Carter linking detente to human rights in Russia

By R. GREGORY NOKES

BONN, West Germany (AP) — President Carter said Friday the prison sentence given Soviet dissident Anatoly F. Shcharansky has produced "a sadness the whole world feels" and linked the future of U.S.-Soviet detente to Moscow's respect for human rights.

The president, in a series of statements throughout the day in the West German capital, criticized the Soviet Union, saying it was once again violating its pledge to respect human rights.

"Our voice will not be stilled" in defense of people whose rights are being violated, the president said at an impromptu news conference with German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt after Shcharansky's sentence of 13 years at hard labor was announced.

"We are all sobered by this reminder that, so late in the 20th century, a person can be sent to jail simply for asserting his basic human rights," Carter said in a later statement.

Then, at a state dinner given in his honor, Carter declared: "Detente must include the ordering of solemn international agreements concerning human rights and a mutual effort to promote a climate in which these rights can flourish."

"Genuine detente also includes restraint in the use of military power and an end to the pursuit of unilateral advantage — as in Africa today," he said.

He said in a statement issued here by the White House that the message of the Shcharansky trial "is saddest of all for the Soviet people...who yearn like all others for peace and liberty, who have seen their own government pledge two years ago to respect those human rights and desires, and who now have seen that pledge broken once again."

"The struggle for human liberties is long and difficult, but it will be won," Carter said. "There is no power on earth that can long delay its progress."

After Carter declared at the news conference that his criticism of human rights violations would not be silenced, Schmidt, with the president at his side, told reporters: "I wholeheartedly agree with everything President Carter said."

Following a 2½-hour meeting with Schmidt, Carter traveled by motorcade in a limousine through the downtown section of this German capital to the 150-year-old rococo, pink stucco city hall where President John F. Kennedy spoke on June 26, 1963.

A crowd estimated by local authorities at 10,000, a figure which seemed inflated to some observers, filled the large and colorful cobblestone Market Square in front of the building. There were shouts of "Mr. Carter" and "Jimmy, Jimmy" when he moved through the crowd shaking hands.

Several persons held a large sign calling for disarmament.

Carter received his loudest applause when he declared "our security is your security and yours is ours."

Somewhat surprisingly to some observers, there was only light and scattered applause when Carter said Americans "share your aspirations and commitment for the peaceful reunification of all Germany."

On Saturday, Carter will travel to Berlin 110 miles inside East Germany to visit the Berlin Wall and conduct a so-called town meeting for about 1,000 Berliners. The economic summit Carter is attending begins here on Sunday. He returns to Washington on Monday.

Carter spoke to the crowd in English, but he ventured into German when he recited a phrase from "Ode to Joy," by Johann Schiller, the 18th century German poet: "All mankind will be brothers where thy gentle wing abides."

During his tour of downtown Bonn, a city of about 283,000, the president was accompanied by his wife, Rosalynn, and 10-year-old daughter Amy, who each signed the guest book at a city hall ceremony. Amy's blonde head was barely visible above the second-floor balcony railing as she remained at her father's side.

She is scheduled to tour the Berlin Zoo during her father's visit to the divided city.

Bowing of differences that do exist, Carter said: "I never met any other world leader more helpful to my comprehension of economic matters than Helmut Schmidt."

Solons term governor has-been, call his program 'illconceived'

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Two Democratic legislators agreed Friday that most of Gov. Dolph Briscoe's proposals to the special session are "illconceived" and should never have been submitted.

Sen. Lloyd Doggett of Austin and Rep. John Bryant of Dallas portrayed Briscoe as a governor whose political strength was sapped by his loss to Attorney General John Hill in the Democratic primary.

On the other hand, Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby's "stature has substantially increased," said Doggett.

Bryant said Hobby has been "the voice of reason in the midst of a lot of hysteria the last two weeks."

The legislators, both regarded as liberals, were interviewed on the weekly radio program, "Texas Weekly."

Bryant referred to Briscoe's tax relief proposals as "cosmetic phony... a complete waste of the taxpayers' money" and said "anything good that comes from this session will be as a result of good luck and not good planning."

Doggett said he was pleased that the House and Senate had approved proposals to eliminate the state sales tax on residential utilities and to raise the inheritance tax exemption from $25,000 to $200,000.

He said Briscoe's proposal to require a two-thirds vote of the Legislature to raise taxes, coupled with Speaker Bill Clayton's proposal to prohibit a corporate profits tax, "is to insure that we would keep the very regressive tax system that we have in Texas today."

Bryant said he thought he could guarantee the two-thirds proposal would not pass the House, adding, "That's an extreme proposal that was made, in my opinion, simply to dramatize Mr. Briscoe's position for his own aggrandizement."

He also said if Briscoe does not submit a tax reform proposal by Rep. Wayne Peveot, D-Orange, to the special session, "there's a substantial possibility" that all other tax relief proposals will be defeated.

Asked if anything might be adopted that would help the middle class or poor, Doggett said most of Briscoe's proposals "are going to help the higher income groups."

He said, "I don't think there's any science" to Briscoe's statement that his proposals would reduce an average family's taxes by approximately $550.

"The old Peveot bill... is the only real effort that has ever been made to address the problems of property taxpayers," said Bryant.

That bill died in the Senate in 1977. It centralized property appraisals for tax purposes at the county level, creating only 254 appraisal offices in place of about 3,000. It also provided machinery for the state to assure that similar pieces of property were appraised similarly across Texas.

Midland shopping center groundbreaking planned

Midland's long-awaited shopping center came a giant step closer to reality Friday, when developers of the center announced groundbreaking will be held here Sept. 12.

The announcement, by Melvin Simon and Associates of Indianapolis, Ind., should end months of speculation, rumors and worry that the prospective shopping center, located at FM 868 and Midkiff Road, would never come about.

David Samberg, assistant public relations director of Melvin Simon and Associates, said the shopping area of the new mall will encompass 750,000 square feet.

By comparison, the Winwood Mall in Odessa, is 480,000 square feet, according to a spokesman for that center.

Although three major department stores are now pegged to anchor the complex, there is a possibility that a fourth major department store will sign up to join the development in the near future, Samberg noted.

Small stores will occupy approximately 325,000 square feet of space at the new shopping center, Samberg added.

That center and one to be located at U.S. 80 West and Holiday Hill Road were approved simultaneously by the Midland City Council on Sept. 14, 1976, with the idea that "free enterprise would take its course" to determine which would prevail.

City officials have said they understand road access problems ended prospects for the west side center.

Municipal labor disputes spread; Louisville, Philadelphia hurting

By The Associated Press

Striking Cleveland policemen ended their walkout, the National Guard was sent into Louisville because of a firemen's strike and Philadelphia was left without the services of nearly 20,000 non-uniformed workers on Friday.

The strike in Cleveland ended moments after a state court judge had held the patrolmen in contempt for refusing a court order to return to work. Later Friday afternoon officers began returning to their regularly assigned duties.

