

Carter Sets Zaire Aid; Belgians Open Rescue

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter cleared the way Thursday for shipment of medical supplies, communications equipment, petroleum and spare airplane parts to Zaire, press secretary Jody Powell announced.

Later, Pentagon sources said at least two C-141 jet transports had left the United States for Zaire carrying airplane fuel that would be available to Belgian troops trying to rescue Europeans caught in the war zone.

The sources, who asked not to be identified, also said the United States was lining up aircraft to fly the equipment and supplies, approved by Carter, to Zaire within the next few days.

Carter issued a memorandum officially declaring such aid to be "in the national security interests of the United States," effectively releasing up to $17.5 million in credit sales to the embattled African nation.

Shipments of the supplies, which had been urgently requested by Zaire after an invasion by rebels based in neighboring Angola, will begin within a week, said Lt. Col. Leslie Denend of the president's National Security Council staff.

Powell would give no indication of whether United States planes would be used to airlift the supplies, or whether there would be any U.S. involvement in a joint Western rescue operation for hundreds of Europeans caught in the middle of the fighting.

Belgian paratroopers and French commandos flew to Zaire Thursday to mount a joint Western rescue mission for an estimated 2,500 foreigners, including 14 Americans, isolated and threatened by the rebel invasion of Shaba Province.

Reliable sources in the capital of Kinshasa said 142 troops of the French Foreign Legion had landed and more were expected.

A State Department official, who asked not to be identified, said the United States would not supply troops or planes for the rescue mission but might provide some lesser logistical support. However, about 1,500 U.S. Army soldiers in airborne units remained on alert at Ft. Bragg, N.C.

Congress approved up to $17.5 million in military credits for Zaire for the current fiscal year, but added a condition that Carter must find the aid to be in the national interest before any could be sent.

Carter's move untied not only the credits, clearing the way for shipment of the requested supplies, but also $2.5 million more in direct U.S. aid for training high Zairean military officers in the United States. This training, however, does not appear to be directly related to the current fighting.

Powell said the president believed the aid to Zaire is in the interest of the United States because it was urgently requested; because the nation has a moderate, pro-Western government; and because it is being attacked by forces from outside its borders.

Fulfill Requests

Denend said the supplies being readied for shipment will fulfill all present Zairean aid requests. He said it isn't known how much of the $17.5 million in new credit will be used up in fulfilling the request.

Also left unclear is where the equipment will come from and exactly how it will be transported. Timing of the first shipments also was uncertain. While Denend said shipments would begin within a week, a State Department official who asked not to be named said the material could start moving as soon as today.

President Mobutu Sese Seko took two dozen Western journalists to the airstrip at the embattled Shaba town of Kolwezi Thursday to prove it was in government hands. Smoke was visible over the town five miles away. The thud of mortars and the rattle of automatic weapons fire could be heard nearby, and mortar rounds landing near the airport ended the visit after 20 minutes.

That Name Of Woodward Just Keeps Popping Up

WHEN U.S. District Judge Halbert O. Woodward this fall begins to monitor the progress of the integration plan he ordered Lubbock schools to implement, the judge will have an inside source of information — his daughter-in-law.

Superintendent Ed Irons on Thursday presented to the school board a list of 13 teachers proposed for employment for the 1978-79 school year. The next-to-last name on that list was Gwen Woodward.

"Is this applicant any relation to someone we know?" board president Charles Waters asked the superintendent.

Irons nodded.

As it turns out, Gwen is married to Ben Woodward, the federal judge's son who just completed his second year of law school at Texas Tech University.

Mrs. Woodward is a recent graduate of Texas Tech and holds a bachelor's degree. She majored in art and elementary education.

The school board hired her at an annual salary of $8,960 — the standard for beginning teachers here.

School officials stressed they weren't playing favorites in Mrs. Woodward's selection. Robert Knight, personnel director, noted that Mrs. Woodward was an outstanding applicant in part because of her combination of specialties, art and elementary education.

Mrs. Woodward and other teachers who are qualified in two different fields are "valuable because they give us flexibility in making our faculty assignments," Knight said.

Mrs. Woodward has yet to be assigned to a school here for next year. Neither have most of the other newly hired teachers.

And that, said Knight, is because the personnel office is still "somewhat up in the air" about the faculty changes necessitated by the ruling handed down by Mrs. Woodward's father-in-law.

Ruling Party Claims Dominican Victory

SANTO DOMINGO, Dominican Republic (UPI) — The party of President Joaquin Balaguer Thursday claimed victory in disputed presidential elections and the angry opposition threatened a general strike. Washington warned the election could strain relations between the two countries.

The Dominican army seized polling stations at 4 a.m. Wednesday and halted the vote count when it appeared that presidential candidate Antonio Guzman of the opposition Dominican Revolutionary Party was winning.

Guzman Wednesday night proclaimed himself winner of the election and appealed to President Carter to see that his election was respected. But Thursday vote counting resumed and Balaguer's Reformist Party claimed victory on the basis of late returns from the countryside.

In Washington, the State Department said Secretary of State Cyrus Vance had sent a personal message to Balaguer warning that attempts to subvert the elections could damage diplomatic relations between Washington and Santo Domingo.

"He (Vance) pointed out that the subversion of that process would have serious effects on our bilateral relations with the Dominican Republic," a spokesman said.

The government said the recount — marred by sporadic incidents — showed Balaguer had won by at least 180,000 votes. Before the suspension of the vote count, Guzman, a 67-year-old rancher, had a lead of almost 100,000 votes in partial returns; the opposition party itself said it had won by 1.3 million to 475,000 votes.

Jacobo Majluta, vice presidential candidate of the opposition Revolutionary Party, told a news conference late Thursday:

"It is obvious we have won an overwhelming victory. We have the backing of the nation's economic, political and religious forces. If there is a coup or electoral fraud, it will be answered by a general strike, followed by certain other measures so that any government based on fraud will be overthrown by the force of the people."

Italy Passes Liberal Law On Abortion

ROME (AP)— The Italian parliament passed one of Europe's most liberal abortion laws Thursday, despite opposition from the ruling Christian Democrat Party and a strong anti-abortion campaign by the Vatican.

The Senate approved the bill 160-148. The Chamber of Deputies, the lower house of Parliament, passed the measure April 14 by a 308-275 vote.

The law will go into effect in a few days after being published in the official gazette.

The law permits a woman over 18 to seek free abortion for physical, economic, social or psychological reasons. The woman will have to consult a doctor and may consult her partner, but the final choice is hers alone in the first 90 days of pregnancy.

After 90 days abortion would be allowed if a doctor finds continued pregnancy poses a serious health hazard to the mother or the child.

The law replaced a Mussolini-era ban on abortion as a crime against the purity of the Italian race.

Abortion will be on demand and its cost entirely paid by the state.

Only the church-backed Christian Democrats and two rightist parties, the Italian Social Movement and National Democracy, voted against the bill as an alliance of Communists, Socialists and smaller parties carried the bill through both houses of parliament.

The passage almost certainly headed off a potentially divisive national referendum.

The Vatican issued no immediate comment.

After the bill cleared the Chamber of Deputies, the Vatican asked senators to reject it, saying that its enactment would entail consequences "as grave as homicide."

Support Claimed

He added, "we also have the support of 90 to 95 percent of the police and army."

Majluta, who was introduced as the vice president-elect, said that in Santiago de los Caballeros, the republic's second largest city, that two PRD delegates had been forced to certify falsified returns giving Balaguer majorities.

"I wish to say to that person who wishes to become the Pinochet of the Dominican Republic that the Dominican Republic is not Chile and this is not the southern cone (of South America) but the Caribbean — let them learn something," Majluta said. Augusto Pinochet is the president of Chile.

Ruling party press secretary Perez Reyes, however, scoffed at sets of figures showing the PRD in the lead, saying those were based on early returns from urban centers where the opposition always does well.

Victory Statement

The formal Balaguer government victory claim came from party spokesman Hector Perez Reyes who told a news conference, "The Reformist Party formally declares itself the winner of this contest up to the moment. He refused to give vote totals, saying "I don't think that is necessary."

Perez Reyes also gave the first official explanation for the army's seizure of the

Hefty Storms Prowl Over Part Of Area

SEVERE thunderstorms plagued portions of the South Plains late Thursday as warm, moist air from the Gulf clashed with cool air from the Pacific.

Although Lubbock remained dry late Thursday, the moist Gulf air was expected to spread westward today, ushering storm activity into the Lubbock area.

Forecasters placed the probability of precipitation at 30 percent for today and tonight. Winds will be southeasterly at 10 to 15 miles per hour and were expected to be stronger and gusty in the vicinity of any thunderstorms.

With the Pacific air in the area, temperatures should cool from Thursday's hot 90s to the upper 80s. Readings will drop to the low 60s by tonight.

The very heavy thunderstorm activity late Thursday extended from a line from near O'Donnell to Childress and on into Oklahoma. The storms were moving to the northeast at 10 miles per hour.

Weather watchers at Post and Grassland, located 20 miles east of Tahoka, reported golfball-size hail with Thursday evening's thunderstorms. However, a spokeswoman with the Garza County Sheriff's Department said that no damages from the large hail had been reported.

Spur reported marble-sized hail while O'Donnell reported pea-size hail stones.

Rainfall associated with the severe storms ranged from 1.25 inches in Post to about .75 of an inch in Spur and Dickens. At 10 p.m., the National Weather Service had reported additional heavy thunderstorms over Garza County with rainfall amounts estimated near 1.5 inches per hour. The NWS issued a flash flood warning for Garza County until 2 a.m. today, reporting that water had been flowing over roads making travel hazardous.

The extended forecast calls for scattered afternoon and nighttime thunderstorms Saturday, with warm days and mild nights on tap for Sunday through Tuesday.

Morale Boost Seen

The visit apparently was intended to boost the morale of Zaireans and to show the battle had not spread far beyond Kolwezi.

Plane and plane packed with crack airborne troops took off from Brussels' military airport Thursday afternoon on the 5,000-mile journey to the central African nation, a former Belgian colony. The flight by the U.S.-made C-130 transports was expected to take at least 10 hours.

An estimated 1,750 paratroopers and other Belgian military personnel had been alerted to take part in the intercontinental operation.

The British also were involved in the planning for the rescue effort, but it was not known what role they might play.

"No More Fighting"

Belgian officials reported receiving a single radio report from the battle area saying only: "There is no more fighting in Kolwezi."

Kolwezi, a copper-mining town at the center of the rebel-held area of southern Zaire, is where most of the 2,500 foreigners have been stranded since the invasion last Friday.

A Belgian Foreign Ministry spokesman said the broadcast could not be reconfirmed. It was not known whether it meant that either the rebels or government troops had withdrawn, or that a truce had been arranged.

Burned out jet fighters and shell casings littered the airstrip as Mobutu, encircled by paratroopers, chatted with soldiers. Motor rounds landed near the airstrip after about 20 minutes, ending the visit.

Paratroopers said they stormed the town at about 3:30 p.m. Wednesday local

Rollover Kills Slaton Man

SLATON (Special) — Sam Maxey, a 71-year-old Slaton man, became Lubbock County's second traffic fatality of the day Thursday afternoon when he lost control of his pickup truck on U.S. 84 near the Woodrow Road.

Justice of the Peace Arvin Stafford pronounced Maxey dead at the scene of the one-vehicle rollover. He ruled the death accidental.

Maxey was the only occupant of the pickup truck. Services for Maxey are pending with South Plains Funeral Home of Lubbock.

Thursday morning Robert Don Johnston died at Methodist Hospital from injuries he received in an accident at 6th Street and Avenue S. Johnston was the 14th person to die in a traffic mishap in the City of Lubbock this year.

Korean Aid Cutoff Try Blocked

WASHINGTON (AP) — House leaders were blocked Thursday from rushing approval of a resolution threatening to cut off U.S. aid to South Korea until it allows questioning of a former ambassador accused of influence buying in Congress.

Special counsel Leon Jaworski had asked for approval of the resolution in an effort to counteract House rejection last week of a non-binding proposal to reduce U.S. aid to South Korea.

But House leaders withdrew the resolution after Rep. Robert E. Bauman, R-Md., saying proponents were moving too hastily, served notice he would force a delay if necessary to give lawmakers more time to study it.

Bauman could have forced the delay because each member present on the floor must consent to a suspension of House rules.

A House showdown on the threat was averted when Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, D-Mass., announced the issue will be put to a floor vote next Tuesday.

At ethics committee hearings earlier this year, the former ambassador, Kim Dong Jo, and his wife were accused of trying to give envelopes stuffed with $100 bills to at least three, and possibly 24, House members.

But the committee as yet has been unable to interrogate Kim. It hasn't attempted to interrogate the former ambassador's wife.

Across the Capitol, meanwhile, Sen. Adlai E. Stevenson, D-Ill., said a Senate Ethics Committee report will show that no senator was bribed by South Korea to support programs it wanted from Congress.

However, Tongsun Park, the millionaire South Korean rice dealer who is the central figure in the alleged influence-buying scheme, said Thursday he gave at least $5,000 to the 1972 presidential campaign of the late Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey. Park also said he donated funds to three other senators.

Park, who returned to Washington

Wednesday night for a second round of questioning by congressional committees, made the assertion in an interview on NBC-TV's "Today" program.

Park's statements are his first public claim that he made cash contributions to Humphrey.

Park, referring to Humphrey, said he didn't think "the senator himself was aware of the contribution being made."

Aides to the late senator say that prior to his death last January, Humphrey told the Senate Ethics Committee that he had no knowledge of any contribution from Park. Former Humphrey campaign aides

Lakes Area Becomes Tribute To City's 'Noisy' Buddy Holly

By BILL KERNS
A-J Entertainment Editor

BUDDY Holly, the Lubbock born rock and roll innovator who met an untimely death in 1959 in the crash of a chartered plane, was like most young musicians when he started his career: noisy.

In fact, his brother Larry said Thursday, "Buddy made so much noise that we ran him off a lot. And he used to practice in an old tin barn not more than a hundred yards away from here... He never dreamed this area was ever going to be dedicated to him."

Formal Dedication Held

Larry Holley was speaking of a tract of land, estimated by park officials to cover 30 acres "though no perimeters have been set yet," just north of Canyon Lakes Number Two in Lubbock. The area was dedicated in formal ceremonies Thursday morning to the late musician, and designated "The Buddy Holly Recreation Area."

The dedication of the recreation area, which at this time appears almost desolate with its scattered mesquite and lack of grass, was correlated to the premiere of a movie called "The Buddy Holly Story." The movie was screened for 600 invited guests Thursday night at the Cinema West theater, and opens its regular run today.

Speakers at the dedication included Larry Holley; Gary Busey, the actor who portrays the Lubbock-born singer in the film; KSEL president John Kreiger; Henry Huneke, chairman of the board of the Lubbock Parks and Recreation Department; and Lubbock Mayor Dirk West, who presented an official proclamation to Buddy's parents, Mr. and Mrs. L.O. Holley designating May 18 "Buddy Holly Day."

Mayor Unveils Sign

It was West who unveiled the park sign which dedicates the area to the late singer, a man West labeled "an outstanding young man who was one of Lubbock's own."

Huneke later took the microphone and asked those in attendance, "Don't see it (the area) as a barren area with a beautiful lake behind it, that not too long ago was one of the city's dumpgrounds. Imagine instead a playground, nature trails, all landscaped and designed specifically for physically and mentally handicapped people... As you go by, look upon this area as unique; this park will be one of the first of its kind."

At this point, a miniature park sign was presented Buddy Holly's parents as a memento.

Larry Holley approached the subject of Lubbock's waiting so long to recognize Buddy Holly's fame. He said, "We just thought of Buddy as an everyday person." He added it took longer for the fame to become evident, then closed

Hermaphrodite Burro Saved From Dissector

CHICAGO (AP) — Hermy, an unwanted hermaphrodite burro, has been rescued from the dissector's knife and placed in a 22-acre meadowland to live out a sexless life.

"Hermy, a freak of nature, is our first, and so far, only lodger," said Dennis White, a field consultant for the American Humane Association. "He's a brownish-gray little burro, 8 years old, and should live another 30 years. He's really something special."

White, based in Littleton, Colo., said in a telephone interview Thursday that only one-tenth of one per cent of burros are hermaphrodites, having both female and male sex organs.

The association recently inherited the plot that will be Hermy's home, in Lincoln, Ill., 100 miles south of Chicago. It will turn the area into a national training center, and an abused pony soon may join Hermy there, said White. "Although the association has custody of Hermy, the burro remains the property of the U.S. Bureau of Land Management," said White. "We sort of rescued Hermy from the University of California at Davis. Researchers there wanted to kill him and cut him up to see what makes him tick. But Hermy will be the same way when he dies and then they can have his carcass. He has the right to live out his life."

White said Hermy was "in a grassy paddock, getting used to people and surroundings. He's eating well and seems perky, but he can be dangerous. If you approach him the wrong way he may kick you."

"It's hard to say anything about his emotional feelings since he has such a hormone mixup. I'd just say he's happy with himself."

White said that after Hermy gets some "tender, loving care" in the paddock, he will be put in a fenced-in meadow and "in another year, we think Hermy will be tame enough for kids to come and ride him."

White said Hermy was rounded up with a bunch of other wild burros because of overgrazing during the drought a year ago in Inyo County in Southern California. Hermy's condition was discovered during a routine examination of the herd. The rest were put up for adoption.

He was taken briefly to the San Diego Zoo, "but the Zoo... had no room for him," said White. "So he was crated and sent air freight Tuesday to O'Hare (airport) in Chicago. We brought him to Lincoln in a horse trailer."

Boy Held In Teacher's Death

AUSTIN (AP) — While 30 of his classmates watched, a 13-year-old student shot and killed his teacher Thursday in an English class for talented youngsters.

The youth was ordered held in the Travis County juvenile detention center after a hearing before State District Judge Hume Cofer. Cofer scheduled another hearing for next Friday.

The youth was described as being the third of six children in "a large and happy family."

At the hearing, the suspect looked down at his hands as Municipal Judge Alberto Garcia read him his rights. The pale blond youth crumpled a tissue and nodded slightly when asked if he understood them. He did not speak.

"There's not any question but he shot the teacher," said Roy Minton, the youth's lawyer.

Because he is only 13 years old, the youth could at most be sentenced to reformatory school until he is 18.

The dead man was Wilbur Rod Grayson, 29, who was teaching a special English class for eighth graders identified as both bright and creative.

Grayson was struck by bullets from a .22-caliber, semi-automatic rifle in the head, right arm and beneath the right arm.

Lt. Fred Maxwell, chief of the police department's public affairs office, said the student arrived late for the class at Murchison Junior High School in an affluent area of northwest Austin about 9 a.m.

"The teacher was sitting on a stool, conducting class. He (the youth) just walked in the door and pointed the rifle at him. The teacher didn't take it seriously. He said something, and the boy just shot him," Maxwell said.

The motive was unclear, but Maxwell said the boy was upset over an incident Wednesday when a substitute teacher was in charge of the class.

"The boy was leading a discussion and didn't get a very good response and he was upset about it," Maxwell said.

Police Chief Frank Dyson said the boy dropped the rifle outside and was apprehended on the school grounds by a coach.

Vault Planned For Chaplin's Body

LAUSANNE, Switzerland (AP) — Charlie Chaplin's body will be reburied under a "strong, solid" protective vault, built around his grave to ensure that the remains of the famed film comedian will not be disturbed again, authorities said Thursday.

The body, which was found Wednesday buried in a cornfield after it had been snatched by grave robbers in a midnight theft 2 1/2 months ago, will be placed in the same village cemetery of Corsier-sur-vey where the comedian had been buried Dec. 27.

Police said the body, found in its 300-pound oak coffin, had not been touched. Chaplin died Christmas Day at the age of 88.

The Chaplin family lawyer, Jean-Felix Paschoud, refused to give any date for the second burial.

'Minister' Vandalizes Cathedral

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — A man found swinging from a crucifix after tearing through a Roman Catholic cathedral in a $50,000 statue-smashing rampage had recently complained that he was denied Holy Communion, the minister of the cathedral says.

Police arriving at Corpus Christi Cathedral Wednesday night arrested the man, who refused to give his name and carried no identification. They said he was swinging from a crucifix suspended in the 30-foot-high marble altar.

Shattered candle glass, fragments of marble statues, scattered vestments and torn pages from religious books were strewn around the sanctuary, where the altar is located.

Three brass tabernacles, including one covered with relief work of angels, were forced open.

The Rev. Richard Shirley, pastor of the cathedral, said the man had approached him last Sunday to complain of being denied the sacrament of Holy Communion.

"I talked to him Sunday and he started screaming, shouting Scripture," said Shirley. He said the man claimed to be a Methodist minister from South Carolina. The only witnesses to the rampage, Sherry Hawley and Joyce Slayton of Dallas, said the man entered the church quietly and at first strode calmly up the front.

"He went up the side aisle and took a statue from the pulpit," Mrs. Hawley said. "I didn't know what he had, when all of a sudden he was picking them up and heaving them on the floor."

"He knew we were there," Mrs. Slayton said. "We ran and tried to get out, but all of the doors were locked. I've never been so freaked out in all my life."

The two women found an unlocked door and fled to the rectory where they summoned police.

Girlfriend Sues Actor

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actor Nick Nolte has been sued for $5 million by a former girlfriend who seeks relief under the landmark "Marvin decision" involving property sharing between unmarried partners.

In her civil suit filed Wednesday in Superior Court here, Karen Louise Eklund, 26, of Santa Monica claimed she and Nolte, 34, agreed to combine their earnings and share all money and property acquired during the five-year "partnership."

The suit said Ms. Eklund and Nolte lived together from June 1972 until last October when she said Nolte forced her off the suburban Agoura ranch where they lived.

She said she gave up her career as a model-actress to help Nolte in his career and is entitled to a share of the proceeds from Nolte's role in the "Rich Man, Poor Man" television series and from his recent movie, "The Deep."

The Marvin decision involved Michelle Triola Marvin, who lived with actor Lee Marvin for six years, took his name and then claimed she was entitled to half his assets.

Poker Hopfuls Pared To 11

LAS VEGAS (UPI) — With half of a $420,000 pot at stake for the winner, 11 players remained in the running Thursday in the third day of the World Series of Poker.

When the dealer first shuffled the cards Tuesday at Bion's Horseshoe Club, 42 players had paid $10,000 each for a chance to compete for the $210,000 winner's share. The other half will be split among the last four to be eliminated.

George Huber, originally from Indianapolis, led the game with $74,500 when play was suspended early Thursday so the survivors could get some sleep. His long hair, mustache, denim cap and T-shirt contrasted sharply with the cowboy boots and western suits worn by many players.

He had a perfect poker face, though. He never smiled and seldom spoke. He was the only player to keep his chips in a holder.

Second in winnings at the break was Jay Heimowitz of Rock Hill, N.Y., the last eastern survivor, who had $61,700.

Barbara Freer, the only woman ever to enter the main event, outplayed some of the best known professional gamblers until she became the 24th player eliminated. In true western gallantry, the men at the table rose and applauded her fine demonstration of skill as she threw in her last chips and pushed back her chair.

"I was pleased I lasted as long as I did. I'll be back next year," said Mrs. Freer, who owns a nightclub with her husband in El Cajon, Calif.

She said her husband gasped when she told him she was investing $10,000 in a poker game against the world's best professionals, but wished her luck and said he would tend the business while she played cards.

Others who went broke included Gabe Kaplan of television's "Welcome Back Kotter" show. He lost his stake shortly after play began.

Atkins Honors Top Students

Atkins Junior High recognized students for their outstanding accomplishments during the year at a Thursday night program in the Monterey High School Auditorium.

Outstanding citizens, Karen Zinke and Vince Wilson, received the Daughters of the American Revolution Award. Runners-up were Lisa Pipkin and Rick Diles.

The ninth grade Teens of the Year, Lisa Pipkin and Jerrell Key, were presented with the Danforth "I Dare You" book.

Claborn, Richard Diles, Linda Haire, Emily Ingram, Gary Kleiber, Theresa Ramold, Stephen Roberts, Steven Sanders, Mary Timmons, Joy Tucker, Regina Webster, Vincent Wilson, Carol Wingo and Karen Zinke.

Top honor students in the eighth grade were presented medals, and top seventh-grade students received pins.

Awards also were presented for perfect attendance, honor roll, citizenship and athletics.

Wife Refuses Birthday Goat

DUBUQUE, Iowa (AP) — Ron Magee's wife turned down her birthday present. Magee left his present for her in their apartment but he later found it tied to his car and standing on the car's hood.

Charli Magee said she was "shocked" and "almost died" when she found the present — a white goat, complete with a big pink bow around its neck — in her living room.

She said she chased the goat around the apartment for 10 minutes before she caught it and tied it to the car Tuesday.

Magee returned the goat to the farmer he had purchased it from for $15 and bought a dozen roses instead.

Fire Engine Returns Home

EAST LIVERPOOL, Ohio (AP) — The Silsby, the pride of the East Liverpool Fire Department in the 1800s, returned to the city Wednesday after being sold for $995 and hauled away by a collector.

A crowd of citizens lined the street of this city of 21,000 to welcome home the ancient, horse-drawn, steam-powered pumper. Eleven fire department vehicles accompanied the Silsby, mounted on a truck, from the city limits.

The old pumper was rotting away in a city garage a few weeks ago when Mayor Howard A. Tullis struck a deal with collector Edward Deis.

The news that the Silsby had gone to Middlefield to join the Deis collection brought a flood of publicity and some quick action.

A committee was formed, and Save Our Silsby T-shirts began to appear around town.

Contacted by the committee, Deis and his partner agreed to sell the Silsby back, provided the city promised to restore it. An East Liverpool businessman has promised to foot the bill, which could cost as much as $10,000, for restoration.

Bush, speaking at a Nashua restaurant, told the group of about 40 GOP women he was "extremely concerned about the lack of guidance in this country."

"My problem with (President) Carter is not his intentions, but his lack of leadership and direction," said Bush at the first of eight appearances he has scheduled in New Hampshire, the site of the nation's first presidential primary. Alcoholics Anonymous Center Bombing Investigated Here

Lubbock police and agents from the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms are continuing their investigation into an early morning explosion Thursday at an Alcoholics Anonymous center here.

According to police, a blasting device was positioned at the front entrance of the Faith Group AA Center, causing the 1 a.m. blast at the 2819 Clovis Road building.

Investigators still do not know the motive behind the explosion or exactly what kind of device was used.

Henry L. Kinnison, ATF agent working on the case, said evidentiary material, including glass particles gathered at the scene, has been sent to the ATF laboratory in Atlanta, Ga. Test results, he said, usually aren't available for 10 days to two months.

The blast shattered four windows in the building, twisted a metal door frame and splintered an overhead piece of plywood.

No one is believed to have been inside the building at the time of the explosion.

Police said there was a strong odor of sulphur or gunpowder at the scene when they arrived. Firemen went to the site because of smoke reported coming from the building. However, there were no flames.

A mobile home resident who first called police said the blast rocked his residence just east of the site. Another nearby resident said the explosion was so loud that he thought a train had blown up on the tracks north of Clovis Road.

A.D. Brown, chairman of the AA board, said he feels certain he knows who is responsible for the incident.

According to Brown, although the organization has received no threats, there is animosity because of bingo games held at the club three times a week. The games are open to the public, and Brown said there are persons who would like to take over the activities. The AA center reportedly uses the approximate $1,000 a month it takes in from bingo to help other groups and individuals through existing programs.

Brown estimated it would cost about $2,000 to repair the damaged portion of the building. Although he said he does not know when the center will reopen, he implied that the bingo games would be discontinued.

"We use the money to help people, but it's not worth getting killed over," he explained. Brown said he would be talking with someone from the Criminal District Attorney's Office about the persons he believes to be responsible for the action.

Police also were looking into the possibility of a possible connection between the explosion and a recent burglary which netted someone about 280 sticks of dynamite.

The break-in at Shell Oil Co. on the Sloan Highway originally was investigated by the Lubbock County Sheriff's Department on April 26. However, no arrests have been made, and none of the stolen goods were recovered. The blasting devices were taken from a magazine at the business.

Pleas Entered To Federal Charges

BROWNSVILLE (AP) — A pair of Harlingen brothers accused of misusing federal manpower funds allocated to a union pleaded innocent before a federal magistrate here Thursday.

Don Gray, 47, and his brother Clarence, 34, had been named in multiple indictments returned by a federal grand jury here May 9.

Also pleading innocent before U.S. Magistrate William Mallett was Cruz Castillo, 30, of Harlingen.

Don Gray, business manager of the Harlingen-based Plumbers and pipefitters Union Local 823, was named in six federal indictments. Clarence Gray, former director of a manpower training school affiliated with the union, was named in five indictments.

Miss Castillo, a former secretary and program director for the training school, entered her pleas to three indictments.

The Grays and Miss Castillo are charged with misusing a total of $386,094 in federal funds allocated to the union.

June deadlines for pre-trial motions were set by Mallett.

Five other persons named in federal indictments were to be arraigned.

AN EDITORIAL:

Tally Man, Tally Me Banana

A SIDE EFFECT of the recently approved Panama Canal treaties is the focusing of attention on Central America, one of the hemisphere's true backwaters.

Historically, Central America has held the dubious distinction as home of banana republics and/or two-bit dictatorships.

More than any other Latin American area, the Central American republics have been the victims of political stagnation and economic underdevelopment since they won their independence from Spain back in 1821.

FOR NEARLY a century, American businessmen have helped install and topple dozens of Central American governments.

The principal participants were the banana companies which, with their vast land holdings and diversified interests in agriculture, transportation and finance, were as powerful if not more powerful than the governments of the countries in which they operated.

Depending on the point of view, U.S. business involvement was interpreted either as Yankee exploitation or as the only stabilizing influence in a volatile area where the entire economy—including jobs and income from export markets—would collapse without external support.

FOR THE MOST part, the days of buying and selling Central American governments are over—notwithstanding a corporate executive's temptation to grease a willing palm every now and then, or the still-emerging nature of the Central American populace's commitment to democratic self-government.

Three years ago, President Oswald Lopez of Honduras was deposed when it was learned that he had accepted $1.25 million from United Brands.

Last month, executives of Standard Fruit, United's principal competitor, admitted to making illegal payments of $32,000 to two high Honduran officials, including the country's minister of justice.

THE PRINCIPAL political and social problem of the region is an entrenched military caste system, supported and trained by the U.S. With the exception of Costa Rica (which installed a new president last week), military men run five of the six Central American countries' governments.

The White House has supported the Central American military in the interest of stability, but that may be coming to an end. A mini-civil war is raging in Nicaragua, and it appears that the Somoza regime may not hold on much longer.

Two months ago, Guatemala had a presidential election, offering voters a choice between two generals and a colonel. One of the losers, a former president, has threatened violence if the election results are not voided.

The Carter administration has applied strong pressure to the Central American governments on the human rights issue. But it has failed to find a formula to force these archaic societies to accept 20th Century technology which could transform stagnant backwaters into rivers of progress.

AN EDITORIAL:

Teddy K Afloat In Rumor Sea

LIKE THE flowers that bloom in the spring, tra la, a new crop of rumors has sprouted to the effect that Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., "might be" weighing a 1980 challenge to President Carter.

As usual, the latest speculation undoubtedly bears more relationship to the current President's slumping poll ratings than it does to the political plans of the last of the Kennedy brothers.

Kennedy rather wearily has dismissed the reports, which seem to surface with tiresome regularity every couple of years—regardless of who is occupying the Oval Office.

WHICH IS not to say that Jimmy Carter can afford to ignore Ted Kennedy. He can't—but for a very different reason.

The blunt truth is that Kennedy is becoming increasingly important to the President as an ally and advocate of Carter's legislative objectives.

Wherever Carter turns these days, he's finding that the trail he wishes to follow has already been blazed, for better or for worse, by Kennedy.

To an extraordinary degree, the emerging Carter legislative program is warmed over

Kennedy hash. To wit: airline deregulation, wiretap controls, drug law reform, federal criminal code revision and, the most odious of them all, national health insurance.

Each has been embraced by Carter. Each was a Kennedy initiative.

KENNEDY IS both a guide and goad to Mr. Carter. The senator and union leaders who have worked with him for years prevailed over HEW Secretary Joseph A. Califano in persuading Carter to move forward now with the national health insurance proposal.

Kennedy also has urged renewed administration efforts toward normalization of relations with the People's Republic of China. Plus he is encouraging the President to obtain a new SALT agreement with the Soviets.

It remains to be seen whether this Kennedy will ever run for President. But it may not matter.

As a result of Sen. James O. Eastland's retirement, Kennedy next year will become chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee—a step upward that's bound to expand his already sizable influence, for better or for worse.

M. STANTON EVANS:

Hatred Seeds Sprouting In Love Administration

WASHINGTON—President Carter's sudden onslaught against the legal and medical professions on his recent foray to the West confirms his ominous penchant for "class struggle" politics.

In his denunciation of the lawyers, Carter painted a picture of greedy baristers toadying to the rich and privileged while ignoring the legal problems of the poor.

Asserting that 90 percent of the lawyers serve only 10 percent of the people, he added:

"I have inspected many prisons, and I know that nearly all inmates are drawn from the ranks of the powerless and poor. A child of privilege frequently receives the benefit of the doubt, a child of poverty seldom does."

EQUALLY IMPLAMMATORY were his remarks against the medical profession. Conceding that individual doctors care for the well-being of their patients, he nonetheless contended that "when doctors organize into the American Medical Assn., their interest is in protecting the interests not of patients but of doctors."

"They have been the major obstacle to progress in our country in having a better health care system in years gone by."

The factual content of these assertions falls somewhere between "deliberately misleading" (the bit about 90 percent of the lawyers) and "demonstrably false" (the statements about the doctors). Much might be written, and no doubt will be, in rebuttal to such charges.

For the moment, however, the interesting thing about these statements is not their disregard for truth in public discourse, but what they suggest about the President's choice of political weapons.

SOME OBSERVERS saw in Carter's "new, forceful style" (as the New York Times described it) an effort to revive his sagging political fortunes through a timely exercise in political demagoguery.

By focusing public wrath on selected bad guys, the President may hope to divert attention from negative facets of his own performance.

Increasingly, however, it becomes apparent that the calculated appeal to envy that marked the President's Western speeches is part of a larger pattern—a political style that seeks to achieve its effects through deliberate tactics of divide and conquer.

IT BECOMES relatively plain that Jimmy Carter's "populism" is a thinly veiled appeal to notions of class struggle, seeking to set us at each other's throats so that Carter may reap political benefits from the resulting conflict.

This pattern emerged in the '76 campaign and has been confirmed repeatedly since then.

In a major economic pronouncement, he asserted, "I would never increase taxes for the working people of our country and the lower-and middle-income groups."

"But we will shift the burden of taxes to where the Republicans have always protected—on the rich, the big corporations, and the special interest groups..."

This statement contains the essence of Carter's political program: Secure the support of the lower-income groups by promising to relieve them of every possible burden, while piling obligations—and angry rhetoric—on the well-to-do.

IT IS A FORMULA that has marked nearly all of his domestic initiatives. The tax package submitted this year, for instance, raises taxes on upper-income levels.

Not much different are his energy proposals, raising gas prices but with rebates for lower-income citizens; his plan to rescue Social Security by raising taxes on employers much more than on employees, or his "citizens' postal rate," which would impose a higher rate for business than for individual mailers.

The point, and the irony, should be apparent: Jimmy Carter, who promised us a regime of healing love, is fueling his political engines with the high-octane hatreds of class struggle.

'Yoo Hoo! Somebody Looking For Me?'

ROWLAND EVANS & ROBERT NOVAK:

Populism Pathology

CLEVELAND—Skinny, 5-foot-6 Mayor Dennis Kucinich, looking younger than his 31 years and seemingly overwhelmed by events as he sits behind the huge desk in his high-domed office, asks plaintively:

"Is that any reason to throw me out?"

He is referring to widespread outrage over his appointment of a 21-year-old woman, undereducated and inexperienced, as assistant director of safety supervising the police department.

That is only one of many bizarre events during the seven months since his election which have generated pressure for his recall from office. Yet even political enemies privately agree with Kucinich that no documentary case can be made for his ouster.

Cleveland's problem is familiar. The middle-class exodus to the suburbs has reduced the city's population by one-third over the last 25 years, leaving disproportionate numbers of the poor, the old, the unskilled, the black and the hopeless.

City employee salary demands strain the budget. Racial conflict threatens. Organized crime infiltrates the power structure.

After inadequate administration in city hall, Kucinich—called Dennis by enemy and friend alike—suddenly emerged as the savior.

