All of the suggestions had already been included in a list of proposed expenditures prepared by the city staff and adopted by the

As proposed, $550,000 would be spend on a management study of garage operations and construction of a new municipal garage for the maintenance and repair of city vehicles and equipment.

Official declines responsibility in questionable subdivisions

By Jeff South

'm not going to be a stool-pigeon for the commissioners court, the planning and zoning commission or anybody else," County Clerk Frank Guess declared after city officials urged him to help nab some developers whose questionable subdivision practices have fostered sloppy growth just outside Lub-bock municipal limits.

Those developers have circumvented city and county controls over the size and layout of alleys, streets, utility easements and other aspects of residential development by selling their subdivision lots by metes and bounds - that is, by an individual description of each piece

City planners and county commissioners say that according to law, developers must submit plats for any proposed subdivision. Before development and sales can begin, those plats must meet certain standards and be approved by the commissioners court and, in many cases, the city planning and zoning commission.

Last week, city and county officials got together to discuss how they might enforce the plat-filing provision, so that rural residential development - and particularly developments within the five-mile extraterritorial jurisdiction of the City of Lubbock - could be subjected to necessary standards.

City planning director Jim Bertram urged that enforcement begin with a more aggressive attitude in the county clerk's office, where metes-and-bounds sales are recorded.

The county clerk should keep an eve out for metes-and-bounds sales coming off the same large piece of land, Bertram said. Such sales are evidence that the land is being subdivided - without a plat having been approved by the city or the county, he said. "If in checking a deed of sale, the county clerk finds that land is being subdivided for residential purposes by metes and bounds, the owner of the property is subject to an injunction" to halt the development, Bertram said. If the county clerk simply would notify authorities about suspicious sales activity, the developer could be stopped from selling any more lots until he has submitted a plat and complied with subdivision standards, he said. But County Clerk Guess said it is not within his authority to refuse to accept the sale of land by metes and bounds, or to investigate whether such sales are attempts to subdivide property without a plat having been approved.

"I have no authority to look at it and see if it's suspicious," Guess said. He said the county clerk's office has "no discretion" whether to record a properly prepared deed of sale.

Almost 200 documents go through my office every day, and I don't have time to check each metes-and-bounds sale to determine if somebody's trying to subdivide his land," Guess said.

"Even if I did have the time, I don't think I have the authority. If a deed of sale is drawn up properly, the law says I have to record it. I can't arbitrarily say, Sorry, this looks like it might be a subdivision," he said.

Guess also said the definition of subdivision is still unclear. "If a man has 50 acres and he divides his land into four sections for his children - by metes and bound - is that considered subdividing? Are we going to make him file a plat to do that?

Guess said that although he is against assigning investigative functions to his office, county commissioners and city officials "are welcome to come in here anytime and look at the records.

Bertram said sloppy subdivision prac-tices outside city limits — because of developers' failure to file plats - has put a strain on city taxpayers as the City of Lubbock expands its limits. "Citizens at large are subsidizing substandard development" because tax monies must be used to correct planning problems inherited with the an of a poor-quality subdivision, he said. He said the city has been spending "hundreds of thousands of dollars" upgrading poorly planned subdivisions.

Tornadoes

Question: What is the difference between a tornado and a cyclone?

Answer: In everyday language, these two words are often used interchangeably for any destructive wind storm. Meteorologists, however, distinguish between the two.

Cyclones, commonly called lows, form around points of minimum pressure. Their winds circulate and blow toward the center counterclockwise in the Northern Hemisphere and clockwise in the Southern Hemisphere. Covering an area of hundreds of miles, cyclones move generally from west toward east. On cyclones' forward sides, warm air displaces cold air causing a warm front. To their rear, a cold front is formed by cold air moving forward.

Tropical cyclones are regions of squally, thundery weather covering hundreds of miles. When winds reach 75 miles per hour, the storm is called a hurricane. Tornadoes, born from thunderstorms, are formed by spinning air rushing inward and upward. The closer the air gets to the center, the faster it spins and the lower its pressure. Tornadoes are small and short lived storms but extremely destructive. They travel about 30 miles per hour along a narrow path.

-editorial-City parks: look what shape they're in

LUBBOCK'S CITY park system, longtime outstanding contributor in the community's imagebuilding field, is faring not so well these days.

Ironically, the root of the problem is buried within City Hall's commendable attention to conservation of natural and financial resources.

It has been difficult—well, let's say it, impossible -to maintain yesterday's optimum level of service with ravenous inflation gnawing voraciously away at each year's budget.

WATER, A PERENNIAL concern of droughtconscious West Texans, is in short supply. Water tables are dropping faster than natural recharge percolation can replenish them.

City Hall has stepped up talking and planning for alternate supplies.

Meanwhile, the grass is withering, playa lake shore lines are receding and, in spots, tender spring foilage is dying on the vine.

MANPOWER AND machinery projections-adequate in years past-are becoming increasingly inadequate to meet current demands.

As more park land has been acquired, commensurate adjustments in personnel, equipment and fertilizer have not been made

Attempts to stretch available work forces and gear to new levels has only resulted in less attention everywhere.

The same is true of the city's increasingly unkempt school grounds, which are the responsibility of the school board and administration.

THE INCENTIVE to clear off weed-choked lots is negligible, when the resultant view only would be one of the city's adjoining overgrown lots.

Municipal efforts in that direction have helped prune part of the problem, but not solve it.

The budget simply is not adequate to cover the expense involved in satisfying every faction's unique request and interest.

The result, of course, is that few parks throughout the city get all the attention they really need.

OF COURSE, neglect was not intended when the park lands were acquired. And no one implies that it has been intentional.

But possibly, some money has been, is being or will be spent on a less desirable and less obvious

Perhaps a master plan for development of city parks and recreation programs is a sound idea. The $10,000 or so it would cost would be money well spent, considering the enormity and complexity of the problem.

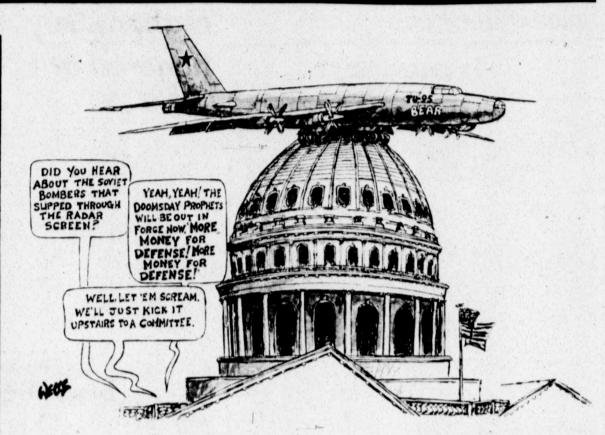

The last time a parks master plan was formulated was in 1968. It was to have lasted through 1985, but most phases of it already have been complet-

IT IS TRUE, the value of the city park land is an intangible benefit.

