. 28. Third and fourth graders will be placed on teams according to neighborhoods and elementary schools attended. Registration fee is $15.

TV 'Announcement' Upsets G-Tech Boss

ATLANTA (AP) — Someone sent an anonymous letter to Georgia Tech alumni asking for the resignation of football Coach Pepper Rodgers, and Rodgers is fighting mad.

"I can't change," said Rodgers, who said he learned of the letter earlier this week when a television sportscenter announced he had been fired.

"My 14-year-old son called me and asked me if I had been fired," said Rodgers. "What do you say to your own son when he sees something like that on television? I never received a telephone call. Nobody asked me about it at all."

Rodgers said he called a meeting of his entire football squad Tuesday to discuss the letter, which apparently was mailed last November to members of the Georgia Tech Foundation, a club composed of influential alumni.

The letter also reportedly asked for the resignations of Athletic Director Doug Weaver and Tech President Joseph Pettit, both of whom are attending the NCAA meetings in Atlanta this week.

"I knew they (the players) had heard all the rumors," said Rodgers, who has two years left on his contract. "I told them that I was their coach. That I was going to be their coach. And that this kind of thing isn't going to run me off."

Rodgers, who has a 23-20-1 record in four seasons, said the letter, which criticized his personal life as well as his handling of the football squad, won't change him.

to Pat Summerall.
"If that thought ever crossed my mind I probably wouldn't be able to speak," says Summerall. "Those figures are beyond my comprehension. But I would hope I would do the same job if there were 85 people or 85 million watching."

Summerall, whose smooth delivery, relaxed style and solid preparation have made him one of the best play-by-play men in the business, will be working his ninth Super Bowl. It will be his seventh for CBS and he did two on loan to NBC before the merger.

His main job these days has been to learn as much about the Denver Broncos as possible.

"I will be spending some time watching Denver films, getting to know the plays, the players, their tendencies. I believe I could do the Cowboys if they didn't wear numbers. I hope to be able to do the same for Denver."

Like the players, Summerall says his biggest problem in preparing for the game is coping with the distractions and general hoopla surrounding Super Bowl week.

"The demands on us are similar to the demands on the players," he says. "The outside distractions are most difficult. CBS has several clients that I'm sure they'd like us to meet. There are many functions and parties that we have to attend. It can be tiring."

The game itself presents few problems for a veteran like Summerall. "Once the game starts I don't feel any undue pressure just because it's the Super Bowl. It's not going to be much different from any other game."

"A lot will depend on how the game goes. If it's a good, close game it will be hard to do. If it's like last year's game it will be hard to do. That's always the way it is."

And how does Summerall feel about the late starting time—5 p.m. CST—for this year's Super Bowl?

"I think anyone who has ever played the game or broadcast it would rather play early," he says. "That sitting around can kill you. I mean, how much coffee can you drink?"

Director Tony Verna, the man who will call the television shots in Sunday's game, agrees with Summerall that a good game is much easier to do than a bad one.

"The point of doing what I do is to get the best assignments," says Verna, who will be working his fifth Super Bowl. "It gives you a chance to show your talent."

You have to hope, though, that you get a good game.

"I'm just glad Minnesota isn't in there this year. They bury the ball. You can't use replays when you get a team grinding it out. Who wants to see a replay of a 3-yard plunge? It can be a snore."

Verna says that CBS football coverage has a distinct look, different from games on the other networks.

"We show the clock a lot throughout the second and fourth quarters and the down and yardage throughout the game. We try to limit the sideline shots."

"If a guy scores a touchdown we don't immediately break away for a cheerleader's reaction. We want to see what the guy does, if he spikes the ball or just walks away. We don't care what the cheerleader thinks."

"A lot of people get their kicks watching the Dallas cheerleaders. With all the publicity they've gotten, I'd get my head if I didn't show them. But not when it's third-and-22 and Roger Staubach is trying to figure out what to do next and Tom Landry is glowering on the sidelines thinking 'all right, you got us into this hole, now get us out.'"

"The Super Bowl is not necessarily the most difficult event to do," says Verna. "But it's the most demanding from viewers because this is a nation of football freaks. I've been directing many sports for 21 years. Once in a while I'll get a letter praising what I did. In football, I'll hear from them if they didn't like it."

Does he feel any pressure doing a Super Bowl?
"I don't feel any pressure. You just have to react to the situation, you have to be ready for anything. I know where all my cameras are. It's like a chessboard in my head."

"Pressure? Look I had the Super Bowl where the hot air balloon went into the stands. I had the Super Bowl in New Orleans where the cannon went off and blew some people up. I did the Ruffian match race where the horse broke down. I had the Kentucky Derby where the smoke bomb went off."

"That's pressure. But I love it because that's what I've trained all my life to do. Live television. You can't beat it. I mean nobody goes up to the guy who directed 'What's My Line' and says 'hey, that was a great show.'"

"I want to be a live director and this is the best possible situation."

FOOTBALL
PONTIAC, Mich. — The Detroit Lions named Monte Clark, former pilot of the San Francisco 49ers, as head coach to replace the fired Tommy Hayes. Clark was given full authority over almost all personnel decisions, something no coach of Detroit's NFL entry has had in the last 10 years.