He became advocate of the city's white ethnic West Side a decade ago as the boy city councilman attacking black Mayor Carl Stokes and is a steadfast foe of school busing ordered to begin here soon.

BUT HIS BASIC campaign appeal in 1977, transcending mere racism, was his challenge to the calcified establishment, vowing higher taxes on big business.

Kucinich became a national figure overnight, celebrated in the news magazines.

In an eccentric political departure, he hired Richard Hongisto, the permissive sheriff of San Francisco, as police chief and thereby gained a gilt-edged liberal passport.

His sudden decline has no rational explanation. Firing Hongisto over live television was the climax, not the cause.

HARSH TREATMENT of opponents, arrogance, brashness of young aides and overblown rhetoric hurt Kucinich. But, as with the 21-year-old woman running the police department, he justifiably asks of all this: "Is that any reason to throw me out?"

Certainly, Hongisto never substantiated the charges of corruption in Dennis' city hall that got him sacked.

How, then, did the mayor's base on the West Side erode to the point that today he would probably recall an election if the courts decide recall petitions are valid?

The best answer is that a despondent electorate chose Kucinich to champion them in their misery and turned against him when he proved merely mortal or perhaps a shade less. Lacking clear philosophy, he now lacks a base.

"I AM ECCLECTIC," he told us. He listed his political heroes: Richard J. Daley, Bobby Kennedy and Huey Long. He also admires Republican Gov. James Rhodes of Ohio and Vice President Mondale.

After praising Chicago's Daley as "a very good mayor," Kucinich said somewhat confusingly: "They say you can't fight city hall, but I did—I fought city hall."

That reflects a condition not unknown in Washington—the outsider in power, still fighting city hall. For the mayor this is compounded by reliance on his assistant, Sherwood (Bob) Weissman, a former radical turned labor leader who set the administration's abrasive tone when he informed business leaders meeting at the exclusive Union Club that the mayor did not need their help.

ARE "SPECIAL interests" behind the effort to recall him? Kucinich warned to the question: real estate and banking, the privately owned electric utility, the regular Democratic party of Cuyahoga County and, mostly, organized crime.

"The recall," he added, "is an attack on our system of government. I believe it is un-American."

His immediate problem is not so grandiose: the specter of municipal bankruptcy. Kucinich inherited severe fiscal problems.

But his fall from grace was not caused by mundane fiscal problems. Instead, Kucinich is both product and victim of a new political system grounded on televised confrontations and populist rhetoric. We asked a young liberal Democratic politician here whether he preferred the structured old politics that produced Cleveland's stoutry mayors of the 1950s and early 1960s or the unstructured new politics that produced Dennis Kucinich. He quickly opted for the good old days.

JAY HARRIS:

And Thus We Are

MANY YEARS ago, we had a young teacher in Lubbock High School who gave us some sage advice.

Often, when we were wont to vent our anger against some wrong, real and imagined, she would suggest that we "write it down, read it, then throw it in the wastebasket and start over..."

We have found more often than not that it was some of the best advice we ever received. It is no wonder. The teacher in question was the one who not only got us into this profession, but helped us find our goals in many other ways.

We wonder if today's teachers, beset with problems of discipline and red tape and associations and political and economic pressures really realize the impact they have upon those who sit before them.

BUT, WE DIGRESS somewhat, perhaps. What brought these thoughts on was the receipt of one of many letters which cross our desk daily.

Most often we are happy to receive the opinions of the readers of this paper. And this is so whether the writer agrees with our editorial policies or the personal opinions as expressed here.

Sometimes, the letters are much too long to use. Too often, the writer for reasons of his or her own prefers to remain anonymous, and thus unpublished. And often, the opinions expressed are either repeats of those already printed often, or are in bad taste or attack someone personally.

Also, one sometimes receives a letter which is a bit out of the ordinary. Such is the one repeated below from one Loyd-Burks of Tyler. We repeat it for whatever thoughts it might stir...

"EDITOR, The Avalanche-Journal:

"Recently, after being accused of 'not liking anything,' I decided it might be time for a critical self-examination. What are the things I don't like?"

"I don't like rats, roaches or dirty and violent television shows. I don't like comedians who think for a joke to be funny it has to refer to sex or to bathroom activities.

"I don't like screw worms, stink bugs or ultra-liberal news commentators.

"I don't like educators who advocate a Socialist system in America. I don't like drunkenness; it is involved, either directly or indirectly in at least half of our troubles.

"I DON'T LIKE anyone who exploits the misfortunes of his fellowman—and some of our 'most respected' people do that.

"I don't like people who tell our children that sex perverts and so-called gays are just another minority group.

"Yes, there are those I don't approve of, but I don't hate anybody.

"I do like the sound of a train whistle at night. It seems to announce: 'All is well.'

"I like a clean fresh June morning in the country.

"I like to hear raindrops on the leaves of tassel-corn.

WELL, NOW, that is quite a mouth full.

We don't know whether these thoughts by the writer are all original. But, regardless, they like the teacher's advice are food for thought.

How often have you sat down at a desk and with pen in hand, or at a hot typewriter, put down on paper what you really thought, about others—and yourself?

We have the feeling that if more of us did this more often, then left the sheet or sheets of paper until the next morning and read them over, we would be startled to find what we had written.

Or, if by some quirk of fate, all of our spoken words of the day previously were suddenly played back for us in a calm moment, what would our reaction be?

IN A WORLD which once found time for more studied thought, reflection and introspection, words meant something... Whether spoken or written or implied...

We have just gone through an election campaign in Texas, and soon will start another. Many things were said in the past few weeks and months which in more sober and sane moments might not ever have been uttered.

This is especially so we think in national election campaigns and in day-to-day living in America, be it in the White House, the Halls of Congress or sometimes in the home and the church.

While it is true that "we are what we eat," it is equally so that our hearts and souls all too often are what we think and what we think and believe...

Ah, Love, Kindness, the sound of a train whistle, raindrops, visitors, oldtime gospel music, hope, faith... Is there room for them in our hearts today?

Viet-Type Struggle Seen In Eritrea

By MICHAEL J. DUFFY
MANDEFERA, Eritrea (AP) — Ethiopian forces are fighting a determined rebel enemy in Eritrea and, even if they can win a military victory with Soviet and Cuban help, resistance is likely to continue for years with massive support from the people.

This reporter witnessed indications that the Eritrean secessionists are trying to build a revolutionary society and to instill in the residents of rebel-held areas a strong feeling of nationalism.

This, the guerrilla groups hope, will drive the people to resist Ethiopian attacks or carry on an underground struggle if the Ethiopians win back territory. The rebels claim to hold most of the countryside in Eritrea, the Red Sea province that is Ethiopia's northernmost.

Ethiopian gunboats shelled the Red Sea coast of the rebellious province Thursday and sank scores of fishing boats, the Eritrean Liberation Front said.

The ELF said the rebels fought off a 20,000-man Ethiopian force six miles west of the Eritrean provincial capital of Asmara in highlands 50 miles from the Red Sea. Ethiopian troops are trying to break a six-month-old rebel siege of Asmara.

A feeling of nationalism, the guerrillas hope, will drive the people to resist Ethiopian attacks or carry on an underground struggle if the Ethiopians win back the territory.

The guerrilla efforts — a constant feature of the 16-year Eritrean struggle for independence — may be viewed as "consciousness raising" or as propagandistic mind control. But in either case, their success will be tested if a massive Ethiopian counterattack is now under way in Eritrea as the Eritrean Liberation Front claims.

If the Soviets decide to give all-out support to Ethiopia against the Eritrean guerrillas — whose numbers are estimated at upwards of 30,000 — they could become involved in their own Vietnam-style debacle. So far there is no confirmation that the Soviets or the estimated 20,000 Cuban troops in Ethiopia are involved in the fighting in Eritrea, and their hesitation to move openly could reflect an awareness of this danger.

For the guerrillas, the switch of their

Associated Press photographer Claudio Luffoli and I attended a May Day celebration in Ali Ghidir, a plantation community near the Sudanese border formerly owned by an Italian industrialist and now used by the ELF to grow sorghum to feed its troops. Thousands of people from nearby areas sat through several hours of political speeches before being treated to folk music and dances that lasted until 5 a.m.

Political speeches were also the main course at a women's organization congress and a neighborhood discussion meeting we attended in this market city between the capital of Asmara and the Ethiopian border.

It is in the schools that the control is the most obvious. Some civilian teachers have been retained, but the teaching is generally done by politically formed cadres.

Small children learn to count with pictures of goats beside pictures of bullets — both are familiar to their daily lives. An English reader will have a sentence "The woman sits next to the door" next to another "The fighters shoot at the plane."

Switch In Allegiances Difficult For Eritrean Propagandists

former Soviet and Cuban allies to the side of the Ethiopians is a difficult element to handle in their propaganda campaign among the soldiers and the people.

The political pitch was simple when the United States was providing military and economic support to the government of the late Emperor Haile Selassie, which annexed Eritrea in 1962. The fight then was against neo-colonialists and their imperialist backers.

With the coming of a self-proclaimed socialist regime to Ethiopia in 1974 and the switch of the Soviet Union, Cuba and other Marxist allies to the Ethiopian side, the political picture was clouded.

The official explanation of the ELF is that there is no evidence yet that the Soviets and the Cubans — even now called "strategic friends" — are directly fighting with the Ethiopians against Eritrea.

The Eritreans say the Soviets, in their material support of Ethiopia, have been fooled into believing that the government of Lt. Col. Mengistu Haile Mariam is a true socialist regime. In reality, the ELF says, it is fascist and dominated by petty bourgeois interests.

The political ideas of the ELF leadership, heavily influenced by Marxist theory, are drummed into the heads of the soldiers and civilian population of ELF-held areas. The guerrillas do this by controlling education and creating mass organizations for workers, farmers, youth and women.

Religion is discouraged in ELF territory as a potentially divisive force and of little use to promote social progress. The population is mostly Moslem or Orthodox Christian and will give up its religious traditions only with great reluctance, but the ELF hopes to see religion fade out of the picture by ignoring it institutionally.

Classes, taught in the native Eritrean language of Tigrinya or in Arabic, include special courses on the history of Eritrea, with emphasis on its fate under colonial powers from Italy to England to Ethiopia. The children also are taught revolutionary songs which they sing with much gusto.

The mass organizations, which are the principal tool of political education for the rest of the population, are encouraged by a variety of tactics which border on coercion.

We were told stories about recruitment methods: farmers are denied fuel unless they join the mass organizations; anyone who wants to get a security pass to travel to another town had better be enrolled.

The result of all this effort is the creation of a population which is conscious of itself as a potential nation. Differences between tribal cultures, religions and language are played down in favor of a strong sense of nationalism aimed at surviving any battlefield setbacks.

Ethiopians Press Major Offensive

DAMASCUS (AP) — Ethiopian gunboats shelled the Red Sea coast of rebellious Eritrea and sank scores of fishing boats Thursday on the fourth day of a major offensive to defeat the secessionist forces, the Eritrean Liberation Front reported in this Syrian capital.

The front's news agency said rebel units repulsed attacks by a 20,000-man Ethiopian force six miles west of Eritrea's provincial capital of Asmara, in highlands 50 miles from the Red Sea. Central government troops are trying to break through ELF lines and lift a 6-month-old rebel siege of Asmara.

The rebels also stopped a pincer assault by another 20,000-man Ethiopian force on the two main rebel-held Red Sea ports of Massawa and Assab, the ELF said.

It said the attackers, backed by air strikes, suffered heavy casualties.

The naval bombardment was aimed at closing the rebels' sea supply routes, the rebels said.

The Ethiopian government has not officially confirmed that its long-expected counter-offensive against the rebels has begun. Two other rebel factions, the Eritrean People's Liberation Front and the ELF-Popular Liberation Forces, have issued no reports on fighting.

Eritrea, Ethiopia's northernmost province, is a former Italian colony annexed by the late Emperor Haile Selassie in 1962. Its ports are Ethiopia's only outlets to the sea. Insurgents have been fighting to end Ethiopian rule for 16 years.

The head of Ethiopia's military government, Lt. Col. Mengistu Haile Mariam, warned in a speech Thursday that his nation and Somalia could go to war again over the tiny adjacent state of Djibouti. Ethiopia, backed by Cuban troops and Soviet advisers, earlier this year defeated Somali forces trying to annex eastern Ethiopia's Ogaden Desert to Somalia.

An Ethiopian radio report on the speech, monitored in Nairobi, Kenya, said Mengistu charged that Somali troops had already infiltrated into Djibouti. Unless Somalia ceases its "anti-peace and anti-people" activities, he was quoted as saying, there could be another confrontation between the two East African nations.

Somalia claims Somali-populated sections of Ethiopia, Djibouti and northern Kenya as part of a "Greater Somalia."

Cookie Fixings Pack Wallop

BUSHNELL, Fla. (UPI) — The oatmeal and chocolate chip cookies looked tempting to Chief Jailer Norman Fore and two dispatchers at the Sumter County Sheriff's Department — unaware they were laced with marijuana.

After eating the cookies, which had been mailed in a package from Texas to an informant being held in protective custody, the three headed for Leesburg General Hospital when they began feeling lightheaded.

The doctor diagnosed their dizziness as marijuana intoxication.

Sheriff Ernie Johnson said prisoners are not permitted to have food in their cells, so the cookies were left on a counter.

Dispatcher Cathy Quilling helped herself to three of them, parttime helper Debbie Coniglio sampled a few and Fore ate one.

"I don't care to come into contact with it ever again," said a disgruntled Fore Thursday. "It all hit us by surprise and gave me a headache. But I can tell you, there won't be any more things mailed in for the prisoners."

City Man Becomes 14th Victim

A 59-year-old Lubbock man died Thursday morning from injuries received in a two-car accident at the intersection of 6th St. and Avenue S.

Robert Dan Johnston of 3614 48th St., was pronounced dead at 10:10 a.m. in Methodist Hospital, about an hour after the accident. A hospital spokesman said Johnston suffered severe abdominal injuries.

JOHNSTON in his small compact car, and Howard Hewlett, 23, of 808 Bangor Ave., was traveling east on 6th Street when their vehicles collided at the intersection.

Hewlett, who was traveling alone in his late-model Thunderbird, was not injured. Johnston was also traveling alone.

Johnston's vehicle was hit on the driver's side, causing extensive damage and knocking the car onto a nearby apartment parking lot. The impact spun Hewlett's vehicle around, Combs said.

Johnston is the city's 14th traffic fatality this year.

Services for Johnston will be Saturday at 10 a.m. in Ford Memorial Chapel of First Baptist Church with the Rev. I.D. Walker, associate pastor, officiating, and the Rev. Jaroy Weber, pastor, assisting.

Burial will be in Resthaven Memorial Park under direction of Sanders Funeral Home.

Aggravated Robbery Suspect Arrested

A 17-year-old Mexican-American man remained in county jail today in connection with an incident in the 1500-block of Ave. C early Thursday morning.

Isabel Lee Morales of 1515 Ave. C, Apt. 23, told police the man had come to the balcony of her apartment about 3:45 a.m. Thursday and asked for a glass of water.

After she gave him the water, he reportedly pushed open the apartment door, struck her in the face, and took a bracelet, six rings and $25 in cash from her apartment.

Investigating officers found the suspect hiding in a car in the 1600-block of Ave. C.

Richard Lee Attagay of 1317 60th told police that as he was stopped in his car at 61st Street and Avenue T, two men pulled up behind him. The men reportedly left their vehicle and approached Attagay's car.

Attagay said one of the men pointed a rifle at Attagay and said, "We're going to kill you." Attagay said he was beaten with the rifle butt and fists before the duo ransacked his car and took a 45-caliber pistol from beneath the front seat.

Two Mexican-American men reportedly attacked Scott Rochon of 2626 Ave. K as he was walking in the 1900-block of 4th Street early Thursday morning.

Rochon told police the men approached him from behind, hit him in the back with a rock and one of the men cut Rochon's leg with a knife before they took Rochon's wallet which contained about $75 in cash.

Rochon said he called for help and two other men ran to assist him. Rochon and one of the men, Terry Purdy of 3318 1st St., ran after the two assailants and caught one of them.

After a scuffle, in which the assailant reportedly suffered a split lip and possible broken nose, the suspect said the other robber had Rochon's wallet and would take Rochon to the second assailant's house.

After arriving at an apartment in the 2400-block of 3rd St., the suspect slipped out a window and disappeared while Rochon was talking with the woman who lived there, police reports indicate.

Wilhelmina Moore of 2909 Ave. H flagged down a police unit shortly after midnight Thursday and told the officers two men had assaulted her and taken about $50 from her purse in the 1500-block of Ave. D.

Miss Moore said the men drove up beside her while she was walking in the block and that one of the men attacked her from the back and choked her before the pair left with the money.

Lubbock County Sheriff's deputies are continuing their search for a couple that tried to hold up Bush's Grocery Store at Texas 116 and Carlisle Road about 11 a.m. Thursday.

A black man in his early 20s reportedly entered the store, pointed a shotgun at the store's owner and said, "Don't move."

The woman, however, screamed and ran out of the store as the would-be robber yelled, "Hey, come back here."

After the woman ran out of the store and to a business across the street, she saw the man leave the building and get into a large white car driven by a young black woman. The car left the scene heading south on Carlisle Road.

A blue, jean-type jacket was found on the floor in front of the store's counter and was turned over to sheriff's deputies.

In other criminal activity, burglars continued their raids on Lubbock homes.

Shirley J. Wampler of Ralls reported missing $2,500 worth of household goods from her home in Lubbock. She recently moved to Ralls and discovered the loss when she returned to her Lubbock home to move some items.

Burglars forced open the kitchen door of Edward Davis' 1708-B Ave. N home and took a television and clock radio from the residence. Davis set his loss at $300.

Reported taken from Billy C. Martinez' 3410 Erskine St. home was a $90 telephone. Burglars caused $10 worth of damage to the window they tried to gain entry to the house.

Carter Urges Administration To Cut Inflationary Buying

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter announced Thursday the government will avoid or delay purchases of items with rapidly rising price tags. He suggested indirectly that consumers also review their buying habits.

Carter stopped short of advocating an anti-inflation buyers' strike but asserted in a memo to agency heads:

"Like any consumer, the government must react to high costs and the inflationary spiral. If goods or services are priced too high, the government must decide whether it can delay purchases."

The president directed all agencies "to avoid or delay the purchases of those goods and services whose prices are rising rapidly."

The only exceptions, he said, would be where such moves would endanger national defense or cause serious unemployment.

Robert S. Strauss, chief public advocate for Carter's anti-inflation policy, rejected the idea that the president was advocating a consumer boycott.

However, Strauss told reporters he hopes individuals and businesses will "look very carefully to see those companies and those individual institutions that are cooperating in a national effort to solve our most serious problem, which is the cancerous problem of inflation."

Strauss cited no criteria for deciding what goods are rising in price too rapidly. But he cited as obvious target areas purchases of food and building supplies.

The General Services Administration, he suggested, might want to delay the construction of some new federal office buildings. And he said substitutes might be found for some menu items in the school lunch program.

Carter said that if government is to "expect labor and industry to join in voluntary restraints, then we must lead the way where we can."

And Strauss echoed, "We're beginning to get in front on this thing a bit."

Although declining to fix a specific year-end goal for the administration's anti-inflation efforts, Strauss generally seemed optimistic, saying:

"I think you'll see business is moving out in support of this and I think you'll see labor will follow suit in a reasonable amount of time."

Strauss made light of AFL-CIO President George Meany's refusal last week to commit organized labor to observe the wage standards of the Carter program. Strauss said Meany rejected doing something he hadn't been asked to do.

Carter, in his memo, also announced he has ordered a rewriting of price escalator clauses in all new or renegotiated federal contracts to "reflect the principle of deceleration."

The president's call for deceleration would involve a voluntary restraint of wage and price increases to levels below the average of the past two years.

In addition, Strauss told reporters a federal purchasing council is being set up to focus attention on prime targets for delayed or canceled purchase orders.

He also reported a small task force will be created under his direction to seek ways to end economically wasteful federal procedures.

Weather, Coal Strike Blamed For Downturn

WASHINGTON (AP) — Economic figures released by the government Thursday were not very positive, but the government attributed the downturn to the weather conditions and the coal strike and expressed optimism for the future.

The Commerce Department said the nation's gross national product declined at an annual rate of 0.4 percent in the January-March period, compared to a 3.8 increase in the fourth quarter of 1977. The decline, however, was less than the 0.6 percent which had been predicted.

The GNP is the market value of the output of goods and services in the economy and is considered the best overall measure of economic performance.

The rate of inflation in the first quarter remained at 7.1 percent per year, as measured by the so-called GNP price deflator, the same as in the earlier report.

Corporate profits during the first quarter were at an annual rate of $126.8 billion, figured as the return on current production, a decrease of $18 billion from the final quarter of 1977.

Before-tax profits decreased $6.1 billion to an annual rate of $172.2 billion.

The Commerce Department blamed the cold weather and energy shortages resulting from the coal strike for about half of the decline in corporate profits during the period.

It said industries whose profits were most affected by the weather and energy shortages were, as might be expected, coal mining, railroad transportation, electric utilities, petroleum products and primary metals manufacturing.

In addition, the agency said "the decline in consumer spending, partly caused by the severe weather, held down profits of trade and motor vehicle manufacturing firms."

Profits of financial corporations increased during the quarter by $600 million to an annual rate of $22.5 billion.

The Commerce Department said the coal strike and the winter weather reduced the first quarter GNP by 2.5 to 3 percentage points, meaning that had the strike not occurred and had the weather been normal, the economy would have grown at a rate of 2.1 to 2.6 percent, still below the 4.4-5 percent growth the Carter administration wants.

Nevertheless, the economy has rebounded nicely this spring from its winter setback, and administration economists are now projecting growth at a rate of 8-10 percent during the April through June period, and 4.4-5 percent for the year.

Vast Alaskan Land Preserve Sought

EDITOR'S NOTE: Two members of the Alaska Coalition, Pam Rich and Paul Peyton, recently visited Lubbock. The organization, made up of conservationists, is seeking public support for H.R. 39, a bill that would designate large areas of Alaska to be closed to mining, petroleum and lumbering interests. Persons interested in the bill, now before Congress, can call a 24-hour-a-day Alaska Coalition Hotline (202) 547-5556 for a recorded message in Washington, D.C.

By TED J. SIMON
A-J Outdoor Editor

To describe America's 49th state as big isn't enough: Alaska is huge — gigantic! That is why some persons familiar with the subcontinent don't blink an eye when 100 million acres are requested for parks and other protected designations. That is why some people are not surprised when it is argued that 300 million acres are needed for the land's natural resources. But, in some instances, the opposing interests want the same areas. The issue of who gets what is a problem now facing Congress.

When Alaska became a state in 1959, more than 99 per cent of the area was owned by the federal government. The Alaskan Statehood Act of 1958 provided for the transfer of 103 million acres of federal unreserved lands to the state government over a 25-year period. Then in 1971 the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act gave Congress the responsibility to decide which public lands should receive protection as national parks, national forests, wildlife refuges and scenic rivers. Now the state is about to be divided up like a giant piece of pie. Congress must decide before the end of this year just who will get what public lands, and how those lands will be used.

A bill, H.R. 39, the "Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act," is now being debated in Congress. H.R. 39 as approved by the House Interior Committee would add 42,650,000 acres to our National Park system; add 50,710,000 acres to our National Wildlife Refuge system, designate portions within the park lands and wildlife refuges as wilderness for full protection under the 1964 Wilderness Act.

The Alaska Coalition represents the interests of parties that favor H.R. 39. The coalition's membership includes the American League of Anglers, Alaska Conservation Society, Fairbanks Environmental Center, Federation of Western Outdoor Clubs, Garden Club of America, National Audubon Society, National Council of Senior Citizens, Sierra Club, Southeast Alaska Conservation Council, Oil Chemical and Atomic Workers International Union, United Auto Workers and the Wilderness Society, to name a few.

Paul Peyton, a member of the coalition in favor of H.R. 39 and lifelong resident of Alaska, stated during a visit to Lubbock, "It's interesting to note that the primary lobbying group against the bill is an organization called Citizens for the Management of Alaska Lands. It's made up of Sohio, Alaska Lumber and Pulp, U.S. Borax and Chemical Corporation and other industrial associations." Peyton said the group is just one of several industry-backed organizations lobbying against the bill. A lobbying budget of $900,000 has been raised by the group. "I don't know how we can manage just $90,000 for our campaign in favor of the bill," said Peyton.

"We've attempted to work a compromise with the mining, timber and native interests," stated Peyton. "But, after a meeting with the parties involved, seven of the areas we were interested in were logged and several more areas were roaded. We felt we just couldn't stand that kind of attrition rate and have anything left. Consequently, we began to start moving on legislation to protect some areas."

Pam Rich, a former resident of Alaska, noted that the coalition is not against industry in Alaska. "We don't want industry not to have anything. The bill we're interested in would insure that two-thirds of the state will be open for development."

An article in Outdoor Life magazine (March 1978 issue) by outdoor writer John G. Mitchell may have expressed the Alaska Coalition's view best by emphasizing, "There are some who say that 100 million acres for conservation is too much. What they mean is that 200 million acres for development is too little."

Peyton stated that 92 per cent of Alaska would be left open to sport hunting with passage of H.R. 39. The Alaskan also explained that continued sport fishing for non natives and future native fishing would be assured by lands protected with passage of the bill.

"Wilderness protection would be beneficial for the fishery industries," said Peyton. "Three of the most productive salmon streams are in the southeast part of the state, and mining interests in that portion of Alaska would get little return for their efforts. But, mining in that area could have a very damaging effect on the streams."

The Sitka resident concluded by saying, "The decline of a clean environment in Alaska has been devastating during my lifetime. I grew up in Fairbanks, where the air pollution is now the worst of any city in all of the United States. EPS air quality standards are exceeded 210 days a year. It didn't help the air at all when Bechtel (contractor for the pipeline) dumped 2,000 three-quarter-ton four-wheel-drive trucks into Fairbanks for employees to drive back and forth from the office. It's time to stand aside and do some soul searching about our environment."

"There are a lot of things limiting development of Alaska right now," explained Miss Rich. "It is so far removed from markets that the cost of transport is exorbitantly high. Plus, access to the resources is difficult." She continued, "Virtually all of the conflict areas have already been taken out of the bill. We get the impression that the industry lobby wants every worth-while piece of land in Alaska."

The former Alaskan asked, "If we don't protect the areas in Alaska now that we're asking for — what will be left for future generations? We'll value these areas 50 years from now a lot more than we do now. Look at Yellowstone Park. Few people saw the importance of setting that area aside in 1872."

The coalition member stressed, "Right now in Alaska we're trying to protect a whole eco-system. In the past, our country has always had another chance to save large portions of the wilderness. Now we are at the last frontier."

Miss Rich concluded by quoting Robert Belous, park planner with the park service in Alaska: "Manifest Destiny is up against the Arctic ice pack."

As of this writing, amendments to H.R. 39 are being voted on by the House of Representatives. Informed sources predict the bill will pass without further delay, and then be sent to the Senate for another vote. The Alaska Coalition has said the conservation bill will face its most organized opposition in the Senate.

West Texas Chamber Favors Development

The West Texas Chamber of Commerce has stated opposition to pending legislation that would result in closing more than 128,000,000 acres of Alaskan lands to any future development of natural resources.

Joe A. Kloesel of Midland, Chairman of the chamber's national affairs committee, said that "the WTCC is opposed to H.R. 39, as amended, or any other legislation that would place such great quantities of land under national park, wildlife refuge or wild and scenic river designation."

"The proposals currently under consideration would increase the total of federal lands designated for such purposes by an unjustifiable amount and halt any practical development of resource potentials in those areas. Action on the massive scale now proposed is not in the national interest."

Bob Corkins of Alpine, Chairman of the chamber's tourist and travel development committee, stated that "the WTCC is certainly not opposed to the creation of national parks. The WTCC does, however, recognize that the amount of land set aside for such use should be based on reason, taking into consideration the fact that a proper balance should be maintained between usable land and protected land."

Kloesel stated that "our nation cannot afford to have this much land exempted from production. We must do what is necessary to guarantee that our natural resources will continue to be available to satisfy the needs of our nation and its people. Workable multi-purpose use provisions are a necessity."

Protectorate Opposed By Hunters

Safari Club International, a Tucson-based big game hunters' organization, has joined forces with the Alaska Professional Hunters' Association to finance lobbying efforts to oppose H.R. 39 pending in Congress.

The professional hunters donated 11 hunting trips to the Safari Club legal fund, which in turn auctioned them to those attending its convention. When the auctioneer's gavel fell on the last hunt, a total of $35,000 had been raised for legislative action against H.R. 39.

The Safari Club stated in a press release, "With that kind of seed money in their war chest, SCI and the Alaskans should be able to let the coalition of anti-hunters, bureaucrats, eco-crazies and protectionist politicians backing H.R. 39 know something about what the legions of sportsmen in this country want for the future of Alaska's wild resources."

Hill Reviews Results Of Trip To Washington

WASHINGTON (AP) — Attorney General John Hill said Thursday he has hammered home Texas' views on energy, agriculture and revenue sharing during two days of meetings in the nation's capital.

"I think I've had some impact with the powers that be. Of course, only time will tell," the Democratic gubernatorial candidate added. "I came because I said I would during the campaign."

Small Boy Survives 113 Wasp Stings

FOREST GROVE, Ore. (AP) — Doctors removed 113 wasp stingers from the face and scalp of a 3-year-old boy, who was then sent home from Forest Grove Community Hospital with only a slightly swollen lip.

The boy's father, James Noah, said Jimmy had followed some older children Wednesday into a field behind a neighbors house. The father heard Jimmy scream and found him lying face down on the ground, his head covered with wasps. Michael Johnson, emergency room supervisor at the hospital, said Jimmy "cooperated far beyond what most adults would. After he got over the scare, he calmed down and made more of a fuss when we accidentally pulled a hair."

Bensinger and Secretary of Energy James Schlesinger were included in Hill's schedule.

Hill said he believes utility bills can be reduced in Texas "without the federal government controlling the intrastate gas market." A Senate-House conference committee has been struggling with the question of natural gas pricing for months and Hill said he is anxious to "see what final language is adopted by the committee.

"But we can remove our people from relying on natural gas by going to alternate energy sources," he continued. "The next obvious step is lignite conversion and rapid, expedited use of our considerable lignite resources."

"We must have cooperation from this administration," he said. "Allowing carriers to charge $18 a ton (for hauling coal) is self defeating. And our utility companies must start thinking of what can be done to reduce utility rates instead of simply sitting around and waiting for the next rate increase."

In separate meetings with the chairmen of the Senate and House agriculture committees, Hill said he relayed the need for more adequate legislation for Texas farmers.

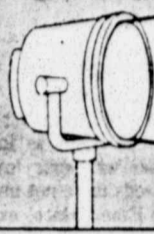

He also said he attacked revenue-sharing formulas that favor northeast cities over Texas urban areas.

Concerning the illegal alien problem, Hill said wants to see the administration's controversial bill "have a fair run" while noting that "adequate information" on the number and problems of illegal aliens is still lacking.

Asked about problems arising in Houston involving the police department and Mexican-Americans, Hill said he stressed during his campaign "a concern for the need of our police departments throughout the state to have more sensitivity training. If we could provide incentives for officers to receive this type training in the form of higher salaries, I feel that would be money well spent."

Solar Energy/Irrigation Study Grant Due Tech Researchers

The U. S. Department of Energy has awarded a $400,000 contract to the Texas Tech University Center for Energy Research to conduct a feasibility study on using solar photovoltaic energy for irrigation pumps.

The photovoltaic solar system uses special solar cells to convert the sun's energy to direct electrical current (DC). Texas Tech proposes to convert the DC electronically to a 480-volt, three-phase alternating current that could run a well motor.

A site has been selected for installing the proposed system. If found feasible, photovoltaic energy will run a 1,500-foot deep irrigation well with a lift of about 540 feet in the Trans Pecos Valley in far West Texas, according to Dr. Richard A. Dudek, Tech project manager.

Dudek is chairman of the industrial engineering department. Dr. William M. Marcy of Tech's department of systems works with Dudek also as co-project manager.

The one-year feasibility study will include system design, component development, evaluation work and cost-analysis required to fabricate, install and check out the solar system, Marcy said.

Honeywell Inc., a subcontractor to the project, will land the solar concentrating array technology and hardware.

If the feasibility study gives positive results at the end of the first year of investigation, the Department of Energy is expected to provide $2.5 million to Texas Tech to construct and operate a photovoltaic power system. After construction, the contract stipulates, Texas Tech will own the system.

Dr. L. Davis Clements of the chemical engineering department and Dr. Milton Smith of industrial engineering, both at Texas Tech, also will participate in the investigations.

Sharp Drop Held Likely For Texas Wheat Crop

AUSTIN (Special) — Revised production estimates now show Texas' 1978 wheat crop could be down 50 percent from last year, with the parched High Plains yielding even less than was first predicted, Agriculture Commissioner Reagan V. Brown notes.

"The drought has turned many dryland wheat fields into disaster areas," he said. "Good rains fell over much of the northern and central parts of the state early this month, but for many producers it was too little, too late."

The Texas Crop and Livestock Reporting Service estimates that seeded acreage throughout the state dropped 10 percent this year to 5.7 million acres. But of this, only about 2.8 million may be harvested. The planting reduction, combined with drought damage, could cut Texas' 1978 wheat crop to 58.8 million bushels.

"Many dryland wheat fields on the High Plains have been grazed out or just abandoned because of the severe drought which has persisted in that region since last fall," Brown said. "Some wheat that was planted in dry soil last year never emerged, although a few fields finally came up in February and March after lying dormant all winter."

Average winter wheat yields, predicted at 21 bushels per acre, are down from the 25 bushels per acre harvested last season, he added.

Soviet Feed Import Plans Anticipated

By KETH HENLEY
Avalanche-Journal Farm Writer

Remarks by Secretary of Agriculture Bob Bergland that Soviet plans to increase meat production will spur imports of high protein feeds were not unexpected, according to Elbert Harp, executive director of the Grain Sorghum Producers Association (GSPA) in Lubbock.

"This is not surprising to us because of our contacts through the years," he said.

Earlier this week in Leningrad, Bergland said the Soviets intend to boost beef and swine production but they lack the capability to produce a sufficient amount of feed grains.

The need for high protein feed will force dependence on imports, he said, and will create great export opportunities for U. S. farmers.

Bergland is in the middle of a 20-day, six-nation European tour.

"There is no doubt about what the Russian government intends," said Harp. "It's almost a certainty that politically it must strive to improve and increase the livestock sector in order to supply the demand of the people for more meat, milk and eggs."

Harp said that with a population of 258 million, a one egg per capita increase in consumption in the Soviet Union would generate a need for approximately 2.3 million bushels of grain sorghum, for example.

A one pound per capita increase in meat consumption would mean about 18 million more bushels of grain would be required, the GSPA executive added.

A poultry feeding trial in 1976 which compared rations of U. S. corn and milo, along with traditional Soviet feeds, was favorable for sorghum, Harp noted.

"The problem was that they do not have an extension service set up as we do to get the information out to their farmers, and there is no desire by their researchers to push it," he explained.

"Until they are convinced of the feeding value of milo, they aren't going to be interested in price," added Harp, in reference to price differentials between U. S. corn and grain sorghum which at times have economically favored the purchase of sorghum.

"The potential is there," he asserted.

"This is why the GSPA and the U. S. Feed Grains Council have been looking toward the Soviet Union and trying to expedite developments that would help it become a more dependable market."

Dependability of supply is a major advantage, the Soviets would have if they bought from the United States, said Harp.

"We have the potential to supply any and all the grain they will need," he said.

Harp pointed out that grain sorghum has no quota under a five-year grain purchase agreement signed in October 1975 by U. S. and Soviet officials which obligates the Russians to buy at least 6 million metric tons of corn and wheat each year. However, USDA permission must be obtained to buy more than 8 million metric tons.

"But so far we've never convinced them that grain sorghum is what they want," he said.

Harp said he could see no break in the stalemate, "because we've never been able to follow-through on the work that we started in 1975."

"GSPA's resources are just not great enough for us to follow-through on all that we need to do," said the organization's chief executive. "The market potential is there if we could just develop it."

The Grain Sorghum Producers Association helps promote use of the feed grain in both domestic and foreign markets. It partially funds research into the production and processing of the grain, and participates in state and national farm legislative activities.

Idled Cropland Goal Near Realization; Signup Ends May 31

WASHINGTON (AP) — With almost three weeks left to sign up, farmers have agreed to take more than 19.3 million acres of cropland from production this year in exchange for federal price support benefits, the Agriculture Department said this week.