The Louisville and Philadelphia disputes erupted Friday and stemmed from arguments over wages and other contract issues; the Cleveland police strike began Thursday night after Mayor Dennis J. Kucinich fired 13 officers who refused to start one-man, daytime foot patrols in high-crime housing projects.

Those 13 patrolmen were ordered back to the payroll for 14 days, and Judge Daniel O. Corrigan said that during the two-week period, the officers would be considered under suspension, which means no street duty for them.

During the walkout, there were reports of some criminal incidents, including an outbreak of vandalism with broken windows and some looting along a two-mile stretch of a west side business district.

Kucinich, 31, who faces a recall election next month, had asked Gov. James A. Rhodes for state assistance, but the governor's office said the National Guard will not be called out until all other possibilities have been exhausted. Guard observers were sent to the city to keep the governor up to date.

Mayor William Stansbury of Louisville, a city of 400,000, said more than 100 guardmen were sent to help protect the city, where nearly all 600 firefighters had walked off their jobs early Friday. The day before, the Kentucky Labor Relations Board found the city guilty of unfair labor practices in its negotiations with the firefighters.

A Guard spokesman, Col. Raymond Wallace, said about 80 guardmen would be sent to Louisville's 23 fire stations while the rest would remain on standby duty.

The firemen have not made their demands public. They now have an annual starting salary of $11,065 for a 56-hour week. The city's latest offer would give a fifth-year firefighter an increase of $1,200 a year.

Like the Louisville walkout, the Philadelphia strike involved a contract dispute. Some 19,000 blue-collar, clerical and professional city employees struck Friday while their union negotiators pondered a tentative contract settlement announced late Thursday night.

Judge rules all Abilene ballots must be counted in disputed vote

ABILENE, Texas (AP) — For West Texas imbibers, Friday's court ruling fell like gentle rain on a thirsty sponge, but nobody's breaking out the martini shakers just yet.

District Judge Don Lane ordered Taylor County Commissioners to recanvass "all" the ballots in Abilene's June 17 wet-dry election. Unofficial returns showed the Wets with a narrow 11,591-11,460 victory.

Last Monday, however, the commissioners involved themselves in a voting precinct dispute and tossed out more than 800 votes. The court also declared Abilene still dry to the astonishment of a packed courtroom.

This one-time West Texas cattle town has been dry since 1902. Those who indulge make frequent pilgrimages to nearby Impact and Buffalo Gap where they pay up to $8.60 for a case of cool ones.

Wet forces, calling themselves Update '78, asked for Friday's hearing, claiming the commissioners had no right to throw out any of the returns. Judge Lane agreed.

However, Buck Wood, attorney for Citizens for a Better Community (the Drys), said he will appeal Lane's ruling. Since Wood is allowed 10 days to file his motion, no court-ordered canvass is expected before the end of the month.

The controversy has done little to promote harmony in Abilene. Based on the commissioner's refusal to count all returns, book dealer Ben Ezzell lodged a civil rights complaint with the FBI.

Ezzell said his rights were violated and he requested indictments against County Judge Roy Skaggs and the commissioners. He said since a majority of the court wants Abilene to stay dry, "We feel that they would enjoy a long, enforced stay in a certified dry federal prison."

Skaggs conceded he has been deluged with calls from irate citizens mad about the court's refusal to canvass controversial Voting Box 19. He said the ballots were thrown out because the precinct boundaries "were in limbo" after annexation proceedings were implemented by the city last year and a precinct line automatically changed.

Camp ground death toll at 144 as four more die

TARRAGONA, Spain (AP) — The Health Ministry announced four more burn victims died Friday in Spanish hospitals, bringing to 144 the official death toll in the gas explosion at a camping site on the Mediterranean coast Tuesday.

It said 72 victims remained in Spanish hospitals, and about half had burns over more than 90 percent of their bodies and were near death. Their nationalities were not given. Most of the victims at the Los Alfaques camp were European tourists. No Americans were known to be involved in the tragedy that occurred when a truck loaded with propylene gas veered off a highway, caught fire and exploded, triggering a series of other explosions in vehicles at the camp crowded with vacationers.

The ministry reported 33 foreign tourists — 10 Belgians, 19 French and 4 Germans — had been evacuated to hospitals in their countries.

Latest bombing could lead to underground Puerto Rican group

By RICHARD T. PIENCIAC

NEW YORK (AP) — One hundred nine explosions came with-out warning, leaving death but few clues. The 116th, an accident, may lead to the terrorists who kill and maim in the name of Puerto Rican independence.

The accidental explosion of a pipe bombed police to a "super bomb factory" and left a suspected terrorist without his hands — the first person ever seized by police who is connected directly to the terrorist explosions. It may also have led them to another connection between an Episcopal church group and the FALN.

The FALN has called or left notes after each of the bombings over the last four years in government and private offices, stores and restaurants here, and in Washington, Chicago and Newark, N.J. The bombings have killed five persons and injured 75.

The recovery of 66 sticks of dynamite Wednesday in an apartment in the New York City borough of Queens was said by a police spokesman to be the "biggest haul of explosives ever recovered in New York City... a tremendous amount of explosives."

"They also found propane tanks and detonating caps," the spokesman said. "It was an actual super bomb factory."

Police found other clues that lead them to believe the terrorists have even more dynamite and a new FALN note warns they may use it this month. That does not leave much time to piece together the still little that is known about the small, secretive group.

It is believed to have cells in Chicago, New York and Washington and its suspected leader is Carlos Albert Torres, who is on the FBI's 10 Most Wanted list. In custody is the man whose hands were lost in the accidental blast. A police source said relatives identified him Friday as William Morales, 28, thought to be a leading FALN member.

Both men were volunteers for the Episcopal Church's Commission on Hispanic Affairs. Five other persons connected to that group have served jail terms for refusing to testify to grand juries about the FALN. Authorities believe the church group is an FALN front.

The FALN's bombings have come in spurts, and there have been only two major breaks in the case, both by accident. The latest was the discovery of the FALN hideout in Queens.

Six devices went off that same night, including three in closed stores. Three other bombs found at the Queens apartment — along with 66 sticks of dynamite,

Chilean government accuses priest of aiding enemy

By SHIRLEY CHRISTIAN

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — Beneath a banner headline proclaiming "Betrayal of the Fatherland," a hand pointed accusingly at a picture of a man wearing a priest's Roman collar.

El Cronista, official newspaper of the Chilean military government, went on to claim that Monsignor Cristian Precht was liable for up to five years in jail because the press inquiries desk of the organization he heads gave information to the enemy by answering telephone questions from Radio Moscow about families of persons who have disappeared since the military took over.

In subsequent days, the paper quoted a government official as saying Precht bore moral responsibility for the death of a former gov-

Power bid ousts Ford president

By DONALD WOUTAT

DETROIT (AP) — The sudden ouster of Lee Iacocca as Ford Motor Co. president was touched off by an escalating power struggle for control in the board room of the giant automaker.

But the fall of the one-time management star of the world's fourth largest industrial corporation appeared inevitable, given recent re-organizations and the fate of past seconds-in-command at Ford Motor.