But it is time to start evaluating where we are parkwise and moneywise. The best we can hope for-as conditions now stand-is maintenance at existing levels.

If Lubbockites want more than that, they are going to have to speak up when their ideas are solicited in Community Development sector meet-

Otherwise, they've going to have to settle for what they have now. That would be a waste. And a needless one.

J.O. Lewis recently retired from the Lubbock Fire Department to trade one firefighting job for another - with one notable exception.

Instead of battling blazes in dusty Lubbock, the former fire chief will be fighting fires on a group of small tropical islands dotting the Pacific Ocean.

Lewis and his wife, Julia, will arrive in Saipan next week for a year-long stay in the Northern Mariana Islands, a United States trust territory

Lewis, a 25-year veteran with Lubbock's fire department, will become fire chief and training instructor for the government of the islands in Saipan, which is about 120 miles north of Guam Island.

Mrs. Lewis, who had worked for the U.S. attorney's office here, will work in the attorney general's office in Saipan, which is 47 square miles and the largest of the islands

Their four children are grown, the jobs were available and both were ready for a change. Lewis said in explaining his decision to move half way around the world.

About 12,000 people live on the islands, he said, and his job will be to make sure they have adequate fire de-

Two fire stations, 14 men and old equipment will await him, he said, adding his first priorities are to update the equipment, train the men and set up fire

The attorney general for the Northern Mariana Islands is a long-time friend who told him about the job opening.

By Jay Robert Nash

In the past, hostage-taking had wholly different motives. In the Twelfth Century it became common to hold important warriors hostage, such as England's King Richard the Lion-Hearted, for the sake of ransom and negotiations which led to favorable war terms and rich settlements of territory. It took criminals little time to adopt the methods of their sovereigns

Many an outlaw of America's young wild west found it convenient to employ hostages while rickety bank safes were opened by hand-trembling cashiers. Jesse and Frank James, along with the Younger brothers, used hostages to escape Northfield, Minn., after an abortive and disastrous raid in 1876. The hardy pioneer residents of Northfield, however, were not impressed. Dozens of unarmed citizens ignored the hostages held by the outlaws with pistols to their heads and stoned the gang from the town streets.

THE IDEA OF using hostages as shields against police bullets became the craze of the 1930s, especially with bankrobbers John Dillinger, Baby Face Nelson, Pretty Boy Floyd and Bonnie and Dillinger's first use of hostages occurred on November 20, 1933, when he and four of his gang held up the American Bank and Trust Company in Racine, Wisconsin. The bankrobber "invited" the bank's president and its bookkeeper, Mrs. Henry Patzke, to ride with them until they were safely out of town. It was all very funny to Dillinger who let the two terrified hostages out of the car some minutes later on a deserted road.

The humor went out of Dillinger's hostage-taking on March 13, 1934, as he and five other gangsters scooped $52,000

ers and bumpers. Sagging beneath this weight, the car barely managed to get out of town; Police Chief E.J. Patton realized the hostages would die if his anxious squads of police opened up on the car and allowed the bankrobbers to escape.

LATER, RIVAL GANGS throughout the country began to take hostages from the mobster ranks. The price of release was often ransom, but most sought was information about the activities of the opposition.

One such victim was a man named Muddy Kasoff, taken hostage by the Brownville, N.Y., arm of Murder, Inc., on orders of Charles "Lucky" Luciano. who wanted to know about Kasoff's narcotics operations which were culting into his own.

Two psychotic killers, Harry Strauss, known as "Pittsburgh Phil," and Abe 'Kid Twist" Reles, snatched Kasoff and held him hostage until he and his associates revealed the extent of their narcotics rings. Once the information was in hand, Reles blew off the top of Kasoff's head with a shotgun.

Even though we are nearing the end of the 65th Session of the Legislature, chances for some meaningful new crime control legislation are brightening.

Last week, a constitutional amendments subcommittee of which I was a member reported favorably a resolution which proposes to deny bail to persons who commit felonies while on bail and to persons who use a deadly weapon in the commission of a felony, if they have a prior felony conviction.

Aides to Gov. Briscoe have admitted that the governor has not pushed as hard for the anti-crime package as he could have. The denial of bail resolution might still be in subcommittee, were it not for a Houston Post article which revealed that numerous crime control bills were bogged down.

In that article, I was quoted as saying that state leaders who initially proposed this legislation have not been fighting for it. The next day, one of the governor's aides contacted me about the denial of bail resolution and, with pressure exerted on the subcommittee chairman,

This week was taken up by debating House Bill 510, which is the appropriations bill.

Speaker of the House Bill Clayton announced that about $300 million needed to be trimmed from the appropriations committee spending proposals.

Upon adjournment Thursday afternoon, we had completed first round floor debate on three articles covering the judiciary, health, welfare and rehabilitation agencies and the executive and administration departments and agencies. That's about half-way into the 406 page budget for the upcoming 1978-79

Close to $157 million in reductions has been sliced from the bill so far.

This week, we shall be considering funding for agencies of public education. This will include Texas Tech University.

Now that some of the news media are reporting the progress of the anti-crime package, or the lack of it, we may finally be able to get these bills moving.

The House Committee on Criminal Jurisprudence has for the second time rejected efforts to have the Legislature grant reprieves to killers who are awaiting execution. The committee refused to pass a bill to impose a two-year morato-rium on capital punishment in Texas. Proponents needed six committee votes and got only four.

A possibility exists for the introduction of another bill which might cure an apparent injustice in the application of the capital murder statute. Seven of the 50 or so persons awaiting execution in Texas did not actually kill anyone, but were accomplices in the crime which resulted in murder. Under current Texas law, those persons are equally as guilty of murder as those who did the actual kill-

Bill Clayton is the heavy favorite to be elected Speaker in the next session of the Legislature, but others are keeping themselves available in case he falters or decides to run for statewide office.

The primary contenders are Reps. Bill Sullivant of Gainesville and Buddy Temple of Diboll. Temple is generally regarded as liberal, while Sullivant is considered moderate politically.

I have pledged my support to Clayton, but have given a "stand-by" commitment to Sullivant if Clayton does not return to the House. If Clayton's support diminishes so that he cannot get a majority but none of the other candidates have enough votes to win, Sullivant has assured me that he would withdraw and throw his support to Clayton.

reating jewelry is Ron Davis' first love. To make it his life's work, he is re-creating a lot of things in antique restoration to fund his pursuit of a master of fine arts degree in jewelry at Texas Tech University.

He has coaxed bumps and bashes from brass, stripped years of misuse from beautiful woods, replaced leaded glass in Tiffany lamps and even tested itemsfor gold content so his dealer-boss could be sure.

One chore, creating new fittings and trim for fine furniture, uses all his jewelry-making talent in castng and sculpting.

Each fall and spring, when the Lubbock Antique Show is on at the Texas National Guard Armory, he sets Il tasks aside to lend his muscles as well as his artistic eye to setting up the show his artistic eye to setting up the show.

