Vance, Begin Confer; Sadat Arrives

A-J News Services

PALESTINIAN leader Yasser Arafat Saturday asked the Soviet Union for help to "foil the conspiracy" of the American-backed Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty. Syria said the hardline Arabs would not impose an oil embargo on the United States.

In Washington, Egyptian President Anwar Sadat arrived Saturday evening for the signing of the historic peace treaty with Israel and said he was happy to come to the United States "in the holy pursuit of peace."

In Damascus, Syria called angrily for "revolutionary violence ... to strangle the Sadat regime," but said it does not favor an oil embargo against the United States.

After meeting in Washington with Israeli Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan, Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance flew to New York City and met Saturday night with Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin.

American officials said there was no last-minute threat to the treaty, but Dayan, who accompanied Vance to the meeting with Begin in a New York hotel, lacked authority to make decisions that could conclude the negotiations.

After a 90-minute meeting with Vance, Begin said, "The only question is do we sign or don't we sign. The answer is, we sign."

The Egyptian leader was welcomed by Vice President Walter Mondale who told him, "You come to America as a hero, a hero of peace."

Sadat expressed his joy at being in America to sign the treaty but said it would only be the beginning of long efforts toward lasting peace.

The Carter administration prepared for a lavish treaty-signing ceremony at the White House, ending 30 years of hostilities between the two nations.

Arafat, in Beirut, Lebanon, sent a telegram to Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev in which he said the peace treaty to be signed in Washington Monday "constitutes a violation of Palestinian rights and a flagrant aggression on our people.

"Help In Our Struggle"

"We are convinced that the peace-loving people of the Soviet Union will help our people to foil this conspiracy and help us in our struggle to restore our legitimate rights," Arafat said.

The telegram was sent Friday and announced Saturday by the Palestinian news agency WAFA.

In other Mideast developments:

—Arab League foreign ministers met in Mogadishu, Somalia, in a plenary session expected to be dominated by discussion of the treaty. Iraq has scheduled an emergency meeting of Arab foreign ministers in Baghdad for Tuesday, 24 hours after the Washington ceremony, to approve political and economic sanctions against Sadat.

Egypt May Withdraw

—In Cairo, the weekly magazine October said Egypt is planning to withdraw from the Arab League because of Arab opposition to its peace treaty with Israel. Radical Arab states within the 22-member League have said they will demand Egypt's expulsion and the removal of the League's headquarters from Cairo.

—Arafat criticized Carter's offer to work with his Palestine Liberation Organization if the PLO recognizes Israel, but Arafat stopped short of rejecting the proposal. "Why does Carter always ask the Palestinian victim to recognize the Israeli aggressor and usurper? Why doesn't he ask the aggressor to recognize the victim for a change?" Arafat said in a statement issued in Beirut, Lebanon.

—In Jerusalem, Arab protesters threw

Lubbock Law Enforcers Handcuffed In Battle Against Youth Crime

By BOB CAMPBELL
Avalanche-Journal Staff

MUCH OF THE CRIME problem in Lubbock is a juvenile delinquency problem, and law enforcement authorities find themselves more handcuffed by state laws than the juveniles they are trying to control.

Last year, persons under 17 years of age committed 25 percent of the violent crime and 28 percent of the property crime reported in Lubbock County.

They were responsible for 13 percent of the murders, 25 percent of the rapes, 21 percent of the robberies, 31 percent of the aggravated assaults and 39 percent of the burglaries.

Yet, of 1,434 referred as required by law to the county juvenile probation department, only 31 were sent to Texas Youth Council reform schools in Gatesville, Austin and Brownwood.

The assistant criminal district attorney in charge of juvenile prosecution sees combating the problem as a three-fold task involving county and state governments.

Paulina Jacobo, a University of California-trained lawyer hired by John T. Montford when he took office Jan. 1, said her office already is doing the first thing that needs to be done — have the worst delinquents certified and tried as adults. A 16-year-old burglar has been certified already this year, she said, and proceedings are planned against others.

The other things should be a lowering of the age limit to 15 and counting 15-and 16-year-olds as adults, she said, and to institute strong community programs to go with the new county juvenile detention center.

As it stands, young criminals are flaunting their protected status as juveniles and are contemptuous of the police and courts because many of the youths have been caught repeatedly for serious crimes and repeatedly put on probation, Miss Jacobo said.

"I think it's an illusion on our part to say they are children," she said. "We've gotten way off base in what we think kids are capable of. In the ways of the world, they're very sophisticated."

She said youths now are much more mature at 15 and 16 than they were 10 or 15 years ago.

She noted that statistics credit them with 767 burglaries, five murders, eight rapes, 17 robberies, 39 aggravated as-

Boy's Diary Relates Story Of Transplant

By JEFF SOUTH
Avalanche-Journal Staff

March 21, 1979 — I woke up at 4:30 a.m. and couldn't go back to sleep. Daddy spent the night with me, then at about 7:30 a.m., Kathy and David dropped by. Dr. Menchaca came at 8:15 a.m.

Tim, according to his diary and friends, wasn't afraid of Wednesday's surgery.

"He is the most optimistic person I know. He suffered setback after setback — he lived so long with one foot in the grave — but he never let things get him down. On the morning of the operation, I was more worried than he was," a brother said.

The operation, Lubbock's first kidney transplant, was more than a medical success. It was a victory for an 11-year-old boy and his family.

"When people hear about a tragedy, they usually think, 'It can't happen to my family.' But it can happen — and when it does, something surprising occurs. You find you can handle more than you thought you could," said one of Tim's older brothers, David.

"Tim's illness brought our family closer together. And our friends and neighbors, they were terrific. They came out of the woodwork to help us in every way they could," David said.

The transplant, performed at the Health Sciences Center Hospital, involved two members of the family. A healthy kidney was lifted from Tim's mother and, in a separate three-hour operation, installed in the youngster.

If the need had arisen, David said he himself would have been the donor.

"Anybody in our family would have given a kidney. If the first one failed, the doctors could have taken a kidney from each of us until they found one that worked," David said.

"We wanted just one thing — for Tim to be able to get off dialysis and lead a more normal life."

Ironically, despite his disease, Tim's outward activities probably convinced many people that his life already was pretty "normal."

True, his elementary schoolmates must have thought it strange that Tim missed class every Monday, Wednesday and Friday — when he had to spend four to six hours connected to a dialysis machine, which would cleanse his body of the fluids his kidneys could not.

But Tim never let on the nature or severity of his illness. With the help of a teacher from the Lubbock Independent School District's homebound program, he kept up with his studies.

"He was a straight-A student. If they gave out diplomas for elementary school, he'd be at the top of his class," David said. And if Tim was really sick, his friends must have wondered, how could he have been so active and good in sports?

For most of his three years on dialysis,

Winds May Mar Spring Warmth

WHILE midwestern and eastern states continue to combat winter storms, South Plains residents should enjoy a warm spring Sunday despite some gusty winds.

A low pressure system developing west of the area today is expected to produce warmer temperatures as well as southwesterly winds.

Forecasters say the mercury will climb to the mid-70s today before a weak cold front moves in from the north, bringing cooler temperatures for Monday. Tonight's low should be near 40 degrees and winds are expected to reach 15 to 20 mph.

Saturday, some scattered showers were reported in the eastern Panhandle and along the western portion of the Red River, but fair to partly cloudy skies prevailed across most of the state. Afternoon highs were in the 70s in South Texas and generally in the 60s elsewhere. Lubbock's high was 62 degrees at 4 p.m.

Alarm System Gaps Bared By Tornado

By JOHNNY HOLMES
Avalanche-Journal Staff

ONE WEEK AGO a rapidly developing thunderstorm slashed diagonally across Lubbock in a path frighteningly similar to that of a cloud that dealt misery to the city in 1970.

National Weather Service logs show that what had been a fairly routine spring Saturday night with occasional thunderstorms popping up across the Lubbock bureau's coverage area was interrupted with reports of pea-size hail in the southwest corner of Lubbock County shortly after 11 p.m.

An hour later the NWS began receiving a trickle of reports of heavy damage in a northside area near Loop 289 and almost within view of the weather service office.

A rapidly developing tornado — small but nonetheless dangerous — had evaded Lubbock's sophisticated radar and a supposedly impenetrable network of weather stations strung throughout West Texas. Lubbock had been under a tornado watch but weather-wary residents were never warned of the tornado that strafed the northeastern edge of the city until the funnel had done its damage and disappeared.

Weather service officials concede that the same set of circumstances could be repeated.

Several power outages and the breakdown of a teletype circuit used to transmit weather information to local media outlets compounded the situation.

The Saturday night tornado, which followed a path over the city almost identical to that of the deadly twister of May 11, 1970, that killed 26 persons, heavily damaged the Chupik Corp. warehouse at North Loop 289 and Municipal Drive and narrowly missed several other large warehouses and Estacado High School.

The NWS log for the hour indicates that

Carter Lashes Business Price Guide Violations

ELK CITY, Okla. (AP) — President Carter, labeling America's inflation rate unacceptable, pledged Saturday night to hire more price watchers and to identify publicly "irresponsible firms" that have made "unjustified price increases."

At a "town meeting" in this small Oklahoma city, the president said he was "deeply disturbed" by Friday's report of a 1.2 percent rise in consumer prices for February.

Carter said he was disappointed that medium-size businesses are not showing the same commitment to his anti-inflation program as most large corporations.

"Too many business leaders seem to feel that the fight against inflation is not their responsibility," he said. "I will take firm steps to deal with this problem in the days ahead."

One step he mentioned was an order to the Council on Wage and Price Stability to obtain regular reports on price increases from firms in "problem industries."

Carter had left Washington in the midst of a Saturday afternoon thunderstorm for a weekend of political fence-mending in Oklahoma and Texas.

After Saturday night's "town meeting" in Elk City, a town of about 10,000 persons, Carter planned to travel to Dallas today for an address to a convention of the National Association of Broadcasters.

In Elk City he warned labor unions to show restraint in wage demands, but his harshest words were for American business.

He said companies that are identified as breaking his administration's voluntary price-increase guidelines will be asked for explanations. If he doesn't like what he hears, he said, "I will not hesitate to identify those irresponsible firms and individuals to the people of this nation."

He has said he feels such public identification would be a good weapon in gaining compliance.

Concerning the price monitors, White House spokesman Rex Granum said the 143 employees of the Council on Wage and Price Stability now includes 41 assigned to searching for violators of wage or price guidelnes. And that compliance staff, already scheduled to more than

Two A-J Staffers Win Awards In Associated Press Contest

JEFF SOUTH, education writer for The Avalanche-Journal, was named first place winner in the short features category of the 1979 Texas Associated Press Managing Editors Association's annual contest.

KENNETH MAY

South's award, as well as an honorable mention given to A-J Associate Editor Kenneth May in the editorial writing category, were announced Saturday at the concluding meeting of the association's annual convention, held this year in Corpus Christi.

The 25-year-old reporter's winning story concerned a seventh grade student's creation of a Texas bordello, made from popsicle sticks and sugar cubes, which was the winning entry in a junior high school history fair competition.

Phil Hamilton of The Tucson Citizen, who judged the short features competition, called South's story "an example of taking a routine assignment and turning it into a prize feature."

South has worked for the A-J three years.

May received an honorable mention for his editorial "And the Snails Shall Inherit..."

Also Saturday, Texas Tech University's student newspaper, The University Daily, was awarded first place in the college-university division.

Gary Skrehart is editor of the Tech paper and Steve Monk serves as faculty adviser.

Burle Pettit, A-J managing editor, Saturday was elected secretary of the association, which will hold its 1980 convention in Brownsville. Other officers elected include Jack Tinsley of The Fort Worth Star-Telegram, president; Fritz Wirt of The El Paso Times, first vice president; Buster Haas of The Dallas Morning News, second vice president; and Kuyk Logan of The Houston Post, treasurer.

Fund-Raiser To Aid Peace Fete

WASHINGTON (AP) — A businessman with close ties to the White House and Democratic Party says he is seeking contributions from major corporations to help pay for a Monday night banquet to celebrate the signing of the Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty.

White House officials said there was no arrangement under which contributors could automatically receive tickets for the gala dinner, the most expensive ever to be held at the executive mansion, in exchange for their gifts.

However, Lee Kling, the St. Louis businessman heading the fund-raising drive, said potential contributors were being told, "if you would like one of your people to attend, we'd be delighted" to invite them.

Mary Hoyt, press secretary to first lady Rosalynn Carter, acknowledged the fund-raising was "not a usual thing, but we have private individuals and corporations who would be happy to contribute to this celebration of peace. That doesn't mean anyone who contributes will be automatically invited."

The dinner party will be the largest at the White House since Richard M. Nixon invited 1,300 former prisoners of war and their friends and family to a White House dinner in 1973.

Deputy White House press secretary Rex Granum said potential contributors are being told that gifts of up to $5,000 will be accepted, although no minimum figure is being suggested.

"If these corporations are willing to help cut the federal government's expenses, that seems perfectly fine to us," he said. Granum said he expects that some of those offering contributions may chose not to send representatives to the banquet.

Mrs. Hoyt said the contributions would be tax deductible.

Some 1,300 persons will be invited to the banquet at which President Carter will salute Egyptian President Anwar Sadat and Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin.

In a telephone interview, Kling said a list of contributors would be made available some time after the dinner. Without offering any names, he said those being solicited are among the nation's major companies. Kling is the chairman of the board of a St. Louis bank holding company.

Asked about the contributions, Kling said: "It's kind of a nice thing ... to show this country's feelings about peace."

Taxpayers' money normally is used to pay for official state dinners here, and a large part of the tab for Monday's banquet on the South Lawn will be drawn from the U.S. Treasury.

Contributions were solicited in a similar fashion for a concert put on in January for visiting Chinese Vice Premier Deng Xiaoping (Teng Hsiao-ping) at the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts. And private funds were used to pay for the swimming pool that Gerald R. Ford arranged to have constructed on the White House grounds.

The cost of Monday night's banquet has not been estimated. However, there will be extra costs beyond the price of the roast beef, salmon and domestic wines.

The White House has rented a circus tent, which normally is available for $6,700, and tables, chairs and place settings for 10 times as many guests as are normally invited to a state dinner.

Texas Professor To Perform At White House

AUSTIN (UPI) — A piano professor at the University of Texas will perform at the White House Monday in a program celebrating the signing of the Israel-Egypt peace treaty.

Prof. David Garvey will accompany soprano Leontyne Price during a musical program scheduled after an evening dinner on the White House lawn. Garvey said Miss Price will probably sing one or two spirituals, an aria and "possibly something dealing with peace."

This will not be the first White House performance for the UT professor. He and Miss Price performed for President and Mrs. Carter last October in the White House. They also performed in the White House during the Johnson Administration.

Each of the principal countries involved in the new peace treaty will be represented on the program. Miss Price and Garvey will represent the United States, native Israeli violinst Itzhak Perlman will represent his home country, and The Egyption Trio — a guitar, drum and electronic organ group — will represent Egypt.

