

Dollar Dips As Inflation Plan Scoffed

LONDON (AP) — President Carter's new anti-inflation program was dismissed on world money markets Wednesday as too little, too late, and the dollar plunged to new lows in heavy selling.

Foreign exchange dealers said Carter's plan to limit wages and prices voluntarily was woefully inadequate to stem the dollar's 18-month decline.

"We had not expected much," commented one Swiss dealer, "but we had not expected so little."

In Moscow, the Soviet Union described Carter's program as "sharply limited," incapable of preventing a new slump in the American economy.

Gold bullion soared to record prices in typical reaction to the dollar's troubles.

Wins Some Praise

Despite the drubbing the dollar took on foreign exchanges, Carter's action won some praise.

West German government spokesman Klaus Boelling said the anti-inflation program was additional evidence of Carter's "strong determination to achieve the aim of effectively fighting inflation."

He said the plan was another contribution to realizing the pledges made at the Bonn economic summit last July, attended by Carter and the heads of other Western governments.

As the dollar fell to an all-time low fixing of 1.7820 marks and a record late rate of 1.7845 in Frankfurt, down from 1.8085 marks late Tuesday, Boelling denied the West German government shared market skepticism about the dollar's future.

"Fingers Crossed"

"We are keeping our fingers crossed," he said. "We have a wait-and-see attitude."

At European Common Market headquarters in Brussels, an economist, who declined to be named, said: "All measures to stabilize the economy have a positive effect, and this program will have a mid-term and long-term internal benefit for the U.S. economy."

Professor George Akelof of the London School of Economics, an American money expert, commented, "I don't see why the dollar is so low — it's a mystery to economists. The United States is now one of the cheapest countries in the world."

Despite their views, the dollar sank to record lows against the German mark, the Dutch guilder, Austrian schilling, Belgian franc, Danish and Norwegian kroner.

Falls In Tokyo

It also fell more than two yen in Tokyo to close at a postwar low of 180.20 yen. Dealers said trading volume was near an all-time peak, reaching $1.136 billion and the Central Bank of Japan had to buy more than $700 million to maintain the dollar at around 180 yen.

European state banks also were supporting the American currency.

"It is doubtful that the program is feasible under the current U.S. economic situation," one Tokyo dealer said of the Carter plan.

The dollar had opened at 182.30 yen Wednesday, but immediately after Carter's program was announced, active dollar selling began pushing it down.

Another Tokyo dealer said there was nothing in Carter's program effective

Carter Plan Hit By Bush, Hance

By SYLVIA TEAGUE, Avalanche-Journal Staff

ALTHOUGH they basically espouse the same Conservative doctrine, congressional opponents George Bush and Kent Hance continued to stress their few differences Wednesday night to gently shove voters stranded on the "fence."

Many of the differences which emerged at Wednesday night's forum, sponsored by the Society for the Advancement of Management, were not new.

The two again debated whether a Democrat or a Republican can be more effective in Congress, whether Bush is trying to buy the election and whether Hance can better represent the 19th District having lived here all of his life, in contrast to Bush who has lived in the district only four years as an adult.

Both candidates, however, agreed in their opposition to President Carter's announced plan to fight inflation through voluntary wage and price guidelines, but the two disagreed on why.

Political Ploy Seen

Bush, a 32-year-old Midland oil producer, echoed the national Republican response that the timing of the announcement less than two weeks before the general election made it suspect as a political ploy.

"If he was really committed to fighting inflation, why wait until 12 days before the election?" Bush asked.

The Republican candidate contended that Carter was exerting his influence on the congressional race, adding that it didn't matter when the president's popularity was at a low ebb, but his influence was a different matter now that his image has improved.

Bush blasted Carter for not "taking a tough stand with Congress" to see that legislation which would have cut the national budget was passed.

Controls Foreseen

The voluntary wage and price guideline program initiated by Carter is "headed toward wage and price controls," Bush said.

Hance denied Carter was in any way involved in the congressional race and said, "I did not seek his help when he was unpopular and I'm not going to seek his help when he's popular."

On Carter's attack on inflation, Hance said he would "rather have voluntary and mandatory price controls." The Democrat then blamed former President Nixon's institutions of mandatory controls for the current spiral of inflation.

"The best thing that can be done is to get the budget balanced," Hance said.

The one-term state senator said he favors a constitutional amendment requiring a balanced federal budget and an amendment to the appropriations bill requiring an across the board budget cut of a certain amount which would balance the federal budget within two years.

Bush laid much of the blame for the current inflation "at the feet of the House of Representatives" which he said has not attempted to slow down the rate of government spending.

Bush discounted the argument that de-regulation of oil and gas will cost the consumer.

Candidates Support Proposal For Student As Tech Regent

By PAULA TILKER, Avalanche-Journal Staff

FEW NEW issues and only one surprise emerged during an hour-long political forum by local legislative candidates Wednesday night.

The Texas Tech student audience, which numbered about 30 at the beginning of the six candidates' remarks but rapidly dwindled to 15, heard all candidates support having a voting student representative on the Texas Tech Board of Regents.

That was the only fresh idea to emerge Wednesday as the 75-A District and District 75-B representative candidates and the 28th senatorial candidates met together for one of the last times before the Nov. 7 election.

Fort Worth Gets Crickets Parcel Post

FORT WORTH (UPI) — Although thousands of crickets already call Fort Worth home, the city council has voted to buy more of the noisy, black insects.

The council members even ignored the home-grown variety. The 250,000 new crickets will be mailed parcel post from Michigan.

The crickets will be used to feed reptiles, birds and lizards at the Fort Worth Zoo. In years past, the crickets were obtained locally and paid for by funds already allotted for zoo food.

"But the local man is no longer in business," said assistant zoo director Dudley Brown. "So we had to advertise for bids."

A Michigan company was the low bidder at $1.547. The crickets will be shipped in weekly lots for the next year.

Anti-Inflation Chief Named By Carter

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter won unexpected, though conditional, support for his new anti-inflation program from the Teamsters union Wednesday while Republican critics were already predicting the program would fail.

On the day after Carter disclosed his long-awaited program, most labor leaders remained silent, business executives lent selective support and reaction from Capitol Hill varied from strong endorsement to adamant opposition.

Meanwhile, Carter, as expected, named Alfred E. Kahn, head of the Civil Aeronautics Board, to oversee the program which is aimed at holding wage and benefit increases to 7 percent and price increases to roughly 5.75 percent in 1979.

Carter Praises Kahn

Carter applauded Kahn's work at the CAB and said the administration's new program "will be a good opportunity for the government and private sector to work in harmony."

Kahn said that if the president's program fails, it will lead to "ever tighter fiscal and monetary restraints" that could bring on a recession, or result in implementation of comprehensive mandatory wage and price controls.

"I will not be a party to a graceful transition to mandatory controls," said Kahn. "Will it work? It has to work," he said of the new program. Kahn was not permitted to answer questions at the press briefing.

Begins Immediately

Kahn's appointment as chairman of the Council on Wage and Price Stability does not need Senate confirmation, and he will begin the new job immediately. Staff and salary provisions have not been worked out. As Carter's chief adviser on inflation, Kahn takes over for Robert Strauss, who will continue in his job as special trade representative. Barry Bosworth will remain the executive director of the Council on Wage and Price Stability.

Press secretary Jody Powell said that by 11 a. m., the White House had received 1,300 telephone calls and telegrams about the president's speech, with about 60 percent supporting Carter.

Some For Controls

Powell said the largest number of opponents indicated they favored mandatory wage and price controls and that others said they opposed any controls whatsoever, including voluntary wage and price guidelines.

Earlier, Teamsters President Frank Fitzsimmons became the first top labor leader to comment on Carter's plan. Fitzsimmons issued a surprisingly conciliatory statement indicating the nation's largest union could support the president's program under two conditions.

They were two big conditions, however. Fitzsimmons called for presumably upward "adjustments" in the wage standard. And he asked for "tangible progress" in administration efforts to hold down price increases.

"If this program establishes some credibility on the price side and adjustments are made on the wage standard, I am sure that the 2 million Teamster members and their families will do their share to assist in resolving this difficult problem ...," Fitzsimmons said.

Administration officials expressed surprise and mild pleasure with Fitzsimmons' statement.

"That's pretty good," one official said, "unless he means adjusting the wage standard to 14 percent a year." The official declined to be identified publicly.

Fitzsimmons indicated Wednesday night on the MacNeil-Lehrer interview program on PBS that the adjustments he wanted might involve health care, pensions and other fringe benefits rather than simply bigger pay hikes. He declined to be specific about what wage standard would satisfy him.

Carter's chief economic adviser, Stuart Eizenstat, said on the same show that the administration would consider Fitzsimmons' suggestions for altering the program in the future but feels it is too soon to consider relaxing the wage standard less than 24 hours after it was announced.

Teacher Absenteeism In City Schools Up

By JEFF SOUTH, Avalanche-Journal Staff

FACULTY absenteeism is up, the number of available substitute teachers is down — and those two trends are causing problems for the Lubbock Independent School District.

Robert Knight, the district's personnel director, said his department at times this semester has been unable to find enough temporary staffers to fill in for all of the public-school teachers who are out sick.

So Knight said he is doing more advertising and taking other recruitment efforts to increase the pool of substitute teachers available to the school system.

Substitute Needs Increasing

Meanwhile, several school principals have been holding faculty meetings to stress to their teachers the need for good attendance.

"We are definitely short on substitutes. And as the year goes on, we expect the need for more substitutes to increase," Knight said.

The school district presently has only about 125 substitute teachers on file. (That number is deceiving. Many of them — such as retired teachers or university graduate students — are available only for a certain number of days or for certain days of the week.)

In contrast, the district in years past has been able to tap a pool of as many as 250 possible substitute teachers, Knight said.

Exceeding Last Year

The shortage of substitutes has been made even more acute by an increase in teacher absenteeism this fall. According to school officials, Superintendent Ed Irons reported at a recent administrative staff meeting that the district has experienced about 175 more teacher absences so far this term than for the same period last year.

For instance, for the first month of the 1978-79 school year, there were 529 absences among the city's 1,500 teachers. That compares with 422 absences during the first month of the previous school year.

"Initiative" referendum was not in it at that time," Short said, adding he would support such powers if the district's constituents wanted it.

Short also disputed Robbins' claim about out-of-district funding, saying his funding comes primarily from within the

Arsonist Tried Before, California Officials Say

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The arsonist who officials say started a brush fire that destroyed 95 homes apparently had tried before, but this time he found prime conditions, a county official said Wednesday.

A lighted cigarette, inserted into a matchbook, had been blamed for the 25,000-acre Agoura brush fire, largest of the 11 blazes that raged from Monday until Wednesday. Just 100 yards away from where the evidence was found, a similar device — perhaps two weeks old — was found, Undersheriff Sherman Block said.

"It appears the arsonist tried a couple of weeks ago to do the same thing," Block said. The device was probably thrown from a car on the nearby Ventura Freeway, he added.

The identity of the alleged arsonist is not known, authorities said.

The Agoura fire and the Mandeville Canyon blaze, both in the Santa Monica Mountains just west of Los Angeles, were contained by firefighters on Wednesday.

"We're not talking about someone cashing in on an insurance policy or covering up a burglary," said Block. "We're talking about a pyromaniac, someone who derives ego satisfaction or sexual gratification from setting fires or is just turned on by the magnitude of what they have wrought."

Block said about half of the 100 significant brushfires near Los Angeles each year are caused by arson. Hot, dry, windy weather tempts a pyromaniac, he said. They like it even better if there's another fire distracting firefighters.

That was the condition Monday when firefighters were tackling the Mandeville Canyon blaze that eventually burned 6,000 acres and damaged or destroyed 24 homes about 15 miles west of downtown Los Angeles. Two hours after that fire erupted, the firebug struck in Agoura, another 10 miles west. In the latter fire, 95 homes were destroyed along with another 75 structures.

"They are not just interested in setting fires," Block explained. "They want big, important fires. It's not fate when fires turn up when the brush is dry and winds are strong. That's when they set them. They don't want to set a fire nobody notices."

After the Agoura fire began, six more fires started 40 miles to the east in the San Gabriel Mountains. "We believe four or five of those were deliberately set," Block said.

Block said it is difficult to catch a pyromaniac, but sheriff's investigators have a list of known pyromaniacs and will question them.

Firefighters had the upper hand on two other large brush fires, the 5,600-acre Carbon blaze in Orange County and the 1,700-acre blaze in the Sierra Madre area in the mountains northeast of here. Neither burned any structures.

Front To Chill South Plains Again

Cold air spilled into Texas behind a front that moved through the Panhandle Wednesday triggering scattered showers from northeast through southcentral Texas.

Brisk winds of 15 to 20 miles per hour and gusting to near 30 swept through the Panhandle behind the front. While westerly winds and drier air improved conditions in rain-soaked southwest Texas.

Forecasters said rain likely will continue today in East Texas. South Texas and in the Panhandle. Highs in the upper 50s are expected, with the mercury dipping into the lower 40s by nightfall.

The 4 p.m. temperature extremes Wednesday ranged from 50 degrees at Dalhart to 87 degrees at McAllen in the lower Rio Grande Valley.

Travelers in Colorado were advised to use caution Wednesday as blowing drifting snow mixed with occasional snow flurries in the state's northeastern mountains and eastern foothills. Showers continued through the central portion of the nation, from eastern Texas into the Mississippi and Ohio valleys from Minnesota to Louisiana, and in Florida and parts of Georgia.

The forecast today is calling for scattered showers from New England through Delaware, across the Appalachians, the Great Lakes, the Ohio and Tennessee valleys and into the Gulf states.

Heart Victim Performs Rescue

OKLAHOMA CITY (UPI) — Despite his robust size, Episcopal minister Bill Saak does not physically exert himself any more. After open heart surgery, 18 months ago, even mowing the lawn is dangerous.

But witnesses to a Friday night car accident said Saak, 51, did a pretty good job of tearing a car apart with his bare hands to save the life of a 22-year-old Oklahoma City woman whose legs were pinned and her life threatened by fire.

Saak had just finished conducting a class at the All Souls Episcopal Church in northwestern Oklahoma City as part of his job as chaplain for the Episcopal Diocese of Oklahoma and was driving home.

According to police, a small compact car driven by Robin Pierce struck Saak's car from behind, rolled over and smashed into a tree. Flames erupted and spread along the ground, fed by leaking gasoline.

Saak picked up his car's mobile telephone and dialed the operator for help. Then, according to witnesses, he ran 250 feet to where the young woman was lying with her head on the floorboard and her legs pinned under the steering wheel.

With the chance of the car's exploding any minute, Saak and several other people unsuccessfully attempted to pry the car doors open.

Witnesses told police the priest pried his fingers between the glass and the door and just ripped out the window. Saak then climbed on the car roof and tore off the sunroof.

Kahn Sports Reputation As Inflation-Fighter

WASHINGTON (AP) — Alfred E. Kahn, named by President Carter as his new wage-price chief, already has won a reputation as the administration's best inflation fighter.

As chairman of the Civil Aeronautics Board for the past 16 months, Kahn has presided over sweeping changes in American aviation.

Under his leadership, the board has encouraged and approved a rash of discount air fares, and travelers are filling airplanes in record numbers.

All of this has had the approval of the president. No wonder. It's one bright spot in the war on inflation. With retail prices generally rising at an annual rate of nearly 10 percent, average air fares are lower than a year ago.

Carter selected Kahn for the CAB job because of Kahn's reputation as a specialist on deregulation. The president wanted someone who would promote competition and protect consumers.

For 30 years, the 61-year-old Kahn taught regulatory and antitrust economics at Cornell University and wrote "The Economics of Regulation," a study of the government's role in the regulation of private industry.

From 1974 to 1977, he headed New York State's Public Service Commission. He introduced time-of-day pricing to give breaks to electricity users during non-peak hours, and permitted competitors of the Bell telephone system to hook up to Bell's equipment.

Kahn at first refused the CAB job. He changed his mind after encouragement from both Carter and Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., a supporter of deregulation.

Once in the chairman's seat, he began sweeping the cobwebs from one of the most staid of the regulatory agencies. His aim was to make decision-making as rational as possible and to speed up the board's main task of setting rates and assigning routes.

Kahn selected top aides from among the sharpest critics of past CAB policies, and he put people on the inside who once tried to change the board from the outside.

Kahn immediately got behind the move in Congress to deregulate the airline industry. And he said once that was done he saw no further need for a Civil Aeronautics Board.

That turned a few heads in this city, where most bureaucrats strive constantly for expanded authority.

The chairman was not satisfied with the slow pace of Congress, so he began to deregulate the industry on his own, gaining support from other board members. His stated goal was to free the airlines from any government economic controls and to allow them to fly anywhere at any time and to charge any price.

Earlier this month, Congress finally agreed on a deregulation measure which will gradually phase out federal regulation of the airlines. President Carter signed the bill into law Tuesday.

One provision calls for the CAB to send Congress by Jan. 1, 1984, its recommendations on whether its life should be extended to handle international aviation matters, small community air service programs or agreements among airlines.

If Congress doesn't act within a year, those functions would be transferred to other federal departments and the CAB would be dissolved Jan. 1, 1985.

Throughout his term on the board, Kahn has displayed a keen intellect, a ready wit and a personable manner that tend to soothe the ruffled feathers of those who object to his ways of shaking things up.

As an award ceremony where he was honored guest began to wind down earlier this year, Kahn told his hosts he had to hurry off, explaining breezily: "I have to go back and destroy the airline industry."

At one meeting, where Kahn backed a low-fare policy for U.S.-British travel, a veteran CAB staff man warned: "You have just destroyed the North American fare structure." To which Kahn replied: "That's a good afternoon's work."

Another time, he irritably told representatives of Pan American World Airways to "go to hell." At the next board meeting he quipped that Pan Am had called to thank him for granting it an intriguing new route.

Wheelchair Dad Gives Daughter Ride To Class

DETROIT (UPI) — Glen Baumgarten and his daughter Kendra, 4, often stop to pick leaves and talk to pigeons on their way to her kindergarten class.

Often they are joined by onlookers who notice the unique way Baumgarten gives his daughter a ride to school.

"You'd be surprised the number of folks who look out for us," said Baumgarten. "They make sure nothing happens to us."

Baumgarten, 31, almost totally blind and confined to a wheelchair because of cerebral palsy, is finishing work on his master's degree in writing and American literature at Wayne State University.

Kendra sits in his lap on the four blocks to school. Baumgarten, who can see just well enough to make out shadows, operates the wheelchair with one hand, and holds Kendra with the other.

"I can't tell you how I envy people with heaters in their cars," said Baumgarten. "It gets kinda mean out there this time of year. I'm not looking forward to winter."

He said it is "always a thrill" crossing busy Woodward Avenue.

"You get halfway across and here comes the traffic," he said. "I'm trying to train Kendra when and where to cross the street. I keep telling her she should walk and hold my hand. We could go faster. But she says, 'I like to cuddle.' How can a man refuse that?"

Instead of writing a thesis for his advanced degree, Baumgarten chose the more difficult option of writing a novel entitled "Sugar, Spice and Snake Tails." It tells of the four-year battle waged by Baumgarten and his wife, Kathleen, for the right to adopt Kendra.

Kendra was left with them by a divorced friend who felt she couldn't cope with her infant daughter and earn a living.

"We tried not to get attached," he said, "but things happen."

They started adoption proceedings.

They lost their case in court the first time, Mrs. Baumgarten said, on the "recommendation of a social worker who never made a home study. She just decided on her own that we are not fit."

Mrs. Baumgarten also suffers from cerebral palsy.

"Kathy and I became engaged over a lot of parental objections," Baumgarten said. "We adopted Kendra over a lot of opposition. It's going to be the same story when I go looking for a job."

"The thing is, all your life you hear, 'You can't do this, you can't do that,'" he said. "People see your disabilities first, your abilities last."

"But some day, Kendra will have a little brother or sister, one of our own."

She's already asked about birds and bees," he said. "I thought I had a couple more years before we had to face that one."

AN EDITORIAL:

'Full Partner' Role Is Costly

REGARDLESS OF what the final judgment is by Israel and Egypt on the latest round of peace negotiations, one point emerging from the talks becomes more important every day.

That is, both Prime Minister Menachem Begin of Israel and President Anwar Sadat of Egypt look upon the U.S. as a "full partner" in whatever takes place.

And both either have been promised, or obviously have reason to expect huge outlays of American funds to help them implement the peace terms and what follows.

THE FIRST question many close observers asked when the "breakthrough" for a "framework for peace" was announced after Camp David was "How much is it going to cost the U.S.?"

It was a question ignored for the most part by the Carter people and others in on the negotiations.

However, within a few days, one part of the jigsaw puzzle began emerging. It was that the U.S. would finance the building of two new major air bases in the Negev to make up for the two Israel was giving up in the Sinai.

The tab has been variously set at from $100 million to $1 billion.

NOW COMES another slight shock. Israel also expects or has been told that the U.S. will pick up the cost of rehabilitating the thousands of Israeli residents of those dispute settlements.

Where they will be transferred, how and into what sort of living arrangement remains to be worked out. But, reports from Jerusalem leave no doubt but that the Israeli leaders again expect Washington to foot the bill.

It has been estimated in the "up to $4 billion or more range," with some figures on the overall U.S. expenditures in connection with the final peace pact soaring to $10 billion.

THOSE AREN'T small potatoes, even by international standards these days.

It is no secret, of course, that the U.S. policy in the Mideast has been to keep a stability, military and otherwise, through expenditure of huge sums of money, mostly in Israel's behalf.

Much of the military arsenal amassed by Israel has been loans and outright grants.

On the other side of the coin, Saudi Arabia has been doing the same thing for the Egyptians.

All of which might well prompt the question as to what use such funds have been, are being or will be put.

We believe Israel must keep a viable defensive posture, both geographically and militarily.

But, we also think that much of the money spent in the past on both sides of the disputed borders, could better have been spent improving the lot of the people—improving agriculture, education, health.

Hopefully, any future outlays will have this emphasis rather than on planes and tanks and rockets. Such "aid" can be used for only one purpose.

AN EDITORIAL:

A Cause For Celebration?

READY OR NOT, another bicentennial is coming up and it is every bit as momentous as the first, which marked the 200th anniversary of the Declaration of Independence.

Come 1987, we will begin celebrating two centuries of an epochally successful adventure in self-government.

In these latter days, it is generally and perhaps understandably overlooked that what was begun in 1776 was not brought to a satisfactory conclusion until 1787. The first even had a monopoly on the color and drama, the ringing of bells and defiance of George III.

In comparison, the drafting of the Constitution was a dry affair, a four-month proceeding which 19 of the appointed 65 delegates did not even bother to attend.

THE DOCUMENT it produced, however, still ranks as one of the political marvels of the age. Where the Declaration of Independence required the courage to rise to the challenge of the times, the Constitution called for vision to prepare for the challenges of a future that could be but dimly foreseen.

And that it did. Brief to the point of being terse, the original document is unique among most such basic laws of modern times in that it did not attempt to dot every i and cross every t in determining the structure and operation of the government it was establishing.

Consider that it was designed for a government which in its three branches initially consisted of a few hundred and today numbers its personnel in the millions. Yet it functions—albeit not to perfection.

CHIEF JUSTICE Warren Burger, taking note this week of both the occasion and the enormous expansion of the governmental apparatus, suggested that the bicentennial observance take the form of a nationwide discussion of the present and future roles of the three branches of government.

He would extend the proceedings over a three-year period—appropriate, inasmuch as the Constitution was submitted to the states in 1787 but not ratified until 1789—with an additional year devoted to analysis in detail of each of the branches.

There is time to prepare since nothing that occurred between 1776 and 1787—the squabbling among the literally sovereign states, the realization that they were not hanging together and thus very likely to hang separate—is the stuff of national celebration.

Considering where it started and where we've come, maybe Burger is right when he opines that "it's the least we can do."

M. STANTON EVANS:

Jeff The Giant-Killer Stalking Big Dribbler

WASHINGTON—Whatever happens in next month's election, New Jersey Senate candidate Jeffrey Bell is assured a place in the political history books.

With his dramatic upset of liberal incumbent Clifford Case in the Republican primary last June, the youthful Bell moved to the forefront of political speculation.

He proved that talk of a new conservatism is more than poll results and generalities—that it could be translated into a voting majority in the electoral marketplace.

Because he saw his opportunity and took it, he has secured a niche in our political folklore.

A NICHE, HOWEVER, is not what Bell is looking for; his objective is a seat in the U.S. Senate, and he is running a determined race in his attempt to get it.

His Democratic opponent is former New York Knickerbockers star Bill Bradley, long a basketball hero in the Garden State as a result of his tenure with the Knicks and his collegiate career at Princeton.

The conventional wisdom says Bell is a decided underdog, and that unquestionably is the way the race began. But, then, he was an underdog to Case.

Bell's major issue in the primary was his advocacy of the Kemp-Roth tax cut that would slash the rates on personal income by 33 percent across the board.

HIS FOCUS ON this issue in June gave him billing with the Jarvis-Gann amendment as proof that a serious tax revolt was brewing in the nation.

The problem of taxes and the need for serious tax reduction remain the staples of his political arsenal, and there are signs that they are beginning to make a dent in Bradley's armor.

One indication of this fact is the widespread acknowledge that, in their face to face encounters, Bell has come out ahead on points.

The observation emerges clearly from a write-up of one such meeting in Cherry Hill, published in the "Courier Post" of that community.

As reporter Dennis M. Culnan recounted it, Bell "walked into what was considered to be a Democratic lion's den...and walked out two hours later amid enthusiastic applause."

Even a Democratic officeholder conceded that Bell "came in here an underdog and leaves pretty much even with Bradley."

Other indices of growing Bell support include the assessment of the Hudson County "Jersey Journal" that his hammering on taxes has latent appeal for suburbanites and urban voters.

Concludes political writer Peter Weiss: "No one seriously thinks Bell is going to win New Jersey's cities, but he just might just do well enough in them to take the state."

ADD TO THESE developments the fact that Bell has recently picked up the endorsement of Jersey City's highest elected black official (and a Democrat), Corneilus Parker. Again, the tax issue, in the form of the Kemp-Roth reduction, proved decisive.

Parker explained that "the middle-income and poor people suffer from this (tax) burden more than others, both in the taxes they cannot afford and the jobs those taxes drive away."

Indicative of the fact that the Senate seat is considered winnable is the decision of the Republican Senatorial Committee to increase its support of Bell to more than $200,000—the largest amount provided to any non-incumbent Republican candidate—and the visit of former President Gerald Ford into the state to campaign in Bell's behalf.

Obviously, there are those who think that Jeff the giant-killer can repeat his triumph of last June in the November voting.

ROWLAND EVANS AND ROBERT NOVAK:

A World Gone MAD

WASHINGTON—Repudiating the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency (ACDA) and Paul Warnke, its ousted director, President Carter on Sept. 29 quietly signed Presidential Directive (PD) 41 ending 15 years of dangerous inattention to the role of civil defense as part of the strategic balance of power against the Soviet nuclear threat.

Carter's approval of the secret directive is given political importance by the White House beyond its pledge for a sizable boost to civil defense.

Lobbied hard by Zbigniew Brzezinski, Carter's national security aide, the new plan is also perceived as a vehicle to soften Senate opposition to SALT II, the new strategic arms limitation treaty expected to be signed later this year.

"What is imperative in selling SALT II," one administration official told us, "is to dispel suspicions among Senate skeptics that it points to future weakening of the U.S. strategic position across the board."

Questions about Carter administration defense policies in the post-SALT II period will figure heavily in the Senate treaty debate, certain to be prolonged and bitter.

For example, Henry Kissinger—whose views on SALT II could critically influence its fate in the Senate—has confided to key senators that his own position may depend on whether Carter can make a credible case for a strong strategic U.S. posture, including nuclear arms, in the post-SALT era.

Behind PD 41 may be Carter's hope of smoothing the way for SALT II.

But considering the long months of study in the Pentagon and NSC that preceded its adoption, PD 41 seems less aimed at SALT II than at correcting a grave deficiency in the U.S. strategic posture by raising civil defense annual spending from less than $100 million to almost $400 million.

THE SALT II palliatives are far more obvious. First, the ouster of Paul Warnke, controversial ACDA director and chief U.S. negotiator for SALT II.

Clearing Warnke out of ACDA before the Senate gets the new treaty was essential.

With Warnke as SALT II salesman, the prospect of the treaty being bought by the two-thirds majority needed for approval would have been negative.

Second, the surreptitious courtship by administration officials of Paul Nitze, probably the most rigorous proponent of U.S. strategic strength.

The White House is desperately eager to win Nitze's nod of approval for Warnke's successor.

The first serious White House effort to recruit a new ACDA boss who might meet the Nitze test failed when Brent Scowcroft, Brzezinski's predecessor as national security chief under Gerald Ford, turned it down.

RETIRED ARMY Lt. Gen. George Seignius Jr. is now under consideration.

The new civil defense directive stands on its own feet even though the administration hopes it will have marginal significance in the SALT II debate.

Its real importance lies in Carter's recognition that civil defense—population safeguards for survivability against a Soviet nuclear strike—must be counted as a factor in the U.S.-Soviet strategic balance.

That policy decision buries dreamlike arguments of the arms control lobby that nuclear war is unthinkable because both sides know they are mutually vulnerable to attack under what is called Mutual Assured Destruction (MAD).

The MAD theorists have now collided with hard facts made known to Jimmy Carter by reliable Central Intelligence Agency studies last summer.

ANNUAL CIVIL DEFENSE spending in the Soviet Union is at a rate of at least $2 billion and more than 100,000 full-time personnel are engaged in civil defense efforts to minimize the loss of human and industrial resources in case of attack.

In the words of the CIA's July analysis of Soviet civil defense, the Soviet government remains convinced that "civil defense contributes to war-fighting and war-survival capabilities."

The President's decision to set up the new Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) for civil defense and to give it nearly $2 billion over the next seven years is a commendable step, in no small part due to the bulldog determination of ex-McGovernite Democrat Bardyl Tirana.