Davis will be on hand to help as 24 dealers from four states set up their wares for the show Friday through Sunday. They will be bringing what South Plains collectors have a yen to add to other finds from past shows—primitive and elegant creations in wood, silver, brass, copper, glass, pewter and paper.

Show hours are 10 a.m-9 p.m. Friday and Saturday and noon to 6 p.m. on Sunday for the exhibition.

Davis was roaming antique aisles when the chance came for employment in that line, a chance to "do anything asked to do" in return for a paycheck to help with school expenses.

Facing a task with determination, plus "a halfway idea of how it should work," he accomplished things like overhauling the hydraulic lift of a barber chair, replacing the leather on a roll top desk and forming a missing floral miniature on a French cabinet.

The bane of the antique buff — dents in metal, missing drawer pulls or damaged inlay and veneer — are the tasks challenging Davis along with build-up of years of paint layers.

A lot of it calls on his talent in art, his field of interest as long as he can remember.

The craft end, not the painting, was his way, generally, until an alternate course in jewelry-making replaced one not offered one summer.

"I knew it was what I wanted to do the rest of my life," Davis said.

His work has passed competition to be exhibited in juried shows. His master's display is set for the fall.

Art with the unique Davis touch takes several routes, the intricate design and the intriguing rough-finished "frogasauruses" which satisfy creative instincts at leisure time when he is "just fooling around."

What appears to be a skull collection in his workshop is raw material for bone inlays and ideas for forms in creating.

Davis "goes out and beats the bushes" for stray bones. Friends bring what they encounter.

Teaching others what he has learned will be, he hopes, his way in the future when all creations from his casting and building efforts will be personal achievements with his own ideas, not reproductions of what other fine craftsmen have accomplished in the past.

Until then, he will continue to learn by overcoming any task at re-creating the beauty of the past so others may appreciate it today.

Absentee voting in bond issue continues

By Paula Tilker Update Staff Writer

beentee voting in the May 21 capital improvements bond election will continue through May 17 in the city secretary's office at City Hall. Lubbockites who are 18 or older and who registered to vote by April 20th can cast their ballot from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. in room 205.

Those eligible to vote absentee are qualified voters who expect to be absent from the city on election day, persons 65 or older and persons unable to go to the polling place because of sickness, physical disability, confinement in jail or religious beliefs.

Voters who elect to personally appear at the city secretary's office to cast a ballot must sign an affidavit swearing they will be out of town on May 21.

Voting by mail is allowed by qualified voters who are 65 or older, physically disabled, already out of town or sick. They must mail a written application for a ballot to the city secretary which must be received by her by 5 p.m. May 17.

The letter must specify where the ballot is to be sent, why an absentee ballot is needed and must be signed by the applicant or a witness if he is unable to sign his name.

Also included in the letter must be a voter registration certificate or a state-turned to her office by 10 a.m. May 19.

Water, sewer, street, storm sewer and fire protection improvements would be made if the voters approve the package, with water to get the lion's share of the money.

General obligation bonds would finance the projects, meaning city tax revenue would be pledged to back them. However, the city council says it doesn't plan to raise the ad valorem tax rate to generate more money to pay the bonds.

Instead, the council says, it would rather increase the sewer and water charges to make enough money to transfer revenue to the general fund to repay the bonds.

Finance Director Sterling Miller, at the council's request, is formulating a schedule of proposed hikes that would draw in enough money to cover debt service and also encourage water conservation.

Instead of a gradual per-cent increase in water rates, the council says, it would prefer a flat increase to encourage careful use of water by heavy users.

Tentative revenue requirements would demand a 15 per cent hike in the water charge this year, with a 10 per cent hike recommended for each of three charge would be needed, with another 15 per cent hike to follow in 1978-79.

Plans are for the issuance of $80,000 in bonds this year if voters approve the package. Included in the projects that would be immediately undertaken are water supply line controls in Lubbock and Bailey countries, sewage treatment plant renovations, storm sewer and street improvements and construction of a fire station at 79th Street and Slide Road.

The last time Lubbockites were asked to approve bonds for basic city services was in 1967, when they okayed money for improvemnts in water, sewer, street, garbage disposal, fire and drainage systems.

arge doses of early morning energy which McWhorter Elementary students bring to school with them is being channeled into a mile-run jogging program. More than 100 students and a dozen faculty members have pummeled the playground with pounding feet and a sizeable group consistently trots each morning for fun and fitness.

Physical education teacher Marty Montoya, who launched the exercise program, encourages participation in sports for the individual as well as the group. She said the purpose of the recreation is to "feel good for the self and improve self-image."

A number of the students from thrid to sixth grade who jog laps around a 90-foot by 150-foot marked track regularly make the 10 rounds required for a mile. Some really push themselves and make two or three miles, Mrs. Montoya said, and a few even repeat the course outside of school hours.

Mrs. Montoya said teachers have commented they can see a change in attitude among the youngsters who jog. The children seem to feel better and act more alert after they have run in the mornings.

The fastest reported time on running a mile around the course was 5 minutes and 33 seconds by a sixth-grade boy, Mrs. Montoya said.

This year's program, underway two weeks, will conclude with the end of school this month. Next year Mrs. Montoya hopes to continue the training and perhaps schedule contests and work to improve students' overall time.

But for the present, the youngsters and a few parents who have turned out receive "just a personal satisfaction" from their efforts, Mrs. Montoya said.

Entrepreneur plans skateboard center

By Sylvia Teague Update Staff Writer

he terrain in North Lubbock will have a few more hills and valleys soon, thanks to skateboard enthusiast and entrepreneur Manuel Martinez. The 27-year-old plans to improve the topography near Akron Avenue and Marshall Street by constructing a skateboard "bowl" there.

Martinez recently received approval from the Planning and Zoning Commission and the blessings of the Parks and Recreation Board for the construction — the latter necessary because of the location's proximity to the Canyon Lakes Project.

The proposed skateboard park would consist of three bowls requiring different levels of skill. For example, the "pro bowl" would be constructed with eight foot sides, Martinez said.

Also in the plans is a free style area with a jump ramp where kids could "express themselves" through hand stands and "360s."
When completed, Lubbock's skateboard park, already named The Pike, will be only the second in the state.

The first, located in Corpus Christi, helped formulate many of Martinez' ideas about the plan.

"I started my research about six months ago when I was watching my little brother skateboard in front of the house," Martinez said.

With the realization of how dangerous skateboarding on the streets and sidewalks can be, he began discussing alternatives with his brother.

Upon learning safer alternatives exist, Martinez asked his brother, "What if I build a skateboard park?"

HE AND HIS BROTHER then took a trip to Corpus to see a bowl up close.
"We both rode the park," Martinez said. "I got to talking to the guy who owns it and the kids told me what was good and bad about it."

"I sketched a model of it and started working with Parks and Recreation about building one."

"The way I see it, skateboarding is a growing sport — not only a fad," Martinez said. He attributed its revived popularity to skateboard competition on television and its use as an event in some indeed track mosts.

television and its use as an event in some indoor track meets.