Newton Murder Case Declared Mistrial

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — The murder trial of Huey Newton ended in a mistrial Saturday, but the Black Panther leader said he had been "vindicated" on charges that he killed a teen-age prostitute.

Superior Court Judge Carl Anderson said the jury of nine women and three men was "hopelessly deadlocked" after four days of deliberation and declared a mistrial when the panel stalled 10-2 for acquittal.

Prosecutor Tom Orloff said a decision on a possible new trial would not be made until next week. Newton was accused in the August 1974 slaying of 17-year-old Kathleen Smith on an Oakland street corner.

Standing on the steps of the Alameda County Courthouse under a bright sun, Newton, 37, told an impromptu news conference he considered himself "vindicated."

Newton fled to Cuba in 1974 to avoid prosecution, but returned to the United States 2½ years later to face the charges. He faced 15 years to life in prison if he had been convicted of first-degree murder. The prosecution asked for a second-degree murder verdict, which carried a 7 years to life sentence.

"The trial was a farce," he said. "I should have been acquitted. It was not fair for them to try me in the first place. ... I'm tired." Then, he strode off with his wife, Gwen.

Shortly after the mistrial declaration, defense attorney Michael Kennedy told reporters one of the jurors who voted to convict had received a note saying, "Go hang him." Kennedy said the juror got the note as the panel went into deliberations Saturday at 9:15 a.m.

Kennedy claimed the note came from one of the alternate jurors whom he did not identify. He said the note went to juror "Mrs. Silva."

The jury filed back into the courtroom at 11:30 a.m. after 20 hours of deliberation over four days following a 3½-week trial. Jury foreman Janet Hurly told Anderson that they had taken three ballots and were unable to reach a decision.

The foreman said the vote on the third ballot was 10-2 — but did not say in which direction the majority voted. However, Kennedy said the the majority voted to acquit the Black Panther leader.

Newton sat impassively, registering no reaction or emotion as the deadlock announcement was made. Neither was there much reaction in the packed courtroom of the Alameda County Courthouse.

Orloff, who was surprised when a key witness recanted earlier testimony that she had seen Newton fire the fatal shot, said he thought the prosecution would be in a better position with a new trial. "I know what they're going to present," he said.

Before the jury got the case Wednesday, Orloff unexpectedly asked that Newton be found guilty of second-degree murder instead of first-degree murder. The jury, however, considered both charges.

Newton helped found the Black Panthers in the 1960s.

After Miss Smith was shot, he fled to Cuba, forfeiting $42,000 bail. Miss Smith died several months later after lingering in a coma. And when Newton ended his exile he faced a charge of murder. He is free on $130,000 bail pending appeal on an unrelated case.

CIA Quotes Hitler In Secret Report On 'Law And Order'

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The CIA quoted Nazi leader Adolph Hitler's views on "law and order" in a secret 1969 report on how to deal with campus unrest in the United States, it was disclosed Saturday.

The Hitler quotation ironically came at the end of a CIA report that called for working within the law to put down student demonstrations.

The report quoted a 1931 Hitler campaign speech as saying "the streets of our country are in turmoil, the universities are filled with students rioting and rebelling, communists are seeking to destroy our country."

"We need law and order," the quotation said. "Without law and order we cannot survive."

The CIA author did not comment on the Hitler quote, leaving the reader unclear whether the remark was meant to show the danger of radicalism or the threat of Nazism. Hitler came to power with a promise to quell Germany's turmoil.

The May 2, 1969, report was made public under a Freedom of Information Act request by American Citizens for Honesty in Government — a group sponsored by the controversial Church of Scientology.

The Church of Scientology has been feuding with the government for years over whether it deserves tax exempt status.

Eleven church officials were indicted last August on charges of stealing documents pertaining to the church from the Justice Department, the Internal Revenue Service and other agencies.

The document made available Saturday — labeled "Situation Information Report" on top and stamped "Secret" at the bottom — was released in response to a request about Project Resistance, the CIA's campaign to obtain dossiers on student radicals.

It described the use of court orders as a "highly effective tool" in confrontations between t h e "establishment" and campus "takeover artists."

The report — citing protests at Howard University in Washington, D.C., as well as Columbia and Fordham Universities in New York City — said "the restraining order is yet to fail in evicting student occupiers without resorting to force."

The Church of Scientology, which has been releasing sensitive documents as part of its running battle with the goverment, said the Hitler quote reflected an apparent pattern of "Nazi philosophy influencing U.S. intelligence agencies."

MACAO (AP) — A homemade bomb exploded in the plush Hotel Lisboa casino in this Portuguese colony Saturday, slightly injuring one woman, police said. Witnesses said the blast rocked the casino and sent gamblers rushing for exits. The injured woman was identified as a resident of nearby Hong Kong.

MAKES CONTACT — The space shuttle orbiter Columbia, riding piggy-back atop a 747 jetliner, makes contact with the runway at NASA's Kennedy Space Center Saturday morning after a brief trip from Eglin Air Force Base in Pensacola, Fla. (AP Laserphoto)

Space Shuttle Orbiter Makes Final Leg To Space Center

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — The American space shuttle Columbia arrived at its new home at the Kennedy Space Center today, completing its troubled two-week cross-country odyssey.

Shackled to the top of a 747 jetliner, the orbiter completed the last leg of its journey from California to Florida under bright, sunny skies and a stiff breeze at 11:03 a.m. EST, only a few minutes behind schedule.

Among the 3,000 persons waiting off the 15,000-foot runway built for this and future landings were astronauts John Young and Robert Crippen, scheduled to ride the shuttle on its maiden flight in November.

En route this morning from Eglin Air Force Base, Fla., the odd-looking tandem craft made a low-level flyover at Disney World in Central Florida.

Coming from a rainy stay in California and Texas, the 75-ton shuttle and its carrier were greeted Friday afternoon by warm, sunny skies and more than 3,000 onlookers eager to catch a glimpse of the unusual duo.

National Aeronautics and Space Administration officials say they hope to launch the Columbia on a solo flight Nov. 9, but they said Friday that, because of a series of minor snafus, the craft's maiden voyage might not come until next year.

"There's not one problem that's really serious," said NASA spokesman Jim Kukowski. "But the chances are not good right now to make the Nov. 9 date."

The problems include delays in replacing about 7,000 heat-resistent tiles on Columbia and the weather, he added.

But former astronaut Donald K. "Deke" Slayton, the flight test manager for Columbia, remained optimistic.

"We'll keep hanging in there, but it's going to take some luck," he said late Thursday at the officers' club at Eglin Air Force Base.

Once the problems are overcome, the shuttle will take off from a rocket, carry astronauts and satellites into orbit, and then glide back to earth like an airplane for repeated flights.

Slayton, one of the seven original Mercury Project astronauts, said that Friday's flight from San Antonio to the Florida Panhandle went smoothly, although stiff 23-mph winds whipped the runway and the throng of onlookers.

Because of a band of showers hovering over Florida, the stopover at Eglin wasn't set until the craft was in the air. If the showers hadn't cleared, officials said, the stop at Eglin would have been scrapped and the shuttle and its mother ship would have flown directly to Cape Canaveral.

Columbia's departure from California was delayed by storms and the loss of thousands of the protective tiles during a test flight. It finally left March 12, two days after it was first scheduled to arrive at Cape Canaveral.

The craft was further delayed in El Paso, Texas, where rain forced a two-day stay. Columbia made it to San Antonio on Thursday, and flew to Florida on Friday. It can't be exposed to rain because the heat-resistent tiles have yet to be replaced.

Curran Given Full Powers Of Watergate Prosecutor

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Special counsel Paul Curran begins his investigation of the Carter family peanut warehouse this week, armed with the powers of a Watergate prosecutor but bound by a mandate that may limit his inquiry.

It's still unclear whether the burly Republican investigator will have the authority to follow all leads — including any that might carry him to the White House.

Attorney General Griffin Bell yielded to congressional critics Friday and granted Curran the full powers of a special prosecutor, although Bell cringed at the term.

On Capitol Hill, some congressmen have already begun calling the investigation "peanutgate," but Bell made clear he doesn't "find any analogy between this and Watergate."

"I'm not trying to run a Watergate," Bell said. "What I'm trying to do is run some sort of fact-finding in which the public will have confidence."

In a formal charter, Bell gave Curran authority to investigate any potential crimes arising from loans to the Carter warehouse from former budget director Bert Lance's National Bank of Georgia or any other lender.

The charter also gives Curran authority to look into "related financial or business transactions" as well as "the use of loan proceeds."

The independent probe was prompted by a flurry of reports indicating financial records of the warehouse loans may have been falsified and the NBG allowed the Carter family a $500,000 check overdraft at one time.

Bell hedged when pressed as to whether Curran could investigate matters not directly relating to the loans — such as Carter's relationship with Lance, the president's campaign finances, or loans to Carter adviser Gerald Rafshoon.

"I'd have to sit down and think about that," he said.

Stressing he was not giving Curran a "roving commission" to investigate all areas, Bell said: "If there's some other matter that should be brought to my attention, I'll have to deal with those at that time."

Republicans have raised questions about whether any of the loan money might have been illegally diverted to Carter's 1976 presidential campaign — and about Carter's knowledge of the alleged irregularities.

Earlier this year, the White House said Carter knew little of the financial problems of his warehouse during 1976, when he was campaigning for the presidency. He turned the management over to his brother Billy in July 1976.

But the New York Times quoted officials Friday as saying they were present on two occasions in 1976 when Carter discussed financial aspects of his peanut business with NBG officials.

The Times also cited bank records showing Carter discussed the warehouse business on Aug. 26, 1976, with Lance.

Proposal Sparks Wage Dispute

By BILL KIDD
A-J Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Repeal of the prevailing wage law — as proposed in legislation by Rep. Lee Jackson, Dallas — has sparked the predictable confrontation between contractors and organized labor.

HB 1098 would repeal the existing law during local governments to determine — and contractors to pay — the "prevailing wage" paid construction workers in an area for public construction projections.

Jackson says the law hasn't been administered as originally envisioned when it was passed during the Depression Era (when it was intended to prevent non-local contractors from using imported, lower-paid workers from under-bidding local contractors).

In recent years, he reports most governmental bodies have adopted the pay scale suggested by local union officials — or local contractors.

Testimony to the House Employment Practices Committee by Jerry Arterburn, executive director for Associated Builders and Contractors of Greater Houston, supported repeal of the law — and so did that of Pat Bond, general counsel for Associated General Contractors of Texas.

Both questioned why the government should attempt to regulate wage scales for construction work and not for other types of employment.

Opposition came from several union officials, including Jackie St. Clair, executive secretary of Texas Building and Construction Trades Council — who said building standards would suffer.

"Lowering the standards," he added, "will not lower building costs."

The bill has been approved by a subcommittee, and faces a committee vote.

One of the other major business-oriented legislative meausures of the current session, self-insurance for worker's compensation (at least for larger employers) moved forward, with Employment Practices approving HB 438, by Don Henderson, Houston.

Analysis

One change in the bill made in the committee was to require self-insurers to participate in assessments for operation of the worker's compensation assigned risk pool — something the insurance industry (which still looks askance at the bill) indicated was one of the original bill's principal shortcomings.

State Board of Insurance members directed the SBI staff to make a recommendation on a proposed home warranty policy filing by City Insurance Co., New York, relating to coverage of "major structural defects" on houses for specified numbers of years.

Part of the difficulty involves whether such coverage should be regulated by the SBI as to rates charged — and if so, just where such coverage would fit into the existing regulatory scheme.

The SBI also is moving on adoption of a revision of its auto liability experience rating plan, with June 1 as a target date, to use only Texas experience in the rating formula used.

In other matters relating to the SBI, it was reported the number of applications to the assigned risk auto plan for the first two months of 1979 are running behind 1978 levels.

Total for the two months was 25,159, compared to 27,339 for the first two months of 1978. February saw 11,900 application of which 9,171 were renewals.

The State Securities Board reports considerable interest within Texas regarding mortgage-backed revenue bonds being issued by municipalities to finance single-family home construction.

Commissioner Richard D. Latham reports a number of out-of-state cities — including Chicago and Denver — have been offering such bonds, which are exempt from State Securities Board regulation.

Latham says it's likely the bonds may be coming in for more attention from the Internal Revenue Service, since the issues are tax-exempt.

Latham also reports that while there's not been any unusual amount of enforcement activity, securities involving gold and precious stones continue to come in for scrutiny by his agency.

Times Not Around To Herald Spring's First Note Of Cuckoo

LONDON (AP) — Englishmen in their damp and chilly homeland don't really believe spring has arrived until the first note of the cuckoo is heard.

The trouble this year is that The Times is not around to report the arrival of the migrant bird.

From time immemorial — which means in the memory of readers of The Times — some reader somewhere has fired off a letter giving the date and time of hearing the cuckoo's call, and asking, "Is this a record for early arrival?"

The cuckoo is now due, but The Times last came out Nov. 30 and then shut down in a dispute with its labor unions.

A Mr. G. Busk wrote from the heart of Gloucestershire last week that last Sunday "at 3.10 p.m. I heard the first ice-cream van of spring." But his letter appeared in the Daily Telegraph. Not the same thing at all.

Cuckoos are important harbingers of warmer times because the English spend at least six months of every year catching colds in the rain and shivering in underheated homes.

Hence the lines of the famous poet, Anonymous, who about the year 1265 wrote:

"Sumer is icumen in,
Lhude sing cuccu."

Or in modern English: "Summer is coming in. Loud sings cuckoo."

Robert Spencer, director of services at the British Trust for Ornithology, said the cuckoo winters in Cameroon, West Africa, and "it would be something of a suicide mission for it to arrive in this weather."

"In this century there are 16 records of the cuckoo being heard before March 24, but the usual touchdown time is in the first 10 days of April," he said. "It is bound to be late this year. Although it is 3,500 miles away, the bird will sense that it is not time to take off. Wonderful, isn't it?"

BRIGHT EYES

The sun is 400,000 times as bright as the fullmoon and gives the earth 6 million times as much light as do all the other stars put together. Most of the stars that can easily be seen on any clear night are actually brighter than the sun.

Spencer broke into verse:

"The cuckoo comes in April,
He sings his song in May,
In the middle of June he changes his tune,
In July he flies away."

Michael Mander, deputy chief executive of The Times, said: "We are hoping to republish on April 17 and negotiations with the unions continue. Our readers are writing to say they are not satisfied with other newspapers and implore us to stay in business. We have booked advertising worth 11 million pounds ($22 million) from companies confident we shall re-appear. We are very cautiously optimistic, but it seems we shall miss the first cuckoo."

Rape Suspect Exposed, Victim Hides Clothes

A man, found naked in a University Street service station restroom, was booked into county jail Saturday morning on suspicion of burglary and aggravated rape.

A 21-year-old Lubbock woman told police the suspect entered her Second Place residence about 5 a.m. Saturday by breaking a bedroom window, and raped her.