Tech Fems Challenge NT Squad

Icy roads between Lubbock and Denton forced a day's delay in Wednesday night's women's basketball game between Texas Tech and North Texas State.

The contest will be held, beginning at 6 p.m. today, in the women's gym.

The game will be the first for Tech since it defeated New Mexico State here Jan. 10. And for NTSU, it will be the first action since Dec. 17, which prompted coach Cherril Rapp to comment, "I expect that we'll be a little rusty."

"On the other hand, Tech has been idle longer than we so it should be equal from that standpoint."

Miss Rapp is a former Wayland Baptist College player.

Tech will bring in a 13-2 record and is ranked sixth in the state. North Texas, with a 6-3 record, is rated fifth.

Tech coach Gay Benson is expected to open with a lineup of 5-11 D'Lynn Brown, 5-5 Karla Schutte, 5-10 Marilyn Payton, 5-8 Rosemary Scott, and 5-11 Cheryl Greer.

Scoring leader for NT is 5-10 Lisa Risinger, a former South Plains College player who is hitting 20.6 points per game.

After tonight, Tech will compete in the New Mexico State tournament Friday and Saturday at Las Cruces.

The Tech women will then host SMU Tuesday as part of a Lubbock Coliseum doubleheader with the Tech men.

Super Mex Among Phoenix Favorites

PHOENIX (AP) — A year ago, Lee Trevino was wondering, questioning whether he'd ever again play competitive tournament golf.

Now he's simply wondering when he'll win again.

When it does happen — and it's almost inevitable that it will, perhaps even this week in the $200,000 Phoenix Open — he'll have earned it.

He's paid the price — in patience, practice and pain.

"When something like that happens," he said of the serious back surgery that threatened his career late in 1976, "naturally you wonder if you'll ever play again."

But Trevino, who hides a Marine toughness beneath a fast-talking, quick-witted exterior, fought his way back slowly and painfully.

"It's not there yet," he said of the golf game that triggered his rags-to-riches story and has become a part of the American legend, "but it's coming along. It won't be long before it's as good as it ever was."

He made a breakthrough in the Canadian Open last year, capping one of golf's great comebacks. And that, he said, was just the start.

"After you've played the tour for a while, you get antsy at home," he said. "You want to get out there and get after 'em."

"I was home for a month and I couldn't wait to get back out here. I love it. I absolutely love it. I want to be out here for a long, long time. I want to be here when I'm tripping over my beard."

It isn't easy.

"There's pain," he said and shrugged it off. "It's just something I have to live with. There's nothing you can do about it."

He has to rise about two hours earlier than normal to get the kinks out of his back — a hot bath, stretching exercises and the use of what he calls "a gravity machine." It's a device he carries with him on the road. It attaches to the top of a doorway and Trevino must spend some time every day hanging from it upside down and doing upside-down sit-ups.

That's in addition to his usual regimen of calisthenics, running and physical conditioning and the hours he spends on the practice tee.

"I've always had to practice a lot," said the man who has won two British and two American Open titles along with a PGA national championship.

"I was lucky when I was at home. The weather was real good and I could practice a lot. I've been hitting up to 700 balls a day."

"If I'm not ready, it's not because I haven't been working at it."

He achieved a solid fourth-place finish last week in the tour's 1978 kickoff event, the Tucson Open, and ranks high among the list of favorites in the strong field that got started today on the 6,726-yard, par-71 Phoenix Country Club course.

CBS-TV will provide national television coverage of portions of the final two rounds Saturday and Sunday.

Girls Loop Action Tips Off

District 4AAAA girls basketball play begins tonight at the Coronado gym when CHS, 8-9, entertains Monterey, 13-6.

Tip-off time for the varsity game is 8 p.m. The junior varsity game begins at 6:15 p.m.

Coronado relies on a pair of seniors for most of its scoring. Kathi Wyeatt, 5-8 1/2, leads the team with 256 points in 18 games while Dona Boyd, 5-3, follows with 218 points.

Monterey's offensive leaders all season have been Margaret Grennell and Marilyn Beckner, a pair of juniors. Grennell, a 5-7 forward, tops her team with 394 points followed by Beckner (5-8) with 371.

Fans Rally 'Round Temple

By MICKEY HERSKOWITZ And STEVE PERKINS

HERSKOWITZ

Q. Is there anything new on that case involving Johnny Temple in North Carolina? Having followed his baseball career years ago, I would be interested in any information you might have as to how he got into that mess.

— Bob Orloff, Tampa, Fla.

A. Temple's fortunes had hit rock bottom in November when his wife, Becky, disclosed Johnny's troubles in a letter to Earl Lawson, the veteran Cincinnati baseball writer. Temple had been indicted in a theft ring of state highway equipment, had incriminated 15 others, was to testify as a prosecution witness and had received threats on his life. With the trial date approaching, the former Reds' All-Star second baseman was unable to afford an attorney.

Since then, an anonymous friend in Cincinnati has come forward to underwrite the cost of legal and psychiatric help for Temple. Quick-tempered and proud, Johnny has had problems with drinking and drugs and a severe depression. He has testified at one trial, has at least three more to go. His family is hoping he will get a probated sentence, but accepts the fact that he may serve time.