He said a contest was held in Corpus at his request, and the five champions will be present when his park opens.

"I'm going to try and get tournaments going about every two weeks. I'm hoping to have champions come out of Lubbock and take them to other parks."

The sport has changed radically since its first time around, Martinez said.

For one thing, the $3.99 skateboard is no more.

"Good skateboards are expensive," Martinez said, adding that they range from $80-125.

THE BOARDS ARE ALSO much safer now. "When they first came out, the wheels were those used on roller skates and any little pebble you hit flipped the board.

"Now they have polyurethane wheels which go right over pebbles," he Now they have polyurethane wheels which go right over pebbles," I

Safety will also be a major area of emphasis at The Pike, Martinez said. Participants will be required to rent helmets and knee and elbow pads before taking to the bowls.

Kids are even trying out freeways for bigger thrills, he said.

But Martinez is optimistic about the fate of the sport this time around.

So enthusiastic that he plans to turn his two-year-old into a professional skateboarder.

aith Bean is living out the song she taught to her Hodges Elementary School third-graders: "I wanna go back to that little grass shack..."

And Mrs. Bean — a native Hawaiian, world traveler and once a walk-on in an Elvis Presley movie — is leaving in high style. The school hosted a going-away luau, complete with roasted pig (wrapped in ti leaves, of course), poi, pineapples, coconuts and other delicacies straight from the islands.

"I've been thinking about going home for some time now," Mrs. Bean said at the feast. "Don't get me wrong — I like Lubbock a lot. But I have to admit, I'm very excited to be getting back to Laie."

That's the village on the island of Oahu where Mrs. Bean started her teaching career. It was in Hawaii that she met West Texas native Joe Bean, who was in the service at the time, and they got married. After some traveling, they settled in Lubbock five years ago to attend Texas Tech University and teach in the public school system.

Her husband is a teacher at Tubbs Elementary School. At the end of this academic year, the Beans and their two children — one-year-old Mailelani and eight-year-old Kuiokalani — will be returning to Oahu.

To commemorate that announcement, Mrs. Bean and her third-grade class at Hodges held a luau. The trimmings — such as taro roots, ferns and fruits — were provided by Mrs. Bean's brother, Rudy Meyer, a Hawaiian school teacher visiting Lubbock during his school's spring recess.

Also on hand was Rudy and Faith's mother, Amoe Meyer, who has been retired for eight years after more than four decades as a public school teacher in the islands and mainland United States.

Mrs. Bean, her brother and mother played ukulele, led songs, told Hawaiian folk tales and conducted traditional island games — such as tug-of-war, wrestling and an event similar to bowling (using a softball instead of a traditional lava rock) — as part of the festivities.

Mrs. Bean, whose classroom is adorned with Hawaiian pictures and Polynesian words, said her many travels have been a big help in her teaching.

"Whenever we come across a place I've been to in our reading or social studies lessons, I can always relate it to my own experiences," she said.

Generally, children have a misconception of Hawaii, Mrs. Bean said.

"They keep thinking it's a piace where girls are running around in grass skirts and everybody is living in grass huts," she said. But actually, Mrs. Bean said, Hawaii is "as much of a metropolis as Dallas is. The biggest difference is that kids can go to school barefoot and wear shorts to school."

Mrs. Bean taught school for three years in Hawaii. Since then, she also has

polly's pointers

DEAR POLLY - Years ago when I was a youngster I remember my mother made "coffee." I do not remember all the ingredients she used but I do remember one was bran. I do not know what kind, but know it was not the bran buds we see today.-Also she put in molasses, eggs and perhaps oatmeal. This was mixed until it made fine crumbs and then put in bread pans (not too thick) and baked. She stirred it occasionally so it would brown evenly. When baked, it was put in covered containers. When she made the coffee it was in an old time coffee pot with water and then boiled. Now that coffee is soaring in price. I would appreceiate hearing from anyone who has such a recipe. - Martha M.

Dear Martha M. - The high price of coffee is on many of our minds just now Perhaps the following letter will be of some interest to you. I have not tried this recipe, but thought you might like to. Perhaps other readers have other recipes that they remember. - POLLY.

DEAR POLLY - Years ago when coffee prices went up to 30 cents a pound my grandma said "That is way too high" and she made her own. She used what she called dripping pans that would hold four loaves of bread and were made of what she called black steel. She half-filled a pan with commeal, dribbled two tablespoons of black strap molasses over it, stirred and put it in the oven to roast. As remember it tasted good and was quite dark. The cornmeal she used was coarse ly ground. That was about 65 years ago. I enjoy your Polly's Pointers even if I am a 74-year-old young man. Keep up the good work I wonder what grandma would say about today's coffee prices. -Mr. J.H.B

Dear Mr. J.H.B. - Thanks for your letter and those nice words. Stick with us. I am sure grandma would have plenty to say about today's prices in general.

Darla S. Holland of Lubbock has been presented the Merck Index Award as one of the top students in the chemistry department at Texas A&M University. A departmental committee considered students for annual awards on the basis of academic achievements, performance, reasearch and extracurricular activities. Miss Holland, a senior chemisty student, is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George D. Holland of 4502 16th St.

DEAR POLLY - Those who still make coffee and hate to throw away any extra they have can freeze it in ice cube trays. Then remove and store in bags in the freezer. Pop one or two into your beef stew or gravy for a delicious rich flavor.

Dear Holly - Such cubes could also be used far iced coffee. Have you ever tried adding a bit of coffee to chocolate icing - does wonders for it. - POLLY

DEAR POLLY - I have always dreaded running the sweeper and dusting. Finally the thought struck me that I should preterni I was a maid — do the work and then write myself a check in payment. This really works. - Louise.

Tech library given famous autographs

A 17th century Bishop of Chester, Queen Isabella of Spain and George Washington are in the best of company at the Texas Tech University Library where their names are associated with about 300 others in a unique autograph collection. The collection was a gift to the Library from a retired San Angelo physician, Dr. L.A. Whitehill. He has named it for his father, Samuel Weiselberg. Although collected for the autographs, the collection's letters, documents, manuscripts, books and even photographs bearing signatures contribute sidelights The Bishop of Chester, one John Wilkins, inscribed a small 1638 book suggesting life on the moon to Galileo, the renowned Italian astronomer.

George Washington's signature is on Nicholas Dill's discharge from the Continental Army dated June 8, 1783. Queen Isabella, the same who paid for Columbus' first voyage to the New World, attached her well known signature, " yo la reyna," to a motherly letter to her daughter, the queen of Portugal. The letter refers to no matters of state but only describes the four hats she is forwarding to her daughter.

Library Dean Ray C. Janeway said the material will be known as the "Samuel Weiselberg Autographs Collection." "Autographs are more than a piece of paper with the signatures of the famous," he said. "Often a document or letter can illuminate an obscure part of the past or, at least, furnish a clue to the biographer or historian.

They may be considered historial artifacts which enable us to examine the sidelights of history, literature, the arts and sciences.