The acreage signed up was reported as of May 11 and represented nearly 88 percent of the administration's goal of getting farmers to idle about 22 million acres of crop land this year.

Farmers will have through May 31 to enroll in the wheat, feed grains and cotton acreage programs which are aimed at curbing a further buildup in price-depressing surpluses.

The signup period was scheduled to end May 15 but was extended two weeks after President Carter signed an emergency farm bill clearing the way for the Agriculture Department to boost the 1978 wheat target price to $3.40 a bushel from $3, which had been set.

Under the formula, if market prices over a specified period drop below the target level, farmers get federal payments to make up the difference.

The loan rate for upland cotton also was raised to 48 cents a pound from 44 cents when Carter signed the legislation. That is how much farmers can borrow from the Agriculture Department by using their crop as collateral.

Although the acreage control programs are voluntary, farmers must participate in them to be eligible for target price payments, loans and other benefits associated with the commodities involved.

The weekly progress report for May 11 showed that 956,311 farms were enrolled in the acreage programs, representing 41.8 percent of almost 2.3 million eligible to participate. A week earlier, 805,437 or 35.2 percent had been signed up.

Stewart N. Smith, associate administrator of the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service, said the farms now enrolled account for 61.4 percent of the U. S. crop acreage used in computing the programs.

In the case of grain, farmers first have to "set aside" a percentage of their normal crop acreage based on how much wheat and corn they plant this year. The wheat set-aside is 20 percent and corn 10 percent.

In addition, feed grains producers can "divert" additional acres from crop production and receive direct payments for doing so. There is no payment for setting aside land as the first qualifying step.

Cotton producers also can divert acres from production and get payments. Wheat-growers have no such plan but can let livestock graze on part of their crop or make hay from it and qualify for payments.

Cheaper Dollar Abroad No Spur To Marketing

WASHINGTON (AP) — A grain export executive says a cheaper U.S. dollar in some important foreign markets does not spur demand for American farm products nor necessarily help consumers in those countries.

Michel Fribourg, president of Continental Grain Co., one of the world's largest commodity trading firms, said last week that a stronger U.S. dollar and fewer trade restraints "ultimately could benefit" the American farmer as well as this country's balance of payments.

Fribourg's remarks were in a speech at a meeting in Hot Springs, Va., of The Business Council, composed of the chairmen of the country's biggest corporations. Texts of his speech were distributed here.

"No matter how low their relative cost may be, the volume of American farm exports does not increase in those markets — including the European Community and Japan — where high non-tariff trade barriers exist," he said.

"Import quotas on livestock products such as meat, eggs and dairy products deny the benefits of expanded trade," Fribourg said.

Further, he said, it is a false premise that lower-valued U.S. dollars help foreign countries buy more farm commodities and thus help their own consumers.

"This includes Japan, where all wheat imports and internal prices are controlled by the Japanese Food Agency; and it also includes the European Community where the so-called variable levy system keeps the domestic values of all cereal grains totally insulated from competitive international values," he said.

The Japanese Food Agency buys and sells all wheat used in Japan, and nearly all that is used is imported grain, Fribourg said.

"So long as the agency can buy wheat at a price below the price at which it resells it to domestic (flour) millers; it is, in effect, collecting an excise tax on wheat with which the agency can offset the losses it incurs when it buys domestic rice at a high support price from Japanese farmers and then resells it to Japanese consumers at a subsidized price," he said.

In a similar way, a cheaper dollar enables the European Community — the Common Market countries — to increase its own subsidies to European farmers.

"As U.S. grains become cheaper, the amount collected from the variable levy system (on commodity imports) increases," Fribourg said. "This in turn increases the financial resources with which the European Community can finance the expenses of its own agricultural programs, including export subsidies."

Fribourg said that "it is clear to me that this country has the capacity" to increase its farm exports and applauded efforts being made to do it. He added, however, that a cheaper U.S. dollar is not a sound part of the effort.

Dairy Goatmen Set For Show

The South Plains Dairy Goat Association's second annual show is scheduled here May 27-28 at the Panhandle South Plains Fairgrounds.

About 150 entries are expected, according to Bill Conway of Lubbock, show superintendent. Steve Conside of Portage, Wis., will judge the show.

Breeds sanctioned for the show include Alpine, Nubian, Saanen, a class for all other breeds and a recorded group.

Judging will begin at 9 a.m. May 27. A pony vaulting show is scheduled at noon.

A COTTON INDUSTRY LEADER URGED in testimony before a Senate agriculture subcommittee this week that both immediate and long-range measures be taken to ease the severe rail transportation problems facing the industry.

Raymond Cooper of Dallas appeared before the subcommittee, which is holding hearings on the boxcar shortage. Cooper, president of Starke Taylor & Son, Inc., is vice chairman of the National Cotton Council's Cotton Flow-Shipments Committee.

"Among factors contributing to the problem are poor distribution and use of present equipment, abuses of regulations and orders, Conrail inefficiencies and deficiencies, declining supply of general purpose boxcars, and increased demand by grain interests for 40-foot narrow door boxcars," Cooper said.

THE COTTON INDUSTRY RECOMMENDS several steps that should be taken by the Interstate Commerce Commission, Cooper said.

- These include:
  - The ICC should continue to monitor railroad's compliance with the agency's orders.
  - Cars should be made available for cotton throughout the year.
  - The ICC should immediately issue an order permitting substitution of larger boxcars for the scarce 40-foot models, with protection of weights and tares appropriate to cotton use.
  - Investigate possible discrimination by railroads that may give priority to competitive loading orders, rather than filling orders in sequence received.
  - Accelerate repair of cars requiring minor expenditures.

"TO RESOLVE LONG-RANGE NEEDS, we recommend that investigations be conducted by the U. S. Department of Agriculture, ICC, Department of Transportation, and Association of American Railroads to determine projections for new boxcar construction and mechanisms for quick repair and restoration of others," Cooper told members of the subcommittee.

He said his committee also recommends that projections should be made for acquisition of new, covered hopper cars so shippers of other commodities will not preempt the 40-foot boxcars "that are so vitally needed in the cotton industry."

In addition, Cooper said, investigations should determine if funds earmarked by the railroads for equipment purchase and maintenance are being used for other purposes and if rail profit incentives are adequate to encourage the building of new equipment.

Plan Patterned On Grain Procedures

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Carter administration intends to send Congress soon its plan to provide federal price guarantees for sugar farmers by using the same principle of target prices now in effect for wheat, feed grains and cotton.

A senior Agriculture Department official says that the administration prefers its own plan to one being considered in the Senate which would provide a higher guarantee along with variable fees and controls on imported sugar.

Howard Hjort, USDA's chief economist, explained the plan to the Senate Finance Committee, which is considering a sugar bill calling for ratification of the International Sugar Agreement negotiated last year. It also would set up a program to help domestic sugar producers.

Hjort said the administration wants the Senate to ratify the sugar treaty but is against provisions in the bill which would set up the domestic program. He said those would trigger another round of inflation by generating higher sugar costs for consumers.

The ISA creates a minimum price of 11 cents a pound and a maximum of 22 cents a pound for sugar in world trade.

Translated to sugar sold in the United States, the world minimum would equal 13.5 cents a pound, the floor price provided in existing farm law for the 1978 crop.

The Senate bill provides an initial domestic "price objective" equal to 17 cents a pound, representing the midpoint between 11 cents and 22 cents in the world formula.

Hjort said the bill's objective of 17 cents is really a floor price and that with a built-in escalator would probably rise to 18 cents within a year and to 21 cents within three years.

This would result in about $700 million in additional costs for major sugar users in the first year and "the impact on consumers would be even larger," Hjort said.

"The mandatory price increase provision would escalate user costs $350 to $400 million a year in subsequent years," he said.

Hjort said the administration wants to set an "established price" of 14.05 cents a pound for sugar beginning with the 1978 crop and a "minimum price objective" of 13.5 cents a pound.

In effect, the established price would be similar to the so-called target prices used for grain and cotton crops.

"Hjort said that the administration plan includes an escalator so that the sugar target can rise when production costs go up, using the same formula provided in 1977 farm law for grain and cotton. He said the sugar target would go up about one cent annually.

The 13.5 cents represents a floor or support price for sugar. Thus, government payments would be made to producers to bridge the gap between the floor price and the target.

Mondale To Address Disarmament Parley

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter has decided to skip a special United Nations session on disarmament and will send Vice President Walter F. Mondale to speak to the gathering.

The White House announced Thursday that Mondale would deliver an address next Wednesday in the U.N. General Assembly.

The disarmament session was convened to emphasize the need for progress in arms control and to encourage future arms control negotiations.

Administration officials had considered for some time the possibility that Carter would deliver the speech on behalf of the U.S. delegation, but delayed any specific plans.

A White House announcement said Mondale's participation "underscores the importance the United States attaches to the special session on disarmament."

Grain Futures

CHICAGO (AP) — Soybean and corn futures posted moderate gains on the Chicago Board of Trade today, while wheat finished about steady in all but the nearest contract.

The Agriculture Department's revision of the supply-demand outlook for soybeans and soybean products included a 30 million bushel reduction in estimated carryover stocks of soybeans. That would put total stocks of soybeans at 170 million bushels by the end of the marketing year.

Although the lower figure was expected, analysts said it attracted some buying in the soybean complex.

The major strength in the soybean complex, however, stemmed from sharp gains in the soybean oil pit. Commercial interests were good-sized buyers, and speculation about pending export business stimulated additional purchases.

Backers, Foes Argue ERA Time Extension

WASHINGTON (AP) — Leaders in the fight over the Equal Rights Amendment argued Thursday over the legal and ethical questions surrounding congressional proposals to extend the deadline for ratification by seven years.

Phyllis Schlafly, chairman of STOP ERA, said an extension beyond the current deadline of March 22, 1979, "would be an unfair attempt to tamper with the United States Constitution."

Eleanor Smeal, president of the National Organization for Women, said refusal to extend the deadline risks "setting back the clock on women's rights."

Both women testified before a House judiciary subcommittee considering a resolution to double the seven-year ratification period prescribed by Congress in 1972 when it adopted ERA. A similar resolution has been sponsored in the Senate.

The amendment, providing a constitutional basis to ban discrimination because of a person's sex, has been ratified by 35 states. It will expire unless it is approved by three more states by the 1979 deadline.

Austin Police Officer Slain; Man Charged

AUSTIN (AP) — A blast from an AK-47 submachine gun, a common weapon of Communist forces in the Vietnam war, killed a policeman early Thursday.

David Lee Powell, 27, was charged with capital murder in the slaying of Patrolman Ralph Ablanedo, who died shortly before 2 a.m. while emergency room doctors fought to save his life.

Police Chief Frank Dyson told a news conference that Powell had heaved a hand grenade and fired another blast from the AK-47 at an officer who was driving up to the suspect's car.

The grenade, its pin pulled, did not explode because the lever was taped down, Dyson said.

Pistol Found

A .45-caliber pistol was found near the spot where Powell was captured, he said. The slain officer is survived by his wife and sons Steve, 5, and David, 17 months.

Ablanedo, 27, had stopped a red 1966 Mustang in South Austin at 12:20 a.m. He gave the driver, a woman, a ticket for driving without a license and ran a routine check on Powell, a passenger.

Police said the check showed Powell was wanted on two hot check charges and a misdemeanor theft charge. Before Ablanedo could make an arrest, he was struck by a blast of gunfire from inside the car.

Ablanedo, wounded by several shots despite a bullet-proof vest, tried to radio for help. He was able to describe the car to officers who arrived on the scene.

Met By Blast

Officer Joe Villegas spotted the car in the parking lot of an apartment complex, and was met by a blast from the AK-47.

Villegas said he exchanged shots with the man, and the woman jumped out of the car with her hands up and surrendered. The man raced toward a wooded area and disappeared. Police sealed off the woods and stopped passing cars.

Two school district security guards arrested Powell on the grounds of Travis High School, less than a block from where the man had fled the Mustang, about 6:30 a.m.

Guard Gary Nelson said he "saw a bush moving around funny." He and Charles Howard, another security guard, drew their pistols, walked toward the bush, spotted the man and ordered him to come out.

Powell, unarmed, was handcuffed and turned over to police.

Dyson said Powell, a bearded man with long hair falling over his shoulders, gave his occupation as "physics student, unemployed."

He said he was "not sure" why the suspect was so heavily armed. Dyson said this was the first time he had come across an AK-47 — an illegal weapon — in his years as police chief here and in Dallas.

He said Powell and the woman with him had "refused to cooperate" with police and had given no statements.

"There are outstanding warrants at the county on check cases that we feel were related to the procurement of arms," Dyson said.

Ablanedo had been a policeman since January, 1972. He is the first Austin officer to die in line of duty since 1975, when an officer was killed downtown after stopping a van.

However, three states — Tennessee, Idaho and Nebraska — have attempted to rescind their votes.

Kentucky's legislature also voted to rescind its approval of the amendment, but that move was vetoed by Lt. Gov. Thelma Stovall while Gov. Julian Carroll was out of town.

The Justice Department said last year that there was legal precedent for a state rescinding its approval of a constitutional amendment, but that resolving the dispute is ultimately up to Congress.

Rep. Barbara Jordan, D-Texas, an ERA supporter, told the committee that ratification by 1979 "is not assured, it is highly unlikely. What about a little insurance in case we don't make it?"

Challenging a major argument of extension opponents, Miss Jordan said in a thundering voice, "Change the rules in the middle of the game? This is no game."

Limit 'No Magic'

Miss Smeal said the seven-year period established in 1972 "has no magic" and that Congress has the authority to modify the time frame. She said the debate has been confused by misleading arguments by opponents and that the issue should not be discussed "in the atmosphere of the final minutes of a football or basketball game."

Mrs. Schlafly argued the ERA "is no longer in the hands of Congress" and said "it is no more legally possible for Congress to change the wording" of the ratification period than it would be to change the substance of the amendment.

Count Fight Vowed

She pledged that any extension would be fought in the courts.

None of the committee members expressed opposition to the ERA but some, like Rep. Tom Railsback, R-Ill., said they had reservations about extending the deadline.

Even so, Railsback said, "a lot of state legislators think if we kill the extension it's going to go away. It's not going to go away," he said, predicting that Congress would approve the ERA all over again.

Mrs. Schlafly accused ERA supporters of promoting an unfair double standard by "allowing states to change their minds from no to yes over a 14-year period but denying the states the right to change their minds from yes to no."

Silent On Reversal

Miss Smeal and Miss Jordan said the extension resolution "is silent" on the issue of states that reverse their vote and the question does not have to be considered until 38 states have ratified the amendment.

There have been proposals that if Congress extends the ERA ratification period, it also should clear up the legal questions about rescission by including a provision that would let a state change its mind.

Mrs. Schlafly said that such a provision "would mitigate the unfairness of the extension."

U.S.-British Move Urged In Rhodesia

WASHINGTON (AP) — Zambian President Kenneth Kaunda said Thursday the United States and Britain should pursue vigorously their Rhodesian peace initiative to head off the specter of a full-scale civil war in that country.

After a final meeting with President Carter during his two-day state visit, Kaunda told a National Press Club luncheon that the emergence of a racial government has changed nothing in Rhodesia.

He said the so-called internal solution in Rhodesia serves only to perpetuate the "master-servant relationship," and Kaunda accused the white minority in that country of "trying to hoodwink the world behind a cloak of verbiage."

War Choice Cited

Addressing a gathering of several hundred persons at the conclusion of his visit, the 54-year-old leader declared:

"The choice is not between the Salisbury agreement and the Anglo-American proposals. The choice is between the Anglo-American proposals and war."

Kaunda called on his audience not to be fooled by the "Salisbury cover-up agreement," which he said, "is worth no more than the paper on which it was written."

The British-American initiative calls on Rhodesian authorities to turn over power to the British, who would arrange for elections on a one-man, one-vote basis within six months.

Transition Planned

The internal solution negotiated by Prime Minister Ian Smith envisions a transition to black majority rule by Dec. 31 without outside involvement in the process.

Kaunda said that despite the biracial character of the Rhodesian leadership, there has been no reduction in the oppression of the black majority.

He said 94 persons "were massacred in cold blood" a few days ago.

"Nothing has changed," Kaunda added.

As he did on Wednesday, the Zambian president indicated he is untroubled by the presence of more than 40,000 Cubans in Africa.

He said that figure compares with a total of 300 million to 400 million persons on the continent and said there is no way Cuba can dominate Africa's destiny, given that ratio.

U.S. Blamed

Kaunda suggested that the United States has only itself to blame for the emergence of a communist regime in Ethiopia, where up to 17,000 Cubans are stationed.

He said a succession of American administrations should have used their leverage over the late Emperor Haile Selassie to do more for the impoverished peasant class in that country.

Speaking of South Africa, Kaunda said the apartheid system in that country is a time bomb.

"The final explosion can't be too far away," he said, adding that the disturbances in the Soweto township last year are merely a prelude of things to come.

Kaunda also accused South Africans of attempting to establish "a puppet regime" in neighboring Namibia and said they have perpetrated "massacres against the civilian population in the territory."

At the White House, associate press secretary Jerrold Schecter said the administration has decided to increase economic aid to Zambia.

Zambia's economy has been hard hit by falling prices of copper, the country's chief export, and Schecter said $100 million in U.S. aid is contemplated over the next three years.

The administration had planned a reduction in aid from $34.8 million to about $24 million in the next fiscal year in anticipation of an increase in copper prices.

The deteriorating economic situation in Zambia has threatened the stability of Kaunda's regime, however. U.S. officials said the aid increase is designed not only to stabilize the Zambian economy but also to lessen the possibility of increased Soviet-Cuban influence in Zambia.

meant that the United States "is stepping up intervention in the internal developments now taking place in Zaire."

Mobutu charges that Cuban advisers accompanied last week's invasion force and that it had Soviet material support. Western officials have said they cannot confirm the allegations.

The 4,000 rebels who launched the invasion are members of the Lunda tribe who fled to Angola from Shaba, then called Katanga, in the early 1960s after U.N. forces defeated a secessionist movement led by Moise Tshombe.

Mobutu's forces, aided by 1,500 Moroccan troops and French, U.S. and Belgian military equipment, defeated a similar invasion force in March, 1977.

Blame Each Other

The two sides have blamed each other for the civilian deaths. The Mobutu government said the rebels seized scores of white hostages, and Belgian officials said whites had become the "main target" in the fighting.

Some Belgian sources said the rebels in Kolwezi had gone on a "Frenchman hunt" because French advisers help train Mobutu's army, but that they eventually began searching out all whites.

Most of the Americans in the embattled area were rescued Wednesday when the U.S. construction firm Morrison-Knudson sent helicopters and trucks to a company compound outside Kolwezi and took 77 company employees and dependents to safety. The firm is building a power project in the area.

Americans Left

The Americans who missed the pickup were eight missionaries, a tourist, a copper company employee, and two Morrison-Knudson employees and two dependents.

The last four were identified as William Starkey of Boise, Idaho, the firm's home base, Lonnie W. Glen of Yerington, Nev., and Glen's wife and child.

The State Department said Wednesday it did not believe the 14 had been hurt or taken captive.

In Kinshasa, an evacuated American said firing in Kolwezi had been almost continuous since the invasion started, but that he had seen no evidence, that the fighting had spread beyond the city.

Clyde Roofens, 62, Camdenson, Mo., general supervisor of the Morrison-Knudson camp in Kolwezi, said Glen drove back into Kolwezi Saturday to try to get his wife and 5-year-old daughter and the three had not been heard from since.

Europeans In Area

Besides the Americans and 2,000 Belgians, about 400 French citizens and perhaps 100 other Europeans, Japanese and other foreigners were in the battle area.

This was the second time in 14 years that tiny Belgium launched a rescue mission for Europeans trapped in Zaire, the former Belgian Congo.

In November, 1964, Belgian paratroopers aboard U.S. military transports landed in Stanleyville, now called Kisangani, in northern Zaire and evacuated 1,400 Europeans held as hostages and brutalized by secessionist rebels. They evacuated an additional 300 from another nearby town.

Thirty-one hostages were killed in the 1964 uprising, one of a series in this tribally divided nation since independence in 1960.

The Soviet news agency Tass said Thursday the Western airborne operation meant that the United States "is stepping up intervention in the internal developments now taking place in Zaire."

Mobutu charges that Cuban advisers accompanied last week's invasion force and that it had Soviet material support. Western officials have said they cannot confirm the allegations.

The 4,000 rebels who launched the invasion are members of the Lunda tribe who fled to Angola from Shaba, then called Katanga, in the early 1960s after U.N. forces defeated a secessionist movement led by Moise Tshombe.

Cutoff Threat On Korean Aid Blocked

have said they don't believe Park made such a contribution.

Stevenson said he hopes he can release the Senate report, including full transcripts of secret testimony, as early as next week.

At the same time, he said, the Senate Intelligence Committee will release a report on its investigation of how much Nixon administration officials knew about alleged Korean influence buying and what actions they took.

"What the public will see, I think, is some political expedience, some human weakness, campaign contributions from questionable sources," Stevenson said in an interview.

"But it will not see what has been alleged... money from Tongsun Park in return for favors and a policy friendly to South Korea," he added.

Stevenson disagreed with Jaworski's assertion that efforts by the Senate committee to get Kim's testimony are not making headway.

Jaworski announced last week that extensive negotiations to secure the former ambassador's testimony had failed and that South Korea refused to allow Kim to do anything more than discuss charges against him in a telephone call to O'Neill, during which Kim would not have been under oath. Jaworski rejected the offer.

Within hours of his announcement, the House rejected, 254-146, an amendment aimed at slicing $56 million in U.S. aid for South Korea from Congress' target fiscal 1979 budget unless that country cooperates in the Kim matter.

The House panel held a rare night meeting Wednesday, during which its members voted unanimously to support Jaworski's resolution to threaten to cut off aid to South Korea.

O'Neill, House Democratic Leader Jim Wright of Texas and House Republican Leader John J. Rhodes of Arizona then rushed the resolution to the floor Thursday morning.

The resolution would express the "sense of the House" that no further U.S. economic aid should be authorized for Seoul until the former ambassador "is made available for examination under oath."

Dominican Ruling Party Claims Election Victory

ballots Wednesday, saying there was information that "groups interested in creating disturbances" were planning to assault counting centers and that was why the military stepped in.

He said President Balaguer still is committed to turn over power to the opposition if the final results show him the loser, but "the president considers that he is winning."

National Election Commission President Manuel Castillo vowed the vote count that resumed Thursday would be fair but cautioned the election may be nullified because of unspecified irregularities and said it will take two weeks to finish the tally.

Perez Reyes said the 70-year-old Balaguer, who is seeking his fourth straight four-year term despite failing eyesight, was 180,000 votes ahead of its nearest competitor, the Revolutionary Party, with between 65 and 70 percent of the precincts reporting.

Even before the ruling party's victory claim, the opposition had warned that a gigantic fraud was being perpetrated.

A spokesman for Guzman's party said he feared vote fraud because soldiers were not allowing party delegates to observe the counting of the ballots cast

Tuesday as required by law.

"The commission invites us back in, but the armed forces throw us out," said Dr. Emilio Ludovino Fernandez. "I sense a trick. It appears that there is an intention to falsify the results... and it will be made to appear that President Balaguer has won."

When the count was stopped with 33 percent of the ballots tallied, Guzman had a 353,542 — 262,471 lead over Balaguer, who was favored by the military.

Balaguer, running under the Reformist Party, first became president after U.S. Marines quelled the 1965 civil war.

The capital remained tense Thursday, with heavily armed soldiers patrolling nearly empty streets and most shops and offices closed for a second day. Hundreds of policemen demonstrated in front of the National Palace, claiming a victory for Balaguer.

Balaguer himself maintained silence throughout the confusing events, even after the armed forces claimed that widespread reports of an attempted coup were nothing more than "rumors circulated by the enemies of peace."

U.S. Ambassador Robert L. Yost spent most of Thursday morning in his diplomatic vehicle parked outside Balaguer's private residence, vainly seeking a meet-

Labor Secretary 'Insensitive' To Farm Needs, Solon Asserts

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two Republican senators suggested Thursday that Secretary of Labor Ray Marshall should spend a couple of years working on a farm in order to gain a better understanding of how insensitive his department is toward illegal alien workers.

"Perhaps Mr. Marshall has spent too much time in his ivory tower in Texas or as a bureaucrat in Washington to know what is going on," began Sen. James A. McClure, R-Idaho, in testimony Thursday before the Senate Judiciary Committee as the committee concluded eight days of hearings on the administration-backed illegal alien bill.

McClure, noting that Marshall had labeled his previous remarks before the committee as "asinine and totally unfounded," also said: "I am not pointing a finger specifically at Mr. Marshall or the present administration. For my statements represent the attitudes and activities of the Department of Labor over a number of years, during both Republican and Democratic administrations."

Judiciary Committee member Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., added that "the secretary of labor hasn't been elected by the people. He ought to be an even more humble public servant."

"Obviously, as a college professor, he

Marshall, who had also testified before the committee last week, was not available Thursday for comment.

McClure said Department of Labor regulations "which are unflexible or unrealistic do nothing but indicate to the farmer that the department truly does not care about his special problems. The classic example of this is found in regulations requiring 90 or more days of domestic labor recruiting before alien labor certification can be made."

"In cases where current legal employees quit, get sick, or die, must the agriculture producer wait 90 or more days?" continued McClure. What does he do if this happens during the growing season or right before planting? And what happens to a band of 1,500 sheep without a herder for 90 days?"

While McClure urged the committee to consider legislation that would permit employers — specifically farmers and ranchers — to hire aliens at short notice, an American Legion spokesman called the committee's attention to the "drain on our economy caused by the estimated $3 billion to $10 billion sent abroad annually by illegal aliens.

"The principal concern of the American Legion with regard to illegal aliens is that they are increasingly competing with veterans in a tight job market," continued E. Philip Riffin, assistant director of the Legion's national legislative commission.

Riffin also said that illegal aliens are "obtaining increasingly better jobs...it is simply not true that the majority of illegal aliens work for less than the minimum wage, are exploited or do menial work Americans are unwilling to do."

The American Legion is also in favor of penalties against employers who hire illegals, said Riffin, referring to a provision in the proposals announced last August by President Carter.

The treasurer of the National Chamber of Commerce, however, testified that the chamber is "opposed to certain provisions involving employer sanctions...any legislation concerning illegal aliens should not place employers in the role of a governmental enforcement agency."

Robert T. Thompson also urged "that before employer sanctions are imposed, clear guidelines and non-forgeable identification documents should be in existence."

High Court Upholds Alien School Ban

HOUSTON (AP) — The 296 illegal alien children attending makeshift classes in a Baptist church basement in a Mexican-American barrio hoped they might be able to go to public schools next year.

But that possibility appears ruled out by a Texas Supreme Court decision this week which held that such children have no constitutional right to free public schooling.

Under a 1975 amendment to a state education finance bill, only U.S. citizens and legally resident aliens are entitled to tuition-free education in Texas public schools. Schools that do not comply could face loss of state funds.

In Houston, the estimated 5,000 illegal alien children can attend public schools by paying $90 tuition a month, but most of their parents say they cannot afford that amount. Officials of the Houston Independent School District contend it would cost an additional $8.3 million a year to admit the children.

Legal affairs spokesmen for departments of education in California and New York — two other states with large illegal alien populations — said their states had no laws barring illegal alien children from free public education.

Attorneys for parents of 10 Mexican children in Houston originated a class-action suit in 1974 requesting tuition-free education. At that time, there was no state law regarding attendance of illegal alien children but the Houston district required that they pay tuition.

Tribe's Connection With Stone Age Disputed

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — A tribe of primitive people found living in the crater of an extinct volcano who use pounded bark for clothing may be remnants of the Stone Age, a Philippine government spokesman said Thursday.

But the tribe has had contacts, including barter, with other less primitive tribes and has lost the art of fashioning tools from stone because it has acquired tools through trading, according to a re-

Nominee Stresses Independence

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter's nominee as the nation's top military officer said Thursday he would not hesitate to offer a dissenting view in the White House and would quit rather than carry out any order against national security interests.

Gen. David C. Jones said there are "very few officers in senior positions" who wouldn't act the same; but, he added, "there are exceptions in any group."

The four-star Air Force general testified before the Senate Armed Services Committee on his nomination to succeed port by Manuel Elizalde Jr., chief of the government committee on national minorities.

Anthropologists who have studied other primitive groups in the area tend to dispute the government claim of Stone Age links.

Dr. Jesus Peralta, a U.S.-trained archeologist and curator of the national museum, found charcoal drawings on the walls of one cave of human-like figures that indicate "continuity of practices dating back some 2,000 years, within neolithic times," the report said.

Gen. George Brown as head of the joint chiefs of staff. Sen. John Stennis, D-Miss., chairman of the committee, said there was no opposition to Jones's selection.

The committee is expected to vote Monday on the nominations of Jones and Gen. Lew Allen Jr. as chief of staff of the Air Force and Adm. Thomas B. Hayward as chief of naval operations.

Throughout Jones's questioning, committee members repeatedly expressed concern that senior military officers are being "muzzled" by the administration or bow to the wishes of the president.

The neolithic period refers to the last stage of the stone age, characterized by a primitive form of agriculture and the use of polished stone tools.

The tribe, called Taotato, or Stone People, numbers 86 persons divided into 18 "households."

Their existence was made known after a government announcement Monday that President Ferdinand Marcos made a helicopter visit to the tribe's remote home in the wilderness of Palawan Island, 430 miles southwest of here.

Marcos has banned outsiders from the area to preserve the "purity" of the cave dwellers, the government spokesman said.

The government was still silent on how or by whom the Taotato were discovered.

The report said a cobblestone tool, used for pounding, was found at the site and is now in Marcos's possession. Fragments of pots possibly used in burials were also found.

These, along with a rock shelter burial site with "porcelain bowl grave furniture" were interpreted as showing links with burial traditions in neolithic times, the report said.

But Dr. Frank Lynch, an American anthropologist who worked extensively with another remote tribe discovered in the Philippines in 1971, the Tasaday, said there were probably "many, many more tribes like them in other remote parts of the Philippines."

"That stone tools and the other things were found there does not mean they were made by them (Taotato). They could have been made and used by other people who lived in the crater ahead of them by several hundred years," Lynch said of the government report.

He said the tribe might have been the same people written about years ago by another American expert and former chief anthropologist at the national museum, Dr. Robert Fox.

Fox, who worked extensively with the Tasaday, said in an article in 1976 that the use of caves by the Tasaday was not unique and that "two groups of mountain people on Palawan Island use caves for lengthy periods of seasonal habitation."

In requesting that a ban be imposed on visits to the area by people not involved in the present studies, Elizalde said that any more intrusions could put the tribe in danger of social collapse.

Although the tribe has had contacts with other people, the report said a research team still in the area has "confirmed" that the mile-wide valley, about 1,000 feet below the crater's rim, had never been visited by anyone before Marcos' visit Monday and apparently an earlier trip in September.

Details of the September trip were not given.

LCC Graduate Gets Ride Home With Kaunda

By BOB CAMPBELL
Avalanche-Journal Staff

Edith Zambo spent five years cleaning houses, babysitting and working in factories from before midnight until after dawn to get an American college degree. A Zambian, she kept up with what was happening at home and came to admire Zambian President Kenneth Kaunda, who is considered by some to be as great a statesman as Africa has produced. She earned a bachelor's degree in biology at Lubbock Christian College this spring and went through an unproductive hassle over a plane ticket purchased by an African service club for a chartered flight home.

Desperate because her visa was about to expire, she called the Zambian embassy in Washington to ask for work there to earn plane fare. They had no job for her, she was told, but President Kaunda happened to be touring the United States and would be happy to have her along. She would fly home in his party. "It's too much," she said Wednesday before her departure to Atlanta to meet the Kaunda plane. "I'm so scared, but I'm so happy. All these years I've been praying to meet him because I respect him so much for what he has done. It is an ordeal turned into a dream. Edith, 23, grew up in a village, Sikumba, in southern Zambia with her parents, two brothers and two sisters. She went to school in the village — 30 miles north of Livingstone — and was sent by her parents at age 9 to a Church of Christ mission school some 80 miles away. She had no money on finishing the 12th grade, but a missionary teacher arranged with the Livingstone Rotary Club to send her to the United States to college. On grants and hard work, she earned a junior college degree from York College in York, Neb., and then came to LCC. "I wanted to have a degree now that I knew what I could do with it," she said of deciding to stay for a bachelor's degree. In Lubbock, she worked as a domestic, as a babysitter and as an 11:30 p.m.-to-7:30 a.m. employee at Texas Instruments, Rainbo Baking and Frito-Lay to pay for her education.

come of only about $10 a month. "I don't know how I made it, really," she said. "I just don't know how." She said encouragement from LCC professors and a policy of letting her pay tuition and other expenses when she could helped a great deal. Her flight home will be profoundly different from her flight to Nebraska through Paris and New York City five years ago. "Americans' impression of Africa is everything wild and people running around half-naked," she said. "My impression of the United States was utopia. I didn't think there was dirt in this place. I had seen pictures of New York at night on TV at home, and I thought it was like that. When I landed in New York and got out of the plane, I saw a crack in the runway and thought, I know I'm lost. In the United States, there are no cracks." She had been told her trip to Nebraska was completely paid for, and she forced the airport in New York to take her in a helicopter to another airport to make connections when she refused to pay for a cab. Edith has not seen any of her family since leaving Zambia and is looking to see them again as a pleasant ending to her dream trip home. "It's been so long that I am really anxious to go," she said.

Juvenile Delinquency Curbs Studied By School Trustees

By JEFF SOUTH
Avalanche-Journal Staff

The Lubbock Independent School District can curb juvenile delinquency by helping kids feel good about themselves and by getting parents more involved in their children's education, the school board was told today. The board's advisory committee on juvenile justice listed 44 recommendations — among them, increasing individual attention in the classroom and extracurricular activities for students — to help reduce delinquency here. "Schools can't do it all but they can help," committee member June Berry said in presenting the 23-page report to school trustees. She said the panel's suggestions are "practical, reasonable and possible" and that the committee hopes the district will begin implementing them with the 1978-79 school year. Many of the recommendations concern general policies or philosophies, such as providing students and teachers more recognition. But some suggestions — like hiring additional personnel and freeing counselors of paperwork so they can devote more time to students — involve budget considerations.

This problem of juvenile delinquency, and we need your help," board president Charles Waters said. Waters instructed his colleagues and school administrators to analyze the report and be ready to consider taking specific action next month and during upcoming budget sessions. Also at its meeting, the board: — Convened for an hour in executive session to discuss the proposed purchase of a junior high school site at 80th Street and Avenue N. No action was taken on the land, which the district already has an option to buy. Waters said the board needs further information on an alternative tract in the same vicinity. — Approved using the Sanders Elementary building, which will be closed next year under the district's integration plan, to house Project Intercept, an alternative school for problem students, and a pres-

Texas Country Doctor Wins Academy's Award

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter praised Dr. Mario E. Ramirez Thursday for practicing alone in an area of 17,000 persons for 25 years. Ramirez, of Roma, Tex., was selected doctor of the year by the American Academy of Family Practice.

At a brief meeting in the Oval Office, the president said Ramirez "did everything he could to provide a better life for people who looked to him for leadership, comfort and support."

Carter said Ramirez, while continuing his practice, became a judge and administrative officer. He also is president-elect of the Texas Medical Association.

"This is an achievement this quiet man has realized without ever trying to publicize his service to humankind," Carter said. "His dedication and life are so meaningful to those who know him personally and an inspiration to all who know him through this award."

Southwest Airlines To Hold Anniversary Snack Party

Southwest Airlines, which began its service to Lubbock in May 1977, has held the top position in terms of passengers boarded at Lubbock International Airport since October. To celebrate its first year of service Saturday, Southwest will provide cupcakes with coffee at the 10:20 a.m., 10:45 a.m., and 11 a.m. departures. Each flight's 30th passenger will be given a prize in commemoration of the first anniversary. During the first full month of operations, the airline logged 9,722 passengers, with a cumulative total reported at 146,999 for the first 11 months. Southwest's passenger boardings peaked in March at 18,354. The single day with most numerous boardings occurred in that month — March 17 — with 1,130 passengers boarding on 12 flights. Overall boardings by carriers serving the Lubbock airport increased from 21,778 in April, 1977, to 39,479 during April of this year, up 81 percent. In its first year of operation here, Southwest has stationed 28 employees at Lubbock.

At Wit's End...