After the alleged attack, she said the suspect fell asleep and she hid his clothes and fled the apartment. When she returned with a witness, she said the man awoke and escaped from the scene in the nude.

Shortly after the woman reported the incident, police received a call that a naked man was locked in a service station restroom.

In other activity, two church burglaries were reported Saturday.

Harmon estimated the stolen property, plus damage to a window and doors inside the church, totaled $2,000.

Easter decorations, floating candles and crystal candle holders were reported missing from Christ the King Catholic Church at 4011 54th St. The Rev. James A. Comiskey told police entry to the building was through an upstairs door which was forced open.

The burglar or burglars then apparently went through a ceiling to an adjoining room where the candles were stored. The minister said no one had inspected the room in about 10 days. He estimated the loss, including damage to ceiling and doors, at $200.

Two television sets and costume jewelry, at an estimated value of $775, were reported missing Saturday from the residence of Richard Ontiveroz, 517 46th St. He told police his front door was pried open sometime between 7:30 p.m. Friday and 5 a.m. Saturday.

South Dakotan Dies Following Wreck

A South Dakota man, who had been hospitalized after suffering head injuries in a one-car rollover Feb. 25, died Saturday morning.

Jeffrey Allen Knight, 19, of Cherry Creek, S.D. was pronounced dead at 8 a.m. at Methodist Hospital by Justice of the Peace L.J. Blalack who has not yet made a ruling in the death.

Knight's death marks only the second Lubbock traffic fatality of the year. Reports show his vehicle was eastbound about 3 a.m. Feb. 25 in the 4300-block of South Loop 289 when his car went out of control, rolled over four times and then hit a culvert. He was thrown 18 feet from the vehicle after his car hit the culvert and the vehicle then rolled over four more times.

Funeral services for the young man are pending with Kefling Funeral Home in Mobridge, S.D. Local arrangements were handled by Resthaven-Singleton-Wilson Funeral Home.

The first city traffic fatality this year was recorded Jan. 10 when a 60-year-old truck driver died after he swerved his rig to miss an oncoming car and his empty cattle truck was struck by a Sante Fe Railway train in the 8200-block of Southeast Drive. The victim, Harold Lee Fulhart of Abilene, suffered fatal head and chest injuries and was pronounced dead at the scene.

No fatalities were reported in February, which was the city's first traffic fatality-free month since December 1976.

Judge Quits Cullen Davis Divorce Case

FORT WORTH (AP) — The judge in the Cullen Davis divorce trial announced he was quitting the case Saturday after the Fort Worth Star-Telegram learned he had met privately with the wealthy industrialist, the newspaper said.

District Judge John M. Barron of Bryan called the Star-Telegram to announce his withdrawal and intention to declare a mistrial, the newspaper said in a copyright story in its Sunday editions.

"The water is so muddy now that the legal rights of Mr. and Mrs. Davis, both of whom I like, have become involved through no fault of their own, and I therefore feel I must end this trial," Barron told the newspaper.

The phone call came only hours after the Star-Telegram told Barron it had learned he and Davis had met twice in the judge's Hilton Inn room to discuss a statement in the case, the newspaper said.

Barron said he invited Davis to his room on two occasions "two or three weeks ago" to suggest that the multimillionaire businessman try to reach a settlement with his estranged wife, Priscilla, the Star-Telegram reported.

Barron said they talked for about half an hour each time and that he did not see anything wrong with the meetings, the newspaper said.

Two hours later he called back to announce his withdrawal. "The local news media and others have impugned my integrity," he said.

Upon learning that Barron planned to withdraw and declare a mistrial, Jerry Loftin, one of Mrs. Davis' lawyers, said "I'm just stunned. I don't know what to say. The whole thing has been so bizarre."

Saturday's revelations followed five weeks of testimony in the stormy divorce trial that began about two months after Davis' murder-for-hire trial ended in a mistrial in Houston. Davis still faces charges that he plotted to have the original judge in his divorce, Joe Eidson Jr., murdered.

Eidson was not harmed, but withdrew from the case, and Barron was chosen to replace him.

However, Barron was dissatisfied with the slow pace of the trial and threatened last week to go back to Bryan and go "rabbit hunting" if the trial did not speed up.

He returned to Bryan on Thursday after the district attorney subpoenaed his civil trial records for use in criminal proceedings against Davis.

Cecil Munn, one of Davis' lawyers, said he was "terribly, terribly sorry." He said he thought Barron did a "splendid job presiding over a bad situation."

Davis was acquitted in 1977 in Amarillo of a murder charge in the shooting death of his 12-year-old stepdaughter at the Davis mansion in 1976.

Prosecutor Rests Case In Hart Murder Trial

PRYOR, Okla. (AP) — The prosecution rested its case against Gene Leroy Hart on Saturday after testimony linked Hart with a summer camp where he allegedly murdered three Girl Scouts in 1977.

The defense opened its case by calling five witnesses before court adjourned until Monday. Hart's trial on three counts of first-degree murder is expected to conclude next week.

Karen Mitchell, a former Girl Scout counselor now a freshman at Oklahoma State Univesity, was the last of the state's 32 witnesses called in six days of testimony.

She identified a small mirror and a small pipe, which authorities say were recovered from the cabin where Hart was captured, as items she placed in a trunk following a camp skit on June 8, 1977. That was five days before the three young girls were slain at Camp Scott in northeastern Oklahoma.

Miss Mitchell said she did not see her belongings in the trunk again until two weeks to a month after the slayings. She said the pipe and mirror were missing from the trunk.

Roger Chirsco, an Oklahoma State Bureau of Investigation agent, had testified that agents recovered the pipe and mirror last July 12 from the cabin where Hart had been captured three months earlier.

"You don't know who had access to the contents of that trunk before it was returned to the Magic Empire (Girl Scout) Council, do you?" defense attorney Garvin Isaacs asked Miss Mitchell.

"No, sir," she replied.

Isaacs has said throughout the trial that investigators could have planted items of evidence.

DRAWING THE LINE

The Mason-Dixon Line traditionally dividing the North from the South was in no way connected with the Civil War. The line was drawn much earlier to tend a colonial land dispute between the Calverts of Maryland and the Penns. Plotted out in a 1750 compromise in the English Court of Chancery, the line was fixed by two surveyors, Charles Mason and Jeremiah Dixon, between 1763 and 1767.

Critics Decry Loss Of Pioneer Virtues

By BILL KIDD
A-J Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Traditionally, education, like thrift, self-reliance and piety, is one of the pioneer virtues much admired and given lip-service by Texas.

But in recent year, it appears those virtues have been — like the state's other resources — in dwindling supply.

Higher education, its critics have charged, has become higher only in cost, not in quality.

Analysis

One those critics — and one of the most articulate — is Higher Education Commissioner Kenneth Ashworth, who has authored "American Higher Education in Decline," which has been published recently by the Texas A&M University Press.

Dr. Ashworth says the book is to raise some questions about practices in higher education which he feels "seem to be fairly prevalent."

For 14 consecutive years, he notes, scores on national examinations have declined while college grades have gone up.

Students may come out of college unable "to speak, read or write English...and with poor computational skills and no concept of U.S. or world history.

"You have textbook publishers asking authors to write at the 10th grade reading level (for college students)...Employers complaining, having to check on degrees....

I'm trying to explain some of the motivation behind this...It's a paper chase; credentials are more important to the student than an education."

Degrees, Ashworth says, have become the admission tickets required for "quick promotion, a good job or more prestige."

It is a phenomenon, he feels, reflecting two other all-too familiar trends in contemporary society — inflation, and the waste or overuse of dwindling resources.

And he places part of the blame at the same doorstep which has become the dumping ground for responsibility for inflation and related difficulties, the federal government.

"A good part of this has come out of the fact that the federal government has been more deeply involved in higher education," Ashworth says.

"When they started putting money in, they wanted to make sure everyone was getting the credentials."

Much of that effort was made on the part of minorities, he notes — but part of the unfortunate results have been to devalue the credentials which had been earned by minorities by giving, in some instances, unearned credentials.

It is like, he says, "cranking up the printing presses" to turn out more money during a period of inflation.

"The whole book was written in the context that this trend is putting us in a disadvantage in the world marketplace," Ashworth says.

At the end of World War II, the U.S. had a clear edge in the marketplace, with many places in its system for (and an increasing need for) educated, technically trained persons, he comments.

Now, much of the U.S. industrial plant is obsolete: "The only edge remaining for us at the moment is brain power — and we're frittering that away..."

There are, Ashworth argues, "many frauds being promoted in the name of higher education...One of the things that concerns me most is that everybody is out for innovation; you have to be some kind of old mossback to be opposed."

There needs to be tightening of accreditation standards, for one thing — and better control of standards (admissions, teaching and graduation) by those involved he says.

Ashworth's comments aren't likely to be welcomed or agreed with by everyone, whether in or outside the academic community.

But, as he notes, at least one institution seemed to care enough to at least publish the book.

'Lou Grant' Commands Tabloid's City Desk

TORONTO (UPI) — The city room of a daily metropolitan newspaper can be a hectic place at the best of times. But when Ed Asner, star of television's Lou Grant Show, moves in as city editor the word takes on a new meaning.

Asner, in Toronto to film a movie, took a day off work Friday to act as senior city editor of the Toronto Sun, a popular 210,000-circulation (340,000 Sundays) subway tabloid featuring daily "sunshine girls" and a snappy layout.

The Sun was wise to schedule the promotion on a slow news day. Asner was so hounded by reporters, photographers, budding actresses and well-wishers that neither he nor the paper was able to do much editing.

But an obliging Asner, taking on his television role as city editor of the "Los Angeles Tribune," did make it to the desk for about 10 minutes where he growled and barked out real assignments to real reporters.

"Sylvia!" he hollered, summoning social columnist Sylvia Train. "What's the gossip, Sylvia?"

"I couldn't possibly tell you in just a minute," she answered coyly.

"Okay, give us 500 words."

TV cameramen, soundmen, photographers and reporters squeezed in behind him to record an embarrassed Asner as he watched Sun photographer Norm Betts pose a buxom young lady on a bench.

"Okay, now look at the camera like it was the last man on earth and you were 10th in line," Betts told her.

Asner was a gracious when another young woman, Sun discovery Julie Belmonte, announced herself as "Canada's first poster girl" and presented him with a signed poster of herself in a scanty swimsuit.

The payoff came moments later when the lady's husband cornered Asner in an office and told him she is a promising actress as well "I thought maybe we could have lunch one day and talk over her career," he said.

"If I have time, Asner told him.

Most of the reporters played along with the gag, comparing Sun reporters to characters from the television show and interviewing Asner as Lou Grant.

"How do you want to change the Sun as city editor, Mr. Grant?" one radio reporter asked.

"Well, I'm working to get the ads segregated into one area so we can just read the news...that's fit to print, that is." Asner replied.

Asner said his last real newspaper work was as features editor of his high school newspaper.

Did he learn anything about the newspaper business?

"Keep the powder dry," he quipped.

Kidney Transplant Story Told In Boy's Diary

the brave but frail youngster continued to play in baseball and soccer leagues, David said. Before he stepped on the field, Tim simply slapped a bandage over his catheter, the tube sticking from his gut for dialysis purposes.

"His teammates never knew it," David said. "He would go out and play just like the rest of them."

But his disease eventually forced him to slow down. There were other problems, too.

For one thing, "young people don't do well on dialysis," said Dr. Richard Lawton, who headed the team that performed Wednesday's transplant.

And for another, Tim's dependence on time-consuming dialysis treatments — some lasting 12 hours — was a personal agony. He found it hard to stay still for such long stretches, David said.

March 19, 1979 — Woke up about 6:30 a.m. and got my tray about 7 a.m. Went to dialysis at 8 a.m. and got connected at 8:42 a.m. Got disconnected at 12:42 a.m. Got my dinner tray at 1 p.m. Still had to be connected to IV till 4 p.m. for rejection medicine. Got supper tray at 5:20 p.m. and Mama came at 5:30 p.m., and Daddy came at 5:35 p.m. Finished eating at 5:45 p.m. They both left about 9:30 p.m., and I went to sleep about 10 p.m.

Tim developed kidney problems in January 1976, David said. At first, doctors diagnosed it as a virus. But when Tim still couldn't urinate — and then he started urinating blood — they knew it was worse.

Tim's mother accompanied him to a Galveston clinic, where he was started on peritoneal dialysis, which required 12-hour treatments three times a week, David said.

After a month or so, Tim and his mother returned to Lubbock. Tim kept up the same dialysis schedule with a machine installed at home, David said.

Later, Tim was switched to hemodialysis, in which the three weekly treatments take four to six hours each, at the non-profit South Plains Dialysis Center.

Tim occupied himself during treatment sessions with arts and crafts. His drawings of other dialysis patients adorn the halls of the local center, David said.

And he enjoyed talking — but never about his own problems. Said David: "He never knew self-pity. He was always more concerned about other people, even when he was hooked up to this horrible-looking machine."

Tim, his family and doctors decided a kidney transplant might be an answer. In the past, the closest facilities for such an operation were in Denver or Dallas. But now, the South Plains has Health Sciences Center Hospital, a partnership between the Lubbock County Hospital District and the Texas Tech University School of Medicine.

Community leaders had been dreaming of a transplant program here since the early 1970s, when Alex Cooke, Dr. Jerry Stirman and other physicians and concerned citizens pioneered the South Plains Dialysis Center.

Such a program requires a wide array of medical experts and equipment — resources the medical school and its new teaching hospital only recently acquired.

Doctors found that Tim's mother would be a good match as a kidney donor for her son. The operation initially was scheduled for November, and then for shortly after Christmas, but both times had to be canceled due to Tim's health, David said.

March 18, 1979 — Checked in the Health Sciences Center about 3 p.m. Sunday afternoon. Daddy brought me. I checked in for transplant to be done March 21, 1979. At 4:30 p.m., Dr. Lawton came to talk about the transplant. Got my supper about 6 p.m. It was pretty good, but not as good as Mom's. I rode in a wagon and gave a little boy a ride, too. Mother came about 10:40 p.m. Fell asleep about 11 p.m.

Tim's mother was admitted to the hospital, now designated by the National Kidney Foundation as a regional transplant center, Tuesday, David said. Doctors needed to give her medication intravenously to prepare her for her role in the operation, he added.

On the eve of the transplant, David said, Tim visited his mom's room.

"All he could talk about was the pain my mother would be going through. He was worried about her, not about himself," David said.

Lawton, who has participated in some 300 transplants dating back to 1969, said nearly every department of the hospital was involved in the operation. The experts worked until late Tuesday on tests and other final preparations.

The operation on Tim's mother, removing one of her two healthy kidneys, started about 8 a.m. Wednesday. Her operation was headed by Dr. Odis Avant. Assisting was Dr. C.R.F. Baker Jr.

The operation to transplant the healthy organ in Tim, next to his own two malfunctioning kidneys, started about 9 a.m.

The effort involved many other medical personnel.

