

NOBODY CARES — Carol O'Shea of Seattle, who spent 10 hours in jail rather than pay $25 in parking fines, found the experience shocking and depressing. She claims the matrons waited hours before allowing her to call her employer, despite fears that she might lose her job. (AP Laserphoto)

Hours In Jail Stun Woman

SEATTLE (AP) — Carol O'Shea, a 38-year-old mother of five, shuddered as the huge cell door clanged shut.

She had refused to pay $25 in fines for two parking tickets and instead accepted a day in jail — $25 worth of time. She found the depths of despair in the slow-moving moments.

"I guess it was a matter of principle," she said Monday. "I cried for three days after that. It's a humiliating, degrading place."

"All around, it was a surprise," she said. "I had gone to court to fight a parking ticket. When he, wrongly, I thought, found me guilty, I said it was unfair, I wouldn't pay the fine. The judge said that was my right, and right there sent me to jail."

"Nobody cares," she scrawled on a piece of colored paper as the hours ticked away. Her notes were impressions of 10 hours, beginning at noon, April 12.

"The matron took my books, my shawl, and made me stand still while one lady took off my wedding band.... I got cold and asked if I could either have my shawl back or a sweater. I was told to wait."

She was given a sheet and moved to a cell.

"I've been asking every 15 to 20 minutes to call my job so I wouldn't lose it — they keep telling me to wait. As one young matron put it, 'If you keep bugging me, it'll take that much longer.'"

"Well, I'm getting nervous ... I'm afraid. I'll get fired if I don't call or show up..."

"I just knocked on the door. The matron told me she'd bust my head if I didn't quit knocking. I told her I had to call my job ... I got so mad I kicked the door. With that the old lady came into my cell and took me to a padded cell."

Later, "Here I am in a padded cell. Kathy and Del, mom understands you better now. (They are two of her teen-age children who have been in homes for delinquent children off and on.)"

"I love my children and have better compassion and understanding for them. Will this nightmare ever end?"

"Just now one of the young matrons came by and peeked into this little padded cell ... Nobody cares if I keep my job. NOBODY CARES..."

"It's now 2 p.m. I finally got to use the phone ... I finally got nerve enough to call my job. It was humiliating for me to tell Joanne why I wanted to talk to Al, but he couldn't come to the phone anyway because he was busy. She just said she'd give him the message."

Dinner came. The night shift of matrons arrived. She had had enough of jail. Her husband Pat posted bail and she left. She did not lose her job.

Terrorists Slay Moro; Body Found In Rome

ROME (AP) — The blood-smeared body of former Premier Aldo Moro, shot in the back of the head and his hands and feet chained, was found in a parked car in the heart of Rome today, 55 days after he was kidnapped by the Red Brigades.

Police said they found five spent cartridges in the car, a stolen red Renault bearing Rome license plates.

The 61-year-old Moro also had several wounds in the back, police sources said.

The body, hunched over on the floor of the Renault's backseat, was clad in the same dark gray suit Moro was wearing when he was kidnapped March 16 by a dozen terrorists who ambushed his two-car motorcade on a Rome street, killing his five police bodyguards.

A blue overcoat and red blanket also were wrapped around the body. It was discovered by a police bomb expert who broke into the car. Firemen who saw it said the face was extremely pale, and Moro's 5-foot-11 frame had lost considerable weight.

The discovery ended tragically an ordeal that traumatized Italy and transfixed the attention of the world.

His Marxist revolutionary Red Brigade kidnapers claimed Moro was a symbol of "imperialistic" oppression of the working class. Last Friday, the terrorists issued the last of a series of messages, saying they were "carrying out" a death "verdict" against Moro because the Christian Democrats had refused to negotiate their demand for the release of 13 jailed terrorists in exchange for Moro's life.

After the body was found, Premier Giulio Andreotti called an emergency Cabinet session and President Giovanni Leone scheduled an address to the nation. Italy's major unions called an eight-hour work stoppage.

In Washington, the State Department condemned the killing as a "cowardly and contemptible act." The Vatican radio called it a "barbarous murder ... which takes on in this tragic hour a nearly sacrificial value." Upon hearing the news, Pope Paul VI, a personal friend of the slain politician, went to pray in his private chapel.

Former President Giuseppe Saragat said, "Moro's body is the body of the First Republic, which is now dead." He referred to the republic established in 1946, when the Italian monarchy was voted out in a plebiscite.

The body was found at 1:30 p.m. — 7:30 a.m. CDT — on Via Michelangelo Caetani, a narrow cobblestoned street of 15th and 16th century palaces running alongside Communist party headquarters and just a stone's throw from Christian Democrat headquarters. It was just two blocks from the busiest intersection in Rome.

Officers went to the area and discovered the body after police headquarters received an anonymous telephone call saying a bomb had been placed in a car parked on Via Funari, adjacent to the 200-yard-long Via Caetani.

They found nothing on Via Funari but then checked Via Caetani. The car apparently had been parked on the street for several hours, police said. They said Moro may have been shot in the car.

Still wrapped in the blanket, the body was blessed by a priest from the nearby Church of Jesus and then was loaded into an ambulance and taken away to a morgue for an autopsy. Police cordoned off the area. Crowds of weeping Romans congregated on the tiny street. Hundreds of other ordinary citizens gathered outside the Moro home five miles away in Rome's Monte Mario section, and on the nearby tree-shaded Via Mario Fani, scene of the kidnap-ambush.

Police cars with sirens whining sped through the city, deserted as usual during the early afternoon lunch hours. Police said they had received other tips before the discovery of the car and were throwing out dragnets across the city.

Franco Evangelisti, top aide to Premier Giulio Andreotti, made the first official identification of the body.

Via Caetani leads into Via Botteghe Oscure, site of Communist Party headquarters two blocks from the traffic-filled Piazza Venezia intersection.

The Italian Communist Party's directorate went into session immediately, and party official Giancarlo Pajetta said as he entered the meeting, "This is a crime of sadist ferocity."

Moro was president of the ruling Christian Democrat Party and a five-time former premier and had been expected to become Italy's next president.

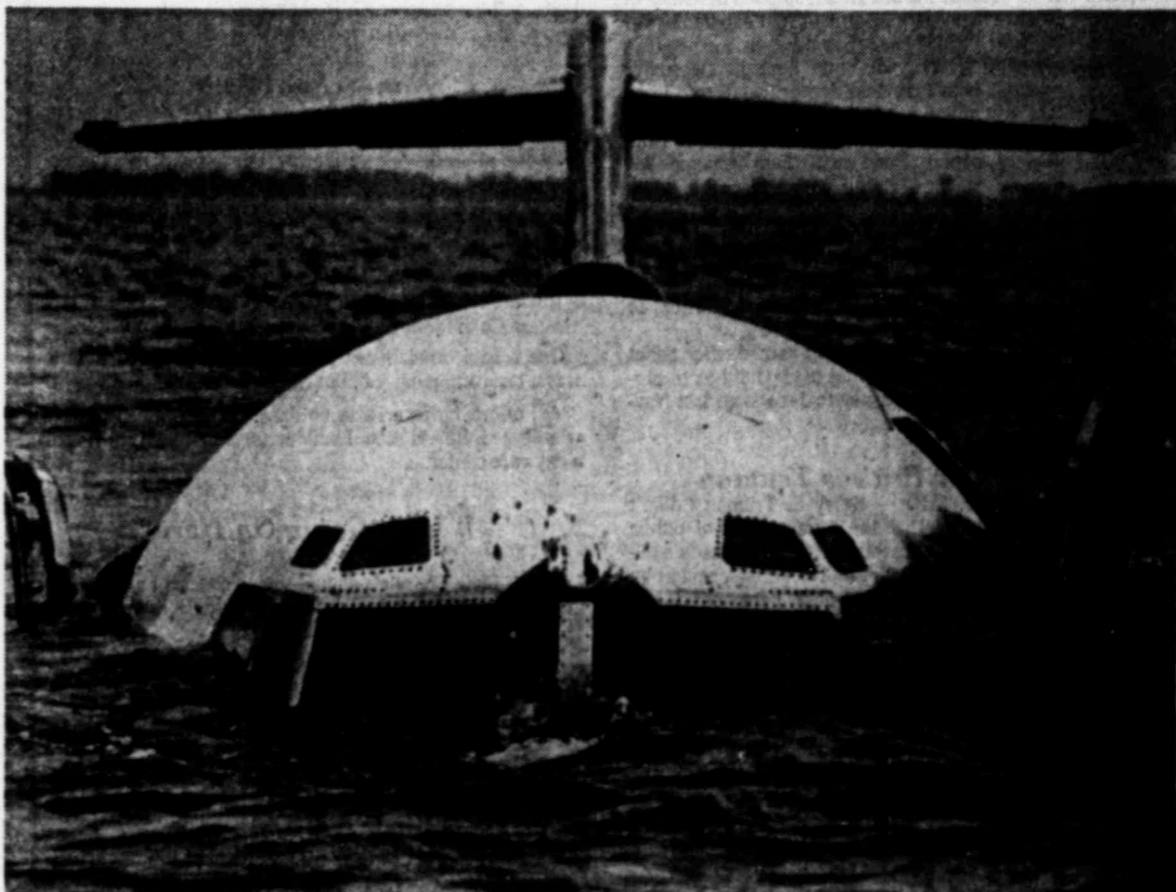

During Moro's 55-day captivity, the Marxist urban guerrillas had delivered "communiques" to the news media saying their captive, generally regarded as this nation's most influential political leader, had been "sentenced" to death at a "people's trial" on grounds that his Christian Democrats had taken anti-proletarian stands during their three decades as Italy's ruling party.

Moro himself wrote a stream of letters to political leaders urging them to bargain with his captors. In a desperate handwritten letter April 24, Moro said, "We are at zero hour ... massacre time is approaching."

Italy's interior minister, Francesco Cossiga, one of Moro's Christian Democrat proteges, was one of the first to arrive at the scene after police and bomb experts opened the doors of the parked Renault.

Since the kidnapping, the area had been one of the most heavily guarded neighborhoods of Rome.

CRASHES IN BAY — A National Airlines 727 is almost covered by the waters of Escambia Bay at Pensacola, Fla., after crash-landing during an approach to the Pensacola airport Monday night. Three bodies of passengers were found by rescuers, but most of those aboard the craft survived the impact and the exposure to fuel-polluted water. (AP Laserphoto)

Three Passengers Die In Jet Crash

PENSACOLA, Fla. (AP) — A National Airlines jet carrying 58 persons crashed into Escambia Bay while coming in for a landing, forcing stunned passengers to scramble out emergency doors into fog and a sea slicked with jet fuel. Three passengers were killed.

Most of the 52 passengers aboard the Boeing 727 were saved because a tugboat captain who saw the crash brought his barge to the rescue. The passengers had no warning that anything was wrong until the plane hit the water Monday night and came to rest about 500 yards from shore, settling in mud about 10 feet below the bay's surface.

"We were on our final approach," said Capt. Ronald Gift, a Navy pilot from Carmel, Calif., who was a passenger. "There was no warning, no violent maneuvering, no surging of the engines."

The airline initially listed 55 passengers, but later said three of those had never gotten aboard.

Three bodies were found floating near the plane. Divers sent into the partially submerged craft said everybody was out. But fog and haze hampered rescue efforts during the night, and a thunderstorm that moved over the bay early today churned up the seas as divers searched for the missing. A head count was further confused because passengers were scattered among six hospitals and several rescue stations.

Many were injured in the crash, but dozens escaped safely when tugboat captain Glenn E. McDonald, 41, pulled his barge, the Little Mac, to the plane, tied it up and helped men, women and children clamber aboard.

"If that barge hadn't been there, there's no telling how many would have drowned," said Marine Patrol Sgt. William Cleary.

McDonald's wife Janet said her husband, a marine supply shop owner from Gulf Breeze, was in the vicinity of the plane because he himself was lost in the fog.

"He didn't know why he was there, but now he believes he was there for a reason," she said. "He thought it was about to crash down on top of him, but it came down about 300 yards away." After spending the night pulling survivors from the wreck, McDonald went home, slept for two hours and returned to work.

The plane, Flight 193 out of Mobile, Ala., crashed on the western tip of Florida.

Robber Frees Hostages, Surrenders To Officers

TORRANCE, Calif. (AP) — A gunman thwarted in a robbery attempt took seven women hostage in a jewelry store, then released them over a 12-hour period before surrendering today, authorities said.

Police said William John Dwyer, 29, walked from the store with his hands up about 9:20 a.m. CDT. He left his 2-year-old daughter behind, and police brought her safely from the store.

Torrance Police Department spokesman Jim Papsit said Dwyer had been holding the child hostage while he pressed demands for safe transportation to an unspecified location.

Police said Dwyer's wife, Sharon, had been allowed to enter the store through the night to bring him medication, but she was no longer inside. The child was thought to have entered with her.

Authorities would not say what kind of medication Dwyer was taking.

The next-to-last hostage to be freed, Mary Patton, 21, walked from the store about 5:30 a.m., and her sister, Joy, 19, left about 45 minutes later. Both worked at a dress shop in a shopping center where the jewelry store is located.

Dwyer took the seven hostages after police arrived while he was robbing the store about 6 p.m. Monday, police said. He ran back into the store, leaving a shopping cart full of jewelry at the front door, said police Lt. Jim Foster.

Pat McNeill, 49, of Redondo Beach, the fifth hostage to escape, was shot twice in the thigh as she fled, but she was listed in good condition at a hospital, police said.

At that time, Lt. Peter Herley said police were playing "a waiting game" in an effort to negotiate for the safety of the remaining hostages. The Torrance police hostage negotiating team and a SWAT team were on the scene while about 30 officers tried to keep the growing crowd of sightseers out of the line of fire, Herley said.

"We have been in contact with him by telephone and he says he wants a car and the jewelry," Foster added. "But he gets wound up and starts shouting hysterically."

Foster said the man formerly was a patient at a mental hospital in New Mexico. He did not say how long he was in the institution.

Funnels, Floods Lash Southeast

By United Press International
Tornadoes and flooding rains pounded portions of the South today. A tornado roared near Georgia's State Capitol in Atlanta late Monday, injuring at least 18 people and causing extensive property damage.

The tornado ripped through Atlanta's Forest Park, about 10 miles south of the capital city, causing widespread damage to a shopping center and two apartment projects. Early damage estimates amounted to $3 million.

A spokesman at Clayton County Hospital said two victims were injured seriously enough to be kept overnight. Two injuries occurred when a twister hit an industrial park in DeKalb County, not far from Atlanta.

Flash-flood watches were posted for most of the South and Southeast, lashed by monsoon-like rains through most of the weekend and Monday. More showers extended across much of the nation from Montana through the mid-Atlantic Coast.

The Tombigbee River crested at 27.1 feet at Tupelo, Miss., 6 feet above flood stage, but Civil Defense officials said the overflow poured into uninhabited river bottomlands and there were no evacuations. At Columbus, Miss., the Tombigbee was at 19 feet — up 11.3 feet but still 10 feet under flood stage — and was not expected to crest until about Friday. Flooding was also predicted for the Warrior River in Alabama.

In Birmingham, Ala., officials reported water up to the doors of some houses at the Tallapoosa Street exit of Interstate 59.

At least one traffic death was related to the rains in Alabama and two more deaths were reported from weather-related accidents in Louisiana.

Hobbs Man Rescued From Wild Balloon

By PAT CARLSON
Avalanche-Journal Staff
A 29-year-old Hobbs, N.M., man remained in serious condition at Methodist Hospital here today after he nearly was suffocated by a helium-filled balloon in an incredible freak accident near Levelland this weekend.

Michael Garner reportedly became enmeshed in the huge double-nylon fabric balloon after it was shot down in a wild chase starting at Hobbs, N.M., Saturday. According to lawmen, the promotional balloon was moored at a Hobbs automobile dealership when it broke loose about noon Saturday.

Garner, truck sales manager for the firm, reportedly went home, got a rifle and told his wife to call a friend, Zip

Franklin, who is a rancher-pilot. As the balloon drifted northeast toward Denver City it reportedly had reached a height of about 15,000 feet. According to Dr. Bill McCollough, a Levelland physician-pilot who was one of Garner's rescuers, this is what happened:

Franklin, a veteran pilot, had a 22-caliber rifle and began firing from the air as he pursued the balloon in his small private plane. About eight miles west of Levelland, however, after firing 200 rounds, he ran out of ammunition.

By that time, the balloon had descended a bit and ascended again as the gases compressed within the two layers of nylon.

"He (Franklin) called the Levelland

Groucho's Ex-Manager Seeks $75,000

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Erin Fleming, who served as the late Groucho Marx's live-in manager, has filed a lawsuit claiming she is entitled to $75,000 that she says Marx wanted her to have.

Miss Fleming, who became entangled in a court battle with Marx's family just before he died, says in her suit that the Bank of America National Trust and Savings Association, executor of the comedian's estate, rejected her claim.

She based her claim on two 1972 contracts with Marx, one naming her as his personal manager for seven years and the other making her associate producer in connection with a record he made.

Ron Rolnick, attorney for Miss Fleming, also said she is seeking $69,132 in legal fees spent in her losing battle to remain Marx's conservator.

Marx's son, Arthur, had claimed that Miss Fleming abused his father and took advantage of him in the six years she was with him.

Rabbi Visiting In Egypt

CAIRO (AP) — Rabbi Baruch Korff, spirited defender of former President Nixon, is in Egypt to find candidates for "Sadat Peace Scholarships."

KORFF

Korff, who met here in December with President Anwar Sadat, said in an interview Monday that the Washington-based U.S. Citizens Congress Education Fund will help finance 200 young Middle Easterners in jobs with U.S. congressmen.

Korff is the founder of the conservative group, which he said has 50,000 active members and is an outgrowth of the ad-hoc Committee for Fairness to the (Nixon) Presidency.

Korff said the scholarships are being named after Sadat "not so much to commemorate what (Sadat) did as to perpetuate the spirit of Sadat's journey to Jerusalem last November."

Rockefeller Praises Truman

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Harry S. Truman "didn't wait until he was shown that the litmus paper of public opinion would show no acid reaction" before he made a decision, former Vice President Nelson Rockefeller said at an observance of the late president's birthday here.

Rockefeller, 1978 recipient of the Harry S. Truman Good Neighbor Award, told 400 luncheon guests Monday that Truman was so decisive in 1947-48 that "it appeared to many that Harry would rather be right than be president."

In Jerusalem Monday, a street was dedicated to the late president for his decision to ignore his advisers and recognize Israel. The unveiling of plaques and a symposium on the Truman presidency were part of Israel's observance of the 30th anniversary of its independence, which falls this year on May 11.

Greta Garbo Denies Biographies

NEW YORK (AP) — Greta Garbo has signed two affidavits denying she collaborated with authors of any biographies, and her attorney says publishers have made "extraordinary, six-figure" offers for the reclusive actress's autobiography.

"Miss Garbo has been offered, through me, extraordinary sums of money for an autobiography," her attorney, Lillian Poses, said Monday. "If she doesn't want to do it and cash in on it herself, doesn't it make sense that she wouldn't help anyone else for nothing?"

The affidavit released Monday was the second denial from Miss Garbo to be revealed in a month. In both, the 72-year-old actress denies any collaboration with Antoni Gronowicz, whose biography of Miss Garbo has been purchased by Simon & Schuster for a reported $150,000 advance. It would be published after Miss Garbo's death.

Mrs. Poses said no legal action is currently planned on behalf of Miss Garbo, "but we are considering our options, which means we haven't made a decision."

Duchess Released From Hospital

LONDON (AP) — The Duchess of Kent has been released from a hospital after undergoing a gall bladder operation. She has experienced gall bladder trouble for five years and recently was forced to cancel a trip to New Zealand because of her illness.

The Duchess, 45, also suffered a miscarriage last autumn. Her husband, the Duke of Kent, is first cousin to Queen Elizabeth II.

Another member of the royal family, Princess Margaret, the younger sister of Queen Elizabeth, has been undergoing tests at the same facility, the King Edward VII Hospital for Officers. She was admitted last week with suspected gastroenteritis.

"There is no cause for concern," a spokesman from her residence at Kensington Palace said. Gastro-enteritis, an inflammation of the stomach and intestines, can be infectious, and the princess, 47, is not receiving visitors.

Non-School Zone

NEW CASTLE, Colo. (AP) — For two years, officials of the New Castle Elementary School sought to have the Highway Department paint cross-walk signs in front of the school and install crossing lights.

Last month, a highway crew carefully painted six-foot-high letters indicating that the area is a school zone.

But the school had been moved to the other side of this western Colorado town the week before.

One school official, who asked not to be named, said it was a beautiful paint job, but there was not a child in sight.

The effort, however, may not have been in vain. The man who leased the old school building says he may turn it into a day-care center.

New Zealand Protesters Hurl Barbs At Mondale

WELLINGTON, New Zealand (AP) — Prime Minister Robert Muldoon and about 20 hostile demonstrators welcomed Vice President Walter F. Mondale to New Zealand today as he arrived for a 26-hour visit at the end of his foreign tour.

The demonstrators chanted "Mondale go home" and waved banners saying "Detente is a fraud." They distributed leaflets identifying themselves as members of the "July 4th Committee" and calling for an end to "foreign control" of New Zealand, which has been independent since 1947.

Mondale, accompanied by his wife Joan and son Ted, ignored the chanting demonstrators and in a brief arrival statement said: "Ever since I was a schoolboy, I've dreamed of visiting Aotearoa, the land of the long white cloud. Now this has finally come true."

American and New Zealand officials said Mondale's meetings with Muldoon and members of his cabinet would center on New Zealand's economic and trade problems. The prime minister was expected to press for larger U.S. imports of New Zealand beef and cheese.

Officials said Mondale would assure Muldoon of the United States' commitment to the ANZUS — Australia, New Zealand, U.S. — mutual security treaty.

Mondale came to New Zealand after visits to the Philippines, Thailand, Indonesia and Australia. He goes to Honolulu Wednesday and will make a statement on American policy in Southeast Asia before flying on to Washington.

Mondale's takeoff from Canberra, the Australian capital, was delayed briefly, and there was some confusion about the cause. The U.S. Air Force Boeing 707 was preparing to take off when the steps were wheeled up to the plane and the doors opened.

Some of the passengers rushed down the steps, saying there was a fire in an engine. But Mondale stayed aboard, and the others were called back after a few minutes, and the plane took off.

A spokesman for the U.S. Embassy in Canberra said there was no fire "and no order to clear the plane. The aircraft commander discovered a temporary mechanical problem during his cockpit check."

The Thai Foreign Ministry said it was forwarding a protest to Mondale from three associations of Thai journalists charging Thai reporters were "maltreated" by Thai and U.S. security agents during the vice president's visit to Bangkok.

The Thai press accused the security men of "high-handed treatment" of the press, including body searches of reporters covering a news conference by Mondale.

Alberta Reports Invasion Of Rats

When police caught up with the culprit on a nearby street corner, officers said, he readily admitted stealing the car from a gas station and driving it.

Officers said the boy was so short he had to peer between the spokes of the steering wheel as he drove.

The child, whose mother had reported him missing, was held in the Wayne County Youth Home pending juvenile court action.

RED DEER, Alberta (AP) — Alberta's virtual rat-free status is being threatened by rodents that apparently arrived by train from the eastern United States.

Four have been reported at an industrial park and another was reported killed by a dog. A vigorous control program by the provincial department of agriculture has kept the province virtually free of rats for more than 20 years.

Banking Panel Asks Textron Bribe Probe

PROVIDENCE (AP) — Two ranking members of the Senate Banking Committee have requested a Justice Department investigation into a kickback scheme involving Textron Inc.'s Bell Helicopter division.

Textron admitted Monday in a report to the Securities and Exchange Commission that some Bell executives knew the $1.9 million deal included a $300,000 payment to an unidentified Ghanaian official.

The Providence-based conglomerate said it began an internal inquiry after the sale was questioned during hearings on G. William Miller's appointment as chairman of the Federal Reserve Board.

Sen. William Proxmire, committee chairman, asked Miller, then chairman of Textron, about the 1971 sale of two helicopters to the government of Ghana. Miller denied knowledge of any bribes.

One day later, however, an unidentified Bell official destroyed evidence that showed the helicopter division knew of the planned kickback, Textron said in its SEC filing. Textron said it became aware May 2 that the memorandum had been destroyed.

After learning Monday of Textron's disclosure, Proxmire, D-Wis., asked the Justice Department to determine if destruction of an internal Bell memo was the "basis for criminal prosecution."

Sen. Edward W. Brooke, R-Mass., promised to request an inquiry to find out if the information was "deliberately destroyed ... to frustrate the confirmation process of the U.S. Senate."

Brooke, the Banking Committee's ranking Republican, said he also wanted to know if any criminal violations occurred.

George Galerstein, Bell's legal counsel, said last February that a representative of the Ghanaian Air Force expressed interest in two Bell helicopters during the 1971 Paris Air Show.

"Bell relayed this information to Tropical Aircraft Sales Ltd., its manufacturer's representative for Ghana," Galerstein said in a Feb. 15 letter to the Banking Committee counsel.

Textron said Tropical asked Bell in June 1971 to follow up on the inquiry made during the spring air show and a Bell employee went to Ghana a short time later to discuss the possible sale.

"At an early stage in the discussions, it became known to the participating Tropical and Bell employees in Ghana that a payment of approximately $300,000 was being required by the government official as a condition of the purchase of the two helicopters from Bell," Textron told the SEC.

"One of the Bell employees in Ghana communicated this information in early July 1971 to the manager of Bell's international marketing department at Fort Worth, who made a memorandum of the conversation."

In Monday's statement, Textron also said the initial purchase proposal was rejected by Bell's executive vice president and the transaction was restructured by Bell and Tropical executives.

The new agreement provided for selling Tropical two Model 212 helicopters for $1.6 million with an immediate resale by Tropical to Ghana at a contract price of $1.9 million.

Panel Questions Bond Interest Hike

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Treasury Department has again asked Congress for clearance to raise the interest on government savings bonds, but the department again ran into critical questioning.

Interest on the bonds, the kind most people buy individually or through payroll deductions, now is 6 percent.

Assistant Secretary Roger C. Altman told the House Ways and Means Committee Monday the Treasury doesn't think an increase is needed now, but would like authority to raise the bond yield if money market conditions should warrant it.

The House on March 7 defeated a legislative package that included lifting the statutory limit on savings bond interest, tied in with a new ceiling on the public debt. Subsequently, Congress passed a stopgap measure relating to the public debt limit alone.

Under questioning by Rep. William M. Ketchum, R-Calif., Altman agreed that more people than before are buying savings bonds. Ketchum asked, "Why are you contemplating raising the interest?"

Altman said those who buy savings bonds, especially the many who do so through payroll savings plans, don't pay much attention to fluctuation in interest rates, but "we think it is only fair to adjust the rates from time to time in accordance with the market."

He testified that the last sale of government securities of the kind bought by large investors had brought interest yields of 8.29 and 8.49 percent, depending on maturity.

The proposal again was brought to Congress in connection with debt ceiling legislation.