By ERMA BOMBECK

A miracle is an event that contradicts known scientific laws and is often referred to as an Act of God.

I have just removed a blouse made out of a miracle (Hallelujah! Hallelujah!) fabric from my washer. I don't want to mention names, but someone does not have their act together.

As a woman in her twilight years, I should be taking long walks, sitting quietly reading good books, smiling wisely, and passing down bits of history to my children. Instead, I am in my utility room reading washing instructions (that have been sewn into the seams) and wondering why my miracle (Hallelujah! Hallelujah!) fabric just fades on itself and looks like something hanging out of the rear pocket of a mechanic's overalls.

I first became suspicious of miracle (Hallelujah! Hallelujah!) fabrics when I bought my husband a shirt one day and the salesperson said, "You will never have to iron this."

"That's a miracle!" (Hallelujah! Hallelujah!), I said.

"Exactly. It will always look as wonderful as it does right now."

"But the sleeves are all wrinkled and there are creases where it's been folded."

"Which is precisely why you have a miracle (Hallelujah! Hallelujah!) setting on your iron called permanent press."

"But that doesn't make any sense."

"Are you questioning the deity?" she smiled patiently.

Thanks to these instant miracles (Hallelujah! Hallelujah!), my clothes have been healed, but I'm the one who's sick.

I am growing up in my utility room — gentle cycle, no bleach, mild sud, cool iron, fluff dry, hang on a hanger, remove from washer, do not steam, no heat dryer, do not wring, keep out of sun, iron on reverse side, cold rinse, wash alone, pat dry, remove trimmings, dry clean only. (The latter as I take it out of the dryer.)

Yesterday, I appeared at breakfast in a T-shirt that would have been tight across the chest of a Barbie doll.

"What happened?" asked my husband.

"It's my laundry. It's all been divined by a miracle (Hallelujah! Hallelujah!)! Did you hear angels singing? I didn't think you did."

Here is another real old-timer. Oswald Jacoby saw it first back in the early thirties. Victor Mollo says a French magazine printed it some 10 years ago and that this similar hand was played successfully in a French tournament by a player who gave the magazine credit.

South plays dummy's ace of diamonds on West's queen. East ruffs and it is up to South to make the key play right here. If he knows it is a trick hand he looks at dummy's deuce and his trey of diamonds and throws away his king.

East returns anything he wants. It doesn't matter. South draws trumps, cashes the ace and king of hearts and ace of clubs. He notes happily that West has had to follow to both hearts, one spade and one club and hence is down to eight diamonds.

Now South leads his little diamond. West had to win the trick and must lead a second diamond. The defense has two tricks in and South lets West hold that trick also. He discards the last heart from dummy and a club from his hand. West must lead another diamond. South ruffs in dummy, discards his last club and makes his contract.

Your partner opens one spade, second hand bids two hearts, you bid three diamonds. Fourth hand bids three hearts, your partner four diamonds, and second hand passes. What should you do?

You should bid five clubs. This is a slam try that shows that you hold the ace of clubs but have two losing hearts:

TO YOUR GOOD HEALTH

BY DR. GEORGE C. THOSTESON

Dear Dr. Thosteson: My 13-year-old son was stung by a bee a couple of years ago and suffered a bad reaction. Recently we heard that if he should be stung by a bee again he would probably have a worse reaction than the last one. We were advised he should get a series of shots. He has a bee sting kit, which includes an injection serum and pills. Do you suggest that we forget the immunization shots? — A.R.H.

No. I suggest he have the shots. It will provide the protection he needs this summer. He may not have the kit with him, and at his age he may be too confused to use the injection kit properly.

Your informant was correct. A second sting after an initial severe reaction can be quite serious, even fatal. Even with the protection, he needs to avoid the bees as much as possible by avoiding areas where they might be.

It would be wise for him to wear a Medic-Alert tag indicating his sensitivity to stings or to any other similar allergy. The address to write to get a tag is Medic Alert, Turlock, Calif. 95380. An allergist or your family physician can give the needed injections. From your descriptions of his previous reaction he certainly seems to need them.

Dear Dr. Thosteson: My mother has noises in her ear, which she says is like a band playing all the time. Sometimes it seems as though a man is singing, too. This keeps up all day and sometimes keeps her awake at night. Earwax is not the cause, her doctors say (including ear specialists). They tell us nothing can be done. Do you have suggestions? She is 87. — D.M.

Tinnitus can result from any of several disorders that affect the ears, so it is difficult to even guess at a specific cause of your mother's musical extravaganza. Otosclerosis (changes in the ear bones) is common at her age. So is elevated blood pressure. Unfortunately, drugs that control high blood pressure may themselves contribute to noises. Even anemia can be a factor.

About all you can do is make sure she is getting proper diet and determine whether certain medicine (aspirin, quinine, etc.) are to blame. If she lives alone, see that her house or bedroom is properly ventilated. Carbon monoxide poisoning (which is often subtle) can be involved. You may want to read my booklet on ear noises for further hints. For a copy, send 25 cents and a stamped, self-addressed envelope to Dr. Thosteson, P.O. Box 11210, Chicago, Ill. 60611. If she is bothered at night she can try playing a bedside radio softly to blank out the "inner music."

Dear Dr. Thosteson: My doc treats me by letting the hydrocele material run out through a needle stuck into my left scrotal sac. He gets 11 or 12 ounces of water each time. He does it about three times a year and it costs me $35 each time.

A urologist advises me to have an operation on the sac to stop the hydrocele from coming in and have it over with. But I am afraid that after the operation it will come back again. Your advice please? — E.H.

Consider having the surgery. The hydrocele (accumulation of liquid in the sac) should not recur. The cost of surgery will offset the continuing charges for drainage and your discomfort will end. The surgery involved is not extensive.

Dear Dr. Thosteson: Is it normal for some women to have a clear discharge from their breasts while using the contraceptive pills? — J.

"Normal" is a broad term. Some women may have such discharge while on the pill for long periods. It is not considered significant, but should be reported anyway.

Dear Dr. Thosteson: Just how long does it take for the body to completely dispose of the food after it is eaten? — F.Y.

Anywhere from one day to several days depending on the type of food — carbohydrates, protein, and fat — in that order of departure.

Dr. Thosteson welcomes reader mail but regrets that, due to the tremendous volume received daily, he is unable to answer individual letters. Readers' questions are incorporated in his column whenever possible.

ANN LANDERS

Dear Ann Landers: I am at the point where I could just scream.

My boss, a top-notch executive, is trying to lose weight. Someone suggested that he munch carrots instead of snack on popcorn, potato chips and nuts — a long-time habit.

All day long he is chomping away like crazy. You can imagine what it sounds like on the other end of the phone. My office is right outside of his and I'm going stark, raving mad listening to that man crackle, crunch and chew on those darned things. What can I do? Ask him if he read Ann Landers last night? Please come up with a solution. I am — Climbing The Walls In Peoria Dear Climbing: Has anyone asked him, "What's up, Doc?" The question is a natural.

I suggest a transistor radio with earphones — set at a very low pitch, to an FM station. The music will drown out the chomping and it won't interfere with your ability to hear the phone or do your work. Try it — you'll like it.

Dear Ann Landers: Just because this letter is short, please don't think it's not important. My whole future depends on your answer.

What's wrong with a husband in his 40s who confesses to — almost brags about — an affair he did NOT have? Is he immature or crazy? Is he physically ill? Is he going through the male change of life? Is he trying to get rid of me? I've asked myself a thousand questions and can't figure it out.

I love this man and don't want to lose him. If he's sick, I want to help him. Please hurry your answer. — Frantic In Oakland

Dear Oak: My guess is that your husband feels unsure of his masculinity and is trying to come across as a Casanova. Don't attach more importance to his imaginary fling than it deserves. Just turn on the heat. Honey.

Dear Ann Landers: I thought weddings were supposed to be for the bride and bridegroom. I'm so fed up I could die.

Tom and I decided on exactly the kind of wedding we want and laid out our plans for my mother. She seemed to go along with us.

A few days later Mom handed back the wedding list I had given her. It was three times as long. She had added a whole slew of her friends and cut ours out. This means the reception must be moved to a bigger place. I will need more bridesmaids and Tom will need more ushers. We don't care for the idea.

The worst is that she wants me to wear the gown she was married in. I don't like it. It's not ME. I tried to be nice when I told her how I felt but apparently I wasn't. She called me "selfish" and insists that I just wanted to hurt her.

I'm the one who is being hurt. It's my wedding and Mom isn't letting me do it the way Tom and I want. She has made me feel as if my judgment isn't good enough and she has to run everything. Please let us have your thoughts on this.

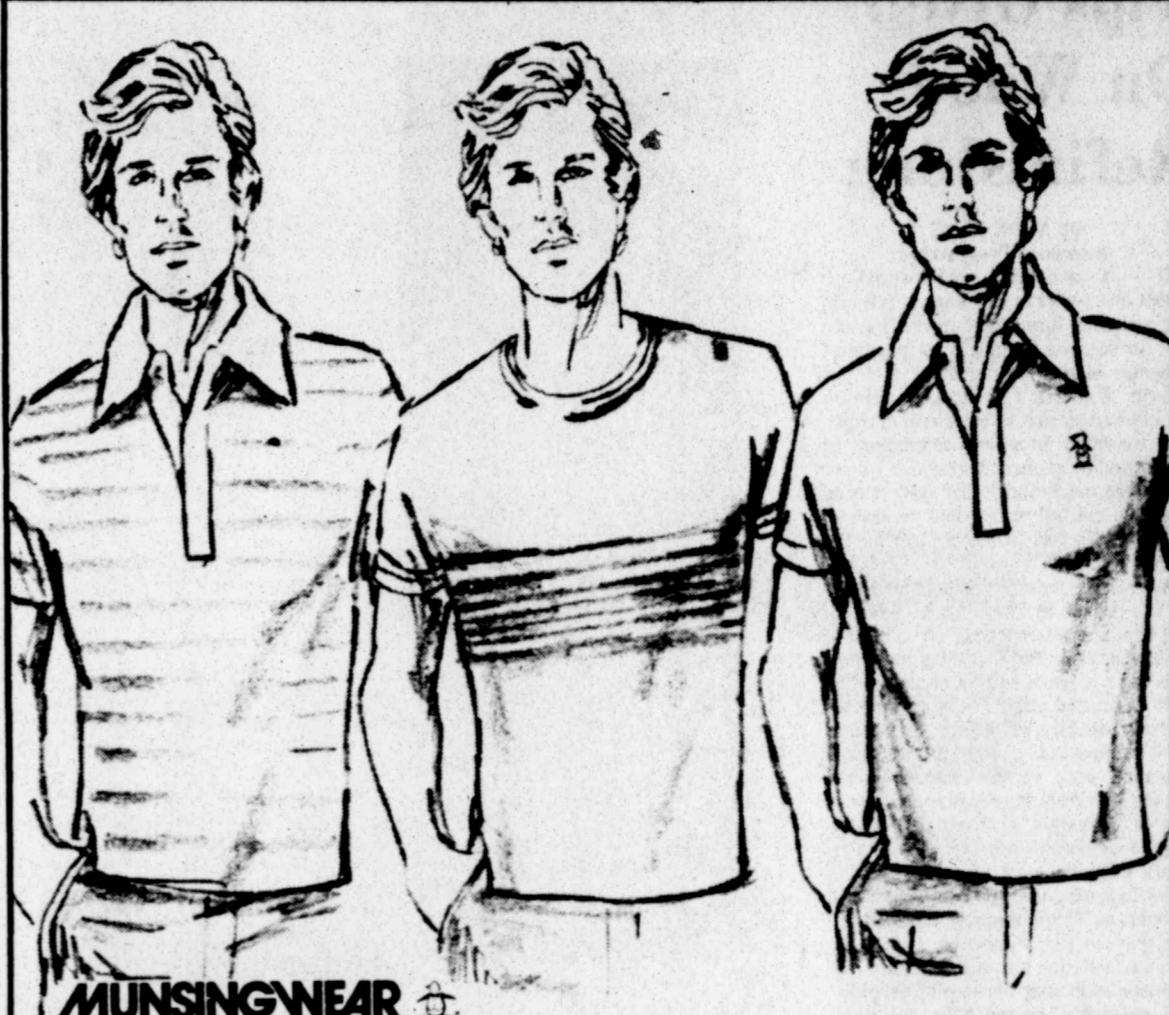

— Crying At My Wedding In St. Louis

Dear Crying: Seems like the mother-daughter hostilities, buried since childhood, come out with the wedding plans. This is an old story. I hope your Mom will let you do it your way. And I hope, too, that you will remember how YOU felt when YOUR daughter gets married and her ideas are different from yours.

Famous Photographs Often Targets Of Criticism

By IRVING DESFOR
Associated Press Writer

Many great pictures which become photojournalistic classics or win major awards, often become the target of criticism. It seems to be the price of fame — whether a photograph or a person — that when placed on a pedestal, you not only get admiration and praise but also some disclaimers and brickbats.

I recall when Joe Rosenthal won the Pulitzer Prize in 1945 for what has been called the greatest war picture of all time: Marines raising Old Glory on Iwo Jima, Feb. 23, 1945. That, too, ran into flack. A small voice somewhere cried out it was "arranged" and not authentic.

Fortunately, the picture itself speaks loudly and clearly. Its spontaneity and natural action are all too apparent and AP photographer Rosenthal was there to record the peak instant that made it immortal. It remains so.

As an interesting footnote, this was the only picture in Pulitzer Prize history to be awarded the prize the same year in which it was photographed. Normally awards go to the best work of the preceding year. In 1946, no Pulitzer Prize in News Photography was awarded. It had already been given.

Sometimes it takes many years and repeated explanations to set the record straight. Such is the case with Arthur Rothstein, noted photojournalist, lecturer, author and teacher. Two of his most famous depression years photos have been called fakes despite his explanations of their authenticity.

In the April issue of Camera 35 magazine, Rothstein hopefully has set the record straight for historians and students of photographic art. His article tells the story of the pictures and how the hoax accusations started. Rothstein, as a photographer for the Farm Security Administration under Roy Stryker, was one of a noted team of photographers which documented the U.S. Depression era of the 1930s.

In April 1936, he photographed farmer Arthur Coble and his two sons, Milton and little Darrel, walking in the face of a dust storm in Cimarron County, Okla. With wind howling and dust blowing hard, Rothstein recorded the scene as he saw it to show the tragedy affecting many farmers.

The following month, he was in Pennington County, S.D. He came across a cattle skull on the cracked earth of a dried-up water-hole, a common sight in many seasons. Intrigued by the skull's long shadow and the texture of the earth, he made many exposures from different angles.

Both photos were published widely and became recognized as works of art by many museums. They also came in for controversy.

In the case of "Dust Storm, Oklahoma," Rothstein himself inadvertently contributed to the critical storm. In 1942, he prepared an article for "The Complete Photographer," a mail-order encyclopedia. His subject, "Direction in the Picture Story," led him to describe the work of several photographers and methods they used to make their pictures more meaningful. He used a hypothetical situation: "The picture of a farmer and his sons in a dust storm could have been controlled in this way. The little boy might have been asked to drop back and hold his hand over his eye. The farmer could have been asked to lean forward as he walked."

"In fact," Rothstein says, "I did none of this. The photograph was unposed and not staged, the action and location were not changed. It is impossible, besides, in a blinding, roaring dust storm to exercise any control over the scene. I chose an unfortunate example."

That mistake was magnified by an editor who decided to make the point more effective. He changed Rothstein's words from "could have been" and "might have been" to the straight past tense. Rothstein did not see the edited version of his words until the article was published because he was out covering assignments for the Office of War Information. By then it was too late. He was accused of staging the photograph.

As for the skull picture, it was used by an editor in the summer of 1936 and published with a caption as a symbol of the drought. When other variations of the skull and earth were found in the files of the Resettlement Administration, Rothstein was accused of carrying the skull around and photographing it in various locations. Critics of the Roosevelt administration fanned the criticism and magnified its significance.

The picture itself was honest but the caption that appeared with it was an error. In the dust storm picture, the words written by the editor to increase its "effectiveness" were incorrect, but the photo was truthful and accurate.

"The lesson to be learned," Rothstein sums up, "is that a photographer must be aware of, and concerned about, the words that accompany a picture. These words should be considered as carefully as the lighting, exposure and composition of the photograph."

Tips Given On Wood Refinishing

By ANDY LANG
Associated Press Writer

Q — I have often read instructions about one aspect or the other of refinishing a piece of furniture, but what I would like to see is a complete start-to-finish schedule of such an operation. I have a reason, of course. I am about to refinish an old bureau that is otherwise in excellent condition. It appears to be made of some kind of hardwood, although I don't know too much about that subject. Can you give me full instructions on how to proceed? I'd like to use a stain on the wood.

A — Space reasons preclude all details in the replies to all questions selected, but here's an attempt to give you most of what you want. The first thing to do is to rub down a small section of the bureau with denatured alcohol to be certain that it really needs a refinishing. Sometimes all it requires is a cleaning. If it does need attention, use a varnish remover to take off the old finish. There are several varieties on the market, so be certain to follow the manufacturer's directions in every respect, including what to use and how to use it in rinsing the wood after the finish is removed. If the remover takes out all the color in the wood, fine. If not, try sanding, but don't overdo it, since the previous stain may be deeply imbedded and impossible to remove. In that event, you'll have to use a commercial bleach of the kind sold in hardware and paint stores, again carefully following the instructions on the container. Apply a coat of sealer. After 24 hours, put on the stain. Wait another 24 hours, then apply a second coat of sealer. When that is thoroughly dry, you are ready for whatever material you have chosen for the final finish. Since you have elected to stain the wood, you want a clear finish, in which case you might consider one of the synthetic varnishes. After that, decide on whether the finish is smooth enough. If it isn't, a light sanding with a wet-or-dry sandpaper is in order. Or you can rub down the finish with powdered pumice, followed by a similar treatment with powdered rottenstone. That's about as much detail as space will allow, but several paragraphs could be devoted to the application of each material and the sanding and rubbing procedures, which might carry us right on through this newspaper to the back page.

Q — We intend to sell our house within the next year. We have lived in it for 15 years and know that we will get a tax break on the profit because of our age. However, while I am 66, my wife is only 60. Does the tax ruling apply to our house, which is in both names?

A — Yes. Only one of the co-owners need be 65 or older in order to qualify.

(The techniques of using varnish, lacquer, shellac, stain, bleach, etc., are detailed in Andy Lang's helpful booklet, "Wood Finishing in the Home," available by sending 35 cents and a long, STAMPED, self-addressed envelope to Know-How, P.O. Box 477, Huntington, N.Y. 11743. Questions of general interest will be answered in the column, but individual correspondence cannot be undertaken.)

Bell Admits To Control Over FBI

ATLANTA (AP) — Attorney General Griffin Bell says unhappy FBI regional directors who claim he is "trying to run the bureau" are absolutely right.

"That's what I was trying to do. I was hoping people knew that," Bell said in an interview with The Atlanta Journal.

"The fact is, the FBI is under me. That's why I've got an office over there. I am in charge of the FBI and I don't think certain people like it."

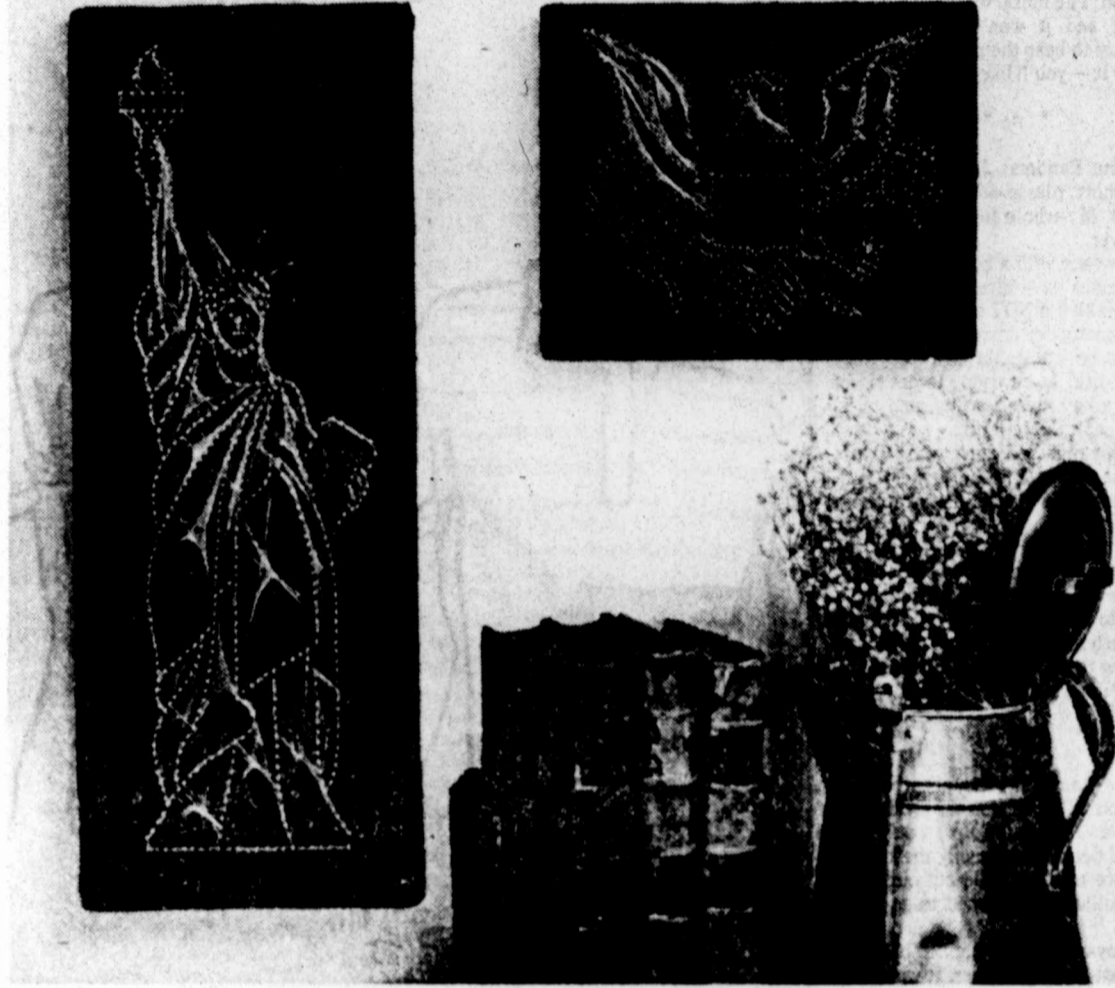

"The morale is low right now, and I think it will be until we can get these disciplinary proceedings out of the way."

"I haven't politicized it (the FBI), except in the sense that I'm a political appointee," he said. "I guess anybody that's a political appointee, you can say he politicized it."

"I don't even let the FBI communicate (directly) with the White House — that was not the story when I arrived in Washington. They have to go through me, the president has to go through me."

Bell said morale problems vary according to which regional office he visits.

"The day I was in Indianapolis and had that confrontation (with agents protesting indictments of some FBI figures) was really a bad scene," he said.

History, Enjoyment Of Crafts United In Wire Art Project

Wire art is born on the Fourth of July in the Statue of Liberty and Great Eagle projects pictured here. You can work your wiring over a dark background to add an extra sparkle. And a 3-D stringing pattern will lead you every step of the way, from pin to pin, in an exciting new technique that puts your precision to the test, down to the very last wire.

When you work the dramatic figure of the Statue of Liberty into your crafts enjoyment, you'll be dabbling in some colorful American history as well. She was designed by Frederic Bartholdi to stand in New York Harbor 152 feet tall and she originally went under the title of "Liberty Enlightening the World."

Suggestions Offered Do-It-Yourselfers

By The Associated Press
Keeping the do-it-yourselfer busy may be a problem this season. He may want to do an expensive job the family can't afford, and you don't want the debt hanging over your head.

Little things, not so costly, may capture his imagination, if you don't give him a list that's overwhelming. Suggesting one project at a time is a better idea for the average home handyman.

Here are some suggestions:
If you don't have enclosures around radiators, perhaps you could improve the look of a living room by having some built.

A seat at a bay window might supply a much-needed storage area below a hinged lid that can be opened. Or you can load it with plants for a greenhouse look.

Do you need shelves in your closets? How about kitchen shelves?

A built-in wall in a large bathroom can house a recessed laundry hamper, storage for hygienic supplies, extra soap and towels.

Wall coverings can bring a big lift to a tired room, and it can be an inexpensive decorative asset if you do it yourself.

How about building a piece of furniture? Many books tell how to make attractive tables and the like for use indoors and outdoors. One book even has patterns that might be taken to lumber yards for pre-cutting. An experienced do-it-yourselfer may have his own ideas about designs.

A small brick barbecue unit should not be expensive and may serve a much needed purpose outdoors for many months of the year. Choose the right spot for it so that it is conveniently located near house and patio.

Bushes and trees may be one way to brighten your surroundings at minimum cost — you might save $15 on a bush — if you do your own planting.

How about a dog run? It may prove to be a solution to problems with neighbors over dog trespassing. Small dogs can be maintained in a run that does not require expensive materials. Big dogs may need chain link fencing with metal stanchions and a gate, but with the handyman's own labor, the cost can be kept down. (One good hint when building a dog run — make it longer than it is wide, dogs tend to lie down and not exercise in a square run.)

Associated Press Writer

Nobel Prize winners are honored on a new set of stamps from the Caribbean island of Grenada. These colorful stamps will be welcomed by Grenada collectors and those who specialize in famous people on stamps.

The lowest value features Christiaan Eijkman from the Netherlands who received his prize in 1929 for medicine. The fifth illustrates Dr. Albert Einstein who was named for the prize as a German in 1921 for physics. The highest value bears a likeness of Carl Bosch who was the recipient in 1931, also a German, for chemistry. A souvenir sheet was issued at the same time featuring a picture of Alfred Nobel, the Swedish chemist for whom the awards are named.

The stamps are available at your local dealer or stamp store.

Nicaragua has issued a set of 10 stamps which highlight scenes from Tchaikovsky's famous ballet, "The Nutcracker Suite." Included in the illustrations are:

Christmas Party, Dancing Dolls, Clara and Snowflakes, Snowflake Fairies, Sugar Plum Fairy and Prince, Waltz of the Flowers, Chinese Tea Dance, Bonbonniere, and Arabian Coffee Dance. The Souvenir Sheet shows the Nutcracker Suite Finale.

Norfolk Island hails the Bicentenary of the discovery of Hawaii by Capt. James Cook with the issuance of three new stamps.

The 18-cent shows a portrait of Cook by Sir Nathaniel Dance, a founder of the Royal Academy. The 25-cent depicts the discovery of the northern islands of the Hawaiian group on Jan. 18, 1778. The 60-cent displays the British flag against an island background.

Many readers of this column have inquired about the difference between U.S. regular (or definitive) stamps and the commemoratives. Here's the answer.

The regulars are the ones, relatively small in size, sold every day at all U.S. post offices. They're printed in large quantities and stay in use for several years. Often they depict scenery or famous people, but NEVER living persons. Commemoratives, on the other hand, are issued to honor an important event, person or special subject hailing the anniversary date.

Conservative Group Plans Fight Against New SALT Agreement

WASHINGTON (AP) — A leading conservative organization, undaunted by its failure to defeat the Panama Canal treaty, announced plans Thursday to wage an even greater offensive against the arms limitation pact being negotiated with the Soviet Union.

The American Conservative Union, which spent $1.4 million in its futile battle against Senate ratification of the Panama accord, said it will produce a 30-minute film critical of the Carter administration's policy on the strategic arms limitation treaty (SALT).

Rep. Philip M. Crane, R-Ill., chairman of the ACU, said the film will be ready for showing in July and will be "our opening effort to defeat SALT."

Crane said the campaign against the pact will be even more extensive than the one aimed at preventing the United States from agreeing to relinquish the Panama Canal to Panama by the year 2000.

Sen. Jake Garn, R-Utah, chairman of the conservative group's defense task force, said he went to Geneva as an observer at the SALT negotiations last month.

The senator said he expects a treaty to be signed this summer, but he added that he does not expect the agreement to be taken up by the Senate before next year.

"I do believe that we should have a SALT treaty," Garn said. "I do not think the current SALT agreement that is nearly completed is one we should support."

Without basic changes in the provisions of the agreement, said Garn, "I intend to filibuster" if necessary, to block ratification.

Garn said the changes he would demand in the treaty now under negotiation would be a reduction in the number of large intercontinental ballistic missiles allowed the Soviets; inclusion of the Soviet Backfire bomber as a strategic weapon; an increase in the allowable range of U.S. cruise missiles, and tougher provisions providing for verification that the Soviets are living up to terms of the accord.

Garn also called on the administration to suspend the negotiations until the Soviets end their involvement in Africa.

"If you want to use the term 'linkage,' fine," he said. "They ought to be linked."

President Carter has said he does not believe in linking SALT to other issues in Soviet-American relations, such as the Russian involvement in Africa. However, the president also has said that he believes chances for Senate approval of any SALT accord could be impaired by Soviet activities around the world.

Though they lost the Panama fight, conservatives said they felt the publicity surrounding the campaign raised significantly the American public's political consciousness of the conservative viewpoint.

Aside from gaining new adherents and new financial support, "the most important plus was finding that conservative groups can be pulled together to fight a common battle," Crane said in an interview shortly after the Senate ratified the Panama agreements.

Black home ownership in the United States is at an alltime high. Latest available figures show that 41.5 percent of black families occupied their own homes, while 58.5 percent rented.

Filibuster Forces Eye Labor Proposal

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate Majority Leader Robert C. Byrd will allow opponents of proposed labor law revision to filibuster into June before trying to choke off debate, he said Thursday.

"The reason I'm waiting is to give ample time for debate on the measure," the West Virginia Democrat said shortly before Republicans carried their filibuster into its third day.

The Senate has scheduled a Memorial Day recess beginning May 26. Byrd said he will wait until after senators return to Washington on June 5 before making his first formal move against the filibuster, mounted against legislation strongly supported by the Carter administration as well as organized labor.

A motion to cut off the filibuster, called a cloture petition, would come to a vote on Wednesday, June 7, if Byrd files it the day the recess ends.

Filibuster leaders had been expecting their first test of strength to come next week. Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, said after Byrd announced his plan: "We believe we'll be able to firmly hold against cloture. I think we can hold out as long as we have to."

Administration and labor lobbyists concede they lack the votes to stop the filibuster on the first try. But they say eventually they will be able to get the 60 votes they need, possibly on the third or fourth attempt.

Sources said Byrd decided on his delay in part so senators would not have to vote on the filibuster before returning home for the recess. One source said supporters of the bill view the first anti-filibuster vote as a "throwaway," and prefer that it come after the recess instead of before.

Sen. John Tower, R-Texas, and an opponent of the legislation, said earlier in the week the filibuster has a marginal chance of success.

But Hatch, expressing renewed confidence, said: "I don't believe any senator can vote for cloture without having that vote haunt him for the rest of his career in the Senate."

The Utah Republican is the prime leader of the filibuster, organized and run largely by first-term GOP senators although Republican Leader Howard Baker is backing it.

They are fighting a measure backers say is designed to streamline existing labor laws and eliminate delays that hamper workers trying to exercise their rights to join labor unions.

The measure sets deadlines for union representation elections and would authorize workers to receive 1½ times back pay if they are fired illegally during union organizing drives.

In addition, it provides for back pay for workers if their employers refuse to bargain in good faith on first contracts, and permits the government to bar firms from receiving federal contracts if they violate labor laws repeatedly.

It also calls for expanding the National Labor Relations Board from five to seven members to expedite handling of cases.

Opponents say the bill is heavily tilted toward unions and would allow them to organize thousands of non-unionized workers in "push-button fashion."

Park Says He Gave Money To Humphrey

WASHINGTON (AP) — Tongsun Park, the key figure in the Korean influence-buying scandal, said Thursday he gave at least $5,000 to the 1972 presidential campaign of the late Sen. Hubert Humphrey and donated funds to three other senators.

Park, who returned to Washington Wednesday night for a second round of questioning by House and Senate ethics committees and a federal grand jury, made his comments on NBC-TV's "Today Show."

Park's statements are his first public claim that he made cash contributions to Humphrey and the other senators.

Park said he didn't think "the senator himself was aware of the contribution being made."

Aides to the late senator say that prior to his death last January, Humphrey told the Senate Ethics Committee that he had no knowledge of any contribution from Park.

Former Humphrey campaign aides have said they don't believe Park made such a contribution.

Park also said he made campaign contributions for the late Sen. John McClellan, D-Ark., defeated Sen. Joseph Montoya, D-N.M., and one incumbent senator, Birch Bayh, D-Ind.

In testimony under oath before the Senate Ethics Committee, Bayh has denied that his campaign received money from Park.

Famous Photographs Often Targets Of Criticism

By IRVING DESFOR
Associated Press Writer

Many great pictures which become photojournalistic classics or win major awards, often become the target of criticism. It seems to be the price of fame — whether a photograph or a person — that when placed on a pedestal, you not only get admiration and praise but also some disclaimers and brickbats.

I recall when Joe Rosenthal won the Pulitzer Prize in 1945 for what has been called the greatest war picture of all time: Marines raising Old Glory on Iwo Jima, Feb. 23, 1945. That, too, ran into flack. A small voice somewhere cried out it was "arranged" and not authentic.

Fortunately, the picture itself speaks loudly and clearly. Its spontaneity and natural action are all too apparent and AP photographer Rosenthal was there to record the peak instant that made it immortal. It remains so.

As an interesting footnote, this was the only picture in Pulitzer Prize history to be awarded the prize the same year in which it was photographed. Normally awards go to the best work of the preceding year. In 1946, no Pulitzer Prize in News Photography was awarded. It had already been given.

Sometimes it takes many years and repeated explanations to set the record straight. Such is the case with Arthur Rothstein, noted photojournalist, lecturer, author and teacher. Two of his most famous depression years photos have been called fakes despite his explanations of their authenticity.

In the April issue of Camera 35 magazine, Rothstein hopefully has set the record straight for historians and students of photographic art. His article tells the story of the pictures and how the hoax accusations started. Rothstein, as a photographer for the Farm Security Administration under Roy Stryker, was one of a noted team of photographers which documented the U.S. Depression era of the 1930s.

In April 1936, he photographed farmer Arthur Coble and his two sons, Milton and little Darrel, walking in the face of a dust storm in Cimarron County, Okla. With wind howling and dust blowing hard, Rothstein recorded the scene as he saw it to show the tragedy affecting many farmers.

The following month, he was in Pennington County, S.D. He came across a cattle skull on the cracked earth of a dried-up water-hole, a common sight in many seasons. Intrigued by the skull's long shadow and the texture of the earth, he made many exposures from different angles.

Both photos were published widely and became recognized as works of art by many museums. They also came in for controversy.

In the case of "Dust Storm, Oklahoma," Rothstein himself inadvertently contributed to the critical storm. In 1942, he prepared an article for "The Complete Photographer," a mail-order encyclopedia. His subject, "Direction in the Picture Story," led him to describe the work of several photographers and methods they used to make their pictures more meaningful. He used a hypothetical situation: "The picture of a farmer and his sons in a dust storm could have been controlled in this way. The little boy might have been asked to drop back and hold his hand over his eye. The farmer could have been asked to lean forward as he walked."

"In fact," Rothstein says, "I did none of this. The photograph was unposed and not staged, the action and location were not changed. It is impossible, besides, in a blinding, roaring dust storm to exercise any control over the scene. I chose an unfortunate example."

That mistake was magnified by an editor who decided to make the point more effective. He changed Rothstein's words from "could have been" and "might have been" to the straight past tense. Rothstein did not see the edited version of his words until the article was published because he was out covering assignments for the Office of War Information. By then it was too late. He was accused of staging the photograph.

As for the skull picture, it was used by an editor in the summer of 1936 and published with a caption as a symbol of the drought. When other variations of the skull and earth were found in the files of the Resettlement Administration, Rothstein was accused of carrying the skull around and photographing it in various locations. Critics of the Roosevelt administration fanned the criticism and magnified its significance.

The picture itself was honest but the caption that appeared with it was in error. In the dust storm picture, the words written by the editor to increase its "effectiveness" were incorrect, but the photo was truthful and accurate.

"The lesson to be learned," Rothstein sums up, "is that a photographer must be aware of, and concerned about, the words that accompany a picture. These words should be considered as carefully as the lighting, exposure and composition of the photograph."