With FEMA's birth, Tirana worked himself out of his job as the Defense Department's civil defense expert, but the legacy he left sets the U.S. on a new track from which there should be no retreat whatever happens to SALT II.

A now retired restaurateur gives some insight into the preparing of menus: "Monday's hamburger is Tuesday's chili is Wednesday's goulash is Thursday's hot dish is Friday's chef's choice."

JAY HARRIS:

Time To Rally?..

WHAT A difference a few months can make in the fortunes of a football team, the Stock Market or the life of a President.

Take the Texas Aggies, for instance. Well, maybe, we had better not.

You can say the same for the market. Wall Street has resembled one of those amusement park roller coasters this year. Those in and out of it have resembled something else.

And, take President Carter. He has a little longer lease on his job than a coach or a broker. But, the risks involved are just as great.

At a luncheon sponsored by Fort Worth civic organizations in June, President Carter acknowledged that "it grieves me at times not to be able to put forward a demonstration of accomplishment on crucial questions."

NOW, A BRIEF four months later, the President is acting like, well sort of a President. What happens in the future remains to be seen.

Because he had no place to go but up, that is where the man in the White House has gone in the ratings since that Texas talk. But, there's more to it than the image.

Since Fort Worth, Mr. Carter can point to a number of substantial accomplishments many observers had written off as lost. How "permanent" they turn out to be and what they mean to the U.S. and its citizens is still the $64 billion question.

The President's prime achievement was his coup at Camp David in working out "a framework for peace" in the Mideast. As we noted at the time, and events since have proved us correct, it was only a first step. The guns are still loaded in that volatile area of the world and much remains to be done.

On Capitol Hill, the President came up with some late, and controversial legislative victories, including civil service reform, a questionable Energy program, the disputed ERA extension. And he made two vetoes, the $37 billion weapons bill and $10.2 billion public works bill, stand up.

SOME OF THE President's success, if that is what it is, can be attributed to the logjam at the end of the Congressional session.

After all, lawmakers had to show the folks back home they had done something, what with elections coming up.

And some of the credit goes to a new approach on the part of the Carter team. The White House has resorted to more informal, yet high pressure tactics on key issues. Some might call it "personal persuasion," others old-fashioned arm twisting.

As Nov. 7 nears, the attitude toward the President may take on still another hue. It's a new ball game on several points—the Mideast, the Inflation front, the President's ability to deal with the Russians.

Mr. Carter is going to need all the good will he has accumulated in recent weeks to get support for his latest plan to fight inflation and to get approval of a SALT II agreement, provided he can hammer one out with Russia which won't leave the U.S. even more vulnerable than it already is.

BASED ON HIS latest plan to hold down the galloping cost of living, he may be in trouble already.

The voluntary program the President outlined Tuesday night has all sorts of bugs in it, from outright non-compliance to the feeling among millions that the real problem—heavy federal spending—is the real culprit and must be dealt with.

There are those, especially in the Carter-Demo camp, who argue that "the media has done the President in." The feeling among die-hard liberals and so-called moderates who back the President is that the media undercuts any popular support he might need to make his programs work.

We can't buy that, few Presidents in recent history, with the exception of John F. Kennedy, took office with so much outright media support, as well as gush and mush, as did Mr. Carter. If the cheers turned to jeers along the way, he has mostly himself to blame.

MUCH HAS been made of Mr. Carter's hard work, his attention to detail, his religious beliefs. Precisely because of these things, millions still see the "outsider" from Georgia as a sincere man who has tried to grasp the reins of the most powerful and provocative job in the world.

But, millions also have come to the conclusion that no matter the good intentions, the President basically is not big enough for the office. And again, much of this is his fault.

While exhibiting a rare boldness in bringing Prime Minister Menachem Begin and President Anwar Sadat to Camp David, the President has been wishy-washy on other matters of equal import. Mr. Carter has eroded confidence with his handling of the U.S. defense posture, his inaction on the Cruise Missile and Neutron warhead, and Rosalynn's personal involvement in the ERA controversy, his generally weak staff.

AND THE President has done himself and the nation a disservice with a foreign policy which raises grave questions in the minds of millions in the U.S. and abroad.

Most men in his shoes would have summarily fired UN Amb. Andrew Young months ago. Instead, the President recently told a group of black leaders that "as long as I am President, Andy Young will remain at the United Nations."

The administration's overall policy in Southern Africa, no matter its intent, in the final analysis plays into the hands of Russia and Cuba.

Despite such an analysis, shared by many others in this business we might add, most everyone we know would prefer the President succeed in his avowed mission to "turn things around."

Let's face it. If the President does good, at home and abroad, then we and the nation are better off. It's still not too late, but later than a lot of people in Washington think.

Maggot-Infested War Veteran Sparks Hospital Controversy

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — The Veterans Administration said Wednesday it will investigate a doctor's refusal to admit a maggot-infested transient to its Salt Lake hospital.

Robert Thornton, 55, spent several cold hours on the VA Hospital lawn in the pre-dawn hours Tuesday after Dr. Thom Mayer refused to admit him. Eventually, after a news photographer took Thornton's picture beneath a pine tree, he was cleaned up and admitted.

Hospital spokesman George Breitbeck said the incident was "definitely not typical" of hospital procedure, and he said an investigation will look into the reasons for Mayer's action. He said VA policy is "when in doubt, admit."

Breitbeck said Thornton, who lives on $97 a month, has been a patient at the hospital before. Mayer said he has spent considerable time cleaning up Thornton on previous occasions. He described Thornton's problem as one of hygiene.

Mayer said he didn't have a single-occupant room available when police brought Thornton to the hospital, and he feared if he placed Thornton in a larger ward, the hygiene problem could affect other patients.

Breitbeck said Thornton's medical and psychiatric condition was being evaluated and a social worker was trying to place the World War II veteran in the Salt Lake VA Nursing Home.

"We are trying to convince him that he has a problem and needs help," said Breitbeck.

He said after Thornton was brought in, he was given a bath. During the bath, he fainted and his heart stopped briefly, Mayer said. He was later listed in stable condition.

Police officers picked Thornton up when a citizen complained a drunk was sleeping under a freeway bridge. Officers found that Thornton had not been drinking, but was suffering from old frostbite wounds. He couldn't use crutches he needed to walk, said Officer Greg Smith, and his skin was raw and infested with maggots.

The police dispatcher tried to get the VA Hospital to accept Thornton, said Maj. Willie Stoler, but was turned down. The University of Utah Hospital refused because he was a recognized VA Hospital patient, he said.

Eventually, after paramedics were consulted and advised medical treatment, Smith decided to take Thornton to the hospital anyway, Stoler said. Gold Cross Ambulance declined to transport him because it would tie up its ambulance afterward for disinfecting. A paddy wagon took Thornton to the hospital.

After Mayer refused to accept him, officers accepted Thornton's advice to leave him propped under a tree until morning when someone would come out and help him.

"The officers were caught in a dilemma," said Stoler. "They could have arrested him, and the University of Utah Medical Center would have had to accept him. But he hadn't committed a crime, and if the officers faked one, they would be liable for a lawsuit."

Aged Refugee Finds Haven In City

NEW YORK (AP) — A 96-year-old man who apparently decided to head back to Italy after being harassed by vandals at his Pennsylvania home has been set up with a room, some companionship and a medical checkup in New York.

Domenico Rechichi had been found wandering near Kennedy Airport after taking a bus to New York from his home in Renovo, Pa. He was carrying $500 and bankbooks listing $20,000 in deposits.

Police introduced him to Steve Trimboli, director of the Italian Senior Citizens Center in the Elmhurst section of Queens, and Trimboli found a place for him at an old people's home.

On Wednesday Rechichi had a checkup and was found to be in good shape.

"His vital signs were perfect," said Trimboli.

Rechichi came to the United States in 1905 and worked as a maintenance man for the Pennsylvania Railroad, according to Trimboli. He became a naturalized citizen and lived alone in Renovo. He was displaced from his home in 1972 by a flood and relocated to another neighborhood, where he was harassed by young vandals, Trimboli said.

After busing to New York, he took a taxi to the Airport City Diner, where the owner took him in, gave him some coffee and called police.

Authorities in Lockhaven, Pa., said Rechichi had asked them for help in getting a passport and making a will because he wanted to leave his money to churches in Italy.

The Pennsylvania Department of the Aging said Rechichi had no relatives in the area.

"At least he'll be fed here, get three meals a day," said Trimboli. "He has a room and there are plenty of old people here. He'll get some conversation."

Hero Honored — After 81 Years

FORT MEADE, S.D. (AP) — Calvary Sgt. Albert Knaak rested in peace — but without due honor — for 81 years. The oversight was remedied Wednesday with a new gravestone.

Knaak, a Swiss immigrant, received the Congressional Medal of Honor, the nation's highest military award, in 1886 as a private while scouting against Indians in Arizona.

He was later transferred to Fort Meade, where he died in 1897. His simple grave marker bore no mention of the honor.

Twenty persons attended ceremonies in the Black Hills military cemetery, where 200 people are buried, as a gold-lettered marble marker was set in place with a 21-gun salute and the sound of taps in the distance.

Except for the military honor and the fact that he died when a horse fell on him, little is known about Knaak. His citation was discovered recently when military buff Bob Lee, editor of the weekly Sturgis Tribune, noted the award in old Army records.

"A lot of people came from Europe and joined the cavalry to escape problems from their own country. Many didn't have much history and didn't want to leave any," said Richard Williams, a local historian who spoke at the ceremonies.

Tucsonan Appointed As CAB Chairman

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter named a Tucson attorney Wednesday as chairman of the Civil Aeronautics Board, succeeding Alfred E. Kahn, tapped to head Carter's new anti-inflation program.

The new chairman, Marvin S. Cohen, backed Carter's presidential bid in 1976 and has been a member of the board less than a month.

The president's selection of Cohen was announced shortly after Kahn was named to the anti-inflation post.

Cohen, 46, a lawyer for 21 years, has been active in Democratic Party affairs in Arizona since 1956. Carter nominated him to a board vacancy last summer and the Senate confirmed him in September.

Cohen will preside over the CAB during a transitional period created by the new airline deregulation bill signed Tuesday by Carter. The bill gradually phases out the board's authority to regulate airline routes, fares and mergers and could lead to abolition of the board by 1985.

During his confirmation hearings, Cohen said he wouldn't hesitate to vote himself out of a job if airline deregulation works and the CAB is no longer needed.

Talks Under Way For Full U.S.-China Relations

TOKYO (AP) — China's senior vice premier, Teng Hsiao-ping, has disclosed that U.S.-China talks are now under way on the question of establishing full diplomatic relations between the two countries and that the only obstacle is Taiwan.

The statement in Tokyo from the third highest official on the Chinese mainland suggests that China may be the next big issue to preoccupy President Carter's administration. And to encourage this, the Chinese are dangling the carrot of expanding trade before the eyes of U.S. businessmen.

In Peking, Chinese Petroleum Minister Sung Chen-ming put it bluntly to visiting U.S. Energy Secretary James R. Schlesinger.

"There will be broader vistas for our cooperation in the field of energy if normalization of relations between China and the United States can be brought about at an early date as our two peoples have hoped for," Sung told Schlesinger on Tuesday.

American courtship of China reached fever heat in 1972, the year of Richard Nixon's historic Peking visit. It has reached a new high now after a series of ups and downs.

Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance got the administration off on the wrong foot during his visit in 1977, but the situation was redressed by Carter's national security adviser, Zbigniew Brzezinski, with a few choice barbs aimed at the Soviet Union.

The love affair bloomed with the visit of a high-powered official scientific delegation a few months ago and should improve even more with the impending visit of the U.S. agriculture secretary.

Trade is the key. With mounting U.S. trade deficits, the prospect of increased China trade is enticing. After an encouraging start it has faltered in recent years but is expected to reach a billion dollars at the end of 1978, a fraction of what some hope it will be.

Few American businessmen will fail to note Teng's exhortation to the Japanese midway through his eight-day super-salesmanship mission here to boost Sino-Japanese trade, not by $20 billion but quadruple that figure in the next decade or so.

The fact is, China is engaged in one of those awesome projects that only the Chinese seem to undertake: the transformation of their poor, backward country into a modern industrial and military power by the year 2000.

To succeed, it needs all the foreign help it can get and, as the petroleum minister said to Schlesinger, the United States leads the world in science and technology and China wants to learn from it.

Teng's statement that "the only hindrance" to "normalization" is the U.S. military and diplomatic link to Taiwan invites speculation that other issues either have been resolved or put on the shelf.

These include the question of compensation for U.S. property seized by China after the 1949 Communist takeover and the freeing of Chinese funds frozen by the United States in retaliation. The amount of money involved does not exceed $200 million.

Of greater psychological and political importance is the future of Taiwan if U.S. recognition is withdrawn, American troops are pulled out and the U.S.-Taiwan security treaty is abrogated.

There is widespread opinion in the United States that Taiwan's safety would not be jeopardized by these moves. Peking, over the years since 1972, has refused to promise it would not use force to recover Taiwan, which was China's 30th province.

Teng did not say what, if anything, had been decided on this score nor did he give a date for possible normalization.

In answer to a question, he said that since Nixon's visit "relations between the two countries have developed constantly and are continuing its development." He added that China is awaiting the American reaction to its Taiwan conditions.

Although it declines to tie its hands on the question of Taiwan, Peking repeatedly has made it clear it does not now contemplate the use of force to recover it. It encourages visits from Taiwan, says a peaceful solution can be found and adds that the problem can wait.

The Chinese attitude toward Korea, Teng told the reporters, is directed toward peaceful reunification. He said peace talks between the Communist north and the non-communist south should be encouraged, particularly since there now is an absence of tension on the Korean peninsula.

American Dollar, Despite Slippage, Still In Demand On Black Markets

WARSAW (AP) — "Change money, mister?" The U.S. Dollar may be the laughing stock of Western Europe, but in Communist countries the once-sturdy symbol of capitalism still commands respect on the area's only free exchange, the black market.

Americans who want to risk a stiff fine or imprisonment by using the services of the scores of black market dealers in Poland can get better than three times the official rate of 33 zlotys to the dollar.

In Romania, black market dealers offer better than double the tourist rate of 12 lei to the dollar. The tourist rate includes a bonus over the official rate of 4.70 lei to the dollar as part of the government's program of attracting foreign tourists.

The only Soviet bloc country where the dollar is considered second-string is East Germany, which links its currency on a one-to-one rate with the powerful West German mark.

Exchange rates in the Communist countries are pegged by government decree and are not subject to the wild fluctuations common in free-market societies.

The official rates for the Romanian currency against the dollar have not been adjusted since 1974.

"I usually carry dollars when I travel here," said one British businessman. "It's what they (the authorities) want to see."

Westerners who travel in Eastern Europe are frequent targets of black market money dealers, who usually hang around first-class hotels and restaurants that cater to foreigners.

Be they Romanians, Poles, Czechs or Hungarians, they all seem to know at least one phrase in English: "Change money, mister?"

American diplomats in Eastern European capitals strongly advise U.S. travelers to shun black marketeers. Trading with them is a crime, and prison sentences can run into several years, depending on the country and amount of money exchanged.

But diplomats admit privately that few foreigners are ever apprehended. And in some countries dealers operate so brazenly that they seem to have little fear of arrest.

Authorities in some Soviet bloc countries have been accused by Westerners of using the currency laws to expel or prosecute people who have run afoul of the regimes for other reasons.

American businessman Francis J. Crawford was convicted by a Soviet court of dealing on the illegal currency market, a charge he denied.

There was speculation in the West that his case was in retaliation for legal proceedings against two Soviet citizens later convicted of spying in the United States.

Part of the dollar's magic stems from the need for the currency to shop in special "hard currency" stores operated by governments throughout Eastern Europe. Goods are sold only against Western currency, and prices are quoted in dollars.

Since most international trade is in the American currency, Soviet bloc governments, whose currencies have little value beyond their borders, need dollars for purchases of oil from the Arabs, machinery from the West Germans or grain from the United States.

Citizens of Poland, East Germany, Czechoslovakia, Hungary and Bulgaria are allowed to hold foreign currency and may shop in the special stores, where goods generally are of a higher quality than in normal shops.

In Poland and elsewhere, for example, the owner of a Western car needs foreign currency to buy spare parts from state automobile clubs.

Would-be car owners can speed up by a matter of years the delivery time for new cars — including those produced domestically — if they play in "hard currency" such as dollars.

And Eastern Europeans need Western money to supplement the small allowances they can receive periodically from the state bank for travel to the West.

Kent Hance.

When Kent Hance began work in the Texas Senate, he did not sit on the sidelines like most freshman Senators. He sponsored legislation to remove a State Supreme Court Judge from office following his indictment for perjury. He led the fight in the Senate trial to impeach a District Judge from Duval County for misconduct in office. This was the first such trial in more than 30 years, and was the first major effort to clean up corruption in Duval County. He sponsored measures to remove the Senate's top employee for questionable conduct.

Wherever Kent Hance found waste in government, he acted. He sponsored and passed into law "sunset legislation" that abolishes state agencies on a periodic basis unless they are re-established by the legislature. This helps to keep agencies from getting out of hand, and to eliminate those that are no longer needed. He made welfare fraud or food stamp fraud a felony in Texas.

In his four-year term, Kent Hance never missed a day in the Senate's five sessions, regular and special. In four of those five sessions he didn't miss a vote. In the fifth, he had a 96% voting record.

In Congress, Kent Hance will continue this kind of representation where it is needed most... at the Federal level. Kent Hance has proved that when he sees evidence of corruption, waste or inefficiency in government he does not look the other way... HE ACTS. West Texas needs Kent Hance in Congress.

Let's make sure the man we send to Congress is the man with qualifications we can measure—and count on...!

Authorized by the Kent Hance for Congress Committee, Mike Higgins, Treasurer. 1203 Metro Tower, 1220 Broadway, Lubbock, Texas 79401. A copy of our report is filed with the Federal Election Commission.

Mayor Survives Veto

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — Mayor George Sullivan has been re-elected in a runoff after a campaign in which his veto of a gay-rights ordinance was a key issue. The election drew nearly 30 percent of the city's voters, three times the usual turnout.

Election officials said Sullivan received 16,458 votes Tuesday to 13,306 for Assemblyman Dave Rose, a margin too great to be affected by the absentee and challenged ballots.

CLEVELAND MONEY CRUNCH

CLEVELAND (AP) — City Council President George R. Forbes has warned police and fire union leaders that they won't be paid next Wednesday because the council will not approve a $3.8 million money transfer ordinance sought by the administration of Mayor Dennis J. Kucinich.

Police Seek Vehicle Burglars In Four Incidents

Car burglaries Wednesday were the major complaint of Lubbock citizens, with three persons telling police that someone broke into their vehicles and another man reporting that several items were stolen from the bed of his truck.

Bill K. Dollar of 4202 Meadowbrook Drive said whoever broke the left rear passenger window in his 1978 Chevrolet sedan, causing $75 damage, made off with $525 worth of clothing and a calculator. Dollar said the car was parked in the 1700 block of Fourth Street at the time of the burglary.

Bobbie Halifax said someone apparently used a wire coat hanger to unlock a door of her 1978 Oldsmobile while it was parked at Lubbock Inn, 4000 19th St., Tuesday night. The Odessa woman said a $200 CB radio, $450 sheepskin coat and a .22-caliber revolver were taken from the vehicle.

Linda Carol Huff said a $220 CB radio-8-track stereo unit and speakers were taken from her 1977 Chevrolet van while it was parked at her 3830 52nd St. home.

William Armes of 6404 24th St. told officers he noticed Wednesday that $126 worth of tools were missing from the bed of his Mazda pickup. Armes told officers he was not sure when the tools were taken but that he had noticed them still in the truck Monday afternoon.

In residential burglaries, Kenneth Kelley said he returned to his 2117 Second Place home about 3 p.m. Tuesday to discover the screen removed from an open living room window. Missing from the house, Kelley said, were $500 worth of tools and a $200 set of bongo drums.

Police Tuesday arrested a magazine salesman at a local motel in connection with an alleged rape attempt on an 18-year-old Lubbock woman.

The suspect, working for a company out of Jackson, Miss., was taken into custody about 8 p.m. Tuesday at a motel at 48th Street and Avenue Q. The arrest came after the victim said a man attempted to rape her about 3 p.m. Tuesday at her residence.

The woman said she invited the man in when he said he was trying to earn a scholarship by selling magazines. She told police the man began to make advances toward her, forced her onto a sofa and attempted to rape her.

Reports indicate the 28-year-old suspect tore off the woman's undergarments, but did not complete the sexual act. The victim said she called a friend for help after the man fled.

Police said they called motels known to be frequented by magazine salesmen and located the suspect several hours later at the scene of the arrest.

Answering an alarm about 1:44 Wednesday, police discovered that someone had driven a car into the Empire Pawn Shop at 1120 19th St. However, if the driver was attempting to get into the shop, he did not succeed, reports show.

The manager of the store, Charles Craig of 5223 Eighth St., estimated the damage to the building to be $750.

Margaret Jackson of 2115-C 51st St. said that in the past week items have been stolen from her residence, including a $25,000 warranty deed on Oklahoma property. She also reported missing a ring and a .38-caliber revolver.

Ed Williams Cass II, owner of the University Camera Center at 1405 University Ave., said a camera and lens, valued at $600, was stolen from one of his displays between 2:30 p.m. and 5:30 p.m. Tuesday.

Antibiotics Lawsuit Settled

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Justice Department announced Wednesday a British drug manufacturer has agreed to pay $1 million in fines to settle an 8-year-old antitrust suit that charged the company with restricting licensing patents on antibiotics.

The department said Beecham Group Ltd. of Middlesex, England, and a U.S. subsidiary, Beecham Inc., of Clifton, N.J., also will be prohibited from making any agreement that would prevent any other company from selling any prescription drug.

The settlement is subject to approval of a federal judge in Washington, D.C.

The civil suit also charged Bristol-Myers Co. of New York City with the same violations, but Bristol-Myers was not involved in Wednesday's settlement.

The companies were accused in 1970 of conspiring to restrain commerce in ampicillin and other widely used semisynthetic penicillins. The firms were also charged with fraudulently procuring and enforcing a patent on ampicillin.

The government said the Beecham Co. would also be required to take steps to introduce additional competition into the antibiotic market.

The government said the antitrust violations stemmed from a 1959 agreement between Beecham and Bristol-Myers that involved complex commercial arrangements.

The government said the two companies exchanged patent rights and information on the manufacture and marketing of semisynthetic penicillins. Bristol-Myers was given an exclusive license to sell the drugs in the United States. In return, the company agreed to pay royalties on bulk sales that were twice the royalties for such sales in dosage form. Beecham retained the right to sell the antibiotics in the United States only in dosage form.

The government noted that in 1974 Beecham introduced a new antibiotic called Amoxicillin, which it claimed to be preferable to Ampicillin. Amoxicillin is now being sold by eight major drug manufacturers, including Beecham and Bristol-Myers.

The government said it hoped its settlement Wednesday would promote competition in sale of the drugs. It also said it intended to prosecute its case against Bristol-Myers and "if successful, we would expect to get from Bristol whatever relief we did not get from Beecham."

One of the purposes of the settlement is to permit drug companies that purchase the antibiotics in bulk from Beecham to use the same trademark on antibiotics purchased from other manufacturers. The trademarks on the drugs were in many cases originally registered by Beecham.

Group Asks Sanctions On South Africa

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — The African group of 49 U.N. members asked Wednesday for an urgent meeting of the Security Council on what was described as "South Africa's defiance" of the council's Sept. 29 demand for U.N. supervision of spring pre-independence elections in Namibia.

The group chairman for October, Ambassador Artemon Simbananiye of Burundi, conveyed the request by letter to the council president for the month, French Ambassador Jacques Leprette.

The move came as five Western members of the council were promoting a deal with South Africa made in Pretoria last Wednesday whereby South Africa would hold its own elections in Namibia Dec. 4-8 as planned but would talk with a U.N. special representative about holding further elections, presumably under U.N. supervision.

The group agreed at a private meeting here Tuesday to go to the council. Ambassador Radha Krishna Ramphul of Mauritius, an African on the 15-nation council, told reporters afterward that the group wanted the council to meet by next Monday, condemn South Africa and impose economic sanctions on it.

Just before the group meeting, the South-West Africa People's Organization rejected the Pretoria deal in a letter from its president delivered to U.N. Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim by its U.N. observer, Theo-Ben Gurirab.

Carter Plans Another SALT Pact Try

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter, unwilling to give up hopes of completing a strategic arms limitation treaty by the end of the year, is planning to send Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance to Geneva next month for talks with Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko.

It will be the ninth round of negotiations between Vance and Gromyko in less than two years in the thus far faltering effort to complete the SALT pact limiting the deployment of new long-range bombers and intercontinental ballistic missiles until 1985.

Vance and Paul C. Warnke, the chief U.S. arms negotiator, reported to Carter at the White House on Tuesday night immediately after returning from Moscow where they were unable to complete the treaty despite the direct intervention of Soviet President Leonid I. Brezhnev.

It was tentatively decided at the meeting with Carter to arrange another round between U.S. and Soviet delegations headed by Vance and Gromyko in Geneva in about three weeks, according to a qualified source.

The U.S. official, asking not to be identified, said an announcement about the Vance-Gromyko meeting would be made here early next week.

The treaty would be signed at a summit meeting, probably in Washington, by Carter and Brezhnev. It would be a milestone in arms control and could serve to improve relations between the two superpowers.

Ratification by two-thirds of the U.S. Senate could be difficult for the administration to obtain. Opposition is expected from advocates of strong defense and critics of Moscow.

The Kremlin negotiations "cleared away" a number of problems, but several key issues remain unresolved, say U.S. officials, speaking privately. These include the kinds of limitations that would be imposed on the computer-guided U.S. cruise missiles and procedures for restricting other new missiles and bombers on each side.

While arms control is the goal, the administration has reached an understanding with the Soviets that the United States would be able to install one new land-based and one new submarine-launched missile system during the span of the treaty. The Soviets will have the same right.

The purpose is to go ahead with the mobile MX missile and a new Trident submarine missile. Other U.S. officials, declining to be identified, said Wednesday that the administration is expected to ask Congress for millions of dollars to move into full development of a mobile missile but to delay a decision on deploying it.

Meanwhile, a Soviet newspaper charged, Wednesday some elements in the United States are trying to impede the arms talks.

The newspaper Ivestia accused unnamed groups of "artificially tying up the SALT talks with other questions of Soviet-American relations."

PARIS (AP) — Six women who announce programs on the French television network have won a joint libel action against the French women's magazine "Marie Claire" and will receive symbolic damage awards of 25 cents. The article named none of the six women, but in convicting the magazine, the Paris court said the parallel drawn between the announcers on a television screen and prostitutes waiting for customers behind windows in Amsterdam's harbor quarter constituted a criminal libel.

Heart Disease Rate Declining In U.S.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Americans apparently are heeding advice to cut down dietary fats, smoking and blood pressure, but there is little hard evidence on how much this is responsible for declining heart disease death rates.

Heart disease experts meeting at the National Institutes of Health said Wednesday that they have "gut feelings" and indications that reducing these risk factors is at least partially responsible for the decrease in cardiovascular disease death rates.

But there has to be more to it than that, they add.

"It is clear we are doing something right in the United States," said Dr. Jeremiah Stamler of Northwestern University Medical School in Chicago. "We are doing better than any other industrial country at reducing the death rate. We admittedly started higher than most, but we are still making progress."

Heart and blood vessel problems still represent the nation's No. 1 killer disease, taking almost 1 million lives a year.

Stamler said he and Dr. Alan R. Dyer, also of Northwestern, just completed a statistical study which indicates that changes in average blood pressure, smoking and blood cholesterol in middle-aged white men over the last 20 years could be responsible for much of their decreased cardiac death rate.

Looking at the numbers for these risk factors in 8,100 men tested in the 1950s, the scientists calculated the death rate change for this group if the measurements had been reduced to mid-1970s levels.

These figures projected a death rate reduction for this group of 18.5 percent, very close to the actual mortality rate reduction of 20.9 percent.

Stamler said the data does not prove that reducing these major risk factors caused the drop in mortality rates; but the work does show that changing risk factors could be a major element.

Dr. Joel C. Kleinman of the National Center for Health Statistics said data on cigarette smoking is so sketchy that it is impossible to show definitively that many adults giving up the habit have contributed to reduced heart disease death rates.

Ironically, he noted, white women, who are at lowest risk of heart disease and whose cardiac death rate has declined more than any other group, are smoking more than ever before. This indicates other factors must be at work, he added.

"But the potential of cigarettes affecting the heart figures if smoking is stopped is great," he said.

Dr. Nemat O. Borhani of the University of California at Davis said hypertension, or high blood pressure, is diminishing as a risk factor of heart disease and stroke. The condition still is a great health problem, but that better management through diet and medication is reducing hypertension as a risk factor, he said.

Between 1950 and 1976, deaths associated with hypertension have decreased 61 percent, Borhani added.

GALLEON DISCOVERED

OTTAWA (AP) — Underwater archaeologists have discovered a 16th century Spanish galleon off the coast of a Labrador fishing village, about 300 miles north of St. John's, according to Canadian parks official Robert Grenier. He said the vessel, which Spanish documents indicate may have sunk with a load of whale oil in 1565, was used by Basque whalers who established a small settlement of 800 men that was later abandoned.

Committee Gives Okay On Brooke

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate ethics committee said Wednesday it has not uncovered any evidence to show that Sen. Edward Brooke, R-Mass., personally altered documents gathered during an investigation into his finances.

SEN. BROOKE

In a statement issued 20 minutes after the close of two days of often acrimonious hearings requested by Brooke in an attempt to clear his name, the panel made no mention of the role of the senator's lawyers.

The hearings were called after Richard J. Wertheimer resigned as special counsel to the committee on Oct. 12 and accused Brooke's lawyers of deliberately delaying the inquiry.

Wertheimer said check stubs were altered to conform with Brooke's current statements on various financial transactions.

Brooke, a 12-year veteran of the Senate, is locked in a tough battle for re-election against a challenge by Rep. Paul E. Tsongas, D-Mass.