Temple's problem stems from his need to live up to the big league image, after several business investments went sour. Says one friend, a former athlete, "Johnny is one of those fellows who couldn't who let go of the applause."

Q. Did Billy Cunningham do anything different than Gene Shue had when he became the coach of the Philadelphia 76ers?

— Troy Walton, Salem, Ind.

A. The best thing Cunningham did was bring his cooler personality into the Philly locker room, which had been in chaos all of last year. There was also a feeling that Shue let the talk of a rivalry between George McGinnis and Julius Erving get out of hand. Cunningham, so far, has been able to find room for all those egos. Says McGinnis: "My ego is every other week when I get paid. I'm healthy. I'm playing well. I'm happy."

Q. Which fighter was ahead by rounds in the first Muhammad Ali-Sonny Liston fight, when Liston failed to answer the bell the seventh round?

— Larry Dean Meade, Lansing, Mich.

A. Until Liston quit on his stool at the end of the sixth round, complaining that he had hurt his shoulder, the officials had scored the fight to a draw. Under the ten-point "must" system, the two judges split their cards by scores of 58-56. Referee Barney Felix scored it at 57-57.

The man from the New York Times, among other, thought "the fight was Clay's from the start." Except, of course, when the young challenger had to be pushed into the ring for round 5 by his trainer, Angelo Dundee. Ali (then Cassius Clay) had been temporarily blinded by a substance that came off Liston's gloves.

Odds makers had established Liston as an 8-1 favorite.

HOT LINE FEEDBACK: Reader Charles Salkin, of Huntington, Pennsylvania, researched the matter of how many teams have appeared in the five major bowls, and came up with this list of six and their records: Alabama (13-11-1), Notre Dame (5-2), Penn State (6-5-2), Tennessee (6-11), Georgia (6-4) and Georgia Tech (11-5).

Grid Powers Expect Fight

60 per cent of its football games against other Division 1 members and have averaged 17,000 in paid home attendance in at least one of the last four seasons.

Unsuccessful attempts to restructure the division were made in each of the last two NCAA conventions after financial restrictions were voted in by an expanded Division 1 membership.

The major powers want to set for themselves limits on athletic grants-in-aid and the sizes of coaching staffs.

The proposal would take into account major basketball powers that do not play football — such as defending national champion Marquette — by requiring that they schedule at least 75 per cent of their games against other Division 1 schools.

The major powers appeared to have the majority vote needed to pass the legislation, but opponents were attempting to persuade some of the cellar dwellers of the big conferences to oppose it.

The issue is expected to reach the convention floor this afternoon, producing one of the fiercest floor fights in convention history.

WJCC Teams Impress Mayberry

By WALT McALEXANDER, Avalanche-Journal Sports Staff

Just name a team, any team, in the Western Junior College Conference and said team has impressed Odessa coach Ron Mayberry.

That may sound strange, especially since Mayberry's Wranglers share the league's top spot at 4-1 with New Mexico Military Institute.

But that one loss was to NMMI, of whom Mayberry says, "They beat us worst (95-79) than any other team has since I've been here. They've got some big people and have a lot of discipline and appear to have everything it takes to win the conference. But really, I've been impressed with everyone.

Down at the Laredo Tournament last weekend it was clear that we and Midland were the class of the tournament. Everyone was asking if all WJCC teams were as impressive. I think they are.

"This is only my second year in the league, but I think it's definitely stronger than last year. Take Frank Phillips, for example. They were picked last, but right now are 3-1 and have beaten Amarillo and Midland, which are two pretty fair teams."

Odessa knows about Midland. The Wranglers and Chaps have already met three times. Odessa won 86-85 in the finals of the Odessa Tournament, Midland took an 81-77 verdict in the Laredo finals but two days later Odessa won a conference tilt.

"We've played six times since I've been here and before that (96-87) game, the widest margin had been four points," Mayberry pointed out.

Odessa faces Clarendon tonight. Due to the weather, Mayberry and the team departed Odessa early Wednesday morning.

Matlack Seeks Met Bonus

NEW YORK (AP) — Veteran pitcher Jon Matlack says the New York Mets, who traded him last month to Texas, still owe him money. The Mets deny it and Commissioner Bowie Kuhn says he's looking into it.

Matlack and his attorney Richard Moss contend the Mets owe the left-handed pitcher a bonus that was written into his contract. The amount reportedly is $100,000 and would cover 1978 and 1979.

Matlack began a three-year, $450,000-plus contract with the Mets in 1977. Matlack's attorney filed a default notice by telegram to the Mets.

"If the provisions are not lived up to and the bonus not paid, it is our position Jon will be a free agent in 10 days," Moss said Wednesday.

Matlack, however, emphasized that the dispute would not affect his role with the Rangers, although he would like to get it settled before reporting.

"I am happy with the trade," he said. "If the Mets meet their agreement, I will go down to Texas Jan. 20 to meet their people."

The Mets, meanwhile, contend Matlack did not earn the bonus, and they say there is no written agreement between the club and Matlack that promises a bonus.

"There is a dispute between Matlack and the club over some bonus provisions," said a Mets' spokesman. "There was an understanding that Matlack's contract would be torn up last year and a new one offered if he fulfilled certain conditions."