Tips Given On Wood Refinishing

By ANDY LANG
Associated Press Writer

Q — I have often read instructions about one aspect or the other of refinishing a piece of furniture, but what I would like to see is a complete start-to-finish schedule of such an operation. I have a reason, of course. I am about to refinish an old bureau that is otherwise in excellent condition. It appears to be made of some kind of hardwood, although I don't know too much about that subject. Can you give me full instructions on how to proceed? I'd like to use a stain on the wood.

A — Space reasons preclude all details in the replies to all questions selected, but here's an attempt to give you most of what you want. The first thing to do is to rub down a small section of the bureau with denatured alcohol to be certain that it really needs a refinishing. Sometimes all it requires is a cleaning. If it does need attention, use a varnish remover to take off the old finish. There are several varieties on the market, so be certain to follow the manufacturer's directions in every respect, including what to use and how to use it in rinsing the wood after the finish is removed. If the remover takes out all the color in the wood, fine. If not, try sanding, but don't overdo it, since the previous stain may be deeply imbedded and impossible to remove. In that event, you'll have to use a commercial bleach of the kind sold in hardware and paint stores, again carefully following the instructions on the container. Apply a coat of sealer. After 24 hours, put on the stain. Wait another 24 hours, then apply a second coat of sealer. When that is thoroughly dry, you are ready for whatever material you have chosen for the final finish. Since you have elected to stain the wood, you want a clear finish, in which case you might consider one of the synthetic varnishes. After that, decide on whether the finish is smooth enough. If it isn't, a light sanding with a wet-or-dry sandpaper is in order. Or you can rub down the finish with powdered pumice, followed by a similar treatment with powdered rottenstone. That's about as much detail as space will allow, but several paragraphs could be devoted to the application of each material and the sanding and rubbing procedures, which might carry us right on through this newspaper to the back page.

Q — We intend to sell our house within the next year. We have lived in it for 15 years and know that we will get a tax break on the profit because of our age. However, while I am 66, my wife is only 60. Does the tax ruling apply to our house, which is in both names?

A — Yes. Only one of the co-owners need be 65 or older in order to qualify.

(The techniques of using varnish, lacquer, shellac, stain, bleach, etc., are detailed in Andy Lang's helpful booklet, "Wood Finishing in the Home," available by sending 35 cents and a long, STAMPED, self-addressed envelope to Know-How, P.O. Box 477, Huntington, N.Y. 11743. Questions of general interest will be answered in the column, but individual correspondence cannot be undertaken.)

History, Enjoyment Of Crafts United In Wire Art Project

Wire art is born on the Fourth of July in the Statue of Liberty and Great Eagle projects pictured here. You can work your wiring over a dark background to add an extra sparkle. And a 3-D stringing pattern will lead you every step of the way, from pin to pin, in an exciting new technique that puts your precision to the test, down to the very last wire.

When you work the dramatic figure of the Statue of Liberty into your crafts enjoyment, you'll be dabbling in some colorful American history as well. She was designed by Frederic Bartholdi to stand in New York Harbor 152 feet tall and she originally went under the title of "Liberty Enlightening the World." In 1876, the upraised torch arm was brought over from France and put on display at the Philadelphia Centennial Exhibition and at Madison Square Garden to help raise funds to pay for the pedestal. Joseph Pulitzer of the New York World was instrumental in seeing the funding project through to its happy conclusion, the dedication and unveiling of the statue by President Grover Cleveland on Oct. 28, 1886. Of course, Liberty was a gift from the French to the American people in commemoration of 100 years of independence. Her construction involved layering copper sheets over a steel framework devised by Alexandre Eiffel, the same engineer responsible for a well-known tower in Paris.

The Statue of Liberty and Great Eagle are each available in kits containing a half-inch particle board, burlap backing, a nail pattern, a height gauge, wire, nails and directions. The Statue of Liberty measures 11 inches by 28 inches.

Order Statue of Liberty number 11267 for $17.99 plus $1.75 postage and handling. Order Great Eagle number 11268 for $11.99 plus $1.75 postage and handling.

Suggestions Offered Do-It-Yourselfers

By The Associated Press

Keeping the do-it-yourselfer busy may be a problem this season. He may want to do an expensive job the family can't afford, and you don't want the debt hanging over your head.

Little things, not so costly, may capture his imagination, if you don't give him a list that's overwhelming. Suggesting one project at a time is a better idea for the average home handyman.

Here are some suggestions:

If you don't have enclosures around radiators, perhaps you could improve the look of a living room by having some built.

A seat at a bay window might supply a much-needed storage area below a hinged lid that can be opened. Or you can load it with plants for a greenhouse look.

Do you need shelves in clothes closets? How about kitchen shelves?

A built-in wall in a large bathroom can house a recessed laundry hamper, storage for hygienic supplies, extra soap and towels.

Wall coverings can bring a big lift to a tired room, and it can be an inexpensive, decorative asset if you do it yourself.

How about building a piece of furniture? Many books tell how to make attractive tables and the like for use indoors and outdoors. One book even has patterns that might be taken to lumber yards for pre-cutting. An experienced do-it-yourselfer may have his own ideas about designs.

A small brick barbecue unit should not be expensive and may serve a much needed purpose outdoors for many months of the year. Choose the right spot for it so that it is conveniently located near house and patio.

Bushes and trees may be one way to brighten your surroundings at minimum cost — you might save $15 on a bush — if you do your own planting.

How about a dog run? It may prove to be a solution to problems with neighbors over dog trespassing. Small dogs can be maintained in a run that does not require expensive materials. Big dogs may need chain link fencing with metal stanchions and a gate, but with the handyman's own labor, the cost can be kept down. (One good hint when building a dog run — make it longer than it is wide, dogs tend to lie down and not exercise in a square run.)

Bell Admits To Control Over FBI

ATLANTA (AP) — Attorney General Griffin Bell says unhappy FBI regional directors who claim he is "trying to run the bureau" are absolutely right.

"That's what I was trying to do. I was hoping people knew that," Bell said in an interview with The Atlanta Journal. "The fact is, the FBI is under me. That's why I've got an office over there. I am in charge of the FBI and I don't think certain people like it."

"The morale is low right now, and I think it will be until we can get these disciplinary proceedings out of the way."

"I haven't politicized it (the FBI), except in the sense that I'm a political appointee," he said. "I guess anybody that's a political appointee, you can say he politicized it."

"I don't even let the FBI communicate (directly) with the White House — that was not the story when I arrived in Washington. They have to go through me, the president has to go through me."

Bell said morale problems vary according to which regional office he visits.

"The day I was in Indianapolis and had that confrontation (with agents protesting indictments of some FBI figures) was really a bad scene," he said.

Spotlight on Hobbies/Crafts New Stamps Honor Winners Of Nobel

By SYD KRONISH
Associated Press Writer

Nobel Prize winners are honored on a new set of stamps from the Caribbean island of Grenada. These colorful stamps will be welcomed by Grenada collectors and those who specialize in famous people on stamps.

The lowest value features Christiaan Eijkman from the Netherlands who received his prize in 1929 for medicine. The next stamp depicts Sir Winston Churchill of Great Britain who was awarded his prize in 1953 for literature. The third adhesive portrays Woodrow Wilson of the United States who won his prize in 1919 for his peace efforts. The fourth shows Frederic Passy of France for his work in the peace field in 1901. The fifth illustrates Dr. Albert Einstein who was named for the prize as a German in 1921 for physics. The highest value bears a likeness of Carl Bosch who was the recipient in 1931, also as a German, for chemistry. A souvenir sheet was issued at the same time featuring a picture of Alfred Nobel, the Swedish chemist for whom the awards are named.

The stamps are available at your local dealer or stamp store.

Nicaragua has issued a set of 10 stamps which highlight scenes from Tchaikovsky's famous ballet, "The Nutcracker Suite." Included in the illustrations are: Christmas Party, Dancing Dolls, Clara and Snowflakes, Snowflake Fairies and the Prince, Snowflake Fairies, Sugar Plum Fairy and Prince, Waltz of the Flowers, Chinese Tea Dance, Bonbonniere, and Arabian Coffee Dance. The Souvenir Sheet shows the Nutcracker Suite Finale.

Norfolk Island hails the Bicentenary of the discovery of Hawaii by Capt. James Cook with the issuance of three new stamps.

The 18-cent shows a portrait of Cook by Sir Nathaniel Dance, a founder of the Royal Academy. The 25-cent depicts the discovery of the northern islands of the Hawaiian group on Jan. 18, 1778. The 80-cent displays the British flag against an island background.

Many readers of this column have inquired about the difference between U.S. regular (or definitive) stamps and the commemoratives. Here's the answer.

The regulars are the ones, relatively small in size, sold every day at all U.S. post offices. They're printed in large quantities and stay in use for several years. Often they depict scenery or famous people, but NEVER living persons. Commemoratives, on the other hand, are issued to honor an important event, person or special subject hailing the anniversary date.

Conservative Group Plans Fight Against New SALT Agreement

STARS MEET PRESS — Jon Voight, left, and Bruce Dern traveled to Chicago recently to talk to film critics about their latest film, a saga of Vietnam wounds called "Coming Home." The picture also stars Jane Fonda. "Coming Home" will be shown at the South Plains Cinema tonight as a sneak preview, its regular run is not due until May 24. Call the theater for show times. A-J entertainment editor William Kerns was in Chicago to talk to both stars; his interview with Jon Voight was printed recently in the Avalanche-Journal and his interview with Bruce Dern will be printed in an upcoming Sunday A-J entertainment section. (Photo by Paul Schumach)

WASHINGTON (AP) — A leading conservative organization, undaunted by its failure to defeat the Panama Canal treaty, announced plans Thursday to wage an even greater offensive against the arms limitation pact being negotiated with the Soviet Union.

The American Conservative Union, which spent $1.4 million in its futile battle against Senate ratification of the Panama accords, said it will produce a 30-minute film critical of the Carter administration's policy on the strategic arms limitation treaty (SALT).

Rep. Philip M. Crane, R-Ill., chairman of the ACU, said the film will be ready for showing in July and will be "our opening effort to defeat SALT."

Crane said the campaign against the pact will be even more extensive than the one aimed at preventing the United States from agreeing to relinquish the Panama Canal to Panama by the year 2000.

Sen. Jake Garn, R-Utah, chairman of the conservative group's defense task force, said he went to Geneva as an observer at the SALT negotiations last month.

The senator said he expects a treaty to be signed this summer, but he added that he does not expect the agreement to be taken up by the Senate before next year.

"I do believe that we should have a SALT treaty," Garn said. "I do not think the current SALT agreement that is nearly completed is one we should support."

Without basic changes in the provisions of the agreement, said Garn, "I intend to filibuster" if necessary, to block ratification.

Garn said the changes he would demand in the treaty now under negotiation would be a reduction in the number of large intercontinental ballistic missiles allowed the Soviets; inclusion of the Soviet Backfire bomber as a strategic weapon; an increase in the allowable range of U.S. cruise missiles, and tougher provisions providing for verification that the Soviets are living up to terms of the accord.

Garn also called on the administration to suspend the negotiations until the Soviets end their involvement in Africa.

"If you want to use the term 'linkage,' fine," he said. "They ought to be linked."

President Carter has said he does not believe in linking SALT to other issues in Soviet-American relations, such as the Russian involvement in Africa. However, the president also has said that he believes chances for Senate approval of any SALT accord could be impaired by Soviet activities around the world.

Though they lost the Panama fight, conservatives said they felt the publicity surrounding the campaign raised significantly the American public's political consciousness of the conservative viewpoint.

Aside from gaining new adherents and new financial support, "the most important plus was finding that conservative groups can be pulled together to fight a common battle," Crane said in an interview shortly after the Senate ratified the Panama agreements.

Black home ownership in the United States is at an alltime high. Latest available figures show that 41.5 percent of black families occupied their own homes, while 58.5 percent rented.

Filibuster Forces Eye Labor Proposal

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate Majority Leader Robert C. Byrd will allow opponents of proposed labor law revision to filibuster into June before trying to choke off debate, he said Thursday.

"The reason I'm waiting is to give ample time for debate on the measure," the West Virginia Democrat said shortly before Republicans carried their filibuster into its third day.

The Senate has scheduled a Memorial Day recess beginning May 26. Byrd said he will wait until after senators return to Washington on June 5 before making his first formal move against the filibuster, mounted against legislation strongly supported by the Carter administration as well as organized labor.

A motion to cut off the filibuster, called a cloture petition, would come to a vote on Wednesday, June 7, if Byrd files it the day the recess ends.

Filibuster leaders had been expecting their first test of strength to come next week. Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, said after Byrd announced his plans:

"We believe we'll be able to firmly hold against cloture. I think we can hold out as long as we have to."

Administration and labor lobbyists concede they lack the votes to stop the filibuster on the first try. But they say eventually they will be able to get the 60 votes they need, possibly on the third or fourth attempt.

Sources said Byrd decided on his delay in part so senators would not have to vote on the filibuster before returning home for the recess. One source said supporters of the bill view the first anti-filibuster vote as a "throwaway," and prefer that it come after the recess instead of before.

Sen. John Tower, R-Texas, and an opponent of the legislation, said earlier in the week the filibuster has a marginal chance of success.

But Hatch, expressing renewed confidence, said:

"I don't believe any senator can vote for cloture without having that vote haunt him for the rest of his career in the Senate."

The Utah Republican is the prime leader of the filibuster, organized and run largely by first-term GOP senators although Republican Leader Howard Baker is backing it.

They are fighting a measure backers say is designed to streamline existing labor laws and eliminate delays that hamper workers trying to exercise their rights to join labor unions.

The measure sets deadlines for union representation elections and would authorize workers to receive 1½ times back pay if they are fired illegally during union organizing drives.

In addition, it provides for back pay for workers if their employers refuse to bargain in good faith on first contracts, and permits the government to bar firms from receiving federal contracts if they violate labor laws repeatedly.

It also calls for expanding the National Labor Relations Board from five to seven members to expedite handling of case-load.

Opponents say the bill is heavily tilted toward unions and would allow them to organize thousands of non-unionized workers in "push-button fashion."

Park Says He Gave Money To Humphrey

WASHINGTON (AP) — Tongson Park, the key figure in the Korean influence-buying scandal, said Thursday he gave at least $5,000 to the 1972 presidential campaign of the late Sen. Hubert Humphrey and donated funds to three other senators.

Park, who returned to Washington Wednesday night for a second round of questioning by House and Senate ethics committees and a federal grand jury, made his comments on NBC-TV's "Today Show."

Park's statements are his first public claim that he made cash contributions to Humphrey and the other senators.

Park said he didn't think "the senator himself was aware of the contribution being made."

Aides to the late senator say that prior to his death last January, Humphrey told the Senate Ethics Committee that he had no knowledge of any contribution from Park.

Former Humphrey campaign aides have said they don't believe Park made such a contribution.

Park also said he made campaign contributions to the late Sen. John McClellan, D-Ark., defeated Sen. Joseph Montoya, D-N.M., and one incumbent senator, Birch Bayh, D-Ind.

In testimony under oath before the Senate Ethics Committee, Bayh has denied that his campaign received money from Park.

Judge Blocks Zoning Change

Judge Robert C. Wright Thursday issued a temporary restraining order prohibiting the City of Lubbock from implementing a recently approved zoning ordinance.

Wright scheduled a hearing for 11 a.m. Tuesday at which it will be up to the city to show cause why the restraining order should not be continued. He also set a $2,500 bond for Commanders Palace Mobile Home Park, the plaintiff in the lawsuit.

The partnership filed suit against the city early Thursday, claiming city leaders did not give proper notice before approving the ordinance April 27.

The business objects to the change in zoning of an adjacent block of land from a commercial (C-4) restricted zone to a C-4 open designation.

According to the suit, the mobile home park at 6801 W. 19th St. has approximately 620 residents and is in the process of developing space for 400 additional residents.

The mobile home park claims the only notice it ever received of the proposed ordinance from the city was an announcement of a Planning and Zoning Commission hearing at 7 p.m. March 23. Plaintiff contends the notice was erroneous and that the proper time for the hearing was before the city council at 10 a.m. March 23.

Thus, the suit contends, Commanders Palace was deprived of an opportunity to present objections to the Planning and Zoning Commission.

Attached to the suit was an affidavit from attorney D. Wendell Barnett in which he stated he was advised by a city employee the proposed ordinance would come before the city council for a second reading at 11 a.m. April 27.

Barnett's affidavit says he appeared before the council at 10:30 a.m. to find the council had already made a determination on the ordinance without hearing evidence or argument from the plaintiff.

The affidavit says if the ordinance is implemented and construction begins on a truck stop or garage, plaintiff would suffer damage.

The suit asked for the temporary restraining order and a subsequent injunction against the city restoring the original zoning designation of the land in question.

Pool Operation Changes Set

A-J Correspondent

CHILDRESS—The city swimming pool will be in operation this summer despite problems at the facility, according to City Manager David Galligan.

The pool will open at 10 a.m. Tuesday. Galligan said several employees have been hired for the pool. Jeff Reek of Childress will manage the operation.

The pool will be open from 10 a.m. until 7 p.m. Tuesdays through Saturdays, and from 1 p.m. until 7 p.m. Sundays.

The pool will be closed on Mondays for maintenance operations because of a problem with the filtering system, Galligan said.

Prices will be 75 cent per person or $30 for an individual season ticket. A family season may be purchased for $45.

"We're making arrangements for groups to reserve the pool for private parties," Galligan said. "It will be available for such use evenings from 7 p.m. until 10 p.m., and groups of under 15 people may reserve the pool for $20. They must have two adult sponsors. Groups of more than 15 need a sponsor for every 10 persons, and will be charged $35."

Until this year the pool had been managed by a private operator who leased the facility from the city. He decided not to continue his operations there this year.

Mondale Exhorts Businessmen To Aid In Inflation Battle

NEW YORK (AP) — Vice President Walter F. Mondale appealed to some of the top executives of business, industry and finance Thursday to help fight inflation by keeping down prices.

"From business we expect price moderation," he told some 700 members of the Economic Club of New York. "From labor we expect comparable wage restraint."

Restating the administration's rejection of mandatory wage and price controls, the vice president added that voluntary restraint "can be far more successful than arbitrary bureaucratic controls."

The federal government, Mondale continued, "will not hesitate to bring selfish actions ... before the court of public opinion."

"We will not accept inflation as the price of increased growth," Mondale maintained. "Nor will we accept economic stagnation as the price of controlling inflation."

The vice president, who planned a speech before the American Jewish Committee to defend the administration's posture toward Israel, also echoed President Carter's recent praise of Federal Reserve Chairman G. William Miller.

"We are pleased by the leadership Bill Miller is providing," Mondale said, citing "a level of cooperation that we haven't had and need" between monetary and fiscal policies.

In his speech before the 51-year-old nonpartisan Economic Club, the vice president said the administration has put the "highest priority" on combating inflation through voluntary action.

Remained a concern, but inflation was more important as "the enemy of growth."

"America's conscience will not tolerate millions of able-bodied workers unable to support their families because there are no jobs," Mondale said.

Besides sustaining private growth and employment and reducing inflationary pressures, he went on, the administration aims to implement a sound national energy program, pursue beneficial international trade policies and enhance capital investment while seeking to increase labor productivity.

Big Spring Eyed As Prison Site

A-J Correspondent
BIG SPRING — Representatives from the Federal Bureau of Prisons Thursday discussed with the city council and the Big Spring Steering Committee the possibility of locating a minimum security correctional facility at the old Webb Air Force Base site.

The prison officials included Gary Mote and James H. Webster, both of Washington, D.C., and Charles Denson of Dallas, South Central regional director for the federal prison system.

The officials said that such a facility would employ about 100 persons and added that about $2.5 million annually, most of it in payroll, would be poured into the local economy.

The facility, which would encompass 33 acres around a onetime airman's barracks at Webb, would not use armed guards.

A Big Spring delegation will be flown to City's Development Coordinator Quits

David Kitten, the city's community development coordinator for four years, has resigned, effective June 9.

Kitten will become an engineering supervisor for Lubbock Manufacturing Co. "We're sorry to lose David," said Planning Director Jim Bertram. "He has been with the community development program since its beginning and has done an outstanding job of getting citizen and city department input into projects, working with the community development advisory committee and coordinating the program with the Urban Renewal Agency, HUD and other government agencies."

Kitten worked for the city as an assistant planner from 1969 to 1971. After a brief absence, he returned to the planning department in January, 1972, and became community development coordinator in November, 1974.

Applications for his position are being taken in the city's personnel department.

Seagoville and to a Florida facility within a week to study similar operations. Persons found guilty of "white collar crimes" such as embezzlement and income tax evasion would be confined here.

Gas Exploration Eyed In Survey

WASHINGTON (AP) — A natural gas industry study released Thursday claims development of new gas supplies is one of the most cost-effective ways of meeting future energy needs.

The study by the American Gas Association, a major industry trade organization, said that systems using gas take less money to build than almost any other energy-delivery system.

"Federal policies which ignore capital efficiencies in choosing future energy options do not benefit the American consumer," said the association chairman, Harvey A. Proctor. "Selecting the gas option, in almost all instances, means that we can produce the necessary energy at the lowest possible capital cost."

The study concluded that increasing domestic production of natural and synthetic gas for heating homes and businesses is between 18 and 19 percent less expensive than using electricity.

SMOKERS GET REPRIEVE
TRENTON, N.J. (AP) — The state Public Health Council voted Thursday to postpone the effective date of its anti-smoking regulations until Feb. 1, 1979 and allow further public comment. State Attorney General John Degnan had ruled that the proposed rules were "procedurally defective" and could not be put into effect July 1.

Mid-Level Bureaucrats Hit Drug Law Changes

WASHINGTON (AP) — Middle-level bureaucrats, given a rare chance to comment on pending legislation, disagreed with their bosses Thursday over key parts of the Carter administration's plans to overhaul the nation's drug laws. The officials of the Food and Drug Administration said the administration's proposal could cause patients to be given ineffective or even harmful drugs.

duce and export products that aren't approved for sale in the United States but which may benefit other nations, particularly in the developing nations.

Dr. Robert S.K. Young, an FDA official in the area of anti-cancer drugs, said the faster drug approval would not allow sufficient experiments before drugs are marketed.

are banned for good reason in the United States. Many drugs are sold in Latin America and Asia that are patent frauds. We should not sell drugs to other people that we won't sell to our own people," he said.

bility for drug company executives. Chairman Michael Pertschuk of the Federal Trade Commission, which is independent of the administration, has opposed that part of the proposal.

Rocket Launch Set In Winds Research

WALLOPS ISLAND, Va. (AP) — Test rockets that release orange and white vapor trails to measure winds in the upper atmosphere will be launched at dawn today and Saturday from NASA's Wallops Island Flight Center.

The forum was an unusual Senate hearing, brought to the FDA building in suburban Washington. Legislators often hear from heads of federal agencies but seldom hear testimony from middle-level officials who must enforce the laws.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., who supports the administration proposal, presided over the hearing. He asked for a show of hands on each point and found that the FDA employees in the audience overwhelmingly agreed.

"Scientific evidence is not impossible to gather. It may be difficult. It takes time. But what hangs in the balance is a person's life and limb."

Maurice Kinslow of the FDA Atlanta regional office said the current law on criminal liability "has provided American consumers with safe drugs for 72 years. I know of no reason to change it."

The administration plan also would encourage the sale of less expensive generic drugs and give patients more information about the medicines they take.

The launch, originally set for Tuesday and Wednesday, was rescheduled for Thursday but was called off again because of cloud cover at a monitoring site, a NASA spokesman said. The vapor trails of titanium dioxide particles will be released at altitudes of nine to 31 miles and should be visible within an 80-mile radius of the center.

In an auditorium before about 300 FDA employees, speakers drew applause by opposing these parts of the administration proposal:

— Speeding federal approval of new drugs in an effort to put possibly life-saving drugs on the market sooner. It now takes years to get the drugs on the market.

— Allowing drug manufacturers to produce and export products that aren't approved for sale in the United States but which may benefit other nations, particularly in the developing nations.

ducing and exporting products that aren't approved for sale in the United States but which may benefit other nations, particularly in the developing nations.

Hints from Heloise

DEAR HELOISE: I was reading in your column one night about a poor woman who told how to crack ice for her husband's vacuum bottle for ice water.

during the hot months for something cold to drink.

I think you have just solved the problem of how to keep them out of the fridge — Heloise

Well, at last I found a way! I don't crack it at all! (One would never even try if the ice would fit through the bottle top.)

Until last year I was a poor woman just like that — always trying to find an easier way to crack that darn ice.

Well, at last I found a way! I don't crack it at all! (One would never even try if the ice would fit through the bottle top.)

Now I fill a tall plastic tumbler to the brim with ice cubes, then pour enough boiling water over the ice cubes to cover them. Stir. By the time the ice has melted enough to fit through the bottle top, the water has become ice water. Use that in the vacuum bottle.

With canning season almost here, a clean knee high nylon stocking makes a great bag for straining fruit for jelly. Just cut off the foot and tie a knot.

And the stocking is so easy to rinse out and use again — N. Snesak

DEAR HELOISE: With canning season almost here, a clean knee high nylon stocking makes a great bag for straining fruit for jelly. Just cut off the foot and tie a knot.

In case you're wondering how I got this great idea, it was because I overslept one morning and didn't have time to crack ice cubes into chips. What a drag!

THIS COLUMN is written for you... the homemaker. If you have a hint or a problem write to Heloise, 235 E. 45th St., New York, N.Y. 10017. It was a case of making my husband late for work or giving him a vacuum with no ice water. So I grabbed a tumbler, filled it, etc.

I started to pour the water down the drain the first time I latched on to this Heloise-like idea (see how smart you've made us!) expecting the water to be hot. Some of the water accidentally poured over my fingers. It was ice cold! As some will say, "It had ice cubes in it, what would you expect?"

Now I never fix the vacuum bottle any other way. — SR. May Well, begorra and by golly, I thought you might be joshing, but it really works! — Heloise

HINTS FROM HIM

DEAR HELOISE: My patent leather shoes were ruined when the toe of the shoe became damaged with three long scratches that exposed the leather under the white coating.

I developed a method of making a perfect repair. With some very fine sandpaper, I buffed the damaged areas to make them smooth. I next used liquid paper correction fluid to restore the white finish.

When dry, I restored the gloss finish with some clear nail polish.

My wife, who urged me not to try the repair, had to admit that it turned out perfect. — Homer G. Klene

DEAR HELOISE: I have a hint for those who, like me, love to go barefoot at the beach.

We get what looks like black oil or tar on our legs and feet.

My parents found out that if you spray a little pre-wash spray on a paper towel or cloth and rub, the tar or oil disappears.

I hope this hint helps others. — Margaret Felio

DEAR HELOISE: To keep the kids out of the refrigerator for cold drinks all summer, put ice cubes in an ice bucket or a small plastic foam ice chest.

Set it on the kitchen counter with a pitcher of their favorite drink and let everyone help himself, herself, oh phooey, let everyone help everyone else! — R. K.

Wrong Pair Netted In Manhunt

DURANT, Okla. (AP) — A case of mistaken identity led officers on a manhunt Wednesday night and Thursday for two Oklahoma prison escapees who are suspects in a Texas killing and abduction, authorities said.

Two Durant area men told sheriff's deputies here Thursday afternoon that their car was the one being sought by authorities as the vehicle suspected of carrying escapees Michael Lancaster and Claude Eugene Dennis, said sheriff's dispatcher Olivia Barton.

She said the men, Bobby Mullins and Randall Buckner, told officers they were the men who had stopped at a convenience store at nearby Milburn Wednesday night.

Earnest Moore, operator of the convenience store, touched off a massive search in southern Oklahoma and northern Texas for the escapees when he notified authorities that the men who entered his store looked like sketches he had seen of the escapees.

Mullins and Buckner were driven to the store late Thursday afternoon so Moore could confirm they were the men he had seen and could also identify their car.

The Highway Patrol later said the confirmation was made.

Both the Bryan County Sheriff's Department and the Oklahoma Highway Patrol called off their searches for the escapees after Mullins and Buckner explained what had happened.

It was not determined if Mullins and Buckner were in a car that was chased by the police chief of Colbert in Bryan County before dawn Thursday.

But Chief Herman Hitchcock and another officer began chasing the car because it matched the description of the car Mullins and Buckner were riding in — the car believed to be carrying Lancaster and Dennis.

The chief was unable to catch the car in a brief chase, he said.

Dozens of law officers from Oklahoma and northern Texas sealed off the Colbert area after the chase, and double roadblocks were placed on every road leading out of Bryan County.

Another reported possible sighting of the escapees — at a motel robbery in Shamrock, Tex., about two hours before the Colbert chase — also didn't pan out, Shamrock Police Chief George Hooten said.

Hooten said he believes local residents were responsible for the robbery.

In addition, officers said, it would be impossible for the same car to be in Shamrock and Colbert within two hours, because of the distance factor.

Dennis and Lancaster are being sought in connection with last week's killing of Bobby Spencer, a convenience store operator from Denison, Tex., and with the abduction of Spencer's wife, who later escaped.

Dennis, 35, and Lancaster, 25, have been at large since April 23, when they tunneled out of the Oklahoma state prison at McAlester.

Dennis was serving a 50-year sentence for a manslaughter conviction, and Lancaster was serving a 25-year term for an armed robbery conviction.

Louisiana Troopers Nab Jail Escapees

BOSSIER CITY, Louisiana (AP) — Two South Texas jail escapees, believed responsible for the abduction of a San Antonio man, were captured Thursday after a chase and gunfire exchange with law enforcement officers.

Louisiana State Trooper Randy Patton said three shots were fired as 10 to 15 officers chased down the two men, armed with two pistols and a deer rifle.

No one was hurt.

Patton said Eulalio Rubio, Jr., 22, and Terry Dean McBride, 19, were spotted after 11 a.m. in a car stolen in Louisiana. He said the escapees sped down Louisiana Highway 71 before turning onto a dirt road about 20 miles south of Bossier City.

They abandoned the car and "hit the woods, so the officers took out on foot after them," he said.

One escapee was caught in the middle of a bayou, and the other one was flushed out of the brush later. The trooper said one officer fired at the fugitives, who fired back once. Another shot was fired into the air as the second man was apprehended.

Patton said that the men were armed with a .38-caliber revolver, a nine-millimeter automatic pistol and a .30-.30 rifle.

They were being held in the Bossier Parish jail in Benton.

Authorities attempted to learn where the pair had been since their escape

Tuesday night from the Calhoun County Jail in Port Lavaca.

They escaped by hitting a jailer over the head with a mop handle and threatening the dispatcher with a butcher knife.

Early Wednesday morning, two men abducted a Southwestern Bell supervisor as he left a San Antonio restaurant and forced him to drive them to Waco.

Odell Singleton, 52, told police he drove the 185 miles from the Alamo City to Waco on Interstate 35 with one man in the front seat and the other in the back. The men fit the description of the two escapees.

In Waco, the men made Singleton lie on the floorboard of his car while they fled on foot.

He called police from a nearby restaurant.

Electronics Firm Enhances Television Sound

NEW YORK (AP) — Bernie Mitchell, president of U.S. Pioneer Electronics Corp., fiddled with the controls of his company's latest gadget: a radio that channels television sound through a home stereo system for better fidelity. "We think there are a lot of people tired of listening to the tinny sound of their television's three-inch speaker who will buy this FM receiver," he said. "It will make a gunshot sound like a gunshot, La Boheme like an opera. 'Lawrence of Arabia' will sound like you're in a theater."

people will spend $250 for the TV tuner is based mostly on gut instinct. But his track record for selling high-fidelity equipment is impressive. Since he took the helm of the Japanese-owned company in 1973, Pioneer's sales have surged from $48 million a year to $177 million last year, making it the largest company by far in the booming, $1.6 billion-a-year industry. Production of the new TV tuner began at 500 a month, now is six times that and "probably by Christmas will be 5,000-6,000 a month," he says. Mitchell, a 43-year-old economist with a handle-bar mustache who also is a director of the New Jersey symphony, said he expects Pioneer's business to grow by 20 percent this year, fueled by a $4 million advertising campaign that will or went into aerospace. In Japan the best went into hi-fi. The U.S. hi-fi industry was fueled by people bored with other companies who had shifted into it. It was a much more organized process in Ja-

"A motor is a motor. There's not much you can do to improve it," Mitchell said with a shrug.

But problems aside, Mitchell said there still are 68 million U.S. households without high-fidelity sound systems—a tremendous potential market. And within a few years, he predicted, "a confluence of new technology will rapidly become one, including large-screen TV, video recordings, records and tapes."

"By 1983 or 84, a consumer will be able to sit in his living room and watch a concert and see it better than from the 10th row at Madison Square Garden. Mick Jagger will look more than six feet tall. The marriage of U.S. computer technology and Japanese hi-fi technology will

He has pushed his parent company, which last year had world-wide sales of $843 million, to give the U.S. subsidiary nearly complete independence. Before he took over, Tokyo shipped whatever it wanted to U.S. Pioneer, regardless of whether the American branch could sell the product and to design products specifically for the U.S. market.

Tokyo has balked, however, at Mitchell's desire to expand U.S. Pioneer through acquisitions.

About half of Pioneer's production for the U.S. market, 90 percent of which now comes from Japan, will be made in the United States in five years, Mitchell said.

"It will make a gunshot sound like a gunshot, La Boheme like an opera."

heavily stress television sports. Mitchell was one of the first to see the potential market for high-fidelity sound systems for the home, which became economically feasible in the 1960s with the development of solid-state electronic technology. He joined Pioneer in 1969 when its annual business was only $7 million and began pushing the company into mass marketing.

"There were some people who were against that," Mitchell said in an interview. "They said, 'My God, the great unwashed will buy high fidelity and then it won't be fun anymore.' In 1969, hi-fi was a hobby and a club that appealed only to people sophisticated enough to understand the technology."

American audio manufacturers were slower than the Japanese to take advantage of new computer industry and other electronic research. And he contends the Japanese had another advantage. "In the U.S. the best electronics graduates went to IBM and got into computers pan."

But the Japanese manufacturers have had to remain nimble to maintain their ranking, he said. Inflation in Japan has meant that companies must develop new technologies to offset chronic price rises of more than 10 percent a year. And in the past year and a half or so the American dollar has been shrinking against the Japanese yen, which makes Japanese products more expensive and less competitive in the U.S.

The result is that Mitchell has been forced to steadily increase his prices.

A popular tape deck jumped $75 in price in the past 12 months to $750 and Mitchell said he expects another $25 increase in October. Pioneer and its 3,000 retail outlets make little on speakers introduced two years ago at about $300. Engineering advances have less impact on productivity and costs in products like speakers, tape decks or record turntables than with products based more on circuitry, such as FM receivers.

"They said, 'My God, the great unwashed will buy high fidelity and it won't be fun anymore.'" make some marvelous children."

Mitchell is an intense man. The face of his watch has two dials, one for New York time and the other for Los Angeles, where Pioneer has a facility. He flies to Tokyo twice a year to confer with his bosses and they travel to the U.S. each six months to meet with him.

The reason is that the savings that in the past has been available by making electronics in Japan will shrink as the dollar loses value against the yen. And U.S. technology will become increasingly important in the audio industry as developments in the computer industry are applied to sound systems.

Ground Broken For Office Building

Sentry Savings Association held groundbreaking ceremonies Thursday for a $1.5 million Sentry Plaza Office Building, which is scheduled to house the firm's Lubbock operation and to provide office space on a lease basis. Ray J. Diekemper Jr. conducted the brief program at the building site at Slide Road and South Loop 289. Clark Self Sr., founder of the organization, attended.

The four-story office building is expected to be completed in one year. Preliminary work on Sentry Plaza, a 25,000-square-foot retail shopping center, has begun, with completion set in eight months.

Albertson's has contracted for a portion of the tract to construct a 55,000-square-foot grocery store and family center facility.

AIRCRAFT CARRIER

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Carter administration has disclosed it is no longer opposed to buying any kind of new aircraft carrier this year and will go along if Congress votes for a conventionally powered one.

Resource Board Urges Advance Drought Planning

"Water will be served only if asked for" and "Pay ten cents for a glass of water."

Recent droughts in California and other Western states prompted restaurants to post these signs, although they were just one of many visual impacts of a drought on municipal and domestic water management.

One obvious solution to urban drought problems would be for city managers to increase supply and reduce consumption. That, according to experts, is easier said than done.

The only other solution would be to plan in advance for a drought. Even then, officials of the Water Resources Center at Texas Tech University are concerned that there is little or no documentation on the various planning alternatives available to city managers. In the absence of advance planning it is quite likely that water management during dry periods may not be based on sound economic or engineering principles.

Dr. Lloyd V. Urban, a civil engineer associated with the Water Resources Center, says that during past droughts decisions regarding water resources management have been based largely on intuition and individual experience, instead of on scientifically developed information.