At a news conference shortly before he returned to the campaign trail, Brooke said he was "very pleased" by the committee's findings, even though his lawyers were not judged blameless — as he had contended.

Four members of the committee said they "have found no evidence linking Sen. Brooke personally with delaying the production of documents, failing to turn over documents or altering documents requested by the committee."

The statement said a preliminary inquiry into Brooke's financial affairs will continue without Wertheimer, but added that the committee "has made no finding with regard to the facts."

Committee spokeswoman Lynne Murphy said the statement was drafted by Sen. Robert Morgan, D-N.C., and agreed to by the committee chairman, Sen. Adlai Stevenson, D-Ill., and Sens. Charles Mathias, R-Md., and Harrison Schmitt, R-N.M.

The two other committee members, Sens. John G. Tower, R-Texas, and Abraham Ribicoff, D-Conn., were out of town.

The statement followed a charge by Brooke earlier in the day that Wertheimer was guilty of "shocking professional misconduct."

Appearing before the committee, the senator vigorously denied all of Wertheimer's allegations. "There was no attempt to conceal," he said.

Brooke described Wertheimer's allegations as "inflammatory, prejudicial and unsubstantiated" They were made without a "shred of evidence," he said.

On Tuesday, Wertheimer accused Brooke's lawyers of deliberately delaying the investigation, withholding some documents and altering others to make them comply with the senator's recent explanation of his financial affairs.

Brooke was clearly surprised by the 54-page statement of detailed allegations made by Wertheimer, a Washington lawyer.

Brooke responded that with one exception, corrections to check stubs and financial records were made long before the ethics committee began its inquiry.

In a statement sprinkled with personal attacks on Wertheimer's conduct as a lawyer, Brooke said the accusations were made without any attempt to ask the senator's personal accountant why the various financial entries were revised.

The investigation stems from Brooke's bitter divorce battle in Massachusetts courts.

Brooke said the alterations in his financial records cited by Wertheimer were made as part of the divorce property settlement or in attempts to set straight the estate of his late mother-in-law, whose affairs he handled.

Schmitt said the dispute with Wertheimer is more the result of "combative" lawyers than any real evidence that Brooke or his attorneys doctored documents.

But he said, "The conduct of Brooke's lawyers has resulted in unnecessary delay."

Brooke said Wertheimer had evidence contradicting Wertheimer's own allegations of delay or altered documents.

Spinks Gets Ticket After Auto Mishap

ELYRIA, Ohio (AP) — Recently dethroned heavyweight boxing champion Leon Spinks, looking for property and privacy in Elyria, has wound up in the limelight.

Spinks is to report to Elyria Municipal Court next Monday and is currently free on $50 bond on a charge of failure to control after he damaged his $13,000 car in a weekend accident.

Spinks lost control of his silver 1979 Corvette early Saturday near the Elyria Holiday Inn and drove through a fence, police said. Neither Spinks nor a bodyguard who was riding was hurt.

The 25-year-old ex-Marine, who won the heavyweight crown from Muhammad Ali on Feb. 15 and lost it to Ali on Sept. 15, has been a frequent visitor to the city, located west of Cleveland.

"I'm looking for some property here, some privacy before my next fight," he said. "I'm thinking about spending some time here. A man needs some privacy sometimes and this is a good place."

Spinks, who has a friend in Elyria, stayed at a local motel several times since last May.

Earnings Jump Comments Sought On Offshore Leasing Proposal

'Reported By Four Oil Firms

NEW YORK (AP) — Mobil Corp., Sun Co., Cities Services Co. and Standard Oil Co. of Ohio Wednesday reported higher third-quarter earnings, benefiting from increased gasoline demand in recent months.

Mobil, the nation's No. 2 oil company and fourth-largest industrial firm, said earnings increased to $259 million, or $2.44 per share, from $239 million, or $2.26 per share, a year ago.

Revenue for Mobil, which also owns the Montgomery Ward retail chain, real estate and packaging materials, was $9.1 billion, up from $8.5 billion a year earlier.

Sun Co. said earnings were $97.1 million, or $1.82 per share, compare to $94.9 million, or $1.86 per share, a year ago. The drop in per-share earnings is a result of an increase in the number of Sun shares outstanding. Sales rose to $1.89 billion from $1.57 billion last year.

Cities Service reported third-quarter net income of $52.6 million, or $1.91 per share, a 31 percent increase over the $40.2 million, or $1.45 per share, the company earned in last year's third quarter.

Sales in the quarter were $1.14 billion, up from $1.05 billion a year ago.

Standard of Ohio reported third quarter earnings of $125.7 or $1.06 a share compared with $36.5 million or 45 cents a share in the third quarter of 1977.

Revenue was $1.299 billion compared with $872 million in last year's quarter.

Nine-months earnings were reported at $285.7 million or $2.59 per share, more than twice the $110.9 million or $1.41 per share for the comparable period last year. Revenue was $3.657 billion, compared with last year's $2.520 billion.

Last year's figures were adjusted for a 2-for-1 stock split paid in June.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Interior Department invited public comment Wednesday on development of a five-year program of leasing federal offshore areas for oil and natural gas exploration and production.

The program, to cover a period from mid-1980 to mid-1985, is to extend the current schedule of offshore lease sales.

At the same time, the department announced the selection of some 1,957,242 acres of sea bottom in the Gulf of Alaska for intensive environmental study, in preparation for a lease sale tentatively slated for June 1980.

After environmental studies are completed, the department can decide which tracts to offer for leasing. Oil and gas has been found and produced for many years under federal waters more than three miles offshore in the Gulf of Mexico and areas off southern California.

The rest of the nation's long coastline remains largely unexplored, although some leasing and exploration have started in the past few years in waters off Alaska and the Atlantic coast.

Petroleum companies and the federal government believe — or at least hope — that these extensive untapped offshore areas may hold some large new petroleum reserves. But drilling is the only way to find out and the first few test wells in the Atlantic have, so far, turned up some indications of petroleum but no spectacular discoveries.

For its five-year program, the Interior Department divided the U.S. offshore waters into 22 large regions: eleven of them off Alaska's long coastline, four off the West Coast; two in the Gulf of Mexico; and five in the Atlantic.

The department, seeking comments by Dec. 1, said it wants information for each area on such subjects as:

— Fisheries, navigation, and other uses of the areas.
— Technical feasibility and duration of exploration and production.

— Estimated chances of finding oil or gas.
— Comparative levels off commercial interest in each area.

— And present and expected availability of systems to transport oil and gas to markets.

New Charge Added In Antitrust Suit

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Justice Department added a new charge Wednesday to an antitrust suit that seeks to prevent Occidental Petroleum Corp. from taking over the Mead Corp.

The government filed its suit two weeks ago, contending that a merger of the two companies would lessen competition in marketing of coking coal, carbonless copy paper and chemicals.

The department's additional charge Wednesday said the proposed takeover also would affect competition in the sale of a type of printing paper produced from chemical pulp known as coated free sheet paper. The complaint noted that the top four producers in the field, including Mead, account for about 58 percent of the market.

Mead of Dayton, Ohio, is the fifth largest pulp and paper company in the country. It also produces chemicals, coal, iron castings and molded rubber products.

Occidental of Los Angeles is the 27th largest corporation in the country and the 12th largest oil company.

The suit was filed Oct. 11 in U.S. District Court in Dayton.

Agency Alleges Oil Overcharge

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Department of Energy said Wednesday that Amerada Hess Corp., a large refiner, may have overcharged a group of New York utilities some $55.5 million for powerplant fuel oil during a 32-month period.

Amerada Hess issued a statement from its offices in New York denying any violation of pricing regulations and said it would contest the allegation.

The department's Office of Special Counsel for Compliance sent Amerada Hess a "notice of probable violation" giving the company ten days to reply; the notice was not a definite finding of violation and could be withdrawn if the company convinces the department there was no violation.

Otherwise, the department may seek a price rollback or refund of the alleged overcharges.

The department contended that from Sept. 1, 1973, through May 31, 1976, Amerada Hess incorrectly calculated the average base price of residual fuel oil sold to Central Hudson Gas and Electric Corp., Consolidated Edison Co. and Niagara Mohawk Power Corp. as joint owners of a Roseton, N.Y., generating plant.

It said this led Amerada Hess to understate its recovered costs by $55,522,065 in violation of federal pricing regulations.

The company's statement said the department's allegations "are founded on the use of extremely low 1969 prices in certain fixed price contracts, rather than representing prices reflecting market conditions in May 1973, the regulatory base period."

Tightrope Walker Survives Fall

BOSTON (UPI) — A teen-age tightrope walker Wednesday night fell about 25 feet from his high wire before thousands of horrified spectators, but escaped death thanks to a circus helper on the ground who broke his fall.

Luis Posse, 16, a member of the Ringling Brothers and Barnum & Bailey Circus, was taken to nearby Massachusetts General Hospital. "He is being X-rayed. I expect his condition will be good. We're waiting for definitive results of the tests including X-rays," a hospital spokesman said.

Officials said the youth's life was saved by the quick thinking of circus hand Sal Condito, who broke Posse's fall, and a 4-inch-thick red foam mat that provided cushioning.

The youth, who fell just before intermission, was 25 feet up and about 10 to 12 feet out on the wire when he fell head down. He landed about 5 feet from the audience right inside the hockey wall at the Boston Garden, home of the NHL Boston Bruins.

Circus officials, who continued the show, said the youth was from Columbia, South America, and had been with the circus for one year.

Korea CIA Funds Use Examined

WASHINGTON (AP) — House investigators said Wednesday they have found evidence that any of $3.2 million in Seoul subway commission money was used for South Korean intelligence activities in the United States.

But the investigators said they did find evidence supporting Japanese press reports that some of the money may have been used for South Korean President Park Chung Hee's election in 1971.

The findings were released by the House international relations subcommittee headed by Rep. Donald M. Fraser, D-Minn., which is investigating the Korean Central Intelligence Agency activities in America.

The Fraser subcommittee is investigating South Korean efforts to influence U.S. government policy and public opinion, and past KCIA harassment of Korean-Americans.

The subcommittee is not investigating alleged South Korean efforts to buy influence in Congress. That was investigated by Senate and House ethics committees.

The Fraser subcommittee investigators said four Japanese corporations supplying equipment for the Seoul subway transferred about $3.2 million into U.S. bank accounts through American subsidiaries.

They said they have "documentary evidence indicating" that $1.2 million of the money was channeled back to S.K. Kim in Seoul in 1971 for what a subcommittee source called a "laundering operation" for President Park's election campaign money.

Kim, now deceased, was finance chairman in Seoul for Park's Democratic Republican Party.

A source said the documentary evidence is $1.3 million in checks later made out to Kim. One of the corporations, the Mitsubishi Corp., has testified to the Japanese Diet that the $1.3 million and the $1.2 million went to the same person.

In a two-page summary report, the investigators characterized Kim as the Park campaign finance chairman "who in 1970 extorted $3 million from Gulf Oil Corp. for the party's use in the 1971 presidential elections."

The Mitsubishi Corp. has acknowledged to the Japanese Diet that the $2.5 million that went to the same person was in payments of $1.2 million in April 1971 and $1.3 million in January and May 1973, the subcommittee said.

The subcommittee said the four companies channeled another $725,000 in commissions into U.S. banks between June 1973 and July 1975 through a dummy company known as Chang II Enterprises.

But the House investigators said they found no substance to Japanese press reports quoting former KCIA Director Kim Hyung Wook as saying the dummy corporation was set up to channel KCIA money into U.S. operations.

Kim Hyung Wook, now living in the United States, told the House investigators he has no evidence the dummy company is connected with the KCIA, the subcommittee summary said.

The subcommittee quoted Moon Hui Yong, listed as president of Chang II Enterprises, as saying the dummy company was set up to channel commission money to him into U.S. banks because he planned to emigrate to America.

Moon worked for the Mitsubishi Corp. and got a commission on all subway cars and other equipment the four Japanese firms exported for the Seoul subway construction project, the subcommittee said.

The report said the other three Japanese companies are Mitsui and Co., Nisho-Iwai Corp. and the Marubeni Corp.

Nazi-Era Gas Ampules Found At Fortress

BERLIN (AP) — Cyanide ampules left over from a secret Nazi-era army laboratory have been found hidden in a well at an old Spandau fortress, West Berlin police said Wednesday.

Three ampules of hydrocyanic acid were found in a niche in the well about 25 feet beneath ground level, along with 25 gas cylinders and 15 badly deteriorated hand grenade fuses, police said.

When opened, police said, the ampules would have given off a fatal cyanide gas.

Police said more leftovers might still be found from the top-secret "Army Gas Defense Laboratory," a German military facility that operated from 1935 to 1944 in a nearby part of the 16th-century fortress.

The ampules themselves were only containers for the acid, and not part of a weapon, police said.

The well where they were found remained sealed Wednesday and one bastion of the fortress was kept closed.

Officials said there was no danger to public parts of the fortress, which include a school, restaurant, park and restored buildings that have become a stop for visiting foreign dignitaries.

Papal Secretary Of State Temporarily Reinstated

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Pope John Paul II, making his first important executive decision, on Wednesday reinstated French Cardinal Jean Villot "for an initial period" in the key post of Vatican secretary of state.

The temporary appointment signaled that the pontiff may be planning a shake-up of the Vatican Curia, the administration of the Roman Catholic Church, later on.

In another day of whirlwind activity, the Polish-born pontiff greeted about 18,000 pilgrims in two separate audiences, then drove to Castel Gandolfo. The palace, in the hills south of Rome, is the pope's summer residence and is where Pope Paul VI died on Aug. 6.

Greeting an estimated 4,000 cheering well-wishers gathered in the square in front of the Gandolfo palace, the pontiff said, "I have now become a fellow citizen. Our first meeting has been very warm and very noisy. I hope it has also been very religious."

Children climbed up trees and on buildings to get a glimpse of the first non-Italian pope in 455 years. Gaily-colored banners hung over the street proclaimed him welcome.

The pope addressed the crowd from a fourth floor balcony after having spent nearly 20 minutes shaking hands, kissing babies and leading a brief prayer in the 16th century parish church. Children gave him flowers and baskets of grapes and a young girl offered two canaries in a cage.

John Paul strode into both general audiences earlier in the day, refusing to be carried on the swaying portable throne.

Because of an overflow crowd, the one audience had been split into two parts. After receiving about 8,000 pilgrims from Germany, Holland, Switzerland and the Low Countries in St. Peter's Basilica, the pope was cheered by 10,000 more in the modern Nervi Audience Hall, who had come from points as varied as Oak Ridge, Tenn., Nice, France, Brazil and Mauritius.

After his address the pope waded into the crowds, let pilgrims kiss his papal ring and chatted with the throng.

"I see one pope is not enough to embrace all. But I don't know how to multiply this one pope," quipped the robust 58-year-old pontiff, clad in white and gold pontifical cape and white skullcap.

The Vatican's announcement on Villot's appointment said the 73-year-old cardinal was reinstated for the "initial period" of our pontificate. The secretary of state is the equivalent of a prime minister and has a large role in shaping Vatican foreign policy.

The pope noted that the French cardinal suggested an Italian for the post. There has been speculation that Archbishop Agostino Casaroli, an Italian who is one of the architects of the Vatican's policy of accommodation with communist regimes, might be tapped for the job.

Pope John Paul, the archbishop of Krakow until his election nine days ago, has taken his time acting on reappointments, in contrast to John Paul I, who reinstated the entire Vatican hierarchy two days after his installation.

The new pontiff must name the heads of the nine departments, or Sacred Congregations, which make up the backbone of the Curia. Several chiefs are suffering from ill health and are expected to be replaced. Cardinal John Wright, 69, of Boston, prefect of the Congregation for the Clergy and the highest ranking American at the Vatican, recently underwent cardiac surgery.

Another important post, the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith, which acts as watchdog over church doctrine, is headed by Cardinal Franjo Seper, a 72-year-old Yugoslav.

Law Professor Handed Portuguese Assignment

LISBON (AP) — President Antonio Ramalho Eanes Wednesday tapped 42-year-old law professor Carlos da Mota Pinto to try to form Portugal's fourth democratically elected government in 4½ years and bring political and economic stability to the country.

A presidential statement read to reporters at Eanes's Belem Palace said Mota Pinto was asked to lead the government "after it was concluded that no agreement was possible among the parties that would lead to a stable parliamentary majority."

Mota Pinto, who would be the youngest prime minister in Europe, is a political independent but shares views on social reform held by center-left Socialists and liberals among the center-right Social Democrats, the country's two largest parties.

Portugal has had 10 governments, including six provisional ones, since the longtime rightist dictatorship was ended in 1974.

Mota Pinto drove from the university city of Coimbra, 125 miles north of Lisbon, to meet with Eanes and begin selecting a cabinet. Caretaker Prime Minister Alfredo Nobre da Costa, another independent whose government was defeated in the legislature last month, will stay on temporarily.

Eanes was expected to delay formal nomination of Mota Pinto until it became clear he could form a government. He will have 10 days under the constitution to present a legislative program to the Assembly of the Republic, which could turn him out of office by rejecting the program.

Most of the parties, none of which has a parliamentary majority, appeared ready to give Mota Pinto the benefit of the doubt, if not active support.

Spokesmen for the Socialists and the Conservatives, the third-largest party, told Eanes they would not oppose Mota Pinto. The Communists, the fourth-largest party, wanted to see the cabinet list before taking a position.

Mota Pinto, a constitutional expert and former commerce minister, was reported to have close ties with Eanes. Eanes warned the parties last month that, unless they rallied behind a prime minister until the scheduled 1980 general elections, he would send Parliament home and move up the elections — a course some party leaders would not welcome.

Diplomats said they did not expect Mota Pinto to steer Portugal from its present drive toward European Common Market membership and increased participation in NATO. But he would face a divisive array of domestic issues, including the need for continued economic austerity, confrontations with left-wing peasants resisting the return of private landowners to the Alentejo grain belt, and an expected rash of industrial strikes by Communist-led unions.

New Figures Add Fuel To Pinto Gas Tank Debate

DETROIT (AP) — Thirteen Ford Pintos — more than double what might be expected from the number of Pintos on the road — were involved in fiery, fatal rear-end crashes in 1976 and 1977, federal figures show.

The figures are different than those Ford used to defend itself against charges about the Pinto and its gas tank near the rear bumper, and they show more rear-end crashes with fires and deaths than the Ford figures would indicate.

The new figures on such rear-end crashes were compiled from National Highway Traffic Safety Administration computer files at the request of The Associated Press.

They also show that two small cars with fuel tanks away from the rear bumper, the Toyota Corolla and Volkswagen Rabbit, were not involved in a single such fatal crash over the two years.

American Motors Corp.'s Gremlin had, like the Pinto, more rear-end, fire-accompanied fatal crashes than would be expected. But the low number of such accidents involving Gremlins — four — made the Gremlin results less conclusive.

Drawn from police reports, the statistics show the number of cars in which one or more fatalities occurred when the vehicles were struck from the rear and a fire occurred. They do not mean that the fires were serious, caused the deaths or stemmed from fuel tank leaks.

However, the figures were described by a University of Michigan authority as statistically significant and strong evidence that the controversial Pinto is more susceptible to serious fuel-fed fires than other cars.

Peter Cooley, author of a 1974 industry-sponsored study on the subject by the university's Highway Safety Research Institute, said that the new statistics also support the argument of many safety engineers that fuel tanks should go above or ahead of the rear axle.

At the same time, the data and other studies support the auto industry's contention that deaths caused by fuel-fed fires in auto crashes, while especially ugly and painful, are not frequent.

Fires of some sort — most of them minor — occur in about 1 percent of motor vehicle accidents, the Michigan study estimated. NHTSA agrees with the Michigan finding that 450-650 deaths a year are directly caused by fires in vehicle accidents, or 1 to 1.5 percent of the annual highway death toll.

The NHTSA figures say 1,444 cars had fires of some sort in fatal crashes in 1976 and 1977. Of those, 265 cars had been struck in the rear, meaning a greater likelihood that the fire stemmed from a fuel tank leak.

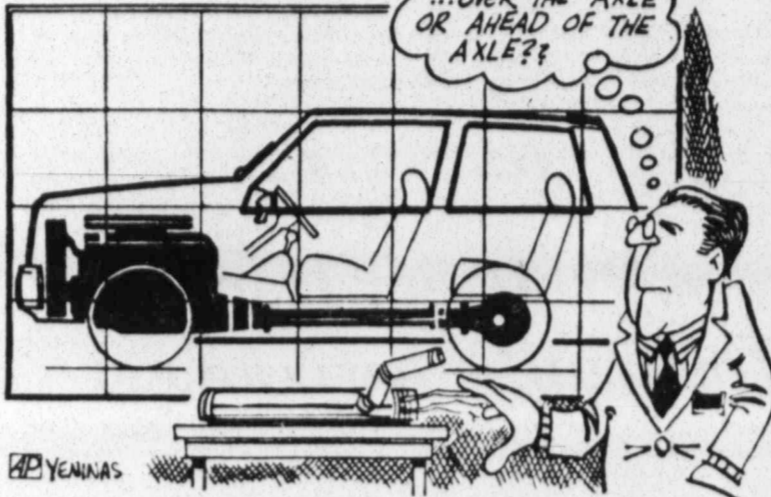

Fires in rear-enders are typically more serious than in other crashes. Severe frontal crashes, for instance, often result in minor fires under the hood that rarely cause deaths, Cooley says, but are still listed as fire-accompanied crashes.

NHTSA acknowledges that its statistics are plagued by uneven police reporting of accidents. But the accuracy is "reasonable" and the statistics are sound for comparing one car with another, said Nancy Stubbs of NHTSA's National Center for Statistics and Analysis.

Ford recalled about 1.5 million 1971-76 Pinto sedans in June after NHTSA crash tests showed the fuel system consistently leaked large amounts of fuel when struck from behind at moderate speeds.

NHTSA said the Pinto fuel tank's closeness to the rear bumper and the presence of four sharp bolts just ahead of it combined to make the tank especially puncture-prone when the car is hit from behind.

(Beginning with all 1977 model cars, improvements were made to meet new federal fuel-system safety requirements in rear-end collisions. The 1977, 1978 and 1979 Pintos are not under attack.)

A year ago, in response to a magazine article, Ford cited NHTSA figures to show the car's involvement in fiery fatal crashes was just what it should be for the number of Pintos on the road.

However, those figures were based on all fiery fatal collisions, not just rear-enders. The figures compiled by the AP show the Pinto's involvement jumps sharply when rear-end crash fatalities are separated.

In 1976 and 1977, when few of the newer Pintos were on the road, NHTSA data showed deaths in 33 Pintos in collisions accompanied by fire. That was some 2.3 percent of the 1,444 cars in such accidents, while Pintos represented 2.05 percent of all passenger cars.

In the typically more serious rear-enders, Pinto involvement was 13 cars, or 4.9 percent of the 265 cars involved in such fatalities — more than twice what the Pinto's presence on the road would indicate.

Ford had no comment on the figures. The Gremlin, also a subcompact, was represented proportionately in the number of all fire-accompanied fatal crashes.

But in rear-enders, the four Gremlins involved were 1.5 percent of the 265 cars, while Gremlin made up 0.52 percent of all cars on the road. AMC quit making the Gremlin this summer.

The subcompact Chevrolet Vega, while slightly over-represented in all fire-accompanied fatal crashes, was involved in about the same percentage of rear-end fiery fatal crashes — 1.5 percent — as its car registrations would indicate.

Not one of the 800,000 Toyota Corollas on U.S. highways in 1976-77 or the 223,000 Volkswagen Rabbits was involved in a single rear-end, fire-accompanied fatal crash. And the cars were under-represented in terms of all fire-accompanied fatal crashes.

Most Corollas have fuel tanks above the rear axle. The Rabbit's tank is ahead of the rear axle.

The fire involvement of the full-size Chevrolet Impala and Caprice was consistent with the documented fact that bigger cars tend to survive crashes better than small cars.

Though the nearly 7 million big Chevies made up 6.9 percent of all cars on the road and most have tank locations similar to the Pinto and nearly all U.S. cars, its involvement in rear-end, fiery fatal crashes was just 1.5 percent.

The Gremlin and Vega were singled out to compare the controversial Pinto with similar-sized cars with the same basic fuel tank location. The Corolla and Rabbit were studied because of their different fuel tank locations, and the full-sized Chevrolet was picked to compare performance of a big car.

RETIREMENT SYSTEMS GAIN

WASHINGTON (AP) — State and local employee retirement systems gained almost two million new members from 1972 to 1977, according to a 1977 census report issued this week by the Bureau of the Census. The report shows that 11 million state and local government employees were members of publicly administered retirement systems in fiscal 1976-77, compared to 9.1 million in fiscal 1971-72, when the last such census was conducted.

Americans Optimistic About Peace In Mideast

By LOUIS HARRIS

With the talks between Israel and Egypt apparently progressing in Washington, optimism is rising among the American people for a widening peace settlement in the Middle East.

By a substantial 65-17 percent, a sizable majority is now convinced that "Egypt and Israel will sign a separate peace treaty turning over the Sinai to Egypt." Once this part of the total peace settlement in the Middle East has been achieved, a 53-25 percent majority also thinks that Jordan will then have to make peace with Israel. By 43-28 percent, a plurality then believes that Lebanon and Israel will come to a permanent agreement. Finally, by a narrower 38-31 percent, a plurality thinks that Syria will have to make peace with Israel. The Syrians have cast themselves in the role of diehards who have severely criticized President Sadat for pursuing a separate peace and have vowed not to participate in the process.

The one Arab group that Americans feel will not make peace with Israel is the Palestinian Liberation Organization. A 53-20 percent majority is convinced the PLO will be the odd man out. Of course, Israel has steadfastly maintained that it would never sit down to negotiate with the PLO, and Yasser Arafat, head of that group, has reiterated the impossibility of coming to a settlement with the present Israeli government. However, if Israel were to sign peace accords with Egypt, Jordan, Lebanon and Syria, then the PLO could well find itself on the outside, with no real role to play other than to continue its terrorist harassment of Israel.

Although an immediate agreement between Egypt and Israel would not cover terms of a final peace settlement for Gaza and the West Bank areas, the broad outlines of the settlement that emerged from the Camp David negotiations meet with the approval of Americans. According to a recent Harris Survey of 1,201 adults nationwide:

—A 63-19 percent majority approves Israel ending "all military occupation of Gaza and the West Bank."

—By 73-13 percent, a sizable majority favors the arrangement on the West Bank and Gaza under which "local Arabs will elect their own ruling councils."

—By an even higher 77-12 percent, a majority approves of Israel having "troops on the West Bank only to protect its own security."

—By 84-6 percent, a massive majority believes that an integral part of a settlement should include recognizing Israel's right "to exist with guaranteed and secure borders."

—Finally, by 82-8 percent, Americans approve the provision that "after five years, Palestinian Arabs will negotiate a permanent peace settlement with Israel."

These results are particularly significant for any future negotiations that may involve Jordan, the Arab country most directly concerned with a West Bank agreement. King Hussein of Jordan has expressed his disappointment with the Camp David accord. However, as these findings suggest, it will be hard for him to turn American public opinion around to other alternatives for the West Bank.

On another key issue which was not resolved at Camp David, and on which Sadat and Begin disagree, an overwhelming majority of Americans agree with the Israeli position: Jerusalem's remaining in Israeli control, but with Arabs and Christians having separate and full access to all holy places in Jerusalem. Israel is adamant about Jerusalem's being its capital and the city's remaining united and under Israeli control.

As far as Americans are concerned, it is going to be tough to dampen the hopes for peace that have been ignited by Camp David. Moreover, the general terms agreed upon at the summit are going to be hard to change should Arab forces raise objections and obstacles to a permanent peace. The resultant fallout in this country would be highly critical of the Arabs.

Area Folk Dubious On Inflation Plan

Attitudes ranging from pessimism regarding voluntary wage and price controls to a "wait and see" approach characterized the reactions of local business, labor, and agricultural leaders to President Carter's proposed anti-inflation program this morning.

Carter's plan sets a voluntary guideline of 7 percent for increases in wages and fringe benefits in 1979, and a price guideline aimed at holding increases to approximately 5.75 percent next year.

Weldon Gibbs, senior vice president at American State Bank, was not sure how much the program will do but was glad the attempt is being made.

B METRO
Lubbock Avalanche-Journal

"Of course, everything he said sounded good," Gibbs said. "I don't think we're going to be able to get much of a reaction for a while."

"It's sure a move in the right direction, to say the least. Inflation is the biggest problem we've got."

"What happens will be controlled a great deal by labor and government, and I think government is going to have a lot to do with it."

Coffee Conner, executive vice president at Lubbock National Bank, said, "I would say it's just going to take some time to analyze the comments made by the president. I think that it will help us all to exercise some conservative approach."

Dr. James Jonish, chairman of the Texas Tech University economics department, was pessimistic about the voluntary aspect of the anti-inflation program, but believed that "holding the line on taxes and reducing government spending would be a plus."

"If the economic condition is contrary to the voluntary guidelines set by Carter, the mechanisms of the guidelines are unlikely to succeed. Volunteering is not going to work," said Jonish.

"It's been pretty much a failure in the past, unless the guidelines are accompanied by other governmental policies such as reduction in spending and cutting back the money supply. The wage and price controls get at the symptoms, not the problem," he said.

Jonish said that the requirement that firms seeking government contracts of $5 million or more sign a statement that they are in compliance with the wage and price guidelines "would put some teeth" into Carter's program. But he termed such action "volunteering with a club."

Bob Dunbar, divisional manager of Southwestern Bell, said, "There are too many complicating factors built into the economy for it to work. We are already locked in wage contracts built in excess of the guidelines set by Carter. There is too significant a percentage of the work force that already have increases above the 7 percent guide built in to their contract."

He said that some workers have contracts set for one, two and three years into the future.

"It would be hard for people without existing contracts to accept seven percent when others are getting more," said Dunbar.

"The most significant ingredient missing is that the program is asking us to bite the bullet and at the same time there are not significant enough cuts in federal outlays," he said. "I think most people will adopt a wait-and-see attitude which will reduce the chances for voluntary participation the president is looking for," said Dunbar.