There also were signs that personal friction had developed between Iacocca, 53, and Henry Ford II, chairman of the No. 2 automaker.

Neither man was available for direct comment.

The men apparently were referring to an April 1977 shakeup that established the triumvirate of Ford, Iacocca and Phillip Caldwell at the top of the company, with Caldwell vaulting over Iacocca to become second in command.

In June of this year, Caldwell's position was strengthened when he was made deputy chief executive officer. As part of that change, William Clay Ford, a brother of Henry's, was added to the ruling group and put in line to succeed Henry as chairman.

Caldwell, 58, thus stood to succeed Henry as chief executive officer in 1980 with William Clay Ford to become chairman in 1982. Iacocca was clearly out of the picture.

Iacocca, the marketing genius behind the 1964 introduction of the highly successful Mustang, will stay on the payroll until his 54th birthday on Oct. 15 to give him a bigger pension. But company insiders said he probably wouldn't be around much.

Already, plans for Iacocca to unveil in person the 1979 Mustang to automobile writers on Monday have been cancelled.

Iacocca's scheduled appearance indicated that the firing was "a blowup. It was not a carefully planned thing," guessed Arvid Jouppe, an auto analyst who is close to key Ford executives.

It also was apparently a surprise to Iacocca, who, in an interview on Wednesday, told the Detroit News, "I'm still here and as far as I know I intend to stay here for the foreseeable future." He said his duties were unchanged since the June shakeup.

Iacocca's departure was officially described as a resignation. But William Clay Ford, brother of Henry, said the board had voted to remove Iacocca "on the recommendation of my brother."

The New York Times, quoting a source familiar with a 30-minute discussion in which Ford told Iacocca of his ouster Thursday afternoon, said Iacocca asked, "What did I do wrong?" Ford replied, "I just don't like you," the newspaper said.

ernment security agent who had told the priest he feared assassination. It also suggested that the Roman Catholic Vicariate of Solidarity, of which Precht is vicar, may have outlived its usefulness.

The newspaper's campaign represents the latest battle between the rightist government of Gen. Augusto Pinochet and the vicariate.

The government claims the vicariate is a nest of communists. To many others, it is the only serious defender of human rights in Chile.

The vicariate was established 2½ years ago by Cardinal Raul Silva as the successor to the Pro-Peace Committee, which aided political prisoners after the military overthrew the late President Salvador Allende, a Socialist, in 1973.

Lawyers working for the committee and the vicariate filed more than 4,000 writs of habeas corpus — petitions to the courts for the immediate release of arrested persons — and defended about 1,000 prisoners before military tribunals.

Workshops were organized in prisons and detention camps where prisoners made handicrafts that the vicariate sold to provide income for their families.

With virtually all political prisoners now freed, the vicariate now runs dining rooms for the hungry — about 17,000 are fed daily in the Santiago area — medical and dental clinics, workshops for ex-prisoners and other jobless people, and generally helping the poor to cope.

It is also through the vicariate that the families of 615 Chileans said to have disappeared mysteriously in the hands of security police have kept their story before the world. Legislators and high-level government officials from many Western countries visit the vicariate for the latest information on the 615, who never have been accounted for on lists of the dead or imprisoned.

The vicariate has a paid staff of more than 150 persons, including a dozen priests and nuns. About 6,000 volunteers in the parishes help with the dining rooms.

Most of the financial support comes from outside Chile, from foundations and church groups such as the U.S. Catholic Conference and the World Council of Churches.

Monsignor Precht said in an interview that his concept of the vicariate is that it should incorporate human rights and justice into the social-action philosophy that the Chilean church has had for decades. The 1973 coup, he said, had a marked influence on the church in that respect.

"Even if the regime changes, the criteria of the church for future action are going to be, on one side, those who suffer, on the other, human rights."

Many of the people seen in the vicariate headquarters adjoining the Santiago cathedral are socialists or communists. The fact that the coup was a victory of the right over the left means that leftists form a large part of those coming in for help.

Precht said there are undoubtedly some Marxists among the vicariate's paid staff, but he added they are in a minority. He said people are hired without respect to their political pasts but anyone who practices politics within the organization is fired.

"There are persons who think that if one says there has to be justice in the country, he is a Marxist," he added. "Well, in this category fits anyone from the cardinal to the child baptized yesterday."

The 37-year-old monsignor comes from a prominent Christian Democratic family. He is close to former President Eduardo Frei, a Christian Democrat who led Chile before Allende's election in 1970. Precht also is close to Cardinal Silva.

Precht said that while the church's programs are politically non-partisan, it has a great moral power and must use it.

Dallas' oven-like heatwave kills 3, forecasters call for more of same DALLAS (AP)—The oven-like heat that has baked the Dallas-Fort Worth area for 13 straight days is no longer the subject of simple bickering by perspiring city dwellers. Now, it's deadly. Two men died Thursday and a woman was pronounced dead Friday morning. The Dallas County Medical Examiner's office said initial reports indicate all three deaths were a direct result, or prompted by, heat stroke.

Maria Gomez, 73, was admitted to a local hospital Thursday morning. By mid-afternoon the thermometer registered a blistering 102 degrees. Grover McDaniel, 42, was found unconscious behind a garbage dumpster about 3 p.m. Thursday. He died an hour later. Silverio Lopez, 35, was felled Monday, his first day on the job with a local pipeline company. He was admitted to a hospital and died about 12:15 p.m. Thursday. "I understand both of those men had been working outside at the time," said Mike Darst, a field agent with the medical examiner's office. "Mrs. Gomez had been in an air-conditioned apartment. God only knows how hot it was in there. She actually died from a heart condition, but it was brought on by the heat. If she had been in a cooler place, it may not have happened."

LA shrouded in smog blanket; city asked to curtail activities

LOS ANGELES (AP)—Hospitals treated increased numbers of patients with breathing problems, industries were asked to cut back and motorists were urged to drive only when necessary as severely polluted air hung over much of the Los Angeles metropolitan area Friday. James Birakos, deputy executive officer of the South Coast Air Quality Management District, said severe conditions probably would continue into Saturday but should improve by Sunday, mostly because there's less business and industrial activity on the weekends. However, Kaiser Medical Foundation spokesman Jim McBride said the group's medical center in the Fontana area reported "a significant increase in the number of patients complaining about breathing problems in the last few days." Exact figures were not available. Air quality officials issued a second-stage smog alert Friday afternoon for the western San Gabriel Valley. Similar alerts were likely in the eastern end of the valley and the Fontana and Upland areas, 50 miles east of downtown. A second-stage alert is called when concentrations of ozone, which is formed by chemical changes in nitrogen oxides and hydrocarbons, reach 3½ times the normal level. The final, third-stage, alert level probably will not be reached, Birakos said. That stage, he said, is "the equivalent of declaring a national holiday" and many businesses would be closed down. The current situation in Los Angeles, long considered synonymous with smog, is considered severe even by local standards.

The problem stems from an atmospheric inversion—a layer of warm air that keeps cooler air and smog trapped beneath it. The situation is worsened because the Los Angeles basin is ringed with mountains that trap the smog under the warm air and keep it from dispersing.