"As a result, many decisions have been made which have yielded unsatisfactory results from a timely, economic or engineering standpoint," Urban explains.

"The problem," says Dr. Ralph H. Ramsey, also of the civil engineering faculty, "is even more serious in the semi-arid Great Plains area where little effort has been made to develop a program to prevent drought damage."

City governments, the experts say, usually respond to a drought, but they are seldom prepared for it. This was demonstrated recently in the western United States where vast urban areas experienced prolonged drought conditions.

City managers initially react by exploring ways of conserving water and increasing supply.

"If that is achieved," Urban says, "most drought-related problems for urban areas can be solved."

The difficulty arises in selecting approaches for conserving water and increasing supply. Water conservation can be accomplished either by voluntary support from the community or by an ordinance. Besides these two options, there exist the questions of how much conservation is necessary and what the impact of water conservation is on city's revenue structure, Ramsey says.

In increasing the water supply, city managers have to determine how many additional wells will be needed, cost of these wells, of ground water rights, or emergency pipelines and other expenses.

"The absence of a coordinated drought policy is also complicated by the enormous political, legal, economical and environmental constraints on municipal water management," explains Dr. J. Eleonora Sabadell, consultant to the International Programs and the Problem Analysis Office of the National Science Foundation.

She maintains that these constraints arise from the overlapping, complex and conflicting interests of the diverse water users and the intricate water system developed over the years by the combination of private and public activities.

Sabadell's comments were included in the April issue of the "ICASALS Newsletter" published by Texas Tech's International Center for Arid and Semi-Arid Land Studies (ICASALS).

Sabadell lists several effects of water management during droughts in the absence of advance planning. They include: industrial and urban growth or non-growth policies; wastewater reclamation activities; financial feasibility and public acceptance of more dams, canals and other water works; change in legislation to guarantee minimum levels of water quality for in legislation to guarantee minimum levels of water quality for diverse usages and environmental concerns, impacts on energy budgets of diverse drought-related policies; and the economical and financial effects of conservation practices and changes of rate structures.

"New approaches to drought-effects mitigation will have to take into account not only primary but also secondary impacts of water shortages and the interactions between multiple water needs, schemes," Sabadell says.

Police Equipage Provides Hobby

By GERRY BURTON
Avalanche-Journal Staff

James Morrison really didn't want the Turkish policeman's badge, but he traded his SP armband to keep the man happy.

He should have realized what he had when a California peace officer offered to trade him five others for it and let Morrison pick out the five.

In the hobby begun soon after, Morrison has collected 1,900 different pieces, even a few Turkish badges, but never again has he come across that particular badge, which was one of very few.

Today, Senior Master Sgt. Morrison, superintendent of police at Reese Air Force Base, knows all about the rare, rarer and rarest bits of police paraphernalia from around the globe.

A part of his collection is on exhibit at the South Plains Mall as part of Armed Forces Week and will be on view later at a Lubbock library.

A case full of uniforms, helmets, badges, whistles, etc. fascinates all visitors to the Security Police headquarters at Reese.

South Plains peace officers, he noted, are a bit reluctant to add to his collection until they see its scope and use.

By far the largest number of items comes from Britain and ranges back "a couple of hundred years."

His favorite, naturally, is a bobby hat with his own number making him an honorary member of the London police department.

He doesn't, however, have his own badge of authority, which puts a man on duty.

American tourists, Morrison noted, are often concerned at the sight of a British bobby bending his elbow at the neighborhood pub. The badge of authority explains it all.

When the bobby enters the pub for his own purpose, he simply slips the black and white striped armband in his pocket and is off duty. Back on the street, it is back on his sleeve and he is back on duty.

The British bobby looks the same strolling down the street or facing a riot situation. The difference is in the steel under his helmet and weapons not readily seen.

"They don't give the appearance of looking for a fight."

A bobby's horse also is a member of the department so any toes he might step on while moving into a riot situation cannot be used in court.

With the horse a regular police member he cannot be considered a weapon of the bobby on his back.

A "couple of bobbys" regularly add to Morrison's collection by mailing what they have discovered while he reciprocates from wherever around the globe he is stationed.

The first badge came as a friendly trade in Turkey. Going to Alaska with the five he got for it, he discovered the world of paraphernalia collecting and had obtained more than 60 by the time he returned from that duty.

Since then he has discovered a worldwide hobby going strong, a hobby that years back could have saved him the rare first badge with its raft of information.

Rights Of Officers Possibly Violated

HOUSTON (AP) — Special Watergate and Koreagate prosecutor Leon Jaworski said Thursday the press may have jeopardized the rights of several Houston police officers who are under investigation in the shooting death of a teenager last year.

Jaworski, speaking to the Houston Press Club, said publication of remarks by Police Chief Harry Caldwell outlining "what he conceived the facts to be regarding one of the officers" allegedly involved and other comments on the case could have been delayed until the federal grand jury had finished its investigation.

"Why have grand juries, why have trials, why have constitutional guarantees, why have a presumption of innocence, when, with one fell swoop, all of this officer's safeguards are impaired — if not seriously damaged — by the unfortunate release (by Caldwell) and circulation of this investigatory report not arrived at under judicial guidance," Jaworski said.

Randall Webster, 17, of Shreveport, La., was shot to death by police in February 1977 after a high-speed chase. One officer has said that a gun was planted on the scene to make it look as though Webster was armed.

A state grand jury last year no-billed the officer who shot Webster. A federal grand jury has been investigating the case but has returned no indictments.

Jaworski said constitutional rights — including those of the press and individuals — "would be better served if in such instances the press refrained from carrying glaring front page stories of investigations and alleged facts until after the grand jury completed its investigation."

The Houston attorney said he recognized it was difficult to preserve a free press and constitutional rights of individuals at the same time.

"But a joint decision to self-restraint and fair-mindedness by the news media as well as those involved in the administration of justice can accomplish much to avoid the constitutional conflict in question," he said.

Caldwell's published comments were contained in reports the police chief is required to provide to the city Civil Service Commission citing reasons for dismissal of officers. He fired five officers involved in the Webster case, and one resigned.

It is not clear whether such reports are considered public record if no appeals of dismissal are filed.

Manuscript Of Mass Goes To President

WASHINGTON (AP) — Gotthel Fischer, a West German composer, presented President Carter Thursday with the original manuscript of a "Peace Mass" he wrote for the president.

"To have a Mass for peace dedicated to me is indeed a great honor," Carter said. "I can't say I have earned it, but I hope that in the future at least I can." Carter said during the brief meeting in the Oval Office.

Fischer, head of the 1,200-member Fischer Choir, also gave Carter recordings of the Mass in English and German.

The Mass was dedicated to Carter for his "courageous and devoted efforts for the cause of peace throughout the world."

Zoning Board Approves Bar's Expansion Plan

By PAULA TILKER
Avalanche-Journal Staff

Despite nearby residents' written objections, the Zoning Board of Adjustment Thursday granted a bar owner's request for permission to expand his tavern.

After weighing the objections to noise and lights supposedly emanating from the Honky Tonk at 4815 Ave. H., board members unanimously agreed to owner Ron Odom's request for a variance to allow the building to be expanded 20 feet east.

The variance, which was granted by the then-board members several years ago when the building was owned by someone else, will mean the building will rest on a property line separating the lot from a residential area.

According to the zoning code, 200 feet are supposed to separate bars from residential neighborhoods. But because the business already existed in Odom's case, the board decided, it would matter little if the addition were built.

Also, Odom told the bar, his business shares a common wall with an adjacent business that extends to the rear property line.

And, he added, parking is no problem because he has an agreement with nearby businesses to use their lots for customer parking during the evening.

The board also allowed mobile homes to be used as dwellings in two separate cases.

Tomas Rivera Jr., who won permission two years ago to use a mobile home at 510 53rd to house an elderly parent, received a two-year extension on his special exception. Board members decided that the medical hardship that existed in Rivera's case before continues and that therefore the exception should be continued.

And F.E. Stewart received a special exception for a mobile home north of 78th Street and about 173 feet west of Magnolia Avenue after he told the board he requires constant medical supervision. His sister lives next to the mobile home site, he said.

Calvary Baptist Church won permission to build a temporary worship building at 84th Street and Aberdeen Avenue. The building, which will be used for church use about two years while the church relocates from its downtown site, eventually will be converted into a duplex and sold.

The nearby area already is zoned for duplexes, according to zoning administrator Jerrel Northcutt.

The board okayed a request from White's Pump Service & Supply for permission to add a canopy over already installed gasoline pumps at 1550 34th St. The approval was tied to the site plan presented to the board.

James D. Borthwick, representing R. Burl Ham, received a fencing requirement variance for a combination convenience store and automatic car wash at 502 50th St.

Borthwick promised the board that if nearby neighbors complain about noise or traffic he will have a screening fence built along their property line.

By law, a fence is supposed to be built to separate commercial and residential sites. Borthwick asked for the waiver, saying he wants to use the alley for access to the car wash.

Joe Stanley & Son also won approval for variance on a requirement for non-access on an alley west of Avenue T and about 120 feet south of 4th Street.

Board members okayed Stanley's request to use the alley for access to mini-warehouses he plans to build on his property line to screen the lot from nearby apartments, he told the board, adding there would be a break in the fence for traffic.

The board also approved:

— Frank Allen's request for a parking variance at a John Knox Village building at 4111 17th St. The variance will allow the retirement home to delete 23 parking spaces by landscaping a park area. The board tied its approval to a stipulation that the variance would continue only as long as a life care facility is on the site.

— K.S. Blackford's request for a special exception to allow expansion of a legal non-conforming use at 2102 30th St.

— Highland Hospital's request for a parking variance to allow spaces in a nearby church's lot to be used for hospital employees in a planned expansion.

Redlining Of Aging Areas Hit By Federal Loan Agency

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government Thursday prohibited lenders from writing off aging, big-city neighborhoods as too risky for mortgage loans.

The Federal Home Loan Bank Board, by a 3-0 vote, ruled that federally chartered savings and loan associations cannot discriminate in lending because of the age or location of a building.

Following up on civil rights and equal credit laws, the board also banned discrimination in lending because of the applicant's race, sex, marital status or age.

The final regulations are intended to channel some money that is spent on suburban building back into the big cities.

At a White House news conference on Nov. 9, Vice President Walter F. Mondale unveiled the proposals, calling them "the strongest action ever taken" to prevent redlining, which is discrimination in lending in urban neighborhoods.

Savings and loans, vigorously opposing the proposals, said they would be forced to make unsound loans.

In accompanying guidelines, the board said "other physical characteristics of the dwelling, such as its remaining economic life or exposure to environmental hazards, are proper underwriting considerations."

It also said that despite the ban against age discrimination, an elderly applicant's source of income and chances for paying off the debt could be considered.

However, the Federal Reserve Board, which regulates numerous banks, had argued that judges might ignore the guidelines and require risky loans.

The loan board chairman, Robert H. McKinney, said Thursday, "I want to stress that the board is not asking the industry to make unsafe or unsound loans. We firmly believe there are many loans to be made in urban areas and they can be made on a prudent basis."

The board's biggest problem was in deciding how to find out whether loan associations were discriminating.

Lenders will be required to keep a chart with the age, race, sex and marital status of each applicant. If the applicant refuses the information, the lender is required to estimate it if possible.

McKinney said the chart would not prove discrimination but would turn investigators toward possible violators and be a tool for management, also.

Board member Garth Marston said he feared the chart would place expensive paperwork requirements on lenders.

The board will consider penalties next week ranging from a cease and desist order to restitution to victims of discrimination.

When Liza Quits, So Does 'The Act'

NEW YORK (AP) — There's "no one else like her," so on Broadway "The Act" will close at the Majestic Theater when Liza Minnelli's contract expires this summer.

"There's no other big star who can handle it," said Leo Stern, press agent for the show. "Do you know of anyone else who can handle 11 songs and dances — at the same time?"

So "The Act," which played Los Angeles, San Francisco and Chicago before opening here Oct. 29, will officially close after its performance July 1.

Miss Minnelli decided against renewing her one-year contract because "it's awfully hard, it was an awful lot of work," said her manager, Deanna Wenble.

Miss Minnelli, who cancelled several dozen performances of "The Act" during a bout with the flu last winter, has planned a month-long vacation in July, possibly in Europe.

She then will begin rehearsals here for a new night club act. The new act is still in the planning stages, but Miss Minnelli is expected to take it to clubs across the country and then to Europe, her manager said.

County To Initiate Computer System In October

By BOB CAMPBELL
Avalanche-Journal Staff

Come October, Lubbock County Court-house will be computerized. Terminals in the tax office will be hooked up to a big IBM computer upstairs on the fourth floor, and ad valorem tax rolls and voter registration will be handled on the new county-owned system.

A $98,700 project converting 2,300 square feet of storage space into the data processing department is about half done. It will be finished in mid- or late July to the great relief of county workers, especially those on the upper floors, who have been pestered to distraction in recent days by jackhammers chewing holes in the floor for the computer hookups.

Workmen also will start installing a $317,950 IBM Model 125, using the IBM 370 system, this summer.

Data processing director Bill McCullough said contractor C.B. Thompson is on schedule to complete the 120-day contract by late July.

"It seems to be going along pretty good," McCullough said. "They're fixing to extend the lobby. They've got a lot of the brickwork done, a lot of the framing and most of the ductwork for heating and cooling."

The workers are extending the corridor of the existing lobby north for possible future growth.

The remodeling is going on in the courthouse extension that was finished in 1968, and the computer department is taking about a third of the space which was being used only for storage.

One possible use considered for the rest of the space is to house a new district court if one is ever created by the legislature.

McCullough said the computer room will have its own air conditioning powered through a private line to the transformer in the courthouse basement. A computer gives off a lot of heat, he explained, and needs to be kept in a room 70 degrees or cooler.

The plan is for the big metal brain to be plugged in and running by August.

After a month or tuning it up and practicing on it, McCullough and the three other department staff members to be hired will be ready to take on the property tax rolls and voter registration Oct. 1.

McCullough, working by himself now, expects to hire a programmer, an operator and a receptionist-data processing coordinator by Aug. 1.

In expectation of the new computer, Lubbock County has only a nine-month contract this year with Computer Services of the Southwest for its ad valorem tax processing.

The county will start doing its own automobile registration omnibus tax processing next February and begin handling real property indexing for the county clerk this fall.

County commissioners decided to pay

$358,500 for the computer with all its equipment over five years on a lease-purchase agreement when Auditor Dale Gallimore told them the county would save about $40,000 that way.

The saving will come in money drawing bank interest over the years rather than $317,950 of it being paid for a straight cash purchase.

McCullough said the system probably will be expanded and improved as the demands on it increase and that employees and offices probably will be added to the computer department.

Eight terminals will be put in initially: one in the department for programming and development; three in the tax office for the tax rolls; one in the tax office for voter registration; and three in the tax office for auto registration.

McCullough said the terminals may also be used by county offices other than the tax office as the need arises.

Although Lubbock County will no longer have to contract its computer work, county officials do not expect the changeover to save much money. They justify it in having their own system easily available and in the wide range of services it will offer now and as the county grows and demands more of county government.

"We're not going to save any money," Gallimore said, "but it's not going to cost much more than what we're currently paying for computer contracts. We will have a lot more services out of it."

The county paid $170,951 for outside computer work last year and got $19,900 in rebates from computer firms for a net expense of $151,051, the auditor said.

Including the nine-month contract for property taxes, it will pay $151,500 this year.

Gallimore said exact costs for beginning the new department have not been figured for this year.

The contracts are $91,500 with Computer Services of the Southwest for property taxes, $40,000 with Data 2000 for auto registration, $12,500 with Lubbock National Bank for voter registration and $7,500 with Lubbock Manufacturing Inc. for real property indexing.

McCullough said the rolls are mostly in "PL-1" computer "language" and will require only minor modification.

Conference On Cardiology Set At Tech

Coronary artery by-pass surgery will be the major topic of a cardiology conference scheduled for Saturday by the Texas Tech School of Medicine.

Seminars to provide updates on management concepts in cardiology will take place at the Health Sciences Center Hospital. A portion of the conference will be devoted to pediatric heart problems as well as to the use of ultra sound in detecting heart damage.

An authority on coronary artery disease, John F. Williams Jr., M.D., is guest speaker for the conference, "Current Trends in Cardiology." Dr. Williams, professor of medicine and chief of the cardiology unit at the University of Texas Medical Branch at Galveston, will speak on "Medical Aspects of Coronary Artery Disease."

Conference faculty will be drawn from the School of Medicine. Questions about the conference, sponsored by the American Heart Association, Tech Office of Continuing Education and School of Medicine, may be directed to Dr. John Menchaca of Tech's department of pediatrics or Dr. John Menchaca of Tech's department of pediatrics or to the Office of Continuing Education.

Human Resource Agency Seeking Public Comment

The Texas Department of Human Resources (TDHR) is seeking comment on the social services provided by the agency at two public hearings this month.

The first hearing will be in Amarillo Monday and a Lubbock hearing will be held Thursday from 1:30-5 p.m. in the South Plains Electric Coop auditorium, 110 N. Amarillo Road.

The proposed annual plan for 1979 which describes the services TDHR will offer, determines who is eligible, how many will be served and how much it will cost, will be discussed at the hearings. Copies of the plan, called the Title XX Comprehensive Annual Services Program Plan, are available at local TDHR offices.

Title XX of the Social Security Act is the major source of federal funds for social services administered by TDHR and comments received in the hearings will be considered in formulating the final plan to be effective Oct. 1.

Written comments on the proposed plan may be submitted by June 14 to Title XX Information Center, TDHR, John H. Reagan Building, Austin, Texas, 78701.

Ranching Center's Horse Crowd-Wise

Matilda is a good old girl. She'd have to be. Screaming, excited youngsters mob her every time she trots into view with her mane streaming and her sorrel tail flowing almost to the surry she pulls through the Ranching Heritage Center.

There is no lack of spirit and pride about Matilda. She is simply very careful of those on foot. When trotting toward a crowd, she automatically slows to a walk until they part and let her go at a snail's pace among them. If they do not part to let her through, she comes to a full stop with no pulling on the reins.

Once through the throng, Matilda steps up the pace to an eye-pleasing trot to continue her rounds.

She is the latest bit of realistic atmosphere to come to the outdoor ranch museum, adding more authenticity to buildings restored from the ranching past.

When not hitched to the surry, she can be seen in her corral accepting the oohs of the visitor as her total due.

Matilda was trained to the surry, which itself is about as old as ranching in West Texas, at the Ozona ranch of her owner, W. L. "Bud" Harrison. Harrison would hitch her to the surry and take her into town to thrill the folks on Sunday afternoons while enjoying the ride itself.

They also made most of the parades around.

Matilda, now 12, is on loan to the outdoor museum through September.

With costumed hosts and hostesses making the museum come alive for visitors from 2 p.m. to 5 p.m. on Sundays, she adds just the right touch — a real horse in the cowboy world preserved at the center.

Gas Danger Evacuees Lose Emergency Digs

ATHENS (AP) — About 100 residents forced to evacuate their homes because of a leaking gas well were told Thursday to evacuate their hotel rooms because of a weekend convention.

The Spanish Trace Inn at Athens said 26 rooms now occupied by evacuees from the Walton area would be needed Friday and Saturday nights to accommodate a credit union convention.

Ron Knickerbocker, inn manager, said, "We have had reservations for three months. It involves 26 rooms of evacuees. The families can return to the Spanish Trace Sunday if they are not able to return to their homes."

Owners of the gas well, NFC of Oklahoma City, Okla., arranged more rooms at the Sheraton Inn in Tyler, 36 miles away, Knickerbocker said.

The National Guard opened its armory and the Red Cross supplied blankets and cots for those who did not get rooms. Two schools in the vicinity of the well forewent classes Thursday on advice from the rig owners as preparations were made to cap the wellhole, which is leaking deadly hydrogen sulphide gas.

Company officials said Thursday there were no plans to expand the three-mile radius evacuation area but Department of Public Safety officers closed off the area up to four miles away from the well.

Martin's Mill School and Canton schools closed. Canton officials said NFC telephoned them Wednesday night advising them to do so.

An NFC news release said the "immediate area of the well" has been closed as a precaution should it become necessary to extend the evacuation radius.

NFC Chief Engineer Bill Egg said the well would be capped by installing a new set of valves known as a blowout preventer. This would replace the blowout preventer already on the well.

NFC also announced Thursday that an evacuee assistance center would be set up Friday morning at the First National Bank in Athens.

The center will answer questions and help solve problems of residents, who have been kept away from their homes for a week now.

Larry Brandt, NFC executive vice president, said the center will settle small claims if they can be documented.

Delinquency Studied By School Trustees

school program for migrant children.

—Transferred the responsibility for radio station KOHM, the laboratory for the district's electronics course, from Monterey High to Dunbar. The electronics program is being moved to Dunbar as part of that school's integration-related "magnet complex."

—Appointed Carolyn Lanier to the city-school tax equalization board. She replaces Roy Middleton, who resigned from the tax panel due to conflicts with his business schedule.

—Presented Kay Geiger, O.L. Slaton Junior High teacher, with a certificate for being named among the nation's top 40 geography teachers.

The advisory committee on juvenile delinquency was appointed following a juvenile justice seminar sponsored by the Junior League of Lubbock in November.

The committee said the school district can help reduce juvenile delinquency by "strengthening its ability to provide every student with opportunities for success in school; strengthening its ability to provide students with resources for fulfilling their emotional needs in lawful ways; strengthening the participation of parents in the overall program of the schools and the individual school experiences of their children; and improving students' potential for perpetuating healthy family environments."

In the area of academics, the report gives 16 suggestions for helping students find success in the classroom. These include lowering pupil-teacher ratios, stressing "positive reinforcement," continuing programs in special education and parenting, and exposing students to career choices.

The report suggested beefing up counseling services, especially at the junior high level. The committee urged the district to "establish the policy that in every case where a student is dropped from a program (academic or extracurricular), the student will be contacted by a counselor for a conference to consider other opportunities available to him."

The report recommends that students be more involved in school decision-making and that the district expand extracurricular opportunities — especially intramural athletics.

Finally, the committee said the district could reduce juvenile delinquency by improving parent-school cooperation. The report suggested keeping parents better informed by newsletters and PTA programs and encouraging parent volunteers.

The district may also "encourage local businesses to provide time off without loss of pay to their employees for the purpose of attending parent-teacher conferences," the report said.

"Juvenile delinquency is an area in which the schools have a significant opportunity to teach by example that society cannot turn its back on difficult problems; that it must be willing to try, mindful to assess old approaches, diligent to seek new approaches, willing to fail in part without being defeated in total, and patient to succeed," the committee said.

The advisory panel was chaired by E.G. Nunez, principal of Matthews Junior High. Members included Mrs. Berry, who organized the Junior League seminar; Jan Campbell, member of the Lubbock County Citizens Juvenile Advisory Committee; Dr. Evelyn Montgomery, Texas Tech University anthropology professor; George Nelson, a prominent attorney; Patti Pyle, also of the county's juvenile advisory group; Walter Rinehart, Alderson Junior High principal; and Anita Taylor, president of the Junior League.

Davis Court Woes Piling Up, Marathon Divorce Trial Slated

FORT WORTH (AP) — T. Cullen Davis, freed last fall after spending more money on his murder trial than most Americans will ever earn, faces still more legal entanglements this summer in what may be the state's most complex, high octane divorce case.

Davis, 44, was acquitted following his nearly $4 million trial in Amarillo — the state's longest and costliest — yet faces another murder charge, two attempted murder charges, and a divorce action involving millions of dollars.

"We live our lives just one day at a time," said Karen Master, the blonde, 29-year-old divorcee with whom Davis lives. Across town, Davis' estranged wife, Priscilla, 36, presides over the couple's posh $6 million hilltop mansion. She seeks not only the museum-like home but a chunk of Davis' financial empire centered around Kendavis Industries.

"Cullen goes about his business just like anybody else. What else can you do? We rarely talk about it," Mrs. Master said.

A horror house of problems have beset Davis for the past few years. He moved from the mansion, and a bitter divorce suit followed. Last fall, a jury found him innocent of murdering his wife's 12-year-old daughter, Andrea Wilborn. The girl was shot to death in the mansion basement Aug. 2, 1976.

Mrs. Davis and her live-in lover, a 6-foot-7 giant named Stan Farr, arrived home around midnight to find bloody handprints, the girl's body and "a man dressed all in black" lurking behind a door. Mrs. Davis was seriously wounded; Farr, 31, was shot to death; and a family friend, Gus Gavrel, 23, was paralyzed by a gunshot.

With a gaping bullet hole in her chest, Mrs. Davis said she raced across the moonlight-bathed estate to a neighbor's house, where she sought help and accused Davis of being the man in black wearing a woman's wig who shot her.

A few hours later Davis was arrested at the home of Mrs. Master. She later served as a key defense witness, providing Davis with the alibi that he was asleep in her bed when the killings occurred across town.

TEXAS TYCOON STILL HAVING PROBLEMS — Fort Worth millionaire T. Cullen Davis, left, was acquitted in 1977, in the longest and costliest trial in Texas history, of murdering his wife's 12-year-old daughter, Andrea Wilborn. Davis still faces horse" Haynes led Davis' high-powered panel of lawyers who successfully showed the jury there was a reasonable doubt that Davis was the killer. Haynes paraded before the jury a battery of witnesses who suggested the shootings were the outgrowth of a drug traffickers' dispute. Other witnesses described the Davis mansion as a palace of exotic drugs and sex parties peopled by members of a shadowy night culture.

Davis has not yet been tried on charges of murdering Farr, and wounding Mrs. Davis and Gavrel. His many-times-delayed divorce suit is scheduled for trial Aug. 14.

Tarrant County Assistant District Attorney Joe Shannon said no decision has been reached on when or if to prosecute Davis on the other charges.

"Certainly, cost is a consideration," he said. "It's a factor but it's peripheral. We wouldn't want to do it if you couldn't win."

He said prosecutors are anxious to sit in on the divorce case to learn of any new evidence which could be helpful in the criminal cases. "We're still getting dribbles of information," he said.

Davis is presently free under $650,000 bond. He was jailed without bond from the time of his arrest until end of the trial.

"We talk about the future," said Mrs.

Master, whose two small children share the home with her and Davis. "No, Cullen doesn't sit around biting his nails. He brings his work home, spreads it out here on the table, and opens his mail."

Davis, 44, is co-czar of Kendavis Industries, a conglomerate umbrella of diverse companies whose business takes him around the globe in a private jet. Mrs. Master, an eye-catching blonde with a penchant for chic clothes and Cadillacs, makes no effort to hide the ice-berg diamond ring she wears.

"We wanted to buy some furniture but it just costs so much these days. And Cullen has the divorce coming up. We decided to wait," she said.

Wrecker Operators Nab Thief

HOUSTON (UPI) — It appeared the armed robbery suspect just might elude police and escape Thursday until he was surrounded by a posse of tow trucks.

A 43-year-old Jacksonville man was arrested at a service station, where his getaway car was boxed in by 15 wreckers. He offered no resistance.

"We closed off the whole service station," said wrecker driver Jim

Armstrong, 34. "The police had to park their cars and walk around the trucks to arrest the guy."

Armstrong said he and 14 other tow truck drivers heard of the 11:30 p.m. Wednesday grocery store robbery and the ensuing 100 mph police chase. They coordinated pursuit by two-way radio.

When the suspect pulled off U.S. 59 into a service station with a blown tire, the wreckers surrounded the place and Armstrong jumped out and held a shotgun on the man until police arrived.

"We weren't looking to play police, but if they need us we will always do our damndest to help," Armstrong said.

The suspect was expected to be charged later in the day.

Women Debut In Guard At White House

WASHINGTON (AP) — A coed honor guard debuted at the White House on Wednesday, months after a few Air Force women wrote to first lady Rosalynn Carter protesting the all-male ceremonial contingent.

Five women, representing each branch of the military, were among a 21-member cordon forming a line from the front door of the White House to the East Room to greet Zambian President Kenneth Kaunda.

About 10 women originally were scheduled to participate. But the White House lawn was soggy after several days of rain, so the ceremony was moved indoors. That meant a smaller cordon replaced the normal contingent of about 225.

As he escorted his guest past the colon, President Carter stopped and pointed to the women. Then he walked up to Catherine N. Behnke, who was standing at attention, and asked her how she liked it.

Miss Behnke, a Navy seaman apprentice from Reedley, Calif., told reporters later she was surprised the commander-in-chief had stopped to chat.

"You can talk in the position of attention, so it was all right," Miss Behnke said, adding that she told Carter, she liked the new job. President Kaunda asked her how long she'd been in the service, and she replied two years.

Sgt. Elizabeth K. Foreman of Medford, Ore., who has been in the Air Force honor guard for two years, was one of five women who wrote to Mrs. Carter last summer to protest the situation.

"We were doing all the dirty work," she said Wednesday. Miss Foreman said that and four female colleagues felt it was about time the other branches of the military accepted women in their honor guards so that White House ceremonies could be coed.

Miss Foreman said that the initial response from the first lady's staff was negative. She said staff members pointed out that the Army had a height requirement of 5-feet-10-inches for its honor guard, and that the honor guard usually consists of men from combat units, from which women are excluded.

But then, Miss Foreman said, "the press got hold of it and that is when it really opened up." Soon, Mrs. Carter notified the absence of women in the honor guard ceremonies, and the Pentagon got the word that the policy should change.

"I just wish the other girls who wrote the letter with me, who are sitting in the barracks right now, could be here," Miss Foreman said.

Further down the hallway, Army Spec 4 Christine L. Crews, who was standing directly in front of a roped-off area for television cameras, was dripping with perspiration from the hot TV lights that focused on her throughout the ceremony. She was drenched.

"It was very exciting," the red-haired Granite City, Ill. woman said later. "It's an honor to be here."

Marine Pfc. Myrna L. Jepsen of Manhattan, Kan. said she was surprised that Carter was so short. On her first trip to the White House, Miss Jepsen said, "I felt proud, very proud."

Coast Guard Seaman Edna G. Dunham of Morenci, Ariz. said she was relieved it was an abbreviated indoor ceremony because "I was supposed to work the rifle and I was quite scared."

Honor guard duty at the White House is totally new to women in the Army, Navy, Coast Guard and Marines. Only the Air Force has included women in its honor guard in the past.

Since the women in the Air Force honor guard were not permitted to participate in joint-service events, they were excluded from White House ceremonies.

Federal Land Bill Seen As Alaskan Land Grab

WASHINGTON (AP) — In the first major test on the Alaska parklands bill, the House on Thursday rejected a move to give to Alaska some five million acres of federally owned land proposed for national parks and wildlife refuges.

Under the monumental conservation bill, some 100 million acres were initially proposed for addition to the national park, wildlife refuge and wild river preservation systems.

But, Rep. Don Young, R-Alaska, contended one of the boundaries of the proposed conservation zones were drawn to lock up lands long sought by the state for its own economic development, ranging from recreation to mining.

"The state of Alaska feels now that Congress has broken its word," said Young in pushing his plan to redraw boundaries to free the land for state possession.

Some other members sided with Young, saying the state's needs and wishes should override those of the federal government and Congress.

Rep. Morris Udall, however, said the amendment "would seriously cripple the bill."

Udall, D-Ariz., and others said the state had been granted under previous laws the right to select for its own use some 104 million acres of federal land. They added that Alaska had no legal claim to the lands included in the parklands legislation.

In many cases, the state lands would ruin the integrity of the conservation zones which were drawn to embrace entire stream, valley and wildlife habitat systems, proponents of the measure suggested.

When the vote came the House rejected the state lands amendment on a vote of 251-141.

By voice vote the House included the 22 million-acre Naval Petroleum Reserve on the North Slope in the wildlife refuge system, with the proviso that oil exploration and development should continue.

On another voice vote, Cape Krusenstern National Monument was expanded to 540,000 acres. The bill had provided for a park of 350,000 acres and a preserve, to allow trapping, and the effect was to eliminate the preserve.

Work on the bill progressed with the resolution of a parliamentary dispute that threatened to draw out floor action for several days, if not weeks, in the opinion of some members.

Several Republicans had contended the backers of the bill and the Democratic leadership were intent on steamrolling opponents by manipulating the House rules. The GOP members responded by using their own knowledge of the rules to slow things down considerably.

The dispute was resolved with an agreement that all amendments and proposed changes in the bill would be given full consideration.

Vasquez Held Guilty In Gonzalez Slaying

By FRANK PATRICK
Avalanche-Journal Staff

Felix Vasquez Jr., accused of the 1976 shooting death of Eljio Gonzalez, was convicted of murder by a jury here Thursday.

The seven-man, five-woman panel returned the verdict at 9:15 p.m. after deliberating about four hours.

The same jury in Judge Denizul Bever's 72nd District Court was scheduled to assess punishment today. The range of punishment for murder is from five to 99 years, or life imprisonment.

Gonzales, 24, was gunned down Nov. 20, 1976, on the parking lot of a club at Quirt Avenue and E. 19th Street.

The victim was killed exactly 15 days after the defendant's brother, Martin Vasquez, 20, was found knifed to death near the same club.

The defendant, 27, of 2612 39th St., took the witness stand Thursday to say that he had in fact shot Gonzalez. The defense contended, however, that Vasquez had acted in self-defense.

Prosecutor Sam Oatman assailed the self-defense claim during final arguments, saying that, in murder cases, "the star witness for the state is always dead."

Testimony in the trial showed that Vasquez, along with his brother, Manuel, had gone to the club in the early-morning hours to try to obtain additional information concerning the death of Martin Vasquez.

Felix Vasquez stood with the witness stand that he had a pistol with him in his car and had put it in his pocket before confronting Gonzalez on the club parking lot.

"Who is stalking who? Who is looking for who? Who is carrying a gun?" Oatman said in ridiculing the self-defense claim.

"Are you entitled to self-defense when you go looking for trouble?" he asked.

Defense attorney Tomas Garza said the only evidence in the case indicated that his client had been fearful and had shot Gonzalez in an effort to protect himself.

Both Felix and Manuel Vasquez testified that they knew Gonzalez had not killed their brother, but also said they felt he might know some information concerning the brother's death.

Earlier, Vasquez had told the jury he panicked after driving his car into close proximity with Gonzalez's vehicle on the club lot.

According to Vasquez, Gonzalez got out of his own vehicle, then standing by the open door, blew the car horn and reached beneath the front seat.

The defendant said he panicked when Gonzalez reached under the car seat.

"I just panicked - I was scared he was going to get something," Vasquez told Garza during earlier questioning.

"That's when I panicked, and I shot him," the defendant said.

Vasquez told the court he was afraid of Gonzalez because the deceased had a reputation as a violent man. He testified he had not tried to kill Gonzalez and had not gone to the club with that intention.

Demo Foot Dragging On Wager Vote Hit

AUSTIN (AP) — Pro-gambling forces got their cars boxed and are throwing up smoke screens to delay announcement of pari-mutuel betting's loss at the May 6 polls, a Baptist minister said Thursday.

Dr. Gerald Mann, pastor of the University Baptist Church in Austin, said the State Democratic Executive Committee should "stop dragging its feet" and announce results of the issue.

"They (the committee) can verify who won the governor's primary and the attorney general's race and other races," Mann said at a news conference.

"The reason I'm here is that the news reports have given me to wonder if we did win, speaking as an individual."

The final Texas Election Bureau report showed Democrats defeated the issue, 729,560 to 676,126. However, the executive committee says it has not had time to verify the results.

Under Texas election law, party committees are not required to certify non-binding referenda.

In one county, officials have confirmed that reported referenda vote totals were reversed because some precincts listed the gambling option and a loan referendum on different lines.

Some 39 counties have not reported any pari-mutuel results.

The executive committee has asked election judges to report any inaccuracies within seven days, but the committee has said it will not release vote totals until its June 13 meeting.

Mann said he was not alleging collusion between the committee and pro-gambling forces to delay announcement of the vote.

The minister said if he had favored gambling, "I think I would be throwing up all the smoke screens I could to stop accounting or certification. It might be easier to bring it back and get it passed."

At Pajouli, immediate past president of the Texas Horse Racing Association, has said he would seek a temporary restraining order to halt announcement of the vote until all boxes can be checked.

However, Pajouli's attorney, William T. Hall, said Thursday a restraining order would be "pointless" because the committee now says it will not release vote totals until June.

Pajouli and other horse breeders also have come under attack from the Anti-Crime Council of Texas.

"We submit it is high time ... the crybaby pari-mutuel gambling promoters admit they have lost the election," council director Alan Malay said in a statement.