The present $752 billion limit on the amount of debt the Treasury may have outstanding will drop automatically July 31 to $400 billion, well below the actual debt, unless Congress acts.

The Ways and Means Committee wants to key the new ceiling to the public debt estimate in the budget resolution Congress must adopt by May 15. The resolution applies to the year beginning Oct. 1.

Portland Couple Tells Of President's Visit

By JANET OLSON
And PAUL OLSON

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — "Sure! We'll be happy to be on the list." That reply to a phone call began a week of anticipation, excitement, laughter, apprehension, and finally the incredible thrill of having the president of the United States stay at our home.

After the call from Mayor Neil Goldschmidt's office, there were visits from presidential aides, Secret Service men, communications experts. Then Sunday, Ed Maddox of the White House staff told us we had been chosen, saying simply: "My president asked me to ask you if he could spend the night in your home?"

The emotions of that moment and many, many moments to follow defy description.

Preparations were surprisingly unhurried. It seemed as though five years of intermittent restoration and remodeling had culminated in this visit. The hard work had produced for us — and apparently for those who chose for the president — a warm, comfortable home. We had mowed the lawn and cleaned some paint-speckled windows before we really knew. What was left was normal cleaning and dusting.

Others had much to do. The telephone company and Secret Service put in long hours. The whole company from the Fire Department's Engine 13 went through the house from top to bottom. Officers from the East Police Precinct stopped in. We also had help from friends and neighbors and people who represented the White House.

We were able to relax and enjoy the whole preparation. Each change in our house, each contact with the White House people and Secret Service heightened the awareness, the realization that President Carter was in fact going to stay overnight in our home.

We also had phone calls from reporters all over the country. We learned it's hard to say "no" to them, but with help from the White House, we managed a news conference.

The day of his visit passed so quickly we couldn't help constantly looking at each other, reminding ourselves how incredibly fortunate we were.

We remember eating leftovers for lunch. We discussed things we might talk about with the president. Kristen, our 5-year-old daughter, and Ehren, our 3-year-old son, took a nap.

While final inspections were made, Janet made Finnish bread and her mother's rhubarb custard pie, and Paul Hungarian cheese-filled coffee cake. We also got a bottle of Oregon wine for the president.

Kristen awoke with signs of an ear infection, and we rushed her to a clinic for medicine. An hour later she was her normal, happy self.

Dinner that night at a neighbor's relaxed us more than we thought possible. We hurried back to watch the president on TV.

Little time was left now. We changed clothes. Paul couldn't sit still. We were really calm, right? We were told the president's caravan had left the hotel; it was two minutes away, then 10 seconds.

On the front porch, Paul looked around for Janet but she wasn't there. Egad, hurry up! Ah, we're together again.

"There's the motorcycle, Ehren! See them?" Ehren's face was fixed on the scene. Kristen twirled in her full-length dress. Janet appeared confident but later said she had been so thrilled she almost cried.

Motorcycles, lights, presidential limousine, all seemed brief images as we searched for a glimpse of the president. The crowd was cheering. He waved, turned and approached our house.

Paul managed to say, "Mr. President, welcome to our home."

Gently reaching down for Kristen, President Carter picked her up and hugged her. She warmed to him instantly. He said, "I think I'm going to like it here." Inside he said, "You have a beautiful home."

After a moment of conversation we settled onto the couch to await the press, a wall of faces and cameras. The lights filled the room.

President Carter, meanwhile, paged through pictures drawn by Kristen and her friends. Ehren stared. The president talked softly to them as if to deny the press, the world — his thoughts on the children.

Then quiet. We chatted in front of the fire. President Carter took off coat and shoes and sat down. It was the president, assistant Tim Kraft, Janet, Kristen, Ehren and Paul. It seemed like a small family.

Janet asked if he was hungry. He was, and the smoked salmon, cheese and Oregon wine sounded inviting. He went in the kitchen with Janet, and they chatted about old canning jars where she stores dried goods.

Back in the living room we began to touch on Paul's work in selling energy conservation products and Janet's years as a teacher. We kept coming back to outdoor experiences, backpacking and camping. Paul thanked the president for his support of the Alaska Lands bill and emphasized he wanted the Interior Committee's version passed.

As we talked about so-called "substantive issues," the president quipped with Kristen and Ehren. With his attention frequently drawn to them we could see relaxed tiredness gradually replace tension in his face. Politics took a back seat to talk about his family. Seeing this powerful man enjoy putting the day behind him dictated as much.

Amy Carter obviously occupied his thoughts. He talked proudly of her interest in reading.

We informed the kids that bedtime was near. Though visibly tired, President Carter agreed to participate in our bedtime ritual and read to the children. Seeing the three of them on the bed, I thought of my camera for the first time. What a precious moment.

Janet lit the fire in the master bedroom, and we said goodnight to the president. Tim Kraft went up to bed a few moments later.

The house was quiet. As we picked up dishes and leftovers, I had the feeling we had provided the president a chance to relax, to escape the substantive processes that bear on him. As we prepared for bed our thoughts raced back over the evening. In our bedroom was one of the world's most powerful men. How gently he had touched our lives.

Morning came quickly for me, restlessly for Janet. I can't explain the difference. President Carter read his briefs and sipped coffee.

Hundreds of people were outside. As he left the house to greet them, he thanked us, invited us to Washington and turned to the crowd. The issues closed around him. He left as he arrived, waving to the crowd.

Telling this story was not easy. These thoughts, these moments, were private. It's as though we are cheating him of even a remnant of privacy. Still, there exists this man who, with power and position, has not lost that human quality, that caring for little people, that sensitivity that motivated many of us to elect him our president.

Costa Rican Chief Bars Vesco's Return

By TOM FENTON
SAN JOSE, Costa Rica (AP) — President Rodrigo Carazo fulfilled a major campaign promise following his inauguration Monday and barred fugitive American financier Robert Vesco from returning to Costa Rica.

Vesco, wanted in the United States on charges of embezzling $224 million, left Costa Rica April 30 for a business trip around the Caribbean, his attorney said at the time. He is believed to be on the island of Grenada, off Venezuela.

Carazo made an election pledge to kick Vesco out and fulfilled it at a session of his Government Council of nine cabinet ministers immediately after he was sworn in as Costa Rica's 36th president.

"Wherever he is, let it be known that he cannot come back to Costa Rica," Presidency Minister Jose Rafael Cordero said in announcing the decision to reporters.

Vesco has a citizenship application pending before one Costa Rican tribunal and the government is appealing a court ruling in his favor in another case. The legal basis for the ban was not announced. But officials said it cannot be appealed. A presidential spokesman said all ports of entry have received instructions to refuse Vesco re-entry if he attempts to return.

A local newspaper said Vesco's wife and the couple's three youngest children left the family's $500,000 home on the outskirts of San Jose three weeks ago and went to New Jersey, their former home.

Government sources would not say what might be done about Vesco's holdings in Costa Rica, estimated at $60 million. He is estimated to have another $50 million invested in the Bahamas.

The 43-year-old financier is accused in the United States of looting Investors Overseas Services, Bernard Cornfeld's bankrupt mutual fund which Vesco took over, and of illegally contributing $200,000 to President Nixon's 1972 re-election campaign. The Internal Revenue Service is also seeking $1.1 million in taxes it says he owes.

Vesco moved to Costa Rica in 1972, and successive U.S. requests for extradition were blocked by President Jose Figueres, to whom he loaned $2.15 million, and his successor, Daniel Oduber, to whose campaign Vesco contributed heavily. Figueres and Oduber were leaders of the National Liberation Party, which Carazo defeated in an upset Feb. 5.

Vesco made a last-ditch effort to gain Costa Rican citizenship to avoid extradition, and it looked as if he might succeed when a fraud suit against him was dismissed last month on grounds of insufficient evidence. Citizenship cannot be granted to persons with criminal records.

The government appealed the verdict, however, and allowed Vesco to leave the country on a 75-day travel permit after he posted $34,000 bond. Meanwhile, Figueres testified as a character witness supporting Vesco's application for citizenship, while Carazo submitted a written statement opposing the application.

Carazo, 51, took the oath of office at the national soccer stadium and told a crowd of 20,000 that Costa Rica "will cease to be a haven of fugitives from justice and international delinquents."

The oath was administered by the president of the National Assembly after outgoing President Oduber surrendered the symbolic red, white and blue sash of office.

Thunder and lightning punctuated the 4½-hour ceremony, and rain poured down on the open stadium shortly after Carazo began to speak.

Rosalynn's Improved Spanish Makes Hit With Costa Ricans

SAN JOSE, Costa Rica (AP) — Rosalynn Carter's growing fluency in the Spanish language is a big hit in Costa Rica.

"Mrs. Carter's Spanish is very pretty, very beautiful," said government protocol chief Arturo Niehaus. "Her Spanish has improved a lot since her visit last year. I believe she truly wants to be closer to Latin Americans."

The U.S. first lady arrived in San Jose Sunday to head the U.S. delegation to the inauguration Monday of President Rodrigo Carazo. After her last official engagements this morning, she will visit with friends at a club near San Jose until Friday.

Mrs. Carter delivered her arrival statement in Spanish and has been using the language extensively since. Monday night she spoke Spanish with many of the guests at the inaugural reception given by the new president at the national theater.

Mrs. Carter speaks slowly at times and occasionally gropes for words. But she appears to understand most of what is said to her and has no difficulty making herself understood.

Mrs. Carter visited Costa Rica last nearly a year ago, on May 31, 1977, when she was starting a Latin American tour.

"Mrs. Carter's Spanish has improved beautifully since her last visit," said Ana Cecilia Aird, a local TV reporter. "As a matter of fact it is flawless."

Mexican Foreign Minister Santiago Roel, heading his nation's delegation to the inauguration, commented: "It's not only Mrs. Carter's Spanish but her feeling for Mexico and Latin America. Mrs. Carter is doing tremendously."

The first lady's press secretary, Mary

Hoyt, said Mrs. Carter does not consider herself fluent yet and is determined to be able "to give full-length speeches and interviews in Spanish."

She studies Spanish from 9 to noon Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays in the White House solarium, Mrs. Hoyt reported. Secretary of State Cyrus Vance's wife, the new State Department chief of protocol, Kit Dobbelle, and Jeff Carter's wife, Annette, study with her as often as possible.

"Mrs. Carter says she is now beginning to think in Spanish and I understand that is the turning point in learning a language," Mrs. Hoyt said.

"Her airport arrival speech in San Jose was written for her in Spanish but she frequently writes her own. She made some last minute revisions in the airport speech herself."

Mrs. Hoyt said the president and Mrs. Carter frequently exchange phrases in Spanish, and they keep both English and Spanish Bibles beside their bed.

"Each night one reads a chapter in English and the other reads a chapter in Spanish. The next night they switch Bibles," she said.

Ex-IRS Worker Gets Probation

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — A former tax examiner with the Internal Revenue Service has been placed on probation for five years for filing a false income tax return.

The probation was ordered in U.S. District Court for Iris J. Dewey, 35, an IRS employee for 10 years, who resigned her position earlier this year. Judge William R. Collinson sentenced her husband, Everett, 44, to 60 days in jail to be followed by two years of probation.

They pleaded guilty April 6 to one count of a four-count indictment charging them with filing false tax returns

TODAY'S EDITORIAL:

A Little Dab Won't Do

EITHER BY their full name or the headline acronym—SALT—the strategic arms limitation treaty talks probably rate was one of those important subjects the first reference to which causes most readers to move rapidly on to the next item on the page.

That's unfortunate since the subject is potentially of life and death importance, not only to the citizens of the two participating powers (the U.S. and Russia) but to every inhabitant of the globe.

SALT, OR to be precise SALT II, is a follow-up to the treaty concluded in 1972 which curbed a then-impending race between the two superpowers in the development of immensely expensive and questionably effective ballistic missile defense systems.

SALT II proposes to extend agreed-upon limitations to offensive strategic weapons systems as well. Secretary of State Cyrus Vance made some discreetly optimistic sounds about same upon his return from the latest round of talks in Moscow.

The basic objective is simple and Washington and Moscow already are agreed on its outline. A treaty running through 1985 would limit each nation to a total number of ICBM's, submarine-launched missiles and long-range bombers. A number of technical and political details of the proposed agreement are not simple matters, however.

ONE OF those not-so-simple matters involves a weapon known in the West as Backfire. While everyone agrees Backfire does not qualify as a heavy bomber (which would come under treaty negotiations), it nevertheless has the range to reach the U.S.

Backfire would be a potential threat should the Soviets deploy large numbers of planes. Moscow is willing to limit production to a non-threatening level—on the basis of a personal pledge from Leonid Brezhnev—but not in treaty terms.

Sen. Henry Jackson, charging the administration negotiators with having "given, given, given" to the Soviets at every negotiating turn, warns that the U.S. Senate (which must approve any eventual treaty) will not ratify the existing agreement.

SEC. VANCE, who meets again this month with Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko, is saying little more at present than an agreement is being constructed "brick by brick."

Diplomatic silence, or something close to it, possibly is most conducive to progress at this stage. But the public must eventually be let in on the fine print. Because what is—or is not—in this particular treaty could be very hazardous to our health.

'Your Move'

John D. Lofton:

Does Death Deter? Let's See

WASHINGTON—New York Gov. Hugh Carey has turned thumbs down on capital punishment for those who intentionally murder a police officer or prison guard, those who kill for hire, or those who murder in the course of a robbery, burglary or rape.

The governor says he opposes the death penalty because "there is a lack of clear evidence that it is even an effective deterrent against crime..."

Well, I guess the clarity of evidence as regards the deterrent value of the death penalty for murder depends on just how fuzzy your vision is.

One person who sees the evidence pretty clearly is Frank Carrington, executive director of Americans for Effective Law Enforcement. He has just written a new book, "The Case for Capital Punishment: Neither Cruel Nor Unusual" (Arlington House Publishers, New Rochelle, N.Y.).

FIRST, SOME general reflections. Pointing out that the number of murders in the United States nearly doubled from 10,000 to 20,000 a year from 1967 to 1977, a decade during which capital punishment constituted no real threat, Carrington observes:

"Common sense supports the inference that if, as the threat of the death penalty decreases, the rate of murders increases, then the corollary might well be true: if the threat had increased, the homicide rate might well have decreased."

Carrington, who graduated from the University of Michigan Law School and Northwestern University, where he received a Master of Laws in criminal law, says that the phenomenon of increased murder rates once the death penalty is removed is not unique to the United States.

CANADA ABANDONED hanging in 1967, and the number of murders climbed from 281 in that year to 426 in 1971, and to 539 in 1974.

The murder rate in Canada increased from 1.5 per 100,000 population in 1966 to 2.3 per 100,000 in 1971. England and Wales had 177 murders in 1971, the highest number since capital punishment was abolished in 1965.

Carrington believes that the best way to find out if given criminals are indeed deterred from killing by the death penalty is to ask those criminals themselves. He cites the following evidence from California, which he labels instructive:

In 1970 and 1971, the Los Angeles Police Department compiled a series of statements taken from persons arrested for crimes of violence.

Those interviewed had either been unarmed when they committed their crimes, or had been armed but did not use their weapons, or they had carried inoperative weapons. Of the 99 criminals spoken to:

—ALMOST 50 percent were deterred from carrying weapons or operative weapons by fear of capital punishment;

—Seven percent said they were unaffected by the death penalty because it was no longer being enforced;

—10 percent said they were undeterred by capital punishment and would kill whether it was enforced or not, and

—32 percent were unaffected by the death pen-

ONE MAN'S OPINION

Bats In The Belfry

"MOST PEOPLE who are in their 40s or older," a candidate for state office solemnly intoned on election eve, "were either born in or lived through the Great Depression."

"Most?" Wonder where the rest were?
President Carter says Americans are "over-lawyered and under-represented." It's hard to say which is worse.

Independent garagemen here have instituted a Code of Ethics program which could serve as a national model for self-regulation of the auto repair industry.

My Neighbor Twice Removed says if they'll just fix what's wrong, and nothing else, when his car goes to the shop he'll be satisfied.

Some critics are making a big deal out of the stock holdings and business interests of Congressmen, saying it could affect how they vote.

If the critics had their way, the only people who could hold office would be those who are so unsuccessful in private life that they are dependent on a government handout for survival.

SEN. DALE BUMPERS of Arkansas put his finger on the answer as to why Americans have developed such a low regard for government.

"We continue to deal here with the politics of the problem rather than the problem," the first-term senator said the other day.

"The job becomes an end in itself—public rela-

Paul Scott:

Bad Hitch In Panama Get-Along

WASHINGTON—A sleeper reservation adopted by the Senate in the closing days of the Panama Canal treaties debate is now being carefully studied by both opponents and supporters for its possible impact on future U.S.-Panama relations.

Sponsored by Edward Brooke, R-Mass., the little noticed reservation delays the effective date of the main Panama Canal treaty—which gradually turns over control and operation of the strategic waterway during the next 22 years—until Oct. 1, 1979, or six months after Congress approves implementing legislation.

Approved by an 84 to 3 vote on the day before the final treaty vote, the Brooke reservation had the backing of both supporters and opponents. It reads:

"BEFORE THE PERIOD at the end of the resolution of ratification, insert a comma and the following:

"Subject to the reservation that exchange of the instruments of ratification shall not be effective earlier than March 31, 1979, and the treaties shall not enter into force prior to Oct. 1, 1979 unless legislation necessary to implement the provisions of the Panama Canal treaty shall have been enacted by the Congress...before March 31, 1979..."

Debate on the Brooke reservation lasted less than 15 minutes and the only opposition that developed came when Sen. James McClure, R-Ida., tried unsuccessfully to amend it by eliminating the dates from the proposal.

Under the McClure amendment, the treaties could not go into effect until both the Senate and House approved the implementing legislation. The McClure amendment was defeated by a 56 to 31 vote.

WHILE THE BROOKS reservation didn't go as far as opponents of the treaty wanted, they are convinced it will give the Supreme Court time to rule on a crucial constitutional issue before the treaties become effective.

At issue is whether the main Panama Canal treaty can go into effect without the House of Representatives and the Senate approving the transfer of billions of dollars of property as provided in the treaties.

Instigated by 50 members of the House, the suit is now pending on appeal before the High Court.

The position of the Carter administration is that while it would like the House and Senate to enact implementing legislation before the treaties go into effect this is not legally necessary.

The State Department claims that the President can actually implement the treaties by executive action if Congress refuses to pass the legislation, although officials acknowledge that this sort of unilateral action could provoke a constitutional crisis with the House.

ality, saying they would not carry a weapon in any event, primarily because they were afraid of injuring themselves or someone else.

Thus, there was a 5-to-1 ratio of deterrence over non-deterrence as reported by those in the best position to make such a judgment: the criminals themselves.

Concluding his argument—persuasively—for the deterrent value of the death penalty, Frank Carrington asks:

"If we really don't know whether capital punishment deters, whose side are we to err on, the potential victims or the convicted murderers?" He suggests—constructively, in my judgment:

"WE COULD RESOLVE the question once and for all. We could start executing murderers. Then, if we performed enough executions to make the threat of death for willful premeditated murder an actual threat again, and if the murder rate began to drop, we would be able to determine (say, over 10 years) that the threat of death, when carried out, reduced the murder rate.

"That might give us some empirical data about deterrence that we could get our teeth into..."

"But I believe that most people agree with the rationale that given the uncertainty of deterrence, we should resolve the question in favor of potential victims rather than convicted murderers."

I don't know about you, but as one who is much more likely to be a potential murder victim than a convicted murderer, I think Carrington's reasoning makes a lot of good sense.

tions, cosmetics, how much pork can you take home, how many grants you can get for your state. We are trying to make records to run on.

"The next 10 years will tell the tale of the future of our system. I am really pessimistic about where we are headed," Bumpers concluded.

It's another way of saying that politicians get elected and re-elected by promising, and delivering, more and more government services.

The saddest part is that "we, the people" are to blame. We're the ones who elect the politicians that promise the most. And then complain when the taxes, or the deficits, go up to cover the expenses...

After meeting with President Carter, House Speaker Tip O'Neill predicted there'll be no welfare reform this year. Election year. Welfare people vote.

The Carter administration says that, when it took office, it discovered that some civil service-protected employees making up to $50,000 annually "hadn't been seen for years."

What we need, maybe, is Zero Employee Budgeting to go along with Zero Based Budgeting.

President Carter wants civil service reforms that would let federal supervisors have a fighting chance to fire lazy, inept employees.

He ought to be ashamed. Threatening federal employees with the American Way of Life.

The California Supreme Court has ruled that "a social host who furnishes alcoholic beverages to an obviously intoxicated person, under circumstances which create a reasonably foreseeable risk of harm to others, may be held legally accountable" if the drunken guest injures someone after leaving the party.

That kinda makes offering a drunk "one more for the road" a sobering thought.

BACK WHEN HE was manager of the Midland Chamber of Commerce, Delbert Downing was the favorite after-dinner speaker in these parts.

If I had a barbecued chicken dinner for every time I've heard Downing speak (that was the favorite fare in those days), I'd invite all my enemies to a banquet and fill the Memorial Civic Center.

Downing, now of Snyder, was in town the other day and we sat together at a West Texas Chamber of Commerce luncheon.

Of all the speeches he ever made, Downing recalled, the most unusual interruption was at Ralls.

In the middle of his talk, a bat in the rafters gave birth, he said, and the baby bat plopped to the floor just in front of him.

"I went right on with my talk," he said, "but, then, a second bat fell to the floor. Now, it's difficult to let a thing like that happen without taking notice of it."

Downing, the trouper, was equal to the task. Looking up toward the rafters, he told his audience: "I'm just glad cows don't roost in rafters."

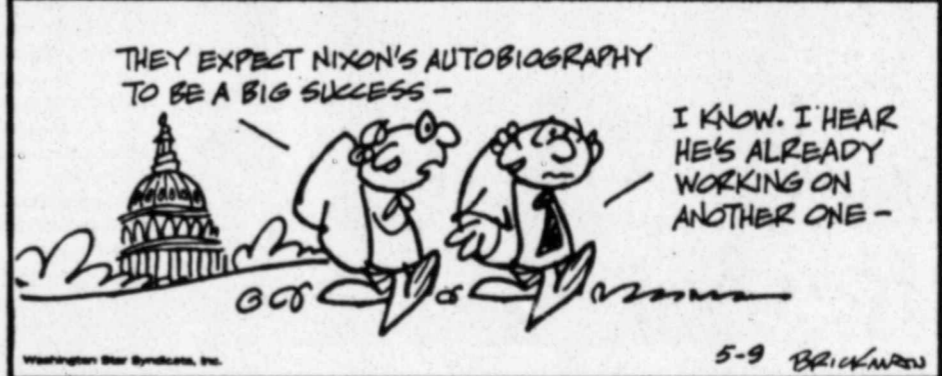

that, the House will never authorize the transfer of military installations to Panama."

In offering his sleeper reservation, Sen. Brooke appeared to foresee problems both in Congress and Panama on the canal changeover, stating: "The effect of the reservation is to provide Congress a maximum period of approximately one and one-half years to enact the necessary implementing legislation."

"Moreover, it would provide us an opportunity to monitor the drift of events in Panama and elsewhere that would have an impact on U.S. capacity to manage the canal over the next 20 years."

Brush Up On Hints To Paint-It-Yourself

IF YOU ARE typical of millions of us, you will be tackling the job of painting part or all of your house or apartment starting in the next few weeks. An overwhelming two-thirds of all paint sold per year is sold between May and September. Most painting, either by professionals or amateur do-it-yourselfers, is done in the spring.

And if you're merely a casual—much less a dedicated do-it-yourselfer—you will try the job on your own to slash costs.

The do-it-yourselfer can save about 80 per cent compared to contracting a paint job, according to the National Paint & Coatings Assn., assuming you plan the job carefully, pick the right paint for the right surface, deal with a reputable paint dealer who handles high quality, brand name paints.

You'll lose on time spent, of course, but if time on the project is not your primary concern, there's no disputing the potential savings by doing the work on your own.

AS ONE ILLUSTRATION, you probably can paint an average-sized room that requires a minimum of preparation for as little as $15 to $20. A professional may charge $100 for the same room.

As another illustration, say a gallon of paint costs $9.00 and takes three hours to apply. At a rate of $15.00 per hour, a contractor would charge $54.00 to apply the gallon of paint (including the paint). The paint alone is about 20 per cent of this total cost.

The most expensive error you can make is buying cheap paint, for you soon will have to do the job over. Take the time to read the label on most brand-name paints, for it will list the contents as well as how and where to use the paint.

THE CONTENT analysis is divided into two categories: percentage of dry pigment (important) and percentage of vehicle (liquid portion). A good rule of thumb is to buy a brand-name paint with a high content of TiO2, advises Bill Pepper, pigment development manager for Gulf & Western's chemical division.

It may cost a bit more but it will save you money in the long run. It will cover the area more effectively and hold up longer.

Also check the label to find out on what surfaces the paint is most effective, how much of the surface can be coated and how to prepare the surface for coating. Other do's and don'ts:

* Dust or wash dirty walls and examine plastic walls for cracks. Hairline cracks should be filled with spackling, larger cracks with special patching plaster. The plaster must be completely dried before you begin to cover it.

* STIR THE PAINT to mix color pigments at the bottom of the can. But latex paints should not be stirred vigorously because this creates air bubbles in the paint which will ruin the job. In

Westmoreland Criticizes Vietnam War Reporters

By ARNOLD SAWISLAK
WASHINGTON (UPI) — Exercising his precious First Amendment right of free speech, retired Gen. William Westmoreland recently laid down a barrage of criticism at the reporters who covered the Vietnam War.

The general, speaking at a conference of the Accuracy in Media organization, Westmoreland said the press has "tended to become abusive, arrogant and hypocritical." He said even though the Tet offensive in 1968 was a major military and political defeat for the communists, it was reported as a victory for Hanoi.

Westmoreland said "the mass media needs to examine themselves as never before and encourage more criticism from inside and outside." And, in what was perhaps the nub of his speech, the general said:

"If the nation is to wage war — declared or undeclared — a policy should press ought to be constantly on guard against abuse of power by itself as well as others. Like any institution, the press can become decadent or corrupt.

Westmoreland cites former reporter Peter Braestrup's book "Big Story," as support for the charge that the Tet offensive was badly covered. That, of course, is an example of the professional oversight Westmoreland calls for.

But the general apparently assumes that if Tet had been reported as a Communist defeat, the United States would have been able to win the war.

The possibility does not seem to occur to him that the real impact of Tet was not in which army won the battles. The shock for Americans was in the fact that the communists were capable of mounting any kind of offensive at a time when he and other public officials were assuring Americans that the other side was on the brink of defeat.

What died during Tet was the last credibility of the politicians and generals who had been claiming victory was in sight.

Westmoreland notes with apparent distaste that Vietnam "was the first war ever fought without some form of official censorship." That may be what he was referring to in recommending a policy "to protect the interests" of the press and government.

It should be noted there were some other traditions that also were not observed in connection with Vietnam. For example, at one time a general who lost a war fell on his own sword, or if he returned defeated, took his disgrace into silent retirement.