Preserving manuscript records of the past is as essential a function of the library as preservation of the printed world, he said.

The material in the Weiselberg collection will be catalogued and made available to scholars in the rare books room of the Library.

There appears to be no particular specialization in the collection. There are represented men of sciences and inventors, 26 American presidents, kings and queens, religious leaders, philosophers, world known statemen, philanthropists, educators, military leaders, musicians, state personalities, authors, astronauts and aviators, and one explorer, Robert E.

One of the most ornate of the documents is signed by Philip II of Spain. It is on vellum, bound in velvet and bears a hand painted gold and colored frontispiece with the intitial letter in gold. The 1597 document grants nobility to Francis co de Ulloa, who accompanied Hernando Cortes on his conquest of Mexico. Appended to the front is a large lead seal encased in a colorful, finely woven sack.

A white leather bound manuscript with metal clasps apparently is a volume of teaching notes, from St. Thomas Aquinas' "Summa Theologiae" and portions of "Exodus," of a monk who took the pains to list in the back other members of the seminary faculty.

Four volume are folio size portions of 'Don Gionvanii' by Mozart. Although not in the composer's hand, the work is by a skilled copyist. The volumes, from Acts I and II, are parts for violin, viola

Two works of special significance to students of literature are limited editions of Robert Graves "Goliath and David" and his "Ten Poems More," set by hand on handmade paper. Both of the slim volumes were printed in editions of 200 and were "not for sale." The 1917 "Goliath and David" was a copy presented to poet John Drinkwater.

Farmington, N.M. Allison is a nephew of the late Edith Mason.

Betty Mills, curator of historic costumes at the museum, described each of the garments as a work of art.

One is of unusual "silver tissue," a fabric combining silk with a metallic coated thread to give a gossamer effect. It is elaborately embroidered with roses and has additional accents of silver spangles and lace.

There is an opera cloak with an inner pleated chiffon lining, visible only to the most discerning eye and yet a mark of 19th century high couture.

Laces, braids and the elaborate trim called "passementerie" decorate this and other garments. Some of the lace is Battenberg or Renaissance, both highly prized, handmade decorations almost unavailable now.

Elegance was a part of Mrs. Barnes' life. She was a leader of St. Louis society and was said to be the first woman to earn the doctoral degree in psychology from the University of Heidelberg in the

The decision to give the costumes to The Museum of Texas Tech University was made, Mrs. Allison said, because of the family's wish to place them where they might be seen by the public and studied by students.

With synthesized keyboards, lovesick lyrics, bawdy humor, a bit of '50s nostalgia, a cloud of smoke and a hearty 'Hello Lubbock," Wednesday's featured artists at the Municipal Coliseum wasted little time in proving the directions of country music are indeed infinite.

In fact, that "something for everyone cliche might have fit had the too-small audience not made evident, through their rousing enthusiasm, that this was an "everything for everyone" concert.

Ronnie Milsap, Tammy Wynette and the Statler Brothers - all award winners and highly respected in their field were each honored with standing ovations of the spontaneous variety.

BLIND GRAMMY winner Ronnie Milsap started things rolling with an outrageous set which created an instant rapport. Cracking smiles and one-liners continuously, Milsap showed no signs of pressure on stage. Fact is, his number one priority seemed to be just having a good time

There were sight gags (goggles?), strange spoofs like donning a wolfman mask and diving into "Little Red Riding Hood" and of course the expected references to his sight loss - the most hilarious coming when he apologized to his black drummer with, "I'm sorry, man, I didn't see you sitting back there in the

But most of all there was music. Good music. Country music, yes, but with a definite rock influence. Not that Milsap made that much use of his instrumentation. No. his sidemen were fair at be a and his songs basically relied on his own very strong voice and his ability to manipulate, to offer chamber effects by singing just off the microphone.

Still, his use of a synthesized keyboard

may have taken some aback. And the smoke releases and blinding (sorry, Ronnie) explosions with which he ended his show are gimmicks born of the hard rock medium. His influences were never hidden - but the crowd still got off on the excitement generated through the THINGS MELLOWED a good deal when Tammy Wynette, the proclaimed first lady of country music, took the stage. Decked out in a long evening gown of pink and blue, she may not have been the very picture of sensuality but she still came dang close. And that doesn't come easy for too many women with 16-year-old children.

Still, if her appearance is not magnetic enough, her songs could put anyone in the mood.

Voicing her old numbers first, things like "I Don't Want To Play House" and 'D-I-V-O-R-C-E," she went on to bare a personal side: telling us the hows and whys behind her own compositions before sitting on a stool, taking a blue spot and singing sad enough to leave everyone crying in their Cokes.

The only thing wrong with her set was the noisy teenaged group who insisted on disturbing the songstress and everyone else by war-whooping during her tender melodies. If ever anyone needed cause for capitol punishment, those kids

Wynette, meanwhile, ended her set by leaving the stage and walking among her personal gratification while singing "Stand By Your Man" with a gusto unmatched by any of her previous num-

BUT IF WYNETTE slowed the tempo, those crazy Statler Brothers - none of whom are named Statler and only two being actual brothers - brought the tone back to pure fun. Offering short stretches of musical time travel, they took us back to the days of Randolph Scott and the "Class Of '57" - and spent the rest of the time laughing.

Their stage demeanor is hilarious and indeed, even though harmony is their forte, the comedy seemed to dominate cared if there weren't that many songs.

But what the heck, right? Nobody Everyone enjoyed the banter, the sex references and the Nixonesque jokes. And so when they sang songs like

"Sunday Morning" and "How Great Thou Art," well, that was just gravy. Wednesday's concert highlighted three of country music's top names and not one proved disappointing. Only if the show could have ditched its carnival atmosphere - what with vendors insultingly hawking programs (three kinds), Tshirts, binoculars, records, tapes and pictures and lying to the crowd about the reasons behind the late start could it have been more pleasing.

Country fans and the rest of Lubbock might want to remember that Saturday night will see Jim Owen bringing his critically acclaimed "Hank Williams" show to the Civic Center theater. The one-man show is in the same tradition as Hal Holbrook doing Mark Twain and James Whitmore doing Will Rogers. Sixteen Williams songs are included in the program. Tickets are on sale at Flipside Records and Luskey's Western Wear,

She was the first country music performer to purchase a $125,000 touring bus. After that event - with the thengovernor of Tennessee cutting the ribbon across the bus door -- every other major name performer in Nashville who owned a $100,000 bus revised their figures and started telling the news media their touring bus also cost $125,000.

Barbara Mandrell is still one of the most trend-setting and innovative performers on the country music scene today, and she is still the youngest member of the Grand Ole Opry.

In her teenage days of performing, she was smart enough to pay attention to those around her and to learn from the had the good fortune of being around was the incomparable Patsy Cline, who without a doubt is still my all-time favorite female country music performer.

Patsy Cline's recordings of "Walking After Midnight," "Crazy" (the Willie Nelson composition), "A Poor Man's Roses (Or a Rich Man's Gold)," or "He Called Me Baby" remains as fresh and modern sounding as when they were recorded in the early 1960s.