Marvin Miller, executive director of the Major League Players Association, said "regardless of what M. Donald Grant (Mets president) or Joe McDonald (Mets general manager) say, the promises were made in writing." Miller said the club, however, had refused to give Matlack a copy of the agreement.

"Regardless of what Mr. Miller says," Grant replied, "there is no agreement in writing between their party."

Other games on tap tonight find Midland at Western Texas, Howard at New Mexico J.C., South Plains at Frank Phillips and NMMI at Amarillo. SPC's ferns host Frank Phillips in the lone women's game.

Mayberry feels there are many reasons for Odessa's success this year. One is Billy Ray Ennis. "He wasn't heavily recruited," Mayberry said of the Midland Lee product. "He's a 6-1 guard and there's not a great demand for 6-1 guards. We didn't expect him to make the team, but yet he's starting and leading us in scoring."

"We've also got some kids from Houston who not too many people knew about and they've done a super job. We didn't recruit any super players, but they're all playing together well and that helps."

Harris Shares Weekly Award

Estacado guard Alvin Harris and Monterey forward Margaret Grennell received this week's player of the week honors from The Avalanche-Journal.

Harris scored 21 points last Friday night and added 20 more Tuesday in district victories over Dunbar and Lamesa. The 6-0 Matador fired in an 18-foot jumper with three seconds left to lift EHS past DHS 81-79 in a vital overtime game at the Dunbar gym.

The three-year starter earned coach J. J. Wood's vote of confidence before the time arrived to produce.

"Alvin's been through this before," coach Wood said. "I didn't tell him 'Go shoot' but I had confidence."

Monterey girls coach Phil Hood also shows plenty of confidence in his 5-7 junior Miss Grennell, who leads her team in scoring with 394 points. Miss Grennell scored 53 points in the last two games for Monterey, now 13-6.

Harris led a list of nominees which included Lubbock High's Scotty Garcia, Monterey's Craig Ehlho, Christ the King's Ed Connors, Coronado's Jay Norton and Lubbock Christian's David Bryant.

Garcia, a 5-4 Western guard, scored 22 points in Tuesday night's loss to Caprock.

Ehlo grabbed seven rebounds and scored eight points in Monterey's win at Palo Duro. The 6-2 junior went 4 of 6 from the field in the game.

Connors, a CTK sophomore, performed capably with 30 points, 17 rebounds, 7 steals and 3 blocked shots in the Trojan victory over Amarillo Alamo Catholic.

Norton dimaxed Coronado's comeback over Tascosa with two key goals in the final moments.

Other girls nominees behind Miss Grennell were Estacado's Kathy Huey, Dunbar's Shirley Mooney, Lubbock Christian High's Kelly Meyers, Coronado's Kathi Wyatt and a trio of Christ the King guards, Teresa O'Loughlin, Cindy Bacon and Linda Giovannetti.

Miss Huey scored 16 points against Ector and held her opponent to three field goals. She grabbed four rebounds and five steals against Monterey.

Miss Meyers collected 41 points in two games, shooting 52 percent from the field along with 18 rebounds.

Eagle Coach Unruffled Despite First Setback

By WALT McALEXANDER
Avalanche-Journal Sports Staff

Less than 12 hours before, Keith Gast had watched his Southland Eagles become the final South Plains boys team to taste defeat.

But the second-year mentor didn't appear too ruffled by the development Wednesday. "I think we realized we weren't unbeatable. We'd won four games by two points or less and five other times we had to come from behind in the final period," he said of the antics that saw Southland, long the doormat of 8-B, zoom to a 17-0 mark.

"But we just weren't ready to play Tuesday night and Wilson was. They really took it to us and you've got to give them all the credit."

"I feel we'll use that as a learning tool and come back strong. We've actually got the toughest part of our schedule ahead, with New Home, Ropesville, and Meadow to close out the first round."

Despite the 40-38 setback, Southland fell only one notch to third in The Avalanche-Journal's area cage poll, which saw revisions in just about every classification although Abilene Cooper was the only No. 1 ranked team to tumble.

Southland was picked last — again — in the 8-B chase and had lost 47 consecutive league encounters and had not won more than four games in any season this decade.

But Gast has found the winning combination in two freshmen—6-2 twins Perry and Gary Hill—, a sophomore—5-8 Sherman Dougherty—and two seniors—6-1 Nathan Wheeler and 5-7 Frank Valdez.

Of the 43 students attending Southland High School, 23 are boys and 15 are on the varsity, with seven logging much playing time. The starting five are all in double figures with Perry Hill's 14 leading the way. The No. 6 man, 6-0 soph Andrew Hill, is averaging nine a game and 5-9 junior Barry Alvis also has seen much action.

"We had good shooters last year," Gast explained, "and we have some experience back. Plus, our junior high team was 15-3 last year and I just think we have some good players and they're starting to jell."

"Basically, we went back to fundamentals because when I got here the kids were very weak and needed a lot of work in that area. And they still do. But they've taken a good interest in basketball and worked real hard and deserve everything they get."

Sands remained No. 1 in Class B, but Motley County jumped from fifth to the runner-up spot with a win over Jayton, which fell from the listings. Southland dipped to third, with Whitharral falling a notch after losing to Spade and Christ the King assuming the No. 5 spot.