Mrs. Glenna Lane, vice president of the Lubbock Educators Association, expressed curiosity as to how the state gubernatorial candidates would react to Carter's plan. Both John Hill and Bill Clements have pledged to upgrade the quality of education in the state, she said, which includes See AREA PEOPLE Page 16

Mayor Proposes City Crime Stoppers Plan

Lubbock Mayor Dirk West wants to make criminals feel they're unwelcome here by offering rewards to informants who help put wrongdoers in the clink.

West, who has tentatively labeled his program Crime Stoppers, plans to discuss the idea with city council members at their Thursday meeting.

He is proposing that Lubbock follow a successful crime prevention program which has operated the past two and one-half years in Albuquerque, N.M.

Three local citizens contributed to a fund of several thousand dollars to pay informants "whose knowledge and information leads to the indictment, confession or conviction of a felony crime," West said.

The reward paid the informants ranges from $1,000 downward, and are paid out by a board of local business people who determine the amount of the inducement.

"Snitches" who will testify in court are given bonuses.

West suggested setting up a separate phone line into the police detective division to be used exclusively for the "Crime Stopper" tips.

The police would receive all tips, then do the follow-up leading toward the indictment, confession or conviction. The case then would be sent to the board for payment.

A key element in the success of the Albuquerque program is the publicity broadcast and printed each week concerning the "crime of the week" or specific felonies on which the police need information.

Reportedly, one Albuquerque television station re-enacts the "crime of the week" which has the highest reward.

West said the informant's identity would be carefully protected, if the tipster so requested.

Reward programs are nothing new in Lubbock, so what makes West think Crime Stoppers will be any more successful?

"The amount of money involved is what will make this work," he said. Also, the program has a "two and one-half year track record in Albuquerque," West said. "I believe if we can get the criminal element in the city nervous about being informed on, it must have an effect."

The effect West would like is for the criminals either to stop their activities or to move to another city.

"On any crime committed, probably somebody knows something about it other than the perpetrator," he said.

West claims he "doesn't care" whether there are skeptics who say the program will fail because "we're going to try anything to stop the rising crime rate."

"We've got to have some leads and some knowledge and this is one, if not the only way, to get it. I think it is worth trying and I think there is great value in it," he said.

"I'm really enthusiastic about getting into it," West said. "I didn't take this job just to drink coffee and cut ribbons."

Police Chief J.T. Alley agreed the program is worth "worth trying," although he noted past reward programs haven't met with much success.

"A lot of people will do anything for money," Alley said, "so this might bring some of them out."

"Anything is worth trying."

TO YOUR GOOD HEALTH

BY
DR. GEORGE C. THOSTESON

Dear Dr. Thosteson: What exactly is "costal chondritis"? I am a female, 23, and in general good health except for this condition, which was recently diagnosed. I have sharp chest pains. I have them with no warning. It prevents deep breathing and restricts activity. Why can't I get rid of this? I am told to use aspirin and rest. Is this common at my age? I want to understand the condition and what I can do. After five years of this I am becoming discouraged. — D.L.D.

We should define a couple of terms first. Chondritis is inflammation of any cartilage ("chondra" is the Greek term for cartilage). Costal refers to the ribs. Cartilage is a special fiber-like tissue present about joints and bones. The closest you can get to feeling what cartilage is like is to pinch the tip of your ear.

The cartilage in the costal (rib) area has no blood supply and is nourished by the lymph system. This makes it prone to infection, especially from the staph or strep germ. It is not uncommon and can occur at any age. A chest injury or chest surgery may set the stage for costal chondritis. A condition called Tietze's syndrome can be mistaken for costal chondritis. Tietze's is a swelling of the rib cartilage from unknown cause. It can produce the painful symptoms you describe. Often a local injection of prednisone is necessary. That you have had the pains for so long leads me to suspect the Tietze's syndrome. In any event, you need further chest studies to find out just what is going on. A bone specialist (orthopedist) would be the doctor to see.

Dear Dr. Thosteson: My grandmother has advanced rheumatic arthritis. She is 63 and has nodules on her arms, from the wrists to the elbows. They are unsightly and painful. What causes the nodules? What can be done to prevent more from appearing? — L.L.

These are hallmarks of advanced rheu-matoid arthritis, called "arthritic nodules" or "subcutaneous nodules." The tiny lumps and bumps under the skin are collections of so-called "collagen" material. This is a sort of glue that holds the body together. While collagen is found throughout the body, in arthritis the collagen nodules are usually located on the arms from the elbows down. We don't know why this happens. In most instances the lumps, which are gritty to the touch, are painless and represent more of a cosmetic problem than anything else. Pain occurs when the lumps are in positions of pressures (as at the elbow or wrists).

There is little, really, to be done about them reoccurring, but steroids, such as prednisone, can be tried. Your other questions about rheumatoid arthritis were answered in a recent column. To avoid repetition here, you may want to refer to my printed material on the general subject of arthritis. For a copy, send 50 cents to cover costs of printing and handling to Dr. Thosteson, P.O. Box 11210, Chicago, Ill. 60611. Please enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

Dear Dr. Thosteson: Please tell me what causes a spastic colon. I have severe headaches and a pain in my stomach. I have had X-rays and upper and lower G.I. tests. Nothing shows up but spastic colon. Can you help me? — Mrs. F.P.

There may be things you can do to help yourself. Spastic colon results from oversensitivity of the bowel muscles to some irritation, either emotional or allergic (as

By JON-MICHAEL REED
NEW YORK — What, in the name of Beelzebub, is actor Brian Murray doing on a soap opera, "Another World," playing Dan Shearer?

To anyone who has been privileged to witness Murray's indelible theatrical performances as Rosencrantz in Broadway's "Rosencrantz and Guildenstern Are Dead" (for which he received a Tony nomination) or as Colin in off-Broadway's "Ashes" (which netted him an Obie Award) or as Charlie in this season's hit prize-winning play, "Da," Brian Murray is indisputably one of the English-speaking world's most accomplished actors. In "Da," Murray is on-stage constantly, conjuring images of people, most notably his father (da), from his past.

"Charlie," says Murray, "is like a squirrel in a cage, frantic, yet unable to rid himself of the memories and guilts of his younger years. It is a universally recognizable situation that humans approaching their fortieth year of life find themselves encountering. For myself, approaching the 'big 40' wasn't as frightening as the mid-thirties when a man begins to scratch the surface of self-examination and begins to contemplate mortality. The mid-life crisis of 40 and the crisis of middle-age are comparatively minor. But there's something about encountering middle-age — and isn't that an unfortunate term — that is painfully intense."

And in "Da" Murray sustains that intensity through measurably sinewy vocal skills and the greatest pair of eyes to ever endow a performer. "I think," says Murray, "that the art of listening is the basic, and perhaps only, necessary element of acting. Without it, there is no spontaneity and freshness." Not surprisingly, Murray brings that same art of listening to his characterization of Dan on "Another certain foods). Spasm can occur in any body muscles. Spasm of the colon is a common cause of lower abdominal pain, gas and bloating. It is most frequently found in tense people. Tension headaches (as you report) often accompany it. Stool samples might show mucous content, an indication that the bowel is not doing its digestive work smoothly because of the spasms.

If food allergy is not involved (and that is always possible) about all one can do is alter his or her lifestyle to eliminate causes of emotional stress. A bland diet may help reduce the colon's work load. Sometimes sedatives are in order.

Dear Dr. Thosteson: After a woman has had a C-section delivery, is it impossible to have a child by natural childbirth? — Mrs. W.C.

Not necessarily true. Depends on the reason for the initial cesarean.

For a better understanding of colitis and other intestinal ailments, their causes and treatment, write to Dr. Thosteson, P.O. Box 11210, Chicago, Ill., 60611, for a copy of his booklet, "Colitis and Kindred Complaints." Enclose a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope and 35 cents.

Dr. Thosteson welcomes reader mail but regrets that, due to the tremendous volume received daily, he is unable to answer individual letters. Readers' questions are incorporated in his column whenever possible.

Tune In Tomorrow

World." But why a soap opera when you're the critic's darling? Was it the money that lured Brian to daytime television?

"Of course, the financial rewards of doing a serial are appealing," answers Murray. "But my reasons for doing anything professionally have never been financial. Actually I joined 'AW' for a variety of reasons. Melvin Bernhardt, who won a Tony for directing 'Da,' is an 'AW' director. The cast is superb. And I was challenged by the opportunity to play an American."

Although Murray has spent the last 14 years plying his trade on American shores, he was born in South Africa and raised in London. At 17 he was a radio disc jockey. At 21 he was starring in a British TV series, "Kipps," and was a TV heartthrob. He then spent four years at the Royal Shakespeare Company in the company of Dame Edith Evans, Sir John Gielgud and Paul Scofield.

"I had a great future ahead of me in the classics," remembers Murray, "but I gave it up to come to America. In England, craft is everything. But I was attracted to the American style of acting which seems to me to strive for a deeper exploration of the human condition. And now that I've been asked to play a genuine American in an American soap, well, the challenge was irresistible."

Murray considers soaps "mini-morality plays." "I'm not yet at ease with the format and the formula of the medium. I was terribly shy initially with the vernacular and felt uneasy with the particular cadences of soap opera language. Another problem I had to cope with is that soap opera characters initially exist only in relation to other characters. I may be bringing an uncertainty and obliqueness to Dan that is analogous to my own fumbings. But Dan is a nice honest man who's saddled with a wife who doesn't put out. There's a lot of suppressed violence in him, as there is in me, I suppose. It may sound pompous but there's an ongoing struggle for perfection in my makeup. I despair to relize everything can't be perfect. And there's no sense in discussing the difference between theatre and soap opera, which is the difference between apples and oranges."

There is no less skill exerted by Murray on the TV screen than he dispels on the stage at night. "If anything, there is more concentrated effort and energy required for the serial than anything else I've ever done," says the bachelor actor.

Murray summarizes his insatiable urge to be an actor — an urge that has always driven him to superlative performances: "During a scene in a play I performed in my teens, I suddenly realized that acting is a mystery. There are those magical moments when the muse takes over, when the spirit takes over and one realizes he has absolute control of the audience. It is a moment of total exhilaration, a moment when one feels oneself flying, soaring, an experience that is unmatched in any other career. At the same time there is nothing more frustrating than an acting career. When a play or performance is finished there is nothing. The transitory fame is all hype. One can only hope for recognition from one's peers. And, I suppose, what drives an actor is a desire for a place in history for a great performance or a particular style of acting. And that's what's important, not the temporary acclaim or financial benefits."

Brian Murray's consummate skill both on stage and on "AW" is no mystery and certainly not transitory. He's already earned himself a place in theatrical history, and he's on his way to make a mark in serial history as well. As you'll see when you tune in tomorrow.

ANN LANDERS

Dear Ann: My boyfriend is a high school senior, Michael has so many good qualities I could take up the whole paper listing them but my friends make fun of him because they say he talks like he came from the Old Country. His parents came from Europe and they speak their native language at home.

Michael was born in Cleveland and his English sounds pretty good to me, but I admit he does have a trace of a foreign accent. He says "wid" instead of "with," "deez" instead of "these" and he calls me "Werginia."

Should I mention it or let it go and hope he will catch on by himself and improve? — Michael's Girl

Dear Girl: If Michael is a high school senior and calls you "Werginia," don't expect him to catch on by himself.

Tell him gently (in private, of course) and help him with the words he mispronounces. You would be doing him a big favor.

Dear Readers: Ralph Nader has alerted me to the fact that there are several federal government toll-free hotlines for people who need special help. Here is a list of numbers that can be called without charge for specific services:

National Runaway Hotline — If you live in Illinois, call (800) 972-6004. If you live elsewhere call (800) 621-4000, or (800) 621-4021. (Provides advisory services to runaways and parents on a 24-hour, confidential, free basis.)

VD Hotline — If you live in Pennsylvania call (800) 462-4964. If you live elsewhere call (800) 523-1885. (Provides confidential, anonymous, free consultation, information, and referral services on all aspects of sexually transmitted diseases.)

Consumer Product Safety Commission — If you live in Maryland call (800) 492-2937. If you live in Hawaii, Alaska, the Virgin Islands, or Puerto Rico call (800)

638-8333. If you live elsewhere call (800) 638-2666. (Receives reports on injuries deaths relating to hazardous manufactured products and assists consumers in evaluating safety of products on sale to the public.)

Veteran's Information — Check with U.S. Government-Veteran's Administration telephone listing for your locality, or call toll-free directory assistance (800) 555-1212 for toll-free number in each state. (Provides information to veterans and their dependents about a range of benefits, including GI loans, education and insurance, disability compensation, medical care, dental treatment and em-

Operation Peace of Mind — If you live in Texas call (800) 392-3352. If you live in Alaska or Hawaii call (800) 231-6764. If you live elsewhere call (800) 231-6946. (Confidential, 24-hour message relay service established to accept calls from runaways and forward messages to parents. Provides counseling and confidential referral information on medical assistance, shelter and other counseling services.)

Fair Housing and Equal Opportunity Hotline — If you live in Washington, D.C., call 755-5490. If you live elsewhere call (800) 424-8590. (Accepts complaints on discrimination in housing, complaints which are based on race, color, religion, sex or national origin.)

P.S. One and all: I tried every number to make sure they work. They do. It took ten attempts before I could get the VD Hotline. It's busy, busy, busy! So — if you have the same experience, don't give up. Hang in there. It's worth your time.

CONFIDENTIAL to Hurt Feelings: The surest way to escape any and all criticism is to say nothing, do nothing, and BE nothing.

as may be seen by his jump to four hearts without even an ace in his hand.

The nonagenarian (he admits to being 90) ruffed the second spade, drew trumps with two leads, ruffed dummy's last spade and went after diamonds. He cashed his king, entered dummy with the ace, led a third diamond and finessed his 10.

West chortled as he took his unguarded jack. "You would never have made that silly play when you were 80," he remarked.

"Quite the contrary," replied the aged expert. "I made this same play in Milton Work's column when I was just 35. It couldn't cost my contract because you are now caught in an end play."

Sure enough West was end played. A club lead would set up the king. A spade lead would allow a ruff and discard. If old Z had played his queen of diamonds and East had held the jack, the contract would have been set.

Hints from Heloise

DEAR HELOISE:
I love your column. Keep up the good work.

Since there are usually a lot of fires in the late summer and early fall, I try to keep in mind what to do about getting clothes and things out of the house.

Here is a hint that pops in my mind every time I hang clothes in the closet. Always turn all your hangers in the same direction, and never away from you, as you would have to untuck them before drawing them to you.

This will always keep you on the alert — put all the hangers in the correct direction except one — now try to pick the group up! Not a one will budge. Change that one — see, they all come off in one grasp.

Here's hoping that we never have a fire or flood, but training small children to put hangers on the rod correctly will stick in their mind as adults.

TODAY'S OUTERWEAR — Today's outerwear relates to what's underneath. This tan corduroy coat with flared collar, top a brown and white striped shirt and a patterned tan leather crewneck.

SLOPPY JOES

Fast Sloppy Joes is a wonderfully versatile family favorite. Brown 1 pound ground beef with 1 cup onion, drain. Mix in one 8-oz tomato sauce, one 1 1/2-oz envelope (packet) sauce mix, 2 1/2 cup water and one drained 12-oz can vacuum packed golden whole kernel corn. Simmer 10 minutes and serve over hamburger or bun. Serves 4 to 6.

Just think, one hanger could cause you to lose your clothing if it should happen to you! — Ruth E. Brosman

DEAR HELOISE:

During my lifetime, up to now I have been hospitalized in an ambulance six times for a distance of about 30 miles each time.

Every time they have loaded me in the head first. Why not feet first?

In case of a head-on collision, I would much rather have my feet up front, than to have my head up there! — Lloyd Smith

DEAR HELOISE:

I enjoy your column so very much and have my husband clip it from the paper each day.

I hated to throw them away, but I had acquired such a stack, I didn't know what to do with them.

The problem was solved the easy way!

I write a lot of letters to pen pals and relatives. So each time I write to someone, I enclose two or three "Hints from Heloise."

That way I don't have them strewn all over the house and someone else will get the benefit of them. — Linda Tabor

I sure hope they want them! — Heloise

Is your family tired of oven-baked chicken?

Here's a different way I serve it.

Take a small bag of potato chips and crush them right in their own bag. Then beat an egg in a bowl. Dip the chicken pieces in the egg, then roll in the crushed chips.

Bake at 325 degrees for an hour. No turning or basting necessary.

Keep the terrific hints coming. I never miss your column. — Jane Hess

Report On Stacy Reservoir Presented

AUSTIN — The Lower Colorado River Authority continued presentation of its rebuttal case Wednesday in the Texas Water Commission hearing on Colorado River Municipal Water District's application for construction of Stacy Reservoir.

Most of the morning session was consumed by the reading of the deposition from Department of Water Resources scientist Dr. Krishna Murty regarding a computer model Murty had prepared on water use in the Colorado River.

The afternoon session saw Murty called on cross-examination by CRMWD's attorneys, with Frank Booth questioning Murty regarding the 281-page report, which consists of mainly of tables, figures and a 50-page explanation of the methodology used in the computer study.

Booth questioned Murty regarding projections of inability to meet water needs from various reservoirs on the Colorado and its tributaries under varying conditions, and with differing amounts of water committed to prior rights in the basin.

Attacks Continued By Tower, Krueger

By The Associated Press
 Republican Sen. John Tower described his opponent Wednesday as a "slavish flunky" of President Carter's administration.

Rep. Bob Krueger, D-Texas, reiterated his charge that Tower three times voted to raise his own pay while asking Americans to curtail their lifestyles.

Tower told a San Antonio news conference that Krueger has gone from portraying himself as an "Independent Democrat" to "stressing party teamwork."

"That indicates to me that he is subordinating the idea of being an independent Texas senator to that of being a party hack, so to speak," Tower said.

Krueger said in a statement from his Austin campaign headquarters that Tower voted for congressional pay hikes on July 29, 1975; Sept. 7, 1976; and July 18, 1977. Krueger said he opposed each increase.

For the first time in Texas political history, Attorney General John Hill said, county officials have joined together to support a gubernatorial candidate.

The committee — CHOOSE HILL — will make a three-day flying tour of Northeast and West Central Texas "to make voters in these areas aware of the overwhelming support John Hill has in the courthouses of Texas and to warn voters of Republican Bill Clements's attempt to buy the governor's office. Clements will spend upwards of $7 million to lose this race for governor," the committee said in a statement.

Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas; U.S. Rep. Eligio de la Garza, D-Texas; state Sen. Raul Longoria, D-Edinburg; and the House delegation from the Lower Rio Grande Valley campaigned with Hill in the Valley.

Hill told audiences there and in Corpus Christi that he would use state surpluses to reduce local school district property taxes.

The campaign headquarters for Clements issued a statement from Margaret Martin of Austin, widow of the late Attorney General Crawford Martin, in support of Clements.

Mrs. Martin, a Democrat, said, "I have watched the governor's race this fall with great interest. I am not surprised by John Hill's dirty campaign tactics this year because I know from first-hand experience that he waged the same kind of negative and divisive campaign against my husband, Crawford Martin, in the 1972 attorney general's race."

"... I find it amusing that Mr. Hill has the audacity to falsely accuse someone else of his own style of dirty politics.... Texans deserve better," said Mrs. Martin.

Jim Baker, Republican candidate for attorney general, asserted in San Antonio that his opponent, Mark White, has "fallen back on such lame rhetoric as saying crime can be handled by educating people not to be criminals. That's simply not enough. That's gobbledygook — a non-answer to a very serious problem. It just won't get the job done."

Baker and White appeared before the San Antonio Young Lawyers Association and the San Antonio Bar Association.

Baker and GOP presidential candidate George Bush scheduled a joint news conference here Friday.

Explosion Investigators Clear Pipeline Owners

BROOKSIDE VILLAGE (AP) — A federal official said Wednesday there was no evidence of maintenance or operating failure by the owner of a pipeline that exploded, sending a fiery ball of death across a trailer park.

Five persons died and 43 were injured early Tuesday morning when the pipe erupted, sending flames hundreds of feet into the air and turning the area into a hell of twisted metal, smoldering cars and scorched land.

Phillip Hogue of the National Transportation Safety Board said the initial investigation showed no failure by United Transmission, owners of the pipeline, nor any corrosion in the pipe.

He said the board's investigation will last three to months and it "will be detailed and thorough. We will look into much more than the immediate cause of the explosion."

Joe Piotrowski, director of the Texas Railroad Commission's gas-utility division, said the cause "is anybody's guess. You can't point a finger at anything. We can't see any negligence on anyone's part."

Piotrowski said the pipe was 20-25 years old and "appeared in excellent shape. You can compare it with the new pipe they are installing and cannot see any difference."

The destroyed section was replaced with 80 feet of new pipe and was back in operation in the early morning hours of Wednesday.

While federal and state safety officials began their probe, others continued to search for Ivey Beasley, 65, whose small frame house near the trailer park was reduced to ashes.

Miss Beasley, who had saved her money for years in an effort to buy the 10-acre plot on the outskirts of Houston, has disappeared.

Tom LeClere, a Pearlland police officer, said, "Ninety percent of the opinions out here are that she was in the house at the time of the fire. Her whole house was leveled except for some concrete stairs."

Firemen said the intense heat was capable of incinerating a human being.

A friend visited with Miss Beasley Monday evening and saw the woman lock her front gate and return to her home.

Miss Beasley's three dogs were found dead near the house.

In Washington, Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich., chairman of the House energy subcommittee, said he will press for early congressional action next year on his gas pipeline safety bill.

Dingell said the explosion in Texas should prod Congress into passing the measure which would require safety inspection of the nation's natural gas pipelines. The measure also would mandate the Department of Transportation's

Office of Pipeline Safety to step up enforcement of pipeline safety, which Dingell said is now "lukewarm at best."

Aztlan Area Damage Reviewed At City Meeting

Mexican Independence Day fiesta organizers and city officials met for three hours Wednesday to discuss damage done to the Aztlan Area during the Sept. 14-16 celebration.

But after the meeting, Parks and Recreation director John Alford said that both sides had mutually decided they were "not yet ready to go public with a statement."

City manager Larry Cunningham, who also attended the meeting, said it would be "a few days" before he (city and fiesta representatives) will be in a position to make a statement about the meeting.

The turf at the Aztlan Area reportedly was damaged from cars being driven and parked on the grass, from the 8,000 fiesta participants walking on the newly planted-turf and from fiesta booths being dragged across the ground, city officials said earlier this month.

Damage to the park was expected to reach as high as $10,000, but Alford said estimates now were closer to $8,000.

Lebanese Leader Moves To Rebuild Army

BEIRUT (AP) — President Elias Sarkis announced plans Wednesday to rebuild the Lebanese army and asked the Syrian-dominated Arab League peacekeeping force to devise a way to disarm all private armies and militias.

In an obvious reference to Lebanon's Christians, Sarkis's government warned that anyone found collaborating with Israel will be punished.

Sarkis gave the Arab Deterrent Force, the Lebanese army command and internal security commanders two weeks to arrange a coordinated program for the implementation of the "security and political rectification" resolutions that came out of an all-day cabinet session Wednesday.

He also asked the ADF command to prohibit armed Palestinian guerrillas from appearing in public, to remove all roadblocks and arrest violators. He asked the ADF to withdraw units of the Palestine Liberation Army, 1,000 soldiers of which entered Lebanon from Syria earlier this month at the height of Syrian-Christian fighting.

Other decisions called for strict enforcement of press censorship regulations, banning unauthorized publications and private radio stations and punishing any Lebanese who collaborates with "the Israeli enemy."

The government promised a comprehensive "national reconciliation" program to be debated and implemented by Parliament soon and asked the military command to prepare a "definitive program" for rebuilding the armed forces along non-sectarian lines.

The promised army, a government statement said, must be strong enough to take over duties of the ADF and the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon. The eight-nation UNIFIL force came to Lebanon last March to undertake peacekeeping operations in southern Lebanese regions vacated by Israeli forces.

Before the cabinet session, leftist gunmen discarded their weapons in Beirut's Moslem sector, but the sandbag positions around their branch offices were yet to be removed. Observers noted the leftists' positive response to the ADF pacification action but questioned the peacekeepers' ability to exercise similar influence on Christian militias.

The ADF entered the country two years ago to police a civil war armistice between rightist militias and a coalition of leftist Moslems and Palestinian guerillas. The Lebanese army disintegrated. Right-wing militias protested Syrian peacekeeping curbs in the Christian enclaves, precipitating intermittent fighting that has claimed more than 1,500 lives since July 1.

Christian militia leaders have been blaming Palestinian guerrillas here for the country's four-year crisis, including the two-year civil war in which 37,000 people were killed. The Christian leaders say the guerrillas should be expelled to other Arab countries or to a state of their own on the Israeli-occupied West Bank of the Jordan River.

STRIKE STOPS FLIGHTS

ROME (AP) — A strike by oilworkers who refused to refuel planes forced cancellation of 40 percent of Alitalia's flights and the diversion of many international flights at major Italian airports Wednesday.

15 Treated In Washington Hotel Blaze

WASHINGTON (AP) — Fire broke out Wednesday in the kitchen of the elegant Hay-Adams Hotel a block from the White House, sending smoke up exhaust ducts and throughout the 51-year-old building.

Officials at George Washington University Hospital said 15 persons, mostly kitchen workers, were treated for smoke inhalation and five were admitted.

There were no reports of injuries to the 100 guests in the eight-story hotel, although a hospital spokesman said one person taken there was not a hotel employee.

Michael Pugliese, general manager of the Hay-Adams, said guests were taken to other hotels after being evacuated down stairways. He said the flames erupted in a grease pot about 10:45 a.m. as lunch was being prepared in the basement kitchen.

"The smoke went through the ducts that carry smoke and grease from the kitchen," said Richard M. Hubscher, public affairs battalion chief for the District of Columbia Fire Department. "Smoke came out vents on every floor."

The hotel was built on the site of the homes of historian Henry Adams and John Hay, secretary of state under presidents William McKinley and Theodore Roosevelt.

City Private School Protest Group Formed

A local group called Citizens for Tax-Free Private Education has been formed to protest proposed government regulations which threaten the tax-exempt status of private schools.

Byron Mote of Trinity School was unanimously elected chairman of the organization. Among other things, the group plans to send representatives to Washington, D.C., for a Dec. 5 public hearing on the proposed Internal Revenue Service regulations.

Under the IRS proposals, predominantly white private schools automatically would lose their tax-exempt status unless they take "affirmative" efforts to recruit more minorities. Such efforts would involve scholarships and the use of a "minority-oriented" curriculum.

For the past month, private-school administrators and parents in Lubbock have been writing letters and circulating petitions against the IRS proposals. Parents met Tuesday in the Trinity Church auditorium to formally organize.

In a statement, the new group called the IRS proposals "unreasonable. (The rules would) withhold tax-exempt status from all schools formed after the latter 1950s' push for integration — presuming them 'guilty' of discrimination and forcing these schools to prove themselves innocent."

The group said the regulations would put a severe financial burden on private schools — because of the loss of their tax-exempt status, or the cost of scholarships and other means of compliance.

The organization also fears the proposals eventually could be extended to cover other institutions. Thus, the rules represent a "threat to all schools and ultimately to colleges, churches, hospitals, etc.," the group said.

The group hopes to raise about $10,000 to send representatives to the IRS hearing in Washington to protest the proposed regulations.

City Utility Hook-Up Dispute Aired In Court

By LARRY SPRINGER
A-J Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The issue of whether South Plains Electric Co-op should be allowed to hook-up new customers within the Lubbock city limits was aired Wednesday before the 3rd Court of Civil Appeals.

Southwestern Public Service Co., which holds a franchise from Lubbock for service within the city limits, asked the three-member appeals panel to overturn a Texas Public Utility Commission order certifying the co-op to serve new customers within a recently annexed area of the city.

Attorney for SPS, W.F. Countiss of Amarillo, told the court that it was "the plan of the Legislature" to allow cities to retain original authority over utilities within their city limits.

Associate Justice Bob Shannon observed that SPS originally went to the utilities commission to ask certification to serve the contested area and, at that point, did not raise the issue of the PUC's jurisdiction to grant certification within the city limits.

Countiss acknowledged that the jurisdiction question was not raised either before the PUC or the district court. He added, however, that state law allows a jurisdiction question to raise at any point.

The SPS attorney pointed to an Attorney General's opinion which held that a gas utility within a city does not have to get certification from PUC.

Even though SPS disagreed with the PUC order, Countiss, said the utility went along without violation due to the severe sanctions in the law for violation of the PUC order.

He noted that a violation of the PUC order could result in a fine of $1,000 to $5,000 per day for the company and its officers as well as a felony conviction.

"We're the good guys," Countiss said of the SPS's reputation. "We are effectively prevented from using our property. This is confiscation without compensation."

He further argued that state law prohibits coops from serving new customers in urban areas.

"The co-op law was set up to prevent competition between member-owned co-ops and public utilities," he said.

Countiss asked the appeals court to reverse the PUC order and the district ruling upholding that order, "and we're asking that property rights be protected."

Assistant Attorney General Scott Wilson, representing the PUC, argues that the PUC law, while giving cities original jurisdiction over rates and service, does not give them original jurisdiction for certification of service areas.

Shannon again interrupted to note that Lubbock has taken the position "that no one can tell the city who may provide utility service within the city limits."

Wilson maintained that no public utility may serve an area without certification from the PUC.

In the matter of the attorney general's opinion cited by Countiss, Wilson maintained the opinion should be viewed in the context of whether the PUC has authority in any area over gas utilities. The opinion, he said, holds that it is the Railroad Commission which has authority over gas utilities and that it cannot be construed to apply to electric utilities also.

Austin attorney Bill St. Clair, representing South Plains Electric Co-op, chided SPS for raising the jurisdiction question before the appeals court after failing to mention it before the PUC or the district court.

He agreed that cities have authority over rates and services, "but first there has to be a utility there," adding that certification of a service area is necessary before a city has any entity to regulate.