Housewife suspected in Winnie killings freed on $100,000 bond

BEAUMONT, Texas (AP)—Linda Mae Burnett, charged with capital murder in connection with the slaying of five members of a Winnie family, was freed on a reduced bond of $20,000 Friday and said she was "going home to fix my family some lunch."

State District Judge Larry Gist reduced the bond for Mrs. Burnett, a mother of three, from $100,000 after she pleaded innocent to the capital murder charges.

Gist also ordered a psychiatric examination for Ovide Joe Dugas Jr., charged with capital murder in the case, with her husband, Leo Burnett.

Mrs. Burnett declined to comment on the case but Burnett said publicity about the case had been hard on their three children, ages five, nine and 12.

Burnett said he had not discussed the case with his wife during his two visits with her in jail.

Jefferson County District Attorney James McGrath said the state agreed to the reduced bond "with great reluctance" and added he would oppose any move for a change of venue in the case.

Dugas, a 32-year-old refinery worker, once was married to Phillips' eldest daughter Mary. He was arrested last Saturday and on Sunday led off-cers to the shallow graves of the five family members in Jefferson County.

Authorities said the victims were abducted from their home at Winnie in Chambers County and transported to the grave site.

Gist ordered Dugas examined by two psychiatrists who will make an evaluation at a court hearing Aug. 25. The judge refused to reduce Dugas' $500,000 bond and he will remain in the county jail while undergoing the examinations.

A pre-trial hearing has been scheduled in September for Mrs. Burnett.

Student plane crashes into home; a family's dream turns to ashes

By TOM BALLANTYNE
Associated Press

EDITOR'S NOTE—After years of running a grocery store, Sam Gulle was preparing to move his family to a farm. Then a small plane practicing takeoffs and landings crashed into the house the Gullees were leaving in three weeks.

The family had just sold their house after years of running a successful small grocery in the friendly little neighborhood. They were buying a neat little farm at Meredith, about 50 miles away, and Gulle was there getting things ready for the move in three weeks.

Across the back fence of the Gulle home there was a similar peaceful family scene. Joe Corso, his son and his daughter were sitting around the kitchen table after dinner. Mrs. Corso was washing the dishes.

On the Tullamarine Freeway linking Melbourne's international airport with the city, taxi driver John Tyrell was driving toward the airport with two passengers.

At nearby Essendon Airport, Melbourne's main airport for light aircraft, a twin-engine plane taxied down the east-west runway on a training flight.

Aboard the red-and-white Italian Partenavia were Alan Clement Baskett, 40, Geoffrey Walker, 33, and Uwe Meinhardt, 36. They were practicing takeoffs and landings.

At 6:50 p.m., the plane rolled down the runway again, picking up speed as it headed for disaster. It quickly gained altitude, and taxi driver Tyrell glanced casually at it passing 180 feet above him.

The whine of the motors changed, and the nose of the plane dipped. Tyrell screamed frantically over his two-way radio that there was going to be a crash.

The plane tore through telephone lines and crashed into the roof of the Gulle home, killing all six occupants instantly as burning gasoline poured through the house. The plane kept going through the back yard, ripped through a small bungalow and a garage and slammed into the rear of the Corso house, finally stopping in the kitchen.

As fire erupted around them, Corso grabbed his son, daughter and wife and rushed them from the their home. They received minor injuries.

The TV news program continued. Before it ended, the newscaster was telling of the crash and its toll.

Meinhardt and Baskett, trapped in the wreckage of the plane, were cut loose 45 minutes later. Meinhardt survived a critical head injury. Baskett had minor injuries.

Walker was thrown clear of the wreck, also with minor injuries. Sam Gulle arrived 48 minutes after the crash.

MELBOURNE, Australia (AP)—Another working day had just ended in Melbourne, and the city was winding down.

In the sprawling suburb west of the city's airport for small planes, lights came on in comfortable brick homes as the sun began to drop over the horizon. The chill of the Australian winter evening began to seep in, and heaters were switched on.

It was 6:45 p.m. July 10, 1978. In the Gulle home at 55 Matthews Ave., Pauline Gulle, 30, sat with her family in the living room watching the news on the color television set.

With her were her four children—Michael, 12, Robert, 6, Sharon, 10, and month-old Graham asleep on a cot—and her 60-year-old mother, Margaret Toms.

The children's father, Sam Gulle, 34, was away.

glanced casually at it passing 180 feet above him.

The whine of the motors changed, and the nose of the plane dipped. Tyrell screamed frantically over his two-way radio that there was going to be a crash.

Yearbook nudie photo display is blocked by Houston U. chancellor

HOUSTON (AP)—A photo essay taken by a University of Houston professor of nude students will not appear as scheduled in the school's yearbook, central campus Chancellor Barry Munitz said Friday.

Members of the chancellor's office suggested, instead, the photos be shown in the university's galleries next fall.

The nude photo essay was compiled by Professor George Krause, specifically for the school's yearbook, The Houstonian.

"This number (20 photos) of this kind of photographs does not belong in a yearbook," Munitz said.

Taylor Publishing Co. of Dallas threatened to back out of its contract to publish the yearbook unless 12 of the photographs were removed.

The Student Publications Committee voted last Friday to print the yearbook with all the pictures.

Yearbook Editor Greg Stephens said he believes the project would have been approved if the university was not embroiled in other problems.

"At this point in time they feel it just wouldn't be good to have another problem," he said. "I understand. I just felt kind of bad because I spent a lot of time putting the book together. Having a part removed is like taking a part of you away."

Stephens said showing the photo essay in a gallery setting wouldn't be the same.

"The photographs wouldn't be bound between the covers of The Houstonian," he said.

HLPC seeking rate increase

HOUSTON (AP)—Houston Lighting and Power Company asked the Texas Public Utility Commission Friday to boost its overall electric rates 12.6 percent to provide $175 million in revenue.

The increase, if approved, would raise the average residential electric bill in Houston from $64.18 to $76.79.

Ytteb the Clown and her dog Marty will be conducting a special "Kids Krusade" next week at Gardens Assembly of God, 2901 W. Kansas Ave.

Vacation Bible schools planned at several churches next week

Vacation Bible schools are planned next week at several Midland churches.

Schools will include those at Crestview Baptist Church, Westside Church of Christ and Good Shepherd Lutheran Church.

Crestview Baptist Church, 3300 Thomas street at Midkiff Drive, will hold VBS sessions between 9 and 11:30 a.m. Monday through Friday. Eligible to attend are children who were 3 years old by last Sept. 1 on through children of sixth grade level. The daily classes will feature Bible study, mission stories, games, music and recreation. All children of the community are invited to attend.

A vacation Bible school for the entire family is planned at Westside Church of Christ on West Illinois avenue. Sessions will be held between 7:30 and 9 p.m. Monday through Thursday. Preceding each evening session will be a special "Bible drill" session from 7:15 to 7:30 p.m., led by Dr. Owen Cosgrove, minister of the Westside Church of Christ.