Estacado and Canyon's girls in AAA, Dimmitt and Slaton's girls in AA, Lubbock Christian and Stanton's girls in A and Jayton's girls in B retained the other No. 1 spots.

Cooper fell to third in AAAA after losing to Midland Lee, which jumped to second. Abilene took over as No. 1 there.

Estacado beat both the No. 2 and 4 team last week, but Dunbar and Lamesa held their positions. Monahans, which has won 15 of its last 16, retained third and Borger, despite losing to Pampa, ranked No. 5 in AAAA, held fifth.

Morton and Friena continue to rank 2-3 in AA, with Tulia jumping a notch to fourth and newcomers Slaton and Denver City sharing the No. 5 spot.

In Class A, Lorenzo jumped two notches to second and Shallowater slid a spot to third. Paducah, which had its Tuesday game cancelled by the Gas Company — low pressure — fell a spot to fourth and Petersburg, which has won six of its last seven in evening its record at 6-6, took over fifth.

Muleshoe vaulted into the AA runner-up spot on the girls poll, with Lockney, Roosevelt and Idolou slipping a spot each.

Hale Center knocked off No. 2 New Deal and No. 5 Rails last week to leap from fourth to runner-up in A. New Deal and Springlake-Earth each slipped a notch and Shallowater took over the No. 5 spot.

Nazareth and Sands remained 3-3 in B, but Silverton and Klondike swapped spots after Sands whipped Klondike. Those five ranked B fem units have a combined 101-14 mark.

Sanders Gets Initial Win

By The Associated Press
It was a sweet victory for Tom Sanders, but he didn't have time to really savor it. "This is no time for reflection—this is a time for business," said the rookie Boston Celtic coach after gaining his first National Basketball Association victory, a 91-88 decision over the Houston Rockets Wednesday night.

Sanders called his initial victory "a great win, but nothing particularly symbolic." "It was just a win we needed," he added. "That's all."

Sanders' lack of romanticism is understandable. He is attempting to resurrect a Boston team that is off to one of its worst starts in history. The Celtics had lost nine of 10 games in a disastrous road trip, including two under Sanders after he took over the club from Tom Heinsohn last week.

Wednesday night, Dave Cowens displayed some of the firepower Sanders needs to bring the Celtics back to respectability. Playing 46 minutes, Cowens scored 18 points, had 12 rebounds and nine assists. He also did a terrific defensive job on Moses Malone, Houston's high scorer.

The 6-foot-10 Malone started with a 19-point average, plus more than 14 rebounds a game, but couldn't get untracked. He was held scoreless until he sank two free throws with one second left and managed to grab just four rebounds, all off the defensive board.

"I just kept making contact with Malone, boxing him out," Cowens said. "His usual lateral movement was missing. He just wasn't going to the basket."

"The key was Malone's effort," Houston Coach Tom Nissalke said after the Rockets' fourth consecutive loss. "With Kevin Kunnert and Rudy Tomjanovich out we have to have him rebound and he didn't give it to us. His whole game was disappointing."

"I took a real bad fall Tuesday night against Philadelphia," Malone said. "I was taped up heavily tonight and really was playing hurt."

"We knew Dave had to concentrate on Malone because he's one of the best offensive rebounders in the league," Sanders said. "We also realized that Dave wouldn't be able to help out the other guys, so everyone knew they had to work hard on defense—and they did."

In the other NBA games, the Seattle SuperSonics defeated the Detroit Pistons 106-100; the Golden State Warriors trimmed the New Jersey Nets 103-92; the San Antonio Spurs hammered the Milwaukee Bucks 130-106; the Kansas City Kings whipped the Los Angeles Lakers 102-94; the Phoenix Suns routed the New Orleans Jazz 142-99 and the Atlanta Hawks turned back the Washington Bullets 100-95.

Wolfpack, Terps ACC Surprises

By The Associated Press
The North Carolina State basketball team is the surprise of the Atlantic Coast Conference this season—but no surprise at all to Coach Norm Sloan.

"I've said over and over again that we would be good," Sloan says. "It's just that we've come together quicker than expected."

The latest team to be surprised by the resurgent Wolfpack is Maryland; an 88-82 victim Wednesday night.

That was the 11th victory in 12 games for a team that was theoretically not one of the ACC powerhouses this year.

"The team is playing hard and I'm really happy where we are," said Sloan, whose 16th-ranked club is undefeated thus far in two ACC games. "But it's still a long, long way to go."

Maryland, on the other hand, was characterized in preseason estimates as one of the challengers for the ACC title. So far, though, the Terps look like one of the also-rans, losing for the third time in as many ACC games.

"I thought we played better tonight than the other times (losses to Duke and Wake Forest), but we still made a lot of mistakes," said Maryland Coach Lefty Driesell. "We sort of gave the game away, but I don't want to take anything away from State. They played a great game."

Driesell's afterthought: "I still think we'll be all right."

Hawkeye Whitney scored 18 points and Tony Warren added 17 to lead the North Carolina State offense. Greg Manning's 20 points topped Maryland.