Dr. Ruth Lawrence is the immunologist, whose job of monitoring Tim for infection continues. The drugs that coax Tim's body to accept the new kidney make him more susceptible to infection.

Dr. John Menchaca, an assistant professor in pediatric nephrology (children's kidney diseases); and Dr. Glen Stanbaugh and Dr. W. Duke Myers, of the South Plains Dialysis Center, attended to Tim before surgery and will continue through recovery.

The transplant procedure was completed by early afternoon Wednesday.

Immediately after surgery, Tim and his mother were described as "doing well." But a few days later, David said, his brother developed a complication: although the transplanted kidney seemed to be functiioning, something was blocking urination.

Doctors removed the blockage clot Friday, and Tim appeared to be "much better" Saturday. A hospital spokesman said Lawton is "happy and comfortable" with the progress of Tim and his mother.

Tim, according to the spokesman, is in semi-isolation in a medical intensive care unit, while his mother is in a post-surgical unit. Telephones are set up so the two can talk.

Tim is expected to stay in the hospital three to five weeks. His mother is expected to stay perhaps one more week.

Success of the operation is good news for the 350 West Texas residents, 70 of them in the South Plains area, who are on dialysis. For about 15 percent of dialysis patients, a kidney transplant is a treatment option. Lawton is working up 10 patients now for transplants.

Life without a healthy kidney is difficult, David said. Not only was Tim on dialysis, but he was on a "very restricted diet" — salt free with few liquids.

"After he recovers," David said, "the first thing he wants to do — if the doctors allow it — is to eat a pizza."

Hit-Run Tornado Reveals Gaps In Weather Warning System

at 11:04 p.m. pea-sized hail was falling near the southwest corner of Lubbock County; at 11:15 p.m., pea-sized hail was dropping on Wolfforth; at 11:20 p.m., marble-sized hail was pelting Loop 289 and the Brownfield Highway; at 11:43 p.m., golf ball-sized hail was falling on downtown Lubbock; and at 12:03 a.m., damage reports from the tornado began coming in to the NWS. The tornado officially was logged at 12:09 a.m.

Less than an hour later a tornado, either the one that touched down in Lubbock or one from the same storm, pounded to earth near Crosbyton, causing nearly $1 million in damages. That area, too, was unaware of the approaching danger because teletype communications from the NWS were wiped out when the twister hit north Lubbock.

The 12:03 entry came "probably about 15 minutes after the tornado had struck," said Bill Crouch, the station's head meteorologist.

The tornado went undetected for several reasons, according to Crouch. "Tornadoes like that one materialize very fast. That one was probably on the ground no longer than two minutes, and gone," he speculated.

Judging by damage to the ground along the tornado's path, it was approximately 150 yards wide and traveled about a mile on the ground.

The storm that produced the twister knocked out the power to the NWS station, forcing the weathermen to operate with emergency power several times during the night, including the time when the tornado occurred. The NWS emergency power generator takes about 20 seconds to activate, and although the power is enough to keep the equipment in operation, Crouch said, any amount of power below normal could cause some malfunctions.

And, unbeknownst to the weathermen, an emergency power generator in the old Lubbock Regional Airport terminal building, which was to have supplied backup power to the teletypes, was missing, rendering the machines useless when the main power supply failed. The generator was moved into the airport control tower sometime in late 1978 and has not been replaced.

"We were unaware the emergency power unit had been pulled out of the old terminal building," Crouch said. "We have teletype lines into the building, and we're supposed to have a power unit there, too."

Southwestern Bell, which supplies the phone lines the teletype utilizes, has volunteered to loan the NWS a backup generator, but the unit has not yet been installed.

The alternate power system can and will be replaced, but what seems to be an undeniable gap exists in the city's protective cloak of radar.

The Lubbock NWS office has a radar which Crouch said "is as good for the detection of severe weather as any weather station would ever need." The unit, which cost about $100,000 when installed during the spring of 1978, can track weather within a 275-mile radius of the airport.

Weather stations in Amarillo and Midland-Odessa have similar radar units, and the weathermen have consistently maintained that, even without radar, Lubbock would be covered by the overlapping scans from those two stations.

Crouch said his crew was in "constant communication by telephone" with the Amarillo NWS at the time of the tornado, but a spokesman with the Amarillo station this week said his office did not spot the twister until it had touched the ground.

Crouch explained the radar shoots a high frequency radio beam one degree wide into a cloud and develops its pictures from the beam echoing off the moisture inside the cloud. "When something interesting shows up, we can enlarge the picture to get a vertical or profile shot of the cloud."

There are two ways to detect tornadoes inside thunderclouds using the radar, he said. "The first is when we sight what we call an echo-free vault. When a spot inside a cloud doesn't reflect echoes, it's not raining in that spot. That's a pretty good sign there's something developing right there.

"Also, if we see a hook shape developing at the southwest edge of a cloud, we keep an eye on it. A tornado cell, with its spinning winds, will pull the rest of the cloud around it, causing the tornado to relocate in the middle of the cloud where it can build."

The Saturday night tornado's proximity to the weather station also caused some detection problems, explained another NWS crewman. If a storm is too close to the radar, the picture can appear distorted, like a picture on a TV set when the camera is too close to its subject, he said. The amount of the distortion depends on the size and thickness of the cloud, and its distance from the radar.

During the power outages at the station and subsequent breaks in communication with the local media, the only open channel was the weather radio, a special broadcast frequency which standard AM and FM radios cannot receive.

"We've been using the radio for about a year," Crouch said. "It's a very good alternative source to the radio and TV stations. I'm not knocking them, but I know of at least one TV station that was getting its information straight from that weather radio."

Meanwhile, the Chupik warehouse shows evidence of the twister's force. The structure's steel frame is dented, as if a giant truck had crashed into it, a large hole looks down from the roof, and the blue metal front is simply peeled from its supports. Huge steel support girders lie up to a quarter mile away.

Question Of Ethics In Donation Raised

By RUTHANNE BROCKWAY
Avalanche-Journal Staff

If your sister needed a kidney transplant, would you donate one of your kidneys?

A survey conducted by a Texas Tech University School of Medicine transplant surgeon indicates most people would donate to their children, parents, siblings or spouse. Most even conceded they would donate to a close friend.

DR. LAWTON

But would you donate a kidney to a stranger?

Only 20 percent of transplant candidates have living related donors available. Usually cadaver kidneys are used for patients who have no living related donor.

But the surgeon who headed Health Sciences Center Hospital's first kidney transplant last week believes living non-related donors are an often overlooked source of transplant organs.

"There's a reservoir of kidneys not being used — the ones in people's bodies; people who are alive and have two kidneys," said Dr. Richard Lawton, an experienced transplant surgeon.

Although some of the earliest kidney transplants in the United States in the 1950s involved living non-related donors, the practice dropped in popularity due to a limited success rate.

But Lawton said the difference today is that, "With more sophisticated tissue-typing we can anticipate much better the survival of the kidney."

Of the several tests used to measure compatability of donor and recipient, Lawton said HLA-D locus typing seems to be the most significant but that it cannot be adequately measured during the limited time physicians have to work with cadaver kidneys, which he said can be stored only from 24 to 72 hours.

Using the HLA-D locus typing to match donor and patient means living non-related donors could be a better donor source than cadavers, he said.

He estimated the survival rate for donated kidneys is 95 percent for identical siblings, 75 percent for living related and 50 percent for cadaver. With adequate time for matching tests, he said non-related donors could have a success rate somewhere between 50 and 75 percent or possibly higher.

The use of living non-related donors would also relieve an ethical problem which sometimes occurs with related donors, he said.

Lawton contends that family pressure on a relative asked to donate can create guilt.

"Some donors who were pressured, later feel bitter about it — especially if the (donated) kidney fails," he said.

Although he commended all "truly voluntary" donations as humanitarian acts, Lawton noted in a medical paper on living non-related donors, "Presently consent is seldom obtained in the living related situation without subtle or overt pressure being brought to bear on the family donor."

The surgeon said studies show non-related living donors are people highly motivated to supply needs for humanitarian reasons. Reports indicate such persons are psychologically stable and enjoy "enhanced self-esteem" for years after donating.

Not all doctors, however, share Lawton's philosophy on use of living non-related donors. He said some physicians question the motives of such persons.

"Physicians have no right to prevent a person from acting in a humanitarian role by donating a kidney to a stranger," Lawton charged in his medical paper. "This act would irrefutably be the most significant contribution to society that an individual would make during his or her lifetime. Those who still persist in arguing the ethics and morals of living non-related donors must be prepared to refute all the evidence revealing the pressure placed on living related donors."

Court cases involving living related donors have usually centered on minors and/or the mentally retarded, such as a recent San Antonio case.

Fourteen-year-old Steve Little, victim of a congenital kidney disease, lost one kidney at age 4. He was hospitalized in San Antonio last month in failing health while awaiting a court decision on whether his 15-year-old mentally retarded sister Anne could be his kidney donor.

The court with original jurisdiction agreed to allow the donation, but Anne's court-appointed attorney contested the decision because there is no Texas law on the subject.

The appeals court upheld the original decision to allow the donation, saying that Anne would receive self-esteem and increased status in the family.

Although the parents, Margaret and Thomas Little, now have the legal go-ahead for the transplant, Mrs. Little appeared before the Texas Legislature last week to support legislation to allow such donations without other families going through the legal battle the Little family faced.

A bill sponsored by Rep. Bennie Bock II, D-New Braunfels, would set legal procedure to allow mentally retarded minors to donate under certain guidelines.

Although most kidney transplants will continue to use either living related donors or cadaver kidneys, Lawton hopes there will someday be more acceptance of living non-related donors.

Such a practice would make more kidneys available for transplants and Lawton said "the bond of affection (that exists with living related donors) wouldn't interfere" with the donor's decision to donate.

Donor information is available at the South Plains Dialysis Center, the South Plains Kidney Foundation and on the back of Texas drivers' licenses.

For those humanitarians who would donate a kidney to a stranger, Lawton said, there should be a plaque or certificate to recognize their donation.

Athletes have halls of fame for football and basketball accomplishments, he noted. "People who donate kidneys should really have a hall of fame."

Juvenile Delinquency, Youth Crimes Linked

saults and 101 drug offenses last year in Lubbock County.

The 31 reform school commitments were almost double the totals of each of the three previous years, when 18, 16 and 16 youths were ordered locked up.

"When you're put on probation over and over again, of course you become cynical," Miss Jacobo said. "You say, 'Well, hell, they're not going to do anything to me.'"

In addition to "young hoodlums" having protected status as juveniles and Lubbock County not having needed programs, she said, adults with whom youths are involved and their parents also are part of the problem.

Older criminals often take along a juvenile and have him perform the worst part of the crime, such as going in to rob a store or break into a home while they wait outside, she said, because of his different legal status.

And, she noted, parents often come to juvenile court and loudly protest any action being taken against their offspring while they neglect any effort at home at controlling them.

Except for including youths up to 17 instead of just to 15, "Texas has a very good code, procedurally," she said.

But the Texas Family Code would work much better in Lubbock County, she thinks, with better programs.

For example, juveniles are told not to associate with other probationers but are ordered to enroll in Project Intercept, a combined school district and county program where almost all of the students are on juvenile probation. The judge then tells them that Project Intercept is the exception and that they are not to associate with each other after school is out.

And without programs to combat delinquency in the city, she said, the new detention center being constructed off North University Avenue and Loop 289 "will be exactly the same as a juvenile ward."

Miss Jacobo wants a coordinated effort with counseling, drug abuse and family service programs set up through state and county governments.

"We have to spend some money," she said. "With most of the cases before the courts, it's a family problem. It's not just the kids.

"All these things can be done if you get your community behind you."

She said most juvenile delinquents "are just begging for help."

"My opinion is that kids just have too much time to themselves, and their time is not being utilized in the proper fashion," she said.

"He comes in at 3:30, and both parents work, and they don't get home till 6, and he's not home when they get there, and they have no idea where he is.

"The fact is, we have little gangs all over the place. And there is a very serious problem of these kids running around with adults."

So, as Miss Jacobo sees it, juveniles should be dealt with sternly in court but should be paid more attention at home and in the community so that fewer of them end up in court.

"You can go up to almost any kid on the street, and he can tell you his rights," she said. "He'll say, 'You can't do so-and-so to me. I know my rights.'

"We teach them what their rights are, but we don't teach them what their responsibilities are."

Carter Vows Price Battle

double to 88, will now be increased to 126, he said.

In addition, he said as many as 105 other staffers would be lent to the compliance effort from other agencies.

The president, who will fly back to Washington today for Monday's signing of a Mideast peace treaty, compared the difficulty of fighting inflation with the difficulty of negotiating such a treaty. Inflation, he said, like the issue of peace or unrest, "is not beyond our power to control."

He predicted that "in a few weeks we will begin to see the results of this battle" against inflation.

In both Elk City and Dallas, the president scheduled meetings with state and local Democratic leaders, who could be helpful to him if he seeks re-election in 1980 as widely expected.

In Elk City, Carter planned to meet local politicians in a high school classroom, but in Dallas the setting was to be a brunch at the home of Robert Strauss, the wealthy Texan who is Carter's special ambassador for trade negotiations.

Carter last week set up a campaign committee to begin laying the groundwork for a re-election bid, which he is not expected to announce formally until late this year or early next.

In his 1976 campaign, Carter won Texas with 52 percent of the vote, but since has been hurt by agricultural farm protests and his successful campaign to win ratification of the Panama Canal treaties, which were unpopular in that state.

Carter lost Oklahoma in 1976, with 49 percent of the vote, but carried the area around Elk City, where he had appeared on Nov. 11, 1975 as a long-shot candidate for the Democratic nomination.

Sadat Arrives To Sign Pact

rocks at Jews holding an unauthorized prayer service on Temple Mount, sacred to both Jews and Moslems. No injuries were reported. One Jew was reported arrested. Officially, there is a rabbinical ban on Jews entering the site for fear they may step on the unmarked burial places of Jewish holy men. Unofficially, authorities try to keep Jews away to prevent confrontations with Arabs.

In a statement issued after Sadat's departure, Egypt's leftist Progressive Socialist Unionists deplored the treaty as a move to "preserve American national security interests and not to solve the Arab-Israeli conflict."

The party claims a following of 100,000 among Egypt's 40 million people.

Syrian Foreign Minister Abdel Halim Khaddam, in an interview with the conservative Kuwait newspaper Al Wattan, urged "all Arabs, especially in Egypt, to mount the highest degree of revolutionary violence in order to strangle and overthrow Sadat's regime."

It was the second day in a row Syria had called for the overthrow of Sadat.

The Syrians, like the Iraqis and the PLO, vehemently oppose the U.S.-mediated treaty, which was given its final touches by President Carter during his trip to Egypt and Israel earlier this month. The anti-treaty Arabs demand return of all Israeli-occupied Arab lands and freedom for the Palestinians to form their own independent state in the West Bank of the Jordan River and the Gaza Strip.

The treaty returns only the Sinai — to Egypt — and sets the stage for a vaguely defined autonomy for the Palestinians short of full independence.