We may be a stronger people for the disappearance of both of those customs.

be set to protect the interests of both the media and government and avoid the ambiguity that characterized relationships in South Vietnam."

The general is not the first public servant to find the press nettlesome. Thomas Jefferson, beloved by the press for saying he would rather have newspapers without a government than the opposite situation, also wrote, "Nothing now can be believed which is seen in a newspaper. Truth itself becomes suspicious by being put into that polluted vehicle."

The press is, or certainly ought to be, accustomed to the anger and criticism of public officials. It was to keep official outrage from becoming official retribution that government was forbidden to abridge freedom of the press, but the same amendment also guarantees presidents, street cleaners and even generals the right to raise hell with the media.

And Westmoreland will get no argument against the proposition that the

Driller Says Atlantic Search 'Promising'

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — The exploratory oil drilling operation in the Atlantic Ocean off New Jersey already has found "very promising" rock formations, a drilling expert has said.

Although Vernon Goodwin, the drilling foreman for Continental Oil Co., stressed that no oil had been found yet, he said the drilling operation has encountered a sandy rock formation that often sits on top of oil reserves.

"It's very promising," Goodwin said. "There's a lot of sand out there and that's a great bucket for holding oil."

Goodwin's statement was the first public assessment of progress in the search for oil or gas in the Baltimore Canyon. Several oil companies have been drilling for about a month in an area about 60 miles east of Atlantic City.

Experts have estimated that as much as 1.4 billion barrels of oil and 9.4 trillion cubic feet of gas may be located in the Canyon, which begins south of Long Island and extends off New Jersey to Delaware and Maryland. But similar estimates have been made for other offshore areas where subsequent drilling failed to find significant quantities of fuel.

Goodwin said Continental's well, which is targeted for 12,000 feet, is about one-third complete and should be finished about 42 days from now.

Continental officials estimate that the drilling is costing about $60,000 a day.

DR. LAMB Mineral Oil Criticized

DEAR DR. LAMB — What do you think about mineral oil for constipation? I use it, but with all the recent discussions about constipation I am wondering if it is perfectly safe to take.

DEAR READER — I don't recommend it. True, you can use it occasionally but it doesn't get at the basic poor bowel function. Improving nutrition to increase the bulk intake, stopping chemical laxatives, drinking adequate amounts of water and training your bowel reflexes are usually much better ideas. Mineral oil is sometimes absorbed into the body and makes fatty deposits in other tissues. I would rather see you take a bulk expander if you do need something regularly.

To help you solve your problem I am sending you The Health Letter number 2-1, Irritable or Spastic Colon and Constipation. It will give you a guide to follow to train your bowel. Others who want this information can send 50 cents with a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope for it to me in care of this newspaper, P.O. Box 1551, Radio City Station, New York, NY 10019.

DEAR DR. LAMB — Recently my wife and I had a divorce. The problem is that I'm oversexed. And it's caused quite a few problems for me over these past few years. I would like to know if there's a drug I could take to suppress my sexual desires. I'm in a very desperate situation — no wife and yet these urges. If there's no drug that could help me I'm sure there's an operation that would eliminate the problem. What type of operation would this be?

You don't have to suggest a psychiatrist because I've had counseling and for awhile it worked but then my problems start all over again. Without any outlet to release these urges I needed to eliminate them. All I'm interested in is clinical advice of what is available.

DEAR READER — About the only surgery that is available wouldn't please you either as you might have precious little sex drive left afterward.

The same applies to medicines. There is no medicine that will decrease a man's sex desire that does not have undesirable side effects. You could be on female hormones but that wouldn't do as you would start becoming feminized. Medicines to decrease your alertness might help but again you want to go through life zonked out.

I think you should continue professional counseling. There are many reasons for truly excessive sex drive. There may be some underlying reasons that cause you to have a compulsion along these lines.

Then you could be completely wrong and be entirely normal. Men and women both have different levels of sex drive and a frequent desire is not necessarily abnormal.

The other thing you can do that may help some is to gradually build up an active physical program. Sufficient physical activity does help to decrease interest. Which leads to another suggestion — try to develop some other consuming interests that are not sexual.

In the last analysis, if all else fails and you can channel your sex drive properly you could just enjoy it.

Researcher Says Starch Aids In Metal Removal

By DAVID L. FIELDS
PEORIA, Ill. (UPI) — A federal research chemist says a development involving corn or wheat starch could save the electroplating industry millions of dollars and help clean up the environment.

A scientific team, led by chemist Robert Wing, at the Agriculture Department's Northern Regional Research Center has developed a starch compound which removes metals from industrial liquid waste streams.

The team set out in 1971 to deal with mercury poisoning in lakes by developing a compound which would remove toxic mercury from industrial runoff, Wing said in an interview. The potential for removing other metals from waste streams soon became apparent.

The process now works on about 20 metals, including mercury and copper which is used widely in copper plating.

The material, Insoluble Starch Xanthate, could prove a lifesaver to electroplating companies which face strict Environmental Protection Agency standards on the flow of metal-laden wastewater. The plating companies bond metals to other materials; chrome to plastic grille-work, for instance.

Wing said estimates appear accurate that proposed EPA standards could cost electroplating companies $460 million for pollution equipment.

He said he recently toured a Ford plant in Ohio which set aside some 1.5 million square feet for electroplating plastics and is spending $1 million this year for pollution control.

Wing said he sees a major impact on lakes and rivers as well as municipal water treatment plants.

"Probably 60 percent of the companies discharge to municipal districts," Wing said. "It will have an impact on sludge from the municipal districts in that it won't have as many heavy metals in it. Therefore, the sludge probably can be used more for land fertilization instead of just sludge-piling it."

Apart from environmental considerations, ISX could cut its own costs by recovering precious metals. Wing said one pound of ISX, which he expects will cost between $1 and $3, can remove $750 worth of gold.

"Avon Products gave me a call and asked for an ISX sample," Wing said. "They said they were putting $100,000 worth of rhodium, which is a precious metal, down the drain every year."

Other businesses that might be interested, he said, include the photo industry which uses silver, firms which gold-plate circuit boards, jewelry businesses or "any industry that has heavy metal in wastewater in soluble form."

Wing said he expects the main use for ISX will be as a final scavenger of industrial effluent. ISX would remove the last traces of heavy metals when used in conjunction with present anti-pollution methods, he said.

Several companies already have licenses to produce the compound. However, firms hesitate to use ISX because the EPA has not fully approved the product.

But Wing said EPA approval should be forthcoming shortly and estimated a developing ISX industry could produce three to seven million pounds a year in the first year.

Autos With Airbags Already In Demand

WASHINGTON (AP) — Automobile fleet operators, including the federal government, have expressed a readiness to buy more than 60,000 cars a year equipped with airbag crash protection, according to a Transportation Department survey.

More than 100 private fleet operators and about 60 state and local government agencies told the survey they would buy more than 40,000 vehicles as soon as they are available.

An additional 20,000 vehicles a year would be purchased by the federal government, the department said, if financial details can be worked out by the White House budget office.

Joan Claybrook, head of the department's National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, said she was pleased with the survey findings. She said she hoped it would encourage auto manufacturers to equip vehicles with airbags before they are required by law.

Transportation Secretary Brock Adams has ordered the automobile industry to equip standard-size new cars with automatic protection starting with the 1982 model year and to put the equipment in smaller cars in subsequent years. The protection can be provided by either an airbag or an automatic seat belt.

Responding to the survey were such fleet operators as major corporations, insurance companies, cities and highway patrol squads.

New York Gov. Hugh Carey said his state would be ready to buy as many as 1,200 cars a year because of the potential for reducing highway fatalities and serious injuries to state employees.

James W. Harding, executive vice president of Kemper Insurance Cos., said his firm would be interested in buying airbag-equipped cars if they became available in the 1980 or 1981 model year and were offered at reasonable price. Kemper has a fleet of 1,500 autos.

Hearing Scheduled For Dr. Waddill

SANTA ANA, Calif. (AP) — A hearing is scheduled May 15 to determine whether Dr. William Waddill will stand trial a second time in the death of a baby girl following an unsuccessful saline abortion.

A mistrial was declared after jurors reported that they were deadlocked 7-5 for acquittal Friday.

Waddill was accused of choking to death a baby who survived an abortion attempt March 2, 1977. Jurors, confused over whether the baby was born alive or "brain dead," deadlocked over the meaning of brain death and the question of whether the doctor had committed murder "by omission" — the failure to try hard enough to save a baby which briefly survives an abortion.

Vandalism Continues In Houston

HOUSTON (AP) — Police in riot gear kept watch at a housing project in the near Northside Mexican-American barrio here this morning after youths pelted a store with rocks and bottles late Monday on the second day of disturbances that have resulted in at least 16 injuries and over 30 arrests.

The project is across Fulton Street from a shopping center in which several stores were burned and looted Sunday night following attempts by police to stop several fights that broke out in a nearby park during festivities commemorating a Mexican holiday.

One officer said a guard at Leonard's Department Store apparently became frightened after youths began throwing bottles and bricks at the building and sounded the alarm around 10 p.m. that brought police to the scene.

Police spokesman Rick Hartley said youths hurled several firebombs against plywood covering the store's windows broken during Sunday's rampage. The wood was charred but there was no fire.

Hartley said officer Al Moore had been injured by a brick and was taken to Hermann Hospital.

As a helicopter circled overhead directing a searchlight into courtyards separating the multi-story housing units, teenage boys taunted police and threw bottles from the yard. A group of youths gathered at a carwash at one end of the blocked-off street shouted catcalls as police went into the courtyards.

Police Chief Harry Caldwell, who earlier Monday called Sunday's disturbance "almost a classic textbook case" of a rampage caused by high heat, humidity, too much drinking and some fights, joined his men at the scene.

Hartley said police had taken about five or six juveniles into custody.

Peeling has run high in the Mexican-American community since the death last year of a 23-year-old Mexican-American while in police custody. Sunday also marked the first anniversary of the day the body of Joe Campos Torres showed up in a bayou that runs through downtown Houston three days after he had been arrested following a bar brawl.

A federal court jury convicted three former Houston policemen of conspiring to violate the man's civil rights. On March 28 a federal judge assessed them five-year suspended sentences on the felony conviction, terms the U.S. Attorney's office and community leaders called too lenient.

Although spokesmen for the Mexican-American community here have been very critical of the police, many said Monday officers acted with great restraint in handling the explosive situation.

State Rep. Ben Reyes, who was on the scene most of Sunday night, said the police acted "in a responsible, sensible manner." Reyes blamed the rampage on a small group and its leader, Travis Morales, who he said had been attempting to stir up people all afternoon.

Morales, who is considered radical by many community spokesmen, told reporters late Monday the police should not have come to the park at all and that they got what they deserved. He said he spoke to the crowd over a bullhorn but denied his group — People United Against Police Brutality — had anything to do with the burning or looting.

Rev. Isabel Gomez, director of Casa de Amigos, a neighborhood community center, said Monday people in the neighborhood disapproved of violence. But he said there is a lot of tension over lack of housing, unemployment and fights that break out in the streets.

Mexican-Americans make up about 13 percent of the population of the nation's fifth largest city. It is a growing community not noted for political activism.

Both Mayor Jim McConn and Caldwell said during a joint news conference Monday the incident was isolated and did not reflect on the Mexican-American community as a whole.

Sebastian Monte, who spent most of Monday sweeping water-soaked pan dulce out of the charred ruins of his bakery, said he had lost everything and could not understand why it happened.

Victor Gonzalez, a city housing inspector, said although most Mexican-Americans probably did not approve of the violence they were still fed up with what he called their "second-class" status in the city that symbolizes economic progress.

Labor Bill Predicted By Carter

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter, accusing business lobbyists of distortion, predicted today that a labor law revision bill will be enacted after a bitter battle on the Senate floor that begins next week.

"I predict before the end of this year we will have a strong, sound labor law reform bill on my desk," Carter told a group of labor and congressional leaders attending a White House breakfast billed by organizers as a "pep rally."

The president, calling the bill "of crucial importance," accused the business community of engaging in a "grossly distorted" lobbying campaign against the measure.

The White House "has been bombarded by an overwhelming attack by those who want to see this bill defeated," he told the 100 guests attending the breakfast.

There was no immediate comment from business groups to the president's remarks. Carter called the bill a "moderate" piece of legislation "that lets the laws on the books be enforced for a change" by cracking down more on violators.

"It will be a big and bitter battle in the Senate ... but I will do all I can to help you and you will have a strong, constant partner in the White House," the president pledged.

The bill has been the focus of intense and multi-million-dollar lobbying campaigns by both supporters and opponents.

Organized labor says the bill simply streamlines present labor laws, making them more effective. But business groups have said the measure amounts to "push-button unionism" that would drive many small businesses into bankruptcy. The bill, which passed in a stronger version in the House last year, is to be brought to the Senate floor next Monday. Senate leaders agree there are more than 50 votes needed for passage, but opponents have threatened to filibuster against it and, if that fails, to propose hundreds of weakening amendments as a stalling tactic.

Area Readings To Be In 80s

A-J News Services — Summertime is returning to Lubbock and the South Plains. Dispelling the last chill of a week of rainy, cold weather, temperatures are expected to be near 80 today, in the low 50s tonight and in the middle 80s Wednesday. Fair skies and variable winds of five to 10 miles an hour are forecast. Even with total rain of around two inches here and over the South Plains last week, the total to date, 4.11 inches, is still well below the 7.59 that had fallen at this point last year. Lubbock had an official 1.69 inches but more fell in some sections of town. The low temperature here this morning was 49 and a pleasant change from the 37- and 40-degree mornings of the past week. Area readings included 47 at Brownfield, 48 at Plainview and Littlefield, 44 at Levelland, 52 at Snyder, 43 at Dimmitt and Friona, 45 at Tulia and 42 at Muleshoe.

Court Reverses License Ruling

WASHINGTON (AP) — A federal appeals court has limited the role citizens can play in challenging the racial policies of broadcast stations. In an 8-1 decision last week that carries broad national impact, the full U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruled that individuals and minority groups may not participate in the early "discovery" stages of the broadcast license renewal process. The decision reversed an earlier ruling by a three-judge panel for the circuit. Basically, the decision states that the Federal Communications Commission should be free to research facts on its own in preparation for a formal FCC hearing on alleged racial discrimination by any station. Individuals and minority groups do not have to be allowed to participate in the preliminary stages, the court said. The earlier decision had said the commission must allow those claiming discrimination to interrogate station personnel before the FCC decides whether to grant a license renewal without a hearing. "The commission considers 3,000 license renewal applications each year," said Judge Malcolm R. Wilkey for the majority. "To require that its 13 administrative law judges assume the burden of passing on the propriety of an inevitable host of interrogatories would create a regulatory nightmare." The ruling is a setback for a group of Asian-Americans in the San Francisco case, but is somewhat of a victory for a group of Mexican-Americans in the San Antonio area. The San Francisco group had wanted to challenge the hiring practices of radio station KCBS-AM and the San Antonio group is challenging alleged discrimination by station KONO-AM. The court upheld the FCC's decision to renew the license for KCBS and told the commission to reconsider its renewal for KONO. In the San Francisco case, a group called Chinese for Affirmative Action complained that KCBS had employed only one person of Asian heritage during most of its 1971-74 license term. But the FCC found that 10 such persons had been employed during that period and said that was a reasonable number. The appeals court agreed with the FCC in the San Francisco case that no formal hearing was required based on facts gathered in support of the allegations. In the San Antonio case, the court cited the FCC for not going further when it found KONO's alleged shortcomings in employing Mexican-Americans was unreasonable. While the court said the FCC does not have to let the Mexican-American group participate in the early stages of its investigation, it did rule that the FCC must seek further information in any manner it deems appropriate. The judges said the commission had not gathered enough information about the alleged discrimination before it decided against such a hearing. The Mexican-Americans must be given a chance to be heard, the court said.

Police Now Common In School

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Vandalism in schools is estimated at $100 million to $600 million a year; robberies are escalating and assaults on teachers jumped 77 percent in one three-year period a few years ago. Those are some of the reasons why policemen in the halls of schools across the nation have become a relatively common sight — although the policy of using them remains controversial, says Police Magazine.

hoped for," said Arthur Jefferson, Detroit district superintendent. Vandalism is estimated at $100 million to $600 million a year, the magazine said. According to one Senate subcommittee report, robberies increased 37 percent between 1970-1973 and assaults on teachers jumped 77 percent. Recent statistics show students face a greater chance of assault in school than on the street.

"Fear of assault and disorder in the classroom has often emerged as a primary concern of teachers in surveys done by local teachers' unions," said the article. Use of the "school resource officers" has been successful. The first ones were assigned in 1958 in Flint, Mich., and at least 10 cities have similar programs. In Tucson, Ariz., school resource officers began work 10 years ago and officials recorded a 20 percent to 30 percent drop in delinquency. Police in schools gained acceptance from a variety of former opponents, but many contend the need for police betrays fundamental troubles.

Police presence "may sometimes lead to a state control atmosphere," said David Cohen of the American Civil Liberties Union's academic freedom committee. "Not a healthy environment for education," said Martin Walsh, New England regional director of the Department of Justice community relations service. "It's unfortunate that some schools have degenerated to the point where they feel they have to put police in," he said. The administration is now permitting members to make 30-year mortgage loans compared to 12-year loans in the past. Meanwhile, the Department of Housing and Urban Development said mortgage loans from all sources nationwide was $110 billion in 1976.

Credit Union Official Sees Cautiousness

WASHINGTON (AP) — A government expert predicts federal credit unions will be cautious in issuing the mortgage loans they became eligible to handle today. Walter Stuart, of the National Credit Union Administration, estimated about 300 to 500 of the 12,600 federal credit unions will be offering long-term mortgages by 1980. By 1983 he expects 1,500 credit unions to be lending $9 billion to $12 billion. The administration is now permitting members to make 30-year mortgage loans compared to 12-year loans in the past. Meanwhile, the Department of Housing and Urban Development said mortgage loans from all sources nationwide was $110 billion in 1976.

Other school systems use plainclothes detectives or juvenile police known as "school resource officers" who combine investigative and law enforcement work with counseling. Still others hire cheap and less well-trained private guards. Much of the increased police presence is due to the frequency of racial clashes and crime in corridors, the magazine said. Uniformed police were added in 22 Detroit schools when violence prompted by desegregation overwhelmed 300 unarmed private security guards. "We have attempted many efforts in the past to resolve this problem, but we simply have not achieved the success we

Report Says Blacks Still Earning Less

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Despite major strides in earning power by black men since World War II, it may take 30 to 40 years more before they catch up with wages earned by white men, two researchers say. Nationally, the researchers said, black men now earn three-fourths as much as white men. But women, both black and white, have even further to go. Although black women have almost pulled even with white women in pay, the average wage of white women is less than 60 percent of that earned by white men. In two reports released by Rand Corp., economists James Smith and Finis Welch said education had become a larger factor than northward migration in bigger incomes for blacks in the last decade. Rand, based in Santa Monica, is a private, non-profit research center that studies domestic and national security issues. In 1947, wages for black men were half that earned by white men, while those for black women were one-third of their white counterparts' pay, the studies found. Most of the gains came during the 1960s, according to the studies, which were financed by the National Science Foundation. The researchers said improved education was responsible for 47 percent of the income gains by black men and 33 percent of those by black women. In 1930, they said, the average black entering the labor market had 3.7 years of formal education than whites. They said that 80 percent of blacks entering the job market had a grade school diploma or less and only 3 percent had gone to college. By 1970, the education difference separating blacks and whites had dropped to 1.2 years, while only 10 percent of the blacks had less than nine years of schooling and 20 percent had gone to college. Finis and Welch said black women had made considerable strides because of government minority hiring programs, but added that they could find little evidence black men had gained much from the programs. "Because hiring a black woman met both race and sex quotas for employers, the affirmative action thrust may have given black women the advantage in the job market," they said. In addition, the studies found a dramatic decrease in the percentage of black women doing domestic work in the South. Half of all employed black women in the South were domestic workers in 1960, but a decade later, only 20 percent were, the economists said.

Alleged Vietnam Spy Testifies

ALEXANDRIA, Va. (AP) — Ronald L. Humphrey said today his only concern at the time he allegedly spied for Communist Vietnam and before was to get his common-law wife and her children out of that country.

"It was my one preoccupation — to get them out of Vietnam," the former government employee testified at his espionage trial in U.S. District Court. "I owed my life to her ... If I had gone back with her earlier, I could have got them out."

Humphrey, 42, and a Vietnamese expatriate, David Truong, 32, are accused of passing classified U.S. government documents to Vietnamese officials.

Humphrey told the court he had obtained permission for his common-law wife, Kim, and two of her children, to leave Vietnam and join him in Germany, where he was stationed in 1975 with the U.S. Information Agency.

About the time of the Communist takeover in 1975, Humphrey said, Kim returned to Vietnam to try to obtain the release of two other children. He said he intended to follow, but commercial flights were stopped and he was not able to join her.

He said he did not hear from Kim for 14 more months, and she eventually made her way to the United States.

Humphrey testified that while in Saigon, he made frequent trips into the countryside on Information Agency missions. When he was about to go on one such trip, he said, Kim came to him and warned him that Communist troops were planning to ambush his jeep.

He did not make the trip, he said, and the jeep was ambushed and two soldiers were killed.

"From that day on, I realized that I was alive and not something in a rice paddy — I am alive today because of her," Humphrey said.

Humphrey and Truong, who were arrested Jan. 31, face possible life imprisonment if convicted on charges of espionage, conspiracy and failure to register as a foreign agent.

The trial began on May 1. Presiding U.S. District Judge Albert V. Bryan late Monday rejected defense motions for a directed verdict of acquittal of Humphrey and Truong.

Humphrey's attorneys have said they plan to call five or six witnesses, one of whom testified Monday. Truong's principal attorney, Michael E. Tigar, said he will call anywhere from 12 to 20 witnesses, meaning the defense presentation is likely to require another 12 days or two weeks.

The two men are accused of stealing classified documents from USIA and giving them to a secret CIA and FBI informant who in turn passed them on to Hanoi officials in Paris and New York.

Humphrey has been in jail since his arrest, unable to raise $150,000 bail. Truong was able to raise a bond of $250,000 and was released in April.

In denying the request for a directed verdict, Bryan said much of the evidence presented by prosecutors was circumstantial but not entirely speculative and that the case should go to the jury.

The defense has singled out as a principle contention that the approximately 100 documents contained little more than diplomatic chitchat and not — as the government contends — major national security secrets.

Humphrey's first witness, William G. Florence, a retired military officer and civilian employee of the Air Force, testified that he has been closely involved for years in questions of classification and dissemination of documents which are classified as confidential or secret.

As for the ones involved in the indictment in this case, he told the jury: "My opinion is that they do not contain information relating to national defense. There must be a reasonable and current relationship. ... They're not properly classified at all."

Florence's testimony varied from that of two witnesses from the State Department and the Defense Intelligence Agency to the effect that the documents did affect U.S. national security and were helpful to Hanoi.

The two, including Brig. Gen. Billy B. Forsman, deputy director of the intelligence agency, said the documents were properly classified, that their disclosure injured the United States and helped Communist Vietnam, even though much of the material in them had been obtained from public sources.

They said there were corroborating comments from State Department officials and other informants which made the confidential classification proper.

New Trial Granted Corona

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Accusing his lawyer of being more interested in selling a book than in defending his client, the state Court of Appeal has granted convicted mass killer Juan Corona a new trial.

However, the court said Monday in its 71-page decision that circumstantial evidence of Corona's guilt in the machete hacking deaths of 25 transient farm workers was "overwhelming" and suggested that his only defense is insanity.

It said defense lawyer Richard Hawk was "in gross neglect of his basic duty" for not offering an insanity defense.

Corona, now 41, was convicted in 1973 and is serving a life sentence at Soledad State Prison.

His current court-appointed lawyer, Alan Exelrod, said a counselor told Corona of the decision and said Corona was "very happy."

Corona, a labor contractor who recruited transients and supplied them to growers in the Feather and Yuba River valleys, was taken into custody after a search of his Yuba City home turned up an assortment of edged weapons.

After his arrest, Corona was described by his priest as "an exemplary father and a fine Christian," who neither smoked nor drank. It was learned later that he had been a mental patient years before, suffering from paranoid schizophrenia.

The court said Hawk's conduct "constituted not only an outrageous abrogation of the standards which the legal profession has set for itself ... but also rendered the trial a farce and mockery."

It said Hawk acquired all literary rights to Corona's life story and trial in lieu of salary, hired writer Ed Cray to sit at the counsel table during the trial and wrote an afterward in Cray's book.

Such an agreement was a conflict of interest on Hawk's part and suggested he was more interested "in his own pocket-book" than in Corona's legal rights, the court said.

Hawk, reached at home, denied the court's contention that he was negligent and described the decision as a personal attack on him. "If the question is, 'does it hurt me,' yes it hurts," he said.

Hawk said all profits from the book went to pay for Corona's defense. "That case cost me a minimum of $150,000 of my own money," he said.

Expressing "delight" with the reversal, Hawk said there "was no psychiatric support for an insanity defense."

He said he refused to claim insanity because Corona "insisted he didn't do it, and I believed him, and I still believe him."

Ted Hansen, district attorney for Sutter County where the bodies were buried, said he expected the state attorney general to appeal the reversal. "The problems in trying any case as old as this are extensive," he said. "It would be extremely difficult for anybody to prosecute."

It was unclear whether Corona, married and the father of four children, would be granted bail during an appeal. Michael Mendelson, Exelrod's partner, said it was premature even to discuss bail.

Marshall seeks new hearing on lawsuit

James Marshall has asked the 7th Court of Civil Appeals in Amarillo for a new hearing on his lawsuit to void $26.4 million in City of Lubbock municipal bonds.

Marshall's request, predicted by city observers last month after the appellate court upheld the bonds' validity, is expected to be rejected by the court. City attorneys said the justices almost routinely deny such requests.

If the rehearing request is dismissed, Marshall then could apply for a hearing before the state Supreme Court. However, that court is very selective about cases it hears, city attorneys noted.

Marshall, a longtime City Hall critic who only recently withdrew another lawsuit against city bonds, had warned that he would pursue his case in the appellate court as far as he can. He may even try to enter the federal court system with his claims, he said.

Marshall is seeking to have the 1970 election in which voters approved $26.4 million in general obligation bonds declared null on the grounds the ordinance authorizing it was legally defective.

A 99th District Court judge last year upheld the ordinance's and election's validity. However, Marshall appealed Judge Thomas Clinton's decision to the Amarillo court, which subsequently upheld the ruling.

Marshall says in his petitions that he wants more specificity on how bond money will be spent and on the maintenance of bookkeeping records.

Capital projects that would be financed with bond funds include water system, sewage, street sewer, street and fire protection improvements.

Marshall last week voluntarily dropped his lawsuit against municipal airport revenue bonds, proceeds of which will be used to finance a parking lot expansion. As in his appealed suit, Marshall demanded greater specificity in how money will be spent.

Democrats Squabble Over Party Statutes

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Like medieval theologians who argued interminably about how many angels can dance on the head of a pin, the Democrats can't seem to stop debating their party rules for nominating presidential candidates.