"LIKE EVERYONE ELSE, when I watched Patsy on stage I was spellbound by her voice," Barbara recalled recently after an Athens, Ga., show, "When you are backstage watching a performer like she was, you don't have time to absorb. You just enjoy.

Barbara said of Patsy who was killed in a 1963 plane crash. "I toured with her when I was 13. We had separate motel rooms, but Patsy took me under her wing, and she insisted I room with her We shared a double bed, and I'm quite a tosser and turner at night. I remember vividly the middle of one night when I awoke to hear Patsy say something about giving her some of the covers because I was all wrapped up in them.

"We would shop in the daytime together, and I would often do her hair because she didn't like the way some hairdressers did it. I especially remember riding in an auto with her, when she would start singing. The sound of her voice in the car was just as good as it sounded in the studio." Barbara re-

Many people who saw Patsy perform often remember the great amount of love she projected from the stage to her fans. "Every time I am on stage, it is an emotional experience," Barbara says of ANOTHER PERFORMER Barbara toured with when she was 13 was Johnny Cash. Barbara was asked to appear on the recent television series hosted by Cash, but could not because of being previously booked. When Cash put together his Christmas special, however, Barbara did work it into her schedule.

"I played the steel guitar at Johnny's request," she said. Also on that Christmas special, which Cash hated because the television network cut part of his closing hymn and also cut into the introduction of his family, Barbara sang a song entitled "It's A Beautiful Morning" from one of her recent albums

Last October in Nashville, Barbara stopped the ABC DOT records show when she sat on the edge of the Municipal Auditorium's stage, and sang her hit ballad, "That's What Friends Are For," while dozens of fans popped flash bulbs

The rendition and moment was so special, even the rest of the stars on the ABC DOT show like Roy Clark quit talking backstage and watched intently as Barbara held the audience spellbound, like her friend, Patsy Cline, used to do.

Local man finds success fighting giant Japanese Sumo wrestlers

More than 2,000 years ago two Sumo wrestlers met for a traditional ritual bout. The winner, according to ancient Japanese history, was awarded the

Today, the history-rich sport still is paramount in Japan, but the stakes played for aren't quite so high. However, the goal of Cal Martin of Lubbock seemed almost as important.

Martin, who is better known as "Araiwa" (Rock of Gibralter) in Japan, is believed to be the only caucasian ever to Sumo wrestle in Japan. And not

THE POPULARITY OF Sumo wrestling in Japan could be compared to football in the United States. But the comparison stops there. The size of the wrestlers ranges from an average weight of 360 pounds to as much as 420, according to Martin. And instead of beginning the contest with the flip of a coin and the kicking of a ball, the two competitors sit at opposite ends of a 20-foot elevated circle and stare at each other for about 30 minutes. Then, in the style of ages past, the two enter the circle and perform a number of religious rituals such as stomping the straw mat floor to ward off evil spirits and flapping their arms like birds to prove they have no weapons on them.

After the actual bout begins, anything goes. A wrestler can use karate, judo or any other means of physical punishment to force his opponent to touch any part of his body to the ground besides just the bottoms of his

MOST FIGHTS LAST only a couple of minutes, Martin said, and they are called off after 15 minutes if no one has touched the ground or been thrown from the arena. If the match is called the wrestlers go to their dressing rooms, and after a brief rest, they return to try again. No match ever ends in a tie. Martin said.

Martin first became interested in the sport on a dare from his dad, who was in the Air Force and stationed in Tokyo, Japan. After graduating from high school, the younger Martin went to visit his father and step-mother. While watching the sport on Japanese television, he commented to his dad, who was an avid Sumo fan of 20 years, that the sport didn't look too

So his Japanese stepmother arranged for him to visit one of the "stables," where the wrestlers train, for a go at Sumo himself.

At that time, the 17-year-old Martin weighed 200 pounds, and the wrestler he was pitted against was a 325-pound Japanese

To the surprise of perhaps everyone, including Martin, he knocked his opponent out of the arena on the first hit. After a few more attempts at Sumo, the stable boss was so impressed with him that he persuaded Martin to stay on a little longer than his month vacation to see if he would like

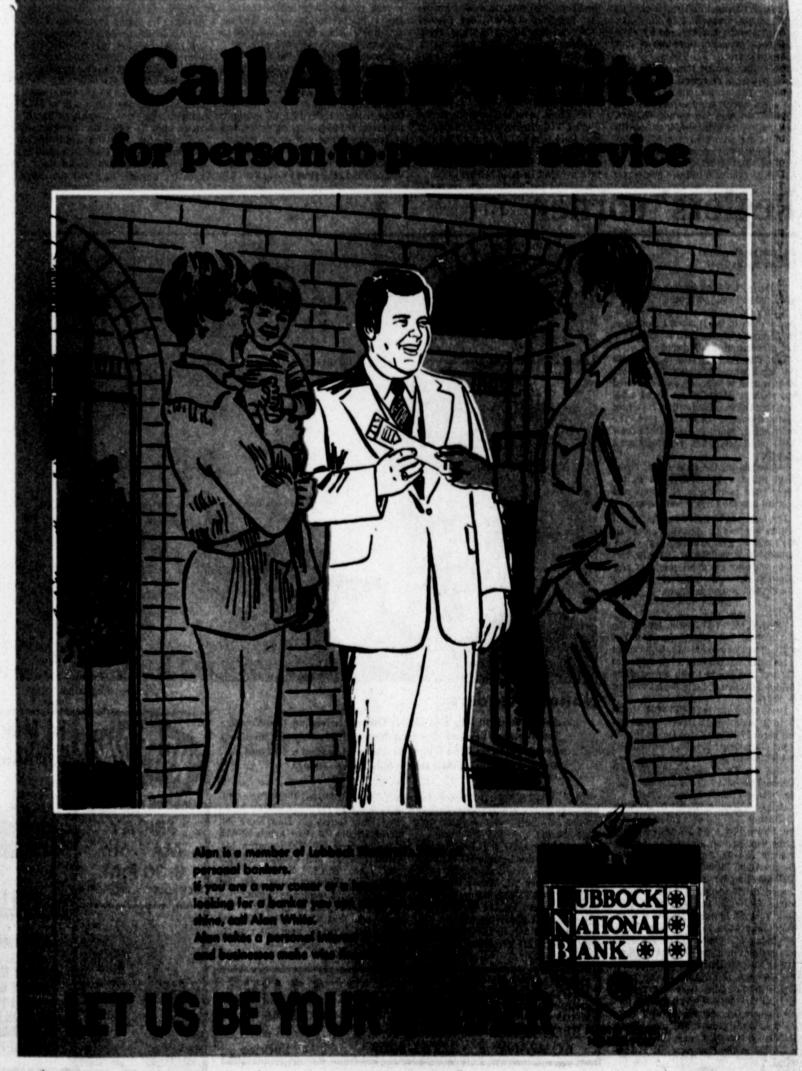

HIS EXTENSION IN Japan turned into 41/2 years. During that time, Martin put on 158 pounds and made his way up to the top three classes of the Sumo's 12 divisions. His rise to the top was a feat only 50 of the 1,600 Sumo wrestlers make and certainly was unheard of for an American.