Elsewhere among the nation's ranked teams, No. 8 Syracuse defeated Penn State 83-77; No. 10 Kansas trimmed Oklahoma State 69-57; No. 13 Holy Cross outscored Assumption 97-90; No. 14 Providence whipped St. Joseph's, Pa., 76-69; 15th-ranked Virginia stopped Delaware 71-50 and No. 17 Georgetown edged Navy 56-53.

Ross Kindel scored 19 points and four teammates contributed double figures in Syracuse's victory. Penn State sophomore Steve Kuhn had a career-high 27 points, but they weren't enough to stop the Orangemen's 12th victory in 13 games.

Donnie Von Moore scored 14 points and John Douglas added 10 as Kansas defeated Oklahoma State. Ronnie Perry and Chris Potter combined for 51 points to power Holy Cross past Assumption.

"I thought that Assumption played a very nice game," said Holy Cross Coach George Blaney. "I don't know if we took them too lightly or not, but it's still a win and now we're 10-1."

Troy Williams scored a game-high 29 points to lead Providence over St. Joseph's.

Sutton Miffed At Hogs' Fans

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. (AP) — University of Arkansas basketball coach Eddie Sutton says Razorbacks fans may not realize what they are going for with them with the No. 3 team in the nation.

Sutton said recently that he has been a little miffed at the lack of excitement by Arkansas fans at home games here and in Little Rock.

The Razorbacks are unbeaten in their first 13 games.

"Two years ago we had a good basketball team and the fans were crazy," Sutton said. "This team borders on being great and is the most exciting basketball team I've ever been associated with. But the enthusiasm of two years ago is not there. I don't think the fans really know what they have."

"I could coach another 50 years and they won't have another team as exciting as this one."

He said he wasn't "down" on the Hog supporters, who have bought out every home game in Fayetteville and Little Rock this year, but he thinks the fans should take a more active, vocal role.

"They should be tearing the place apart. Basketball fans should let their hair down," he said.

Globetrotters Slate City Show Saturday

The 1978 world tour of the famed Harlem Globetrotters makes a brief stop in Lubbock Saturday at 8 p.m. in the Municipal Auditorium.

The Trotters, now in their second half-century of performing, will play from coast to coast and from the Mexican Border to Canada this year. They have played in more than 1500 North American cities during their 52-year history.

Two former Southwest Conference players will be performing for this team Saturday. Jimmy Blacklock, an ex-Texas player, and former Texas A&M performer Steve Jones.

The 6-2, 180-pound Blacklock is a native of Houston and was all-SWC during his Longhorn career. Jones is a 6-7, 190-pound rookie with the Globetrotters and also a Houston native. He was a two-year starter for the Aggies after attending Hill Junior College. His brother, Dwight, is a star for the NBA's Houston Rockets. He led the Aggies in scoring and assists during his senior season.

Theodore Lee, a former Houston standout, also plays for the Trotters. He is a 6-8, 225-pounder.

The team leader is Marques Haynes, an incredible dribbler and ball-handler. He is considered one of the best ball-handlers in basketball and also serves as coach of the Globetrotters' International Team.

The Globetrotters call themselves the world's greatest family entertainment, and they have the attendance records to back up the claim.

They set an all-time attendance record in Europe last year, and they also hold the world attendance record for an outdoor basketball game and the indoor pro basketball attendance mark. The outdoor mark is 75,000, set in Berlin's Olympic Stadium in 1951. The indoor record is 31,112 in the Louisiana Superdome in 1975.

The Trotters have performed before more than 85 million persons after over 13,000 games. Last season, the team set attendance marks in such cities as Philadelphia, Kansas City, Los Angeles, Oakland, St. Petersburg, Vancouver and Seattle.

This year, the club will play in more than 400 cities on four continents, including South America, Australia and Europe, as well as North America.

The Trotters have played in small high-school gyms and some of the nation's largest stadiums and arenas. In the early days, the troupe consisted of owner Abe Saperstein and five players, traveling from village to village in an old car. Today, the tour includes more than 30 persons.

ABC's 'Fish' Hooks Audience

By JOAN HANAUER
NEW YORK (UPI) — It was happy days for "Fish" in the Nielsen ratings this week as ABC recaptured first place, CBS took a better hold on second and NBC had a couple of winners in the top ten even without "Little House on the Prairie."
ABC was back on top in a week in which "Laverne & Shirley" was preempted by "Fish."
Most weeks this season, Laverne and friend have been in the No. 1 spot on the Nielsen, followed by "Happy Days." The week ending Jan. 8, the Fonz was on first, followed by "Fish." Parent show "Barney Miller" only ranked 12th.
The good news for CBS was that it not only was able to score four of the top ten programs, and seven of the top 20, but all were regular series.
Particularly happy for CBS was the appearance of "Lou Grant" in 11th place with a 40 share of the audience. The episode, in which the managing editor's daughter is aboard a plane unable to land at Los Angeles airport because of mechanical trouble, gave the audience a welcome sprinkling of humor as well as an authentic glimpse at the way newspapers cover breaking stories.