"We will not ask Arab oil-producing countries to stop petroleum shipments to the United States," Khaddam said, saying such a move might "divert attention from the high treason" by Sadat. He said the sanctions would be against Sadat, not the Egyptian people. He did not elaborate.

It was not known whether other Arab hard-liners also would refrain from demanding an oil embargo against America. Arafat has said he will urge the oil producers to cut off U.S. oil.

Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko arrived in Syria Saturday to discuss the current Mideast developments and Soviet-Syrian relations. The Soviets are Syria's chief source of arms and economic aid. Unconfirmed reports said Gromyko may confer in Damascus with Arafat.

Concerning the issues Begin and Vance were negotiating, an American official, declining to be identified publicly, said the memorandum of understanding would omit any explicit new United States commitment to Israel to refuse to negotiate with the Palestine Liberation Organization.

But the memo would contain a reference to a 1975 agreement under which the United States promised Israel that it would neither recognize the PLO nor negotiate with it so long as the organization refused to recognize the right of Israel to exist.

As for Israeli forces in the Sinai Peninsula, Israel says it wants to retain control of the oil fields for nine months after the treaty is signed, and Egypt has been holding out for Israeli withdrawal within six or seven months of the signing.

Under the terms of the Camp David agreement, Israel must pull back from two-thirds of the Sinai within nine months of the signing of the treaty.

Pay-Less Shoe Store Holdup Duo Sought

Police late Saturday were seeking two white men who robbed the Pay-Less Shoe Store at 1916 Fourth St. of an undetermined amount of cash about 9 p.m.

The pair reportedly ripped the phones from the wall before fleeing the store in a new-model white van.

One of the suspects was 5-foot-8, had a mustache and was wearing jeans. His companion also was clad in jeans and tennis shoes and had a blue toboggan hat with the eyes cut out pulled over his face.

Just a week ago, police said, the manager of the business was able to elude would-be bandits who confronted him on the store's parking lot as he was leaving with the firm's receipts.

Government Reports Inflation Rate Increase

NEW YORK (AP) — Government reports indicate prices are rising at their fastest pace in 4½ years and the amount workers have to spend, after inflation, is declining.

Still, the consumer buying boom remains strong.

The Conference Board, a business-funded research group, reported this past week that its February survey of consumers showed a 22 percent increase from the previous month in an index of buying plans for cars, homes, appliances or other major purchases in the next six months.

Levels of consumer debt also remain at high levels.

The reason, many economists think, is that consumers have become used to inflation. Instead of scaring off buyers, rapid increases in prices encourage them to buy now to beat price increases later — and borrow more to do so. That in turn helps fuel further inflation.

"The strong February buying figures indicate that the urge to buy now to avoid paying higher prices later is still pronounced and prevalent," said Fabian Linden, director of the Conference Board survey.

But Linden argues that continued "hedge-buying" not only fuels inflation but represents a borrowing from future sales.

"All this suggests that when the now widely anticipated business slowdown arrives, the decline may be somewhat greater than is generally expected," he said in releasing the latest results of the survey of 5,000 families.

The government reported this past week that consumer prices jumped 1.2 percent from January to February, or at an annual rate of about 15 percent if that rise continued for 12 months. That was the biggest inflation rise since a 1.2 percent jump in September 1974.

For the last 12 months, including February, prices have increased nearly 10 percent. But in the same period, largely because of inflation, the government said workers' spendable income declined 1.2 percent.

In the face of that, consumers have shown a willingness to take on more debt. And, if inflation expectations are a true indication, they may continue to do so as long as they are able. An Associated Press-NBC survey of 1,600 people this past week found that an overwhelming 72 percent of those polled expected inflation to worsen over the next year. Only five percent expected improvement.

Consumer credit rose 16 percent to a record $1.2 trillion by the end of 1978, representing 17.5 percent of total personal disposable income.

Whether there is a danger in that may depend on several factors.

"To the extent that people go deeper and deeper into debt and have less and less of a nest egg, at a time when there is universal agreement that the economy is slowing down, this does not bode well for the future," says Irwin L. Kellner, economist at Manufacturers Hanover. But he says that some slowing in "speculative" buying could occur if either inflation slows or the unemployment rate worsens.

Citibank, in a separate report, concludes however that "the debt position of the consumer sector gives no cause for alarm."

Citibank notes several reasons behind the willingness of consumers to take on increasingly high levels of debt now to finance purchases. One is the trend in recent years towards two-income households where both spouses work, enabling them to carry more debt. And banks have tended to extend the length of payments for auto and some other consumer loans to 48 or even 60 months, which leads to a lower monthly payment.

But much also is attributed to an inflation psychology, where consumers perceive that borrowing now means paying later in inflation-shrunk dollars.

"Based on the experience of past recessions, the repayment behavior of all but the most marginally solvent borrowers should result in a marked slowing of credit growth and possible net liquidation in the amount of credit outstanding. In the meantime, the debt position of the consumer sector gives no cause for alarm," says Citibank.

In other business developments this past week:

•Commerce Department figures showed that corporate profits in the fourth quarter of 1978, which totaled $225.3 billion at a seasonally adjusted annual rate, were up 9.6 percent from the third quarter and were 26.4 percent higher than the fourth quarter of 1977.

The report prompted a series of exchanges among business, labor and government leaders on whether profits were too high.

Alfred Kahn, the administration's chief inflation fighter, said large increases in corporate profits would strengthen "the widespread belief" that business isn't doing its part to fight inflation. But the Chamber of Commerce said profits weren't excessive and business shouldn't be made the scapegoat for inflation.

•The on-again, off-again plan by Standard Oil Co. of Ohio to build a California-to-Texas pipeline appears to be on again. Sohio canceled the $1 billion pipeline project March 13, claiming problems with getting the necessary government environmental clearances. But amid heated criticism from state and federal officials, Sohio reversed itself Wednesday, resubmitting applications for California air-quality permits, with the caveat that it would again drop its plans if approval dragged on for several more months.

•The trucking industry and the Teamsters' union remained far apart as contract talks proceeded toward an April 1 strike deadline.

War Threat Fails To Faze Market

By J.L. HUTCHESON
Schneider, Bernet & Hickman, Inc.

The Dow Industrial average reached a six-month high this week as the market rally which began last week pushed widely and actively ahead.

J.L. HUTCHESON

Analysts were impressed by the strength demonstrated by the market in the face of a call for war by the Saudi Arabian press. The editorial outburst by the Saudi press followed a statement earlier by Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin that his nation would never accept the redivision of Jerusalem.

Analysts on the street attributed some of this week's gain to "window dressing" by the institutions. The term "window dressing" refers to a practice often used by portfolio managers to impress their clients. These managers frequently "dress up" their portfolios near the end of a quarterly reporting period by including as many stocks as possible that have performed well during the period. Their reports typically wouldn't state clearly that such issues had been acquired only after most of their value advance had taken place.

Much of the stimulus for the recent upswing in the market was provided by the energy stocks on speculation that Congress might decontrol oil and gas prices in the very near future. Also, many brokerage analysts recently have been raising their earnings estimates for stocks in this energy group.

The only significant drop the stock market posted this week occurred Tuesday on news that after-tax corporate earnings rose a seasonally adjusted 9.6 percent in last year's final quarter. Ordinarily, this would be extremely positive news, but many investors and stock analysts fear that such a surge in corporate profits could prompt the federal government to place some type of mandatory wage-price controls on the economy. This fear resulted in a 7.28 point decline Tuesday.

Some investors are nervous, too, about the possibility that the Federal Reserve Board might tighten credit further. There is some anticipation that interest rates will move higher over the near term.

After the close of trading Thursday, the Fed announced that in the week ended March 14, M1, the nation's basic money supply, fell $1.2 billion and M2, the broader money measure, was down $700 million. This is basically a neutral report and was received with a positive response by most analysts who had been expecting sizable increases to be reported.

Another restraining factor on the market was the announcement by the Labor Department that consumer prices in February rose a seasonally adjusted 1.2 percent, or 14.4 percent annually. This was the largest monthly increase in 4½ years.

'October Massacre' Jitters Linger On

NEW YORK (AP) — Almost six months after last fall's "October massacre" in the stock market, many Wall Streeters are still a little jittery about the amount of money borrowed against stocks.

These loans, known as margin debt, reached a record high of $12.4 billion last September. They were widely cited as a cause of forced selling a month later when the Dow Jones industrial average took a drop of more than 90 points in just two weeks.

The total of margin debt has come down somewhat since then — it stood at $10.79 billion as of the latest report from the New York Stock Exchange. But some analysts maintain that it still could cause trouble if the market should go into any substantial decline.

It certainly wasn't any problem this past week, as the market reached its highest levels so far in 1979. The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials posted its third straight weekly gain, rising 6.93 to 859.75.

The New York Stock Exchange composite index gained .53 to 57.08, and the American Stock Exchange market value index climbed 4.03 to 176.80, its highest closing level since it peaked at 176.87 last Sept. 13.

Big Board volume averaged 32.17 million shares a day, the busiest pace since an average of 43.97 million traded last Oct. 30-Nov. 3.

The point of concern about margin debt is so-called "margin calls." The collateral on margin loans is usually stock, and if the price of the stock involved goes down, its value as collateral is naturally reduced.

When the stock falls to a minimum point, brokers are required to send a margin call requesting additional collateral. If the investor is either unable or unwilling to put up that additional collateral, some stock must be sold from his account to bring it back within legal limits.

This kind of forced selling was a major factor in the Great Crash of 1929, whose 50th anniversary will be observed later this year.

Considerably tighter controls on the use of credit in the market are in effect today, and few of those who are worried about margin debt now are predicting anything of the magnitude of 1929.

Nevertheless, as analysts at Smith Barney, Harris Upham & Co. put it: "Along with everyone else, we are most concerned with this still very high level of margin debt; it obviously looms as a strong potential source of supply if equity levels fall below their lows of last fall."

Raymond F. DeVoe Jr. at Loeb Rhoades, Hornblower & Co. argued recently that, although it bears watching, current margin debt is "not as ominous as many perceive it to be."

"Admittedly, concentrated holdings and forced sales of illiquid issues contributed to the market's volatility in October," DeVoe said. "And as has happened throughout market history, many investors sold good stocks to protect the bad."

But he pointed out that the growth of margin debt since the early 1960s, when compared to the accompanying expansion of trading volume and total market value of stocks "does not appear to be out of line."

He also noted that special applications of margin in the six-year-old options market have helped to swell the total, along with growing use of margin loans for consumer purposes because interest rates charged by brokers are relatively low.

Some brokers found it easier to be calm about margin debt this past week than about controversy in Washington over the sharp rise in corporate profits posted for the fourth quarter of last year.

India To Purchase Enriched Uranium

WASHINGTON (AP) — In a split decision, the Nuclear Regulatory Commission has approved the sale by the United States of enriched uranium to India.

The 3-2 decision here late Friday, the AEC approved the sale of eight tons of enriched uranium, thus reversing the position it took nearly a year ago.

Commissioner John Ahearne, voting with the prevailing side, discussed one of the issues that had held up approval of the sale. He noted that while India has not agreed to allow the United States to inspect all of its nuclear facilities, talks are underway that could lead to such a development.

Court Upholds Bhutto's Death Penalty, Recommends Clemency

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP) — The Pakistan Supreme Court on Saturday unanimously upheld the death sentence against ousted Prime Minister Zulfikar Ali Bhutto. But the court recommended clemency, thereby leaving him one last hope of escaping the gallows.

The ruling threw Bhutto's fate into the hands of the man who toppled him from power in 1977, President Mohammed Zia ul-Haq.

Gen. Zia, who has refused clemency to almost 400 convicted murderers in his 20 months in power, had no immediate public comment on the decision. He said previously he would support the high court's findings, but it was unclear what influence the clemency recommendation would have.

Bhutto, convicted of murder conspiracy, has said he will not ask for mercy because it would be an admission of guilt, and he has forbidden his family from doing so.

But after the court recommended clemency Saturday, his lawyer, Yahya Bakhtiar, concluded: "The death sentence is out. I feel relieved. But I am disappointed in the rest of the judgment. Mr. Bhutto should not be hanged after this."

Dozens of world leaders, including President Carter, Pope John Paul II and Soviet President Leonid I. Brezhnev, have asked Zia to spare the 51-year-old Bhutto's life. Any Pakistani can file an application for executive clemency, or Zia could act on his own without one.

It was not known whether any applications would be made. Any must be filed within seven days of official notification of a death warrant, which is expected in about week. That means Bhutto may have as little as two weeks to live.

In London, Bhutto's son, Shah Nawz Bhutto, told reporters he will not request clemency.

In suggesting clemency, the judges said they supported Bakhtiar's position that the sentence should be commuted to life imprisonment because Bhutto did not wield the murder weapon and was not at the scene of the crime.

The High Court in Lahore last year convicted Bhutto of ordering four of his security police to ambush a political rival, Ahmed Reza Kasuri, in 1974. Kasuri survived but his father was killed. The four agents also were convicted and condemned to die.

Bird Not All Thumbs; ISU Wins

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Larry Bird's aching left thumb bothered him tremendously, but could not stop him from putting on a dazzling one-man show.

"My thumb really bothered me, but you have to play with everything," said Indiana State's blond all-America.

Unstoppable the entire game, Bird poured in 35 points, pulled down 16 rebounds and dished out nine assists, leading the unbeaten Sycamores past DePaul 76-74 in the NCAA semifinals Saturday.

"I just couldn't grip the ball because of my thumb," Bird said. "A couple of times I had guys free in the lane and just threw over their heads."

Bird not only dominated the game but left the DePaul players slightly awed.

"We let them score some cheap baskets because we were worried so much about Bird," said Blue Demons guard Gary Garland.

"Bird's the greatest player I've ever faced," said DePaul forward Curtis Watkins, who guarded him most of the game.

Sycamores coach Bill Hodges, now 33-0 and in the NCAA final, in this, a fairy tale rookie season, said, "I'm emotionally drained. This is another ball game where it's a damn shame either team had to lose. DePaul played such a great game."

In Monday night's final, Bird will lead the Sycamores against Michigan State, which shocked Penn earlier with a 101-67 rout.

"I hope we don't get blown out like Penn did," said Bird. "I'm just glad to be in the final. Whatever happens, happens."

Hodges was full of praise for DePaul coach Ray Meyer, the popular 37-year coaching veteran who had become a sentimental favorite with many fans across the nation. Meyer was gracious in defeat.

"Basketball is a game of mistakes," he said. "Unfortunately, we made ours in the last minute. We had a lot of fun winning. Now, we just have to smile with the loss."

Meyer shook his head when asked to comment on Bird.

"Bird's such a great player that we told our players to let him get his points and shut out the others. But we still turned our heads to watch Bird," Meyer said.

Indiana State held a 67-59 lead with 9:16 remaining when the Blue Demons, paced by Mark Aguirre and Gary Garland, staged a 14-4 spurt and took a 73-71 lead as Garland sank a 10-foot jumper with 4:33 left.