For his efforts, Martin was presented three special awards by Emperor Hirohito of Japan, one of them for moving up to the top in the shortest length of time ever recorded.

Now, Martin is back in Lubbock and is glad to be in one piece. His days of Sumo wrestling are far behind, but he's assured of not being bored. Not only has he been busy losing the extra weight he put on for wrestling, he also is practicing his newest hobby, motorcycle racing.

LHS golfers get first state trip

Update Sports Staff

Lubbock High won its first-ever trip to the state golf tournament last week as the Westerners captured the Region I Class AAAA team title with a two-day

However, the LHS squad had to overcome adversity before winning the tourney. Lubbock golfer Tony Pitifer turned in an incorrect scorecard after the first day of play, and he was disqualified and his score disallowed

So the Westerners had to rely on the two-day totals of their four remaining golfers, while everybody else was taking the best four two-day totals out of five

However, LHS responded to the challenge on the tourney's second day. It passed San Angelo Central and El Paso Coronado, the first-day leaders at 295, with a 293 second-day total for a twoshot win over Central. After Central's 593 total came District

4-AAAA champion Plainview at 596. Although the pre-tourney favored Bulldogs did not win, they supplied the regional medalist, senior John Horne. Horne had a first-day 71 but came back with a five-under-par 66 for a 137 total and a three-shot victory. His score of 66 included three three-putts.

Finishing second individually was Lubbock's Mark Jarrett, who led the field after the first day with a 68. The Westerner all-district senior had a 72 for a 140 total and ended in a tie with Central junior Marshall Brown, who had rounds

Jarrett won the first playoff hole with a two-putt birdie on a par-five hole, while Brown three-putted

Other Lubbock High scores included all-district Mario Ramirez, 73-74-147; David Jennings, 74-70-144 and L.G. Flores, 83-77-160.

In Class AA action, Olney won the team title with a 639 total. Sonora qualified for a trip to the state tournament May 12-14 in Austin with a 643 total good enough for the runnerup spot.

In the individual competition, District 8-AA medalist Mickey Scott had rounds of 75-73 for a 148 total and a three-shot victory. The senior fired a 73 the second day despite a double-bogey and triplebogey to earn his third trip to the state

First-day leader Lonnie Rue of Olney ballooned to an 89 from his 72 for a 151 total and the runnerup spot.

Official power boat race slated

By Diane Hiloski Update Sports Staff

Motor boats are nothing new to Buffalo Springs Lake, but the West Texas Power Boat Association races are.

The club, which has 20 members, is in the process of reorganization, according to President Donald Brady, and will have its first American Power Boat Association (APBA) sanctioned race May

"We're really getting started," Brady said. "This should be a big year for us. We have four races scheduled this season; we only had three sanctioned races last year.'

Boats and drivers will come to Buffalo Springs from New Mexico, Colorado, Dallas, Houston and Waco to compete for trophies and prize money.

Some people just race for pleasure, Brady said, but others take the sport quite seriously. They haul their boat across the country to compete in a national racing circuit for their class of One boat from Lubbock, which is being sponsored jointly by the Navy and Evinrude Motors, will compete in such a circuit this year. The boat is capable of speeds up to 130 mph, according to Brady, and will be featured next month in "Power Boat Magazine."

But whether competing for fun or sports, power boat racing is a great sport for spectators, Brady said. And because the races are APBA sanctioned, both spectators on the shore and race participants are insured in case of accident. The club's other three races are scheduled for June 19, July 3 and tentatively, July 31. All the races, except July 3, will be run on the lower end of the lake. Drivers practice the day before the race. and Brady said anyone is welcome to come out to watch practice for the race. Anyone interested in the West Texas

Three city schools to send thinclads to meet at Austin

All that remains for local track teams is the state meet May 12-14, and three Lubbock schools will be represented.

Estacado won the AAA regional title Saturday at Odessa as the Matadors qualified both their sprint and mile relays along with three individuals.

Individually, Jimmy Smith will go in the mile run (he had a 4:35.8 Saturday) along with Sammy Sims (49.3) and Joseph Moore (49.9), who finished one-two in the 440 dash.

For Moore, it was his best time of the year. As for Sims, he says that he now looks forward to a rematch at Austin with Brazosport's David Shephard, who has been clocked at 48.6 this season. Sims won the title last year, while Shephard Coach Percy Hines was pleased with his Matadors. "All of our people ran better than they had before. We were a little disappointed in the hurdles, but Rufus Conner is just a junior, and he'll have another chance.

Conner had led the way locally, with a best time of 14.0, which ranked him statewide in the 120 high hurdles. However, he finished third in the region at 14.6. At Dunbar, Billy Hardaway will go to

Motorcyclists spin wheels on dirt of member's ranch

By Jack Douglas Update Staff Writer

George McMahan and his 64 club buddies relax by spinning their wheels - two to be exact - on the plentiful South Plains dirt.

All are members of Lubbock Trailriders Motorcycle Club, who gather with their two-wheeled machines at the club's 4,000-acre lease on a ranch about six miles south of Post. Jack Lott is owner of the ranch and also a club member.

McMahan, club president and a local cycle dealer, descibes most of the members as accomplished businessmen. He said club membership is kept at a limit of 65 to minimize motorbike traffic at the ranch.

The club, one of three in Lubbock, is not lacking members. According to McMahan, there are about 45 persons waiting to join the club and it sometimes takes as long as a year for a person's name to make the top of the list.

The club, which is chartered by the American Motorcycle Association (AMA), plays host to two enduros yearly, at which times Lott donates 51,000 additional acres to the one-day events, giving cyclists over 100 miles of terrain to compete on.

McMahan's club put on the AMA-sponsored national enduro April 3, one of 29 such contests in the nation and the only one held in the state.

The second enduro, scheduled for September, is a state event sponsored by the Texas State Championship Enduro Circuit.

Local club members cannot compete in either enduro but their families can, McMahan said.

He said members are needed to set up the two events. Over 500 competed in the national enduro and MaMahan estimated the same or more will compete in the September contest.

The circuit puts on 12 enduros yearly and, while competitors in the national contest must be members of AMA; anyone can participate in the state event.

McMahan said enduro riders are judged by their time, riding criteria and physical endurance. Besides trophy presentations, competitors vie for points. The person with the most points acquired at the end of the enduro circuit is named the national or state champion, depending on which events he competes

After 12 enduros held at the lease and a total of 600,000 miles of competing, McMahan said, the worst injury ever sustained in one fractured leg.

Enduro racing is not that dangerous if you watch what you are doing," he said. "Statistics show an en-duro competitor is a safer operator on the streets."