Even though they wrote regulations that produced a winner in 1976, the Democrats ordered up the third major rules revision since 1968, and true to form, are squabbling over the result.

The proposed new rules were submitted to the 25-member national Democratic executive committee, meeting today and Wednesday. It may recommend changes, but final action is reserved for the Democratic National Committee next month.

If the new rules had been in effect in 1976, they would have prevented the late candidacies of California Gov. Edmund Brown Jr. and Idaho Sen. Frank Church, and some critics claim they are designed to protect President Carter's renomination in 1978.

Skirmishing over the rules submitted by a commission headed by Michigan Democratic Chairman Morley Winograd began Monday when Sen. George McGovern, D-S.D., the party's 1972 presidential candidate and a veteran of its rules wars, sent a letter to national committee members opposing some of the key changes.

While he appealed for peace and tranquility, McGovern actually gave encouragement to Democrats who charge the Winograd rules were rigged to insure there could be no renomination challenge to President Carter in 1980.

"I would suggest that the present rules of the party have already been carefully reformed and revised and that we should not now draft 'permanent' party rules simply to meet the objectives of a single election instead of supporting rules which will serve all Democratic candidates and voters equitably," McGovern wrote.

McGovern, chairman of the party's rules reform commission in 1969-70, said many Democrats object to the proposed changes.

Any comments from the public on the proposed routes or on any additional routes will be accepted, officials said.

Personnel from the State Department of Highways and Public Transportation will be in attendance at this meeting to answer questions and give information concerning the corridors, the State's Relocation Assistance Program and right-of-way acquisition.

He began his farm supply business in Plainview about 20 years ago. It now includes stores in Ennis, McKinney, Hillsboro, Clovis, N.M., Lubbock, Brownfield, Plainview, Dumas, Dalhart, Amarillo, Lamesa, Hereford, Littlefield and Levelland.

Americans Still Have Gold Fever

WASHINGTON (AP) — More than a century after the great rush west, the gold bug is still biting. "A sort of old-fashioned gold fever seems to strike many people in the late spring and summer; requests for maps and reports that describe the gold deposits of gold in the country — particularly in the West — mount rapidly," says a government geologist.

But the experts say today's prospector is more likely hoping to pay for his vacation than to strike it rich. And officials at the U.S. Geological Survey say that even paying for a vacation is unlikely for the beginner.

Frank Forrester, a survey spokesman, says a prospecting trip can be profitable in other ways, if not financially. There is, for example, the constant hope that each pan may contain some "pay dirt," he said.

"Few thrills can compare with that experience when one sees even a few tiny flecks of gold glittering in the sand at the bottom of a pan," Forrester said. But he noted that fewer than one in each thousand western prospectors has ever made a strike.

The pioneers who found most of the gold-bearing areas in the last century were experienced miners from Alabama and Georgia. At the peak of the rush, some 120,000 miners were crawling over the California foothills.

Since then the area has been extensively prospected.

After the first rush, Chinese workers combed the ground for low-grade remains. During the Depression, itinerant miners worked the area, but only a small percentage could even support themselves.

While commercial mining has mostly given way to large-scale mechanized operations, Forrester said there is still a

Pastor Employs Show-And-Tell To Criticize Church Absences

MARSHALL, Mich. (UPI) — The Rev. Kirk Starkweather decided he had heard enough excuses from people missing his Sunday services.

So the pastor of the Church of the Nazarene displayed a bewildering array of items Sunday before his curious congregation for a show-and-tell sermon on the evils of skipping services.

Items ranging from a beanbag chair to a sailboat were dragged, hoisted and otherwise shown to those attending in hopes of dramatizing the absurdity of excuses for staying home on Sunday.

Among the examples that made the church look like a department store bargain basement were:

— A first-aid station for those claiming they were too ill to attend church, and aspirin and eyedrops for others suffering from Saturday night's reveries.

— A sleeping bag, pillow, keep-alarm clock and an alarm clock for those favoring late Sunday sleeping.

— An Easter lily and Christmas poinsettia for those showing up only on major holidays.

— TV dinners for those who say they need all day Sunday to cook the main meal.

Parents Begin School System

LAS VEGAS, N.M. (AP) — Parents unhappy with the East Las Vegas and West Las Vegas school systems started their own school here, St. Athanasius, a junior high for grades six through eight.

"I was looking for a better education in the basics than public schools provide," said Dr. Jose Lopez y Gaston, chairman of the department of modern languages at Highlands University, who enlisted the help of local parents to set up and run the school.

Tuition is $40 a year for one child, $65 for two, $80 for three.

Carlin mine in Nevada, followed intensive scientific and technical studies.

The nation's first gold mines were developed in the 1790s in Appalachia, but the small deposits were quickly depleted. California, Nevada and Alaska are the most productive regions.

— A scoreboard for those complaining of hypocrisy in church so they can keep score between the true Christians and the hypocrites.

— A tree, fishing pole, set of golf clubs and a sailboat for those who say they will find their salvation communing with nature.

— A hearing aid for those who say they can never hear the sermon, cotton balls for those complaining the lecturer is always too loud, a beanbag chair for those who say the pews are too hard, fans for those who get too hot and blankets for those who get too cold.

"The most common excuse," Starkweather told his congregation, "is 'I'll be there if nothing else comes up.' For those kind of people, something always comes up."

"It's wrong priorities that cause people to fall back on these excuses. It's tragic that people allow these kinds of excuses to keep them from church."

The show-and-tell drew about 35 of the congregation's 50 members, and Starkweather conceded attendance was only slightly better than normal.

Nevertheless, the 39-year-old minister forged ahead with new plans for a workshop next week intended to help clean up the church building and its surroundings.

Starkweather said he'll cook breakfast for anyone showing up a half hour early.

Tomorrow's Horoscope

By Bernice Bede Osol

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) If you've got a product or a plan you're trying to sell, go easy on the adjectives at first. When your audience is interested, throw in the clincher.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Check with friends who usually deal in substantial circles. You could pick up a tip to benefit you financially.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) You may feel an inward urge to take a gamble. You can control it to the extent that any risk taken will be well-thought-out and profitable.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Play it close to the vest in important negotiations. If you need help from associates, tell them only what is absolutely necessary.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Your instinct on how to mix business and pleasure is right on the money. You'll know when to joke and when to get down to brass tacks.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) There's an uncanny ability you have to bring people and the things they need together so that they'll be happy. You'll profit, too.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Listen to advice without failing to comprehend that you're the leading expert in matters that pertain to your career or occupation.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) An involvement from which you have a consideration due is not going to be settled all by itself. Tomorrow's the day for you to speak up tactfully.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Your mate or partner may have ideas superior to your own. Be wise. Take a back seat instead of pushing an inferior product.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Don't be afraid to bargain logically for what you believe you're entitled to tomorrow. You can probably get it if you document your case.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Although something you're attempting tomorrow may seem chancy to the observer, your calculated knowledge of what you're doing eliminates any risk.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Use your experience and native intelligence and luck will be on your side. You can initiate changes to make your life more enjoyable with this formula.

Critic Pans Ailey Performances

By MARY CAMPBELL
NEW YORK (AP) — The Alvin Ailey American Dance Theater presented three premieres in the first three nights of its May 3-21 season. They are not out of the very top drawer.

Thursday night at the City Center saw 35 minutes of dance drama, "Blood-Burning Moon," choreographed by Eleo Pomare, who has his own dance company. Ulysses Dove put more tension into his plantation worker than Peter Woodin put into his plantation owner's son characterization. Donna Wood had torrid duets with both and the two men had an excellently choreographed confrontation. Then the dance took too long to end, which drained its impact.

The work, to music by Yusef Lateef,

Duke Ellington and the Art Ensemble of Chicago, was having its New York premiere. The company danced it in Washington in February.

"Butterfly," being given a new production on Wednesday night, was more effective. It was fast, set to electronic music by Morton Subotnik. Seven dancers in iridescent leotards flit through solos and clusters. Maxine Sherman in red and Keith McDaniel in yellow had the most interesting duet, with strikingly unusual somersaults. A hostile, ultramodern duet for Sarita Allen in green and Melvin Jones in blue was nearly as enthralling.

Choreographer Rael Lamb was resident choreographer with the San Francisco opera in 1977.

The world premiere, on Wednesday, was a 15-minute solo for Judith Jamison choreographed by Ailey. Titled "Passage," it is another of this company's flailing-about solos which have nothing to say but are meant to show off a star.

Thursday's effort in that vein was "Coverage II," by Rudy Perez for Clive Thompson, a boring and tasteless solo.

Donna Wood was the main star of the first two evenings of the season. Opening night began with her in the title role of George Faison's "Gazelle." She was everything she should be — sinuous, beautiful, fast and free.

Opening night closed with Faison's upbeat "Suite Otis" in which young Marilyn Banks was flaunting her funny spunk, effectively, but sometimes too broadly.

Announcements were made both nights that the company needs to raise $100,000 by June 30 in order to receive a grant from the Ford Foundation.

During the last year the company toured America, the Far East, Middle East and Europe. After its present season, it leaves for South America.

Gas Firm May Supply Energy Collectors

ELIZABETH, N.J. (UPI) — In the first such project in the nation to stabilize the price of natural gas, New Jersey's second largest gas supplier may supply its customers with solar collectors.

The project, announced Sunday by Russell Fleming, vice president and general counsel of Elizabethtown Gas Co., would have customers use the sun instead of precious natural gas for making hot water, and operating heating and cooling systems.

Property owners would have the option of owning the solar unit or simply paying for the energy provided by the system, which would be installed on the property and owned and serviced by the utility.

Although the project is still in the planning stages, once it gets underway it is expected to reduce the demand for non-renewable fuels while stabilizing the spiraling costs of energy.

The price of gas and vapor fuels continues to rise while supplies are being depleted and exploited, Fleming said. "We are trying to shift this policy to get out of this syndrome."

will examine the consumer's energy load, location and cost, and charge for the amount of BTUs (British Thermal Units) used, Fleming said.

The first solar systems will be installed in about six months in those commercial and industrial buildings where solar energy will be most valuable as a supplement to natural gas, he said.

After initial problems are worked out it will be expanded to include all customers.

"The customer requires so many BTUs per day. As long as he gets the energy he's content. If the gas company can produce the energy from solar for less than the price of new gas then it will help bring down demand on that fuel and stabilize costs," Fleming said.

If the customer buys the system, he gets the energy free whenever the sun is shining. If he doesn't, the utility would then charge the energy value that the system produces, which would be the same as the prevailing natural gas rate.

Large fruit bats which live in colonies in the Philippines are often hunted for their flesh and fur.

Play Focuses On Middle-Aged

By WILLIAM GLOVER
NEW YORK (AP) — The songs and patter of "My Mother Was a Fortune-Teller" amiably concern that eternally fascinating topic, the feminine mystique at middle-age.

Phyllis Newman, a chic and somewhat brassy veteran of many musicals and television appearances, is all by herself on stage in the show that opened Sunday at off-Broadway's Hudson Guild Theater.

Apparently to assure proper handling of the subject, nine technicians, an usually large number, get program credit for creative collaboration.

The melodies delivered by Miss Newman with relentless enthusiasm, as she ranges about a bedroom setting, include familiar pieces by Richard Rodgers, Jule Styne, Jerry Bock and less known items by others. For the title number by John Clifton, Miss Newman herself provided the lyrics.

To string them all together, an unspecified someone has provided Miss Newman with monologues that involve her in conversations with an invisible 13-year-old daughter, with others and sometimes the audience directly.

All relate to search for self-identity, the itch for an extra-marital affair "when roughly 30 or 40" and rebellion against male dominance.

Particular gems of wisdom are "Yes, you can be ashamed of your parents and love them," and "don't wish too hard for what you want or you might get it and find you don't want it."

It's all mildly diverting and the best item is a melody ironically assembled from such songs as "My Lord and Master" and "The Girl That I Marry," any one of which could chafe a liberator.

Plane Sale Change Hinted

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance acknowledged today that the Carter administration is talking to members of Congress about possible compromises on the Mideast jet fighter sale, but said "no conclusions have been reached."

Vance's comment came when Rep. William S. Broomfield, R-Mich., asked him at a House International Relations Committee hearing whether a compromise actually is in the works. Vance did not elaborate.

Key senators who met with Vance over breakfast earlier said a promise of more F-15 jet fighters to Israel is only one of several compromise elements being discussed in an effort to avert a Senate floor fight over the plane sale proposal, which involves Saudi Arabia and Egypt as well as Israel.

Taking a hard line at the hearing, Vance said the administration's proposed jet sales "stand on their own two feet" and members of Congress "will have to make up their minds and do as they like."

But he added: "We've been talking with the members and we've been meeting to see if there is something that could be done that would be helpful."

The secretary was asked whether that might include a separate commitment of additional planes for Israel in the future.

"Some members on both sides (House and Senate) have suggested that," he replied, neither endorsing nor rejecting the idea himself.

Meanwhile, White House Press Secretary Jody Powell said the normal course of U.S. relations with Israel would "no doubt involve additional sales of aircraft in the years to come."

However, Powell said he knew of no current commitments on such specifics as numbers of planes or delivery dates.

Powell said the administration aims to avoid "a time-consuming, divisive and perhaps bitter floor fight" on the issue.

An optimistic assessment of the arms issue came from Sen. Jacob K. Javits, R-N.Y., after he and other members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee met with Vance.

"I believe we're on a road which could lead to a settlement," Javits said.

The senators said they had agreed not to discuss details while the compromise negotiations are under way.

But Sen. Clifford Case, R-N.J., asked whether more F-15s for Israel were part of the compromise discussions, responded: "If that isn't one of the elements, I don't know what we're talking about."

At the House hearing, Chairman Clement J. Zablocki, D-Wis., asked the Carter administration officials if selling more planes to Israel would not upset the military balance the officials claim the jet fighter sale would maintain.

"I don't think you can calculate the balance that precisely," Defense Secretary Harold Brown replied. "A few planes would not upset the balance."

Brown acknowledged that the new F-16 jet, of which 75 would be sold to Israel, can carry nuclear bombs.

But he said all the special wiring, computers and attachments required for the nuclear weapons will be removed from the planes to be sold to Israel.

"We are in effect denuclearizing it," Brown said.

He said the Israelis could re-adapt the plane to carry nuclear bombs, but said they then would have to obtain the bombs.

The Washington Post reported this morning that the administration is prepared to sell Israel 20 additional F-15s in the mid-1980s, bringing the total in its air force to 60, the same number President Carter proposes to sell to Saudi Arabia.

Case said the negotiations are far from over. He said he did not yet know what all the major elements in the compromise would be.

Sen. Frank Church, D-Idaho, said another element he demands in any compromise is an assurance that Saudi Arabia will not add to its fleet of jets with purchases from France if Congress agrees to sell the 60 F-15s the administration has proposed.

Carter wants to sell 60 sophisticated F-15 jet fighters to Saudi Arabia, 75 F-16s and 15 F-15s to Israel and 50 less sophisticated F-5Es to Egypt.

Congress has 30 days, until May 28, to reject any or all of the sales by a resolution that must be approved by both the House and the Senate.

The planes are to be delivered by the end of 1983 and administration aides began signaling congressmen through newspaper interviews last week that the only compromise Carter was willing to make, if necessary, is to sell Israel more planes after that.

Members of the Senate committee had suggested before today's meeting with Vance that they were likely to approve rejection resolutions against the entire sale.

But Senate Democratic leader Robert C. Byrd has said several times that he is confident the full Senate would reject those resolutions, providing congressional approval for the sale.

da's Panhandle, 20 miles from the Alabama border and 50 miles from Mobile, as it made a final landing approach at the Pensacola airport, disappearing from the radar screens three miles from the runway.

The downed airliner, its tail lights still shining hours after the crash, was mired in mud with at least a third of the fuselage above the water. A flotilla of rescue boats and helicopters rushed to the scene in calm seas.

"That plane skipped across the water like a rock on a pond and then settled in to the bay. There were two loud reports 'blam, blam' as it skipped," a witness said.

Many passengers emerged from the water soaked with jet fuel which leaked from the plane when it went down with 2,700 gallons of kerosene left in its tanks. Spectators were ordered out of the area for fear a flame could touch off the fuel.

James Stockwell, first officer on the downed plane, was being examined by doctors when he said he felt the aircraft made its approach to the field too low.

"We were apparently below altitude. I can't believe we were that low, but apparently we were," said Stockwell, who was reported in good condition.

"There shouldn't have been any problem making that landing," said Jack Barker, a spokesman for the Federal Aviation Administration. He said visibility was four miles despite the fog and that was "above standard" for the airport.

"All of a sudden, whom! I took a head count after the plane was down, and it appeared everyone was alive," an unidentified male passenger said as he waited for medical treatment at a local hospital.

"There was no warning. There was turbulence and we were down," another man said.

The flight originated in Miami at 5:20 p.m. EDT and made stops in Melbourne and Tampa in Florida, New Orleans and Mobile, Ala., before heading back to Florida.

Besides Stockwell, the flight crew was identified as Capt. George Kunz, copilot Leonard Sandersen and flight attendants Carl Greenwood, Debbie Verplank and C. Crawford, all of the Miami area.

Investigators from the FAA and the National Transportation Safety Board were sent from Washington, D.C., to determine the cause of the crash.

Colby Raps JFK Order

NEW YORK (UPI) — President John F. Kennedy committed the worst mistake of the Vietnam war, according to former CIA Director William Colby.

"The Hue riot (by Buddhists in May 1963) led to what I consider the worst mistake of the Vietnam war: the American-sponsored overthrow of (South Vietnamese President Ngo Dinh) Diem," Colby writes in his memoirs, "Honorable Men," being published this month by Simon & Schuster.

Diem was overthrown and killed by a coup by South Vietnamese generals with U.S. support.

Said Colby: "The story of the coup is well known and need not be repeated here. It is plain, however, that the American decision with respect to it was made by the White House, not by the CIA." Kennedy was president then.

Colby, for years a CIA leader in Vietnam before rising to the directorship, said Diem and not the generals who killed him had the political ability to defeat the Communists. Colby said the White House did not appreciate that.

Colby said the American-supported South Vietnamese, even after Diem's overthrow, won on the battlefield. He said the Communists took a beating in their famous Tet offensive of 1968, but domestic U.S. anti-war fervor turned it into a Hanoi triumph among the American people.

At the end, three years ago, when Saigon crumbled, Colby said it was the fault of the U.S. Congress.

"The tactical errors of the final days, of course, contributed to Saigon's fall, but I believe the root cause to have been the congressional signal of sharply reduced aid, with its inevitable effect in loss of morale and panic," he wrote.

Then President Gerald R. Ford has asked Congress to provide money to keep Saigon's forces fighting, but Congress said no and the collapse ensued.

Colby's book says much else that may trouble believers in the anti-war movement. He also speaks uncomplainingly of words of Republicans, Democrats, and the press and other sometime foes of the CIA.

airport and told them to call me," McCollough recalled. "He said to bring a shotgun and a .22 and ammunition. I'm a friend of Zip's, and when he calls you go."

The balloon had no lights, and because it had no transponder it did not show up on an aircraft radar.

"It was about 60 feet long and about 30 feet across, and it was getting close to dark," McCollough explained. "After dark it would have been a disaster. Zip was in contact with air traffic control at Lubbock, but the balloon wasn't, and it was right up there in the traffic. If a plane had come in contact with it, there would have been a disaster."

Meanwhile, McCollough's 20-year-old son Kevin, a Texas Tech University student, was circling the balloon in another light aircraft.

"We caught up with it at about 11,000 feet and it was still going up," the elder McCollough explained. "We made nine or 10 passes at it, fired six shots, and on the sixth shot, we got close enough to finally penetrate it."

"It was a frightening experience. It rotated and started down."

After falling for about six minutes, however, it still had not collapsed and about two miles south of Whitharral, it began bouncing over the ground.

Two Austrians Climb Everest

KATMANDU, Nepal (AP) — Two Austrian climbers have made the first conquest of Mt. Everest, the world's highest mountain, without the help of oxygen, Nepal's Ministry of Tourism announced today.

Previous climbers, including four on this 11-man Austrian expedition, carried oxygen supplies to help them breathe in the high altitude of the Himalayan peak, which rises 29,028 feet.

A ministry spokesman said the team's base camp announced the conquest by radio to the Nepalese government. The statement said the two climbers — Reinhold Messner, 33, of Sudtiroi and Peter Habeler, 35, of Tirol — even slept without oxygen supplies on their way to the top.

Messner and Habeler left their high camp on the south side of the mountain at 6 a.m. Monday, reached the summit at noon and, after a few minutes on the top, returned to camp at 2 p.m., the spokesman said.

Last Wednesday, three Austrians and a Sherpa guide reached the summit. And today, a Japanese expedition abandoned their attempt when one of the climbers, Saburo Ishikawa, 22, slipped and fell, suffering a spinal fracture. He was flown by helicopter to a hospital for treatment.

Messner launched the Austrian expedition's first attempt without oxygen April 24, accompanied by two Sherpa guides, but couldn't go beyond the South Col because of severe storms. Habeler stayed in camp during the attempt after he became ill from eating a can of sardines.

The first conquest of Mt. Everest was achieved on May 29, 1953.

Meanwhile Garner, who also had been following the balloon on the ground, had stopped in the area where it had descended.

"We saw a pickup in the turnrow, and my son saw him (Garner) reach up to the balloon," McCollough explained. "I couldn't see as we turned, but Franklin recognized him (Garner)."

According to the physician, Garner, who is a rodeo performer, removed the balloon's plastic cap filler and instinctively put it in his mouth. He then apparently choked, and as his attention was drawn from the deflating balloon, he was carried by the material.

"He was standing on part of it (the balloon), and it went around him twice. It's zero porosity nylon, which means there's no air at all going through it."

As the fliers came back around the downed balloon a second time, they lost sight of Garner.

"The balloon had quit bouncing, so we knew it was anchored on something," McCollough noted. "I said, 'I think he's rolled up in that thing,' because we could no longer see him."

Franklin and McCollough managed to land in a wet turnrow, and then "ran as hard as we could" to the balloon about a half-mile away. Although the balloon was largely deflated, they said it still rose about 15 feet into the air.

"It pinned his arms down, just as tight as a mummy," McCollough recounted. "I was just petrified. I've never seen such a freak accident."

"When we got there he had all the appearances of a man who had been buried in a cave-in."

The physician said he managed to make an airway for the unconscious victim by using a piece of cotton stalk. Garner reportedly suffered a cardiac arrest twice, but as McCollough worked with him, his son, who had tried to call for an ambulance, went to the nearby airport and grabbed an oxygen bottle.

As the young flier drove back to the field, Franklin contacted a man by CB radio. However, the man apparently did not get to a phone to call for help.

Fortunately, another pilot, Dr. N.L. Dubberly of Morton, heard a subsequent emergency broadcast as he headed toward Lubbock. Dubberly contacted the Levelland airport, which dispatched an ambulance to the field.

While waiting for the emergency vehicle, Franklin made a track through the field by driving the pickup over the rough, muddy area.

Less than 30 minutes after Garner was loaded into the ambulance he was in Methodist's emergency room.

"The balloon had a lot of holes in it, but it was still bouncing along and we thought it was going to get on the highway," said McCollough of the time just before they spotted Garner. "We just nearly didn't stay there. We were convinced it was going to deflate and lay flat."

"The only thing that saved him was Zip going back. If he just hadn't turned back, I don't know what would have happened."

"I think Zip felt bad about it, like there should have been more we could have done," McCollough said today. "But I really don't know what else there was."

ter 3 to 5 feet deep gushed through homes in lowland areas of Bastrop, La., and about 25 families who were evacuated by boat Sunday could not return home. Some portions of Shreveport reported flood waters 15 feet deep.

"As fast as it's draining, we're receiving a lot more," groaned Morehouse Parish Deputy Sheriff Bob Carter.

Elswhere, more snow fell in portions of the Rocky Mountains. Frosty early morning temperatures were common in the mountains and plateau region.

Fog formed early today from the northern Great Lakes across most of the central Atlantic Coast. The heaviest fog was from western South Carolina into southern Pennsylvania. In many localities visibility was near zero. Rain or drizzle was frequently falling to compound driving problems.

Man Collapses At Sentencing

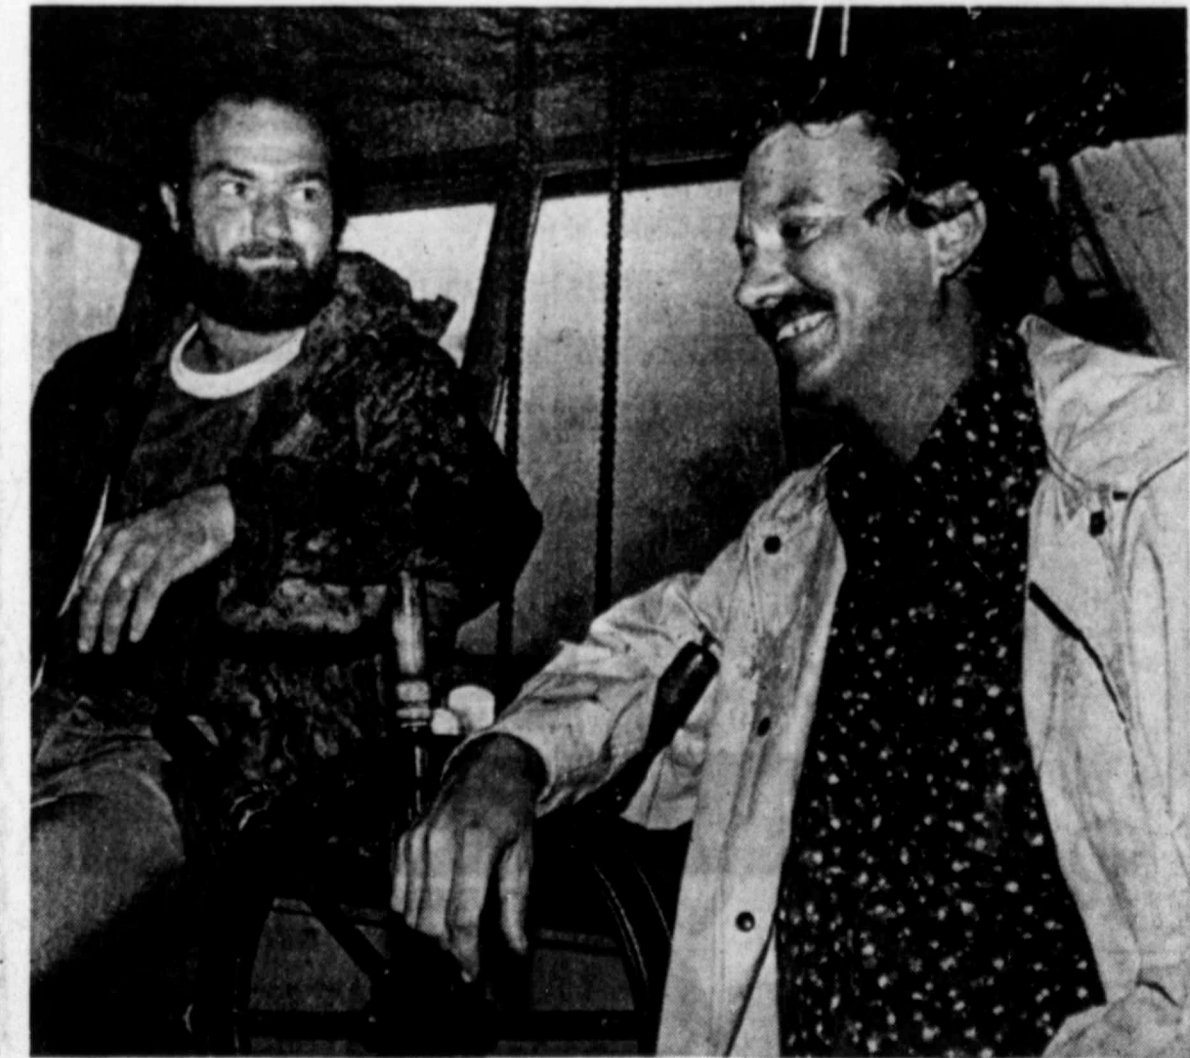

NEW YORK (UPI) — Jacques Michel collapsed when a judge sentenced him to two years in prison for arranging illegal marriages, but he woke up to happier news — he would only have to serve two months.