Much of it is done with dogged telephone and leg work, little with inspired hunch and flashy footwork. The writer of the show, Charles Einstein, whose credits include wire service and newspaper reporter as well as novelist and scriptwriter, worked under the philosophy that the news business doesn't need show biz hype to make it interesting.
He also believes that viewers may be willing to take Ed Asner seriously, but not Lou Grant — and gave the show much needed touches of incidental humor.
For NBC, in third place for the week and for the season to date, good news came hard, but a Pollyanna could point to two shows in the top ten, both specials. Its best performer, "Little House on the

The show that knocked "Little House" off the air, to the despair of small girls everywhere, was "NBC Reports: Medicine in America."
"Medicine" was no more of a ratings disaster than most documentaries these days — it ranked 62nd in a field of 68 with a 22 percent share of the audience — but three hours of standard ratings were not what the doctor ordered to perk up NBC's ailing standing in the Nielsens.
The Nielsens also reflected a settling in the schedules and among audiences. Of the bottom 10 shows in the ratings, "Medicine" aside, only two were series that are scheduled to continue, with the others already on the casualty list.

Man in Belgium Finds Missiles

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — A man walking his dogs found two 16-inch, U.S.-made, ground-to-air missiles aimed at the Israeli Embassy from a wall 164 feet away this week. Army experts blew them up in a park.
Investigators said the missiles were plugged to a makeshift battery detonator and fitted to a stand. But apparently the detonator failed and the terrorists fled.

GM To Push Sales Of Mid-Sized Cars

By DONALD WOUTAT
 DETROIT (AP) — General Motors isn't planning price cuts or rebates but will make unspecified changes in advertising and merchandising to beef up sales of its intermediate-sized cars, says GM President Elliott M. Estes.
 Estes acknowledged Wednesday that sales of the restyled, sharply-downsized models haven't met company expectations.
 He said GM "might have been too cocky" about the intermediates after the No. 1 automaker's success in 1977 with its reduced-size big cars.
 Estes reiterated GM's bullish forecast of 11.75 million industry car sales in the U.S. in 1978, but said government action is needed on energy, tax and other policies to create a climate of confidence.
 Estes told reporters after a talk to the Detroit Rotary Club that GM will make "some changes in the way we merchandise and advertise" the intermediate models to counter lagging sales, which are down 18.8 percent from this time last year.

 He wouldn't elaborate, but said "price cuts and rebates are not in the picture."
 The auto industry has been in a nagging slump since mid-November. The biggest problem for GM has been its sharply-downsized Chevrolet Malibu and Monte Carlo, Pontiac Le Mans and Grand Prix, Oldsmobile Cutlass and Buick Century and Regal.

FILM DEBUT
 LOS ANGELES (AP) — Impressionist Will Jordan will make his film debut playing Ed Sullivan in Universal's "I Want to Hold Your Hand."

Mamet Play Produced In New Cabaret

NEW YORK (AP) — The Public Theater, a building full of off-Broadway theaters of various sizes and shapes, has turned its large, third-floor Martinson Hall into "Public Theater-Cabaret." Chairs are pulled up to tables and food and drink can be ordered before and after the show.
 Recently an interesting play opened there.
 It is David Mamet's "The Water Engine," especially enjoyable for its setting and devices.
 Mamet's "A Life in the Theater" is running off-Broadway now and his "American Buffalo" was on Broadway last season.
 Setting for "The Water Engine" is a radio studio of the 1930s. Two long tables have chairs and mikes. At one side is a sound effects man with his bells for doorbells and clappers for walking feet, at the other side an organ and organist.

 The play is performed by 10 actors, dressed in '30s mode. Sometimes they speak into the table-mikes, changing their voices when they "become" another character. At other times they partially act out the story, moving to a certain corner of the stage used as a neighborhood drugstore, etc.
 The plot has a Chicagoan, who invented an engine which runs on water, trying to patent it. The patent lawyer's colleague will buy, or take, the invention from the inventor. It is clear early on that no other ending is possible but the play still maintains suspense, underscored by ominous chords from the organ.
 Throughout, from time to time, an announcer promotes a chain letter. And as a prelude, the audience gets 15 minutes of singing from Annie Hat, a better song stylist than most.

1040A Form Expanded By IRS

By RAY DE CRANE For more than 30 years Americans talked of using either the Short Form or the Long Form in the filling of income tax returns. But no more. There is now Short Form this year.

There still is a Form 1040A—the number that has been assigned to the Short Form. But the 1040A is now identical in length to the venerable Form 1040.

Internal Revenue Service form designers had to expand the 1040A to convert it into a one-sided tax form. Last year's abbreviated Short Form required its users to flip from one side to the other to complete their entries.

Now the redesigned 1040A is all printed on one side and everything is in proper sequential order. Of all the many changes in the tax forms this year, the dropping of the Short Form designation is the one that Revenue Commissioner Jerome Kurtz accepted most reluctantly according to Washington insiders at IRS.

There is no income limitation on the use of Form 1040A, so long as all the income was only from wages, salary and tips, with not more than $400 in dividends, nor more than $400 in interest income.

Should there be any income from other sources, such as capital gains, rental income, capital gain dividends, or if the interest or dividend income exceeds $400, Form 1040A may not be used.

Also, 1040A is only for those who do not itemize their deductions and persons who do not claim a moving expense adjustment, disability income exclusion or child and dependent care credit.