"They have subverted the election process for the ninth time in 29 years in an effort to line their pockets at the expense of the people of Texas."

Civil Workers Stage Strike In Colombia

BOGOTA (AP) — Government operations ground to a halt in Colombia Thursday as 600,000 government employees began a 24-hour strike demanding higher wages.

Thousands of civil servants, normally seated behind desks or counters at government offices, picketed office buildings with banners and shouted slogans against the government's austerity measures.

The workers blocked the entrances to ministries, courts and administrative offices, but no incidents were reported. Riot police and troops patrolled the capital and other major cities.

Decentralized government agencies, such as official banks and the telecommunications office, were not affected.

At the government's finance department, employees who normally manned computers sat on counters with their backs to the terminals.

Florida's Senate Approves Bill To Allow Laetrile Manufacture

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — A bill that would make Florida one of the first states in the country to allow the manufacture of the controversial cancer substance Laetrile was approved by the Senate Thursday.

Senators voted 18-9 for the bill and sent it to the House despite objections that the measure will "legalize quackery in Florida."

The Legislature last year legalized the use of Laetrile in Florida, but did nothing to enable persons to obtain the drug.

This year's bill would allow the substance to be manufactured in the state and sold by pharmacists, if prescribed by physicians.

Chief sponsor Sen. Don Childers, D-West Palm Beach, said that last year's law would be meaningless without approval of a measure that would allow persons to obtain the Laetrile in Florida.

"This makes it possible for terminally ill cancer patients to obtain Laetrile without having to go to Tijuana, Mexico," Childers said.

But Sen. Kenneth Myers, D-Miami, objected that the Senate was putting its stamp of approval on a substance opposed by the federal Food and Drug Administration, which has never been proven as a cancer cure.

A Tallahassee subsidiary of Southern Plasma Inc. sought to manufacture Laetrile after passage of last year's bill. However, state officials rejected the request, saying that law did not permit manufacturing.

Laetrile is a trademark for a substance derived from the chemical amygdalin, found naturally in the pits of apricots and

'Chutes Fail, Parachutist Dies In Fall

ANNISTON, Ala. (AP) — A Army parachutist who had jumped 2,000 times plunged to his death near a school yard Thursday when both his chutes failed to open after he separated from his partners in a tree-fall formation.

The dead man was identified as Sgt. 1st Class Arthur C. Eckstein, 37, of Clarksville, Tenn., of the 101st Airborne Division at Fort Campbell, Ky.

He and other members of his division's sport parachute club were practicing for an Armed Forces Day program Saturday. They jumped from a helicopter at 9,500 feet.

Witnesses said Eckstein was one of four men who held hands in a free fall formation for a few seconds. When they separated, neither Eckstein's main chute nor his auxiliary chute opened.

He fell on a driveway between two houses near Blynum elementary school. Several children playing on the grounds saw the fall.

A fifth grade teacher, Kenneth Grover, said one of his pupils had to be sent home because he was too upset to remain in school.

Legal Action Seen On Garbage Strike

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The city council said Thursday it would consider "the necessary legal action" to end a two-day-old wildcat strike by San Antonio's 300 garbage collectors unless they return to their jobs this morning.

Councilman Rudy Ortiz told reporters he understood the first step of legal action would be a temporary restraining order to force the garbage collectors back to work.

The council's statement, signed by 10 of 11 members, said the striking employees were "conducting an illegal organization work stoppage."

Eddie Leija, a leader of the San Antonio Refuse Collectors Association, said he would make recommendations to the workers and that he hoped for a "favorable result."

Leija said the workers would vote on whether to continue the work stoppage at meetings this morning at the city's three service centers.

The wildcat walkout began Tuesday when garbage collectors walked out briefly at a service center on the city's north side. The strike went citywide on Wednesday.

Expectant Mother, Husband Perish

FREDERICK, Md. (AP) — A pregnant woman, her unborn child and her husband were killed early Thursday when their car was struck head on by a tractor-trailer, authorities said.

State police were unable to determine if the couple might have been en route to nearby Frederick Memorial Hospital. Persons who witnessed the crash on U.S. Route 15 in Western Maryland said the woman was dressed in a nightgown, and baby clothes and diapers were found in the car.

A&M Studying Goldfish For Spinal Cord Data

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (UPI) — Texas A&M University scientists are studying goldfish in the hopes of learning more about humans who have been paralyzed by spinal cord injuries.

Anatomy researcher John Gelderd said goldfish — and other fish, amphibians and lower animals — have the ability to regenerate a new spinal cord if theirs is severed.

"Finding out why the goldfish have this characteristic may tell us why mammals don't," Gelderd said. "That information might lead to methods of returning nerve function to paralyzed humans."

He also wants to learn if this regeneration power is restricted to specific areas of the brain or is general to all brain cells within the fish.

"In the study, fish with transected spinal cords had regenerated cut axons that lead from the brain within 30 to 45 days and have a full return of function," Gelderd said. "Observers may have difficulty telling the research subject from his tankmates."

During the recovery, he said, axons grow through scar tissue of the earlier transection from cells in the brain and link up with other muscle cells below the cut.

Gass Not Considered Top AD Candidate

By CARTER CROMWELL and DON HENRY

Avalanche-Journal Sports Staff
Sources indicated to the Avalanche-Journal Thursday that Oklahoma State athletic director Floyd Gass is not on the list of potential replacements for Tech athletic director JT King, who is retiring Aug. 31.

An Oklahoma City television station reported Thursday that Gass was a leading candidate for the AD position at Tech.

The story popped up at practically the same time as reports that OSU, recently placed on two-year probation by the NCAA, is under additional investigation because of possible recruiting violations.

In connection with this rumor, the story circulating in Oklahoma was that Gass had been in Lubbock last Sunday and Monday being interviewed for the job King currently holds.

However, officially and unofficially, Tech officials were skeptical.

One source, which declined to be quoted, said that Gass was not on the list of candidates.

(That list is said to be headed by Dr. John Cobb, a member of the Tech PE staff and a former chairman of the AAthletic Council, and Andy Everest, assistant athletic director at North Texas State University.)

Also Thursday night, Robert L. Pflugger, chairman of the Board of Regents' athletic committee, told the A-J from his home at San Angelo, "To my knowledge,

Mr. Gass is not under serious consideration at Tech."

Pflugger said the names of the candidates had not been brought before the board.

"The plan was for Dr. Cecil Mackey (Tech president) to bring to the board a list of four or five names, and we haven't even reached that point yet. So I don't see how Mr. Gass could be under serious consideration."

Late Thursday night, Mackey told the A-J he would not comment on the matter in any way.

"It is my policy not to comment on personnel affairs in any way...coaches, deans or any such matters. This (personnel) is a very special kind of situation. I have never commented on them, out of respect for the people involved."

Also, Mackey declined to even comment on the rumor that Gass had been in the city over the weekend for interview purposes.

Dr. Glenn Barnett, vice president of planning at Tech and one of the men charged with screening applicants, said, "I really don't know, but I'd be awfully surprised if this is true."

Law School Dean Frank Elliott, chairman of the Athletic Council and a member of the screening committee, was en route from Chicago Thursday and could not be reached. It was not known if he was on a screening mission about the AD post.

Gass confirmed to the A-J that he has applied for the position. Asked if he has interviewed for it, he replied, "Yes, I have talked with them and made formal application."

Thus far, Tech officials have not brought anyone on campus to be interviewed. More than 40 persons have applied for the job.

The school's Board of Regents is scheduled to hold its regular meeting May 26, and a source said that he "doubts" that a decision will be made on King's replacement then. However, a decision is expected in the relatively near future.

The 50-year-old Gass, athletic director at OSU since July 1970, has been under pressure for about two years. Last year, he received a one-year extension of his contract, but was not granted a raise.

An OSU graduate, he lettered in football in 1948 and 1949 and was the school's head football coach from 1960 through 1971, compiling a 13-10-1 record.

The names of several possible candidates have cropped up the past few weeks, including Cobb's and Everest's. The list includes Burl Bartlett, former assistant under King; Merrill Green, head

Plainsmen Seek Bidistrict Title

By TOM HALLIBURTON
Avalanche-Journal Sports Staff
Earthquake Monterey arrived in southwest Amarillo late Tuesday afternoon and the ground trembled nearly an hour before serenity returned.

A group of baseball players from Amarillo High hopes the severe weather has departed today when the Sandjies play MHS in Lowrey Field at 2:30 p.m. The third game in the best-of-three bidistrict series follows if Amarillo ties the series in today's opener. A third game won't be necessary if another Monterey earthquake rumbles through the South Plains.

The devastation of the quake could have measured about 7.5 on the Richter scale but it measured 13 on the scoreboard as the Plainsmen scored that often in the first two innings, grabbing a 16-11 win and a 1-0 series lead in the playoffs.

With hopes for a calmer afternoon, Sandies coach Guss Hrcncr plans to start righthander Charlie Guyer (3-1, 2.18 ERA) in the second game of the series against Monterey's Derek Hatfield (11-3, 1.95 ERA). Hrcncr realizes first-game starter Kim Sargent and all other available hands on deck should brace themselves for further weather developments.

"We will throw everything we've got in that first game. We've got to do it that way. We can't save anything," the AHS coach said.

Hrcncr credited the Monterey batters but he also believed his pitchers failed to perform on their usual level.

"I'm sure Sargent will pitch better tomorrow. I don't think he pitched as well as he has because he didn't get any stri-

Fate Tips LCC Bid In Ninth

By WALT McALEXANDER
Avalanche-Journal Sports Staff
Mr. Fate, Lubbock Christian College fans have just one question: Where were you at 3:33 p.m. Thursday?

At that very moment Gary Swann was on top of the collegiate baseball world. He had held the nation's No. 1 team — both in the rankings and hitting-wise — to a mere six base hits and, although William Carey had one runner on base — that by virtue of Swann's fourth free pass of the afternoon — things still appeared rosy.

Pinch-hitter Mike Chandler had a 1-2 count and the Chaparral Stadium throng of 750, heavily laden with LCC backers, were preparing for today's 1 p.m. outing.

But then Mr. Fate took that unscheduled vacation. Swann let loose with an inside fastball and plunked Chandler on the forearm. Then here came Alex LaGrone, who had gone 0-for-4.

He lined a 2-2 pitch to left which Tommy Inman had a choice: try to shoestring or let fall in for a single, with one runner scoring. He got caught in the middle, it fell in and bounced past him and both runs scored and suddenly it was 3-3. But Inman recovered and fired toward the plate as LaGrone was rounding the bag. Third baseman Kenny Toney cut the ball off and got LaGrone in the rundown.

But Mr. Fate then realized he had left something exciting and returned to watch William Carey win in the 11th by a 4-3 count.

And that same Mr. Fate decided to take a vacation in the nightcap, too, with LCC leading 10-4. But Bob McNicol ambled out of the bull pen to throw 1 2/3 innings of hitless relief as the Chaps withstood St. Mary's 10-9 in an elimination affair.

Thus the Chaps, now 47-23-1, must tangle with William Carey, now 52-9, in a possible doubleheader beginning at 1 p.m. today for the right to advance to St. Joseph, Mo., and the NAIA World Series starting a week from today.

The Chaps led for 17 2/3 innings Thursday, but it was two superb defensive plays in the eighth and ninth frames of the nightcap that allowed LCC to reach the finals.

St. Mary's had cut the margin to 10-9 and had the tying run on base when Marty Zolkowski smashed a shot to the right side of the infield. Steve Brigante at second took a step — but the wrong way. He dove back to his right, speared the ball and got the force at second for the second out and McNicol got Terry Raley to fly to center.

Then in the ninth, pinch-hitter Mike Ott walked with one out. Pinch-hitter Steve Jewasko ripped one to the left side which shortstop Glenn Wilken took two quick steps to his left, stabbed it, leaped into the air, turned around and started the game-ending double play.

"Those were two plays we had to turn

Beniquez Guides Rangers Win

By The Associated Press
Juan Beniquez had four hits and drove in four runs as the Texas Rangers beat the Oakland A's 6-4 Thursday night.

Texas catcher Jim Sundberg ran his consecutive game hitting streak to 17 with a fifth-inning single. The streak, the longest in the American League this season, tied a club record.

Beniquez delivered singles in the first and fifth innings, each of them scoring two runs.

Texas reached Oakland starter Matt Keough for three runs in the first inning. Joe Coleman came in with two out in that frame to prevent any further damage.

Oakland scored in its half of the first when Steve Stiggs tripled and came home on a grounder by Dwayne Murphy.

TWINS 8, ROYALS 6
Mike Cubbage, Butch Wynegar and Jose Morales knocked in 2 runs apiece and the Minnesota Twins held on for a victory over Kansas City.

The Twins scored 5 runs in the third inning on a two-out burst keyed by a 2-run single by Cubbage and Morales' 2-run pinch double.

Kansas City starter Dennis Leonard, 3-7, one of three 20-game winners in the American League last year, was knocked out in the 5-run third.

Geoff Zahn, 3-2, was the winner with relief help from Tom Johnson and Mike Marshall.

The Royals bounced back with 2 runs in the fifth on singles by Frank White and Jerry Terrell and a 2-run single by Johnathan.

In the sixth, Fred Patek greeted Johnson with an RBI single and Tom Poquette doubled home another Royals run.

The Twins picked up a run in the seventh when Dan Ford was hit by a pitch for the second time in the game and came around to score on Wynegar's double. Amos Otis tripled home Al Cowens with Kansas City's sixth run in the seventh.

ORIOLES 5, BLUE JAYS 3
Doug DeCinces drove in 3 runs with two homers and Pat Kelly smashed a 2-run double to give Baltimore a victory over Toronto.

DeCinces, who has driven in all eight of his runs this season on homers, connected in the fourth following a walk to Eddie Murray to tie the score at 2-2. His solo blast in the eighth, his fifth home run of the season, provided the Orioles with their final run.

The Orioles chased Jim Clancy, 2-3, in the fifth on a double by Larry Harlow, a walk to Mark Belanger and Kelly's 2-run double.

Winner Mike Flanagan, 4-3, allowed 2 runs in the first on a leadoff walk to Rick Bosetti and consecutive one-out singles by Roy Howell, Rico Carty and Otto Verlez.

The Blue Jays added a run in the eighth when Bosetti extended his hitting streak to 10 games with an infield single, moved to second on an infield out and scored on a single by Howell.

Winner Mike Flanagan, 4-3, allowed 2 runs in the first on a leadoff walk to Rick Bosetti and consecutive one-out singles by Roy Howell, Rico Carty and Otto Verlez.

YANKS 5, INDIANS 3
Mickey Rivers tripled in the go-ahead run in the seventh inning to help undefeated Ron Guidry gain his fifth victory of the season as the New York Yankees beat Cleveland.

Guidry gave up six hits, including Andre Thornton's home run in the fourth inning, before getting ninth-inning relief help from Rich Gossage, who posted his fifth save of the season.

The Yankees scored 3 runs in the sixth to erase a 3-0 deficit. Roy White led off with an infield single but pulled a leg muscle on the way to first base. Rivers replaced him and went to second on a single by Thurman Munson. Lou Piniella then tripled home both runners, chasing Cleveland starter Don Hood.

Chris Chambliss greeted reliever Dennis Kinney, 0-2, with a game-tying double single to left.

Kinney walked Willie Randolph with two out in the Yankee seventh. Randolph stole second and came home on Rivers' triple to right-center. Munson then brought Rivers across with a double to deep center.

ANGELS 9, CHISOX 5
Don Baylor smashed a grand slam home run and right-hander Chris Knapp won his fifth game as California defeated the Chicago White Sox.

and second career grand slam, climaxed a 6-run rally in the third inning when the Angels chased loser Francisco Barrios, 1-4.

California loaded the bases with none out in the third on consecutive singles by Brian Downing, Rick Miller and Dave Chalk. Ron Fairly singled to drive in Downing and tie the game 1-1, and the Angels took the lead when Barrios walked Tony Solaita to force in Miller.

Reliever Ron Schuler replaced Barrios, and Baylor lined his first pitch into the left field stands to give California a 6-1 lead.

Chicago touched Knapp, 5-3, for an unearned run in the first inning and scored four times in the sixth on consecutive run-scoring singles by Lamar Johnson, Henry Cruz, Bob Molinaro and Eric Soderholm. Dave LaRoche came on to relieve Knapp, a former White Sox, and pitched the final 3 1/3 innings to pick up his sixth save of the season.

California added 3 runs in the seventh on Lyman Bostock's RBI double and Carney Lansford's 2-run single.

BREWERS 8, TIGERS 7
Sal Bando's eighth-inning sacrifice fly scored Paul Molitor as the Milwaukee Brewers, after squandering a 5-run lead, struck back and snapped Detroit's four-game winning streak.

Molitor led off the eighth with a bunt single and reached second on the play on a wild throw by third baseman Aurelio Rodriguez. After a Cecil Cooper sacrifice Molitor to third, Bando lofted his fly to right breaking a 7-7 tie.

Detroit had tied the score with a 5-run eighth-inning rally highlighted by Steve Kemp's 3-run homer and an RBI pinch double by Lance Parrish.

A pinch single by Mark Wagner, a walk and a single by Jason Thompson scored one run, and Kemp unloaded his second homer of the year. After a two-out pinch single by Rodriguez, Bill Castro replaced reliever Bob McClure and served up Parrish's game-tying double.

The Brewers erased a 2-0 deficit with 4 runs in the fourth. After an infield hit by Sixto Lezcano and two walks filled the bases, Buck Martinez delivered a sacrifice fly for one run. Molitor knocked in the second with an RBI double and Cooper's brount in the final two with a single.

The Brewers took a 7-2 lead an inning later on singles by Lezcano and Jim Wolfhard and a 3-run homer by Gorman Thomas, his eighth.

The Tigers scored in the second on Thompson's tenth homer and in the third on singles by Alan Trammell, Lou Whitaker and Rusty Staub.

METS 8, BRAVES 7
Steve Henderson's run-scoring single in the 10th inning drove home Lenny Randle and gave the New York Mets a victory over the Atlanta Braves.

It was the Mets' first home victory in seven innings this season.

coach at Bryan High and another former Tech aide: Hootie Ingram, assistant commissioner of the Southeastern Conference, and Marvin Tate, assistant AD at A&M.

Everest, a native Texan who came to SMU from the California collegiate coaching ranks and later followed Hayden Fry to North Texas State, could not be reached for comment, but his wife confirmed that he has applied for the Tech AD job.

Ingram, a former assistant football coach at Arkansas, Virginia Tech and Arkansas and head coach at Clemson, has been assistant SEC commissioner for the past six years.

Contacted late Thursday night, he said that he has not applied for the Tech AD position.

"I am firmly entrenched here and am always interested in getting the ultimate spot in my profession. I feel very happy with a super position here."

He said he has not "personally" made contact with Tech officials. Asked if there had been contact made by him or Tech officials, he said, "I think it would be better for you to talk with Tech people about that. I'm not involved in it in any way."

Ingram said that he was in Dallas recently to attend a dinner in honor of retiring Cotton Bowl vice president Wilbur Evans, "and maybe that's how the rumors about me got started."

Green was an assistant coach at Tech under King from 1961 through 1964. In 1967, he guided Abilene Cooper to the Class AAAA state finals and has been at Bryan since 1972.

Green said he was asked "by a man some time ago to apply for the job, and I did."

Bartlett told the A-J Thursday that he had applied, "after I learned that John Conley (athletic business manager) had not applied. I have not heard from anyone there (Tech) since that time."

Bartlett has been superintendent of schools at Kingfisher, Okla., since he left Tech in 1970. Tate could not be reached for comment.

Carey Holds Top Spot

By CARTER CROWMELL
Avalanche-Journal Sports Staff
Everybody agreed on at least one matter Thursday evening — William Carey College definitely is in an enviable position in the NAIA Area II Baseball Tournament.

That was the assessment following the Crusaders' come-from-behind, 11-inning 4-3 victory over Lubbock Christian Thursday afternoon in a second-round game at Chaparral Field.

The difference is in pitching. William Carey, now the only undefeated team in the tournament, is deep in this department. LCC, which defeated St. Mary's 10-9 Thursday evening to stay alive in the meet, is short on this commodity as they prepare to face the No. 1-ranked Crusaders in one, and possibly two, games that will decide the tournament Area II representative in the NAIA National Tournament that begins May 26.

"I think we have the upper hand," William Carey coach John Stephenson said, "but we still have to go out and win one today. We are in good shape on the mound, though."

Stephenson will start Paul Riels (9-3, 1.75 ERA) in today's first game that will start at 1 p.m.

Hays had admitted earlier in the meet that his pitching staff is short on depth. "We'll be in trouble if we lose a game," he said.

Hays will start Mickey Crump in the opening game today. He was considering starting Kenny Toney, but Toney repulsed a hamstring muscle in Thursday's contests. Crump is 2-2 with a 4.76 earned-run average and hasn't pitched in a month.

"It's simple—we'll just have to regroup and go get 'em," Hays said after Thursday's disappointing loss. Mentally, though, the defeat has to be a downer.

The Chaparrals took a 2-0 lead in the first inning on home runs by Tommy Inman and Tim Leslie and made it 3-0 on Darius Copley's fifth-inning RBI-single. William Carey got a run back in the seventh on Paul Strahan's homer, but the Chaps appeared to have the game in hand when the Crusaders had two outs and a man on first base in the bottom of the ninth trailing 3-1.

However, Inman allowed Alex LaGrone's single to get past him and the tying run to score, and the visitors went on to win in the 11th on Jim Celdonia's sacrifice fly.

LaGrone's single would have scored Jim Halford from second base anyway, but Inman charged the ball, and it skipped past him. By the time he returned the ball to the infield, Mike Chandler had scored from first base, also.

"Inman tried to shoestring the ball, instead of playing it safely," Hays said. "Still, he made three or four big plays out there for us."

The William Carey comeback ruined a fine effort by LCC starting pitcher Gary Swann, who allowed just seven hits and two earned runs in nine-plus innings of pitching. The Crusaders hit several balls solidly, but Swann received generally good defensive support.

"Gary had his good slider today. He uses his defense well and keeps the ball in the park when he's right. His slider was going good, and I was afraid that they would jump on somebody else. That's why we left Swann in there so long."

Stephenson was surprised that his team, which had entered the tournament hitting .349, had just one run going into the ninth inning.

"I thought before the game that we'd probably score about 10 runs," he said, "but LCC played real good defense for the most part, and we hit some balls right at them."

William Carey starter Jack Skaggs allowed eight hits and the two home runs in 4 1/3 innings. Relievers Mickey Thornton and Carl Merritt held the Chaparrals to just three hits after that.

to win." LCC boss Larry Hays said afterwards. "If Steve or Glenn didn't make them, then we don't win."

In the opener Tommy Inman ripped Jack Skaggs' fifth pitch of the game over the right field fence for his 17th homer of the year. Then, after two were out, Tim Leslie uncorked his 21st of the year.

Leslie, in the second game, went 4-for-5 and tied a legend's record. Those four hits give Leslie 102 on the year, equalling John Harris' mark set in 1976 when he also had 94 RBIs, 13 more than Leslie presently has.

Monterey

keouts," Hrcir said. Albeit, the veteran Amarillo coach praised the balanced Monterey batting order. All nine of the MHS regular batters hit safely for the first time in a game all season. And each of the nine drove in at least one run for the first time all season.

"You don't have to worry about a batting order when you have those hitters," Hrcir said. "If I had those nine, I'd put them in a hat and draw them."

MHS coach Bobby Moegle agreed his outfit looked awesome at the start of Tuesday's game.

"We were as good a team as I had ever put on the field for two innings. Then they kinda fell back into a rut after that," Moegle said.

Hrcir wishes the Plainsmen would stay in a rut all day today. The Sandies coach felt his team "did all we could do when we got 13 runs behind" and he compared the 13-run deficit to a 28-point deficit in a football game.

The two coaches plan to stay with similar lineups to those used in the Tuesday game. Moegle usually places Ron Reeves in the DH spot when Hatfield pitches. Reeves would start the third game of the series, if necessary. Hrcir noted one change as John Christopher starts in left field, the position where Guyer started in the opener.

St. Mary's got an unearned run in the fourth, but Kenny Toney ripped his second two-run homer in as many days to up the margin to 5-1. But Charlie Migl uncorked a bases-loaded double in the last of the fifth and it was a one-run game again.

Bobby Doe's bases-loaded walk in the sixth got one run in, then Paul Tejada's throw to first was errant and the seventh run scored and the eighth scored on a wild pitch try.

Copley singled in the ninth run and Leslie plated the 10th with a single in the seventh.

St. Mary's wasn't dead by any means, however, as RBI singles by Danny Heep, Zolowski and Ronnie Litzner narrowed the gap to 10-7 in the last of the seventh.

Then in the eighth Heep unloaded his fifth homer after Mike Zamora had doubled to make it a one-run game again and set the stage for LCC's defense to shine.

Before William Carey's comeback in the opener, Swann has turned in his best game as a collegian, despite the fact he had won the District 8 championship game and the Area II title tilt over the past two years.

He was constantly waving to his outfielders and infielders after they turned in outstanding plays and he, until the ninth, had kept the Carey speed — LaGrone and Ricky McMullen — off base.

A sweep of today's activity would allow LCC to equal the school record for most victories—49 set in 1976 when LCC

LA Nabs Contract

ATHENS, Greece (AP) — Los Angeles provisionally was granted the 1984 Olympic Games Thursday and given 74 days to find financial guarantees and sign a contract in line with the Olympic rules.

The International Olympic Committee kept firmly to the principles of its charter and refused to accept a contract submitted by Los Angeles.

If Los Angeles accepts the IOC's conditions by July 31 it will stage the Games in six years' time. If not, the IOC will start canvassing for alternative sites.

The IOC, following the policy of taking the Olympics to new territories, awarded the 1984 Winter Games to Sarajevo, Yugoslavia. That country never has staged Olympic Games before.

Sarajevo won the Games in a three-cornered contest with Sapporo, Japan, the host city of 1972, and Goteborg, Sweden. The Swedes received little support for their plan to spread the Games over four centers.

The Los Angeles delegation, led by Mayor Tom Bradley, had maneuvered all week to try to protect the city from a financial deficit if it staged the Games. But it met solid resistance from the Olympic movement.

The 26 international federations which control Olympic sports pledged full support to the IOC and urged it to ensure that the Olympic charter fully is observed before the Games are granted to Los Angeles or any other city.

Player Matches Nicklaus' 67

DUBLIN, Ohio (AP) — Jack Nicklaus, the tournament founder and moving force, and his old friend and golfing foe Gary Player matched five-under-par 67s and shared the first-round lead Thursday in the prestigious Memorial Golf Tournament.

"It's probably the best driving round I've ever had," the satisfied Nicklaus said after he had tied the tournament scoring record on the layout he designed and built as his dream course, the 7,101-yard Muirfield Village Golf Club.

"I played very, very well. I was in the absolute middle of every fairway," said Nicklaus, the defending champion in the tournament that now is in its third year.

He and all others, from the fairway, were allowed to lift, clean and place the ball due to the extremely wet conditions. Central Ohio has been deluged with more than a week of rain. Tournament officials have been unable to mow the fairways for four days. Pools and puddles of casual water dotted the hilly course.

"As wet as it was, it was the right thing to tee it up in the fairways," Nicklaus said. Player, who won the Masters and two other titles in a three-week winning streak earlier this season, agreed.

"It would have been almost impossible — the conditions would have been almost unplayable — if we had not been able to lift and place," said the little South African globetrotter, often a Nicklaus houseguest when in this country.

He had the lead alone until bogeying the 17th hole, missing the green. That dropped him back into a share of the lead and he had to one-putt the 18th to save it.

Scores, generally, were extremely low — the lowest this demanding course ever has yielded.

"Any time you let a bunch of pros get their hands on the ball, move it around, you're going to get low scores," Nicklaus said.

Only one shot back of the leaders — who have won a combined total of nearly 200 worldwide titles and 22 major professional events — were Tom Kite, Jim Simons and Rex Caldwell, tied at 68.

The group at 69 included Ed Sneed, Curtis Strange and Lon Hinkle, the winner of the New Orleans Open and the golfer who stopped Player's winning string.

U.S. Open champion Hubert Green had a 71. Tom Watson, like Player a three-time winner this season, played his back nine in 40 for a 73. Hale Irwin had the same total. Tom Weiskopf matched par 72. Jerry Pate shot 76 and Arnold Palmer had a 77.

Nicklaus, who hasn't played in four weeks and got in only one practice round, didn't have a bogey in his solid effort and missed only two greens, easily saving par there. His longest putt was a 15-footer on the 14th. He dropped two others in the 10-foot range, flipped a sand wedge to three feet on another and claimed a share of the top spot with an eight-foot birdie putt on the final hole.

Player came within a foot of an eagle two on the second hole, scored from 10

TOURNEY LEADER

TOKYO (AP) — Veteran Japanese pro Tadashi Kitta, playing through heavy rain, fired a 7-under-par 65 and took a 1-stroke lead after the first round of a $110,000 international golf tournament Thursday.

feet on the fourth, got a sand wedge to within three feet on the seventh, then made his longest putts of the day, 20 and 15 feet, on the 11th and 12th.

He took the lead alone with a short birdie putt on the 15th, but surrendered it with the bogey on No. 16.

Odds makers Overlook Sonics-Bullets Series

SEATTLE (AP) — Washington against Seattle? Seven months ago Jimmy (The Greek) Snyder would have given you odds of 1.500 to 1 against that kind of a National Basketball Association championship match.

And, the noted oddsmaker added, "You'd never have found anyone to take the bet."

But it's happening. The SuperSonics, Western Conference champions, play host to the Bullets, East Conference champs, in Game 1 of the best-of-seven NBA title series Sunday.

"It'll be a rough, tough, rock 'em, sock 'em series," predicts Sonic Fred Brown, whose 26 points paced Seattle's 123-108 Western Conference championship victory over Denver Wednesday night.

"Seattle is playing with a great deal of confidence," said Denver coach Larry Brown. "If they play as well against Washington as they have against us, it should be a very interesting series."

Asked how he viewed the coming series, the losing coach quipped, "on television."

The Sonics are working from the impetus of 20 straight home victories. They turned around a season that hit rock bottom months ago at 5-17 when Lenny Wilkens took over as coach.

"I feel as though we've actually accomplished something as a unit," said Fred Brown. "We have to be thankful. There were 22 teams. Now there's two. We're going after it."

But Sonic Paul Silas suggests the Sonics and Bullets are similar.

"They came through a lot of adversity, too," he said. "It should be a good series. They have as much, or more, rebounding strength. We possibly have a little more quickness."

Added Marvin Webster, who with Silas left Denver for the Sonics in an off-season trade, "I think it'll be a very physical ball game Sunday. But I think we can handle 'em."

Dennis Johnson, who held Denver's $4 million man, David Thompson, to 21 points Wednesday, said he was glad the Seattle-Denver series is over.

"I won't have to play 45 minutes a game the next series. At least, I hope not. I don't think I could hold up."

Even though Coach Wilkens has downplayed the home-court advantage theory in recent weeks, he said having that edge against Washington is "super."

"The home fans are great," Wilkens said. "They get your adrenalin going."

More than 150 Sonics fans were lined up to buy tickets for Sunday's game even before Seattle had finished burying the Nuggets Wednesday.

Denver's Brown has some advice about Seattle's home games.

"I hope they don't play in the Kingdom," he said, referring to Seattle's covered stadium where the Sonics envision seating some 27,000 fans.

"I think they need to play in this place (the smaller Coliseum where 14,098 crowded in for Wednesday's game). They have something going. But I don't sell tickets," said Brown. Game 4 is scheduled in the Kingdom.

Mann Eyes Fem Golf Crown

JAMESBURG, N.J. (AP) — Carol Mann, an 18-year LPGA veteran and one of the pioneers of women's professional golf, says she still gets a kick out of weekly tour competition.

"Each week is different," said Mann, who will be competing in the first round of a $100,000 LPGA tournament at Forsgate Country Club beginning today.

"There is the beauty and challenge of the golf course — and that can keep you going," she said. "Like Forsgate requires you to make shots that other courses don't."

The 6-foot, 3-inch pro admits, however, that getting psychologically prepared is often a strain.

"After 18 years, getting up for some events really becomes a mental thing," she said. "You have to develop resources. It's not always so easy to turn your motor on."

"The money isn't sufficient either to always motivate you. Pride, I find, is the big thing. I set personal goals for myself each week and that helps."

Miss Mann took a brief vacation in 1976 after finding she couldn't cope with the week-to-week rigors of the tour.

"I take breaks every once in a while," she said. "But in the summer of '76 I took a hiatus. I still loved the game, but felt I needed to get away. I had some problems and I had to figure out why and find a resolution for each."

"I found, when I came back, that my love for the game was stronger than ever," she said. "But in the summer of '76 I took a hiatus. I still loved the game, but felt I needed to get away. I had some problems and I had to figure out why and find a resolution for each."

Miss Mann has competed in just four tournaments and won $5,274 in 1978 but over her career, which began in 1960, she has amassed close to $500,000 in prize winnings. She has won 38 tournaments and ranks fifth on the all-time money list.

It's all a far cry from the $2,165.50 she won as a tour rookie.

"My father figured out that I earned 15 cents an hour based on my winnings that year," she laughed. "It's unbelievable —"

Baylor Tackles Bulldogs

ARLINGTON (AP) — Baylor coach Mickey Sullivan is moaning the loss of ace pitcher Burl Coker for the NCAA South Central Regional baseball tournament beginning Friday at the home of the Texas Rangers in Arlington.

Baylor, the SWC Tournament champion, meets the Mississippi State Bulldogs of the Southeast Conference tonight in the second game of a doubleheader after powerful independent Pan American and Southland Conference champion Louisiana Tech collide in the 5 p.m. opener.

The losers in the first-round games meet at 1 p.m. Saturday and the winners at 8 p.m. Sunday's games, if necessary, are at 1 p.m. and 7:30 p.m.

Baylor swept through the regional last year and into the College Baseball World Series in Omaha, Neb., and Coker was one of the big reasons for the Bears' success.

But Coker was hit on the arm by a throw while attempting to beat out a bunt last week in the SWC tournament.

"Burl will be out of the tournament and we just hope he'll be back for a designated hitter role if we survive the regionals," said Sullivan. "We'll miss him."

Coker has a 9-2 record with a 1.64 earned run average. He also is a .300 hitter.

Baylor is 29-17-2 while Mississippi State is 37-15.

Pan American at 51-15 has the top record in the regional while Louisiana Tech is an impressive 46-19.

Pan American is 16th ranked, according to Collegiate Baseball Weekly, while Louisiana Tech is 25th. Baylor and Mississippi State are unranked.

Baylor has an awesome team batting average off .300 while Pan American can boast the best overall pitching and speed.

Pan Am's Bobby Rutledge, who has stolen 75 bases in 86 attempts, is just one theft away from the NCAA record set by Mike Wolfe of Seton in 1975.

Rutledge isn't the only speedster on the team. Leonard Tyone has stolen 32 bases and Bert Garcia has 16.

Mississippi State's Dale Bender has the biggest bat with 17 home runs for the year.

Baylor won this tournament last year then lost two straight extra inning games in the NCAA World Series.

Hiss Subs For Andretti In Qualifying Runs

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Strategy for Saturday's rain-delayed opening of qualification runs for the May 28 Indianapolis 500 won't be any different than if they had been held on time, Tom Sneva, last year's top qualifier, said Thursday.

And in another development, car owner Roger Penske announced that 1969 Indy 500 winner Mario Andretti, a team-mate of Sneva, won't drive in the qualifications.

"There's been some talk that drivers won't take a chance on getting a second chance to qualify and will take anything decent in their first run," said Sneva. "I think some drivers may think about doing that, but unless it rains Saturday I think everyone will shoot for the best possible time."

"They probably would have been broken over the weekend if we didn't have the rain," said Sneva, a 29-year-old former school teacher who set a one-lap record of 200.535 miles per hour and a four-lap standard of 198.884 last year.

Andretti is in Belgium trying to qualify his car for Sunday's Formula 1 Grand Prix race. Before he left Andretti recorded the fastest lap in the history of the Indianapolis Motor Speedway with a speed of 203.482 miles per hour.

"We've exhausted all possibilities for having Mario qualify in Belgium, fly here for qualifying and then get back for Sunday's race," said Penske. "We just can't do it. We're confident Mike Hiss can qualify the car and we'll go from there."

Hiss, who has been out of championship car auto racing for more than a year, has been driving Penske's backup car the past two days. Thursday he was timed at 187.970 mph, a speed considerably below what it is expected to take to make a good position in the starting field.