The Haitian-born Michel was standing in U.S. District Court in Manhattan when he heard the two-year sentence pronounced for his guilty plea to the charges. He collapsed, banging his head on the counsel table.

When Michel, 38, was revived five minutes later, the matchmaker learned that although Judge John Cannella had sentenced him to two years, he had suspended all but two months.

Michel, of Spring Valley, N.Y., decided to plead guilty to arranging illegal marriages for Haitian aliens when he saw all the witnesses ready to testify against him at the start of his trial in March.

O'Neill May Allow Split In Energy Legislation

WASHINGTON (AP) — In an apparent major shift of strategy, House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill said today he is considering allowing President's Carter's proposed crude oil tax to be split apart from the rest of his energy program.

O'Neill also disclosed he may name a new set of House conferees to meet with Senate negotiators to try to reach a compromise on the energy tax legislation.

It was the first time O'Neill has ever talked about splitting up the five-section energy measure.

The speaker and administration officials had hoped to keep the entire package intact, fearing that splitting it up — as the Senate has done — might doom the unpopular tax in the House.

THE MEMORY WAS TOO MUCH — Mrs. Neysa Moskowitz, whose daughter Stacy was among the victims slain by the so-called "Son of Sam" killer, answers questions Monday at a news conference in the office of her lawyer, as her husband, Jerry, right, listens. Moments later, emotion proved too much and Moskowitz broke down. (AP Laserphoto)

Families Of Slayings Victims Hear Berkowitz' Admission

By MALCOLM N. CARTER
NEW YORK (AP) — Neysa Moskowitz sat like a stone, eyes riveted on the back of the head of the man who killed her daughter in the last attack of the Son of Sam.

Michael Lauria kept nodding his head from side to side in bitter accord with the indictment that outlined how David Berkowitz killed his daughter, Donna, with a shot in the back. Hers was the death that began a year of terror by "the 44-caliber killer."

And a survivor, Donna DeMasi, who believes she can hear bone fragments still scraping in her head from the killer's attack, bent forward in her seat and plucked nervously at her lower lip.

Grim and anxious, they sat there Monday, drawing comfort from their friends and their families — and watching the baldish former postal clerk who calmly confessed to killing six persons, knowing it was wrong to do so.

"You bastard!" Rose Lauria sobbed through the handkerchief she pressed to her mouth as Berkowitz, 24, recounted how he killed 18-year-old Donna on July 19, 1976.

"This isn't the justice I want," her husband muttered afterward. "He's got to burn. He's got to die for all the heartaches that he's caused. What else can I tell you?"

Berkowitz is to be sentenced May 22. His lawyers say they'll appeal the judge's finding that Berkowitz was competent, a finding that enabled him to change his plea from insanity to guilty. If Berkowitz gets the maximum sentence of 25 years to life, he would be eligible for parole in 30 years.

"I would have liked more to have happened to him," Miss DeMasi's mother declared amid a crush of reporters and photographers. "The electric chair, for instance. He destroyed a lot of lives."

"He knew what he was doing," said Miss DeMasi, who wears a neck brace from the effects of the bullet that the Son of Sam sent smashing through her collarbone. Fragments, lead and bone, remain.

"She's frightened all the time," the mother said, adding that her 18-year-old daughter never goes out alone at night.

The noise of bone fragments is not real, the doctors say, according to her mother. They say it's only the memory of that gunshot in the night. Only the memory.

"I saw an animal, I saw the animal that killed my daughter and crippled a lot of kids," Mrs. Moskowitz said. "He didn't only murder a child, but he destroyed families — the families are the ones who are suffering today."

Her husband, Jerry, who was so overwhelmed during part of the court session that he turned toward the wall, finally broke down when telling reporters how he felt on seeking Berkowitz for the first time in the Brooklyn courtroom.

"My real reaction was, 'If I could only get to him,' which I knew I couldn't," he said before the sobs engulfed him.

Diary May Link Slayer To Fires In New York

NEW YORK (AP) — In addition to his year-long murder spree, "Son of Sam" killer David Berkowitz may also have set some 2,000 fires between 1974 and 1977, according to Bronx District Attorney Mario Merola.

Merola said Monday that a diary seized when Berkowitz was arrested chronicled 1,441 fires in the four-year period, but it was uncertain whether Berkowitz actually set the fires or merely recorded them from a radio receiver tuned to Fire Department frequencies.

The fires were located in scattered areas of the city.

Merola said Berkowitz told his attorneys that he telephoned fire officials after setting the fires and identified himself as "Phantom of the Bronx."

"I believe he's a pyromaniac," Merola said, adding that Berkowitz had admitted to his defense attorneys that he set more than 2,000 fires. However, Merola conceded that he did not know whether Ber-

U.S., Soviet Union Prepare Venus Launchings

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The United States and Soviet Union are preparing separately to send four unmanned spacecraft to Venus later this year in an expansion of man's inquiry into the secrets of Earth's nearest planetary neighbor.

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration announced today that the first of its two Venus explorers, called Pioneer, are scheduled to take off from Cape Canaveral, Fla., May 20. A second spacecraft is set for launch Aug. 7.

NASA sources said Soviet scientists also are planning a dual Venus expedition. Both Soviet spacecraft are planned for launch in August, with one to attempt a gentle landing on the hot, cloud-shrouded planet and the second to fly past Venus.

American and Russian officials plan to meet in June in Austria to arrange an exchange of data from the Venusian probes.

Stereos Top List Of City Crimes

Seemingly unabated property crimes continued to take a toll on Lubbock residents, according to the latest deluge of reports made to police.

Barbara Joyce Fortenberry of 3605-D Paris Ave. complained that whoever pried her front door Monday made off with $670 worth of goods, including a television set and stereo.

Officers who were told a stereo was found in an eastside alley Monday, later learned the property had been taken from a nearby residence in a break-in.

John Seaborn Crowley said the stereo, as well as a .38-caliber revolver, was stolen from his 1701 E. Cornell St. home earlier that same day. Reports indicated the firearm still was missing.

David Lowell Standlee, owner of South Plains International Trucks, reported the recent loss of three camshafts, together valued at $748.50, from a warehouse near the main building at 301 E. 34th St. Reportedly, there was no sign of forced entry.

According to Kenneth Ray Miller of 602 38th St., someone stole $450 worth of tools from his locked pickup late Sunday or early Monday.

Rosa Garcia of 3112 Auburn St. told police someone entered through an unlocked door and took a stereo system from her home about 11 a.m. Monday.

Television sets reportedly were taken from the homes of Maria Davis of 107 N. Detroit Ave. between 7:30 a.m. and 12:15 p.m. Monday and of Jewell Morrow of 408 Ave. Q between the middle of April and Monday.

Dorothy Allison Collins of 2618 28th St. told officers someone removed a lawn tiller from a locked storage shed in her yard sometime between 9 a.m. and 11 a.m. Monday.

Officers may be closer to catching a burglar who entered Marva Garwood's apartment complex, though. She told police she watched a man enter the Wilshire Apartments at 1922 5th St. about midnight Sunday and remove a $100 double bed.

Hunt Elementary School principal Dennis Hargrove reported the theft of calculators and headphones valued at $219.50 from the school at 415 N. Ivory Ave. between 5 p.m. Friday and 6:30 a.m. Monday.

H.M. Bourgeois of Executive Parks at 3108 Vicksburg told police someone made off with about $100 worth of wood from a construction site there about 10:30 a.m. Sunday.

Carter Backs Demos To Reduce Losses

By FRANK CORMIER
WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter, just in time for the 1978 campaign, has rediscovered the Democratic Party.

The president, who spent most of 1976 running against the organized political establishment, warmly embraced Democratic officeholders and party functionaries during his four-state Western tour last week.

The president's calculated effort to identify himself with his party and its stalwarts was in marked contrast to his behavior in 1976, when he only occasionally acknowledged the existence of fellow Democrats running on the ticket he headed.

As recently as last year, Carter cast himself in something close to a nonpartisan role during his travels around the country, save when he appeared at party fund-raising events.

But the situation is different now. As Carter visited Colorado, California, Oregon and Washington, fellow Democrats were much in evidence and the president went out of his way to praise them and boost their campaigns.

Sometimes, Carter's praise bordered on the extravagant, as when he told Denver Democrats that their embattled senator, Floyd Haskell, in many ways "is a national treasure."

And the president did not shrink from reminding his audience that Haskell — "one of the great senators of all time" — is in sharp disagreement with key farm policies of the Carter administration.

In Spokane, Wash., Carter similarly made public note of his differences with Democratic Rep. Tom Foley, who faces a strong Republican challenge this year.

Foley denies he urged Carter to stay away from Spokane on grounds the president might be a liability in the local campaign.

Even if he did, chances are Foley would think differently now. After all, the president pictured the congressman as an independent-minded legislator before the largest crowd of the trip, variously estimated at 20,000 to 60,000.

Very few campaigning House members see crowds of that size, and it's safe to assume they did not show up just to see Foley.

The president's fresh embrace of fellow Democrats is no accident, of course.

Chinese Daily Raps Job Placements

TOKYO (AP) — The official Peking People's Daily says China must get the right people in the right jobs or the country's modernization drive could suffer.

It said some college graduates trained to do scientific and technical work have been assigned to be purchasers, salesmen, storehouse keepers, typists or cooks.

"Some people specialized in rocket launching, for example, were assigned to be doorkeepers," it said. China is striving to join the ranks of the developed nations by the year 2000.

Plane Sale Change Hinted

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance acknowledged today that the Carter administration is talking to members of Congress about possible compromises on the Mideast jet fighter sale, but said "no conclusions have been reached."

Vance's comment came when Rep. William S. Broomfield, R-Mich., asked him at a House International Relations Committee hearing whether a compromise actually is in the works. Vance did not elaborate.

Key senators who met with Vance over breakfast earlier said a promise of more F-15 jet fighters to Israel is only one of several compromise elements being discussed in an effort to avert a Senate floor fight over the plane sale proposal, which involves Saudi Arabia and Egypt as well as Israel.

Taking a hard line at the hearing, Vance said the administration's proposed jet sales "stand on their own two feet" and members of Congress "will have to make up their minds and do as they like." But he added: "We've been talking with the members and we've been meeting to see if there is something that could be done that would be helpful."

The secretary was asked whether that might include a separate commitment of additional planes for Israel in the future. "Some members on both sides (House and Senate) have suggested that," he replied, neither endorsing nor rejecting the idea himself.

Meanwhile, White House Press Secretary Jody Powell said the normal course of U.S. relations with Israel would "no doubt involve additional sales of aircraft in the years to come."

However, Powell said he knew of no current commitments on such specifics as numbers of planes or delivery dates.

Powell said the administration aims to avoid "a time-consuming, divisive and perhaps bitter floor fight" on the issue.

An optimistic assessment of the arms issue came from Sen. Jacob K. Javits, R-N.Y., after he and other members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee met with Vance.

"I believe we're on a road which could lead to a settlement," Javits said.

The senators said they had agreed not to discuss details while the compromise negotiations are under way.

But Sen. Clifford Case, R-N.J., asked whether more F-15s for Israel were part of the compromise discussions, responded: "If that isn't one of the elements, I don't know what we're talking about."

At the House hearing, Chairman Clement J. Zablocki, D-Wis., asked the Carter administration officials if selling more planes to Israel would not upset the military balance the officials claim the jet fighter sale would maintain.

"I don't think you can calculate the balance that precisely," Defense Secretary Harold Brown replied. "A few planes would not upset the balance."

Brown acknowledged that the new F-16 jet, of which 75 would be sold to Israel, can carry nuclear bombs.

But he said all the special wiring, computers and attachments required for the nuclear weapons will be removed from the planes to be sold to Israel.

"We are in effect denuclearizing it," Brown said.

He said the Israelis could re-adapt the plane to carry nuclear bombs, but said they then would have to obtain the bombs.

The Washington Post reported this morning that the administration is prepared to sell Israel 20 additional F-15s in the mid-1980s, bringing the total in its air force to 60, the same number President Carter proposes to sell to Saudi Arabia.

Case said the negotiations are far from over. He said he did not yet know what all the major elements in the compromise would be.

Sen. Frank Church, D-Idaho, said another element he demands in any compromise is an assurance that Saudi Arabia will not add to its fleet of jets with purchases from France if Congress agrees to sell the 60 F-15s the administration has proposed.

Carter wants to sell 60 sophisticated F-15 jet fighters to Saudi Arabia, 75 F-16s and 15 F-15s to Israel and 50 less sophisticated F-5Es to Egypt.

Congress has 30 days, until May 28, to reject any or all of the sales by a resolution that must be approved by both the House and the Senate.

The planes are to be delivered by the end of 1983 and administration aides began signaling congressmen through newspaper interviews last week that the only compromise Carter was willing to make, if necessary, is to sell Israel more planes after that.

Members of the Senate committee had suggested before today's meeting with Vance that they were likely to approve rejection resolutions against the entire sale.

But Senate Democratic leader Robert C. Byrd has said several times that he is confident the full Senate would reject those resolutions, providing congressional approval for the sale.

SAFE ON SHORE — An unidentified young woman is helped ashore from a rescue boat at Pensacola, Fla., Monday night, after a National Airlines jetliner ditched in the nearby bay. Survivors were picked up by a barge and then taken to shore by the Coast Guard. (AP Laserphoto)

da's Panhandle, 20 miles from the Alabama border and 50 miles from Mobile, as it made a final landing approach at the Pensacola airport, disappearing from the radar screens three miles from the runway.

The downed airliner, its tail lights still shining hours after the crash, was mired in mud with at least a third of the fuselage above the water. A flotilla of rescue boats and helicopters rushed to the scene in calm seas.

"That plane skipped across the water like a rock on a pond and then settled into the bay. There were two loud reports 'blam, blam' as it skipped," a witness said.

Many passengers emerged from the water soaked with jet fuel which leaked from the plane when it went down with 2,700 gallons of kerosene left in its tanks. Spectators were ordered out of the area for fear a flame could touch off the fuel.

James Stockwell, first officer on the downed plane, was being examined by doctors when he said he felt the aircraft made its approach to the field too low.

"We were apparently below altitude. I can't believe we were that low, but apparently we were," said Stockwell, who was reported in good condition.

"There shouldn't have been any problem making that landing," said Jack Barker, a spokesman for the Federal Aviation Administration. He said visibility was four miles despite the fog and that was "above standard" for the airport.

"All of a sudden, wham! I took a head count after the plane was down, and it appeared everyone was alive," an unidentified male passenger said as he waited for medical treatment at a local hospital.

"There was no warning. There was turbulence and we were down," another man said.

The flight originated in Miami at 5:20 p.m. EDT and made stops in Melbourne and Tampa in Florida, New Orleans and Mobile, Ala., before heading back to Florida.

Besides Stockwell, the flight crew was identified as Capt. George Kunz, copilot Leonard Sandersen and flight attendants Carl Greenwood, Debbie Verplank and C. Crawford, all of the Miami area.

Investigators from the FAA and the National Transportation Safety Board were sent from Washington, D.C., to determine the cause of the crash.

Colby Raps JFK Order

NEW YORK (UPI) — President John F. Kennedy committed the worst mistake of the Vietnam war, according to former CIA Director William Colby.

"The Hue riot (by Buddhists in May 1963) led to what I consider the worst mistake of the Vietnam war: the American-sponsored overthrow of (South Vietnamese President Ngo Dinh) Diem," Colby writes in his memoirs, "Honorable Men," being published this month by Simon & Schuster.

Diem was overthrown and killed by a coup by South Vietnamese generals with U.S. support.

Said Colby: "The story of the coup is well known and need not be repeated here. It is plain, however, that the American decision with respect to it was made by the White House, not by the CIA." Kennedy was president then.

Colby, for years a CIA leader in Vietnam before rising to the directorship, said Diem and not the generals who killed him had the political ability to defeat the Communists. Colby said the White House did not appreciate that.

Colby said the American-supported South Vietnamese, even after Diem's overthrow, won on the battlefield. He said the Communists took a beating in their famous Tet offensive of 1968, but domestic U.S. anti-war fervor turned it into a Hanoi triumph among the American people.

At the end, three years ago, when Saigon crumbled, Colby said it was the fault of the U.S. Congress.

"The tactical errors of the final days, of course, contributed to Saigon's fall, but I believe the root cause to have been the congressional signal of sharply reduced aid, with its inevitable effect in loss of morale and panic," he wrote.

Then President Gerald R. Ford has asked Congress to provide money to keep Saigon's forces fighting, but Congress said no and the collapse ensued.

Colby's book says much else that may trouble believers in the anti-war movement. He also speaks uncomplaining words of Republicans, Democrats, the press and other sometime foes of the CIA.

airport and told them to call me," McCollough recalled. "He said to bring a shotgun and a .22 and ammunition. I'm a friend of Zip's, and when he calls you go."

The balloon had no lights, and because it had no transponder it did not show up on aircraft radar.

"It was about 60 feet long and about 30 feet across, and it was getting close to dark," McCollough explained. "After dark it would have been a disaster. Zip was in contact with air traffic control at Lubbock, but the balloon wasn't, and it was right up there in the traffic. If a plane had come in contact with it, there would have been a disaster."

Meanwhile, McCollough's 20-year-old son Kevin, a Texas Tech University student, was circling the balloon in another light aircraft.

"We caught up with it at about 11,000 feet and it was still going up," the elder McCollough explained. "We made nine or 10 passes at it, fired six shots, and on the sixth shot, we got close enough to finally penetrate it."

"It was a frightening experience. It rotated and started down."

After falling for about six minutes, however, it still had not collapsed and about two miles south of Whitharral, it began bouncing over the ground.

Two Austrians Climb Everest

KATMANDU, Nepal (AP) — Two Austrian climbers have made the first conquest of Mt. Everest, the world's highest mountain, without the help of oxygen, Nepal's Ministry of Tourism announced today.

Previous climbers, including four on this 11-man Austrian expedition, carried oxygen supplies to help them breathe in the high altitude of the Himalayan peak, which rises 29,028 feet.

A ministry spokesman said the team's base camp announced the conquest by radio to the Nepalese government. The statement said the two climbers — Reinhold Messner, 33, of Sudtiro and Peter Habeler, 35, of Tirol — even slept without oxygen supplies on their way to the top.

Messner and Habeler left their high camp on the south side of the mountain at 6 a.m. Monday, reached the summit at noon and, after a few minutes on the top, returned to camp at 2 p.m., the spokesman said.

Last Wednesday, three Austrians and a Sherpa guide reached the summit. And today, a Japanese expedition abandoned their attempt when one of the climbers, Saburo Ishikawa, 22, slipped and fell, suffering a spinal fracture. He was flown by helicopter to a hospital for treatment.

Messner launched the Austrian expedition's first attempt without oxygen April 24, accompanied by two Sherpa guides, but couldn't go beyond the South Col because of severe storms. Habeler stayed in camp during the attempt after he became ill from eating a can of sardines.

The first conquest of Mt. Everest was achieved on May 29, 1953.

"As fast as it's draining, we're receiving a lot more," groaned Morehouse Parish Deputy Sheriff Bob Carter.

Elsewhere, more snow fell in portions of the Rocky Mountains. Frosty early morning temperatures were common in the mountains and plateau region.

Fog formed early today from the northern Great Lakes across most of the central Atlantic Coast. The heaviest fog was from western South Carolina into southern Pennsylvania. In many localities visibility was near zero. Rain or drizzle was frequently falling to compound driving problems.

Man Collapses At Sentencing

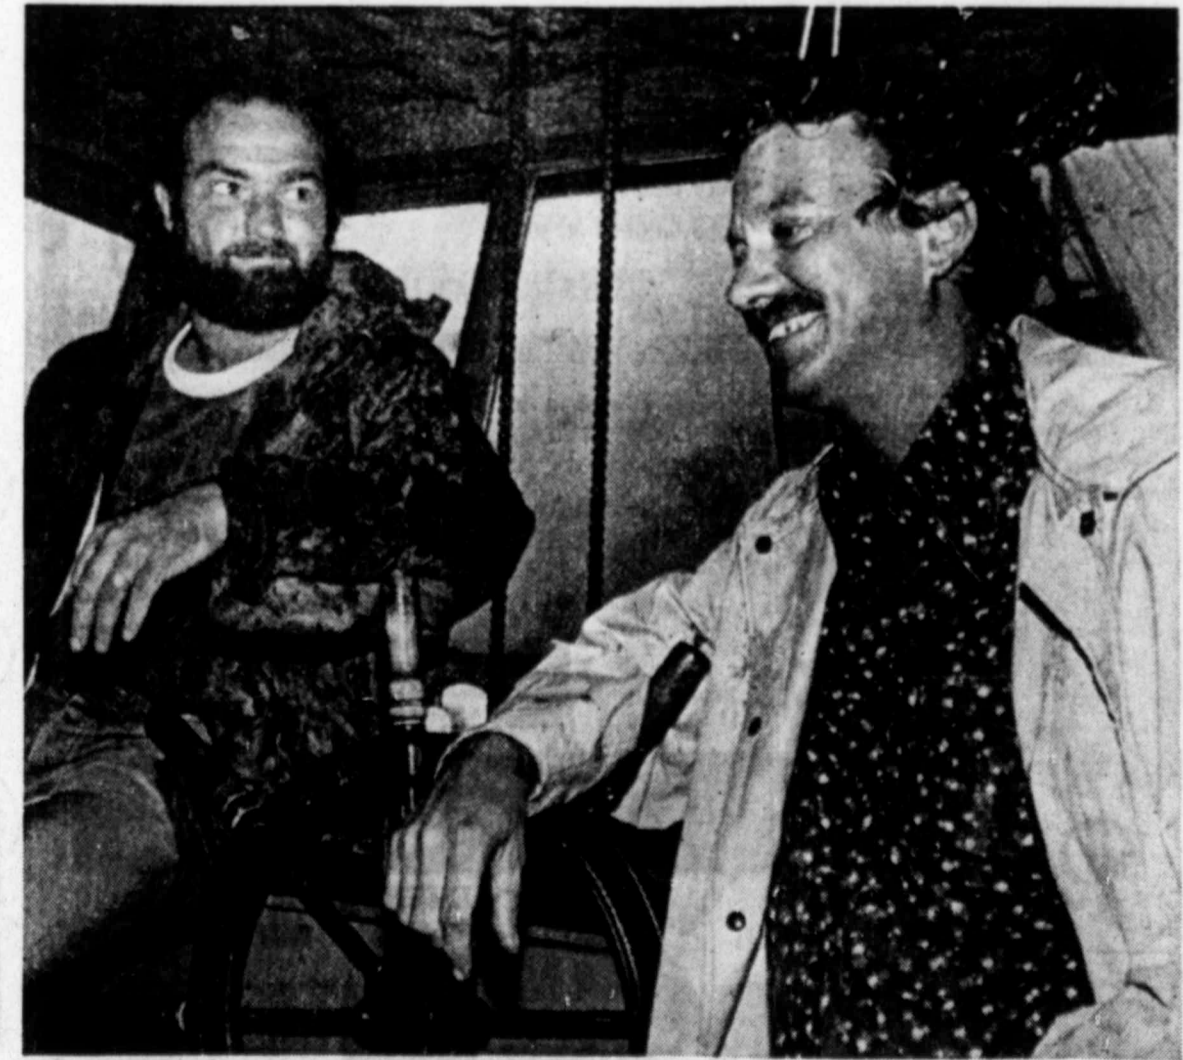

NEW YORK (UPI) — Jacques Michel collapsed when a judge sentenced him to two years in prison for arranging illegal marriages, but he woke up to happier news — he would only have to serve two months.

The Haitian-born Michel was standing in U.S. District Court in Manhattan when he heard the two-year sentence pronounced for his guilty plea to the charges. He collapsed, banging his head on the counsel table.

When Michel, 38, was revived five minutes later, the matchmaker learned that although Judge John Cannella had sentenced him to two years, he had suspended all but two months.

Michel, of Spring Valley, N.Y., decided to plead guilty to arranging illegal marriages for Haitian aliens when he saw all the witnesses ready to testify against him at the start of his trial in March.

O'Neill May Allow Split In Energy Legislation

WASHINGTON (AP) — In an apparent major shift of strategy, House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill said today he is considering allowing President Carter's proposed crude oil tax to be split apart from the rest of his energy program.

O'Neill also disclosed he may name a new set of House conferees to meet with Senate negotiators to try to reach a compromise on the energy tax legislation.

It was the first time O'Neill has ever talked about splitting up the five-section energy measure.

The speaker and administration officials had hoped to keep the entire package intact, fearing that splitting it up — as the Senate has done — might doom the unpopular tax in the House.

Asked why he apparently had changed his mind, O'Neill told reporters: "We think this is the best strategy."

O'Neill indicated that it may now be time for House-Senate energy conferees to begin sending parts of the five-section energy legislation they have already agreed upon to the Senate, where the measures must be acted on first.

Conferees have agreed on three parts, dealing with energy conservation, industrial coal conversion and electric utility rates. The fourth section, natural gas pricing, is now being considered.

"I am also seriously considering suggestions that if the four have cleared the Senate and the fifth (the tax part) is not ready, the House should go ahead and enact the first four into law," O'Neill said.

However, O'Neill, reading from a prepared statement, said "my consideration of these suggestions should in no respect be construed as abandonment of" the crude oil tax.

The tax would make U.S. oil as expensive as imports over a three-year period, adding about 7 cents a gallon to the retail price of gasoline and other petroleum products.

O'Neill also said that if the conference committee, made up of 25 House members and 17 Senate negotiators, does approve the four parts of the package, he would support naming a new set of conferees to complete work on the tax parts.

"A smaller panel on the tax bill would facilitate quicker and more open discussion of the tax provision," he said.

O'Neill commented several hours after a House subcommittee which had been delaying the Energy Department's $13-billion authorization bill to protest congressional handling of President Carter's energy program reversed itself and approved the bill.