Despite its limitations, IRS anticipates that more than 30 million filers will use the streamlined 1040A, even though it is no longer a Short Form.

LISD To Seek Library Grant

The Lubbock Independent School District said Wednesday it will apply for about $105,000 for additional library and audio-visual materials under Title IV of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act.

The application will be submitted to the Texas Education Agency, which does the funds, within the next few weeks. Warner Sims, the district's director of special projects, said.

If approved, half the money would go for library books and other library materials, and half for audio-visual equipment.

The funds are available under Title IV, Part B. Monies also may be available under Title IV, Part C for special or innovative school projects, Sims said. Part C grants are "very competitive," however.

Sims said he does not know whether school departments plan to submit proposals for Part C funds.

News Brings Small Gains In Trading

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market, struggling to end a seven-session slide, eked out a narrow gain today on some favorable inflation news.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, off more than 55 points since New Year's to a 33-month low at Wednesday's close, showed a .52 advance at 776.42 by noon-time today.

Gainers held a very slight lead over losers among New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

Before the market opened, the government reported that the wholesale price index rose 0.5 percent in December, down from 0.7 percent the month before.

Analysts said the news helped encourage some buying and trading of previous short sales by traders with the Dow at its lowest level since the spring of 1975.

But the market still faced the obstacle of continued pressure on the dollar in foreign exchange markets.

Weyerhaeuser led the active list, off 1/2 at 25 1/4. A 402,300-share block traded at 25 1/4.

The NYSE's composite index of more than 1,500 common stocks was unchanged at 49.52. On the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was up .31 at 120.03.

Volume on the Big Board came to 9.57 million shares by noon, against 8.96 million at the same point Wednesday.

NEW YORK (AP) — New York Stock Exchange Index: +1 cent. Market: 776.42. Industrial: 49.52. Transportation: 38.57. Utility: 4.08. Finance: 50.40.

Livestock

AMARILLO (AP) — Panhandle area cattle made (to be) the plant) as of 11:30 a.m. (beef trade) (beef trade, western Oklahoma and New Mexico).

Not enough sales carcass beef or primal cuts reported to establish price trends. Four head beef steady. Packers reported good interest and inquiry from most areas, a slight firm undertone developing.

Walter beef (4 heads): Choice 3-500-700 lbs 66.75 steady.

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Cattle and calves: 500 light supply slaughter cows about steady. No sales other slaughter classes. Feeder steers and bulls generally steady but not well tested. Feeder heifers in low limited volume to test trade, few sales week.

Book Gives Biography Of Brezhnev

By ARTHUR GAVSHON
LONDON (AP) — The first authorized biography in English of Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev went on sale today in British bookstores. It tells little about the Soviet leader's life that was not already known, but there are lots of pictures.

Publisher Robert Maxwell of Pergamon Press and Soviet Ambassador Nikolai Lunov launched the profusely illustrated, 60,000-word book "Brezhnev - A Short Biography" at a crowded reception this week at the Soviet Embassy. It will be published in the United States in mid-February.

The book, priced at $10, contains a foreword written four months ago by Brezhnev saying the English version is an updated translation of the biography published in Moscow in 1976 to mark his 70th birthday.

Maxwell, a native of Czechoslovakia and former Laborite member of the House of Commons, said it is the first of a series that will include President Carter, Chinese Communist Party Chairman Hua Kuo-feng and U.N. Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim. He said he expects to arrange for distribution of a Russian-language edition of Carter's biography in the Soviet Union.

The biography of the Soviet leader was written cooperatively by members of the Soviet Communist Party's central committee and by the Institute of Marxism-Leninism, according to the title page. The tone is echoed by the book jacket, which describes Brezhnev as "soldier, party worker and statesman" who rose "from ordinary steel worker to supreme leadership of the Soviet Union."

The book speaks of "the titanic work of the party, the central committee and its politburo headed by Brezhnev." It says Brezhnev's election as general secretary of the party was "more than a mere acknowledgment of his outstanding personal qualities — it was also an expression of approval and support of the Leninist policy," which it said he followed scrupulously.

The book omits all mention of the controversial Brezhnev Doctrine proclaiming the duty and right of the Soviet government and other Communist regimes to intervene on behalf of Communist governments in other countries.

AFTER — Tony Costa, president of New York's Maris Sales Corp., appears to be happy with his new look after getting a permanent from stylist Gian Aguado. Aguado and other stylists say the number of men getting permanents rose in the last year, with the trend expected to continue this year. (AP Laserphoto)

Men Overcome Fear Of Curlers

By BERT BERLINER
Associated Press Writer
Permanents for men? Some males say they would never be seen sporting 50 pink hair rollers while sitting under a dryer.

Others say curlers can't scare them. "Vanity overcomes a lot of inhibitions," says New York advertising stylist Ron Abrams.

Abrams, who does models' hair and make-up for newspaper and magazine ads, says the curly look for men is common in ads across the country.

"Permanents may be more prevalent in large cities, but a growing number of men in smaller towns are clipping out magazine pictures of curly haired men and asking their stylists, 'How would I look like this?'" he says.

For $25 to $50 every three to four months, permanents provide the illusion of thick hair for the balding or thin-haired man.