He said the club shows its gratitude to Post citizens for putting up with the cyclists by contributing to various civic organizations. He said the club donated $500 to the Post Community Center last year and $200 is given to the Red Cross each time there is an enduro for standing by with first aid.

The club had problems finding a place to ride when it started six years ago, McMahan said. He attributes this to people tending to identify all motorcyclists with the Hell's Angels type.

But the club managed to acquire the lease about six months after the club organized and have since gained the trust of Lott, his family and Post citizens.

It's not easy becoming a member of the dirt bike club. Members must live within a 50-mile radius of the city. A prospective member must fill out an application and have it signed by two active memb When his name comes up he is voted on and, if voted in, he is put on a six-month probation at the end of which another vote is taken. If he passes, McMahan said, he becomes a full member.

The club's bylaws have been changed recently to allow women to become members. However, there are no females in the club and McMahan said the only one who attempted to join was turned down. He said the club decided she would not fully participate in club activities.

The number of the new homes on the market has been reduced drastically. All the Lubbock builders are as busy as I've seen them, trying to get more new spec homes underway and completing the pre-sold homes.

The construction costs are rising very quickly and I really don't see how anyone could even come close to costing out a home to be built in three months. Brick has gone up along with labor in all phases. Lumber is still holding pretty close but we can expect it to increase from five to 10 per cent within the next three months

All of these cost increases I have mentioned will have to be reflected in the new homes that are underway now. Anytime we have a shortage of new homes, it causes the price of used homes to increase also because of the good old American system of supply and demand.

Lubbock has the fourth smallest unemployment in the nation and well below the seven per cent national average. Along with this, as well as more and more new people moving into our town, we are finding a large number of potential qualified buyers. It really doesn't make any difference how many buyers we have if we do not have enough houses. This will only make the prices of all housing, including apartments, increase at a rapid rate. I really have no answer for the situation. The builders are trying very hard to alleviate the problem by starting more houses. The situation is being further complicated by a lot of custom home buyers. We are going to have a good year if we can all keep up the pace and keep down the the appraisals are acceptable, and all in all I feel this is a very good time to buy or sell your home. A large number of used homes are selling at a good price. However, you must realize that no one is going to buy a piece of junk. So get it cleaned up, painted up, fixed up, and you can expect a good price for the property you have.

The Texas Real Estate Research Center reports that a record number of young families is entering the home ownership market for the first time. An estimated 40 per cent of the homes sold nationwide this year will be bought by individuals between 25 and 35 years of age. Three out of four of these purchases will involve an existing home. Almost one-half of those purchases will be made by renters joining the home ownership ranks for the first time. This uptrend in single-family activity should continue for the next several years.

Conventional home mortgage trend was mixed nationwide. The effective interest rates on loans closed for occupied. single-family homes declined to 9.08 per cent while the comparable rate for the purchase of newly built homes rose to rates averaged less in 1976 than in 1975 for both new and previously occup single-family homes. Short term inter rates are expected to ease downward for the next three or four months and then start rising. Long term rates are not exture or rise very much before the end of

"DIVORCES ARE MADE in heaven," said Oscar Wilde. (Though he lived before its heyday. Oscar must have had a presentiment about Hollywood!) Remember the column when I ran a line saying don't be surprised if Sonny and Cher should get it all on again once they settle the other parts of their highlyvisible domestic lives? Oh, you should have heard the pooh-pooh's that got.

Sonny and Cher just vacationed together in Palm Springs for a week even though they were staying in seperate places. (Sonny was in his P.S. home and Cher was at Mel Haver's Ingelside Inn.) For a few days, Sonny's girl Susie Coelho was with him, but once she split, the exhusband and wife, still a team and preparing for a concert tour, were together constantly. Sonny and Cher dined and danced romantically at Zelda's, the hot disco, and held hands three nights in a row at Melvin's restaurant in the inn. What do Sonny and Cher have in common? Well, years of wedlock in which he Svengalied, bullied and pushed here to stardom. (Cher is basically a relaxed, less frenetic type than the energetic Mr. Bono.) Likewise, they have a mutual adoration society going for their daughter, Chastity, whom they call "Chass." And then there is the pull of all that money to be made from appearing as a team rather than apart. Those seem like three mighty compelling reasons for possibly keeping

"that old feeling" still in your heart. SONNY & CHER P.S. Back in the Bonos' first "togetherness," I once traveled with them in a private plane for three days while they did concerts. It was quite an experience. They sat side by side on the plane holding hands. They were a better advertisement for marriage than the Richard Burtons, who at the time were models of marital bliss. Sonny and Cher did good works, too, and didn't want anyone to write about how they stopped at hospitals and orphanages and performed for free, thereby making themselves extremely admirable and likable. I was impressed by the way they personally tended to Chastity and didn't leave her with babysitters. After the experience of traveling with the Bonos, I was ready to write an article about the perfect marriage.

But something kept nagging at me and I could never write it. Why? Because down deep I felt sure this perfect couple was going to divorce any minute. Sure enough, they did and everyone was thus saved from large helpings of egg on face.

Hmmm-somehow I feel I just told you more about Sonny and Cher than any of us need to know. Sorry about that.

SAN ANDREAS FAULT: Joan Hackett, one of our best, has long resisted the lure of a TV series, but she capitulated to co-star, with "Rhoda's" David Groh in his new CBS "Any Day" show. This could be a winner, with its two compelling stars under the aegis of James Komack who gave us "Welcome Back Kotter" and 'Chico and the Man.'

Shirley Jones and Marty Ingels, the excomic who now induces stars to do commericals, will get married this summer. Marty's raking in $500,000 monthly in his new career: and he also books talent for the White House.

born in Orlando, Florida in 1904, Dr. Reams has spent most of his life as a researcher and consultant in nutrition and biochemistry.

By 1969, his reputation as a nutritional consultant had spread so widely, and demand for his services has grown so much, he had to cut short his planned retirement. He regularly receives visits from patients who fiv in from Africa, Australia, Korea, Japan, Germany, Spain, Italy, England, Ireland, Alaska, Canada, Mexico, Columbia, Uruguay, Brazil, Chile and other parts of the world. He also conducts frequent classes in biophysics and laymen who likewise come from all over the globe to learn from him.

In 1970 and 1971, Or. Reams tested and designed nutritional programs for over 24,000 patients. Over 10,000 of these patients were given up to die by their doctors, and yet, as Dr. Reams said, only 5 people out of those 10,000 terminally ill patients failed to respond to dier.

Dr. Reams wants readers to note that he is not engaged in the diagnosis or treatment of disease. He tells every patient who comes to him that: "I am a biophysicist and an ordained minister. I am not a medical doctor, nor do 1 claim to be one. All I am doing is giving you a diet for your specific body chemistry and teaching you the health message contained in the Bible."

Dr. Reams feels his techniques and inexpensive urinallysis may revolutionize medicine in the United States.

In other news: Senator Joseph McCarthy, 47, died of a severe case of hepatitis. The senator was a controversial figure in Congress because of his responsi-bilities in "Red-Hunting Campaigns."