The reversal came after those leading the protest indicated they had received some key concessions from House leaders.

They wanted assurances that House leaders would consider splitting the energy bill into parts — as O'Neill indicated is under consideration — and also wanted an assurance that all future negotiating sessions would be open to the public and press.

The 10-9 vote by the energy and power subcommittee sends the measure to the full House Commerce Committee for further action.

The bill is needed for the department to function in the fiscal year that begins Oct. 1.

Last month, the subcommittee voted 8-1 to hold the bill in an attempt to force then-secret congressional negotiations on the energy plan into the open and to signal frustration of many members to the long delay on the year-old energy program.

Rep. Toby Moffett, D-Conn., leader of the move, also said he hoped to persuade congressional leaders to agree to splitting apart the five-section energy plan so three relatively minor parts already agreed to by conferees could be enacted.

Today, Moffett indicated he was calling off the protest even though all demands of the subcommittee members had not been met.

But conference leaders have at least agreed to meet in public from now on.

Although a full meeting of the conference committee to consider a proposed natural gas deregulation compromise was cancelled today, the caucus of House conference members scheduled in its place was to be open to the public.

"Toby's pressure is being felt," said subcommittee Chairman John Dingell, D-Mich., a top House energy negotiator.

The compromise still appears several votes shy of winning support of House conferees.

Meanwhile, President Carter's nomination of Lynn R. Coleman to be general counsel for the Department of Energy headed today for expected Senate confirmation despite a spirited challenge from senators criticizing his ties to the oil and gas industry.

Support for Coleman, a law partner of former Treasury Secretary John Connally, is lukewarm — even among some of the administration's top Senate allies.

But Senate leaders today predicted he would be easily confirmed.

Coleman, 39, is an attorney in the Washington office of the Houston-based law firm of Vinson, Elkins, Searls, Connally and Smith, which does extensive work for the oil and gas industry. The firm currently represents some 17 firms with compliance cases pending before the energy agency, according to Coleman's own count.

THE MEMORY WAS TOO MUCH — Mrs. Neysa Moskowitz, whose daughter Stacy was among the victims slain by the so-called "Son of Sam" killer, answers questions Monday at a news conference in the office of her lawyer, as her husband, Jerry, right, listens. Families Of Slayings Victims Hear Berkowitz' Admission

By MALCOLM N. CARTER

NEW YORK (AP) — Neysa Moskowitz sat like a stone, eyes riveted on the back of the head of the man who killed her daughter in the last attack of the Son of Sam.

Michael Lauria kept nodding his head from side to side in bitter accord with the indictment that outlined how David Berkowitz killed his daughter, Donna, with a shot in the back. Hers was the death that began a year of terror by "the 44-caliber killer."

believes she can hear bone fragments still scraping in her head from the killer's attack, bent forward in her seat and plucked nervously at her lower lip.

Grim and anxious, they sat there Monday, drawing comfort from their friends and their families — and watching the baldish former postal clerk who calmly confessed to killing six persons, knowing it was wrong to do so.

"You bastard!" Rose Lauria sobbed through the handkerchief she pressed to her mouth as Berkowitz, 24, recounted how he killed 18-year-old Donna on July 19, 1976.

"This isn't the justice I want," her husband muttered afterward. "He's got to burn. He's got to die for all the heartaches that he's caused. What else can I tell you?"

Berkowitz is to be sentenced May 22. His lawyers say they'll appeal the judge's finding that Berkowitz was competent, a finding that enabled him to change his plea from insanity to guilty. If Berkowitz gets the maximum sentence of 25 years to life, he would be eligible for parole in 30 years.

"I would have liked more to have happened to him," Miss DeMasi's mother declared amid a crush of reporters and photographers. "The electric chair, for instance. He destroyed a lot of lives."

"He knew what he was doing," said Miss DeMasi, who wears a neck brace from the effects of the bullet that the Son of Sam sent smashing through her collarbone. Fragments, lead and bone, remain.

"She's frightened all the time," the mother said, adding that her 18-year-old daughter never goes out alone at night.

The noise of bone fragments is not real, the doctors say, according to her mother. They say it's only the memory of that gunshot in the night. Only the memory.

"I saw an animal. I saw the animal that killed my daughter and crippled a lot of kids," Mrs. Moskowitz said. "He didn't only murder a child, but he destroyed families — the families are the ones who are suffering today."

Her husband, Jerry, who was so overwhelmed during part of the court session that he turned toward the wall, finally broke down when telling reporters how he felt on seeking Berkowitz for the first time in the Brooklyn courtroom.

"My real reaction was, 'If I could only get to him, which I knew I couldn't,'" he said before the sobs engulfed him.

Diary May Link Slayer To Fires In New York

NEW YORK (AP) — In addition to his year-long murder spree, "Son of Sam" killer David Berkowitz may also have set some 2,000 fires between 1974 and 1977, according to Bronx District Attorney Mario Merola.

Merola said Monday that a diary seized when Berkowitz was arrested chronicled 1,441 fires in the four-year period, but it was uncertain whether Berkowitz actually set the fires or merely recorded them from a radio receiver tuned to Fire Department frequencies.

The fires were located in scattered areas of the city.

Merola said Berkowitz told his attorneys that he telephoned fire officials after setting the fires and identified himself as "Phantom of the Bronx."

"I believe he's a pyromaniac," Merola said, adding that Berkowitz had admitted to his defense attorneys that he set more than 2,000 fires. However, Merola conceded that he did not know whether Berkowitz was "just a fire buff who called in fires, or if he set them."

The Bronx prosecutor said the neat, methodical diary apparently had been overlooked until the defense attorneys notified him a week ago. He said he did not make the matter public until Monday to avoid upsetting the careful arrangements under which Berkowitz pleaded guilty Monday to six murders.

"We didn't want to upset the apple cart," Merola said. "The primary obligation was to take care of these homicides."

The diary — detailing fires for 1974, 1975 and 1977, but not 1976 — listed brush fires, blazes in vacant stores and autos and other fires. Merola said it was not known whether any of the fires resulted in death.

Some of the fires took place in the same area as the killings, and one, on April 16, 1977, took place on the same day as the slaying of Valentina Suriani and Alexander Esau.

planetary science:

— Why do planets about the same size at comparable distances from the sun have such different atmospheres? Venus' atmosphere is 100 times more dense at its surface than Earth's and is believed to be mostly carbon dioxide with its thick hazes apparently consisting of sulfuric acid droplets.

— Why is the Venus surface baked by 900-degree Fahrenheit temperatures while Earth has a climate friendly to life?

The two Pioneers are the first devoted primarily to a study of the atmosphere and weather of Venus on a global scale and may help scientists "learn more about the forces that drive the weather on our own planet."

The last NASA spacecraft to take a close look at Venus was Mariner 10, which flew past the planet in 1974 en route to Mercury. Two other Mariners flew past Venus in 1962 and 1967.

U.S., Soviet Union Prepare Venus Launchings

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The United States and Soviet Union are preparing separately to send four unmanned spacecraft to Venus later this year in an expansion of man's inquiry into the secrets of Earth's nearest planetary neighbor.

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration announced today that the first of its two Venus explorers, called Pioneers, are scheduled to take off from Cape Canaveral, Fla., May 20. A second spacecraft is set for launch Aug. 7.

NASA sources said Soviet scientists also are planning a dual Venus expedition. Both Soviet spacecraft are planned for launch in August, with one to attempt a gentle landing on the hot, cloud-shrouded planet and the second to fly past Venus.

American and Russian officials plan to meet in June in Austria to arrange an exchange of data from the Venusian probes.

The Soviets lead the United States in exploration of Venus with the successful landings of two Venera picture-taking spacecraft on Venus in 1975. Two Soviet landers also transmitted scientific data from the surface in 1971 and 1972.

The United States, on the other hand, is ahead in the exploration of Mars, Earth's second nearest planetary neighbor, with the landings of the Vikings 1 and 2 on the red planet in 1976.

The Pioneer Venus 1 craft set for launch later this month is designed to swing into orbit around Venus Dec. 4 and spend at least eight months — a Venus year — gazing down at the planet's dense atmosphere with radar and other instruments.

The Pioneer Venus 2 craft set for launch in August is designed to split into four probes. Each will dive into the thick blanket of gases surrounding the planet to conduct top-to-bottom atmospheric studies before being destroyed on impact.

NASA said the two American missions, costing $275 million, may shed new light on two of the most puzzling questions in planetary science:

— Why do planets about the same size at comparable distances from the sun have such different atmospheres? Venus' atmosphere is 100 times more dense at its surface than Earth's and is believed to be mostly carbon dioxide with its thick hazes apparently consisting of sulfuric acid droplets.

— Why is the Venus surface baked by 900-degree Fahrenheit temperatures while Earth has a climate friendly to life?

The two Pioneers are the first devoted primarily to a study of the atmosphere and weather of Venus on a global scale and may help scientists "learn more about the forces that drive the weather on our own planet."

The last NASA spacecraft to take a close look at Venus was Mariner 10, which flew past the planet in 1974 en route to Mercury. Two other Mariners flew past Venus in 1962 and 1967.

Solon's Aide Dies In Air Crash

JEKYLL ISLAND, Ga. (AP) — An aide to U.S. Rep. Claude Pepper, D-Fla., was among three men killed in the crash of a small airplane near the Georgia coast.

The plane went down in a marsh about 1 a.m. Monday, but the wreckage was not located for nearly 12 hours.

The victims were identified as J. Stephen Regets, 23, West Palm Beach, Fla., an aide to Pepper; Jeff Shupe, 24, a landscaper from Connecticut; and the pilot, Neil J. Casto of California.

A spokesman for Pepper's Washington office said Regets worked with the Senate Rules Committee.

Federal Aviation Administration spokesman Jack Barker said the Piper Cherokee left Dulles airport in Washington, D.C., about noon Sunday and was believed headed for West Palm Beach, Fla. Barker said the cause of the crash had not been determined.

Two shrimp fishermen told investigators the aircraft sounded like it was having engine trouble when it crashed.

Stereos Top List Of City Crimes

Seemingly unabated property crimes continued to take a toll on Lubbock residents, according to the latest deluge of reports made to police.

Barbara Joyce Fortenberry of 3605-D Paris Ave. complained that whoever pried her front door Monday made off with $670 worth of goods, including a television set and stereo.

Officers who were told a stereo was found in an eastside alley Monday, later learned the property had been taken from a nearby residence in a break-in.

John Seaborn Crowley said the stereo, as well as a .38-caliber revolver, was stolen from his 1701 E. Cornell St. home earlier that same day. Reports indicated the firearm still was missing.

David Lowell Standlee, owner of South Plains International Trucks, reported the recent loss of three camshafts, together valued at $748.50, from a warehouse near the main building at 301 E. 34th St. Reportedly, there was no sign of forced entry.

According to Kenneth Ray Miller of 602 38th St., someone stole $450 worth of tools from his locked pickup late Sunday or early Monday.

Rosa Garcia of 3112 Auburn St. told police someone entered through an unlocked door and took a stereo system from her home about 11 a.m. Monday.

Television sets reportedly were taken from the homes of Maria Davis of 107 N. Detroit Ave. between 7:30 a.m. and 12:15 p.m. Monday and of Jewell Morrow of 408 Ave. Q between the middle of April and Monday.

Dorothy Allison Collins of 2618 28th St. told officers someone removed a lawn tiller from a locked storage shed in her yard sometime between 9 a.m. and 11 a.m. Monday.

Officers may be closer to catching a burglar who entered Marva Garwood's apartment complex, though. She told police she watched a man enter the Wilshire Apartments at 1922 5th St. about midnight Sunday and remove a $100 double bed.

Hunt Elementary School principal Dennis Hargrove reported the theft of calculators and headphones valued at $219.50 from the school at 415 N. Ivory Ave. between 5 p.m. Friday and 6:30 a.m. Monday.

H.M. Bourgeois of Executive Parks at 3108 Vicksburg told police someone made off with about $100 worth of wood from a construction site there about 10:30 a.m. Sunday.

Carter Backs Demos To Reduce Losses

By FRANK CORMIER

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter, just in time for the 1978 campaign, has rediscovered the Democratic Party.

The president, who spent most of 1976 running against the organized political establishment, warmly embraced Democratic officeholders and party functionaries during his four-state Western tour last week.

The president's calculated effort to identify himself with his party and its stalwarts was in marked contrast to his behavior in 1976, when he only occasionally acknowledged the existence of fellow Democrats running on the ticket he headed.

As recently as last year, Carter cast himself in something close to a nonpartisan role during his travels around the country, save when he appeared at party fund-raising events.

But the situation is different now. As Carter visited Colorado, California, Oregon and Washington, fellow Democrats were much in evidence and the president went out of his way to praise them and boost their campaigns.

Sometimes, Carter's praise bordered on the extravagant, as when he told Denver Democrats that their embattled senator, Floyd Haskell, in many ways "is a national treasure."

And the president did not shrink from reminding his audience that Haskell — "one of the great senators of all time" — is in sharp disagreement with key farm policies of the Carter administration.

In Spokane, Wash., Carter similarly made public note of his differences with Democratic Rep. Tom Foley, who faces a strong Republican challenge this year.

Foley denies he urged Carter to stay away from Spokane on grounds the president might be a liability in the local campaign.

Even if he did, chances are Foley would think differently now. After all, the president pictured the congressman as an independent-minded legislator before the largest crowd of the trip, variously estimated at 20,000 to 60,000.

Very few campaigning House members see crowds of that size, and it's safe to assume they did not show up just to see Foley.

The president's fresh embrace of fellow Democrats is no accident, of course.

Carter knows the party occupying the White House traditionally loses ground in off-year elections, and he wants to hold losses to a minimum, if only because a major November setback might reflect poorly on him.

Perhaps equally important, the president will be needing party support in a lot of cities like Spokane if, as expected, he seeks re-election.

Carter, in calling attention to differences with Haskell and Foley, was consistent with advice he gave some 30 first-term House Democrats who visited the White House on May 1.

Rep. Allen J. Ertel of Pennsylvania, emerging from that hour-long session, told reporters:

"The president expressed to us that he ran as an independent and that we should, too. ... I think that we're all of the opinion that there are no coattails from the president to us or from us to the president."

During his travels in the West, Carter also paid heed to promoting good relations with Democratic Party functionaries as well as with officeholders.

When he emerged from Air Force One in Denver, for example, he was received by 16 local party officials and campaign workers. A White House photographer snapped pictures of the president with each of the greeters.

Chinese Daily Raps Job Placements

TOKYO (AP) — The official Peking People's Daily says China must get the right people in the right jobs or the country's modernization drive could suffer.

It said some college graduates trained to do scientific and technical work have been assigned to be purchasers, salesmen, storehouse keepers, typists or cooks.

"Some people specialized in rocket launching, for example, were assigned to be doorkeepers," it said. China is striving to join the ranks of the developed nations by the year 2000.

Contaminated Dope Frightens Smokers

By DONALD C. BROWN JR.
United Press International Writer

The millions of Americans who smoke marijuana have reason to be wary these days.

Besides the usual problems of avoiding dealer rip-offs and brushes with the law, they also are faced with the prospect that some Mexican marijuana is contaminated with a potent weed-killer.

The paraquat panic began when HEW Secretary Joseph Califano warned that paraquat contamination could make smoking pot dangerous to your health.

Within weeks, "head shops" in San Francisco's Haight-Ashbury section were doing a brisk business in home test kits, frightened pot smokers besieged state drug testing centers in Illinois to learn if their dope was contaminated and a student newspaper at the University of Texas advised readers to avoid marijuana entirely until the situation was cleared up.

Some marijuana smokers quit. Others tried to buy marijuana that was not grown in Mexico.

"I haven't stopped, but I've cut down considerably. It worries me. I think I'll stick to cocaine," one recent graduate of the University of Oregon said.

The paraquat problem began in 1975 when blue-and-white helicopters first swooped in over the mountains of Northern Mexico, spraying herbicides to kill the latest treasures of the Sierra Madres — lucrative crops of poppies and marijuana grown by Mexican peasants.

The destruction of the marijuana and poppies was a joint venture of the United States and Mexico, and the substance sprayed on the marijuana plants was paraquat, a tasteless, colorless, odorless but potent herbicide developed by Imperial Chemical Industries of Great Britain.

Used in the United States to kill weeds, one-tenth of an ounce of pure paraquat can be fatal if swallowed. In its pure form, paraquat can cause pulmonary fibrosis, bleeding of the lungs and vomiting.

The Mexican government claimed the program was a success — destroying 9,500 acres of marijuana in 1977. But Mexican peasants learned paraquat's weakness. After the herbicide is sprayed it requires about three days of sunshine to kill the plant. The peasants simply harvested the plants moments after the helicopters left and sold them as if they were uncontaminated.

The fallout from the paraquat program took a couple years to come to the attention of federal health officials, but in March Califano issued his warning.

"If an individual smokes three to five heavily contaminated marijuana cigarettes each day for several months, irreversible lung damage will result," Califano said. He said there was a lesser risk with smaller amounts.

So far, reports of paraquat-related injuries from smoking marijuana in the United States are scattered, coming mostly from the West Coast. At least eight persons have been treated for paraquat poisoning at San Francisco's Haight-Ashbury free medical clinic. A clinic in Fresno, Calif., also reported some cases of poisoning.

Not all experts agree with Califano's warning. Indiana State Toxicologist Dr. Robert Forney says some of the worry over paraquat may be unnecessary.

"I don't discount the possibility that someone who uses marijuana stands the risk of suffering damage to the lungs, particularly heavy users," Forney said. "But I do feel the threat of paraquat contamination has been blown out of proportion without any testing to back it up."

The authorities do agree on one thing: no one has yet come up with a thoroughly effective home testing kit to determine the presence of paraquat on marijuana.

"All these test kits are totally useless. They just cannot do what they say they can do," Dr. Carlton E. Turner, director of the Mississippi Marijuana Research Laboratory, said. Turner is another scientist who feels the problems of paraquat may be overstated.

The National Organization for Reform of Marijuana Laws filed suit to try to prevent the Carter administration from continuing herbicide spraying in Mexico. Still, some smokers professed to be unconcerned about the matter.

Charles Plans No Changes

NEW YORK (AP) — Prince Charles, in an interview in Time magazine, says he would change nothing in the pomp and ceremony of the monarchy and that he hopes he won't leave "a messy mark" on history.

The current issue of Time, which features the 29-year-old prince on its cover with the heading, "The Man Who Will Be King," said it was the first interview Charles has given to a non-British publication.

On pomp and ceremony, Charles said, "I would change nothing. Besides ceremony being a major and important aspect of monarchy, something that has grown and developed over a thousand years in Britain, I happen to enjoy it enormously."

Station Charges For Air

BOSTON (UPI) — George Moses can afford to be very friendly — especially when he charges 25 cents for air at his Sunoco service station near Fenway Park.

Moses will check your oil, wash your windshield and smile when he fills your gasoline tank. He even lets regular customers fill their tires for free.

But for the people "who come in here just for air and don't spend a dime," Moses and four other city gas station owners have a surprise — a pay air machine.

Moses says the moochers hurt his business. "That big compressor in back goes zing, zing every time they turn on the pump. I have to pay for the electricity. It costs me money."

Hy Freedman, operator of a Texaco station across the street with a similar machine, said: "We get a lot of college students in here with bicycles. They block up the pumps and the bays."

"You can't serve your paying customers," he said.

Moses said most people who need air pay the price. "Some of them even laugh," he said. "What's a quarter these days anyhow? It's nothing."

Youngest Vet Wins Battle

By MILLER BONNER

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government that slapped a 13-year-old boy with a dishonorable discharge in 1944, announced Mor Jay that it had changed its mind.

A White House press release briefly stated that the Navy had "reviewed" the case of Calvin Graham and decided to give the Fort Worth man an honorable discharge.

Graham, now 47, was told of the move during a Monday afternoon telephone call from Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, the Texas Democrat who had championed Graham's cause since September.

"I think it's about time," sighed Graham from his Fort Worth residence. "I've been fighting so long to get it. Thank God for the congressmen and news media we've got in this country."

Monday's announcement ends a 34-year bureaucratic battle for Graham whose efforts to obtain an honorable discharge had been smothered in governmental apathy and red tape. He has pleaded his case to two presidents, at least four congressmen and a horde of lower-ranking bureaucrats.

The White House announcement stipulated that Graham must document his World War II injuries before he can receive veterans' benefits for treatment. "It's already cost me about $5,000 in dental bills," he said Monday.

But Graham claims he lost much more. Without the aid of veterans' benefits, "I couldn't go to college and no one really wanted me in their high school because they didn't want me going to school with their kiddies...I couldn't get a job because employers would find out my real age through my service record and fire me. It really changed my entire life."

"He served with honor," said Bentsen. "He was awarded the Asiatic Pacific Service Medal with two service stars, the World War II Victory Medal and the Navy Unit Commendation with one bronze star. I was pleased to learn from the White House today that his honorable discharge — some 34-years overdue — is finally being awarded."

"Calvin Graham deserves recognition for his World War II service and he deserves the benefits that should accrue to him from that service," Bentsen continued. "It is gratifying that such recognition has finally been granted."

While other youngsters his age were learning about the war from John Wayne movies, Graham was receiving a first-hand education as a seaman second class aboard the USS South Dakota. He enlisted illegally at age 12 and a year later, fought in two World War II naval battles — Santa Cruz and Guadalcanal — before the Navy discovered his true age and sent him home after a brief stint in the brig.

During Guadalcanal, an enemy shell exploded near Graham sending the young warrior "falling through three stories of superstructure."

When Graham hit the deck, his two front teeth didn't.

Graham also claims he received 13 stitches in the head and suffered a concussion during his tumble. "I didn't say anything about it at the time because half the ship was dead," he said.

When the South Dakota returned to the Brooklyn Navy Yard for repairs, Graham was given a four-day pass and told to report to Houston. "I hitch-hiked to Houston in three days...when I got there, the Navy told me then knew my true age and sent me to the brig in Corpus Christi."

Graham's efforts to right what he believed to be a monumental wrong began in 1944.

"I went to Rep. Albert Thomas' office and talked with President Roosevelt on the phone," Graham said Monday afternoon. "Mr. Roosevelt had too many things to do back then, though. He was busy fighting the war."

"I felt pretty good about it that day and I've never given up hope."

"Well, I did give up for a few years until I found out they were giving honorable discharges to Vietnam deserters and draft dodgers."

"That tore me up," growled Graham. "That's when I started my fight again."

Graham began anew by writing to then President-elect Carter.

"I got a note back that said 'put your trust in me.' But it had a machine signature on it...it didn't look like a signature you'd write out yourself."

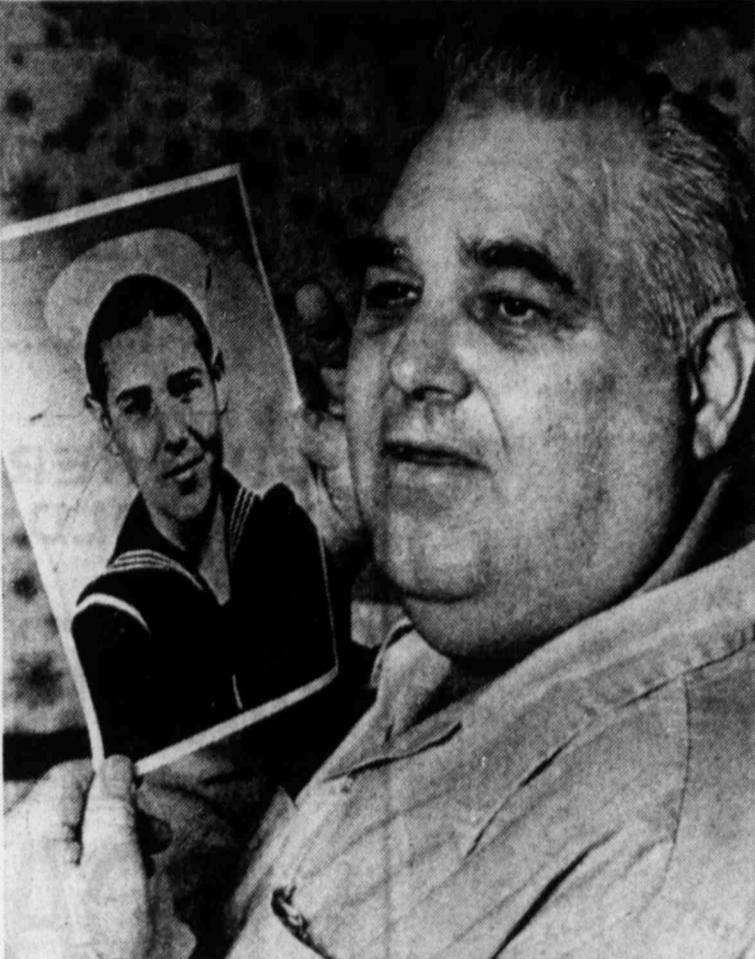

Following Carter's inauguration, Graham said the Fort Worth Star-Telegram wrote to Press Secretary Jody Powell. "He wrote back and thanked me for my youthful services but said they couldn't do anything for me," Graham added.

Graham's plight surfaced in the media last year and caught the eye of three Texas politicians.

Bentsen, along with Sen. John Tower, R-Texas, introduced a private bill on Cahin's behalf in September. Rep. Jim Wright, the House Democratic Leader from Fort Worth, sponsored a similar bill a month later. Both bills were stalled in committee after the Navy went on record as opposing the bills, claiming passage would set a dangerous precedent.

Bentsen sarcastically responded that if the Navy had such fears, then "each and every" 12-year old that served as Graham did should be given an honorable discharge.

Last month, Bentsen announced that Secretary of the Navy Graham Claytor had agreed to review Calvin Graham's case. Bentsen applied even more pressure on the Navy last week when he revealed that at least three other under-age soldiers had received honorable discharges.

HONORABLE AFTER 34 YEARS — Calvin Graham's 34-year battle with bureaucracy ended Monday when the White House announced the Fort Worth man who enlisted illegally in the Navy at age 12 has been given an honorable discharge. Figures Confirm Briscoe Loss

DALLAS (AP) — Final but incomplete figures from the Texas Election Bureau Monday night confirmed John Hill's Democratic primary defeat of Gov. Dolph Briscoe and for the most part upheld earlier, less complete figure ratios.

Hill polled 914,375 votes, or 51.23 per cent against Briscoe's 743,962 and 41.68 per cent. On the Republican side of that governor's race, Bill Clements' winning tally was 92,672 against Ray Hutchison's 30,231.

The TEB figures were from all 254 of the state's counties, but only 239 were complete.

Bob Krueger's Democratic victory over Joe Christie in a Senate battle was confirmed by 844,638, or 54.9 per cent, to 692,665, or 45.06 per cent. Krueger will meet incumbent Republican John Tower in November. Tower was unopposed for the primary.

A referendum on pari-mutuel horse betting went down to defeat by Democrats, but gained narrow approval from Republicans. The Democratic margin against was 729,560 to 676,126. Republicans approved the issue by 56,893 to 53,383.