The family VBS will offer classes for the following: Cradle roll, toddlers, two-year-olds, three-year-olds, four-year-olds, five-year-olds, first graders, second graders, third graders, fourth graders, fifth and sixth graders, junior high students and senior high students. Adult classes will also be offered, with a different speaker each night.

Transportation to and from the VBS each evening may be arranged by dialing 694-3614, it was announced.

The Good Shepherd Lutheran Church, an affiliate of the Lutheran Church-Wisconsin Synod, will hold its Bible school in the Fannin Terrace Baptist Church at 2800 Mogford St.

The closing service of the VBS will be held at 7:30 p.m. Thursday, to which the public is invited. This will be an inspirational service presented by all children who have attended the Bible school. The Rev. Robert Neumann, pastor of Good Shepherd Lutheran Church, will deliver a brief message titled "A Very Special Gift." Theme of this year's school is "God's Great Love."

Reported measles cases drop to half last year's

By PEGGY WALSH

Associated Press Writer

ATLANTA (AP) —

The number of measles cases reported in the United States during the first six months of 1978 was less than half the number reported during the same period a year ago, the national Center for Disease Control said Friday.

In its Morbidity and Mortality Weekly Report, the CDC said preliminary figures for the 27-week period ending July 8 showed that 20,753 cases were reported, compared with 49,948 reported cases for the first six months of 1977.

The decrease was a continuation of the decline in cases reflected during the final 19-week reporting period in 1977, the CDC said.

Dr. Phillip Nieburg, a CDC epidemiologist, said scientists were not sure of exactly why the number of cases declined. But he said three factors could have contributed to the decrease.

"First, measles are always a periodic disease. You have some years where there are a lot of cases and some years where there are less," Nieburg said.

Secondly, he added, more doses of measles vaccine were distributed last year. And thirdly, Nieburg said, state governments "finally were making sure that school-age children are adequately vaccinated."

He cited an incident from Dec. 17, 1977, to Jan. 20, 1978, in which 40 cases of measles, mostly involving 10- to 14-year-old children, were reported in Buncombe County, N.C.

Nieburg said the CDC reviewed health records of children in the 50 county-operated schools and found that if the records had been "adequately reviewed," 27 of the 40 measles victims would have been identified as being inadequately protected against the disease.

He said of the 34,634 students checked, 12,996, or 38 percent, of them had no record of having measles or of being immunized against the disease.

Parents of those children were told they would have to provide written evidence that their children had been immunized against measles before the students were allowed to return to school.

The CDC's weekly report also said the preliminary number of cases for all of 1977 was 55,201, compared with 41,126 for the year before. This represents the third consecutive year in which there was an increase in the number of reported cases, the CDC said.

Revival begins Monday

The Church of God, 5300 Thomason Drive, will hold revival services next week.

Evangelist for the services will be Phillip Meadows of Houston. The revival will begin Monday and continue through July 23. Services will begin at 7:30 p.m. daily and will be open to the public. The services will feature special music.

Ytteb returns for Kids Crusade

Gardens Assembly of God, 2901 Kansas Ave., will stage its annual "Kids Krusade" next week.

The revival emphasis will begin Monday and continue through Friday with services scheduled for 7:15 p.m. daily, said the Rev. Paul Cox, host pastor.

Conducting the special services will be Ytteb the Gospel Clown and her dog Marty. Each service will feature stories, songs and special activities for young and old. Although geared to youth, the special ministry also will be of interest to adults. Ytteb the Gospel Clown has conducted similar services here in the past and has been invited back in response to popular demand, Pastor Cox said.

Ice cream supper and hymn-sing slated Sunday

First United Methodist Church is planning an old-fashion ice cream supper and hymn-sing Sunday evening.

The event will begin at 7:30 p.m. in the patio of the First UMC education building at North Baird and East Illinois streets. The gathering will involve all Sunday school classes of the church in some responsibility or other.

The gathering will feature special songs by children of the congregation and there will be solos, duets, trios and quartets by adult vocalists. Piano accompaniment will be provided by Carol Hall and Grace Williams. Hymn singing will be led by Glenn Woods.

The fellowship gathering will be open to all members of the congregation and other interested residents of the community. A nursery will be available for the care of infants and small children.

Kermit crusade in final planning

KERMIT—Final planning is under way here for the area-wide Crusade for Christ to be conducted in Kermit July 23-26 by widely-known evangelist James Robison and his team.

The crusade will have services beginning at 8 p.m. each day in Walton Stadium here, said the Rev. Bob Fagan, general chairman of the revival thrust. Services will be open to all interested persons in the Permian Basin area.

The dynamic Robison, who has been preaching since age 18, has led more than 400 evangelistic crusades from coast to coast, preaching to more than 7 million people. Robison has led several crusades in this area in the past, including two in Midland.

The upcoming Kermit crusade is sponsored by 10 local churches. Additional information on the evangelistic thrust is available from the local crusade headquarters, 586-3040.

Fellowship meeting today

The monthly fellowship meeting of the Midland chapter, Full Gospel Business Men's Fellowship International is scheduled for 7:30 p.m. today in Furr's Cafeteria, West Cuthbert avenue at North Midkiff Drive.

The meeting will be preceded by dinner beginning at 6:30 p.m.

Featured speakers at the meeting will be Jack and Frieda Sparks of Monday. They are pastors of the Believers Chapel, a non-denominational church in Monday.

Conflict over ordination of women heading toward splinter climax

By GEORGE W. CORNELL
AP Religion Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — A long-smoldering conflict in the Reformed Church in America over the ordination of women has veered suddenly into some unprecedented initiatives on the home front. In some cases, they're ordaining women without specific denominational authorization.

They claim they don't need it. Opponents insist it's required, and are launching a battle to enforce it. The confrontation has headed the draw-out, sometimes hairbreadth issue toward a possibly splintering climax.

"It could mean a split for us," says the Rev. Dr. Arie R. Brouwer, the new chief executive of the denomination, the oldest in America with a continuous ministry and with a tradition from the start of select, highly educated clergy.

"That doesn't mean a big schism," he added in an interview. But if the

GOP is having personnel trouble

DALLAS (AP) — Officials of Republican William P. Clements' campaign for governor say they have fired deputy campaign director Ernie Hernandez, who was in charge of Mexican-American voter recruitment.

But Hernandez says he resigned because he felt Clements was making only a token effort to attract minority voters.

A spokesman for Clements said Thursday that Hernandez was dismissed because of a personality conflict and the matter did not change the GOP nominee's commitment to woo Mexican-American voters.

Hernandez, who had been paid $1,500 a month by the Clements campaign, said, "They kept changing the emphasis of the Mexican-American program to a point where I felt it was going to be a token effort."

Jim Kane, Clements' campaign organization director, said, "Mr. Hernandez' idea of a token campaign and being hamstrung is a result of the fact that he wanted to do a number of things before budgets were worked out and approval given."

Film showing set for Sunday

"Cargo of the Silver Bird," a missions film, will be shown at 7 p.m. Sunday in the Foursquare Gospel Church, 415 Alta Ave. The film is new, recently having been released by the Foursquare Missions Department in Los Angeles, Calif.