Countiss countered that the Attorney General's Office and South Plains are putting the cart — certification — before the horse — jurisdiction, arguing that the PUC is building itself a "pyramid" of jurisdiction without authority.

He said that the Public Utility Act intends for cities to regulate service areas as well as rates and quality of service.

The PUC would have us believe that the Legislature curves out the cities on this point," Countiss argues. "That's simply not done by this act."

On Wilson's argument that it is within the police power of the state to certify area of convenience and necessity within a municipality, Countiss said that right does not extend to the "power to take away the right to serve" and would apply only if SPS's service were to threaten the health of property of the people in the area.

He also disputed St. Clair's claim that the PUC Act override the Co-op statute by allowing the Co-op to expand in an annexed area, saying he doubts the Legislature "would repeal a four-year-old law by implication."

The appeals court usually takes two to six weeks to render a decision following oral arguments.

Board Urges Coal-Powered Plant Studies

The Electric Utility Board Wednesday instructed the Lubbock Power and Light staff to request study proposals from several consulting firms on the feasibility of an LP&L coal-powered plant.

The staff will outline necessary components for the study and mail letters by the end of the next week, seeking proposal responses.

The board guessed a study could cost up to possibly $70,000, which would have to be appropriated by the city council.

Board members concurred with chairman George Meenaghan to "forge ahead" with the study despite another group's examination of LP&L.

"I could care less about this other committee," he said, apparently referring to a group recently appointed by the city council to study and then make recommendations about the future of the municipally-owned power company.

The board also heard an oral presentation by the engineering firm of Tippett and Gee, Inc., of Abilene.

Gee told the board that coal appears to be the fuel of the future because of increasing regulation against the burning of oil and gas.

His firm, he said, proposes to study the cost, design, operation, regulation, fuel procurement and environmental factors involved in a feasibility study of a coal plant here.

The study would require eight to 10 months, a time period that appeared unsatisfactory to Meenaghan, who said the board would prefer a report before other committees studying the future of LP & L make recommendations to the city council.

He apparently was referring to a committee formed by the city council last month. The group is to study the municipally power company's future.

Gee told the board it could take up to 10 years to design and then build a coal-fired plant.

Load growth factors indicate the city probably will need additional power source by 1982.

Dr. Meenaghan questioned cost factors of building a coal plant small enough for Lubbock's needs. Gee replied it would be impossible to predict costs until all factors are weighed. But, he added, it is possible to build an economically sound plant in smaller models.

Lubbock Bank's Call For State Panel Rehearing Rejected

The State Banking Board has denied a request to rehear its approval of the Lubbock Liberty State Bank charter application.

Filed by the Bank of the West of Lubbock, the request sought a reversal of the Aug. 2 charter approval for the 6500 Indiana Ave. bank.

The action came in the form of denying applications for rehearing decisions on three proposed Lubbock banks. Robert Stewart, state banking commissioner, said the Bank of the West was obliged to file on all three banks because the three charter applications were considered at once.

Charter applications for the First State Bank and First Southwest Bank in Lubbock were denied by the state board.

Stewart said Wednesday in Austin that the Bank of the West could ask a Travis County district court to overrule the banking board but said, "I don't know if they'll do that."

Liberty State is chartered as an affiliate of American State Bank to share the same board of directors with the larger bank.

First State Bank would have shared boards with Plains National Bank. First Southwest Bank would not have been affiliated, but nearly half of its stockholders would have been stockholders in the First National Bank.

Security National Bank, the Bank of the West and Lubbock National Bank opposed the charters in hearings last summer.

Victim Describes Shooting At Cottonoil Mill

By FRANK PATRICK
Avalanche-Journal Staff

Glenn Barbee said he was performing routine office duties at the Plains Co-op Oil Mill when he suddenly saw death staring him in the face.

He said he didn't have time to panic. "The first thing I thought of was to get somewhere out of the way," Barbee, 48, told jurors in Judge Denzil Bevers's 72nd District Court.

During testimony Wednesday, Barbee, assistant office manager at the mill, made a positive identification of defendant Jones Weldon Daniels as the man who walked into the firm's office complex at 2901 Ave. A, leveled a pistol at him and began firing.

The office worker said he was shot in the back as he crouched beneath his desk.

Daniels, 38, a former employee at the mill, is accused of Barbee's attempted murder in connection with the July 17 shooting spree.

Dressed in a green leisure suit, Barbee, of 1919 34th St., said he was in an open area of the offices about 10 a.m. when he noticed, from the corner of his eye, that someone had entered.

He said he recognized Daniels and was about to speak to him.

"Well, whenever he noticed I had seen him, he raised up his shirt and pulled a pistol out of his belt," Barbee, speaking in a calm, level voice, testified.

He said he watched as Daniels took the pistol with both hands and pointed it at his head from a distance of 15 to 20 feet.

"When I decided he was going to shoot, I was looking down the gun barrel right at him," the witness said.

Barbee opined that if the gunman had not been so deliberate in his actions, he would have been shot immediately. But, he said, he barely had time to turn and run toward his office and away from the open area.

"He fired as I turned; I threw up my hands and started to run — it all happened simultaneously," Barbee said.

"The first shot hit me in these fingers here," he continued, indicating fingers on his right hand.

Barbee, whose job entails accounting and paperwork, said he ran to his office area, where he slipped and fell on his stomach. He said he then heard a second shot.

"I was already on the floor, so I crawled up under the desk," Barbee testified.

The witness explained to Asst. Dist. Atty. Jim Darnell that he had gone under the desk headfirst, leaving a portion of his body exposed. Barbee said he thought the gunman would leave because "he had already fired two shots at me."

Darnell asked what happened next.

"The next thing I knew was when he shot me in the back," Barbee answered.

After that, Barbee said, he heard additional shots. He indicated that he believed five shots were fired in all.

Barbee said he never lost consciousness and named Daniels as his assailant to co-workers and to police.

"Is there any doubt in your mind who shot you that day?" Darnell queried.

"There never has been any doubt," Barbee stated.

The witness said he underwent surgery the day of the shooting and indicated he was in the intensive care unit of a Lubbock hospital for about six days.

Earlier, Barbee had testified that he knew Daniels because the latter had worked for him for a time when he was the manager of a Brownfield gin in the late 1960s.

He said he had encountered Daniels in late 1977 at the oil mill and that the two had spoken of their earlier relationship at the gin. He said that, thereafter, he had seen Daniels around the mill, but had not had a real conversation with him.

Barbee said he had no idea why Daniels would want to kill him.

Daniels, dressed in a light, short-sleeved shirt and checked pants, shook his head back and forth in negative gestures twice during Barbee's testimony.

Other witnesses agreed several shots were fired but said they could not identify the gunman.

Jeff Tucker, 23, said he and two female employees took cover in a vault.

He said that after hearing what sounded like firecrackers and seeing the two women running toward the vault, he followed behind them without really realizing what was happening.

"After we got in, it got awfully quiet," Tucker said.

He said he opened the vault door and looked toward Barbee's desk and saw a gunman. He said the gunman "pointed the gun right at me and fired." Tucker indicated he shut the vault door again.

Tucker said the gunman — described by him and other witnesses as a short, slightly built black man — appeared "very similar" to the defendant.

Employee Linda Shirley said she dived under her desk when she saw a gun.

David Louder, 19, said he crawled down some stairs and hid in a vault on another floor.

During other testimony, shift supervisor Ed Rolfe Jr. said he had been friendly with the defendant. Rolfe said Daniels had been upset because he felt he was not being paid enough money.

Rolfe described Daniels as a good, hard-working employee.

He said Daniels had told him that he had talked to Barbee in connection with the salary dispute.

At a question from Darnell, Rolfe said he had visited the defendant at his residence and had seen a gun there.

Wayne Martin, assistant general manager at the mill, said Daniels had talked to him about his salary June 22 and then terminated employment.

Martin said Daniels seemed "pretty argumentative and agitated" during the conversation. Martin indicated that Daniels had quit the company after being refused a raise.

Testimony before a nine-man, three-woman jury was to resume today.

Student Files New Dope Suit Against Tech

Texas Tech University student John Paul Jones has filed another federal court suit against university officials, claiming the administration, in seeking to impose conditions for holding a campus demonstration against marijuana laws, is interfering with his constitutional rights.

The suit asks U.S. District Judge Herbert O. Woodward to issue a temporary restraining order voiding administration restrictions on the proposed Saturday demonstration.

Jones, 20, of San Antonio is a member of a group called Concerned and Political Students.

He had filed a similar suit against the university last month, but no court action was taken when parties agreed to an out-of-court settlement.

In an affidavit, Jones said the university Oct. 9 had approved a grounds use permit for the upcoming demonstration, but cited two conditions imposed by the school as objectionable.

In granting the permit, officials said the sponsoring organization should make clear to demonstrators that violation of laws or administrative regulations would be prohibited during the rally.

The administration also requested the names of five persons, students or faculty members, to act as monitors during the proposed demonstration.

Jones said in his affidavit that he believes all persons may "non-violently civilly" disobey laws they feel are unjust. He said he planned to "tell the demonstrators just that."

The affidavit claimed the monitoring requirement was an intentional act by the administration designed to thwart the rally.

The earlier suit was filed in connection with a Sept. 16 campus demonstration by Jones' group against marijuana laws.

Guilty Plea Nets Shooting Defendant Probated Sentence

A man accused of shooting his wife to death during a 1977 incident was assessed a 10-year probated prison term Wednesday after pleading guilty to a reduced charge of voluntary manslaughter.

Daniel Ortiz Arguijo, 31, originally had been charged with murder.

Arguijo pleaded guilty to the manslaughter charge before Dist. Judge Thomas L. Clinton.

The defendant was accused in connection with the March 20, 1977, death of Angelita Arguijo, 26. Mrs. Arguijo's body reportedly was found inside her 3003 Grinnell St. residence by the victim's mother shortly before midnight.

Reports said the dead woman was in a sitting position on a couch, with a blanket draped over her shoulders. Reports indicated she had suffered a single gunshot wound to the back of the head.

Mrs. Arguijo's mother said the victim's hands were clasped over a .22-caliber pistol in her lap.

Arguijo reportedly was assessed a two-year prison term in 1967 on a conviction of attempting to pass a forged instrument.

Asst. Dist. Atty. David Nelson indicated he entered plea bargaining negotiations with defense attorney Clifford Brown after analyzing the case.

"The odds are we could not have proven a charge of murder before a jury," Nelson said.

Lebanese Slayings Puzzle Authorities

IRVING (AP) — Investigators say they have little to work on in the slaying of two Lebanese students found shot to death in a shopping center parking lot in this Dallas suburb.

"We have no leads, suspects or motives," said Sgt. Fred Bussey. "We'll have to start from scratch on this."

Police found one of the students inside a late model car and the other slumped beside it. Both were shot once in the head with a small caliber weapon.

Police were withholding identities of the students, ages 18 and 20, until the Lebanese Embassy confirms notification of next of kin.

University spokesman Tim Searson said the students were studying English in preparation for attending college in the United States.

Authorities were summoned to the scene by CB operator who had seen blood on the two men and thought there had been a traffic accident.

High Court Overrules Bell On Rate Rehearing

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Supreme Court decided, 7-2, Wednesday to stick by its decision upholding the public utility commission's method for determining the rate base of a telephone or electric power company.

It overruled a motion by Southwestern Bell Telephone Co. for a rehearing of the July 26 decision.

The telephone company said the court had substituted its judgment for the legislature's, misconstrued the Public Utility Regulatory Act and ignored 30 years of precedents in utility cases.

"Bell went to the courts after the Texas

Public Utility Commission granted it a $57.8 million rate increase in December 1976 — far below the $230.8 million Bell had sought.

The commission, essentially, based the rate of return it would allow Bell on a rate base consisting of the original cost of Bell's equipment.

Bell insisted in its motion for rehearing that the legislature intended for the commission to use a mix of original cost and the considerably higher figure for replacement cost.

The court's original opinion said the "adjusted" capital cost figure is to be used as a test of whether a given set of rates would allow a reasonable return to a utility.

Bell said the commission never got around to computing a rate of return — 8.37 percent — on adjusted value of capital until Bell filed its original appeal with an Austin district court.

"The legislature deliberately did not say rates should be 'restated against' or 'compared to' the adjusted value of invested capital," but declared they must be "based upon it," Bell said in its motion.

Bell also protested the court's decision that rate appeals initially must be decided by district judges, who can review the record made before the utility commission but cannot take new evidence.

"This court, through judicial legislation, has redrafted (the utility) act, abandoned well-reasoned regulatory guidelines, struck down the role of the judiciary as an effective buffer against administrative excesses and created confusion where harmony and understanding heretofore existed," Bell said.

Justices Sam Johnson and T.C. Chadick dissented from the decision to deny Bell a new hearing. Chadick said utility companies were entitled to have full trials, with all the evidence laid out, on rate adequacy appeals.

"The constitutional guarantee that the company shall 'have the right of trial by jury' has been cut to shreds," Chadick said.

The court also refused to reconsider its July 26 decision denying monetary damages to former Bell executive James Ashley, who accused the company of bugging his telephone before it fired him as commercial manager in San Antonio four years ago.

In the July decision, the court said it could find "no reversible error" in the Eastland Court of Civil Appeals' ruling that Ashley had failed to do more than raise a suspicion that his phone was tapped.

The Eastland decision, upheld by the court, reversed a $1 million damages award entered by the trial court in San Antonio.

Ashley contended in his motion for a rehearing that he would have got a new trial had he been able to obtain an affidavit from Bell district manager Royce Brookmole of Midland earlier.

Brookmole's affidavit, given in April 1978, said he knew Ashley's phone was being tapped but he failed to come forth earlier because Bell attorneys said he would be fired.

In another case, the court set a Nov. 29 hearing on a request by Lila Faye Norris that it issue an order compelling Comptroller Bob Bullock to issue a check covering a personal injury judgment against the state and in her favor.

Bullock said he could not issue the $82,597 check unless he had either a voucher from the State Department of Highways and Public Transportation — the defendant in the personal injury case — or a court order.

"We are now engaged in a contest with bureaucratic stubbornness aimed at nullifying and frustrating" the Texas Tort Claims Act, the Norris appeal said.

But the highway department said it had to wait for a general revenue appropriation since money in the highway fund can be spent only to build and improve highways.

The court denied a request by Howard Hughes Medical Institute that it order Harris County Probate Judge Pat Gregory to eject a Houston law firm from a suit by Hughes's relatives.

Hughes's aunt, Annette Gano Lummis of Houston, has moved in Gregory's court for a judgment that a "lost will" purportedly leaving all of Hughes's wealth to the institute is invalid.

The institute failed in an attempt to have the firm of Andrews, Kurth, Campbell and Jones, which represents Mrs. Lummis, removed from the case. Andrews, Kurth was the institute's law firm for about 20 years.

Two Defendants Lose Murder Plot Appeal

AUSTIN (AP) — A man and woman lost an appeal Wednesday of their convictions and 30-year sentences in an alleged plot to murder the man's wife.

The Texas Court of Criminal Appeals affirmed the verdict and sentences asnessed by a Houston jury against Eleanor Jackson Saunders and William F. Spencer.

In another case, the court upheld the Texas Air Control Board's rule on "excessive emissions," which had been challenged by Halliburton Co.

Mrs. Saunders, a Winnie washer and rice farmer, and Spencer, a rancher and rice farmer, were accused of hiring "killers" to murder Spencer's wife, Helene. The "hired guns" turned out to be undercover law enforcement officers.

The Spencers were involved in a protracted divorce case in 1975.

According to case records, Spencer allegedly discussed killing his wife with an ex-convict, who brought in a federal agent and a Department of Public Safety intelligence officer.

During the trial, the jury heard tapes the officers made of their discussions with Spencer and Mrs. Saunders.

The officers said they received $2,500 in advance to kill Mrs. Spencer and $2,500 after presenting her personal items as proof of her death.

Spencer and Mrs. Saunders claimed they thought the "hit men" had been sent by Mrs. Spencer to draw her ex-husband into a murder plot that later would be used to blackmail him into a better property settlement. Spencer said he went along because he simply wanted a speedy conclusion to the drawn-out divorce proceeding.

The high court upheld the use of the clandestine tapes, saying a line of U.S. Supreme Court decisions authorized the use of such evidence.

The Halliburton Co. was convicted in Houston and fined $250 and $500 for two alleged violations of an air control board rule against "excessive" visible emissions.

The company claimed the rule was vague and failed to define "excessive."

"The terms 'excessive visible emissions' are not defined in the regulations, but the absence of such a definition does not establish that those terms are unconstitutionally vague, indefinite and uncertain," the court said.

In other cases, the court:

— Reversed the probation revocation of Joseph Doris Matte because prosecutors did not specify what false statement he allegedly made in purchasing a gun. Matte had been placed on 10 years probation on an aggravated assault conviction.

— Ruled that the antibiotic tetracycline is not included in legal definitions of "dangerous" drugs. The court dismissed prosecution of Melvin Jackson of Dallas, who had been sentenced to 30 days for possession of tetracycline.

— Reversed a Randall County marijuana conviction because the defendant was arrested after police illegally stopped his car. The court sent the case of Richard Benton back to Canyon for possible new trial.

Brother Billy Testifies For Lance Probers

ATLANTA (AP) — Billy Carter testified for more than two hours Wednesday before a grand jury investigating the financial dealings of former federal budget director Bert Lance. The president's brother emerged saying he felt the jury was on a fishing expedition.

He said Lance's troubles were promoted by "a Republican, Yankee press" seeking to "get" Lance.

"I think they're fishing. I don't think Bert has done a thing wrong," Billy Carter told reporters as he emerged from the federal courthouse here.

Carter said he was asked about loans made to the Carter warehouse by the National Bank of Georgia, once headed by Lance.

He said he told the jury that he borrowed from Lance "because he was a personal friend." But Carter insisted that he received no special favors from Lance and he added that the loans were in line with quotations he had received from eight other banks.

He told reporters he had taken the Fifth Amendment several times during the questioning, but he said that related to questions about his personal business for which he had not brought sufficient records to give answers.

In a brief interview outside the jury room before he testified, Carter said that the family peanut warehouse had borrowed $1.1 million in construction loans from the National Bank of Georgia.

The warehouse business also utilized revolving credit which varied from $1 million to $4.6 million to buy peanuts, he said.

Carter said all the loans had been repaid in full.

Court Agrees To Hear Auto Judgment Case

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Supreme Court today agreed to hear a request that it order the state to pay an $82,597 judgment in an automobile accident case.

It set a Nov. 29 hearing on Lila Faye Norris' plea for a writ of mandamus commanding Comptroller Bob Bullock to issue a check covering the judgment in her favor by a Matagorda County district court.

Bullock refused to pay the judgment without either a voucher from the Texas Department of Highways and Public Transportation, the defendant in the auto case, or a court order.

The highway department refused to issue a voucher. It said it could not use the state highway fund because it was limited to maintenance and construction of highways. The money must be appropriated from the state's general revenue fund, it said.

We are now engaged in a contest with bureaucratic stubbornness aimed at nullifying and frustrating the Texas Tort Claims Act, the Norris appeal said.

It noted the highway department had appealed the original judgment to the state supreme court and lost.

"Can a state agency nullify the tort claims act and disregard the judgment of its court by refusing to sign a voucher? Surely not," it said.

The highway department said in its answer it has always paid judgments against it but it does not have money on hand that it can legally spend for that purpose at this time. It added that interest is accruing on the Norris judgment until it is paid.

"In any event, the Legislature will convene in January," it said.

Transplant Case Takes Unusual Turn

BOISE, Idaho (AP) — More than 30 people who came in contact with a woman who died of rabies after a cornea transplant have started a painful series of vaccinations.

The 37-year-old woman received a cornea from a 39-year-old Baker, Ore., man who doctors now say probably died of rabies.

An autopsy had disclosed no communicable disease before the transplant. But on Monday, laboratory tests confirmed that the woman died of the disease and examination of tissue samples of the man made officials believe he probably died of rabies.

Jim Hughes, director of community relations at St. Alphonsus Hospital, identified the woman as Constance Wesselman of Boise, a native of Colorado Springs, Colo., and the mother of four children.

In Oregon, a county medical officer identified the man as Frederick C. Stone, a forester.

Health officials immediately began contacting persons who may have come in contact with Mrs. Wesselman or Stone.

Hughes said 34 of more than 100 persons interviewed Tuesday were recommended for vaccinations, but it will be up to each whether to receive them. The shots will be given over the next three weeks.

Once a person contracts rabies, it is almost always fatal, health officers said. Most of those being urged to get the shots are close family members or doctors and nurses who provided care to the woman.

Ehrlichman s Get Divorce

SANTA FE, N.M. (AP) — Watergate figure John Ehrlichman and his wife of 29 years, Jeanne, have been granted an uncontested divorce.

EHRLICHMAN

District Judge Thomas Donnelly of Santa Fe signed the divorce decree Monday, and court records said a private agreement was reached on property and support. Ehrlichman, who now lives in Santa Fe, filed the divorce petition under New Mexico's liberal divorce law, which requires only a showing of incompatibility.

Mrs. Ehrlichman, who lives in Hunts Point near Seattle, has said the divorce was her husband's idea.

Ehrlichman, former aide to Richard Nixon, was released from the Swift Trail federal camp near Safford, Ariz., on April 17 after serving an 18-month sentence imposed for his role in the Watergate cover-up and Pentagon Papers cases.

He was convicted along with Nixon aide Robert Halde- man of conspiring to obstruct justice, obstructing justice and multiple counts of living under oath.

9-Year-Old Finishes Race

GLASTONBURY, Conn. (AP) — Howard Breinan was more than an hour behind the winner in the New York City Marathon, but he still made a good showing for a 9-year-old.

He was the youngest competitor among the 11,000 runners from 28 foreign countries and 49 states.

Howard's father, Edward, a 36-year-old engineer, also was in the race but wrenched his back and finished behind his son.

The boy finished the 26-mile race Sunday in 3 hours and 26 minutes, his best time, but short of the 3:08 record for 9-year-olds he was shooting for. His mother, Ellie, explains that he fell victim to "the stitch," which is runners' jargon for a stomach muscle cramp.

He was one hour and 14 minutes behind the winner, Bill Rodgers.

Howard, 4-feet-4 1/2 and 65 1/2 pounds, also ran unofficially in the Boston Marathon, and three weeks later in an "ultra-marathon," which, at 50 miles, was almost twice the length of the one in New York.

Actor Helps Nab Thief

NEW YORK (AP) — Comedian Chevy Chase did a little amateur detective work and helped nab an alleged thief in a hotel.

Chase was staying at the Sherry-Netherland Hotel on Oct. 13 and when he returned to his room, he found a man claiming to be a security officer. Suspicious, the comedian telephoned the hotel security office with a description.

CHEVY CHASE

A hotel guest was arrested minutes later in a 17th-floor suite, and authorities said a stolen chinchilla coat was found in the room. The man was arraigned Monday on charges of criminal possession of stolen property and was ordered held without bail, the Manhattan district attorney's office said.

Babysitter Rears Children

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Alyce Warner says she got her start as a foster mother 10 years ago when she was babysitting for five kids and their father "just didn't bother coming back for them."

"Everybody told me to put them in a home, but I didn't want to do that," says Mrs. Warner, 52.

'Racist Rhetoric' Rapped

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Coréta Scott King says Mayor Frank Rizzo is using "racist rhetoric" in his campaign to amend the city's home rule charter so he can try for a third term.

"When the mayor of the fourth-largest city of America says that he 'welcomes' a 'vote white' campaign ... he is clearly playing the politics of fear," said the wife of the late Dr. Martin Luther King.

Mrs. King, speaking at a press conference Tuesday, referred to remarks made by Rizzo Sept. 21, when he accused black politicians of calling on blacks to "vote black." Rizzo then said he would "welcome" a division where whites would vote for him.

Rizzo later modified his statements, saying blacks who think like him should vote for him, too. He has avoided black neighborhoods in his campaign and has opposed public housing projects, school busing for racial balance and hiring quotas.

FRANK RIZZO

Union Head Wins Award

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The head of a union representing thousands of workers in defense plants has won the 1978 SANE Peace Award for suggesting that the government spends too much money on defense.

The award was presented Tuesday night to William W. Wimpisinger, president of the International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers. About a third of the union's 943,000 members are in defense-related industries.

Wimpisinger was honored for urging that the government shift funds from defense to programs for housing, transportation and the environment.

In a news conference prior to the awards ceremony at the Ben Franklin Hotel, Wimpisinger said that "peace conversion" of defense-related industries would produce more jobs, not fewer, and eliminate cycles of unemployment that go with defense spending.

Expansion Due For Books

YAKIMA, Wash. (AP) — If William O. Douglas is expansive enough to donate his books and papers, the Yakima Valley Museum will expand to hold them.

Cathy Douglas, wife of the former U.S. Supreme Court justice, said during a recent visit that her husband and museum officials are negotiating a bequest, although the details have not been worked out. She said that if the talks are successful, the museum plans to announce an expansion program to make room for the documents.

Douglas grew up in this central Washington town and taught briefly at what is now Davis High School. He still has a residence in nearby Goose Prairie. On Friday, Yakima's Federal Building will be renamed for Douglas.

Douglas, 80, was on the Supreme Court from 1959 until he retired in 1975.

Poems Reveal Rhodesian Youths' Feelings On War

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — For six years, Rhodesia has been in a war where life goes on amid the battles and the land mines.

Men go to work and return. If white, they must spend seven months each year in the military. Children are born, go to school, grow up. Everyone faces the fear that a father or brother or son may be killed in the fighting between black nationalist guerrillas and the government. Women and children, too, have been among the 11,000 victims of random bullets and mines.

Now children's feelings about the war have begun showing up in their poetry in school magazines. There is this poem, for instance, by a 12-year-old.

Can anyone play
The war game today?
When there is no front line
It's an attack on the weak.
A minute to bury a mine.

The mine explodes
On dusty roads
The vehicle is thrown into the air
The child's lost his arm
He was doing no harm
He just shouldn't be there.

Can anyone play
The war game today?
When the enemy is hard to define
Who is friend? Who is foe?
He really can't know
As a soldier he's only part-time.

In another poem, titled "Memories," a 14-year-old sees her brother's death through the eyes of her father.

Can you remember the words,
It's a beautiful baby boy?
Can you remember your feelings
Of immense happiness and joy?

Now all you have is memories
Of your son so brave and bold
He never did return
To watch the day grow old.

In the poem "But You Didn't," a 15-year-old remembers her high school sweetheart.

Remember the time you lent me your car and I dented the Fender?
I thought you'd kill me but you didn't.
Remember the time I spilt Coke on your new rug?

I thought you'd kill me but you didn't.
Remember the time I forgot to tell you the dance was formal — And you came in jeans?
I thought you'd hate me but you didn't.
Remember the countless times you tried to be serious and I giggled?
I thought you'd drop me but you didn't.
There were plenty of things you did to put up with me
To keep me happy, to love me, and there were so many things
I wanted to tell you after you returned from the bush
But you didn't ...

All the poems here are by white children, but the war affects all. Death is final — for the whites or blacks fighting for the current government, for the black guerrillas fighting to topple it. Here is one more poem that might have been written in any war, on any side, about the dread announcement from military headquarters:

Combined operations regret to announce ...
Combined operations regret to announce ... regret?
What shallow condolence betray the lips of the unconcerned.
The gesture does not suffice the loss.
What new flesh can replace the innocence of the fine heart
When the world returns to its own affairs.

Deputy State Comptroller Under Fire

AUSTIN (AP) — A published report Wednesday portrayed Deputy Comptroller Ralph Wayne as the force behind a move that broke three cheap leases and moved some comptroller employees into more expensive quarters owned by American Bank.

The Austin American-Statesman said the move helped the bank out of a possible jam with the federal government and now Wayne, a 15-year customer of American Bank, is urging that the state buy the building.

This would apparently be an even bigger favor because the bank reportedly must get rid of the building by next year to comply with federal law.

The transfer of part of the comptroller's huge staff to American's old downtown bank building cost $30,000, the newspaper said, and the rent is $29,000 a month higher.

Wayne, under investigation by the Travis County Grand Jury for allegedly using state time and employees to conduct his private business, has a line of credit of more than $21,000 at the bank, the paper said.

It said Wayne owns portions of four radio stations, a savings and loan association, several insurance companies and seven pieces of real estate.

Also, Thomas McCrummen III, a 1977 college graduate who is the son of a high bank official, has been working with the comptroller's office since December as a $1,034-a-month account examiner. McCrummen's father is vice chairman of American Bank's board.

The paper reported that when American Bank moved across the street into a new high-rise building, its old building remained empty for three years. A local businessman described it as a "hopeless white elephant."

The comptroller, who has offices in a state building near the Capitol, asked the State Board of Control for permission to move some of his growing staff to other offices.

The specifications were written, the paper said, in such a way that no building but American Bank could qualify. For example, the specifications called for a 2,600-square-foot cafeteria, and the American building had a 2,600-foot cafeteria.

City Bank Deposits Stand Fast

By BOB CAMPBELL
Avalanche-Journal Staff

For the first time ever, Lubbock banks will hold more than $1 billion in deposits through all four quarters of the year. The eight banks report $1,061,586,000 in deposits for the quarter ending Sept. 30 for a 6.7 percent increase over the $990,026,000 they held 12 months earlier.

Although the third quarter is considered the slowest of the year in West Texas, there was only a 2.2 percent decrease from the $1,063,958,000 in deposits last June 30.

Bankers were buoyed somewhat by an agricultural economy that has improved in some respects but were as worried about inflation as they have been throughout the year.

J.R. (Jimmy) Holder, executive vice president of the First National Bank, said bankers "are anxiously awaiting the harvesting of the cotton crop."

Area cotton production has been forecast to be down as much as 50 percent to about 1.5 million bales, he noted, but prices are better this fall than last, when a bumper crop was greeted with poor prices.

DENVER JOGGING STUDY
DENVER (AP) — Denver's joggers are being studied to determine whether the city's pollution causes an increase in the amount of carbon monoxide in their blood.