Heaton, with an assist from Bird, knotted it at 73, then with 1:37 left, Garland hit the front end of a one-and-one, making it 74-73 and bringing the venerable Ray Meyer within 90 seconds of a trip to the championship.

Heaton, whose off-balance, last-second shot lifted the Sycamores over Arkansas in the Midwest Regional final, took a pass from Carl Nicks under the basket and laid it in for a 75-74 lead. DePaul then called time out with 36 seconds left.

The Blue Demons worked the ball down court, carefully angling for their best shot. But Aguirre, letting fly from the wing, missed and Indiana State gathered in the rebound.

Leroy Staley hit a free throw with one second left for the final margin.

Bird, the college Player of the Year, hit 16 of 19 from the field for 84 percent, had 16 rebounds and nine assists. The Sycamores shot 62.5 percent for the game, but were eclipsed by DePaul's 66.7.

The 6-foot-9½ Bird, a center-forward, scored 23 in the first half, helping the Sycamores to a 45-42 halftime advantage, then scored six points 2½ minutes into the second half as the Sycamores took their biggest lead of the game 57-46 with 16:34 left.

Watkins, his injured leg bandaged from ankle to thigh, picked up his fourth foul less than two minutes into the second half and the Blue Demons put center Jim Mitchem on Bird.

Garland, who had 19 points for the Blue Demons, hit a short jumper to ignite DePaul's charge after the Sycamores went ahead by 11.

Clyde Bradshaw, driving in between Bird and Heaton, made it 67-61. Then with 8:10 left, Aguirre connected from the top of the key, bringing the Blue Demons within four.

Garland and Watkins traded baskets with Bird and Alex Gilbert, then with 5:43 left, Aguirre soared over Bird for a layup, making it 71-69, and 30 seconds later, the beefy freshman fired in an eight-foot jumper, tying it 71-71.

Nicks and Gilbert were the only other Sycamores in double figures, with Gilbert getting 12 and Nicks 10.

Aguirre also had 19 points for DePaul. Watkins scored 16, Mitchem 12 and Bradshaw eight as only the five starters saw action.

Indiana State, gunning to post the first 34-0 record in major college basketball history, had an uncommon 22 turnovers, while DePaul had only eight.

'Magic' Mesmerizes Penn

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — It was too much "Magic" and too little muscle for Penn's basketball team.

Outshone by the dazzling talents of Earvin "Magic" Johnson and outmuscled by a taller, stronger Michigan State team, punchless Penn suffered a humiliating 101-67 defeat in the NCAA basketball semifinal playoffs Saturday.

"I can shoot better facing the basket and that's just what I did," said Johnson after scoring a game-high 29 points. "They played off the zone and they made it easier for me."

Meanwhile, Penn's dispirited Ivy Leaguers weren't shooting nearly as well, only hitting 16 percent in the first half and 29 percent for the game.

"We were able to attack the zone just about the way we wanted," said Penn coach Bob Weinhauer. "But we were just missing the layups. Then, they just beat us down the floor with their layups."

Talking about the gifted Johnson and his frontcourt teammate, Greg Kelser, who scored 28 points for the Spartans, Weinhauer noted, "I'm not surprised that those two guys performed the way they did. They're certainly two super basketball players."

Michigan State coach Jud Heathcote also praised his two dynamic players, but added: "We also got good performances from everyone else — just as we have had all year."

Eleven of Michigan State's players were able to score and the Spartans shot 63 percent from the field for the game.

Johnson's spectacular game for the burly Spartans also included 10 assists and 10 rebounds. He was nearly perfect with his shooting, hitting nine of 10 shots from the field and 11 of 12 from the foul line.

Michigan State, 25-6, had the game sewed up in the first half, when the Spartans looked like a pro team toying with a college squad.

The Spartans pounded out an embarrassing 50-17 halftime lead behind their two superstars as the gifted Johnson scored 15 points, handed out eight assists and collected five rebounds and Kelser scored 14 points and pulled down seven rebounds.

The Spartans went on a 19-point scoring streak midway through the first half, with Johnson and Kelser doing most of the damage to rush into a 32-6 lead with 7:09 left before intermission.

Michigan State shot a sizzling 63 percent from the field in the first half, while Penn was able to hit only 16 percent of its shots against a troublesome Spartans' zone that allowed the Quakers very few inside shots.

The Quakers' problems were compounded by early foul trouble to Ivy League Player of the Year Tony Price, who was saddled with three fouls and had to sit down with nine minutes left in the first half.

Johnson, scoring almost at will from inside and outside, was the game's high scorer with 29 points, while Kelser contributed 28 for Michigan State, which led by as many as 42 points in the last five minutes.

Price, who fouled out with 3:43 left in the game, led Penn with 18 points.

The Quakers, who had been complaining all through the NCAA playoffs that they were underrated because of a so-called poor Eastern image, didn't do much to support their argument at all Saturday.

THE WHOLE STORY—Michigan State's Greg Kelser is all smiles and the scoreboard tells why as the Spartans defeated Penn to qualify for Monday's NCAA championship game against Indiana State. (AP Laserphoto)

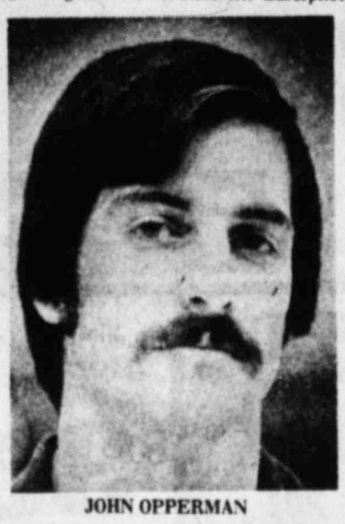
CRAIG EHLO



JOHN OPPERMAN

Ehlo, Opperman Head All-City Basketball Unit

By BOB BAJACKSON
Avalanche-Journal Sports Staff

During pregame warmups this season, Craig Ehlo would grab most of the attention of the crowd. The Plainsman guard often acknowledged the fan response with a smile or a nod of the head.

The Monterey fans weren't recognizing Ehlo for his basketball talents, but rather for a lack of gambling wisdom. Frankly, the Plainsman senior isn't exactly a Dr. Dunkenstein.

"In school, some of my friends would bet me I couldn't dunk the ball a certain number of times in a game," recalled Ehlo. "We wouldn't bet any money on it. It was more like them setting higher goals for me to reach. I never made it."

Despite a definite dunking deficiency, the 6-5 Monterey guard led the team to the Class AAAA regional tournament and has been selected the Most Valuable Player on the All-City high school basketball team.

Even though Ehlo was unable to stuff the ball through the net enough times to satisfy the Plainsmen clientele, he still proved to be a scoring threat. Ehlo averaged 17.6 and 10.6 rebounds per game.

The All-City MVP is the second such post-season honor Ehlo has received. The Plainsman guard was voted the most valuable on the 4-AAAA all-district team, and he has been selected to the Texas High School Basketball Coaches' all-state second team.

"After watching him play, I would have to agree that he's worthy of the honor," said Christ the King coach John Opperman. "Monterey depended on Ehlo a lot. It didn't seem the pressure bothered him."

And for his championship season, Opperman is the A-J's Coach of the Year.

"If anybody asked me other than my players if I think I deserved the honor, I would never admit it," joked Opperman.

Barnes Learns: Time Marches On

By JIM FERGUSON
Avalanche-Journal Sports Staff

Three years later, Joe Barnes still recalls — rather vividly — his debut in the Canadian Football League.

Maybe it wasn't quite as embarrassing as bending over to pickup a napkin at a cocktail party only to have your britches split up the backside, or being caught telling your best friends' wife she could do better for herself. But to Barnes, it's an experience he'd like to forget, but never will.

It was an exhibition game in 1976 and Barnes, then a rookie quarterback for Montreal, took charge of the team. "I called my play in the huddle," recalls Barnes, "and when I got to the line (of scrimmage) I realized it wasn't the play I wanted to call.

"So I turned to the referee and called a timeout. But he looked back and said 'there aren't any times out in this league.'

"I didn't know what to do, so finally they called an official timeout. It was really embarrassing."

Don't look for the story to make Reader Digest's embarrassing moments section. Or, for that matter, even Humor in Uniform. To Barnes, though, it was his welcoming to Canada.

Since then things have steadily improved for the ex-Texas Tech quarterback. So much, in fact, the front office has forgotten about his foulup and now Barnes enters the summer training camp in three months as Montreal's top signal-caller.

But Barnes' pro career hasn't always been so rosy. There was a time, he will tell you, after he had been drafted by the Chicago Bears, then traded to the New York Jets, and finally released by his second pro team, that things weren't so grand.

It certainly wasn't like the days when he quided Tech to an 11-1 won-loss mark, a 28-19 Gator Bowl victory over Tennessee back in 1973 and was named the Southwest Conference's top quarterback.

No, Barnes had seen brighter days.

"I was bitter with the whole situation (in the NFL)," said Barnes, who still holds Tech's career total-offense mark with 3,651 yards. "Everything was so political (in the NFL). At Chicago, I was told I had a good shot at playing quarterback. But they never gave me a good chance.

"They called me in and told me, after that, that I had been traded to the Jets. I was told that it (the trade) would probably be the best thing for me, since (starting quarterback Joe) Namath had reported to camp late and they didn't have a backup. I was really excited about the possibility of playing in New York."

So he packed his bags and headed to the Big Apple. But once there he found out the Apple had a worm smacks in the middle of the core.

"They wanted to make me a running-back and the third-team quarterback. What they really wanted was someone who could play two different positions. That way they could save a player."

That was the year, he explained, that the NFL had decided to cut the roster to 43 players. Barnes became one of the since-dropped rule's first victims.

So after leaving the Jets, Barnes' football career to come to an abrupt halt, with or without his concent. He sat out the next year and worked as a field representative for the Red Raider Club, before being contacted by Montreal.

Oh, there was a brief stint with a flag-football team in Dallas, but that really doesn't count.

"Once it (playing football) is in your blood it's hard to give it up," explained the compact quarterback. "I really missed it."

So the Montreal offer was a certainly a blessing, he said.

"Montreal has been good for me," said the Big Lake product. "The coaches gave me a shot at quarterback that I never got at Chicago or New York. That's all I ever asked. . .just a shot. They let me prove that I could play."

However, a series of injuries — one to his shoulder and the other to his knee — has kept Barnes from playing a complete season for Montreal. After having only a a shoulder separation (spring training) at Tech, Barnes has fallen on some hard times in the CFL.

After starting the first eight games last season — winning seven of them — Barnes was slowed by the knee injury which eventually required an operation last December. Currently he is trying to rehabilitate his banged up left knee.

"I guess my time just ran out on me," rationalized Barnes. "The odds (of staying healthy) are against me now."

Counting playoff games, the Montreal club has suited up for 46 games in the past two years, more than twice what Barnes would have played during the same span while in college.

The leg injury certainly came at a bad time for Barnes, who was leading the CFL in total offense and was an almost-certain shoe-in for 'all' honors at that pace. Hopefully, he added, not only will he start the 1979 campaign, but also be around for its finish — and not on crutches.

But the untimely injuries aren't the only thing that has caught Barnes off guard since making the move to northward. There is also the major difference between American and Canadian rules, as well as the adjustment to the professional lifestyle.

In Canada, the offensive unit is given only three downs to make the 10 yards needed for a first down. And that rule, says Barnes, forces team to play a more wide open game than in the NFL — or at Tech in his playing days.

"Under Coach Jim Carlen we were too conservative," said Barnes, "so it was a real surprise to play up there where they have the three downs and all that motion. We throw the ball a lot more and run more sprintout passes than we did in college."

It was during one of Barnes scrambles that he sustained the current injury. The way he tells it, while his body was being twisted in an ungentlemanly fashion, his leg stayed planted into the turf. "The older I'm getting the more I'm learning you can't do that stuff anymore," laughed Barnes, who dazzled many a defender with his moves and deceptive speed at Tech. "Not if you want to stay around."

And staying around is what Barnes plans to do for two or three more years — possibly five at the most. After retire-

LCC To Start Football Drills For First Time

LCC will enter the non-scholarship TIAA (Texas Intercollegiate Athletic Association) next fall.

More than 60 players are expected to try out for the team, including 23 transfers from schools like Texas Tech, Texas A&M, and Angelo State. Coach Jerry Don Sanders will conduct two workouts a day — one from 10:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. and the other from 3 to 5 p.m.

"We had some kids who couldn't work out in the morning and some who couldn't work out in the afternoon, so we decided to go this way," Sanders explained.

April 29 is the deadline for completing the 30 days of drills. LCC is allowed to work out only in head gears and shorts.

"We'll work on our offensive and defensive sets and formations and run through our plays. We'll spend a lot of time working with techniques on both offense and defense," Sanders said.

Robert McBride is scheduled to get first shot at quarterback during the spring drills. Sanders says finding a quarterback rates as the top priority of spring training. Sanders reported that McBride played quarterback as a freshman at Tech but was switched to defense as a sophomore before transferring to LCC.

"We've got 15 or so kids who go 200 pounds or better," Sanders pointed out, "and we have several others in the 195-pound range, so we have good size. And I think we also have good speed."

Sanders hopes to bring his troops back Aug. 4, three weeks before school begins in the fall, for two weeks of two-a-day workouts. LCC's first game will be against McMurry on Sept. 1.

MHS, Ponies Win Abilene Net Titles

ABILENE (Special) — Kenneth Coulter and Kurt McFarlin fought off five straight match points here Saturday to stage a dramatic come-from-behind victory over Abilene Cooper's top-seeded team of Jeff Boykin and Lance Procter and claim the A Boys Doubles title of the Abilene Tennis Tournament.

Coronado's Susan Mangum and Beth Nickels won the B division girls doubles crown by whipping Wesson and Hertel of Brownwood for the Mustangs' only individual victory.

But CHS had its boys doubles team get as far as the semifinals before being eliminated, and in girls singles, Maggie McNamara advanced as far as the finals before bowing out.

Trailing 1-5 in the third set, Coulter and McFarlin came back to win the set 7-6. The Cooper squad had won the first set 7-6 before the Plainsmen netters took the second 6-4.

"This was really a significant win for us," said MHS coach Steve Thomas. "Because the teams that Coulter and McFarlin beat down here are the ones that we'll have to beat in the regional tournament."

On Friday the MHS doubles team had knocked off the No. 2-seeded Midland Lee team. Last week in the Lubbock Invitational, Coulter and McFarlin had fallen to the same Cooper squad of Boykin and Procter — but Thomas had an answer for the turnaround.

"We played in the gym in Lubbock," he explained, "and down here we played outside — that's a whole different game."

Indians' Wrenn Rates All-State

By CHUCK McDONALD
Avalanche-Journal Sports Staff

Perryton basketball coach Allen Simpson has been in the business a long time. And in 19 years he's seen a lot of kids put the ball through the hoop, but none of them — he claims — could do it quite as well as David Reynolds.