One question mark that remained was in the 6th Congressional District, where Rep. Olin "Tiger" Teague will give up control by retiring at the end of this year.

Teague had backed former aide Chet Edwards, but with 10 of the district's 11 counties reporting complete figures, the only thing certain was a runoff. Attorney and former television weatherman Ron Godbey took a slim lead over Texas A&M professor Phil Gramm, 22,743 to 22,327.

Hill Stresses Budget Plan

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas are worried most about what happens to their tax dollars, says Attorney General John Hill, the Democratic nominee for governor.

"My early emphasis will be on the budget, on how we are doing with our tax dollars, if we are getting our money's worth," Hill told a news conference Monday before disappearing on a short vacation.

"I think that is the job people want done first."

Hill said he has named Ernest Stromberger, a press aide during the campaign, to work on spending recommendations to the 1979 Legislature. He said Stromberger will be his "liaison" with Briscoe's budget staff. Hill said he doubted if he would present an entire new budget to the legislature, but would have recommendations.

"The proposals I made (during the campaign) can and will be carried out within our expected revenue," Hill said. "We are going to keep a close watch on the budget."

Hill has a new work of art on his wall — a map showing last Saturday's election results.

Counties that gave Hill a good majority cover almost all of the Panhandle and the South Plains, another solid group covers northeast Texas, then extends down most of East Texas into the populous Houston, Galveston, Beaumont-Port Arthur areas. There's another big group of Hill counties in Central Texas around Austin. There even is a string of Hill counties along the Mexican border from Eagle Pass to Brownsville, where Gov. Dolph Briscoe's stronghold used to be.

Briscoe's counties are mostly in one group that extends from far west Texas — but not El Paso — to Waco and from Snyder south to Uvalde.

Briscoe was not the first Texas gubernatorial office holder to fall before challengers. There have been five within this century. Former Gov. Price Daniel Sr. lost to John Connally in the 1962 primary. Former Gov. Preston Smith, who ran third last Saturday, fell to Briscoe in 1972.

After serving one two-year term, Briscoe became the first governor to win a four-year term when the constitution was changed in 1974. He asked for a second four-year term which would have let him serve longer than any other Texas governor. Allan Shivers holds the record, having served three two-year terms plus part of another after becoming governor on the death of Gov. Beauford Jester in 1949.

"I think it was the farm vote that hurt Briscoe," Texas House Speaker Bill Clayton said Monday, referring to Hill's near-sweep of the Panhandle and Plains areas.

Hill carried all of the big city areas, including Houston, Dallas-Fort Worth, San Antonio, Austin, El Paso, Corpus Christi and Beaumont-Port Arthur. Briscoe won areas around Wichita Falls, Midland-Odessa, San Angelo and Waco by small margins.

Hill says the 10-year term may have been Briscoe's mistake but he considers the Hill family caravans as one of the best efforts of the Hill campaign.

As many as seven car caravans would be strung around the state, each headed

White To Continue Campaigning

AUSTIN (AP) — Democratic nominee Mark White says he turned down advice to take a two-week vacation before resuming his campaign for attorney general.

"We started our campaign for November today," he told a news conference Monday. "We're going to be running hard every day — hard and scared."

That's the way White, the underdog, ran his Democratic primary campaign against well-known former House Speaker Price Daniel Jr.

White, a former member of Gov. Dolph Briscoe's official family, made it clear he's ready for friendly relations — in the interest of party harmony — with Attorney General John Hill. He said he visited with the Democratic gubernatorial nominee and talked with senatorial candidate Bob Krueger Monday.

"It looks like the Democratic party is going to be unified," he said.

White was careful not to offend supporters of Daniel or Hill.

Daniel issued a belated concession statement Monday afternoon.

White said he hoped Daniel supporters would vote for him against Republican Jim Baker, a well-financed candidate who was ex-President Ford's campaign manager.

White said an issue that "might be developed as the campaign goes on" is the fact that Baker's law firm represents the Howard Hughes estate in Texas' suit to have the late millionaire declared a resident of this state. The firm has given $25,000 to Baker's campaign, and he also has received donations from individual members of it.

The legal issue of Hughes' residency — which will determine where inheritance taxes are paid — likely will be alive when the next attorney general takes office in January.

White was Briscoe's secretary of state until last fall, but declined to go along with Briscoe's well-known antagonism toward the attorney general's organized crime division.

White said he would continue the division if elected. He said it "can be very effective" in improving cooperation among state, local and federal law enforcement officials.

"I think our current administration (Hill's) has done a good job of building a cooperative effort with the federal government," he said.

White said that if he is elected he would "have a small group of prosecutors on call" to help district attorneys and county attorneys speed up trials or handle heavy dockets.

Utility Objects To Hike

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas Power & Light Co. officials termed "grossly inadequate" a $40.6 million rate hike granted Monday by the Public Utility Commission.

The company's 615,000 customers in 50 counties would pay an average of 10 percent more for electricity under the rate increase. The utility had asked for a $118 million, or 18.4 percent, hike.

TPL President R.K. Campbell said the company must reassess plans to convert plant fuels from natural gas to lignite and nuclear power.

"On the one hand the commission encourages us to lower the customer's total bill, which we have been doing by increasing our use of lignite coal for generating purposes," Campbell said in a statement.

"On the other hand, the commission, on two occasions now, has failed to grant us a proper return on the tremendous investment required to allow us to continue our conversion program as scheduled," he said.

The company has not decided whether to appeal the commission's order in court.

Although bills will be higher under the commission's order, the utility's rate-setting method was altered to encourage customer conservation.

They say that those who can play, those who can't, write. That is not true about bridge. Many of the game's finest exponents are also leading writers. Some have virtually given up playing to concentrate on writing about the game, to the loss of all concerned. Among those is Albert Dormer, editor of the International Bridge Press Association Bulletin, who is rarely seen at the table. But when he does make an appearance, he shows that he has lost none of the ability that made him a star almost 30 years ago at a very tender age. Note his technique on this deal.

While purists might consider the North hand a point light for his no trump overcall, North upgraded his spade values because of West's opening bid. When his partner showed a strong hand by jumping, North was delighted to raise to game in view of his excellent heart support.

In the hope of finding a club tenace in dummy and the queen with his partner, West underled the ace of clubs. Dormer won in hand with the jack as East started an echo with the nine. It seemed that declarer had ten tricks—five trumps, four clubs and the ace of diamonds. So Dormer cashed the ace and queen of hearts, and West's discard was a shock—the contract was now in jeopardy.

If declarer drew a third trump and then led a club, West would win the ace and shift to a diamond. When he regained the lead, he would be able to give his partner a club ruff, which together with a diamond trick and the ace of spades would have spelled down one. And there was no quick entry to declarer's hand to draw the fourth trump.

Dormer's solution was simple and elegant. He led the jack of trumps and overtook with the king, setting up a trump in East's hand. Now he led a spade. West rose with the ace and shifted to a diamond, but it was too late. Dormer won the ace in dummy, discarded his diamond loser on the king of spades and continued with the ten of clubs. No matter what the defenders did, they could score no more than their two black aces and one trump.

COSTLY PROTEIN
Animal protein, especially beef and veal, is costly in both land and feed required to produce a pound of edible protein, as well as in the proportion of the food budget allocated for this often costly item. Of all the grain harvested in this country, 78 percent of it is used to feed animals for meat. We use 21 pounds of protein in animal feed to get one pound of animal protein for our dinner table.

DEAR ABBY

DEAR ABBY: When Mother's Day approaches and I see all those ads reminding us to "remember Mother on HER special day," I want to scream!
For 10 years I have been conducting arts and craft classes in one of the finest homes for the aged in this area. Lovely surroundings, a hospital on the premises, good food, attendants around the clock — but in each room two strangers who have nothing in common are cooped up for the rest of their lives in one room barely large enough for two beds, two easy chairs and two small chairs for "company." (I suppose the chairs for company are adequate because nobody stays more than 20 minutes.)
One of my pupils told me, "When my daughter finds time to visit me she asks, 'How do you like it here, Mama?'"
"Fine," I tell her. What I am going to say — that I cry myself to sleep every night!
Happy Mother's Day to all the mothers who have been put away in homes by their children!

Three months later, I realized that I had not received a thank-you note, so I wrote to her asking if she had ever received it.
A month passed, and still no word from the bride, so when I saw her, I asked her in person if she ever got the decanter.
She said she had, and she'd also sent me a thank-you note, and I had a lot of nerve nagging her about it. Then she said, "I'll return it to you tomorrow. I don't feel like keeping it now!"
I told her that I didn't mean to "nag" her, but since I had heard nothing, I just wanted to know if she had ever received it.
Abby, was I wrong to mention it to her? If I was, I will ask God — not her — to forgive me.

CONN.
Dear Conn.: All mothers in nursing homes are not necessarily there by their children's choice. Some older people need more care and attention than can be provided at home. And many homes, and the lifestyles of the families occupying them, make the addition of an aging parent impractical. I agree, it's sad. But it's also true.

ALICE
Dear Alice: Save your apologies. I think your inquiry was justified.

DEAR ABBY: About four months ago I attended the wedding of a girl I work with. My husband and I had sent her a silver and crystal wine decanter that was not inexpensive.

SMALL TOWN
Dear Small Town: If anyone is to discourage an uninvited guest, it should be the hostess. The poor woman is probably lonely. And if she causes no harm and enjoys herself, what's another glass of punch and a few cookies amid the socializing?

Air Force Band Changes Tune

SAN ANTONIO (UPI) — With the advent of the all-voluntary military, the Air Force has found it necessary to change its style of music because today's recruits literally march to a different drummer.

Instead of the Air Force Band of the West playing John Philip Sousa's soul-stirring "Stars and Stripes Forever," there is The Country Critters belting out Willie Nelson's foot-stomping country-western sounds and Dimensions in Blue blaring Elton John's rock-and-roll tunes accompanied by electronic synthesizers and sound boards.

In the early 1970s, brass marches and classical concerns — the standard fare of military bands — began to fade for the Band of the West, headquartered at Lackland AFB, in what the Air Force calls its "quiet revolution" in music.

"If we were going to stay in business and support Air Force recruiting, we had to adjust to what our audiences wanted," said Maj. Duane Hoff, band commander and director.

Hoff said the adjustment was well calculated, because in 1977 the band gave 896 performances averaging 74.7 a month, 16.4 more than its nearest military band competitor, and topped its 1976 figure by nearly 20 a month.

"This year, I'm shooting for 1,000 performances and in 1979 as many as 1,500," Hoff asserts. "That we're able to set our goals so high is the result two things — specialized groups playing specialized music and tremendous support from Lackland and the Air Training Command."

The Air Force Band of the West now is split into specialized groups which play rock, country, middle-of-the-road and classical music.

"Air Force bands had always used all their musicians at once to play music that the audience probably wasn't very interested in," Hoff admits.

The first specialized group, called the Country Critters, was formed in 1972.

"We're located in the heartland of country music and we had some very talented country musicians in the band," Hoff recalled. "It was accepted immediately by our audiences, and we knew we had hit on the way to increase our productivity and exposure without increasing our costs."

The Country Critters' reputation spread quickly in the music world and they soon found themselves playing major events throughout the South and performing with such entertainers like Freddy Fender, Ferlin Husky, Roy Clark and Johnny Rodriguez.

Hoff said performances on local and national radio and television shows, Opryland and major music events such as the Georgia Mountain Fair added to the Critters' exposure and in one year the group played to 2.5 million in live audiences and an estimated radio and television audience of more than 14 million.

Air Force recruiters say the band's exposure is an invaluable aid to recruiting.

"I'm not sure how it works," Hoff said. "Maybe it's this simple: When you've been going wild applauding the Air Force's musicians, it's hard to have an unfavorable impression of the service they're in."

With the success of the Country Critters, the quiet revolution began to spread — first with creation of the band's Dimension in Blue, a rock show group, then throughout the Air Force as other bands began to copy the success formula.

Hoff said Dimensions in Blue built its audience to about 900,000 live fans last year and television shows reaching 1.5 million and, like the Critters, the rock group had worked with celebrities such as Wolfman Jack and Bob Hope.

Woodwind, brass and percussion ensembles now are on the road and Hoff said he expects to form another country group and a second rock band.

Carter's Economic Plan Draws Concern

HOUSTON (UPI) — Former United Nations ambassador George Bush says international leaders are greatly concerned with the Carter administration's handling of economic and energy situations in the United States.

Bush, former CIA director and the United States' first ambassador to Communist China, recently returned from "quiet" talks with foreign officials in Hong Kong, Sydney, Geneva and the Middle East. He said the leaders indicated diminished confidence in the Carter administration which was damaging the U.S. dollar in world money markets.

"The main domestic concern is inflation, but it's also an international concern," Bush said in an exclusive interview with UPI Sunday. "The dollar will not really be strong again until the people who hold dollars abroad are going to feel that the U.S. is going to be fiscally and monetarily strong."

"We are not going to be that way until we come to grips with inflation," Bush said.

Bush said inflation and energy dominated questions in every conversation.

"There's no easy answer as long as we have a president who appears to vacillate. If he comes out with a program that is thought out well and it goes to the Congress, maybe something can be done."

"But when you control the two houses of Congress 2-to-1 for a year and a half and can't get an energy program through, what are people here and abroad supposed to think? They see that as a lack of leadership," Bush said. "I think Democrats feel that way as well as Republicans."

Bush, now associated with an international banking concern, said the money-men and politicians view the current situation in broader terms of backing down on traditional American commitments.

"I get very worried about the lack of what our allies around the world see as an unwillingness to keep commitments and the inability to lead. It's a mounting thing. Domestically it's showing up a lot in the polls," Bush said.

Inflation at home is directly related to inflationary problems abroad, Bush said.

"The failure of our leadership to make these tough decisions affects the value of the dollar and the inflation rate of our own economy."

"There is a lack of confidence in U.S. leadership. It's pervasive. I come away with an increased sense of concern about what our friends abroad — and this is true in Europe as well as other parts of the globe — see as lack of U.S. direction, and lack of adherence to commitment."

Bush said Middle East leaders were concerned particularly about the recent coup in Afghanistan.

"The leaders in these countries see the takeover in Afghanistan as clearly inimical to their interests. They see it as a longstanding objective of the Marxist Communists to get control there."

"Indeed, the Iranians are convinced it is part of an encirclement plan against Iran. Jordan worries about it because they see it destabilizing the area. And it's an area the Americans don't seem too interested in. But when one thinks geopolitically and thinks about the world at large, the happenings in Afghanistan are of great concern. I'm not sure that we Americans could have done anything about this kind of a coup, but I am concerned that it is against our national interest."

"I am concerned about Afghanistan. I don't fault American policy in Afghanistan as I do these other two areas in Africa. But the concern for U.S. strategic standpoint extends to Afghanistan."

Court Overturns Timber-Cutting Ban

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — U.S. District Court Judge William Wayne Justice's ban on clear-cutting in Texas' four national forests was knocked down Monday by the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, but the New Orleans court cautioned that its ruling is not a "wholesale license to clear-cut" Texas timber.

The appellate court said Justice improperly intervened in a matter governed by Congress through the National Forest Management Act (NFMA).

The case involves 662,000 acres and millions of dollars worth of timber in the Sam Houston, Angelina, Sabine and Davy Crockett national forests, all in East Texas.

most economical way to harvest timber; environmentalists complain that it leads to erosion and makes the land worthless for recreation.

Justice, who declined comment on the 5th Circuit's ruling, said last year that the U.S. Forest Service could not clear-cut in the Texas forests unless it filed an environmental impact statement.

The 5th Circuit ruled that the district court "impermissibly substituted its judgment for that of Congress," which has endorsed limited clear-cutting in national forests.

The 5th Circuit said Congress tried to find a middle ground in the issue, weighing economics against environmental considerations, and struck "an extremely delicate balance" — allowing clear-cutting, with restrictions.

The 5th Circuit said Congress had passed the National Forest Management Act (NFMA), setting guidelines for clear-cutting, and that judges shouldn't try to substitute their own rules.

The NFMA requires the U.S. secretary of agriculture to establish permanent guidelines on clear-cutting by Oct. 22, but says that until then the Forest Service can continue to clear-cut — subject to limits set by Congress.

"The NFMA is a set of outer boundaries within which the Forest Service must work," the 5th Circuit said. "Within its parameters, the management decision belongs to the agency and should not be second-guessed by a court."

The 5th Circuit added: "We would emphasize that our decision today is not a wholesale license to clearcut in Texas forests. Rather, clearcutting must be used only where it is essential to accomplish the relevant forest management objectives."

"The development of those management objectives remains the province of the Forest Service, subject to the restrictions placed on it by Congress."

Area Woman Indicted For Murder

CROSBYTON (Special) — A Crosby County grand jury Monday indicted a 41-year-old Lorenzo woman on a capital murder charge, alleging that she arranged the slaying of her husband earlier this year.

The indictment alleges that Mrs. Edith Loftis "intentionally and knowingly" employed a 29-year-old Lorenzo man "for remuneration or the promise of remuneration of $500 to shoot George William Loftis."

A Crosby County road construction worker found the mechanic's body lying in a roadside ditch northwest of the Robertson Community in January. Sheriff's deputies said he had been shot once in the head with a small-caliber pistol.

Only a short time later, Texas Rangers arrested Ricardo Hinojos of Lorenzo for his murder. Hinojos pleaded guilty to a capital murder charge earlier this year and was sentenced to 35 years in prison, according to County Attorney J. Billy Marley.

Hinojos reportedly led authorities to a "derringer" pistol believed to have been the weapon that killed Loftis. Authorities arrested Mrs. Loftis after discovering the weapon, Marley said.

The mother of five is free on $25,000 bond set by Justice of the Peace Clyde Davis, Marley said.

Loftis had been missing since Dec. 17, 1977, when his body was discovered. No money and no identification were found at the scene, authorities said.

Hill Victory

by his wife or children or other relative. He took turns jumping from one to the other.

"This was contact politics," Hill said. "We actually got to the voters in real grass roots politics... As a result we ran better over the state as a whole than anyone thought we would."

Hill also hinted that Briscoe's better financed campaign might have backfired on the governor. "When you see three or four advertisements from the same candidate in the same paper, this raises the question in the voter's mind as to why they need to spend as much money this way," he said.

But Hill has his own personal theory. "The people wanted to nominate me and elect me and that is why I won," he said.

Chaparrals Tackle DBC Without Pitching Ace

ARLINGTON—Lubbock Christian College took over a surprise winner in Dallas Baptist College this afternoon in the second round of the District 6 NAIA Baseball Tournament. And after trimming Midwestern 3-0 Monday, Oscar Acosta wouldn't have been on the mound today.

But, it looks as if the ace of the LCC pitching staff won't be pitching any more the rest of the playoff season, after injuring an elbow in Monday's victory. Acosta had to leave the game, as he and his emergency reliever, Richard Nixon, combined for a four-hitter against Midwestern, to sent the Chaparrals against DBC, which pulled a surprise in tripping top-ranked Texas Wesleyan 3-2 Monday.

Acosta, the ace on the LCC pitching staff, fired one ball too many in the fifth inning Monday and will probably miss the rest of the year with an elbow injury. And, by all rights, he should have been on the bench at the time.

Here's the situation: LCC is leading 2-0 and Acosta has allowed only two hits and a walk with two outs in the last of the fifth.

both call for. But both stop and it drops for a double. On the first pitch to Danny Mills, something snapped in Acosta's elbow, but he threw two more pitches and departed with the count 1-2. Nixon threw only one pitch to retire Mills, then set down the next ten Indians before Will Kelly singled with one out in the ninth. But Nixon fanned Mike Costea and Danny Hagen to end the game.

LCC, now 43-22, broke on top in the third when Richard Bowles tripled with one out. Wilken put down a squeeze bunt which MSU catcher Larry Francisco fielded on one hop, but Bowles eluded the tag and came back to touch the plate.

In the fourth, Darius Copley led off with a single, forced losing pitcher Mark Ball to balk and scored on Tim Leslie's single to left center.

The Chaps got an insurance run in the ninth when Bobby Doe beat out a bunt, pinch-runner Brady Brashear was sacrificed to second and stopped at third on Bowles' single to left. After Wilken walked, Mickey Robertson came on in relief and his third pitch slipped out of his hand as he tried to deliver, and Brashear scored on the balk.

"It's too bad about Oscar," Chap coach Larry Hays admitted afterwards. "He was throwing a super game. We were worried about our pitching, but he and Nixon gave a super effort. But if we have to play a fourth game, we're going to be awfully thin."

Today, LCC will send John Ross against DBC, a team it has beaten five of eight times this year.

DBC's winning tally came in the ninth Monday, as Gene Parks narrowly missed a homer but settled for a double. Eddie Saller slapped a shot to center which Gary Lejarzar was unable to shoestring and pinch-runner Moose Cook scored.

The tournament will continue through Wednesday.

Sooner Squabble

By MICKEY HERSKOWITZ
And STEVE PERKINS

Q. Can you please tell me what is going on with the Oklahoma football staff? I read that head coach Barry Switzer and his top defensive coach Larry Lacewell had a falling out, or something, but no story every says what it was about.

—H.J. King, Shreveport, La.

A. Until some legal action is filed, there is no way that newspapers can supply details on this subject. The Lacewell-Switzer troubles stem from a domestic difficulty. The rumors about it have swept the state of Oklahoma, with the exotic setting of Hawaii (where the coaches were involved in the Hula Bowl) as a backdrop.

On top of everything else going on at OU, the women's basketball coach was fired for what used to be scandalous reasons.

Q. There was a referendum last Saturday to allow local option voting on having a race track with pari-mutuel betting in this state. People who were for it said it would take money away from illegal bookmakers and instead funnel it through the track, where the state can get its share. Will you find out for me if this is true at other race tracks around the country, or is there any way to find out?

—Joseph Granger, San Antonio

A. A bookie's gross is at least 100 percent higher when a local track is in operation. It also stays higher year-round than what it was once racing is legalized. If it would be possible to invest money in a handbook in such a new situation, you would have a growth stock of the highest magnitude.

Q. As a TV commentator, Rick Barry really got on Bill Walton's case for not even attending the Portland playoff games since he injured his ankle. Will you find out what Walton's reason or reasons are?

—Gail Reynolds, Sacramento, Calif.

A. Portland Oregonian writer Augie Borgi tells us Walton has no reason, other than the one his adviser, Jack Scott, offers: He is depressed about his injury—an ankle broken so severely it must stay in a cast six weeks and will preclude any jogging for another six weeks.

Coach Jack Ramsey refused to comment on Walton's absence other than to say, "I need players, not spectators," but several Trail Blazer players expressed off-the-record annoyance. They noted that two other injured teammates, Lloyd Neal and Bob Gross, even traveled with the team to road games.

Q. What are the chances that Charlie Sifford will be included in the "Legends of Golf" field, if they have it again next year?

—Dane Ehrington, Detroit

A. The chances are very good, especially after the storm stirred up prior to this first tournament by LA Times columnist Jim Murray. Tourney promoter Fred Raphael received several phone calls from people threatening to punch him out, and Raphael had two deputy policemen by his side throughout the event.

Besides, Sifford qualifies in his own legendary way, as the first black golfer to win a PGA tourney.

Dibbs Recalls Nastase, WCT Match In '77

DALLAS (AP) — Eddie Dibbs says he'll be doing everything he can to ignore his first-round opponent in the World Championship of Tennis Finals—something he failed to do last year.

His opponent is volatile Ilie Nastase, who just happens to have been Dibbs' first-round opponent last year. They got into a shouting, shoving match before Dibbs won in four sets. "We almost came to blows last year," Dibbs admitted Monday.

Nastase and Dibbs haven't faced each other since, but both qualified again for this year's WCT Finals, which opens tonight. The luck of the draw pitted them against each other again Thursday night.

"I'm ready for anything with that guy," said Dibbs. "He does crazy stuff. You just try to ignore him."

Nastase's antics have caused headaches for tournament officials worldwide. The Romanian drew the wrath of WCT officials for his behavior in Houston's River Oaks tournament last month.

"He can really tick you off some-

Bullets Gain Respect With Togetherness Plan

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The Washington Bullets, one game away from winning their National Basketball Association semifinals, are beginning to convince people they are for real.

"I've said all along that we're the better team because we play better together," coach Dick Motta said after the Bullets beat the Philadelphia 76ers 121-105 Sunday in their best-of-seven series. It resumes here Wednesday night.

"This isn't over yet. We respect their talent, but we play the game better as a unit," Motta insisted.

"We have totally taken away from them what they wanted to do," said forward Elvin Hayes, Sunday's top performer with 35 points and 19 rebounds. "We're making them do what we want them to do."

"They came into this as the running, watch-my-flash and that trash team and we took all that away from them," Hayes continued. "We wanted to get them into a game where they walk up the floor. Now, we're the team that's running — and they're still walking."

The Sixers weren't walking in the first quarter Sunday, as star forward George McGinnis scored 11 of their first 15 points, guarded Hayes and dropped back to get defensive rebounds.

But McGinnis, who scored 22 points and had 10 rebounds, disappeared in the second quarter as the 76ers lost an 11-point lead.

"We just lost our composure," McGinnis said. "We had opportunities on the break. But we made errors. We had people open, but we lost the ball, threw it away."

The Bullets ran off 17 straight points to turn a 48-37 deficit to a 54-48 advantage for Washington at halftime. "I hated to see the half end," said Motta. "I could see them talking back and forth—you know, bickering," said the Bullets' Mitch Kupchak, who got 19 points and eight rebounds as he again filled in for the ailing Wes Unseld. "I wouldn't like that if I was on their team."

"They have the superstars, the newspaper players, the big money players," said Hayes. "All we got here is good people who like each other — and a team that just keeps going out and playing the game."

Hayes said all the Bullets have to do is keep the pressure on and they are home free.

Meanwhile, McGinnis was not ready to give up.

"We're still a team that can beat them," he said. "We've got to believe that."

Asked if he thought the Bullets' bubble would burst Wednesday night, McGinnis replied: "I don't know if it's a bubble or not. I think at this point, they're for real."

Nutritionist's Loyalties Help Webster, Sonics

SEATTLE (AP) — Denver coach Larry Brown may regret the day he discovered Elaine Busse.

Because Mrs. Busse, a nationally known nutritionist and massage therapist, has turned into one of the Seattle SuperSonics' secret weapons.

Her regimen of large doses of vitamins and mineral supplements, loads of natural fruit juices and vegetables, correct breathing, massage and exercise is credited with helping Sonic center Marvin Webster recover his playing strength after a bout with hepatitis.

Brown asked her to help Webster when the latter was a Nugget, but her loyalties followed Webster to the Sonic camp after he was traded a year ago.

"Because Marvin is with Seattle, they have to be my first love and Denver is second," she said in a telephone interview from Denver.

Before Sunday's 121-111 Sonic victory over Denver evened the two teams' best-of-seven Western Conference National Basketball Association playoff series at 1-1, she also set to work on Dennis Johnson's dislocated finger, Fred Brown's incipient flu and John Johnson's swollen arm.

Brown scored 26 points in Sunday's game, while Dennis Johnson had 22 and Webster blocked Denver shots when it counted.