"Loan demand continues very strong in almost every sector of the economy," Holder said. "There is a very demand from the feedlot industry. That portion of our economy continues to be strong." "Cattle prices over the last year have been good, and our cattle feeders have made good money."

Coffee Conner, executive vice president of Lubbock National Bank, said 1978 "has been a rather flat year because of the lack of availability of funds due to last year's crop prices."

"The price was just too low from the previous year's drop," he said. "Because of the increased costs due to inflation, the availability of funds has not been as great, and because of the buildup of inventories and accounts receivable, companies and individuals are using their own funds."

Conner said the completion of the new Health Sciences Center Hospital, a teaching hospital affiliated with the Texas Tech University Medical School, early this year has been a bright spot for the Lubbock economy so far in 1978.

Weldon Gibbs, senior vice president at American State Bank, said rising interest rates in key banks around the country probably will cause a slowdown in the economy.

"Agricultural production is off some, but the economy is remaining strong," he said.

"Certainly, high interest rates are having a whole lot to do with slowing things down."

"Building industries have always been strong in Lubbock, but what's being built now is based on long-term commitments."

Gibbs said that construction based on new financing commitments would therefore be less dynamic.

"We've always withstood the slow-downs well in West Texas as compared to the nation," he said.

Tony Wayland, senior vice president at Texas Commerce Bank, said the decline in deposits for most Lubbock banks from the second to the third quarters reflects the importance of agriculture to the economy here.

"We're a farm community up here," Wayland said, "and the summer months are the slow months in our whole economy."

He said the entire American banking industry is deeply concerned about inflation but that the Lubbock economy has some things going for it that other areas do not.

"The cost of housing in Lubbock is not nearly as high as it is in some other parts of the country, and that, certainly, is a tribute to our part of the country."

Navy Jets Miss Targets; Bombs Land Near California Town

TWENTYNINE PALMS, Calif. (AP) — Attack jets from an aircraft carrier missed their practice targets and dropped 32 live bombs near a rural community, officials say.

By Wednesday, three days after the 500-pound bombs were dropped and exploded upon impact, the Navy had not publicly explained how it happened. There were no injuries.

"We saw those planes coming closer and closer on their bombing runs," said James Wheeler, a volunteer fireman in Wonder Valley. "We started getting out of there."

His wife Linda said their 8-year-old son Jimmy was "almost in shock and tears."

The blasts "set up an awful lot of fire and smoke and scared everybody," Mrs. Wheeler said. "The noise was something."

"It was like wartime," said fire chief Jack McConaha. "They were dropping them in pairs. That'll knock you out of bed."

The target was a practice bombing range on the Marine Corps base at Twentynine Palms, a major training area for both the Navy and Marines in the Mojave Desert about 120 miles east of Los Angeles.

McConaha said the bombs landed on a tract of scrub, cactus and brush owned by the federal government two miles north of homes in Wonder Valley and two to three miles south of the bombing range.

There was no public explanation from the Navy. Rear Adm. Robert E. Kirksey, commander of Carrier Division 3, ordered an investigation.

Commander John Baker, public affairs officer for the U.S. Pacific Fleet Naval Air Force, said Tuesday that the planes were six A-6 Intruder attack aircraft and four A-7 Corsair attack bombers.

The jets had flown 100 miles from the San Diego-based aircraft carrier U.S.S. Ranger to conduct weekend target practice at the sprawling desert base.

In January, an Intruder accidentally bombed a tugboat during a training exercise in the Pacific off San Diego. The tug was so badly damaged it had to be scrapped. There were no injuries.

Wonder Valley is a rural community of 2,200 about 13 miles from Twentynine Palms. "They shook us apart out here," said McConaha.

Area People Undecided On Carter Plan

raising teacher salaries.

Mrs. Lane said she thinks the district is doing all it can for Lubbock teachers with money available, but that the state is not giving teachers enough. If the state chooses to follow Carter's wage increase limit, Texas teachers will still be below the national pay average, she said.

Lubbock postal workers will apparently not be affected very much by Carter's proposals.

"We're considered a quasi-government organization." Postal Service finance director Don Blovd said. Postal workers are included under the government's retirement plan, he said, but do not get civil service pay raises.

All raises for Lubbock postal workers are granted on a negotiation basis, he said.

"The Postmaster General may recommend we go along with the president's plan," Blovd said.

If President Carter's plan limits price increases on agricultural goods to 5 percent above the last two years' averages, "it will put a lid on prices below the cost of production, and force farmers out of business," said Elbert Harp, executive director of the Grain Sorghum Producers Association here in Lubbock.

Harp called the farmer's situation "desperate," saying "the price of grain has been below the cost of production for two years already and many producers are at the point of bankruptcy. Unless things change dramatically in the future, many farmers will not be able to continue producing."

If the cost of goods the farmers must purchase were held down, Harp felt their situation might improve, but added he has "no confidence" that the voluntary program proposed by the President would be effective.

Harp foresees a takeover in agricultural production by large corporations "who can afford to operate at a loss for a few years."

"We have a lot of catching up to do with the rest of the economy before any restrictions should be placed on the prices of agricultural products," said Harp, adding, "Inflation hurts farmers just as much as anybody else, and our products are not keeping up with the trend."

Lubbock area truckers feel that if the president's new plan gives them a more competitive edge with the railroad industry, it will be a good thing, but increased competition within the trucking industry itself would bankrupt many businesses.

"They're killing the trucking business with the railroads right now," said Jerry Judkins, of Judkins Seed and Trucking, but competition between truckers is already too stiff, he believes. "It's too competitive as it is. I'm quite sure that if there were more competition, it would run us right out of business."

Judkins' company hauls seed, grain and produce to 13 states.

Bobby Shannon, of Shannon Trucking, also says that the Carter plan "will be on the right track" if it will create more competition between the railroad and trucking industries.

Paul Parker, a spokesman for the S.B. Campbell truck line, said he doubts the Carter plan will have much effect on that company since they haul solely within the state of Texas. "I think he (Carter) is referring to the interstate lines," said Parker.

Artesia Trying Harder

Coach Says Bulldogs Like Commercial

Avalanche-Journal News Service
When you're No. 2, the car rental ad had it, you try harder.

That's the same thing Mike Phipps is telling his Artesia Bulldogs this week. Artesia is ranked No. 2 among the New Mexico's Class AAA football teams this week as they prepared to tackle once-beaten Portales, which happens to be the No. 1-rated AAA squad around.

"No. 2 gets to shoot at No. 1," said Phipps as he looked ahead to Friday night's District 4-AAAA battle in Artesia's Bulldog Bowl. "It'll be interesting to see who ends up No. 1 next week in the polls."

A full-house crowd of 7,000 persons is expected for what may be the main football attraction in the Land of Enchantment this weekend.

It'll be the second week in a row that the Bulldogs will be playing the No. 1-rated football team in Class AAA. A week ago, Artesia demolished top-ranked and previously unbeaten Bloomfield 30-0, dropping the Bobcats to fourth place in the ratings and elevating Portales to the top.

Although Artesia is only 4-3 on the season, all three losses to come to bigger schools — Hobbs, Roswell and Carlsbad. Phipps figures his Bulldogs can play with anybody in AAA, as they demonstrated last week.

"We're working our way up," he said. "You know we're getting better every week. We just hope some week we can make it to that No. 1 spot."

Artesia will definitely have its hands full. Portales has one of the best football teams in the school's history.

Last week, despite the absence of speedy backs Paul Hatch and Steve Gares because of injuries, Portales blanked defending state champion Socorro 28-0. Quarterback Ron Foster, who played only part-time against Socorro because of a sore shoulder, is expected to be back at full strength for this week's key district game.

The Artesia-Portales game isn't the only big game around, though.

Defending Class AAAA state champion Clovis, which had more than its share of problems in the predistrict portion of its schedule, will put in its bid for a repeat District 4-AAAA championship against Roswell, which last week fell 21-0 to powerful Hobbs.

Hobbs, 6-1 on the season and 1-0 in 4-AAAA, will attempt to take another step toward the district title when it visits Carlsbad.

Among the smaller schools, Jal and Eunice continue to make their way toward a Nov. 2 shootout in what will probably be the District 4-AA championship game. Both Lee County schools won their league openers last week, Eunice clipping Dexter 7-0 and Jal bombing Fort Sumner 35-0. This week they'll Jal will swap opponents.

ADDED HELP — Lubbock High defensive back Jimmy Garza, who stands 5-3, gets a little extra help in defending against Monterey's 6-6 Chuck Perry. However, the "extra equipment" won't be legal tonight when Garza is forced to cover the Monterey receiver. (Staff Photo)

Undefeated Patriots Causing Excitement

By RUSS PARSONS
Avalanche-Journal Sports Staff

Before Ted Giddens came along, the biggest thing that had ever come out of Turkey, Tex., was Bob Wills.

That might change some now. Not that Giddens is going to make anyone forget the fabled Mr. Wills. He doesn't smoke a cigar, play fiddle or yell "Ah-Ha" when one of his kids scores.

Giddens is the football coach at Valley High School and his club is undefeated through its first six games.

Valley is located halfway between Turkey and Quitaque, serving a combined population of about 1,100. Giddens says that combined population is one of the reason the Patriots (they wear red, white and blue uniforms) are doing so well.

"We've got a lot of excitement going here," the first-year head coach said. "We've gotten a lot of backing from the community. We feel like we've got to do it this year and we're really excited about it."

Valley was picked by most people to be one of the best Class B teams around. Any doubt about that was dispelled the first game.

Right out of the chute, the Patriots tied Crosbyton 6-6. If a tie is like kissing your sister, Giddens must have some mighty attractive relatives.

You see, Crosbyton is one of the best teams in Class A (only one loss all year), and Valley was missing a total of four starters.

"We felt like we were a good team after that game," Giddens said. "We felt like we were playing pretty good football."

"Then in the Ralls game we really started rolling. We didn't stop until this last weekend."

The Patriots got 125 yards in penalties, had three touchdowns called back and still beat Silverton 29-10.

"You know during the year you're going to have games like that," Giddens said. "You don't want to, but you're going to have one of those games."

"We lost our best runningback (Darrell Dowd) with a sprained ankle in the first quarter and without him we were kind of shook up."

Martin May Be Ready For Vikes whole career with loose ligaments. He kind of liked it because loose ligaments never tear.

The Cowboys were installed seven-point favorites in the game which will draw a sellout crowd of 65,000 for the 7:30 p.m. CDT kickoff.

Dallas, 6-2, can move into the leadership of the National Conference East a half game ahead of Washington with a victory over Minnesota. The Vikings, 4-4, desperately need a win to keep pace with Green Bay in the NFC Central.

Minnesota is 2-5 in the regular season against Dallas and 1-4 in the playoffs against the Cowboys.

Viking Coach Bud Grant said getting ready for the Cowboys on such a short week is "like a two-minute drill."

Grant added, "We've had so many 'must' games that we've worn the word out. We're fighting for our life every week now."

Dowd should be back within two weeks, Giddens says.

Being undefeated has its advantages, but it also has definite disadvantages.

"Dad-gum, everybody we play is looking for us. They all have their best game against us. If we're not careful, we're gonna get bumped off."

But you get the feeling Giddens knows where he and his team are going.

"We've got our goals set," he said. "We've never won a zone championship before. If we can do that then we go to the district championship (game)."

"We've had some good seasons in the past, but we don't have a gold football in the trophy case. That's what we're thinking about."

And anyone standing in their way had best beware.

Monterey Meets Lubbock High of the Monterey offense, particularly the receiving corps. "We've got to stop that 'golden crane,'" Talbot said about Perry. "It might be hard for our backs to do it, though."

Although there's obviously no state title on the line — or like last season, a chance for the Plainsmen to claim at least a share of the league crown — there's this deal with the Silver Spurs. And that's something both schools take seriously.

Not since 1975, when the Westerners won the loop title for the last time, have the Spurs been in their trophy case. And to add fuel to the fire, Talbot, while head coach at LHS, has yet to defeat Monterey.

"I've got the Spurs in my briefcase," said Odom. "And I'm going to show them to our players after practice (Wednesday afternoon), because it might be the last chance they get to see them for awhile... the way Lubbock's been playing lately."

Speedster David Shepard of Freeport, who scored both TDs against Ranger, will be playing for the Baby Buffaloes. Shephard ripped off a 94-yard kickoff return for a TD and caught a 77-yard pass from quarterback Matt Patterson of Sweetwater for the other.

Patterson will be back at quarterback, with Danny Clark of Lockney at tailback and Joe Hicks of Amarillo High at fullback.

Jerry Moore, formerly of Midland Lee, will be opening at wingback, Steve Thomas of Seminole I tight end.

Tech's Picadors will be under the field direction of Rex Jones of Anton and Jack Godfrey, a pair of walk-on athletes. Paul Rodgers, a scholarship athlete from Dainergfield, will start at tailback, beside of Kenne th James, the 190-pound graduate of Dunbar.

Backing them up will be Seagraves'

The Silver Spurs tradition dates back to 1956 when the two played for the first time on the Class AAAA level.

While Odom was lauding his offensive unit, Talbot was claiming inconsistency by the Westerners was one of the causes that led Lubbock down the road of defeat last week.

"When an opportunity came," said Talbot. "We couldn't come up with the big play when we had too."

And, he added, the way Monterey performed against Plainview "is not very good news for us."

But what it boils down to, both agree, is the old wanna. Or an intangible, as Jimmy the Greek might say.

LCHS-BORGER JV
The Lubbock Christian High School Eagles will take a 6-1 record to Borger tonight when the visit the Borger junior varsity.

Lubbock Christian, whose only setback of the season was to Abernathy, have been relying on a strong ground attack to dominate opponents this season. LCHS has rushed for 1,402 yards compared to opponents 202.

However, one area that's been a problem (if there is such a thing as a 6-1 team having problems) is in penalties. The Eagles have been penalized 47 times for 541 yards. Meanwhile, foes have only made mistakes 33 times for 283 yards. "Many people don't realize this but playing a large school's junior varsity like Borger is like playing against any AA varsity team," said Lubbock Christian Coach George Harper.

Borger, which sports a 4-3 record, is described by Harper as a larger junior varsity team.

"There tackles are between 240-250 and they like to cram the ball down your throat," said the LCHS mentor. "We're like grasshoppers in their sight." The Eagles line averages 170 pounds.

Defensively, Harper expects Borger to lineup in a 5-2 monster.

Does Borger like to stunt?
"They don't have to," said Harper. "Because they are so big and strong."

Lemon Places Squeeze On Pale Managing Year

LONG BEACH, Calif. (AP) — The New York Yankees' dramatic drive to the World Championship was one of baseball's most spectacular comebacks, but even that pales in comparison to Manager Bob Lemon's personal reversal of fortunes this year.

Only a few months ago, Lemon was managing the Chicago White Sox, a team that seemed destined to go nowhere. Things grew even more bleak for him when he was fired on June 30.

That was when his luck bottomed out.

Three weeks later, the Yankees hired Lemon to replace Billy Martin.

"I was let go by Chicago and really down in the dumps. Then all of a sudden I find myself managing in the World Series," said Lemon, named American League Manager of the Year Wednesday by The Associated Press.

"I feel like a man who's come from the lowest desert to the highest mountaintop. I just can't imagine all this happening to me."

Lemon said following the Yankees' six-game victory over the Los Angeles Dodgers in the World Series that it would take a while for him to fully realize what's happened.

He still hasn't.

"I'm trying to get some rest, but nothing's really hit me," he said. "I'm not down to earth yet."

When Lemon took over the Yankees, they trailed Boston by 10 1/2 games in the American League East. Under his guidance, they caught the Red Sox, then finally won the harrowing one-game showdown when the two clubs finished the season tied.

The Yankees went on to beat Kansas City in the AL playoffs. Then, achieving a feat unprecedented in the 75-year history of the World Series, they bounced back to win four straight games after losing the first two.

Lemon, a quiet, soft-spoken man in marked contrast to the fiery Martin, seemed just the balm needed by the frequently bickering and troubled Yankees.

"The only things that concerns me is what the players do between the white lines," said Lemon, a Hall of Fame pitcher who won 20 games seven times during a 13-year career with the Cleveland Indians.

"This club will take advice. The players do what it takes to help the team win ball games, and that's what important."

"It seems that players today in general express themselves more, talk more freely to the media, and especially on this Yankee club. Different managers express themselves in different ways, too," Lemon continued. "I guess it has a lot to do with how you were brought up, whether you're a sort of quiet person or whether you talk a lot. I do know you can't force your personality on somebody else, whether you're a player or a manager. Nothing bad has happened to me in that regard so far, knock on wood."

Lemon spurns rah-rah leadership and said he had just one formal meeting with the Yankees, that one during his first day on the job.

"We had a five-minute meeting and I just told them that as far as I was concerned, the season started that day and to go out there and win some games and have some fun."

They did.

Rangers Take Gamble On Trade With Padres

DALLAS (AP) — Texas Rangers first baseman Mike Hargrove was traded Wednesday to the San Diego Padres in a deal involving four other players and cash.

"They probably did a good thing to trade me to the other league," Hargrove said. "If they hadn't, I'd come in with a crowbar, a stick of dynamite and a shotgun and would have eaten first base if I had to to help beat Texas."

He became the latest bargaining chip in the wheeling-dealing of team owner Brad Corbett.

Hargrove, infielder Kurt Bevacqua and catcher Bill Fahey were dealt to the Padres for outfielder Oscar Gamble, catcher Dave Roberts and an undisclosed amount of cash which two Dallas newspapers estimate at between $250,000 and $300,000.

"I knew it would come someday, but I'm surprised and hurt it happened this soon," said Hargrove, the American League Rookie of the Year in 1974.

Hargrove got the official word Tuesday night during a dinner with Corbett, reported the Dallas News and Dallas Times Herald.

Owners Stay Reticent About Rose Situation

CINCINNATI (AP) — Major league baseball owners are reticent, so far, to discuss Cincinnati Reds third baseman Pete Rose's decision to place himself on the re-entry draft list.

Strict rules governing "tampering" with unsigned players, and possibly speculation about Rose's advancing age of 37, may have tempered comments.

Rose, in a salary dispute with the Reds, last week declared his intention to seek bids from other major league clubs. He even made a list of eight he would prefer to play for besides the Reds.

Ruly Carpenter, president of the Phillies, refused any comment. "He won't say a word about it," a club spokesman said. "Last year we got in a little trouble for some comments by manager Danny Ozark about Rich Gossage."

Yankees owner George Steinbrenner said he had not decided who New York was interested in the draft.

"All I can say is we are looking at everyone on the free agent list. We rule out nobody."

Al Campanis, vice president in charge of player personnel for the Dodgers, said there had been a telephone discussion with Rose. Rose made the call.

He said the Dodgers, like the Reds, did not like to get involved in the draft for veterans.

"It is doubtful we would get involved. The exorbitant salaries have got to subside sooner or later," Campanis said.

"We have not been successful in the re-entry draft," said Kansas City General Manager Joe Burke.

"We haven't been willing to pay the exorbitant salaries."

The bidding begins Nov. 3.

Former Texas Rangers manager Bill Hunter described Hargrove as "the kind of guy you like to build a team around."

But Hunter was axed with just one game left in the season, and now the player he prized has been traded in an apparent economy move by the Ranger management.

"I've had some time to get over the shock and I'm looking forward to going there," said Hargrove. "But I didn't want to leave. I don't understand it other than maybe the economics involved."

The Rangers had been considered pennant contenders. But it was a disappointing season for the Rangers at the box office, with losses approaching $2 million, as well as the diamond. And team management apparently has backed up the bus in a cost-cutting drive.

The Hargrove swap is the second trade for the Rangers since the end of the season. Earlier the team dealt slugger Bobby Bonds and Len Barker to Cleveland for Jim Kera and Larvell Blanks.

"I almost wish I didn't have so many good friends on the team," said Hargrove. "Then it would make it a lot easier to hate the Rangers."

Padres owner Ray Kroc, who personally likes Rose, was quoted in a September San Diego sports publication as saying his plans are to concentrate on young players. But the publication noted Kroc has changed his mind before.

Buzzie Bavasi, president of the Angels, is also a Rose friend but was non-committal.

"As far as I'm concerned, Pete Rose belongs in Cincinnati. I believe he should use every effort to stay in Cincinnati and that the club should use every effort to keep him," Bavasi said. "I think if Cincinnati comes close to any offer he receives, he will stay in Cincinnati. I know I would respect him for it."

Yankees Receive Champs' Trophy

NEW YORK (AP) — The 1978 World Series championship trophy was presented to the city Wednesday by George Steinbrenner, owner of the New York Yankees.

"I think it belongs to the city and to the people," Steinbrenner said. "It was a victory for the city and the people in it."

The gold trophy has been on display in the rotunda of City Hall since last Thursday when more than two million New Yorkers turned out for a parade in honor of the team.

Steinbrenner and Yankee shortstop Bucky Dent, who was named the Series' most valuable player, also were presented with keys to the city by Mayor Edward Koch at City Hall on Wednesday.

One More Go-Round For Seattle Slew

NEW YORK (AP) — Seattle Slew, the 1977 Horse of the Year, will pass up the Washington, D.C. International and make his final start of his career in the Nov. 11 Stuyvesant Handicap at Aqueduct, his owners announced Wednesday.

The Nov. 4 International at Laurel would have been Seattle Slew's first grass test.

With the addition of Seattle Slew, winner of the Woodward and Marlboro this year, the New York Racing Association announced that the purse for the 11-8 mile Stuyvesant would be boosted from $50,000-added to $100,000-added.

Five teams will compete in the J T King Invitational, which will kickoff Monday at 8 a.m. A second round is on tap Monday at 1 p.m., and the final round will be played Tuesday starting at 8 a.m.

Joining the host Red Raiders will be TCU, West Texas State, Abilene Christian and Cameron (Okla.).

Slated to go for the Raiders are Mark Graff (76), Larry Seligmann (76), Dennis Winters (77.7), Jean St. Germain (78.6) and Kevin Foster (80).

Tech is coming off a fourth place finish in the Eastern New Mexico Invitational Tournament last weekend in Clovis, N.M.

Ex-Raider Tillman Developing Good Hands, Don Shula Says

MIAMI (AP) — Miami Dolphin Andre Tillman, the tight end with the hionic knee, seems to have also developed a set of magnetic hands.

The 6-foot-5, 230-pound Texas Tech product missed all his rookie year because of a knee operation. In the operation, Dolphin physician Herbert Virgin enlarged a right knee ligament to three times its size to prevent further damage.

The past three years, Tillman's knee relegated him to blocking duty. But he said the overlarge ligament has stretched and loosened, and his performance this season reflects the change.

Tillman, who caught eight passes in Sunday's loss to New England, has 17 receptions for 190 yards and three touchdowns this season. At the halfway point, he's already surpassed his best previous season totals in all three categories.

"The thing about Tillman is that he's feeling better. He's had a heckuva time in practice the last three years. His knee would swell on him, and he was in pain," Coach Don Shula said.

"It was tough for him, but he was still our best blocker. Nobody is happier than me to see him doing well. And with him catching the ball the way he is now, it adds a lot to the offense," Shula said.

"I've always had confidence I could catch the ball," Tillman said Wednesday. "But I didn't have the speed in my leg. You can't go out there with a stiff leg and be comfortable."

"If you have a lot of speed, it's going to help you get open a lot more," he said.

"An operation is always tough on the knee. It makes it hard to practice or do anything because it's bothering you all the time. We have rough practices here, and that didn't help."

"This year was our first easy training camp because of the exhibitions and the season starting earlier, and that did help," Tillman said.

The National Football League's new "one-chuck" rule, which allows receivers to be hit only once — within five yards of the line of scrimmage — has also helped, Tillman said.

Williams, Richardson Combo Doing Well

An AP Sports Analysis
By ALEX SACHARE
AP Sports Writer

There has been a changing of the guard in New York. The Rolls Royce backcourt of Walt Frazier and Earl Monroe is no more.

The torch has been passed to flashy youngsters Ray Williams and Mike "Sugar Ray" Richardson, the Knicks' top draft choices the past two years. How well they perform will determine, along with the play of $3-million center Marvin Webster, how far the team goes this season.

Frazier and Monroe led the Knicks to the National Basketball Association championship in 1973. Those were the good old days when a capacity crowd of 19,694 flocked each game night to Madison Square Garden to cheer the dazzling displays put on by the guards whose flair, both on and off the court, lent so much character to that team.

But a year ago the Knicks decided the injury-plagued Frazier had lost it and banished him to Richfield, Ohio, to play out the string as a Cleveland Cavalier. And this summer, Garden manager, in a baffling display of penny-pinching, decided Monroe was not worth the money he was asking and didn't bother to sign him.

Monroe, a darling of the Garden crowds who could still put in 25 solid minutes per night and might also fill some of the empty seats that are turning up with alarming regularity, remains unsigned. At last report he was seeking $300,000, a comedown from his salary of $375,000 last year. The Knicks had offered him $200,000 and were showing no tendency toward compromise.

"At some point these fellows have to begin to realize what they are worth," Garden boss Sonny Werblin said in his most recent public statement on the Monroe affair. "These fellows have to start facing the facts. They have agents feeding their egos and telling them how much they're worth."

"I know. I was once an agent," Monroe says. "I was once an agent."

Monroe may yet be back. There are those empty seats, over 9,000 of them

Tuesday night, to consider. At $10 per ticket, Monroe might fill them in a hurry. Or he might sign with some other NBA team. He certainly could help virtually any club in the league.

In either case, Williams and Richardson are the guards of the future. And for Williams at least, the future is now. He scored over 20 points in each of the Knicks' first five games this year.

"Ray is a pro guard," says Coach Willis Reed. "By the end of last season he had convinced me he is a better scorer than I had thought. He is not a great shooter but he'll get his points. Driving, going to the boards, getting fouled — he'll score in double figures every night."

And Ray is the man who will make our running game go. He has the talent to do it and he's had a year's experience. He's the one we're counting on.

That's fine with Williams, who played college ball at Minnesota before being drafted No. 1 by the Knicks a year ago.

"I try to get us running when I'm out there, that's the key," he said. "If we can fit into a nice running game, that's when we start complementing each other and getting our shots. That's when we're at our best. I try to give us some leadership, some direction — that's my main priority."

Does he think of himself as the heir apparent to Frazier and Monroe?

"It sure looks that way," he replied with a smile. "I'm ready to accept that role. I think I can handle it."

Then, referring to Reed, he added, "All I need is a little help from my man. When things go bad, I hope he'll just give me a pat on the back and keep me in there."

That's exactly what Reed intends to do. In the closing minutes of Tuesday night's 113-109 victory over Atlanta, the Knicks' kiddie corps was blowing a 10-point lead with some helter-skelter play. But Reed left Williams and Richardson out there to sink or swim.

"The only place they're gonna learn the game is out on the floor," reasoned Reed. "They've got the talent, all they need is experience. They're gonna make mistakes but hopefully they'll learn from them. It was good for them to be out there in a pressure situation."

Richardson, the Knicks' No. 1 pick from Montana in the June college draft, said he was surprised to be playing down the stretch but pleased at the confidence Reed showed in him.

The 6-foot-5 Richardson gives the Knicks a man with the size to go up against the league's big guards. He has exceptional speed and, like the 6-2 Williams, is ideal for the running game Reed is trying to develop.

"I try to penetrate and either take my shot or pass off to the open man," says Richardson. "I feel confident about penetrating."

He is very raw, however, and has yet to learn how to stay under control as he drives the lane. His shooting is nothing special and his defense is only adequate but both should improve with work. While he's learning, shooting specialist Mike Glenn and veterans Jim Clemons and Butch Beard will hold the fort.

Richardson says he looks forward to teaming with Williams. "I like playing with Ray. He gets the ball up the court quickly and I play the same. We play well together."

The Knicks would like nothing better than to see them play well together for the next decade or so — just long enough to earn Rolls-Royces of their own.

Colt Denies Offer From New League

BALTIMORE (AP) — The general manager of the Baltimore Colts said Wednesday he knew nothing about reports that quarterback Bert Jones had been offered $5 million by a group that hopes to form a new professional football league.

General Manager Dick Szymanski added, however, that representatives of the proposed International Football League would be within their rights if they talked with Jones about a contract.

"They have nothing to do with the (National Football League), so there's no violation in talking with Bert, if they did," Szymanski said. "I don't know if it's a lark or not."

Jones, working out with the Colts for Sunday's game against the Miami Dolphins, was unavailable for comment.

Jack Heller, a Beverly Hills, Calif., attorney representing European and Iranian clients, confirmed Tuesday that discussions had been held with Jones about the planned formation of an eight-team NFL.

"I won't deny that we've talked to him," said Heller. "We would like very much to have him. He'd be the first National Football League star we intend to recruit, the first of many."

"We're offering an awful lot of money," continued Heller, whose clients hope the league will begin play in 1980. "We're very optimistic in terms of being able to accomplish what we've set out to do. We're very well-funded. We're in this for the long haul."

Jones has been offered a five-year, $5 million contract, according to an anonymous source who also said that the new league hoped to sign the top eight NFL quarterbacks with the hope that other established players would follow.

Jones makes about $250,000 a year with the Colts.

When asked if other NFL players have been contacted, Heller said, "I won't discuss that. It would be counter-productive to divulge that information right now. We do have an interest in talking to a number of key NFL players."

Heller said his clients hoped to field teams in New York, Chicago, Los Angeles, London, Rome, Rio de Janeiro, Paris and Mexico City.

He said his clients offered $50 million to buy the Los Angeles Rams of the NFL last July but were turned down by owner Carroll Rosenbloom.

Then we looked for any other NFL franchise, that was our initial thrust of getting into the whole thing," Heller said. "Now we're attempting to start our own league. We're moving along pretty well."

Beer Company Sponsors Olympians, AAU Claims

NEW YORK (AP) — The U.S. men's and women's track and field teams, preparing for the 1980 Olympics in Moscow, will be subsidized by a beer company, the Amateur Athletic Union announced Wednesday.

Officials said they anticipated only minimal, if any, reaction from religious and social groups who might object to the association of amateur athletes with an alcoholic beverage.