And Simpson isn't the only one with that opinion. Reynolds was named to the Texas Sports Writers Association AA first team all-state squad that was released Saturday. Danny Wrenn of Seminole was the only other West Texan to make the AA first team.

"He's the best kid I've ever coached," said Simpson of Reynolds. "I've been mostly at small schools but I've had three or four major college players— and David's definitely one of them."

Back in 1964, while at Canyon, Simpson coached Bob Begert who went on to start for SMU three straight years and help lead the Mustangs to a conference title.

"Those two (Begert and Reynolds) are an awful lot alike " said Simpson. "They even look alike. But I think David's a little better than Begert was — he can handle the ball better. So I'm hopeful that David can have the kind of success that Bob did."

Several other area cagers were named to the select all-state squad. Wrenn, who played a major role in Seminole winning the state championship, averaged 17.4 points an outing to earn his first-team honors.

Wrenn and Reynolds tied for the final spot on the first team. Close behind was Tulia's Russell Webb who was named to the second team and Mark Summers, Dimmitt's 6-5 postman who made the third team.

In the Class A division, Ronnie Williams of state-champ Vega was named to the first team, and teammate Les Newbill made the second team. Williams averaged 20 points a game and Newbill had 15.5.

Besides averaging 17.4 points per game, Wrenn generally hauled down nearly as many rebounds. But at 6-3 he was the smallest inside player on the squad. When Seminole advanced to the state finals, though, Wrenn proved he could play with the big boys and used the state tournament as a personal showcase.

"I think it was real good for him (Wrenn) to play in the state tournament," said Indian coach Leland Caffey. "I know it sure didn't hurt him any. And Danny's a good worker — a good shooter.

"He's been contacted by some schools and I think he could play college ball. Of course, he may have move to guard."

Mark Summers, Dimmitt's 6-5 senior who can hit from the outside as well as underneath, is also destined for the college ranks.

"He'll definitely play somewhere," Dimmitt coach Ken Cleveland has said. "With his outside shooting touch he could make a good college forward."

The future also looks bright for Webb who, at 6-7, is the biggest player on the AA honor roll.

John Grammer, of Altair Rice Consolidated, was the leading vote-getter in the AA division. The sharp-shooting senior was named on all but one of the ballots and drew 13 votes for the first team. Grammer was a third team all-state pick last year were the only team in the city to win a state championship?

"Nope, not even then," said the Trojan coach. "That's just not my style. "Actually, if anybody deserves an award, it's my wife. She put up with me, even though I was in a bad mood much of the time."

As a rookie coach, Opperman took a team that finished .500 two years ago to the Texas Catholic Interscholastic League championship this season. The Trojans blitzed through the district campaign with a 6-0 mark and finished the season at 16-4.

"There was a lot of pressure on my shoulders when I got the job," said Opperman. "The coach I replaced, Ray McKinney, was very popular with the players and parents. McKinney was here (CTK) eight years. Then there was the schedule. . ."

After the Trojans' first 5-AA TCIL contest, the principals decided to change the format for crowning a district champion.

"Instead of playing a schedule, they (the principals) decided to have a tournament," said Opperman. "We went two weeks without playing a game. Finally, with pressure put on by people in Lubbock, things were changed back."

Joining Ehlo at guard is CTK's Jimmy Durham. Durham, a 6-2 senior, averaged 16.2 points and 8.5 rebounds a contest. The forwards are Winston Gipson, Estacado, and Shawn Williams, Lubbock Christian, with Stanley Whitfield, Dunbar, at the post.

The 6-1 Gipson, an MVP recipient in 1-AAA and voted to the high school basketball coaches' all-state third team, is known for his accurate perimeter shooting. The Estacado senior averaged 18 points.

The 6-3 Williams, selected the MVP of Division II in the Caprock Tournament, guided Lubbock Christian into the finals of the Texas Association of Private Schools tournament. Williams' numbers included 16.3 points and 8.8 caroms on the average a game.

The 6-3 Whitfield, selected to the 1-AAA all-district first team, is best known for his jumping ability. The Dunbar junior sparked the Panthers to the first-half loop title. Whitfield averaged 13.6 and 9 rebounds a game.

Error-Filled Defeat Ends LCC's Tour

PHOENIX, Ariz. (Special) — Lubbock Christian College ended its seven-day stay in the sun Saturday by bowing to powerful Grand Canyon College 9-6.

The Chaps, now 17-11, finished 2-5 here (three games were weathered out), and Saturday's game followed the script of the four previous losses.

Loser Gary Swann saw his mates commit five errors behind him in the first two innings as the Antelopes, now 25-4, leaped to a 7-0 advantage.

Twice LCC got its leadoff runners to second and third with no outs, but unbeaten Tom Teuchert worked out of those jams both times.

But in the seventh, LCC struck aided by Steve Cargil's single and enough walks to load the bases. Richard Bowles' sacrifice fly missed being a grand slam home run by two feet. Bobby Doe followed with an RBI single and Tim Leslie doubled in 2 runs.

Reliever Don Deardoff, who picked up his fourth save, gave up a single to Dave Hanna with Brashear going to third and Hanna to second. Bowles followed with a 2-run, bad-hop single over the second baseman's head.

LCC, which faced a 15½-hour bus ride back to Lubbock after the game, opens Texas Athletic Conference play at 7:30 p.m. Monday against Midwestern State University in Wichita Falls.

Weary Wadkins Retains TPC Golf Lead

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. (AP) — On a windswept course where Jack Nicklaus shot 82, weary Lanny Wadkins retained a 3-stroke lead with a struggling, 4-over-par 76 Saturday in the third round of the $440,000 Tournament Players Championship.

The conditions — howling, shifting, fickle winds that gusted to 35 miles per hour — and a course that Nicklaus earlier had described as awkward, combined to turn into a golfing horror show the event that is billed as the annual championship of the touring pros.

It was a mockery.

Nicklaus shook his head in a negative response when asked: "Was this golf?"

"No, but it was the same for everybody," said the man generally regarded as the best player the game has produced. "Let's just say I did not have the ability to handle the conditions.

"Do you know I only put the ball on the putting surface in regulation four times? And I actually hit the ball fairly well. I had 26 putts. That's from the putting surface."

"It was murder," said Jack Renner, the skinny youngster who was the only man in the field able to break par 72. "Basically, you just tried to survive," Renner said after his birdie-par-birdie finish had produced a 71.

Wadkins had made only one bogey through the first two rounds, but was over par on 7 holes Saturday. Still, the conditions were so severe that he retained the same advantage — 3 strokes — that he'd had at the start of the day's play. He had a 54-hole total of 211, 5 shots under par.

Lee Trevino birdied the last hole to gain a tie for second at 214 with Renner, George Burns and Bill Kratzert. Trevino and Kratzert shot 75s, Burns 76.

They were the only men in the field under par for three rounds over the 7,083 yards of marsh, sand, lakes and piney woods that make up the Sawgrass links. By way of contrast, there were 53 subpar scores the first round, when the winds were calm, and 22 players had totals under par after 36 holes.

Leonard Drops Argentine In First Round

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — Sugar Ray Leonard used two lightning rights to the jaw to dispose of Daniel Gonzales of Argentina in 2 minutes and 3 seconds of the first round in a nationally televised welterweight bout Saturday.

The 22-year old Leonard remained unbeaten in 20 pro fights, scoring his 14th knockout almost before the crowd of 9,000 in the Tucson Community Center was settled down for the scheduled 10 rounder.

Leonard, ranked third by the World Boxing Association, stalked Gonzales from the opening bell and put the stocky Argentinian down for a six count with an overhand right to the jaw with 1:27 gone in the round.

Gonzales, 29, staggered to his feet and braced against the ropes until the referee restarted the fight. Leonard, three inches taller at 5-foot-9 and two pounds heavier at 148, bore in quickly, scored with a hard left and finished the fight with a straight right as Gonzales was falling in his own corner.

The loss was only the third for Gonzales in 67 pro fights, dating back 15 years. Gonzales had scored 38 knockouts during that period, but never landed a punch in Saturday's fight.

Leonard, from Silver Springs, Md., won an Olympic gold medal in 1976 at Montreal and turnrd pro in February 1977 under the direction of manager Angelo Dundee, who managed heavyweight champion Muhammad Ali during his formative pro years as Cassius Clay.

Holmes Lines Up Unknown Before Shavers

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — The promotional wheels spun in boxing's heavyweight division Saturday, with promoter Don King doing the pushing and World Boxing Council champion Larry Holmes at the hub.

In a news conference the day after Holmes defended his title with a seventh-round knockout of Ossie Ocasio, King confirmed that Holmes will fight Mike Weaver of Las Vegas, a relative unknown, sometime in June, and then fight Earnie Shavers sometime in September.

Weaver is not expected to knock Holmes out of his match against Shavers, who shocked Ken Norton with a first-round knockout Friday night.

"It was a tremendous effort to save the baby," King said of Shavers' victory which saved the 34-year-old veteran's career and projected him back into the championship picture.

King said he hoped to match Holmes and Shavers in The Meadowlands in New Jersey or in Honolulu. However, it is known that Giants Stadium in The Meadowlands is the exclusive property of the New York Giants' football team in September.

"Hawaii has been making a lot of strong overtures for a fight," said King.

King wants to put the Holmes-Weaver bout in New York's Madison Square Garden and also announced that Shavers would fight someone on that card.

"After last night we go in there with King Kong," said Frank Luca, Shavers' trainer and business manager.

But in a serious vein, Luca said when asked who he would like Shavers to fight: "I think all of you would agree that I should be careful."

Any fight is a high-risk situation for Shavers because a loss would knock him out of the title fight in September.

Weaver, 26, is ranked No. 8 by the WBC and has won his last five fights, all by knockouts, but his record is a mediocre 21-8.

"If he fights me like he fought last night I know I can beat him," Weaver said of Holmes, who stalked the shorter Ocasio and made himself a target which the Puerto Rican challenger couldn't take advantage of.

"Ocasio hit him some shots, but if I'd hit him he wouldn't have been standing," Ocasio said.

As Weaver, an ex-Marine, talked, Holmes hid his head in his jacket in mock fright.

"He's strong and has the Ken Norton style of fighting," said Holmes. "He's a very determined type of man."

Then the champion smiled and said, "Just sitting here and listening to him, I found his weakness. All I have to do is say, 'Attention,' and he'll stand still and I'll hit him."

King also announced that Roberto Duran, the former lightweight champion from Panama, would fight Bruce Curry of Los Angeles on the Holmes-Weaver card.

Norton Ponders Retirement

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Pride might keep Ken Norton fighting. Desire, or the lack of it, might make him quit.

"I've got to sit down and think about it," said Norton, wearing a Japanese robe and holding a can of root beer, dark glasses masking the marks of violence that go with his profession.

The 33-year-old Norton, one victory away from another bid for the heavyweight championship, was smashed to the canvas twice and stopped in 1:58 of the first round Friday night by Earnie Shavers, a 34-year-old veteran who was fighting for survival.

Norton said the big disappointment in his performance was not the actual losing but "the biggest disappointment was I know my capabilities, my speed, my power. But they didn't materialize.

"It's part of life. It was bad judgment. Everybody makes mistakes. There's nothing you can do about it."

Norton made the mistake of backing to the ropes and trying to counter the power-punching Shavers rather than trying to beat him to the punch. It reminded many onlookers of March 26, 1974, when Norton was knocked out in the second round by then-champion George Foreman.

The ex-Marine from San Diego fought his way back from that loss and had been a major factor in the heavyweight division ever since, although he never had achieved his goal of winning a title with his fists.

He won the World Boxing Council championship in boxing's back rooms when Leon Spinks was stripped of title recognition.

Norton feels he could fight his way back from his latest disappointment, if he feels like it. And that seems to be at the heart of whether he will retire or not.

Yankee Bats Finally Explode

By The Associated Press

The long-dormant bats of the New York Yankees exploded for six home runs Saturday — three by Thurman Munson — as the world champions outslugged the Detroit Tigers 10-7 in an exhibition baseball game.

Munson added a single and drove in five runs while Graig Nettles, Mickey Rivers and Chris Chambliss also homered as the 4-12 Yankees posted their first two-game winning streak — they trounced the New York Mets 9-3 Friday night — and defeated an American League rival for the first time all spring.

Ron LeFlore, Jason Thompson and Kirk Gibson homered for the Tigers.

Philadelphia's Pete Rose also broke out of a spring-long slump with two singles and a triple, Mike Schmidt drove in four runs with a pair of homers and rookie Lonnie Smith contributed a two-run shot to power the Phillies past the Toronto Blue Jays 9-4.

Rookie Wayne Krenchicki doubled home the tie-breaking run in the eighth inning and scored on Terry Crowley's single as the Baltimore Orioles downed the Kansas City Royals 3-1.

Baltimore pitching ace Jim Palmer left the game in the fourth inning complaining of pain in his lower back. "It's the same injury I had on my first day down here," said the 33-year-old right-hander.

Manager Earl Weaver didn't seem overly concerned. "Jimmy's ready to open the season," he said.

Bill Campbell, Boston's sore-armed reliever, made his spring debut with a scoreless inning as the Red Sox nipped the Chicago White Sox 7-6. Butch Hobson, another sore-winged Bostonian, cracked a two-run homer.

Joe Morgan's three-run homer in the first inning triggered the Cincinnati Reds' 11-4 rout of the Mets and Tony Solaita's tie-breaking two-run pinch homer in the fifth inning helped the Montreal Expos defeat the Los Angeles Dodgers 7-4.

Atlanta rookie third baseman Mike Macha had a single, double and two-run homer and Charlie Spikes delivered a pinch two-run homer, leading the Braves over the Texas Rangers 8-2. Phil Niekro went seven innings for the winners, allowing home runs to Gary Gray and Al Oliver.

Tony Scott of St. Louis boosted his spring batting average to .536 with a two-run homer in the eighth inning that gave the Cardinals a 7-6 triumph over the Pittsburgh Pirates.

Gene Richards, Broderick Perkins and Bill Fahey drove in two runs apiece as the San Diego Padres crushed the Cleveland Indians 12-1 and Tony Armas' third spring homer, a two-run shot in the second inning, helped the Oakland A's beat the Seattle Mariners 5-2.

Carney Lansford and Tom Donohue each had three hits and four RBI, leading the California Angels to a 15-1 rout of the San Francisco Giants.

The Chicago Cubs rapped out 15 hits, including home runs by Bill Buckner and Bobby Murcer, and outlasted the Milwaukee Brewers 9-6.

Julio Gonzalez squeezed home Rafael Landestoy with the winning run in the seventh inning, giving the Houston Astros a 5-4 decision over the Minnesota Twins.

Pearcy Overshadows Field In Mustang Relays

By JIM FERGUSON
Avalanche-Journal Sports Staff

ANDREWS — It took Van Pearcy only one jump to show the 100 or so spectators gathered around the long-jump pit who's the boss man.