"The film is the story of lost receiving the Gospel of Christ," a church spokesman said.

denomination's governing synod eventually upholds the local, custom-breaking ordinations as legal, "some people possibly may leave the church because of it."

This is what happened in the Episcopal Church after it began ordaining women this year, even though such ordinations were officially authorized — a step that has repeatedly, and narrowly, lost out in the Reformed Church.

"Some people simply got tired of waiting, and are not about to wait any more," Brouwer said. "So they're just going ahead. They argue that the book of church order doesn't have to be amended. But opinion about that is divided."

Although the denomination's governing synod declared in 1958 that there was no theological or Biblical reason not to ordain women, subsequent, repeated synod actions specifically failed to gain ratification by regional units, sometimes by a single vote.

Six times, over the years, the measure cleared the top governing body, only to fall short of the required two-thirds ratification by regional "classes" — a necessary 30 out of the 45 of them. Twice, it got 29, each time failing to get the 30th because of a tie vote in it, in California in 1975 and in the Seattle area in 1976.

In each instance, the measure lost because of a single person's vote.

In the 350,000-member denomination, whose Dutch origins go back to the New Amsterdam (New York) colony in 1628, such authorization has been strongly supported in its predominant eastern churches, with the opposition in the western churches.

"More than two-thirds of our members favor it, and do so unanimously in the eastern churches," Brouwer said. "But the ratio has just never come together in quite the right way."

Already, one woman, Valerie DeMarinus, was ordained June 25 by the Brooklyn "classis" and another, L'Anni Hill-Alto of Fairlawn, N. J., wife of a pastor there, was scheduled for ordination this month.

Opponents have filed judicial complaints, challenging the ecclesiastical validity of the ordinations without specific authorization. The protests go first to area "particular" synods before hitting the national general synod, probably next year.

Homeowners hurt by depreciation

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Not every homeowner knows it, but insurance companies often depreciate household contents before paying for losses after a fire or other disaster.

The State Insurance Board has taken steps, however, to allow a homeowner to avoid taking such a financial beating.

Insurance companies will be allowed to sell "replacement cost" coverage of household contents, charging extra for it, of course.

Jack Jones, head of the board's property insurance division, said it would be about three months before the new policy rider can be printed and a rate table issued.

"It will be optional. Anybody can write it," Jones said.

Kemper and St. Paul Insurance companies are writing such coverage in other states.

Kemper once filed a rate table with the board, tying the cost of replacement coverage of household goods to the insured value of the owner's house.

It showed the extra coverage on contents would be $35 if the house itself was a brick residence insured for $35,000.

Kemper also provided samples of normal depreciation showing, for instance, that a stereo would depreciate to nothing in 10 years, a television picture tube in four, a refrigerator in 15 years and wooden furniture in 15 years.

Elephant trainer loses his cool, with it his job

By ROBERT F. LEVEY
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Al Perry wears a haunted look. He doesn't smile easily. He knows he's chucked it out the window — the job he loved and held for nine years: trainer and keeper of the elephants at the National Zoo.

In the last year Perry has seen an elephant only a few times. He looks after zebras and gazelles these days. He is sorry, bitter, hurt and contrite. He hopes virtually around the clock for another chance with the animals he adores.

But he isn't going to get it, "not as long as I'm here," says Theodore Reed, the zoo director. The reason is that, one day in April 1977, Al Perry did exactly what a professional elephant trainer is not supposed to do.

He blew his cool. Perry was in a cage with Shanthi, the zoo's prized 3-year-old elephant from Sri Lanka, the beast who had been given to Amy Carter on behalf of America's children.

Perry wanted Shanthi to eat a meal. As elephants will, Shanthi had other ideas. So, for reasons Perry cannot fully explain even 14 months later, he flew into a rage and broke a glass bottle full of Shanthi's watery rice across the elephant's head.

The only casualty was Perry. He spent two weeks in a hospital recovering from deep gashes in his right hand.

When he returned to work, he was assigned to other large mammals and was told he would never again work with his floppy-eared friends.

Shortly afterward, the position of elephant keeper and trainer was formally abolished by zoo officials. Elephants are now tended on a rotating basis.

No keeper could have been closer to his animals than Perry was to the National Zoo's three elephants — Shanthi, Ambika and Nancy. In fact, Perry is the first to admit he grew too close.

Were the elephants moody? Perry would sleep beside them in their cages all night, on his own time. Were they getting too little attention? Perry would don a bathing suit and wash with them. Were they sick? Perry would nurse them with a dedication that bordered on the fanatic.

But when the elephants were balky, Perry admits he sometimes could not handle them — or himself. It tended to become a test of wills.

"I have a temper, oh, yes," Perry says. "And occasionally, when they weren't doing what I said, I lost it."

In 1970 he lost it in public and beat one elephant several times with a long stick with a prong on the end of it. A tourist was taking home movies at the time and later turned the film over to the Washington Humane Society.

Society officials protested, and Perry was ordered to undergo psychiatric evaluation. He did, and he was restored to his position.

In 1973 a similar incident took place, again involving an elephant hook. Perry was suspended for 30 days but again was allowed to return. After the 1977 incident Reed and other zoo officials ran out of patience.

Perry's transfer has nearly crushed him. "They (the elephants) meant so much to me. The job meant so much to me," said Perry, a short, slim 55-year-old with a flowing red beard.

"It's been humiliating. They (zoo officials) know what it's done to me. They know how bitter and resentful and full of hate I am. My morale is shot."

In one way, zoo officials disagree. Perry, who has spent 16 years on the zoo staff, "has been doing a good job for the last year (or since his transfer)," zoo director Reed said. "And in a way, I have protected him. I can name three or four zoos he would have been fired from in half an hour."

But "Al simply could not control himself," Reed said. "I thought Al was salvageable, and apparently he wasn't. . . Al wanted it set up so he was the only one who had contact with the elephants. That's a prima donna problem, and we can't have prima donnas. I have all the sympathy in the world for Al, but I'm just not going to trust a man who can't control himself."

Christine Stevens, a former board member of the Washington Humane Society and the woman who spearheaded the 1970 grievance against Perry, is even stronger in her criticism. "He should be completely removed from contact with animals," she said.

To meet Al Perry, or to see him in action with animals most of the time, would make one wonder if Reed and Stevens weren't talking about a different person.

Shy and soft-spoken, a gentle bachelor of simple tastes, a nonsmoker who square dances and jogs a mile a day, Perry grew up around animals near Bristol, Va. He has spent much of his adult life with them, first as a caretaker for the National Institutes of Health, later with the zoo.

But around the zoo Perry has sometimes seemed to be an odd man out. For example, just after being appointed elephant keeper in 1968, he was sent to St. Louis for training. He insisted on staying with relatives and refused to accept the government's per-diem pay for living expenses.

In 1976 Reed and other zoo officials decided to sell Dzimbo, an aging and sometimes troublesome elephant, to an amusement park in Florida. Because he vehemently disagreed with the decision, Perry refused to accept a $100 fee zoo officials offered him for his part in preparing Dzimbo for shipment.