The AAU and representatives of Miller Lite Beer disclosed plans at a New York news conference for the beer company to provide "substantial funds" for the training of athletes and the conduct of competitions designed to improve American performances in track and field.

No amount of money was disclosed but the figure is expected to run into the hundreds of thousands of dollars.

"It is the American way of utilizing free enterprise and corporate sponsorship," said Jimmy Carnes of Gainesville, Fla., recently named head U.S. track and field coach for the 1980 Games.

Thomas B. Shropshire, Miller's vice president for market planning, said his company would provide funds for a new program to coordinate training and development of athletes.

A national track and field coach will be appointed by the AAU. The beer company will underwrite training procedures, sponsor events and pay travel expenses of athletes.

Shropshire said no provision had been made to offer a stipend for the athletes or compensate them for loss of time away from their jobs, a practice followed by the Soviet Union and other satellite Iron Curtain countries but frowned upon as "sham-amateurism" or "semi-professionalism" among Western nations.

"We haven't worked out the details," Shropshire said.

The beer executive said the company would sponsor television of the 1980 Games and, as part of its new program starting next year, would promote the selection of an AAU-Lite "Athlete of the Month."

Joel Ferrel of Tullahoma, Tenn., president of the AAU, said corporate involvement was not new, although this marks the first time there has been outside subsidy for the track and field teams.

Sears-Roebuck has sponsored the Junior Olympics, Phillips 66 the swimming program and Mack Trucks the weightlifters," he added.

Corporate sponsorship of U.S. amateur teams is suggested in the new Amateur Act passed by Congress aimed at keeping U.S. international teams competitive with those of state-subsidized Communist powers.

"We always have had the finest school-boy and university athletes in the world," said distance runner Marty Liquori. "It's when they get in the 21 to 26-year-old area that we lose them — no scholarship, no money, no help. This should change all that."

Dr. Leroy Walker of Durham, N.C., coach of the U.S. track and field team at the 1978 Olympics in Montreal and chairman of the AAU athletics board, admitted that there was some soul searching before the agreement was made with Miller.

"We checked with church and social groups," he said. "We found that beer was sold in the student centers at most universities, including Duke, a Methodist Church institution.

Heisman Headed For Georgia?

ATLANTA (AP) — Before this season nobody outside of Georgia had heard too much about Georgia's Willie McClendon and Georgia Tech's Eddie Lee Ivery. But now that the speedsters are making their mark, they've become dark horse candidates for the Heisman Trophy, the symbol of college football's outstanding player.

McClendon, who has helped Georgia to a 5-1 record and 16th place in the national rankings, is the Southeastern Conference's leading rusher with 820 yards.

Ivery, 6 feet, 200 pounds, has covered 796 yards to trigger Tech to a 5-2 record and the possibility of a post-season bowl.

"We think both will be high draft choices. They will be gone by the second round," said Tom Braatz, director of player personnel for the Atlanta Falcons of the National Football League.

"Both have versatility and both have long speed," said Braatz. "This is an exceptional running back year among upperclassmen throughout the country but both of them rate among the top eight backs."

McClendon and Ivery's coaches have equally high opinions of their players.

"We have never seen a player who has meant more to his team than Willie McClendon," said Georgia's offensive coordinator, Bill Pace, of the 6-foot-1, 200-pound senior from Brunswick, Ga.

"He is getting better and better every week and there is no doubt he is a genuine All-America candidate and even a Heisman Trophy candidate," Pace said Tuesday.

Coach Pepper Rodgers of Georgia Tech places Ivery, a senior from Thomson, Ga., in the same class.

"Eddie Lee Ivery is big league all the way. He's done everything we have asked of him and then some. He has played hurt. He can run, block, catch and throw the ball and he wants the ball in pressure situations. He is as fine a back as I've coached," said Rodgers.

McClendon, who played in the shadow of Kevin McLee his two previous seasons, still managed to gain 705 yards a year ago and has averaged nearly six yards a carry during his career.

This season McClendon has six consecutive 100-yard-plus games and has scored seven touchdowns, including an 81-yard burst.

"Willie McClendon is the best all around running back I have had in my 15 years at Georgia," said head Coach Vince Dooley. "I've had several professional scouts tell me that Willie's continued improvement since spring practice is amazing."

Ivery, who holds the Georgia Tech career and single season rushing records, blasted for 900 yards a year ago, had 754 yards as a sophomore and 301 in three games as a freshman before an injury sidelined him.

He has run for three touchdowns, caught a 60-yard pass for another TD, raced 71 yards with a punt return for a score and tossed a 17-yard TD pass.

"Ivery is a great back and will go high in the draft," said Gil Brandt, chief scout for the Super Bowl champion Dallas Cowboys. "However, I don't think we'll get a shot at him. He'll probably be gone before we choose."

Wilson Optimistic About A&M Hopes

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — New Texas A&M head football Coach Tom Wilson said Wednesday that star halfback Curtis Dickey will not play Saturday in a Southwest Conference game against the Rice Owls because of injury.

Wilson said a "95 percent healthy" Adger Armstrong will replace Dickey.

Wilson, named interim coach Tuesday after Emory Bellard resigned under pressure, said the Aggies will be "working hard on the I formation but we'll also be prepared to use the Wishbone, especially in short-yardage and goal line situations."

"I have some things I want to do offensively and I'm gonna put my ideas to work but how much depends upon how fast our players can make the adjustments."

Wilson, 34, said as head coach "the biggest thing I have going is that I will work hard and take things day by day and game by game. This happened so suddenly, there's no time to look ahead to the future. I didn't sleep much last night and was awake long before the alarm went off. I was excited this morning and ready to go to work."

Wilson said he felt he had prepared himself to be a head coach.

"I know I have to work hard and come out fighting," said Wilson. "I've been blessed to work under great coaches from whom I've learned a lot. My high school coach at Corsicana, Jim Acree, was a great one, as was JT King at Texas Tech. Jim Carlen, whom I worked for at Tech, had a great football mind and there's no question but that Coach Bellard is one of the great offensive minds around."

Wilson said he would be on the sidelines Saturday against Rice and that Bob Stanley and Greg Davis, of the offensive staff would be in the press box relaying information to him.

"It will be different, to say the least, because I've always been in the press box since I started coaching," said Wilson.

He added, "I think our players will get tight and together as a group and will respond well."

Guidry Denies Rumor Of Being Unavailable For Seventh Game

NEW YORK (AP) — Ron Guidry wants to clear up a point concerning whether he would have been available to pitch in the seventh game of the World Series against the Los Angeles Dodgers if there had been a seventh game.

As it turns out, the Yankees won the Series in six games and the New York Yankees' scintillating southpaw wasn't needed to face the Dodgers again.

It seems that there had been a television report that Guidry's arm was sore and tired, and his status was questionable.

"If there was a seventh game, I would have pitched it," Guidry said Wednesday at a luncheon honoring him as the winner of the Seven Crowns of Sports baseball award for 1978.

In becoming the first pitcher in the four-year history of this computer competition to be honored, Guidry was presented with a check for $10,000 and a two-foot high pewter trophy.

The award is sponsored by the Seagram Distillers Company.

"The whole thing was misinterpreted," Guidry explained. "After I won the third game, I said my arm was tired and sore. I had pitched nine innings that game and, after 270 innings during the regular season at my weight of 160 pounds, I had a right to say it."

"My arm felt good and I was ready for the seventh game. If the Dodgers thought they might have had an edge, imagine their surprise when I let fly a pitch at the velocity of 95 mph."

"My arm was no more tired after the third game than it was after any nine-inning game of hard-throwing. If I said I was tired, then the statement was misinterpreted."

Although Guidry affirmed Wednesday his arm was raring to go in the eventuality of a seventh game, he did admit, however, that his right knee was bruised.

"What you don't know," Guidry continued, "was that I ran into the wall at Dodger Stadium before the sixth game while shagging flies during batting practice and hurt the knee. The injury bothered me a bit but it wouldn't have affected my pitching. And I even caught the ball, but that wall sure was solid."

The 29-year-old left-hander posted a brilliant 25-3 won-lost record as the Yanks beat the Boston Red Sox in an American League East Division playoff, won the League Championship Series from the Kansas City Royals and successfully defended their World Series title against Los Angeles.

In being acclaimed the top performer in major league baseball, Guidry outdistanced Jim Rice of the Boston Red Sox and Dave Parker of the Pittsburgh Pirates in the computer ratings. Rod Carew won the award last season.

The fire-balling pitcher from Lafayette, La., was the major league leader in wins (25), earned run average (1.74), winning percentage (.893) and shutouts (9).

Asked what he could do for an encore next season, Guidry pondered the question for a moment and answered, "There's always room for improvement. I might not be 25-3 but maybe I won't walk as many. It would be hard to have another year like this but left-handers are known to do strange things."

Bellard Says Dignity Was Key

Wells, board of regents chairman) called Coach Bellard and also asked that he reconsider.

Bellard, who had coached at A&M six and one-half years and won 75 percent of his games, said, "I have never had to give up my dignity in any endeavor that I have ever engaged in, and I felt strongly that I would have to give up my dignity under such an arrangement, and I refuse to do that."

"I feel no animosity toward Texas A&M. I truly love this university and most of all the people of Texas A&M. They have been great to me... I hope that I can be remembered as a good Aggie."

Bellard said, "to say that some former students were not dissatisfied would be unrealistic. The bulk of the people have been truly great. I believe if you ran a poll of A&M people I would bet my last penny I'd get 9 and one-half out of every 10 votes. I'd bet on that."

Bellard had been silent since his resignation but said he decided to come forth because he wanted A&M people and his staff to understand why he resigned.

He said he had no idea what he would do in the future but added "it will not be in the field of athletics. Athletics has been my life and as I sat home Tuesday night, I realized that this was the first time since I was in the fourth grade that I was not preparing for an upcoming football game either as a player or a coach."

Repercussions were still being felt Wednesday in Aggies circles on the campus and across Texas.

Most were shocked. This included the heavily monied and powerful Aggie alumni, known to come down quickly on coaches who did not win the right games regardless of their records.

Many fingers pointed at the Houston group, which really was upset by the A&M loss to the University of Houston — which they still regard as Cougar High.

Tom O'Dwyer, an Aggie supporter and Dallas business tycoon, observed, "It must have come as a helluva shock to everybody. I don't know where the pressure was coming from, but I definitely know it was not internal."

"I think ex-students sometimes are too quick to see the bad that's in front of them and not generous enough with what's happening in the past. I know Emory Bellard did a helluva job. I hate to see him be persecuted in anyway."

By internal O'Dwyer meant the A&M administration.

But Bellard was even being pressured these past three weeks on campus, but the students and the campus newspaper, the Battalion.

The Batt, in its Monday edition, printed a large cartoon depicting a roomful of football coaches. The pipe-puffing central character, obviously a caricature of Bellard, is speaking into a telephone.

"Hello, Dallas Cowboys," the caption reads. "I know you already have two ex-Aggie coaches on your staff, but I was wondering if maybe..."

In another corner of the cartoon there is an empty shelf labeled: "For Cotton Bowl Trophy." The years 1972 thru 1978 are crossed out.

The same satire shows another guy on the phone trying to cancel the proposed Kyle Field expansion project while another coach is holding a probability chart for the Southwest Conference. "If TCU beats Houston..."

"You've really got to see it to know" tight end Phillip Simpson said shortly after the team learned by word of mouth that their coach had quit. "I don't know whether or not Coach Bellard has seen it."

If Bellard hadn't seen paper, he couldn't have missed the signs after the two losses. "Make Emory a memory" and another said "Give'em Hell, Emory!... Give'em hell, Emory!... Aw, hell, just give'em Emory."

"A lot of students were really being crass," said placekicker Tony Franklin. "Chicken (bleep) is the only way to describe what they did."

Senior tackle Eugene Sanders said, "This has taken a lot out of me, a whole lot. I was at his house for about 20 minutes. He is very hurt. I think that's the only thing he said while I was there. It took 10 minutes to say that."

Defensive tackle Jimmy Scoggins also blamed monied alumni and, referring to an old Aggie tradition, said, "Maybe we could do without that 12th man."

Added linebacker Randy Harvey, "Or a 12th man that has two faces."

Bellard said during his press conference he did not know if he would attend future A&M games and at that point began crying.

"I'll be pull awfully, awfully hard for a great bunch in maroon and white. They've got a lot of injuries. They'll respond."

Harvey said the resignation is "a terrible setback that we've got to live up to. I tell it's fired me up. We're not going to lay down."

"Our team is just not going to take this and go out with a don't-give-a-damn attitude for the rest of the season. We've got more character than that. We learned it from coach Bellard."

Dockery Disguises Off-Week Practices

By DON HENRY
Executive Sports Editor

It's an off week, but the problem for Texas Tech coach Rex-Dockery is to keep it from being an off week.

Continuing? Since the Raiders do not have another game until Nov. 4 when they host Baylor, the first two days of this week brought a holiday and an afternoon of running. The contact work did not resume until Wednesday.

And, there's more to it than just getting back to basics, teaching blocking and tackling, admits Dockery.

"There's a fine line in working out during an off week," the head coach said. "You don't want to work too hard, since there is nothing immediate to look forward to, and you still want to get some work done."

"It was good to come off a win (the 43-26 scoring show against Rice in Houston last Saturday), but you want to progress during an off week — especially an off week this late in the season."

"We had one early (the week after the 17-9 loss to Southern Cal in the season opener), but we had played well that week, and we had something to build upon and some time to teach our young guys."

"We had a good workout (Wednesday), a lot of good three-on-three drills. We needed that, and we'll probably do some more the next few days."

The Raiders zipped through Wednesday's two-hour workout, but today's practice session will be shortened because of the Kiva Shrine game, to be played in Jones Stadium.

Friday, however, the work will be more in tune with a regular session.

The few days off have already helped in the medical department. Linebacker Jeff Copeland, end Andy Thomas and safety Johnny Quinsey appear to be on their way to recovering from injuries which have limited their play the past three weeks, Dockery said.

Quinsey tried to play against New Mexico with a wrist fracture but had to leave. Thomas and Copeland were injured earlier.

"There's three starters, and when they're back, it will definitely help our defensive team," commented Dockery.

Selmon Receives Rave Grid Reviews

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — Coach John McKay thinks the Tampa Bay Buccaneers' rise to respectability will bring Lee Roy Selmon recognition as one of the National Football League's best defensive linemen.

"We like to think with Selmon, we have an end as good as anybody else in the league," McKay said. "And as we continue winning, I think people will begin to realize that we might have one or two ballplayers down here."

McKay made Selmon the first pick in the 1976 draft, and Selmon has anchored the Bucs' defense ever since. He has led the club in quarterback sacks with five in 1976, 19 last year and eight so far this year with 60 tackles.

"I haven't really sat down and evaluated all the linemen in the league. I've just been concentrating on right here the last two years."

"The recognition kind of goes with the team's improvement," Selmon said. "Of course, I'd like to make All-Pro, things like that. With every good team, it's almost an automatic thing that they'll have somebody make All-Pro."

The Bucs, never mistaken for a good team their first two years, have never had an All-Pro.

Wally Chambers, who started at end with Selmon last Sunday, did make All-Pro with Chicago two years ago. Chambers said, "Lee Roy Selmon is probably the best young lineman in the league."

Another veteran authority on defensive linemen, Minnesota quarterback Fran Tarkenton, said, "I don't see anybody better than Selmon."

The Bucs, with Selmon, nose tackle Dave Pear, and ends Chambers or Charley Hannah playing down in their three-four (three down linemen also known as "30" defense, have developed the NFL's second-toughest defense statistically.

"I think we play the '30' defense pretty well. We're young, we still might blow an assignment now and then. Wally (coming off a knee injury) adds experience."

King To Tackle Playing Chance

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — Gordon King sat on the New York Giants' bench for the first eight games of the National Football League season — hardly befitting a man considered the 10th best collegiate player in the nation last season.

King was biding his time, waiting for a chance to play. The time has come.

With starting right tackle Ron Mikolajczyk out for the season after undergoing surgery for torn ligaments in his right knee, King, the Giants' No. 1 draft pick from Stanford, has been thrown into a starter's role.

"I'm ready, it's just a matter of going out and playing," King said Wednesday. "You just have to give it your best shot."

Pressure? I have other things to think about besides pressure.

Like playing on the right side rather than the left, where he earned All-American honors. Or playing Saints' defensive end Elnor Grooms, when the Giants look to improve their record to 6-1 Sunday in New Orleans.

"I have to set for passes different on the right side," said King, a mammoth 6-foot-4, 275-pounder. "I don't see a lot of changes though. You just have to reorient yourself."

Come Sunday, I will hopefully be prepared mentally and physically. Grooms is a very versatile pass rusher with a multitude of different moves. He is a quality defensive end.

King is on the spot. The Giants don't have any backup tackles listed on the roster. After Mikolajczyk was placed on injured reserve, the Giants signed safety Maurice Tyler to replace starting string safety Beasley Reece, who broke his leg against Washington.

A decision on Reece's roster status is expected shortly. If he is kept on the active roster, New York will be short one offensive lineman.

"I can't think this is a do-or-die, make-or-break situation, that's too individual," King said. "This is a team here. We have a 3-1 record, a good record, and we're trying to win games. I don't want to let people in this room down."

New York Coach John McVay and offensive line coach Jerry Wampfler brought King along slowly, claiming it was hard for a college player to adjust to the offensive tackle position.

Coach McVay and Coach Wampfler have certain philosophies. I just had to be patient and learn," King noted.

Wampfler, who is given much of the credit for New York's improved line play this season, is confident the rookie will come through.

"He's got a job to do Sunday and he'll get it done," Wampfler said. "It's a challenge every guy must go through. He's got a big assignment and the other linemen are going to have to pick up some of the slack. Gordon will be put to the test."

Ex-Buffalo Linebacker Signs Cincinnati Pact

CINCINNATI (AP) — Linebacker Tom Roud, a 1975 first-round top draft choice of the Buffalo Bills, was signed Wednesday by the Cincinnati Bengals.

The Bengals also picked offensive tackle Ron Hunt, who suffered an ankle injury, on the injured reserve list.

"Roud is expected to give the special teams immediate help," said General Manager Paul Brown, in a prepared release.

Roud, an All-American at Nebraska, was released earlier this year by the Bills. "We had a regard for him when he was at Nebraska. We always thought he was a real prospect," said Mike Brown, assistant general manager.

The Bengals signed the 6-foot-1, 225-pound linebacker following a tryout on Tuesday.

Meanwhile, the Bengals, winless in eight games, are taking some comfort in the fact that the defense has given up only one touchdown in the last 10 quarters.

"Through the last 10 quarters, there has been one touchdown scored against us. That means one thing. We have played very tough football," said Coach Homer Rice.

"We just have to be patient. Our time will come," he said as the team prepared for the Houston Oilers.

Shut out twice in the last three games, Cincinnati is hoping to put some points on the board against Houston.

"We have to make something happen. We can't sit back and wait for it to happen to us," said Rice.

Prose-field position was a major problem in the 5-0 loss to Buffalo on Sunday. Six times the Bengals got the ball inside their own 30-yard-line.

"You have to be careful you don't put yourself in a hole. It's a mental thing as much as a physical thing. We'll do some new things this weekend but it's hard to do a lot of different things," said Rice.

Lady Chaps In Action

INVESTORS' GUIDE

By BILL DOYLE

Q. I wish to buy a one-ounce gold coin as a gift for a couple celebrating their 50th wedding anniversary. Would you say this is a smart thing? Can such a coin be turned into cash, if needed? Are these coins registered? Is the U.S. Mint turning out gold coins?

A. At the risk of making all the "gold bugs" unhappy, I have to say that the purchase of gold coins is not a smart thing. Although gold, for centuries, has been considered the traditional "hedge against inflation," it is basically an unproductive metal.

It sits in your dresser drawer or safe deposit box and doesn't provide any earnings in the form of interest or dividends. The only thing it hopefully does is increase in value, against dollars and other currencies. And it has done that in recent months.

But gold holdings are not for the faint-hearted. The price can shoot up or down in a hurry. The market price of an ounce of gold skyrocketed to almost $200 in 1974; then plunged to near $100; now it's over $200.

Now, for your other questions. Yes, those coins can be turned into cash at coin dealers and some other places. No, those coins are not "registered." That's one of their lures — as a tax dodge. No, despite pressures from some members of Congress, the U.S. government is not minting gold coins.

Summing up, I'd suggest you pick some other — worthwhile — gift for that golden anniversary couple. Buy them something they won't have to worry about.

Q. Is it true that a person can make a gift to his or her children of up to $3,000 — $6,000 if the gift is made by a husband and wife — and not pay any federal gift tax? My wife and I would like to give our daughter $10,000 for a down payment on a house she and her husband would like to buy.

A. You can do it. What you ask about is true. Each person can give up to $3,000 each year to each of as many people as he or she sees fit, without incurring federal gift tax liability. And the number becomes $6,000 for a husband and wife making joint gifts.

You and your wife could make gifts of $6,000 a year to your daughter, $6,000 a year to your son-in-law and similar gifts to as many other recipients of your generosity as you like — all free of federal gift tax.

Q. You have explained savings certificates at banks and savings and loan associations quite well. But one erroneous statement should be brought to your attention. You wrote that interest can be withdrawn on most savings certificates but that "no interest is paid (on the new six-month savings certificates) until the certificates mature and are redeemed."

At our savings and loan association, holders of six-month certificates are given the following three choices on collecting interest: (1) paid by check monthly or quarterly, (2) credited to the account at the end of each calendar quarter, or (3) paid at the end of the six-month period.

A. I stand corrected. Thank you. Q. I have stock which had been trading around $15 for a couple of years and has suddenly jumped to $45. Do you have any idea why?

A. No. And I suggest you contact your broker and put his research department to work to try to find out.

Brezhnev's Health Believed Uncertain

LONDON (Thursday) (AP) — The health of Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev has become so uncertain that Western observers believe he is no longer capable of serious negotiations, the London Times said today.

The respected newspaper said this is one reason final stages of the strategic arms limitation talks between the Soviet Union and the United States are proving difficult.

Correspondent Charles Douglas-Horne wrote: "The Americans recognize that, while the Soviet leader is still able to stick closely to a brief, if the brief is on the table in front of him, he is virtually unable now to deviate from it, or show any spontaneous flexibility."

Brezhnev's health has been the subject of speculation in the West for several months. Douglas-Horne wrote that Brezhnev "has considerable difficulty with his speech and there are apparently symptoms of some cardiovascular weakness as well." He said Western observers seem confident the Soviet leader is not suffering from cancer.

Exchanges Want To Broaden Futures Mart

CHICAGO (AP) — The nation's commodity exchanges, where for a century people have been gambling on the future prices of such things as wheat and soy beans, want to offer new types of bets.

Brokers traditionally stake reputations and fortunes on future contracts in grain, metals and livestock. Now they want to bet on the value in six months of foreign currencies, bank interest rates and the Dow Jones industrial average on the New York Stock Exchange.

The Commodities Futures Trading Commission, now three years old, must determine whether the proposed new kinds of futures contracts are in the nation's best interests and whether they'll be used.

If approved, the contracts would become available at exchanges such as those in Chicago, New York, Kansas City and Minneapolis, as well as at a new exchange proposed for New Orleans.

Eventually you may be able to risk money on the future value of Eurodollars at the Chicago Board of Trade, heating and industrial fuel oils, set to begin trading in November at the New York Mercantile Exchange, or even a contract based on the Dow Jones stock average. So far, only the Kansas City Board of Trade has proposed a stock average contract.

Futures contracts have become increasingly popular lately because of the volatility of currencies, commodities prices and interest rates. Brokers are more sophisticated in selling them and the public is more aware of commodities as an alternative to investing in a sluggish stock market.

Approval to trade a contract is no guarantee that it will attract enough buyers and sellers to succeed.

The history of the futures industry is dotted with obituaries of contracts that failed to interest enough producers, processors and speculators to generate active, "liquid" trading.

Speculation in the future prices of frozen eggs, for example, failed on the Chicago markets. Other losers, some still formally active, have been sausage, skinned hams, butter, natural rubber, wool and liquefied propane gas.

There are also dead exchanges. The defunct Pacific Commodities Exchange, Inc., for example, with its oil, silver and cattle contracts, is one of several markets that have died.

But in the rip-roaring, shoot-em-up futures industry, any product, bond, note, certificate or item subject to large price fluctuations is a candidate for future speculation.

Today's rollercoaster economy offers no shortage of candidates.

The best bet, according to industry experts in Chicago and New York, is "financial instrument futures."

These are contracts for future delivery of such items as Treasury bonds, notes and bills and Government National Mortgage Association (GNMA) certificates — the prices of which hinge on what traders think future interest rates will be.

Fluctuating interest rates have a death grip on the fortunes of banks, other financial institutions and some investors whose profits depend on them. The exchanges claim that futures trading would allow "hedging" of risk — an opportunity to avoid big financial losses if interest rates change dramatically.

Businessmen Praise Inflation Plan

By The Associated Press

President Carter's promise of government leadership in fighting inflation was warmly praised by business leaders Wednesday, many of whom greeted his request for voluntary restraint on prices and wages with a spirit of cautious cooperation.

General Motors, U.S. Steel, General Electric and American Telephone and Telegraph were among the corporate giants indicating support for the President's call for restraint by business, labor, government and consumers in the inflation fight.

"As a concerned corporate citizen, GE is going to cooperate in the national effort," said GE Chairman Reginald Jones.

In the first statement by a union leader, Teamsters President Frank Fitzsimmons offered conditional support for the program. He said he would back the plan if "adjustments" — presumably upward ones — were made in the 7 percent wage standard and if the program helps moderate price rises.

In his address to the nation Tuesday evening, Carter promised the government would slash federal hiring, ease restrictive regulations, hold down federal pay and continue efforts to reduce the nation's deficit. But he also called for voluntary guidelines to keep wage hikes at 7 percent and price increases at 5.75 percent. He said legislation should provide tax rebates to protect workers' paychecks in case his program fails.

The program "certainly is a worthy one and everyone should keep an open mind, hoping the government will be able to do what the president has indicated he would like them to do ... I think it's quite a program," said David M. Roderick, president of United States Steel Corp.

At Exxon Corp., Chairman C. C. Garvin Jr. praised Carter's decision to reject mandatory wage and price controls.

"We hope the wage-price guidelines will make a meaningful contribution. Even more important are the basics of budget control, responsible restraint in monetary policy and steps to promote labor productivity. We are pleased that the president emphasized these fundamentals," Garvin said in a statement that reflected the views of many executives.

General Motors, also praising Carter for "his recognition that government must take the lead to slow inflation," said it was "encouraged by the president's consistent rejection of mandatory wage and price controls."

"Whenever and wherever mandatory controls have been adopted in peace time, the final results have been a gross distortion of the price structure and greater, not less, price inflation," GM said.

The inflation task force of the Business Roundtable, an organization representing more than 180 large corporations, pledged cooperation with the anti-inflation program but warned "public expectations will be aroused concerning the effectiveness of (wage-price) standards. Should the standards be perceived as inadequate, the pressure may prove irresistible to impose mandatory controls, which have a long and unbroken history of failure."

ALABAMA LIFTS BAN

ATMORE, Ala. (AP) — A Russian journalist was allowed to question a condemned inmate portrayed in the Soviet press as a political prisoner, following the lifting of a ban in Alabama on death row interviews. Ionona Andronov, a correspondent for the New York-based Russian news magazine, Literary Gazette, was allowed to interview inmate Johnny Harris on Tuesday. Harris, a 32-year-old black, faces execution for the slaying of a guard who was stabbed to death by rioting inmates at Fountain Correctional Center in 1974. He contends he was sentenced to death because of his participation in a prisoners' rights movement.

George Burns Offers Swinging Singles Advice

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — George Burns, 82, modestly admits that being a sex symbol at his age is no easy thing to live with, but he does offer advice to young men on how to handle the problem of runaway sex appeal.

Burns was just another comedian in vaudeville, burlesque, radio and movies for half a century. For 38 of those years he was happily married to the late Gracie Allen.

In recent years, thanks to starring roles in "The Sunshine Boys," which won him an Academy Award for best supporting actor, and "Oh, God," with John Denver, George has found a whole new life in the singles world.

He has been seen socially with any number of beautiful young companions. Sometimes he even appears with more than one girl.

"There's no problem if you go out with a lot of ladies," George said, puffing on a cigar between scenes of yet another movie, "Just You and Me, Kid."

"The thing to do is go out with a trio of girls. When you're having an affair with one girl, the other two can sing harmony."

George, faultlessly attired in a sports jacket and slacks, looks many years younger than any octogenarian in town. No small thanks to a superb hairpiece. He did not want to give the impression of being a dirty old man.

To the contrary, he speaks of his love life only when pressed.

"I got started with girls when I was 13 and working in the Borgnicht and Cornreich dress factory in New York," he said. "Come to think of it I used the names of Borgnicht and Cornreich for one of my first acts, singing, dancing and yodeling."

"Anyway, a lot of ladies worked upstairs in the same building for a men's shaving lotion outfit. I used to entertain the girls on the lunch hour with songs and dances. And they entertained me at night.

"I learned early that you could pick up girls easier if you were a good dancer. So I used to go to dance halls. When I was 14, I opened a couple of dance schools myself, the B and B (Bernstein and Burns) College of Dancing.

"In those days the girls sat on one side of the room and the men on the other. Eventually they got together.

"I taught all the Polish guys in New York how to dance. But they could only dance with me because I was the only teacher who could dance the girl's part in those days. Whenever there was a Polish party in town, the guys took me along to have somebody to dance with."

Burns' co-star in his new movie is Brooke Shields, 13. George says she is already a superstar, adding, "When I was her age, I was arrested for breaking into show business."

George isn't too finicky about his dates. He said he likes tall girls, short girls, fat girls and skinny girls. He does prefer companions who are able to sing two-part harmony.

"Every elephant has its own personality," he said. "I found that out on a vaudeville bill with the Powers Elephants act. The same is true of birds. I learned about birds on a bill with Madame Burkhardt and her cockatoos.