The two teams move to Seattle on Wednesday night for game three of the National Basketball Association playoffs. Game four will be Friday night in Seattle.

Forward Anthony Roberts added, "We can't play the game with everyone fouling out. It was okay for the refs to let Marvin Webster block every shot but there should have been some fouls called. In Seattle, we need to stay out of foul trouble."

Sonic coach Lenny Wilkens says his team won't ease up now that it has the home court advantage.

"They (the Sonics) know this is a good team so they'll be up for them," said Wilkens. "There are no weak teams left at this point of the season."

NBA Shows Slight Drop In Attendance

NEW YORK (AP) — Attendance was down around the National Basketball Association this season, but nobody is pushing the panic button—the loss was only an average of 26 spectators per game.

Statistics released by the league showed that a total of 9,874,155 fans had attended the 902 NBA games during the 1977-78 regular season. That was a drop of only 23,866 from the record attendance of 9,898,021 set the previous season.

The Denver Nuggets repeated as league leaders in home attendance, attracting a total of 667,673. That, however, was a rather sizeable drop of 45,460 from their mark of 703,133 the previous season.

Completing the top five in home attendance were Philadelphia, 644,456; New York, 626,815; Chicago, 548,844; and Los Angeles, 534,017.

But the most impressive figure belonged to Portland, which ranked seventh in the NBA with total home attendance of 519,306. That represented a complete sellout of all 41 games at Portland Memorial Coliseum, capacity 12,666.

Twelve NBA clubs showed decreases in home attendance, the largest losses being recorded in Cleveland, down 115,484; New Jersey, 85,239; Detroit, 80,410; and Buffalo, 66,941.

But the Cleveland Cavaliers had a disappointing season, playing 500 ball most of the way before rallying to make the playoffs. Owners of the Buffalo Braves are considering moving the franchise, the Detroit Pistons have announced a move from downtown Cobo Arena to the suburban Silverdome next season and the New Jersey Nets are marking time in a college gym until the proposed 20,000-seat Meadowlands Arena is built.

Among the 10 teams showing increases at the gate, the biggest belonged to Atlanta, which surprised the experts by winning 41 games and making the playoffs. The Hawks, last in attendance in 1976-77 with 214,775, showed a gain of 89,707 to place 19th this year at 304,482.

Other big jumps were posted by New Orleans, 83,215; Chicago, 72,208; Indiana, 69,033; Phoenix, 58,715.

The average NBA game attracted a crowd of 10,947 this season compared to 10,973 a year ago.

Aeros Hedge On Ticket Ultimatum

HOUSTON (AP) — Although Kenneth Schnitzer, franchise owner of the World Hockey Association Houston Aeros, said a month ago there would be no team next year if fans failed to purchase 7,000 season tickets by May 4, he now says that may not be the case.

"They (the Sonics) know this is a good team so they'll be up for them," said Schnitzer. "There are no weak teams left at this point of the season."

Schnitzer announced Monday the 30-day ticket campaign failed to reach its goal, coming up with only 4,987 paid orders out of 6,391 total orders.

But the sports entrepreneur said team owners would still try to get the Aeros into the National Hockey League and keep the team in Houston.

"We will continue our merger discussions with existing NHL teams. We anticipate that an application will be submitted to the NHL for consideration at its June meeting," he said.

Schnitzer said the application would contain "certain conditions" such as the right to protect key players from possible dispersal draft and economic protection for the owners.

Schnitzer said a figure announced last week on ticket sales was incorrect because it included duplications—counting the same orders twice in some cases.

Aeros' management dismissed most of its front office staff last Wednesday in what was termed "an exercise in business economy" by Burrell Cohen, one of the owners.

Following is a chart of team-by-team attendance figures for the National Basketball Association comparing the past two seasons:

Odessan Loses Sailplane Lead

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Karl Stridieck was the leader today when the five pilots in the Seventh Annual Slinhoff Transcontinental Sailplane race left Oklahoma City for Springfield, Mo.

Race spokesman Erik Pierce said that Stridieck, Pittsburgh, Penn., took the lead Monday when he was the only pilot to complete the Dallas to Oklahoma City leg of the race.

He landed at Page Airport, just west of Oklahoma City, at 7:25 p.m. after completing the five-hour 45-minute flight.

The other four race pilots landed at various points between Dallas and Monday's touchdown airport.

Stridieck took the race lead from Wally Scott of Odessa who landed in Sherman, Ingo Renner, of Tocumwal, Australia, landed 35 miles north of Dallas.

Herb Mozer of Detroit, Mich., had the second best day in the group and landed at 7:10 p.m. in Lindsay. His father, Rudy, landed midway between the Red River and Ardmore, Okla.

With good weather expected, the pilots planned to leave Oklahoma City at about noon to begin their flight to Springfield, Mo., a distance of about 275 miles.

The race began May 6, in Los Angeles, and is expected to conclude in Washington, D.C., sometime next week depending on weather conditions.

Peanut Butter Helps In Stephenson's Win

HILTON HEAD ISLAND, S.C. (AP) — Five pieces of toast with peanut butter and five strokes under par have worked wonders for Jan Stephenson.

The blonde Australian won the third annual Women's International Golf Tournament Monday and picked up $12,000 by coming in with a 72-hole total of 283.

That was four strokes better than amateur Beth Daniel was able to score over the Devil's Elbow course at Moss Creek Plantation.

Wearing a green T-shirt proclaiming, "HILTON HEAD ISLAND, S.C. (AP) — Final scores in the Women's International Golf Tournament at Hilton Head Island with my win: Jan Stephenson, 512,000

"I'm on a diet," the already-svelte Miss Stephenson said she deliberately gave up a heavy breakfast in hopes that it would help her game. Maybe it did, but she still came perilously close to losing the tournament to Miss Daniel, the current women's amateur champion from Charleston, S.C.

Miss Daniel also had a 2-over-par 72, in the final round and ended up four strokes behind Miss Stephenson. But Miss Daniel was only one stroke away from catching up after Miss Stephenson bogeyed three holes.

However, Miss Daniel bogeyed the 12th hole and Miss Stephenson sank a 15-foot putt for her first and only birdie on the 15th to move out of danger. Miss Daniel had four bogeys and two birdies for a four-round total of 287.

Miss Daniel, 21, a Furman University senior who will turn pro in the fall, said she thought she could have won the tournament and was more "disappointed than happy" that she came in second. Even so, hers was the best finish for an amateur since Nancy Lopez was runner-up for second place in the U.S. Open in 1975.

Miss Stephenson won the Australian Open in March 1977 but had not won an American tourney since 1976. She was presented two cans of Australian beer by tournament officials after her victory Monday. Normally a non-drinker, she said she intended to tie one on to celebrate. "and I need something with the least amount of hangover."

She also gleefully received the latest bouquet of red and yellow roses which have been sent to her each day of the tournament by Atlanta Falcons quarterback Steve Bartkowski.

Age Figures In Comeback

SYRACUSE, N.Y. (AP) — Billy Backus will be fighting for his youth as well as a world title when he enters the ring against Jose Pipino Cuevas, the World Boxing Association's welterweight champion.

"When I win the title I can become a young man again," says Backus, who at 35 is 15 years older than the man he will fight May 20 in Inglewood, Calif.

But if Backus loses it will probably be the end of a career that began shortly after his graduation from Canastota Central High School.

"I don't think there would be much for me to do afterwards, if I don't grab the title. At my age I couldn't enjoy the game just struggling along, picking up $3,000 or $4,000 a fight. It's a damn long way up that ladder," Backus said Monday as he prepared to leave for the West Coast to prepare for the fight with the young WBA champion.

If Backus does regain the world title he would be duplicating a feat performed by his famous uncle, Carmen Basilio, who held the middleweight and welterweight world titles in the 1950s.

Overlooking Yaz Proves Wrong Move For KC

By The Associated Press
Jim Rice got plenty of respect from the Kansas City Royals, but it turned out they were worried about the wrong man.

It was Carl Yastrzemski who did all the damage. While the Royals pitched around Rice and even went so far as to use a four-man outfield against the Boston strong man, Yastrzemski's bat caused the Kansas City plans to backfire Monday night.

The honored veteran of the Boston team knocked in four runs, three with a homer and another with a sacrifice fly, to power the Red Sox to an 8-4 victory at Fenway Park.

"Yaz did just what he's done against other pitchers," said Al Hrabosky, victim of Yastrzemski's seventh-inning homer that put the game out of the Royals' reach. "I should have gotten him out and kept us in there, but I didn't. I could have thrown the ball in a little better, but he wanted to hit the ball—and he did."

Prior to Yastrzemski's game-clinching blast, Kansas City manager Whitey Herzog had ordered an intentional walk to Rice, the American League leader in home runs and RBI.

"It was the right percentage move to walk Rice," concurs Yastrzemski. "They had one of the best left-handed relief men out in the bullpen in Hrabosky."

Earlier in the game, the Royals showed a rare amount of respect for Rice in the third inning, setting up a four-man outfield by sending third baseman Jerry Terrell to left and moving left fielder Tom Poquette to left-center. Ironically, Rice hit a pop fly that dropped for a single in the infield.

Rice shook his head when he saw the alignment.

"I just tried to hit the ball like any other time," he noted.

In the only other major league game Monday night, the New York Mets edged the Cincinnati Reds 3-2 in 10 innings in the National League.

Rain caused a wholesale washout of other contests. Four were rained out in the American League, including a doubleheader between Chicago and Baltimore and the Minnesota-New York and Oakland-Toronto contests. Two games were rained out in the National—Houston at Philadelphia and Montreal at Atlanta. Boston was leading 5-4 on Fred Lynn's fourth homer of the year when right-han-

Bradley Stars In Slugfest At El Paso

By The Associated Press
Mark Bradley accounted for five runs in an eight-run explosion by San Antonio in the ninth inning Monday night as the Dodgers came from behind to take a 10-8 Texas League baseball victory over El Paso.

Entering the inning with San Antonio trailing 5-2, Bradley singled to lead off the inning and scored a run. His team batted around, giving him a golden opportunity on his second trip to the plate in the ninth inning. With the bases loaded, he slammed a home run to give San Antonio a 10-5 lead. El Paso scored three in the bottom of the ninth but couldn't catch up, thanks to the homer by Bradley.

In other Texas League action, Tulsa and Jackson split a doubleheader with Tulsa taking the first 7-6 and Jackson winning the nightcap 4-3. In another twin bill, Arkansas won the opener 9-4, and Shreveport took the second 3-2. In a single game, Midland defeated Amarillo 7-4.

Two runs scored on an error late in the game provided the winning margin in Tulsa's 7-6 victory over Jackson. Bob Healy had a homer for Jackson. In the second game, Dan Duran homered for Tulsa, but it wasn't enough as Jackson took the 4-3 victory.

Pitcher Jim Smith's solo home run in the fifth inning provided the winning margin as Shreveport took Arkansas, 3-2, in the second game of a doubleheader. Mike Calise had his seventh homer of the season as Arkansas took the first game, 9-4.

Both Midland and Amarillo kept streaks alive Monday night. It was the seventh straight victory for Midland and it was the 12th straight loss for Amarillo. Lee Smith, now 3-2, took the victory. Gary Pickert was the losing pitcher.

der Dennis Leonard intentionally walked Rice. Herzog then brought in Hrabosky, his relief ace, who surrendered Yastrzemski's second homer of the season.

Mets 3, Reds 2
Bruce Boisclair's 10th-inning pinch single off the glove of shortstop Dave Concepcion scored Lenny Randle from second, leading New York over Cincinnati.

After the Mets had rallied with a run in the ninth to tie it at 2-2, Randle drew a leadoff walk in the 10th from reliever Pedro Borbon and went to second on Lee Mazzilli's sacrifice bunt, setting the stage for Boisclair.

Mike Bruher, winner Skip Lockwood and Mardie Cornejo limited the Reds to four hits.

HANGING ON—New York Mets runner John Stearns stumbles along on his knees as Cincinnati third baseman Pete Rose fights to keep control of the ball in his glove after Stearns was caught at third base in the third inning of Monday night's game. Stearns had unsuccessfully tried for third after stealing second and seeing the ball bobbed at second base. The Mets won the game 3-2 in ten innings. (AP Laserphoto)

Musial Finds 7,000 Outs Among Records

ATHENS, Ohio (AP)—Stan Musial ranks as one of the greatest performers in National League history, a seven-time batting champion and a Baseball Hall of Fame selection among other things.

Musial, now 57, pokes fun at himself today.

"One record of mine few people know about," said Musial at a speaking engagement. "I had 3,630 hits and batted 11,000 times, but I hold the record for making the most outs, 7,000. If anybody can make 7,000 outs and get into the Hall of Fame, everybody's got a chance."

Musial, who retired in 1963, credits fellow Hall of Famer Ty Cobb with giving him unusual advice on extending his career.

"Cobb told me he'd seen me play that day and said my legs looked pretty good. He asked me if I smoked or drank. I didn't smoke. But occasionally I enjoyed a couple of drinks before and after dinner."

"He told me to try wine. I did and darned if I didn't play five more years."

The toughest pitcher for him to hit? "Curt Simmons of the Phillies," Musial replied without hesitation.

Simmons may have been an exception. The left-handed hitting Musial tagged other southpaw pitchers well, including the great Warren Spahn.

Musial batted .314 and rapped 14 home runs off Spahn. "He was the only batter I ever intentionally walked with the bases loaded," the former Braves' pitcher said of the St. Louis Cardinals' hitting star.

Musial, from Donora, Pa., recalled he almost went to the University of Pittsburgh on a basketball scholarship. "I was a pretty good basketball player, but my first love was baseball."

"I was only 17. The baseball scout came to my home three different times trying to sign me. But my dad wanted me to go to college. My dad reluctantly gave in. It proved a blessing in disguise."

Nolan Sits, Waits, Ponders More Surgery

CINCINNATI (AP)—Gary Nolan is once more faced with the prospect of deciding whether to undergo surgery to prolong his pitching career.

At 29 years old, the former Cincinnati Reds star has already missed the equivalent of four seasons because of shoulder problems. After being sidelined most of the 1973-74 seasons, he underwent surgery and came back to win 15 games in 1975 and 15 again in 1976.

Now Nolan sits on the sidelines again because of shoulder problems.

"I don't think nature's gonna get the job done in this case," Nolan said in a telephone interview from his home in Oroville, Calif. "In order to repair the problem, I'd have to have another operation. I'm going to try to decide whether to have it done by the end of the month."

"It's not a tough operation. They just have to scrape the calcium deposits off."

The shoulder surgery would be followed by months of rehabilitation and Nolan knows it would be another indefinite period before he might come back into the major leagues.

"For 30 days you don't know if you can raise the arm up, let alone throw the ball," he said. "I don't know if I want to go through the same ordeal again."

His last regular season appearance was Sept. 18, 1977, for the California Angels. He was 0-3 for the Angels last year after being traded from the Reds in mid-June.

Ralls Schedules Tournament
RALLS (Special)—Entries are now being accepted for the Ralls Volleyball Tournament, scheduled here May 18-20.

Entry fee is $20 per team, and competition will be held in men's, women's and mixed divisions. Persons interested in additional information can contact Bob Busby, 253-2365.

He became a free agent at the end of the season and spent part of the spring in the camp of the Milwaukee Brewers before the shoulder forced him to the sidelines.

"I went to Phoenix and worked out and felt fairly respectable at the end of March," Nolan said. "I pitched in one ballgame, but I knew in my heart it wasn't going to be enough. I knew it was only a matter of time before it got worse."

Nolan went home and that's where he is now, pondering his future.

"Right now I'm not pressed to make a decision," Nolan said. "I'm taking a little time out. When you think things through for a while, you're less likely to do the wrong thing."

Nolan isn't sure that he wants to get back into baseball.

"If it happened to me when I was younger, it might have meant five less years I could pitch," he said. "But I've been in the major leagues 10 years now and I don't really need the money."

Nolan has resigned himself to missing this season but thinks he could be ready for another try next spring if he decides in favor of surgery this summer.

"I'm 29. It's not like I'm an old man," he said. "Tommy John was 31 when he had his operation," he said.

Carew To Keep Mouth Shut While Awaiting Trade Offers

NEW YORK (AP)—Minnesota Twins batting star Rod Carew has been warned by Baseball Commissioner Bowie Kuhn and American League president Lee McPhail about his comments that he wants to play for a contending team.

"They told me to keep my mouth shut, so I'm keeping my mouth shut or they might ban me to Siberia," Carew told the New York Times Monday. "But that's all right. I'll take my bats with me."

Carew is here for a series with the New York Yankees this week. Monday night's opening game was rained out.

Carew, who won the league's Most Valuable Player award last year after he hit .388, said he received a letter from Kuhn and had a conversation with McPhail about his comments.

There has been speculation that the Twins would trade Carew rather than let him play out his option, which would make him a free agent after the 1979 season and Carew has made no secret about wanting to play for a possible World Series team. He said last week in Boston that he believed he would be traded by the June 15 deadline.

The Times said today the California Angels and Texas Rangers had made trade offers for Carew.

"The commissioner told me I can't say the things I've been saying," Carew said. "He says that could be tampering. Somebody asked me who I'd like to go to and I said I didn't care if it was New York, Boston or California, but as it stands right now I'm a member of the Twins and I will be until it changes."

Carew said he was "kind of upset" by the letter, "because I didn't think I said anything detrimental about my condition. I just said how I felt. I wasn't saying anything to any clubs about signing."

Clark Griffith, the Twins' executive vice president and son of owner Calvin Griffith, said the team has no plans to trade its hard-hitting first baseman.

"We're going to make every effort to make a deal with him and sign him to a new contract. I'm confident we'll be able to sign him, hopefully in the near future. I don't like to go ahead with things unsettled. I'd like to get it settled earlier rather than later and it won't be a trade."

Finley Enjoys Talk Of Trades Involving Sanguillen, A's Trio

By FRED ROTHENBERG
AP Sports Writer

For $100,000 and a manager he would have fired one day anyway, Charlie Finley got catcher Manny Sanguillen from the Pittsburgh Pirates. When the Pirates wanted Sanguillen back, Finley extracted three players who are now contributing to Oakland's surprising first place position in the American League West.

"If I felt any better, I'd get arrested, and it wouldn't be from stealing," said Finley. Then he cackled like a man whose undetected crime had outlasted the statute of limitations. "On second thought, maybe it is from stealing."

Finley, Oakland's owner, general manager and chief bottle washer, is pulling a major miracle in the Bay Area. And he's doing it with a team that he was desperately trying to sell and one that has just four home-grown players on its 25-man roster.

His hornswoogling of Pittsburgh is the best example of how Finley has built Oakland from the ashes of a free agency exodus that drove stars like Joe Rudi, Rollie Fingers, Bert Campaneris and Gene Tenace away from the club.

It's been said that Finley pulls a string and his manager's mouth flaps wide open. He's also had eight managers since 1968. "All managers are hired to be fired," he says. So when Pittsburgh wanted his 1976 field boss, Finley gladly made Tanner available for a price—Sanguillen.

Sanguillen played for the A's in 1977, but the Pirates wanted him back for 1978. Sure, said Finley, but for a price. This time, the ante was reliever Elias Sosa, second baseman Mike Edwards and outfielder Miguel Dilone.

Through Sunday's games, Sosa is Oakland's ace reliever with a 3-0 record, three saves and an ERA of .074. Edwards is playing a steady second base and batting .270 and Dilone, a fleet outfielder, has already swiped nine bases.

You could make a case for Pittsburgh being Oakland's top farm club. Last year, the A's gave the Pirates three players, including starting third baseman Phil Garner, in exchange for outfielders Mitchell Page and Tony Armas and pitchers Rick Langford, Doug Bair, Dave Giusti and Doc Medich.

Page is Oakland's best player, Langford one of the club's strongest starting pitchers and Armas a valuable outfielder. Medich and Giusti are no longer with the A's, but Bair was recently shipped to Cincinnati for $300,000 and Dave Revering, now the A's starting first baseman.

If Pittsburgh is Oakland's top farm team, San Francisco isn't far behind. Finley got $400,000 and seven players from the Giants in the Vida Blue deal earlier this spring. The three pitchers Finley acquired—John Johnson, Dave Heaverlo and Alan Wirth—all are contributing to Oakland's fast start.

And the A's also received starting shortstop Mario Guerrero, who's batting over .300, designated hitter Gary Alexander, who already has six game-winning homers, and outfielder-first baseman Gary Thomasson.

One of Finley's favorite deals was the recent one that sent pitcher Pablo Torrealba to the Chicago White Sox for starting catcher Jim Essian, pitcher Steve Renko and $25,000.

"Anytime you can get some dollars from (White Sox) owner Bill Veck, you have to be some sort of a magician," said Finley, chuckling loud and clear over the phone from his office in Chicago. "And Essian has been terrific with our young pitchers."

Blackwood's Entry Wins Pigeon Race

Joe Blackwood's entry won the 520-mile race staged by the Lubbock Racing Pigeon Club. The club flew its birds from Beaumont over the weekend.

Tom Noble owned the second-place finisher, and Sam Smith's entries finished third, fourth and fifth. The winning entry was timed at 36.6 miles per hour.

The club will fly from Beaumont again this week.

Stockton Softballers Win Angelo Tourney

Darrell Rosenow was named the most valuable player, and Buddy Davis was the leading hitter as the Midland Stockton Packer softball team won a weekend tournament at San Angelo.

The wins at San Angelo hiked the team's record to 13-1 for the year.

David Carter, Kim Nikkel, Keith Missett and Jim Miller were named to the all-tournament team.

Stockton defeated Dallas' National Auto 1-0 and 3-0 in the final two games. Earlier, it had wins over Laughlin AFB 2-1, RODCO of Odessa 7-3, and Dallas Auto Crossroads 3-1.

CHURNING ALONG—Sometimes young men get to running so fast their legs seem a blur. This was the case as this foursome sped along in the 100-yard dash at last Saturday's State Qualifiers Meet at Texas Tech. They are, left to right, Rotan's Freddy Acorn, Estacado's Michael Sims, Odessa Ector's Alvin Ray Woodward, and Denver City's Bobby Burkhalter. The four will be competing in the state meet this weekend at Austin—where the legs again will be just blurs. A bit of trick photography produced the disappearing legs and feet. Hardaway Named SP's Top AAA Basketballer Billy Don Hardaway had what some folks might call a banner year.

The 6-6 Lubbock Dunbar senior garnered all-District 3-AAA honors for the third consecutive year, was named the loop's player of the year for the second time, was selected to the Texas Association of Basketball Coaches All-Region I squad and ended the season by landing a spot on the Texas Sports Writers Association's all-state team.

As if that weren't enough, the Panther ace has also been named the Avalanche-Journal's Class AAA South Plains Player of the Year. It's the second time he's received that honor.

Hardaway, who led the Joe McWilliams-coached Panthers to a 26-5 record and a third straight loop crown, scored 679 points and pulled down 428 rebounds.

The Panther ace is joined on the elite squad by 6-6 Tom Perry of Borger, 6-4

Willie Powell of Estacado, 6-4 Greg Whitfield of Dunbar and 6-4 Clifton Smith of Monahan. All five are seniors.

Selected to the second team were 6-6 David Reynolds of Perryton, 6-1 Alvin Harris of Estacado, 6-4 Ronald Butler of Ector, 6-5 Randy Courtney of Snyder and 6-3 Steve Yarbrough of Levelland.

Perry, the Player of the Year in District 1-AAA despite playing for the loop's runners-up, averaged 17.9 points for the season and 19.4 in district play. He led Borger in four different categories during loop competition.

Buffalo Braves Look Elsewhere For Fans

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) — The Buffalo Braves were unpopular in their hometown last winter, and there are almost as many theories why as there are aisles in the Memorial Auditorium.

The Braves broke their lease to the arena Monday, leaving many of the Buffalo faithful convinced the club will be playing elsewhere next season. Fans blame owner John Y. Brown for bad trades, flaunting his native Kentucky and refusing to meet with city officials.

"I think the fan support is definitely here in Buffalo and we'll see it with the (football) Bills," said another caller to the WEBR Radio show, a kind of post-mortem to the press conference at which the lease-breaking was announced.

Feeling is strong for local ownership of the club, but Sonju said the right offer hasn't been made.

"Anyone will sell anything for a price, but no, my owners do not want to sell," he said.

Since Brown bought a half ownership from former owner Paul Snyder in August 1976, the Braves have traded away or sold players such as Bob McAdoo, Jim McMillian, Moses Malone and Tom McMillen.

Snyder tried to move the club to Florida two years ago but was blocked by lawsuits brought by the city and the NBA.

Brown bought out Snyder in March 1977 and then sold a 50 percent interest to Harry Mangurian last December but remains the managing partner.

He made a potentially good trade for Marvin Barnes after the 1977-78 season began, but Barnes failed as the hoped-for catalyst.

Hamstrung by injuries to Nate Archibald and other players, the Braves limped to a 27-55 record while selling fewer than 2,300 season tickets.

Norm Sonju, the Braves president and general manager, has been criticized for providing halftime shows and post-game concerts instead of players.

Sonju has tried to assure fans the Braves might stay in Buffalo, but his own assessment of the market casts a shadow on a ninth year here for the National Basketball Association franchise.

"It doesn't look encouraging that there's as much basketball interest in upper New York today as there might have been a couple of years ago," he said.

Buffalonians counter that they grew weary of supporting a loser after coming so close to NBA greatness as late as two years ago.

"I believe the decision was made a year ago that this club was going south," said one fan who called a radio talk show Monday.

Monahan's Smith paced the Lobos, the runners-up at the region tournament, with a 22.2 average, shooting at a 48 percent clip. He also averaged 12.8 boards each game.

T.J. Loanman, who guided the Lobos out of District 2-AAA despite heavy odds otherwise, was named the Coach of the Year.

Loanman, in his present coaching position for the past two years, coached Monahan to a 26-5 record, including a thrilling 80-79 win over favored Dunbar in the opening round of the region tournament.

Worham Rates As Class B Track Favorite

AUSTIN (Special) — If there was ever a team more worthy of the State Class B track title than the Worham Bulldogs, it would be hard to find.

Worham, one of only two teams in the B ranks bringing both relays teams to the elite meet which gets underway Friday, has within its grasp a possible 90 points.

No other team is anywhere close to that point spread, including Chilton, the other squad with two relay teams competing.

The meet gets underway Friday morning, but classes B, A and AAAA won't compete until Saturday afternoon. AAA and AA will pick state champs Friday night.

Worham owns the fastest time among the eight teams entered in the sprint relays (a 43.7). However the Bulldogs are the slowest of the group in the mile relay with a 3:37.5, almost 10 seconds behind leader Amherst (3:28.7).

The North Texas high school also sports individual competitors in both hurdles, plus the 440, 220 and long jump.

South Plains runners should also be well represented at the meet, limited to only the first and second place performers or teams on the regional level.

Dennis Heald of Klondike and Al Gonzales of Roby are coholders of the fastest time in the 220, a pair of 22.2s. The duo were the only sprinters able to break the 22 second barrier at the regional competition.

(Times are from regional meets)