Perry says he has thought about quitting.

"but people are not eager to hire 55-year-olds." Besides, his $18,000-a-year salary is far above what another zoo or a circus would pay him. "And I'm established in Washington," Perry said.

But perhaps the strongest reason for staying is that, Perry can sneak a visit with his old friends.

"Oh, yes, I've done it a couple of times," he said. "And they know me! One day — the regular man that day was sick — they asked me to bathe the baby and give her her hay. She ignored the hay and took her trunk and started to smell me.

"That was when I broke up and had to leave."

Al Perry acknowledges that "I'm not blameless, I'm not guiltless. I just don't think I deserve what I've gotten. To think I'll never, never work with them again is hard to take."

Midland court order upheld by higher court

AUSTIN — The Texas Court of Criminal Appeals Wednesday upheld a Midland court order revoking the probation of Orba Chambliss.

Chambliss originally had been convicted of burglary and assessed a five-year probated sentence.

The probation revocation was based upon an incident in which it was alleged Chambliss robbed a man at knife-point of his watch and wallet.

United plans to buy 30 new Boeing jets

CHICAGO (AP) — United Airlines announced today it would purchase 30 of Boeing's 767 wide-bodied jets, becoming the first airline to order the only new American commercial jet design of the decade.

United, the nation's largest domestic airline, said it will spend $1.2 billion for the 30 jets, which have a range of 2,500 miles and will hold about 200 passengers.

United President Richard Ferris said the purchase will help usher in a new generation of jetliners. The Boeing design had been in competition for United's order with the European A-300 Airbus.

The announcement, which followed a meeting of United directors, also said the airline would buy 30 more Boeing 727-200s for $400 million. The 767 is a twin-engine jumbo jet priced at

Women's equality drive helps divorced fathers

By LEE MITGANG

NEW YORK (AP) — Divorced fathers are collecting a dividend from the drive for women's equality: They have started to demand and get child support payments.

Consider Allan S. Carter, a New York City school teacher in his late 30s. His former wife, Carolyn R. Carter, also in her 30s, was a New York City school secretary until she remarried and moved to Texas.

The father had custody of their one child, 7-year-old Kenneth.

Then, on July 25 of last year, a landmark ruling in New York State appeals court gave Carter something else — $25 a week for child support from his former wife, even though she no longer works.

The ruling said, in effect, that her ability to work obligated her to help with the expense of raising her son.

Such a ruling would have been almost unheard of a few years ago. Divorce laws in most states had always placed the financial burden of child-rearing on the father, unless he was physically or otherwise disabled.

But today, an increasing number of divorced men with children are being granted child support from their ex-wives. More and more, the important factor is which parent can best afford to pay for child-rearing, and less and less what sex that parent is.

Practically every state has adopted law changes in the past few years that make the financial support of children in divorce cases the responsibility of both parents, according to Dr. Doris Jonas Freed, chairman of the American Bar Association family law research committee.

And many feminist groups aren't at all sorry to concede this gain to divorced men. They say it is a fair price for divorced women to pay for the freedom to pursue careers that divorced men have always had.

The trend is difficult to measure, because lawyers are reluctant to talk about the confidential terms of divorce settlements. Certainly, the great majority of divorce settlements still require men to pay the child support.

But divorce lawyers and other family court officials around the country assert the trend is there.

"It's a clear movement, of recent origin, linked to the ERA (the proposed Equal Rights Amendment) and the whole process by which the former preference of women as the child's natural custodian has been held constitutionally unsound," says Joseph DuCanto, president of the American Academy of Matrimonial Lawyers, based in Chicago.

"Child support payments have been de-sexed," says Dr. Freed. "It's a phenomenon of the '70s but it's become increasingly true lately. I think this is definitely an outgrowth of so many more women in the workforce."

"It's no longer a matter of sex, it's a matter of dollars," says Philip F. Solomon, a past president of the matrimonial lawyers academy.

Dr. Freed also says 37 states now make provisions for alimony to be awarded to either the man or the woman.

This seeming role reversal, in which divorced fathers want a larger part in child-raising, and career-minded women are increasingly willing to grant it, so far is most noticeable in urbanized states such as California, Illinois and New York.

The federal government estimates there have been slightly more than one million divorces each year since 1975, and the number of children involved has been more than 1.1 million each year. Those figures are roughly double the levels of a decade earlier.

No one knows how many of those cases involved wives paying child support to the husband.

But in New York, for instance, following the Carter decision, there have been hundreds of cases in which men have won such claims from their divorced wives, according to Solomon.

A psychologist for the Chicago conciliation service described in general terms a recent case in which the wife, a corporate attorney, had an income about three times that of the husband.

The man was granted custody of the couple's two young children and is getting child support payments from his former wife.

"It worked out very well because daddy played what is characteristically described as mommy in the household," the Chicago psychologist says. "We're frequently seeing the whole business in divorced women of 'now I'm getting to do my thing,' and she is quite willing to give up the children."

The impetus for change in many states came when judges ruled old statutes unconstitutional, and not so much because advocates had lobbied in state legislatures. But feminist groups seeking the same career and family choices as divorced men did not oppose the changes. And a growing array of "men's lib" organizations, claiming divorce laws put an unfair financial strain on men, supported the revisions.

Such groups include Fathers United for Equal Rights, Male Equality Now, Inc., Men's Liberation, America's Society of Divorced Men, and the Committee for Fair Divorce & Alimony Laws.

"Men have begun to realize they can get custody of their children. I think the fact that the men's groups have been vocal has brought this along," she says.

And Susanne Duval of the Department of Health Education and Welfare's Office of Child Support Enforcement says, "Judges are awarding custody more and more to men. What follows is that women should have to help support the children. My own view as a feminist is that this is good."

Malawi President Banda unique in black Africa

By JAMES MACMANUS
The Manchester Guardian

Unlike most authoritarian leaders in Africa, President Hastings Kamuzu Banda of Malawi has remained more popular within his country than among his fellow rulers on the continent. Almost everything he has done for his 5.5 million people since independence in 1964 has infuriated the Organization of African Unity (OAU) and driven some former friendly neighbors to despair.

Banda, now in his late 70s, opened relations with South Africa in 1967, refused to break with Israel after the 1973 war as did other black African nations and has provided Taiwan with its only mission on the continent. His is the only OAU state to refuse all dealings with the eastern block while consistently advocating dialogue with the white south.

In a continent whose countries are largely grappling with various forms of socialism, Banda stands out as an unabashed, old-fashioned capitalist. He scorns traditional African wear, preferring the rather sinister ensemble of a charcoal-colored three-piece suit, a black Homburg hat and dark glasses. Although he works with extraordinary vigor to eradicate his country from the lists of the world's 25 poorest nations, a predilection for palaces has brought the erection of a sumptuous State House in the commercial capital of Blantyre with another on the way in the new capital of Lilongwe.