"I was so bad in vaudeville I was on a bill which headlined Swain's Cats and Rats. The cats ran around on a miniature race track with the rats on their backs as jockeys."

"But I met hundreds of pretty girls in vaudeville and most of them could sing. The women still throw their hotel keys at me when I play Las Vegas, but unfortunately after they've already checked out."

"And I get fooled by hookers. Some of them carry school books and I mistake them for college girls."

Burns never gets the girl at the end of the picture doesn't mean he gets them in real life," he said. "The writers do it for them. But I'm going to keep making movies until I ride off into the sunset with the girl on my arm."

"The nice thing about not getting the girl is that you have no one to cheat on you. I think everyone has a little fun on the side. Me, I get to sing."

"I've never said I was the best singer in the world. There are better singers than me around — Sinatra and Tony Bennett — and that's about it."

"My singing voice has helped with the ladies. I always opened with a song and closed with a song, but I didn't do a damned thing in between. You'll notice I haven't mentioned a single name of the ladies I've dated."

"I'm discreet. If I started naming names, the list would go from here to Altona."

"I'm convinced romance is here to stay. So is hot soup. With me the soup comes first."

When George completes "Just You and Me, Kid" he will begin work on his next TV special, "George Burns' 100th Birthday Party."

"I'm doing that now because on Jan. 20, 1996 — my real 100th birthday — I'm booked to play the London Palladium," George said.

"People ask why I date young girls. The answer is simple, there aren't any girls as old as I am, so I gotta go the other way. I can tell you this, my best romances are still ahead of me."

Long-Closeted Shadow Making Comeback

CHICAGO (AP) — Pulp historians are scrambling for old editions of "The Shadow" and there is a whole new generation reading, hearing and saying "The Shadow Knows."

It brings a chuckle to Walter B. Gibson, star of a mystery writers' convention in Chicago.

Under the pen name of Maxwell Grant, Gibson turned out Shadow books like sausages back in the early days of radio. Remember, "Who knows what evil lurks in the hearts of men? The Shadow knows."

Gibson, heavy-set, white-haired, still is going strong at 81. He's now writing books on magic, his first love. He was a close acquaintance of many famous magicians and illusionists, ghosting books for Blackstone and Houdini among others.

Gibson's ability to turn out stories is slight-of-hand in itself.

He wrote 282 Shadow novels and 125 other books under a variety of pen names.

"So far in my life, I've written about 29 million words," Gibson said recently. "I hung up the record in 1932."

That's when the "master fighter feared by all gangdom" became so popular that Gibson said, "I was asked to deliver 24 stories at 60,000 words each. I did it in 10 months and then wrote four extra novels for a total of 1,680,000 words. That was my record run."

Gibson said once he got the tempo of the pulps, "I would suddenly get a new idea, like getting up a new trick. I had a backlog of incidents to draw on."

"I had only one writing trick," he said. "I would never stop writing a day's work with a completed sentence, but would leave off in the middle. Then when I came back to my typewriter, I didn't have to worry about where to start. I'd pick up the unfinished sentence and be off and running."

Gibson had such a flow of stories going that he was pressed to get names for his characters. "I took names of many of them from railroad timetables" — station stops, he said.

Gibson got $400 for his first Shadow novel and eventually worked it up to $750. "I never really did make any money. I didn't get as much as a typist would today for typing them," he said.

For 30 years Gibson has been married to Litzka, a harpist and author. She and Gibson live in an early American home at Eddyville, N.Y., where Gibson gets much of his mail addressed: "The Shadow, 12426."

There presently are 12 paperback editions of various Shadow novels in print and a dozen more are scheduled. A Shadow Secret Society publishes a special bulletin in Wyomissing, Pa. Youngsters are wearing Shadow appliques on their T-shirts. "The Shadow" radio series is being rebroadcast and records are being pressed. One publisher has issued a hard-back called "The Weird Adventures of The Shadow."

"The Shadow still lives, but it fits into its own time frame. I don't have any plans to revive it with new Shadow books," said Gibson.

Editor, College Contest Manuscripts

NEW BRUNSWICK, N.J. (AP) — An ownership dispute over manuscripts and letters of such writers as Saul Bellow, W.H. Auden and George Orwell has drawn Rutgers University into a lawsuit with the editor of the Partisan Review.

William Phillips, a retired Rutgers faculty member and the editor of the literary and political journal since its 1934 founding, filed suit in Superior Court Tuesday, seeking return of the magazine's files and records.

He tried to remove them from a university library in August, after all but one of the building's locks had been changed, but armed campus police forced him to quit, the suit said.

Phillips also is asking damages from the university, claiming he was treated like "a criminal guilty of some grave infraction of the law" during the incident.

At issue is correspondence of Jean-Paul Sartre, Nobel laureate Saul Bellow, Norman Mailer, W.H. Auden, Philip Roth, George Orwell, Susan Sontag, Hannah Arendt, Bernard Malamud and Robert Lowell.

Rutgers has housed and subsidized the Partisan Review since 1963, when Phillips joined its faculty. Phillips, who controls ownership of the magazine, agreed at the time to deposit the papers in the university library, according to a letter from then Rutgers Provost Richard Schlatter.

Phillips, who wants to transfer the journal and its files to Boston University, says he intended to keep his files in the library only as long as Rutgers housed and subsidized the magazine.

"When you deposit something, you don't give it away," Phillips said. "You don't expect a bank to keep the money you've deposited."

Rutgers, which provides rent-free space and staff salaries for the magazine, contends Phillips surrendered ownership of his files.

"If Norman Mailer writes a letter to Phillips about an article in the Partisan Review, is that a personal letter or is that a part of the Review's records?" asked a university press aide.

Unemployed Steelworkers Facing Harsh Future

YOUNGSTOWN, Ohio (AP) — It will be an especially rough winter for thousands of Youngstown-area residents who now face the worst financial crunch from a steel company's retrenchment, a university study says.

The Youngstown State University working paper was released by YSU's Center for Urban Studies to help officials preparing and delivering services to idled steelworkers and their families in the Mahoning Valley.

On Sept. 19, 1977, the Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. laid off approximately 4,200 persons at its Campbell Works.

The report estimated that 80 to 90 percent of the furloughed workers are still in the Youngstown area.

Of those laid off, 35 to 40 percent were in new jobs, although not necessarily permanent or comparable work during July and August, the report said, and the remaining 60 to 65 percent were without work at all.

In addition, 1,700 to 1,800 of the laid-off workers have exhausted their group health insurance coverage.

In the period from July 1977 to July 1978, unemployment nationwide dropped from 7 percent to 6.3 percent, and declined in Ohio from 6.2 percent to 5.3 percent, according to the study.

But in Mahoning County, the jobless rate increased from 7.7 percent to 7.8 percent in the same period, the study said.

PLAINS AGRICULTURE

By DUANE HOWELL

OCTOBER MARKS THE 75th ANNIVERSARY of the completion of the first successful farm demonstration in the nation. It was the success of this venture on the Walter C. Porter farm near Terrell, east of Dallas, that led to the creation of the Cooperative Extension Service nationally and the Texas Agricultural Extension Service in this state.

Farmers, ranchers and homemakers in West Texas will join in recognizing this milestone in agricultural history by holding a special observance here Tuesday.

THE SOUTH PLAINS COOPERATIVE WILL BE at 9:30 a.m. in the board room of the Plains Cooperative Oil Mill. It will begin with a coffee and will include a ceremony recognizing outstanding farm demonstrators and home economics cooperators from each of the 20 counties in Extension District 2.

The recipients will represent more than 375 producers and homemakers in the district who conducted demonstrations this year in cooperation with their county extension agents, said Billy C. Gunter and Mrs. Catherine Crawford, district extension agents.

A documentary film on the Porter farm, "I Am Thinking of the Harvest," will have its premiere showing in the area.

A similar program for the 20 Panhandle counties which comprise Extension District 1 also is scheduled Tuesday. It will be at 9:30 a.m. at the Texas A&M Agricultural Research and Extension Center at Amarillo.

MANY OTHER OBSERVANCES of Farm Demonstration Month are being held throughout the state. A special statewide salute was Oct. 12 in Dallas and at the Porter farm.

Dr. Seaman A. Knapp, a former president of Iowa State College and a special agent for the U. S. Department of Agriculture, went to Terrell in 1903 at the request of area citizens to set up a demonstration to "improve farming methods." Knapp asked them to find a demonstration site and a farmer who would farm precisely as he recommended. Local citizens selected Walter Porter from several volunteers and also quickly raised $1,000 to cover any losses that might arise from farming with "the new methods." But the money was not needed.

The farm demonstration was a financial success, and the technique spread rapidly to other areas. Farm demonstrations soon were evident in many counties.

And they are still popular. There were 4,300 established in Texas last year, including some in every county in District 2.

Conservation Practices 'Easy' For Man Dedicated To Farming

By KATHLEEN HARRIS
Avalanche-Journal Farm Writer

"If a farmer has his heart in farming and really loves his land, you don't have to sell him on conservation," George Johnson, Lubbock County's Outstanding Soil Conservationist of 1978 believes.

Johnson, who began farming near Idalou in 1964, was one of the first to install a circular pivot sprinkler system in Lubbock County. "There is no runoff on the sprinkler system and you have more control of this method," he pointed out.

The low pressure system uses two wells and irrigates 162 acres. "It puts out 700 gallons per minute and applies 1-3 1/2 inches with each pass. It takes seven days to make a full circle," Johnson said.

Eighty acres of the land watered by the pivot sprinkler also have parallel terraces constructed under the Great Plains Conservation Program. According to Johnson, the system travels over the terraces with no difficulty.

"Each of the tires has a one horsepower computer set to control the rate of motion," he added, "and if anything goes wrong in the system, it is set up to stop the pump and the wells."

Before going to the terrace-sprinkler method, Johnson said row irrigation was used on the slightly sloped acreage causing the formation of deep gullies and massive soil erosion.

"In the fall of 1977, we constructed parallel terraces on 80 acres and are now able to catch every bit of rain that falls," he said.

The sprinkler, installed last January, enables Johnson to apply uniform coverage on his crops. "I would say we are saving about 30 percent over the previous row irrigation on this acreage," he noted.

When he began farming, Johnson bought all the equipment he needed for $12,000. The initial cost of the pivot sprinkler system was $35,000.

"Not much upkeep is required of the system," he said. "We usually lubricate it after two full circles."

Johnson feels some of the advantages of the circular pivot sprinkler are its ability to be used with any crop and being able to apply certain substances through the irrigation water.

"This year I am going to add an injector pump in order to apply fertilizer at the peak times of the crop need. Liquid fertilizer is cheaper than dry fertilizer. Plus, that will save a trip across the field," he said.

In addition to the terraces and pivot sprinkler, Johnson has bench leveling on part of his 1,440-acre operation, an extensive underground pipeline network, two tailwater recovery pits and a regular rotation program.

A diversion terrace was constructed on the terraced land to guide excess rain water to a grass-lined waterway. "This year I'm going to take sprigs from the waterway grass and line the ditches in the tailwater recovery systems," Johnson said. "That should help eliminate some water seepage and silt problems."

Some of the best water supply in Lubbock County is near Idalou, Johnson pointed out. "We have some strong six inch pumps and a few eight inch ones. But I'm set up so that if the water goes, I can continue by dryland farming."

"Out of all my land, maybe 50 acres may lose water, but the runoff can be pumped back onto 40 acres of that with a lake pump."

Wind doesn't cause soil drifting on the Johnson acreage. "Because all the moisture that falls on the land is caught, the soil curls up when drying instead of being powdery. Therefore, it can't blow as much," he said.

Plains Conservation contract, Johnson said he believes his land is set up to not suffer as severely from soil erosion and drought.

Agriculture Task Force Criticizes Proposed Federal Ban On Nitrites

WASHINGTON (Reuters)—Discontinuing use of nitrite in meat processing would have a profound effect on products offered to consumers, a Council for Agricultural Science and Technology (CAST) task force said in a report highly critical of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology (MIT) nitrite study and the proposed government ban.

The panel of scientists from the fields of cancer medicine, toxicology, food and nutrition science, meat science and agricultural economics, told a press conference that current evidence indicates no more than 2 percent of the nitrite to which the body is exposed is from cured meats, with almost all the remainder produced in the body by normal body processes.

Dr. Richard Lechowich, head of the Department of Food Sciences and Technology at Virginia Polytechnic Institute and chairman of the task force, said, "There is little we can do to reduce our exposure to nitrite by eliminating the use of sodium nitrite in curing meat."

Lechowich added that at present, the principal cause of botulism in the United States is consumption of vegetables, followed by fruits and meats in that order.

Dan Padberg, an economist from the University of Illinois said the principal economic effects would result mainly from changes in acceptability of nitrite-free products by consumers.

Loss of cured meats would affect the planning of 25 to 33 percent of all meals, said Robert Rust, extension meat specialist at Iowa State University.

"If nitrite were banned," he said, "the consumer education program would require an estimated ten-fold increase in personnel and materials to inform people about substitute meal planning and possibility for experimental testing. Dr. David Clayton, deputy director of the Eppley Institute for Research in Cancer and Allied Diseases of the University of Nebraska, said, "...We must protect ourselves against risks from cancer," but, he continued, "...when we have de facto national cancer policies that cause us to take actions that are not scientifically sound and are not clearly in the national interest, we are headed for trouble."

Cattle Futures Finish Day Lower On Exchange

CHICAGO — Cattle futures closed 10 to 122 points lower by April at the day's low Wednesday on the Chicago Mercantile Exchange. Sales totaled 24,789 cars. Prices were lower from the start and fell to the lowest since August, off almost eight cents from recent highs.

Continued weakness in carcass beef touched off aggressive local and commission house liquidation. Although President Carter's anti-inflation plans were well discounted, the threat of price controls tends to dampen upside enthusiasm here.

Wholesale beef was off 1 cent at 78 1/2 cents a pound, f.o.b. river points. Cash cattle were steady to off 50 cents with the best top $55.50 per hundredweight. There were 537 deliveries and slaughter was 137,000 head. The major markets are expected today 11,100 head.

Feeder cattle futures finished 37 to 137 lower paced by November at the low for the day. Volume was 2,581 contracts.

The market was on the defensive from the start with weakness in live cattle futures adding pressure along with continued low demand for beef.

Traders also noted an increased supply of cash feeder cattle and sizeable kill this week as negative factors.

Cash feeder cattle were off $3 to up $2 with the best top $80 per hundredweight at San Antonio. About 7,400 head are expected at the major markets today. There were 218 deliveries.

Hog futures ended 7 to 60 lower with February under the most pressure. The nearby contract fell 85 early. Sales numbered 8,661 cars. Prices were lower except for a brief gain of 15 in April in mostly spill over selling from other meat pits.

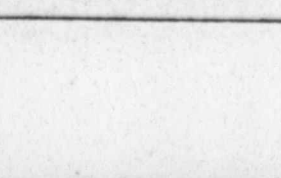

Selling came despite of light hog runs and steady to higher prices as well as discount of futures to cash. The threat of price controls was in the immediate background and tended to keep traders cautious.

British Invade Filmland

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — The British are coming to California in increasing numbers, fleeing from a tax-hungry government. The latest arrival is Michael Caine. Already, Beverly Hills real estate agents have prospered on sales of estates to British rock stars. The realtors have another ready, but wary, customer in Caine.

"Trouble is," he sighed. "The house I priced four years ago at $400,000 is now a million and a quarter."

Three of Caine's last four films have been made in Hollywood: "The Swarm," "California Suite" and "Beyond the Poseidon Adventure." He now feels he may as well stay.

"It's been something I've been thinking about for four years," he remarked in his mobile home at the Burbank Studios. "But when it comes to making up my mind, decisions usually come tomorrow morning at 8 a.m. I'm inclined to put things off."

"But I think the time is ripe for me to move here. It seems to me that the center of world filmmaking runs in 10-year cycles. Of course, Hollywood had it all until after the war. Then England had it for 10 years, France for 10 years, Italy for 10 years."

"I believe that the film world is going to center here for the next 10 years. So I might as well make it my home base."

"Of course, it's difficult for an English actor here, because the parts are written for Americans. But Hollywood has always been hospitable to the English, dating back to the times when Ronald Coleman, Charlie Laughton, David Niven and others were here. I'll take my chances. The main thing is to maintain the mid-Atlantic accent that is acceptable on both sides of the ocean."

Caine, the Cockney lad to achieve fame in "Alfie," "The Ipcress File," "Sleuth" and other Anglo-American films, is among the last of the English stars to leave the Isles.

"Roger Moore has now gone, Sean (Connery) left long ago," Caine observed. "Michael York has gone, Robert Shaw — God rest his soul — had left the country. The same with Finchie (Peter Finch). Laurence Olivier stays, but he has to take those jobs ('Marathon Man,' 'The Boys from Brazil') to be able to leave something for his wife and children."

"The movie business is minor, compared to the music world. And all of them have left: Elton John, Olivia Newton-John, the Robert Stigwood Organization, several Beatles, Led Zeppelin, the BeeGees, Rod Stewart. That means the loss of billions of dollars."

The reason for the exodus, Caine explained, is the Labor Government's tax policy, which has driven out not only high-earning English but American filmmakers as well. The actor cited Cubby Broccoli, "who is now spending $35 million in France for the next James Bond picture."

Governor Presides At Paris Ceremony

PARIS (AP) — Gov. Dolph Briscoe will preside at the dedication of the Mike Rheidasil Learning Center and the A.M. and Wilma Aikin Regional Archives at Paris Junior College here today.

A 20-ton red granite monolith commemorating State Sen. Aikin's contributions to public junior colleges also will be dedicated. A replica of Aikin's Austin office as well as historical documents from the four counties surrounding Paris also will be included in the archives after Aikin's retirement in January.

Rheidasil, who died in 1970, was an assistant to the president of Paris Junior College.

news media's needs in mind as they choose a site for their 1980 convention.

The GOP site selection committee, which is considering six cities for the quadrennial convention, heard from newspaper, periodical, photographic and broadcast press spokesmen whose requests covered the needs of reporters inside Washington and from the states.

Each asked for choice workspace on the convention floor, workspace near the convention, parking spaces outside the convention hall and hotel rooms close to the convention hall.

In addition, they sought ready access to the convention floor and podium by requesting floor and podium passes.

The committee will take the requests into account in selecting a site for the convention from among Miami Beach, Detroit, Minneapolis-St. Paul, New Orleans, Dallas and Kansas City. But other committees will make the final decisions about allocating space and floor passes.

"There is nothing we would like better than to give all the floor passes everyone wants," said Ody Fish who headed the GOP committee. "Unfortunately, if we did that, there would be no room left for delegates."

Fish estimated that there will be 8,000 media personnel at the convention as there were at the Kansas City gathering in 1976. He said the media spent an estimated $10 million that year to cover the convention.

FAMED MUMMY NOW MYSTERY MAN

Skull Found In Crypt May Be Pizarro's

LIMA, Peru (UPI) — In mid-1977, four sweating workers gingerly tapped a marble plate covering the main niche of the dark, musty burial crypt under Lima's 400-year-old cathedral.

The plate came loose and, climbing down two levels, the workmen uncovered two moldy wooden boxes bearing the cross of the Order of the Knights of Santiago.

One large box contained a collection of skulls and bones. A smaller, purple box revealed more bones and a lead container.

Crudely engraved lettering on the lead box's lid read:

"Here is the head of the Marquis Don Francisco Pizarro who discovered and won the kingdoms of Peru and put them in (the domain of) the royal Castilian crown."

The workers opened the box and found a skull. But they set it aside because it was Saturday afternoon and time to knock off for the weekend.

On Monday, June 20, 1977, their supervisor spied the skull and was shaken by its possible importance.

"If this is Pizarro's skull, then who does the mummy on display upstairs belong to?" he asked, referring to the remains of a conquistador in a glass sarcophagus identified as "Captain General Don Francisco Pizarro, Conqueror of Peru and Founder of the City of Lima."

The mummy has been a major tourist attraction in Lima, the former viceregal capital of Spain's American empire, since Mayor Juan Revoredo put them on display in a solemn ceremony on June 26, 1891, 350 years to the day after Pizarro's murder.

The bearded, illiterate Pizarro was killed in his home by the son of his one-time partner, Diego Almagro, and 19 accomplices who ran a sword through his throat, smashed his mouth with a jar and slashed his body with 13 knife and sword cuts, according to forensically confirmed reports from witnesses.

The murderers, known as the "Men of Chile," who lost out on their share of the golden and silver riches of the Inca conquest, killed the 69-year-old Pizarro to prevent him from being named governor of Peru by a royal representative enroute to Lima from Seville.

Pizarro's death was well documented, but what happened to his corpse in the succeeding 400 years remained clouded in mystery. The June 1977 skull discovery demanded a thorough, scientific and archeological investigation, according to Dr. Hugo Ludena, sub-director of the Peruvian National Cultural Institutes Center of Investigation.

"There's always been doubt that the body in the cathedral is Pizarro," he said. "According to historical documents, our discovery of the lead box was not the first. In 1661, a committee of priests deciding on the canonization of Saint Tori-bio de Morovejo went down into the crypt, looking for the saint's remains. They opened up the wall and found the skull in the lead box, but since they were only interested in the saint, they put the box back in the crypt, made note of it, and closed up the wall again."

Slaves had hurriedly buried Pizarro in the cathedral courtyard, but three years later, at the end of a civil war and with calm restored in the capital, relatives had commissioned down into the crypts to find his body. "They did not know exactly where to look," Ludena said, "but they found a mummy and put it on display. Nothing indicated it was Pizarro."

"Then in 1903 a priest writing the biography of Santo Toribio found the 1661 note and showed the document to a local historian, Jose Toribio Polo, who was struck by the obvious contradiction with the mummy in the cathedral.

"He published many articles, but nothing happened — only silence," Ludena said.

Finally, with the second discovery of the skull in 1977, Ludena put a team of scientists from Peruvian and foreign universities, including U.C.L.A., University of California at Fullerton, and Harvard to scientifically analyze the bones.

Chemical, radiological and electron microscopic studies of the remains showed the newly found skull and bones possessed markings corresponding to historical witness reports of Pizarro's murder. Metallic deposits in the foot bones showed the body had been buried with spurs, also in accordance with historical documents concerning Pizarro's burial.

"Our conclusion is the remains found in the crypt are the authentic ones," Ludena said. "Our investigation has confirmed it and now we are only making complementary studies. But, we've run out of funds and we're going to need some help from a foundation. All the aid from the American and Japanese universities so far has been free of charge."

Despite Ludena's findings, "Pizarro" still rests in its glass case in an ornate corner of the massive cathedral, and tourists and school children still pay 10 soles (about 6 U.S. cents) per person to view the dried, flaking remains.

No move has been made to replace it, and the ticket-takers grow evasive if an informed tourist makes mention of the skull story.

Ludena has not started a campaign to replace the mummy with the skull but he does want to carry on his historical-archeological study to include the mummy.

"What we have to do now is find out who that mummy is," he said.

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich. (AP) — A 32-year-old woman has sued a magazine for allegedly publishing a photograph of her wearing nothing but a shower cap and for erroneously identifying her in a second nude photo.

Jane Barclay, a lab technician from Muskegon, charged in the $1.5 million lawsuit that Elite Magazine published her photograph without her permission.

"I was mortified. I felt this was a real defamation of my character," Mrs. Barclay said.

She asked damages of $750,000 each from Elite's publisher, Playpen Enterprises of Toronto, and its U.S. distributor, Capital Distribution Ltd. of Derby, Conn.

A snapshot of Mrs. Barclay in the nude appeared in the magazine's August issue and an accompanying caption gave her name, age, address and occupation, she alleged.

Mrs. Barclay said her former husband, Con. 39, took the picture as she emerged from the shower one day. The Barclays were divorced in March.

Barclay is due for trial in Muskegon this week on charges he tried to murder his former wife during a knife assault last May, authorities said. Mrs. Barclay suffered only a minor stab wound.

In October, Elite published another picture with the same caption identifying another woman as Mrs. Barclay. The suit claimed negligence on grounds the magazine did not have permission to use Mrs. Barclay's picture and identified someone else's photograph as one of her.

Mrs. Barclay, alleging invasion of privacy, said she "has always lived a private life in her community" until the nude picture appeared.

Afterward, she said, obscene telephone callers and lewd comments by strangers plagued her. Her lawyer said Mrs. Barclay needed psychiatric care because of the incident.

David Wells, publisher of the magazine, said it received a release form supposedly signed by Jane Barclay and a packet of her photographs in late March. The publisher said the magazine later sent Con Barclay a check for using the photograph.

"As far as we're concerned, we accept the thing in good faith. We pay out our money in good faith," Wells said.

He blamed the incorrect caption in the October issue on a printer's error. "This is the first time we've been subjected to something like this," the publisher said.

Elite has a circulation of about 180,000 in Canada and 150,000 in the United States, Wells said.

Braniff, Attendant Agreement Reached

DALLAS (AP) — Negotiators hammered out a peace agreement in a 16-month-long skirmish by Braniff International and the Association of Flight Attendants over increased wages.

Braniff spokesman Jere Cox said the airline and the union agreed to terms Tuesday night on a new labor contract that includes increased wages and improved fringe benefits for the company's 2,000 flight attendants. But Cox declined to outline the details of the settlement.

Flight attendants retreated from the picket lines they threw up Tuesday at airports and ticket counters in 10 U.S. cities, including Dallas, Houston and San Antonio, to pressure Braniff for an settlement in the stalled negotiations.

Cox said the new contract, which must be ratified by the union membership, extends until January 1, 1981.

A union spokesman in Washington said no date has been set for the vote.

GETS $6.8 MILLION SETTLEMENT — Austin lawyer John Coates, 42, is wheeled into district court in Austin by his son, Will, 16. Remington Arms Co. agreed to pay $6.8 million to Coates, paralyzed from the waist down in a hunting accident. (AP Laserphoto)

Remington Recalling Suspected Weapons After Losing Suit

BRIDGEPORT, Conn. (AP) — Remington Arms Co. said Wednesday it is recalling about 200,000 guns following a $6.8 million settlement to a Texas man who claimed he was shot by a rifle the trigger of which had not been pulled.

The company is recalling four different models of bolt-action guns so their trigger assemblies can be replaced, said Edmund S. McCawley, Remington's public relations manager. He said he could not estimate how much the recall would cost.

The plaintiff in the Texas case said a Remington Mohawk 600 rifle fired when the safety was pushed to the "off" position even though the trigger was not pulled.

McCawley said, "our investigation indicated that this was unlikely," but he added that the recall was being made "due to the fact that in some unusual circumstances it's possible to move the safety and the trigger in such a way that subsequently moving the safety selector to the fire position could result in an accidental discharge."

"We don't think that's what happened in this case in Texas," he added. Remington agreed Monday to pay $6.8 million to John Coates, 42, an Austin lawyer, who was paralyzed from the waist down after being shot. The agreement is one of the largest lump-sum personal injury settlements in history.

Coates's 16-year-old son, Will, was holding the weapon when it discharged into his father's back on Dec. 11, 1977. The father and son and some other deer hunters were in a four-wheel drive vehicle when the accident occurred.

McCawley said the guns being recalled are Remington 600 and 660 rifles with serial numbers 0001 to 131,552, Mohawk 600 and Remington 600 rifles with serial numbers from 6,200,000 to 6,899,999, XP-100 pistols with serial numbers from 0001 to 11,000 and from 7,500,000 to 7,507,983, all manufactured before February 1975.

He said owners of recalled guns can find out where to take them by calling the following toll-free numbers and asking for operator 61: in all states except Georgia, 1-800-241-8444; in Georgia, 1-800-282-1333.

Battle Erupts Over Kansas Liquor Option

TOPEKA, Kan. (AP) — Booze has been an emotional issue in Kansas ever since Carry Nation invaded saloons in the western part of the state, hatchet in one hand, Bible in the other, turning rows of whiskey bottles into glass nuggets.

That was nearly a century ago. World War II passed before the Sunflower State relaxed its ban on liquor. And the battle rages on.

Today, the state's dries and wets are fighting over a new law that allows each county to decide whether certain restaurants can serve liquor by the drink. It goes before voters in 45 counties Nov. 7.

The law slipped through the Legislature so swiftly this spring that it stunned liquor lobbyists as well as the dry forces. Under the new law, restaurants that do at least half their business in food could sell liquor by the drink — providing voters in the county approve.

Even then, voter approval might not be the last word. The state's attorney general has asked the Kansas Supreme Court to decide whether the law violates a constitutional ban on "open saloons."

Even without the new law, Kansas is not entirely dry. All but seven of the state's 105 counties have liquor stores, and there are nearly 1,000 private clubs in the state that sell liquor by the drink.

The state's hodgepodge of liquor law allows people over 21 to buy drinks in a hotel's private club, providing they're guests there, at other profit-making private clubs if they pay a fee and endure a waiting period, and at nonprofit private clubs simply by paying a membership fee.

"The dries have the laws and the wets have the liquor," says Bill Strukel, chief enforcement officer for the Alcoholic Beverage Control Division, summarizing up the situation.

The Rev. Richard Taylor, president and chief lobbyist for the Kansas United Dry Forces, claims he was betrayed by the Legislature, which passed the local-option plan while he was out of the state.

Dries in counties considering the option have organized campaigns to defeat the law, while proponents, usually chambers of commerce supported by local hotel and restaurant managers, have done little beyond collecting signatures required to get the issue on the ballot.

To get on the ballot for the Nov. 7 election, supporters had to collect the names of 5 percent of the county's voters. Petitions were certified in 45 counties, while drives fell short in some and no effort was made in others.

The only previous vote on liquor-by-the-drink was statewide in 1970. It fell short by 11,000 votes, out of 680,000 cast, as urban counties, which generally favored the law, squared off against rural Kansas, which opposed it.

This time, there are pro-liquor noises coming from some of the rural counties. Petitions have put the measure on the ballot in several western Kansas counties where the statewide measure was handily defeated in 1970.

Liquor-by-the-drink also is on the ballot in metropolitan counties which include cities such as Wichita, Topeka and Kansas City, Kan. They all voted heavily in favor of the 1970 measure.