However, the speed of Hiss isn't that critical to Penske's plans for the race. All Hiss has to do is qualify in the 33-car field. USAC rules would force Andretti to the back of the field no matter where Hiss qualified if Andretti starts the race in the car.

Thursday, Sneva had his fastest clocking here this month with a time of 199.645 mph.

"I know what the car can do and I haven't been worried about hitting 200 in practice," said Sneva when asked if he was concerned that his car isn't one of six that have topped 200 mph here.

"I'm thinking about the race. If the pole comes, fine. If not, I'm not going to be disappointed," said Sneva.

For the second consecutive day, practice was held under sunny skies and the drivers were hopeful the same conditions would prevail through the weekend.

Trainer Sees Two Horses In Preakness

BALTIMORE (AP)— Affirmed will take a second step toward a possible Triple Crown Saturday in the Preakness against six rivals, including Alydar, who chased him home in the Kentucky Derby.

The Harbor View Farm star was made the early even-money favorite Thursday, with Alydar, the pride of Calumet Farm, second at 7-5. In the Derby, Affirmed went off the second choice to Alydar and paid $5.60, a high price for a colt with his credentials.

Affirmed, trained by Laz Barrera and ridden by Steve Cauthen, was the 1977 2-year-old champion. He has won six straight races and 12 of 14 starts and has beaten Alydar in five of seven meetings. A victory Saturday would not only keep the chestnut colt's Triple Crown chances alive but would make him a millionaire. He goes into the 1 1/16-mile classic at Pimlico with earnings of $887,027.

With seven starters the Preakness will have a purse of $188,700 and a winner's share of $136,200.

"It looks like a two-horse race," said John Veitch, Alydar's trainer. And that's exactly what it looks like, with Believe It, third in the Derby, considered the best of the others—Track Reward, Noon Time Spender, Indigo Star and Dax S.

But Affirmed vs. Alydar won't be the only intriguing rivalry in the 103rd Preakness. There also will be a father-son match.

Albert Barrera, the trainer of Track Reward, is the son of Laz Barrera and while he opposed his father in races before, this will be the first time he has run a horse against him in a stakes.

"I don't have an idea why," Laz Barrera said when asked what he thought of his son bringing Track Reward to the Preakness. "The idea I have is the people who own him (Raymond, Lester and Elmer Aisquith) are from Maryland."

Track Reward, who was fifth in the Withers at Aqueduct last Sunday, was expected to run in the $125,000-added Illinois Derby Saturday at Sportsman's Park. But Albert Barrera, 24, said he and the owners made a mutual decision to try the Preakness.

"To me it looks like a three-horse race and my horse looks like the fourth," said Albert. "It was very hard to stay away. I've been training long enough (three years) to know anything can happen."

Track Reward, ridden by Miquel Rivera, has won three of eight starts and was third in the Wood Memorial which was won by Believe It.

Track Reward has shown early speed and could take the lead Saturday, but his young trainer said: "If Affirmed goes to the lead, I'll sit behind him."

Hickory Tree Stable's Believe It, ridden by Eddie Maple, also is capable of early speed, but trainer Woody Stephens said he doesn't expect him to be on the lead unless the track is sloppy as it was Thursday when Believe It blew out three-eighths of a mile in 34 3/5 seconds.

But track probably will be fast Saturday. No rain is forecast for today or Saturday, and the temperature Saturday is supposed to be in the low 80s. Post time is 4:40 p.m. CDT with ABC to televise from 4-6 p.m.

Whoever is on the lead Saturday, it almost is certain that Alydar jockey Jorge Velasquez won't be far behind Affirmed wherever he is.

"He's going to have to be closer than he was in the Derby," said Veitch. "He's going to have to be very close turning for home."

Alydar was 17 lengths back at one point in the Derby before making a big stretch run that fell 1 1/4 lengths short. The Derby was Alydar's first loss in five starts this year.

Grand Jury Clears Spinks

ST. LOUIS (AP) — A St. Louis Circuit Court grand jury refused to indict heavyweight boxing champion Leon Spinks on two drug charges.

The grand jury returned the not-true bills after hearing more than two hours of testimony from Spinks, arresting officers and witnesses.

Following the grand jury decision, Spinks appeared in Circuit Judge Oliver M. Collins' court and was fined $50 and court costs on a charge of driving without a driver's license. Spinks said he now has a valid Michigan license.

Spinks had been scheduled to have a preliminary hearing on the drug charges Thursday, but his attorney, Lawrence Lee, asked for the grand jury appearance instead.

Spinks, 24, was arrested April 21 after St. Louis police said they found cocaine in Spinks' hat and marijuana in his jacket pocket. The officers said they found the drugs after questioning Spinks when he pulled into an all-night restaurant parking lot in the pre-dawn hours with his car lights turned off.

Spinks had been arrested earlier this year for driving the wrong way on a one-way street and operating a car without a driver's license. The wrong-way driving charge is still pending.

Two Tracks Draw Area Race Drivers

Lubbock's two race tracks will butt heads with auto racing programs tonight, but no shortage of cars or drivers at either raceway appeared likely.

The conflict developed this week when Jack Halpain, manager at the dirt Lubbock Speed Bowl southeast of Dalou, moved the track's regular Saturday night program up a day because of a scheduled tractor pull Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

With the exception of Volkswagens, few if any cars are competing at both tracks, assuring full fields for both the dirt oval as well as the paved Lubbock Speedway on South U.S. 87.

One major departure this week is the addition of a series of supermodified and sprint events on a one-time basis at the dirt oval. Halpain said that two or more Lubbock sprint car drivers are expected to participate with super modifieds from Amarillo.

The point standings in the late model stock car division at Lubbock Speedway underwent considerable revision as the result of last week's races, with Wayne McCullough and Neal DeBord of Amarillo moving into the first and second spots as ex-leader Jim Culpepper of Hereford and second-running Dick Wood of Lubbock fell to eighth and ninth, respectively.

Jay Turner of Lubbock moved into third behind McCullough, and Loyd Blackerby picked up three spots, going from 10th to seventh.

In another surprise, Frances Bilbrey moved from fourth to first in the VW standings. Appearance of at least two new VWs this week at the paved oval suggests another wholesale revision of the standings may be in the offing.

In the street stocks, Tommy Norvelle moved into first place as erstwhile leader R.C. Griffin dropped back to fifth.

East of town, Charlie Whorton stretched his lead over the field of modified stocks at Lubbock Speed Bowl as

CREDIBILITY STILL QUESTION — As Alger Hiss, right, prepares to ask that his 1950 conviction be set aside, the case continues to be fought out on the pages of two small liberal intellectual journals. In a new book, Smith College historian Allen Weinstein claims to show once and for all that Hiss was in fact guilty of perjury. But Weinstein's book is being challenged by Victor Navasky, left, editor of The Nation. Navasky's writings are being countered by Weinstein's responses in The New Republic. (AP Laserphoto)

Book's Credibility Challenged

NEW YORK (AP) — The Alger Hiss case began as a matter of credibility. Thirty years later, it still is.

Even as Hiss, at 73, prepares to ask that his 1950 conviction be set aside, the case is the subject of a major row fought out on the pages of two small liberal intellectual journals.

Thirty years ago, when Hiss was accused of a Communist past, the jury had to choose between conflicting stories told by Hiss and his accuser. Now readers must decide between a historian and an editor — each questioning whether the other can be believed.

In a new book, Smith College historian Allen Weinstein claims to show, once and for all, that Hiss was in fact guilty of perjury.

But Weinstein's own credibility is being challenged by the new editor of The Nation magazine, Victor Navasky. Navasky says he is an "agnostic" about Hiss — but Weinstein has not proved him guilty.

The issue is how to interpret one of the most spectacular domestic upsets of the Cold War, in which Hiss, a New Deal lawyer who had gone on to the State Department, was convicted of lying to a grand jury about an alleged past as a Communist agent in the 1930s.

The case fed the nation's fears of subversion, divided liberals into believers and disbelievers in Hiss, and helped launch the career of an aggressive young anti-Communist congressman, Richard Nixon.

Hiss has always denied having a Communist past or lying about it.

But Weinstein's detail-packed 674-page book, "Perjury: The Hiss-Chambers Case," comes to the conclusion that the jury "made no mistake in finding Alger Hiss guilty as charged."

Weinstein cites newly opened FBI files, defense files and interviews to claim that he found new bits of information which, taken together, discredit Hiss and back up his accuser, Whitaker Chambers.

When the book was published last month, many critics praised it.

Then Navasky wrote in The Nation, on April 8, that when he contacted six Weinstein sources, all questioned aspects of how interviews with them were used. Navasky also criticized "deceptive narration," "failure to flag contested claims as they arise," and "omissions of key documents or accounts."

Weinstein responded in The New Republic April 15, and the debate has gone back and forth since. He said three sources wrote to disagree about his conclusions —

hence a motive to claim misquotation. He said he has "material in my archive which proves that I have cited all six accurately." And in any event, he said, Navasky's argument is an "accusatory smokescreen" of "peripheral" issues, not the basics.

He added in a telephone interview: "Any book of this length will inevitably have inaccuracies creep in, but they are not dishonest inaccuracies or because of any lack of integrity as a scholar."

Navasky, however, says there is a basic flaw that, having shown up in six of six queries, calls the whole book into question. Weinstein, he said, "over-relied on people who were not reliable. At a minimum, they changed their story. At a maximum, he got it wrong."

"He seems to have taken Chambers' story and it seems to have been corroborated. But when you look at it, he's using Chambers to corroborate Chambers," Navasky said.

Navasky has been aided by William Reuben, a writer who believes Hiss innocent. He calls the book "dreadfully dishonest," and says the new information corroborates, at best, only "trivial" things.

When the case broke in 1948, Hiss had played roles at Yalta and in founding the U.N., but had left government to become president of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace. Chambers, claiming to have quit the Communist underground, told the House Un-American Activities Committee he had known Hiss as a Communist in the 1930s.

Hiss at first denied knowing Chambers, but after Chambers related personal details about Hiss, he recalled his accuser as a man he had known as "George Crosley," a writer. He sued Chambers for slander.

Until then, Chambers had denied espionage. But at that point, he produced documents he said Hiss passed to him in the 1930s — summaries of State Department papers said to have been typed on Hiss' typewriter, and microfilm which Chambers hid one night in a pumpkin.

Hiss' partisans called them forgeries, and said they were undermined by inconsistencies in Chambers' story about when he defected.

But the grand jury issued a perjury indictment based on Hiss' denial of passing the documents. A hung jury was followed by conviction, and Hiss served three years and eight months in prison.

In recent years, particularly since the Watergate scandal disgraced Nixon, Hiss' reputation has revived somewhat.

Millionaire Seeks More Than Fortune

NEW YORK (AP) — At 32, millionaire Eugene Krauss says he wants more out of life than a fancy house, trips around the globe and a well-endowed bank account. So he's studying to become a $50,000-a-year academic physician.

"The business world is tremendously stimulating and rewarding, but I just don't find it's the end goal of a lifetime," said Krauss.

Krauss built his fortune after leaving college and branching out from the family business. Now, after graduating Columbia University magna cum laude Wednesday, he will begin studies there for his clinical medicine degree in September.

Eventually, Krauss hopes to teach at a medical school and do research in cell biology and neurology. Some day, he said, he could earn as much as $50,000 a year — "but that's if you're successful."

"There are things in this world that will afford me the ability to develop more as a person," said Krauss. His father and brother will take over his valve business and his share of the family concern, which manufacture precision components for the aerospace industry.

"Success has become a very personal thing to me," Krauss said in a telephone interview from his mansion in Westbury on Long Island.

"I'm looking for success as a human being, if there's development as far as one can go as a human being."

As a teen-ager, Krauss left Long Beach High School after three years, to enroll in the pre-med program at Adelphi University. "But I was young and interested in the social aspects. I was concerned about fraternities and fitting in socially," he recalled.

So two years later, a bored, 18-year-old Krauss dropped out of college and began working for his father — who was something of a success on his own. He had come to the United States "in 1939 with $15 in his pocket," Krauss said, after having left Europe and lived for a time in Palestine. The father built a small stake, bought a rundown lathe for $500, and founded the family business.

The son started there, and before long was traveling to Belgium and Israel to establish subsidiaries. In 1970, he formed his own company, which makes pneumatic valves.

During the following years, Krauss says, he spent a lot of time thinking about material success — his home, his cars, his trips.

"But then at a certain point, when the business is successful, it gives one enough time to think about what life is all about."

In January 1976, in search of "more intellectual stimulation," Krauss enrolled in Columbia's adult division, "to test the waters."

'Grumpy' Dolphin Performs Well

FOR YOUR WANT ADS CALL 762-882

KEY BISCAYNE, Fla. (AP) — From where the spectators sat, the performance looked like a flawless water ballet by two young women and a pair of dolphins. The audience never knew that a dolphin named Pancho was having a grumpy day.

Joan Bauer knew. She was under water, looking at Pancho's 88 teeth.

"Pancho came at me with his mouth open," she said. "It's something that happens very rarely."

Fortunately, Pancho remembered his manners and the show went on.

The incident was just another ripple in a life that has been a succession of the unexpected since Miss Bauer, 29, became head of a five-girl troupe of trainers and a lagoon full of capricious dolphins.

"No one's ever been hurt since I've been here," she said between shows at the Miami Seaquarium's Flipper Set. "I think that's a remarkable statistic, considering that you are in their environment. You are totally at their mercy if they wanted to do something."

Ending up as a professional girl-on-a-dolphin wasn't her plan. Joan Caron Bauer, a Miami native, studied psychology as an undergraduate at Florida State University, then earned a master's degree in special education from Virginia Commonwealth University in Richmond.

She taught children with learning disabilities, went to El Salvador to help train teachers for the Peace Corps, then returned to Dade County to assist migrant workers. In July 1976, she went to work at the Seaquarium and found that her training in teaching retarded children came in handy with dolphins.

"Basically, the same principles of rewarding, ignoring and punishing can be used with the dolphins," she said. "When a kid does something you like, you want him to do it again, you reinforce him for it."

Scientists consider the dolphin one of the most intelligent animals. Miss Bauer conceded it's hard to avoid seeing human characteristics in her charges.

"Pedro is like the kid who sits in the back of the room and throws spitballs," she said. There's also Papi, the class bully. And Pancho, who loves to have buckets of water dumped in his mouth — a sort of dolphin cocktail.

Several dolphins here are understudies of Flipper, star of two motion pictures and a television series. As is the case with most animal entertainers, Flipper's billing has been shared by a number of different performers.

Trainers and dolphins alike are critiqued during each show by one trainer who sits at the side to watch the four-day performances.

One recent day, the dolphin called Papi was having trouble in bunches. His report card for the 11:10 a.m. show carried a trainer's terse notation: "Spastic."

By 3:10, Papi was trying again. Miss Bauer joined the crowd in the stands as the dolphins began a stunt involving use of their powerful tails to smack inflated balls up into the startled audience.

Flipper and Pedro were right on target. But Papi missed his ball entirely. He circled, zoomed in for another try and connected, but this time belted the ball the wrong way, to the center of the lagoon.

"Oh, Papi," Miss Bauer moaned, "your aim is terrible."

Next, a spectacular stunt in which three dolphins soar from the water in a series of majestic, coordinated swan dives called "bows." But when Flipper and Pedro soared, Papi flopped over in reverse.

"Omigod," gasped Miss Bauer. "Papi's doing back dives."

A balky dolphin can lead to intriguing conjecture about just how smart these sleek gray mammals really are. "They're generally one step ahead of you," Miss Bauer said.

Alpert's New Sound Long Way From Tijuana

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — The golden horn is still there and the effortless California Cool way of playing is too. But the sound coming out of Herb Alpert's brass these days is a long way from Tijuana — and a short hop from Johannesburg.

Alpert, whose Tijuana Brass sold more than 50 million records in the 1960s, is climbing the charts now with a jazz album cut in collaboration with South African Hugh Masekela, and has even made an unlikely appearance on Soul Train to boost it.

The pair just completed a whirlwind tour with a tight, talented group of seven sidemen including a pianist from Blood, Sweat and Tears and a percussionist from Weather Report.

The heart of the music is still brass, with Alpert on trumpet, Masekela on flugel horn and fellow South African Jonas Gwanwa on trombone. But its soul is hardly TJB with a different beat. No Taste of Honey Redux or even Grazing in the Grass Part II here.

Instead there are long solos, driving rhythms, South African melodies like "Skokiaan," and "Ring Bell" and dashes of Stevie Wonder thrown in for good measure. A fusion of West Indian, South African and Tijuana bee-bop, Alpert calls it.

And instead of the huge halls and baseball stadiums TJB filled with regularity in the '60s, Alpert and Masekela are played small clubs in 11 cities.

"With these musicians, it's exciting to evolve into some unknown territory," Alpert said after the tour opened to standing-room and wild applause at Rosy's posh jazz club here. "I put my horn in the case in '69 because I was tired. We tried a reunion in '74 but the sparks weren't there.

"I was searching for something that wasn't happening at that point. But it's fun again now, playing smaller, more immediate places. After we hit with the Brass, we never got a feeling of the audience — just a lot of lit cigarettes in front of us."

The composition of the audiences is different now too. Black faces appear as readily as the white ones that supported Alpert in the old days. And they are sophisticated jazz fans, ready to let the group go where it wants, rather than impatiently demanding music they know.

"We tried tampering with some of the old songs, but it didn't work — that was then," said the man who co-founded giant A&M Records and the Brass in the early '60s. "Most people won't be familiar with what we are playing now, but the sound has been in my head for a long time. I just hadn't gotten what I wanted out until Hugh and I got together.

"We met over the phone when I called a friend in L.A. and Hugh answered by accident. We began talking and I played him some of the tapes of things I had been working on. The moment I saw him, I got a flash of playing together."

Alpert said he and Masekela went into the studio with a group of session men to fool around, but liked what they were doing so much, they made it into an album, primarily featuring the songs of South African composer Caiphus Semenya.

"It was magic," Alpert recalled of the sessions last November. "We did the first night on a roll and then did two more. We recorded it live and very unpretentious. "Too many people want to make a clinical masterpiece when they are recording. They work on it months on end, trying to clean it up. But life isn't perfect."

Life is going pretty well for the mustachioed Alpert these days, however. Despite the flecks of gray in his hair and a line or two on his face, he claims playing his old, relaxed style to a new beat has made him young again.

"We want to let the disbelievers hear for themselves," he said. "But making music is enjoyable again and I am not thinking about how many records we are going to sell. I feel 43 going on 30."

Child Stars Refused Admission To Movies

NEW YORK (AP) — Unless they were accompanied by parent or guardian, the child stars in several of French director Louis Malle's films couldn't just walk in to the theater where they appeared on the screen. Malle's first film in America — "Pretty Baby," starring Brooke Shields — is no exception.

Shields, who turned 12 during the shooting of this film, plays the child of a prostitute who grows up in a brothel in Storyville, the New Orleans red-light district. The film — set in 1917, when the bordellos were closed down by the Navy — also stars Keith Carradine and Susan Sarandon.

It is rated R, which means restricted, under 17 requires accompanying parent or adult guardian," according to the industry code. The film has been banned in parts of Canada.

The star in "Murmur of the Heart," which won Malle an Oscar nomination for best screenplay in 1973, is a 14-year-old. It's the story about a boy who sleeps with his mother.

"He couldn't see the movie in France," Malle said in an interview. "It was forbidden to people under 18, and I think I had the same problem with 'Zazie Dans le Metro,'" his third film (1960). It was adapted from Raymond Quenau's bestselling comic novel about the adventures of a precocious 11-year-old visiting her transvestite uncle in Paris.

"It's happened to me several times and I think it's very hypocritical, but what can I do about censorship," said Malle, who admitted that "Pretty Baby" — which has no explicit sex scenes — deals with a touchy subject. He said, however, that he believes the ratings system for movies is "ridiculous" when "violence is very, very heavy on American TV."

Malle said he would not hesitate to show his children his films. "My experience with children, and I've been dealing with a number of them in all these recent films, (is that) they know a lot more about everything than adults want them to know.

"People asked me 'how can you direct Brooke Shields to do things she doesn't know everything about?' I'm sorry, she knows everything about it. Especially children today, 12, 13, ... with TV, sexual education now largely provided in schools, they know everything."

Malle, 46, has two children, aged 3 and 6. "I'm not married, no, but I have two children. I was married, a long time ago, but I've been divorced since 1968.

"I spend a lot of time with my children. And if I spend the summer working here, I'll have them with me, so that I'll spend time with them," said Malle, whose next film takes place in New York.

Malle has never avoided taboo subjects. His "Lacombe, Lucien," which received the Oscar nomination for best foreign film in 1974, deals with the long-suppressed topic of the involvement of ordinary French citizens in Nazi collaboration during the World War II. The title character is 17.

Daniels Denies Performance Helped Carter Win Election

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Country-rock star Charlie Daniels, who chews tobacco and wears denim and wide-brimmed cowboy hats, denies he rerouted American political history.

In mid-April, Daniels was among 200 guests of President and Mrs. Carter at a White House reception for members of the Country Music Association. Carter said:

"When I was broke and didn't have any money to run my campaign, Charlie Daniels gave a benefit performance for me. I might not be president today without his help."

A week later, Daniels sat in a fifth floor suite of a Nashville office building, spat tobacco juice into a paper cup, fondled a red bandanna and told a visitor:

"He's given me too much credit. He was 'Jimmy Who?' at the time, but Marshall Tucker played a benefit before we did. He said it was crucial — because of the time and money. I did not feel that way. We were a small part of him jelling later. He's just an appreciative man."

Daniels and his band played benefit concerts for Carter in Atlanta, Jacksonville, Fla., and Nashville. The Atlanta benefit was before Carter won the Democratic presidential nomination in 1976.

"We're always receptive to doing' benefits," Daniels said. "I didn't know if he would be president but he was a straight talker. I believed in what he stood for."

"I feel about him the way many did about John Kennedy. He's my man. I wish there were hundreds of persons I could feel that way about."

"The first time I saw him was at the benefit in Atlanta. When he introduced the band, he said four things: 'I'm Jimmy Carter. I'm running for president. I need your help. Here's the band.' He was the shortest-winded politician I'd ever heard."

After Carter's election, Daniels and his band played for the inaugural at the D.C. Armory, and Daniels performed at the White House during his visit in April.

About the White House, Daniels said, "It's a nice place to visit but I wouldn't want to live there. I kept looking for peeing paint or dust on the chandeliers but there wasn't any. I felt weird puttin' our cigars in antique ashtrays."

Daniels said the president and Mrs. Carter stayed until 10:30. "I got the impression they had a good time," he said.

NO KINGMAKER — Country-rock star Charlie Daniels says he's been given too much credit by President Carter for helping Carter raise funds while campaigning. The president said recently he might not be president without Daniels' help. This picture was taken in April when President and Mrs. Carter invited Daniels to a White House reception. (AP Laserphoto)

Dry Spell Teaches Lesson

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Californians who lived through a brutal two-year drought apparently learned a hard lesson from the lengthy dry spell — waste not, want not.

The state Department of Water Resources says the state's 22 million residents, even with reservoirs overflowing and the drought officially over, are using 20 percent less water than they did in pre-drought days.

"Needless to say, it's pretty encouraging," said Don Engdahl of the department's conservation education division. "There is plenty of evidence Californians are using less water than before the drought. As near as we can tell, consumption in urban areas is down 20 percent from pre-drought days."

The state hired Field Research Corp., which publishes the respected California Poll, to make a statewide survey in late March of water conservation attitudes.

About 1,000 people were questioned. Sixty percent said they now considered water conservation a matter of great importance, although Engdahl said supplies are "very, very good."

Residents of Northern California, who bore the most severe hardships during the drought, were more enthusiastic than their counterparts to the south about saving water.

About 67 percent of those questioned in Northern California said they considered water conservation "extremely" or "very" important. In Southern California, 59 percent responded in a similar vein to the same question.

Statewide, 78 percent of those surveyed said they supported water conservation more now because of its energy-saving potential.

Using one day as an example, May 8, Marin County just north of San Francisco used 21.5 million gallons of water, compared to 32.5 million gallons on the same day the year before the drought.

One problem which arose during the strict days of the drought continues now — increased water rates and reduced income. The Los Angeles Department of Water and Power, for example, now charges 34.8 cents per hundred cubic feet of water, compared to 29 cents for the same amount before the drought.

Department spokesman Dennis Whitney said the drought, and the drastic cut in use it triggered, was responsible for about half the increase in rates, inflation caused the other half.

Faces Reveal Universal Prayers

●'Whoever You are--wherever You are--who brought us together, protect the precious harmony of our love.'

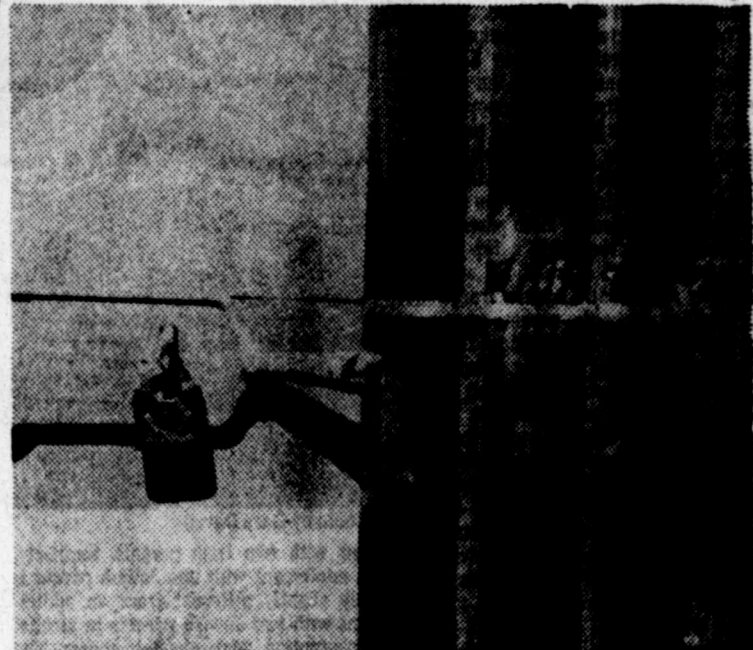

●'Please God, no more killing. Let him live to use his learning for himself, for Israel.'

●'I'm a God-fearing American. And America is for real Americans. And that's what I'm teaching my boys in Your name.'

Prayer does not come only from the throat, says author Christopher Cross. Instead it can be seen in the faces of those around us. 'It is the prayer that is quiet--but eloquent,' he writes. 'It is the prayer that flows, most often unnoticed, from deep within, to express our most private, yet universal anxieties and aspirations.' Many such expressions can be found in Cross' new book, 'Faces of Prayer,' recently published by Grosset and Dunlap, and some of which are published on this page. Cross, who has written several other books on prayer and the roles of chaplains in war, hopes his latest will bring about 'renewed realization that they are we and we are they and that within each of us lies the answers to our prayers.'

●'How will You ever find me behind all this steel and concrete...just when I need help the most?'

●'I know I don't look so good on the outside. But inside I'm okay. So, don't be ashamed of me, God.'

●'Thank You for the life we've had. Take us together, dear Lord.'

●'Jesus, how do I explain this to him? I can't tell him this is Thy will, can I?'

●'It's not lonely doing Your work, for I know You are at my side.'

Licensing Nuclear Power Hit

WASHINGTON (AP) — Energy Secretary James R. Schlesinger told Congress Thursday that nuclear energy is only "barely alive" as an energy option and that it will fade even more without major changes in the way atomic plants are licensed.

Schlesinger also told a Senate subcommittee that linking the issue of nuclear waste disposal with licensing legislation could prove disastrous for the future of nuclear energy in this country.

Testifying for an administration bill to speed up the licensing process, Schlesinger said that fewer utilities each year are seriously considering building nuclear power plants.

He said this is because of high financial risks "and planning uncertainties associated with bringing such a plant from conception to operation."

Since the beginning of 1976, there have been only nine orders for new power plants and 23 cancellations of such plants planned, Schlesinger told the nuclear regulation subcommittee of the Senate Environment Committee.

He said the administration bill would end many of these uncertainties by cutting almost in half the 10 to 12 years it now takes before construction can begin on an atomic plant.

This would be accomplished through encouraging standardized designs for reactors, streamlining the hearing process and giving states a greater say in determining environmental issues, Schlesinger said.

"We are attempting to keep the nuclear option alive. Now it's barely alive," Schlesinger said.

But subcommittee Chairman Gary Hart, D-Colo., predicted an uphill battle, claiming the administration's bill is "without substantial support from either the proponents or opponents of nuclear power."

Hart asked Schlesinger if he could support proposals by environmentalists to amend the bill to make availability of nuclear waste disposal sites a factor in future licensing decisions.

Schlesinger said could not and that such a connection would be a mistake.

He said that the president, when reviewing a final draft of the administration bill, rejected suggestions from some advisers — who Schlesinger said were skeptical of nuclear energy in general — that a nuclear waste section be added.

Schlesinger said the nuclear waste issue, while a crucial one in its own right, "is irrelevant to improving the licensing process."

Some critics of nuclear power in Congress are advocating a moratorium barring licensing of any new nuclear plants until adequate waste disposal sites are available.

Currently, radioactive wastes from commercial power plants are being stored in the form of spent fuel rods in cooling ponds at the reactor sites. The government is exploring the possibility of several national sites for dumping this 30-year accumulation of nuclear wastes but has yet to come up with any specific proposals.

Schlesinger said if such a moratorium were enacted, "it is plain that we would not be able to make use of nuclear power to help the nation's energy problems. I would be reluctant to see that occur."

Former Chief Drops Appeal Of Dismissal

HOUSTON (AP) — Carol M. Lynn, the former police chief who was fired after being named in a federal obstruction of justice charge, Thursday withdrew his appeal of the dismissal.

Lynn advised the City Civil Service Commission he is withdrawing the appeal "while steadfastly maintaining my innocence of any wrongdoing."

James Pape, a lawyer for Lynn, said he advised his client that defending the allegations before the commission would jeopardize a fair trial in federal court.

Lynn, police chief in 1976-78, was arrested April 10 while on duty as an assistant police chief. He was freed on $50,000 bond on the charge involving an alleged plot to extort $45,000 from a defendant in a federal securities case. He was fired April 20 and he filed notice of appeal April 28.

Under state law, the commission must proceed with a hearing within 30 days.

Pape said he first asked the commission to delay the proceedings but that the city attorney's office advised the commission it would lose jurisdiction if it failed to act within the 30-day period.

Gun Makers, Sellers Ask Sidetrack For Rules

WASHINGTON (AP) — Gun retailers and manufacturers asked Congress on Thursday to sidetrack proposed firearms regulations, which they say will lead to a national gun registration system.

The regulations would increase the identification and reporting requirements for importers, manufacturers and retailers of guns.

Robert E.P. Cherry, director of the National Sporting Goods Association, said the cost of meeting the requirements would force many small retailers of firearms out of business and not have any significant effect on criminals.

"This is just another example of penalties on the law-abiding with no inconvenience whatever to the criminal element," he told a House Judiciary subcommittee on crime.

He testified as the subcommittee held a second day of hearings on regulations which the Treasury Department's Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms claims would improve its ability to trace weapons involved in crimes. The bureau also says the regulations would enable it to detect patterns of firearms traffic in the United States.

"Our attempt here is not to create some new national citizen's file," said Richard J. Davis, an assistant Treasury secretary.

William B. Ruger, chairman and president of Sturm, Ruger and Co., one of the nation's largest gun manufacturers, insisted that the regulations "would essentially provide the base for ATF to establish a centralized federal registration of all firearms in the United States."

He said that besides higher expenses and more paperwork for gun dealers, costs to consumers would go up.

The regulations would set the following conditions:

— Wholesalers, manufacturers, retailers and importers of firearms would have to submit written, quarterly reports on how they had disposed of firearms. No names and addresses of private citizens would be required.

— Each federal firearms licensee would have to report a theft or loss of a gun or the recovery of a previously reported gun to ATF within 24 hours.

— Each firearm manufactured or imported in the U.S. would carry a 14-digit serial number.

— Military personnel would have to obtain advance authorization before bringing into the United States any weapons they bought abroad.

ATF is accepting public comments on the regulations until May 22. The Rules would not go into effect before next year.

Ethnic Drinking Patterns Prove Resistant To 'Americanization'

EDITOR'S NOTE: The results of a survey of more than 1,000 American parents and grandparents reveal the drinking habits of American children. In the 1970s, the majority of parents and grandparents who responded to the survey, which was conducted by the National Opinion Research Center (NORC) for the National Institutes of Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism (NIAAA), reported that the drinking patterns of American ethnic groups of Western European origin who reside in our major metropolitan areas—Chicago, New York, Los Angeles and Minneapolis. The authors of the survey are with the University of Chicago's Institute for Social Research Center.

(c) 1978, Universal Press

The differences among American ethnic groups in their use and abuse of alcohol is not likely to change, according to a study of American families conducted by the National Opinion Research Center (NORC) for the National Institutes of Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism (NIAAA). In three generations — grandparents, parents, teen-age children — the Irish are likely to be heavy drinkers and to incur serious drinking problems; Jews drink very little and are most unlikely to have serious drinking problems. Italians and Swedes are much more likely than the Jews to encounter serious problems with drinking.

Fifth In A Series

None of these differences need be attributed to genetic or biological inheritance; most of them can be accounted for by environmental factors such as the drinking of parents and spouse and friends or the amount of affection and authoritarianism in family life — and in the case of some Irish men deficient self-confidence caused by an authoritarian family.

Since the variety of drinking behavior seems to be cultural rather than biological, it might be expected that in time these differences would erode as a common American drinking culture emerged. Even if the differences persist among today's adolescents, it might be argued, surely there are forces at work in American society that will diminish, if not eliminate, the differences completely in the next generation.

However, while cultural forces are not as strong as biological forces, they are still very strong. It is a mistake to assume without evidence that the mere passage of time will eliminate durable subcultural differences, particularly in matters that have such strong traditional support as the use and abuse of alcohol. The NORC team had available five measures of "assimilation" into American society, any one of which might reasonably have led to a diminishing of the differences in the ethnic groups' approach to alcohol. The better educated a person is, it might be argued, the more likely he is to leave behind his own ethnic drinking pattern. Also, the longer his family has been in this country (if, for example, all his grandparents were born in America), the less likely he would be to have a characteristically ethnic approach to alcohol use.

Similarly, if a person no longer thinks ethnicity is important, or if he no longer feels particularly close to his ethnic group, he ought to be less likely to have an uniquely ethnic approach to drinking. Finally, if a person no longer lives in a neighborhood where large numbers of his own ethnic group live, it does not seem unreasonable to believe that he will leave his own ethnic drinking style behind in the old neighborhood.

These five factors — education, number of grandparents born in America, closeness to ethnic groups, the importance of ethnicity, and proportion of one's own ethnic group in the neighborhood — all were correlated with problem drinking, with drinking environment created by one's friends, and the amount of liquor consumed for both parents and adolescent children. With a few exceptions none of the correlations was statistically significant. Children from Italian families where the parents were better educated were slightly more likely to experience drinking problems during adolescence; Jews who had moved out of heavily Jewish neighborhoods were more likely to have serious drinking problems and to be in a heavier drinking environment in both generations than those who live in predominantly Jewish neighborhoods — though even outside of the Jewish neighborhoods, Jews still drink much less and are much less likely to have drinking problems than anyone else.

It would appear, then, that drinking habits of Americans are absorbed from their family environment very early in life. They are relatively unresponsive to all the forces that have been presumed to make for Americanization.

Even ethnic intermarriage seems to have little impact on dissolving ethnic drinking subcultures. If an adolescent child has one Irish parent, for example, there is little difference between his drinking behavior and that of an adolescent with two Irish parents. Similarly, an adolescent with one Jewish parent is only slightly different from an adolescent with two Jewish parents in alcohol consumption and alcohol abuse. The Jewish and Irish drinking subcultures are so powerful, in other words, that it apparently only takes one parent to pass the subculture on to one child.

The persistence of different alcohol subcultures even after intermarriage raises the question of whether ethnic diversity in America will erode nearly so quickly as many people thought. There is also evidence that styles of political participation, religious activity, and reaction to aging and death are simply not affected by "assimilation" forces. Alcohol use and abuse happens to be one of the most obvious and most serious examples of ethnic diversity which is likely to be with Americans for a long time to come.

The four groups chosen for the NORC/NIAAA research were selected because a good deal was already known about their drinking behavior. It hoped that future research will study parents and adolescent children of Slavic, black, Hispanic, and Asiatic American families.