It is little wonder that Banda is regarded as part African heretic, part eccentric by his OAU colleagues. Perhaps most galling is the fact that while the Malawian leader has deliberately broken every rule in the political book, he has also managed to steer his small and resource impoverished country into an enviable economic position. Foreign exchange reserves stand at $95 million, and the Finance Ministry has no trouble raising loans on the European market. Last year a $25 million Euroloan was granted by bankers anxious to invest in Malawi.

There is no collateral for such loans, of course, because the country possesses no minerals. The economy is built on agricultural production and, to a lesser extent, tourism, which draws visitors to the scenic sporting attractions of Lake Malawi. The steady production and export of tea, tobacco and cotton fuels the economy. This coupled with Banda's insistence on the timely repayment of loans and the implementation of aid programs has made his nation a favorite in Africa or donor countries and the banking community.

Banda's appeal is that he runs his country much like a Victorian family estate. Hard work, thrift and obedience are the watchwords. Banda does not seem to mind that all this makes him very much a lost soul in Africa. But there is a price to be paid at home as well. Despite recent liberalization and cautious moves away from continental isolation, the whole thrust of government policies in Malawi has been to improve on the past rather than make political preparations for the future.

As one diplomat said: "In almost every speech, he (Banda) points back and says look what we have done, look at the future because that means succession and the president does not encourage talk of his departure."

Kamuzo Banda left his country on foot to become a migrant miner working in South Africa where he saved enough money to travel to America and become a doctor in 1937. He spent the war years and after working in England, then returned to Africa in 1958 to be detained, released and swept into power during the country's last real elections before independence.

The experience shaped a style of rule that drifts between paternalistic and dictatorial. He works hard to shield his people against the distractions of the outside world which he fears will disrupt national stability or threaten his own position.

Thus the local media has yet to mention the overthrow and death of the Ethiopian Emperor Haile Selassie or the coup that removed general Yakubu Gowon from Nigeria.

There is no sign that the less than even-handed approach to rural development has hurt presidential popularity or provided the basis for serious resistance within the country. Malawi is the only nation in Africa with an unarmed police force, and the small but disciplined army is rarely visible.

One reason for this is that the disparity between the rural masses and the elite has yet to achieve critical proportions. Both share a common and poor rural background and thus communication is maintained. The risk will come when the second generation of Malawians emerges from a relative prosperous background and loses touch with small farmers or fieldworkers in the countryside destroying the country's present social cohesion.

This does not mean that there is no opposition to Banda. During the journalists' travel throughout the territory, even missionary critics of the regime conceded that no politically effective opposition was functioning. Such sources said that for all Banda's autocratic ways he remains popular because the quality of life had steadily improved since independence.

Nyasaland, as Malawi was known in the days of the Central African Federation, was by far the smallest and poorest of the three states in that grouping. Southern Rhodesia and what is now Zambia seemed assured of a mineral-rich future while the orphan of the trio hardly looked capable of surviving on its own.

Banda has been even more determined than Zambia's President Kenneth Kaunda to take his young nation out of the Federation and he has pursued a different course ever since. Pan-African principles have not been allowed to interfere with his vision of progress and when no other support could be found to begin work on the new capital in the mid-1960s he turned to South Africa.

As a doctor, a non-smoker and non-drinker, Banda takes great care with his health and is unlikely to disappear as fast as much of black Africa might wish. Ironically, the real threat to his achievements lies less with his political enemies beyond Malawi's borders and more in the growing social polarization among his people. If that is the price of progress, it seems one that Banda is prepared to pay.

Keep trump control to prevent disaster

By ALFRED SHEINWOLD

When you have only four trumps you must often avoid ruffing in your own hand for fear of losing control of the play. If may pay to let an opponent take early tricks in a long suit, saving your own strength for later.

Opening lead — ♥ K

When West opens the king of hearts South must show the stuff he is made of. If South ruffs he cannot draw East's trumps; and then South cannot safely cash his long clubs. The winning technique is to discard a diamond on the king of hearts. When West continues with a heart, South must discard another low diamond. And when West proceeds with a third heart South should pitch a third diamond.

DUMMY TAKES OVER
Now dummy is ready to take over the defense against the hearts. If West leads a fourth heart, dummy can ruff with the king of spades. South still has his four trumps and can draw trumps without danger.

If West switches to a new suit, South can draw trumps and run the clubs. Either way South is safe.

As it happens, South loses nothing by discarding the three diamonds on the first three tricks. South was going to lose those diamonds sooner or later in any case. He could gain nothing by ruffing, but could lose the game and rubber by wasting a trump from his hand.

DAILY QUESTION
With both sides vulnerable, partner opens the bidding with one heart. The next player passes, and you hold: S A Q J 10 H None D A 8 3 2 C A Q J 10 2. What do you say?

ANSWER: Bid three clubs. It is unusual to make an immediate jump response with a void in partner's suit, but your hand is strong enough to suggest a slam nevertheless. If partner cannot support clubs or spades, you are willing to play the hand at notrump.

Exhibit to recall broadcast

NEW YORK (AP) — A one-of-a-kind collection of home entertainment memorabilia, spanning the 100 years from Thomas Edison's original tinfoil phonograph to the newest selectavision videocassette recorder, has embarked upon a nationwide tour as a salute to the broadcasting industry.

The traveling exhibition, culled from many sources by RCA, includes a model of that first phonograph that still works, a turn-of-the-century Victor-1 victrola with its eight-inch records and huge flowered horn, an early crystal set and a 1946 model of the first mass-produced television set, the 630-TS with its nine-inch picture tube.

NOTICE TO PARENTS OF ELEMENTARY PUPILS

The majority to minority pupil transfer policy provision is an important part of the desegregation plan of Midland elementary schools. This transfer policy allows eligible young children to attend the same school as older brothers and sisters in grades 4, 5, and 6. The majority to minority transfer policy states:

A primary level pupil (grades 1, 2, or 3) may transfer from a school in which the pupil's race or ethnic background is the majority to another school in the assigned elementary school cluster, serving the residence, in which the pupil's race is the minority. Transportation is provided by regularly scheduled bus routes which transport intermediate level pupils (grades 4, 5, and 6) within the elementary cluster.

Pupils in grades 1, 2, and 3 may transfer to another school in the elementary cluster when their race or ethnic background is a majority in the home school. Also, the race or ethnic background must be in a minority in the receiving school. Transportation is provided by regularly scheduled bus routes within the elementary cluster.

You may receive more information by contacting the principal of any elementary school. Application forms are available from any elementary school principal or may be obtained at the central administration office at 702 North "N" Street.

Health risk funds asked

WASHINGTON (AP) — A congressman wants to have all workers and their families who have been exposed to cancer-causing asbestos dust to be eligible for medical examinations at the expense of the government.

Rep. Fred Richmond, D-N.Y., introduced such legislation Thursday. He noted that medical researchers have found that shipyard employees and others who work with asbestos have a high rate of deadly diseases, including lung cancer.

Richmond's bill would allocate $55 million over three years to provide medical screening for those exposed to such substances not covered by private or public health care programs.