Pearcy, the sophomore phenom from Andrews who has already leaped 23-10 to lead the entire state in the long jump, traveled 23-4 on his first and only try at the Mustang Relays here Saturday.

Then he rested.

(For Complete Results See, TRACK SUMMARIES, Page 8)

"I wanted to save myself for the open quarter," explained Pearcy. "Maybe If I'd taken my other jumps I could have done better."

Even better than the 23-10?

"That's hard to say," he continued. "But the weather was nice and there wasn't really any wind, so I think I might have (gone 24 feet)."

The little rest stop Pearcy took apparently paid dividends. In the finals of the 400-meter dash, Pearcy rocketed to a 48.1 (or a 48.3 in the 440-yard dash). That also is good enought to tie Pearcy with Eference Murphy of Texarkana for the state lead — unless, of course, Murphy or another trackster fared better Saturday.

Pearcy did have one setback Saturday, though. In the finals of the 1600-meter relay, he was given the stick a good 30 yards behind Robin Gatewood of Estacado and was unable to make up the difference.

But did he ever try. That was obvious by the way he was helped around the infield of the track by his teammates. Pearcy was in no condition to walk he was so tired.

"I really thought I could catch him (Gatewood)," said Pearcy after recovering a bit and getting his wind back. "I had caught him in Lubbock when he had me by 20 yards, so I tried again."

The Matadors, who went on to win the team title by outscoring Odessa Ector 129-102, recorded a 3:22.3 as a team, while Andrews posted a 3:25.9.

For the past couple of weeks Pearcy has been one of the top stories in high school track. Coupled with his long-distance jumping and his relative youth, he has been one of the real surprises in the early portion of the track season.

Pearcy, the son of former state 880-record holder Jan Pearcy, said the secret to his success so far is inability to accept anything but a first place metal.

"I just don't like to lose," he explained. "That's about it. . .I just don't like it."

A 9.8 sprinter as a freshman, the young Pearcy was injured much of last year, but now he is raring and ready for action.

"I just want to continue to improve every week from now on," he said about his future goals. "And, of course, win the state meet."

Also turning in one of the state's top times in the 100-meter dash was Robert Humphrey of Estacado. The Matador sprinter, who also ran legs on winning EHS relay teams, recorded a 10.5, which adjusts to a 9.6 in the 100-yard dash.

It was a last-second lunge by Humphrey in th sprint relay that enabled the Matadors to defeat Ector. He also opened the mile relay for EHS.

"We just outchested them," laughed EHS coach Percy Hines.

That reference could also be used to describe Gatewood's win the the 200 as he just nipped Tarter Coleman of Ector for first place. Both, offically covered the distance in the same time.

Raiders Divide Games, Take Mustang Series

DALLAS (Special) — Texas Tech split a doubleheader with SMU here Saturday, dropping the first game, 5-3 and winning the second, 11-4.

Tech is 11-9 for the season and 6-6 in conference play. SMU is 13-13 and 2-6.

Brooks Wallace accounted for Tech's only runs in the first game with a three-run homer in the second inning to give the Red Raiders a temporary 3-0 lead. Wallace's blast over the rightfield fence was set up after Larry Selby walked and John Keller had singled.

SMU tied the game when Leo George homered with two on in the bottom of the third. The Mustangs took the lead in the fifth when Danny Seed scored on a sacrifice fly by Brad Mengwasser. Gordon Ricossa homered in the sixth to round out the scoring.

Tech bounced back in the second game, scoring three runs in the first inning. Johnny Vestal and Randy Newton walked and Mike Farmer reached on an error. Vestal scored on a single by Selby and Keller knocked in Newton and Farmer with a safety.

In the second inning, Tech chalked up three more runs. Vestal reached first after being hit by a pitch. After Newton singled, Farmer knocked in Vestal. Selby followed with a double to bring in Newton and Farmer.

Tech scored two in the seventh to take an 8-4 lead. Brooks Wallace singled and was sacrificed to second before scoring on a single by Kevin Rucker. Rucker moved up on a single by Vestal and scored on a wild pitch.

In the eighth, Tech scored two more runs to ice the game. Selby doubled and scored on a single by Wallace. Kenny Cogdell followed with a single and Wallace scored on a single by Craig Noonan.

Keller knocked in Selby with the final run in the ninth after Selby had walked and gone to second on a wild pitch.

Does that mean he'll never try the NFL again as others like Anthony Davis and Johnny Rogers have done? "About the only difference between the NFL is that we don't get the exposure," said Barnes. "But I don't have a commercial face, either."

In the NFL, though, he wouldn't have to compete against the hockey players for all the commericals. "They (the Canadians) are treated like Gods up there."

He added: "I have the best of two possible worlds right now. When it's 110 (degrees) down here during the summer, I'm in Canada where it's 80. Then when it's 40 below up there, I came down here."

But if Barnes wasn't in Montreal, or even Toronto — two of the glamour cities in Canada — things might be different. "I don't think I'd want to play anywhere else. We have one of the best organizations and the city is nice."

'Bid' Waltzes To Victory

HIALEAH, Fla. (AP) — Young Ronnie Franklin kept Spectacular Bid on the outside until he moved into the lead around the first turn, then let the Kentucky Derby favorite run away from the field for a record 14-length victory Saturday in the $149,000 Flamingo Stakes at Hialeah.

Franklin, who got Spectacular Bid caught behind traffic twice before winning a 4½-length victory in the Florida Derby three weeks ago, let longshot Gallant Serenade take the early lead before moving out front entering the back stretch.

By the time the horses began the turn for home, Spectacular Bid had opened a 15-length lead. He coasted home for his ninth straight stakes victory.

IT'S A WHOPPER — Former Texas Governor Preston Smith of Lubbock displays the results of a fishing trip to Amistad Lake near Del Rio. The 6-pound, 5-ounce bass was one of more than five dozen Smith and Walter Wood, right, and two other Lubbockites landed while using top-water and spinner baits.

State's Deer Harvest Declines

AUSTIN (Special) — A steady decline in the harvest of white-tailed deer during the past six years continued during the 1978-79 hunting season in Texas, according to harvest survey statistics compiled by the Parks & Wildlife Department.

Compared to the previous year, the 1978-79 season was down slightly both in number of hunters and total kill. The past season's estimated figures were 272,076 deer killed by 517,692 hunters, compared to 1977-78 totals of 287,232 deer taken by 524,895 hunters.

This represents an approximate 5 percent decrease in the harvest when the two years are compared, but what concerns department wildlife officials is the decline in the harvest since 1972-73 when an estimated 362,179 deer were harvested statewide.

Glenn Boydston, technical programs coordinator for the Wildlife Division, said the annual harvest shows some variations from year to year, but the six-year period viewed as a whole shows a steady decline.

"On a statewide basis," Boydston said, "we can see during the past six years that hunter numbers declined 5 percent, the antlered deer kill dropped 20 percent, antlerless kill dropped 30 percent and the total kill is down about 25 percent."

Not surpisingly, much of the decline in harvest has occurred in the two major white-tailed deer hunting area of the state — the South Texas Plains and the Edwards Plateau.

Boydston said South Texas, which usually accounts for about 20 percent of the statewide harvest, has seen a 25 percent reduction in harvest of antlered deer in the past six years. The total kill has declined by 20 percent, and kills per hunter dropped by 15 to 20 percent during that period.

The situation in the Edwards Plateau, an area which usually accounts for about half the statewide harvest, is even less encouraging. Boydston estimated that during the same six-year period the Plateau antlered deer kill declined between 25 and 30 percent; the antlerless kill dropped 35 percent, and the total kill by 30 to 35 percent. Hunter numbers declined abot 10 percent and hunter success dropped, also by an estimated 10 percent.

These figures were matched closely by the Post Oak Savannah region of East Texas, another important deer hunting area, during that six-year period.

The only major ecological region of Texas which showed a harvest increase in 1978-79 over 1977-78 was the East Texas Pineywoods, with an approximate 10 percent rise.

P&WD Initiates Major Survey Of East Texas Turkey History

AUSTIN (Special) — The most concentrated effort to date is currently under way to study the life history of eastern turkeys in their traditional range in East Texas, according to the Parks & Wildlife Department.

Recently 39 turkeys — all of which were equipped with radio transmitters for tracking — were released at two sites.

Department biologists released a total of 24 hens and 15 gobblers in Trinity and Jasper counties. Most of these birds were obtained from Louisiana in a turkey-pheasant trade, but seven hens were an outright gift from Mississippi, according to Horace Gore, the department's upland game program leader.

The pheasant-turkey exchange with Louisiana was made possible through funding for pheasant trapping by the Houston Chapter of Safari Club International, a hunter-conservation organization. This club has contributed funds for pheasant trapping during the last two years.

Gore said the Department will coordinate a study of the birds' movements which will be tracked electronically by a Texas A&M University researcher who is already on the project. He will attempt to determine the birds' reaction to their new habitat, nesting success and reproduction.

Gore said the department has entered into an agreement with St. Regis Paper Co., Inc. and Temple-Eastex, INc., to eventually trap some of the birds or their offspring after they become established for stocking in other East Texas areas.

"These two release sites will give us an opportunity to compare how the birds adapt to two different habitat, while the Beef Creek area offers a combination of upland and bottomland habitat."

Another 12 birds, all trapped from other Texas sites by department biologists, were stocked in an area just east of the Sam Rayburn Reservoir dam along the Jasper and Newton County line.

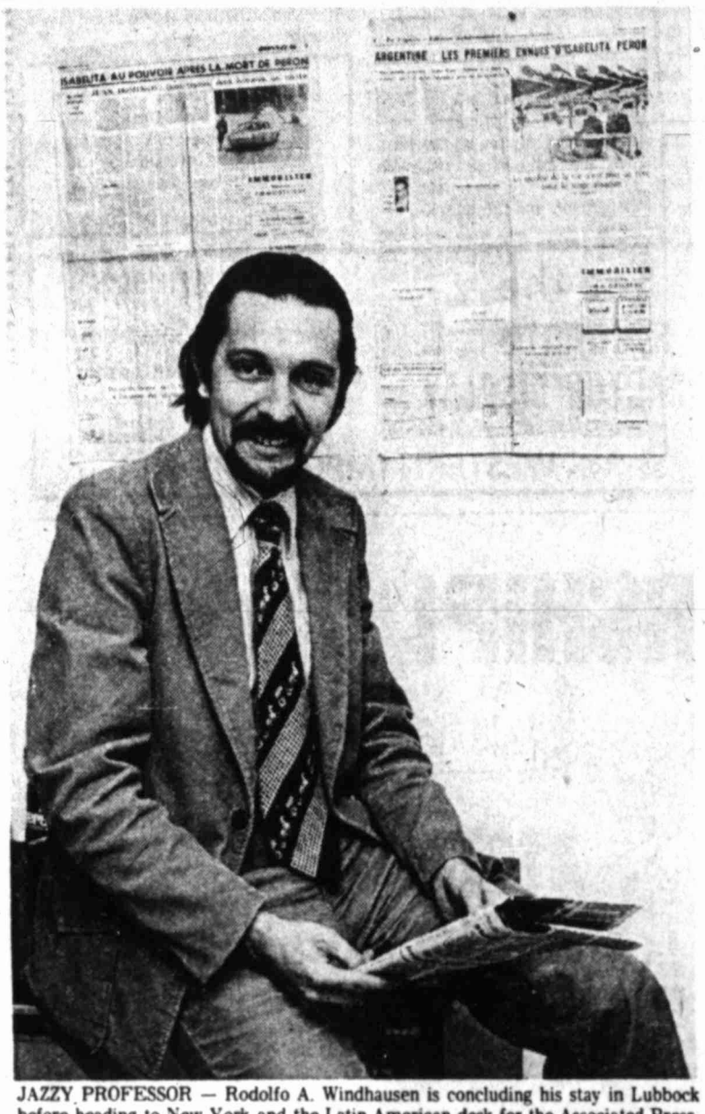
Argentinian Builds New Life

Unrest troubled the nation. Argentinian leftists were being killed at a rapid pace and the killings were termed "battles" by the police. The mountainous country of calm folk, who refuse to confine themselves to stiff 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. workday schedules, were living in the 1970s and witnessing triple-digit inflation.

But from this strife one reporter and jazz critic, who loves his people and his country, was able to carve a new life for himself in the United States.

He is Rodolfo A. Windhausen, Texas Tech University Fulbright-Hays visiting lecturer, who will leave for New York at the end of the semester to serve on the AP's Latin-American desk. With him he takes a career as a reporter, traveling correspondent, television news commentator and radio news editor. And he takes fond memories of life in West Texas.



JAZZY PROFESSOR — Rodolfo A. Windhausen is concluding his stay in Lubbock before heading to New York and the Latin American desk for the Associated Press. Windhausen has taught international communications as a visiting professor and has started plans for a Latin American Mass Communications Center at Texas Tech. (Tech Photo)

"Being at Texas Tech has been a wonderful experience," Windhausen said. "This university is well-organized and interesting, and the faculty made me feel very much at home. Much of the country lifestyle of letting things happen by themselves still exists in Texas. West Texans are friendly, cooperative people, a characteristic that should be kept."

After lecturing on international commuications for the Mass Communications Department, Windhausen has seen how a great many American students lack a comprehensive understanding of what's going on in the United States.

"And many American students lack a general cultural knowledge about what's going on outside the borders," he added. "Not many realize many things are happening with and without the American interest. In a well-communicated world it is such a contradiction. . .Some people do not take time to realize how their activities affect everything else in the world."

Windhausen recommends students get acquainted with non-American cultures, especially Western Europe and Asia. He admits the task is difficult. In such a visually-oriented society, he commented students don't read at all. The result is mental laziness.

Learning to use the English language on a regular basis was the hardest problem Windhausen overcame at Texas Tech. The 34-year-old newspaperman came to the univerity after serving as director of Tucuman's Press Union school of journalism.

The Tucuman school was founded by a journalism union, an Argentinian practice. With all the political unrest the government has become prejudiced against journalists. Windhausen's school was college level, with courses along the lines of the American bachelor of arts degree, and was supervised by the state government. The school closed in December 1977 because of political pressure, curricular difficulties and, above all, financial troubles.

"We had to close," said Windhausen, who used his own money for school stationery. "We couldn't ask the students to pay more for tuition every 30 days."

While Windhausen was director of the school, he wsa able to maintain a livelihood on the staff of "La Gaceta," one of Argentina's largest newspapers.

He joined the staff of "La Gaceta" in 1970 and served as a reporter, editor and jazz critic. He studied law at the University Nacional de Tucuman and then pursued journalism at Centro Internacional de Estudios Superiores de Periodismo para America Latina, a UNESCO-supported mass communications research center in Quito, Ecuador.

He continued his studies in 1973 at the Facultad de Ciencias de las Informacion of the Universidad de Navarra in Pamplona, Spain, under a scholarship provided by Germany's Aktion Adveniat Foundation. That year he also covered the annual meeting of the International Labor Organization in Geneva for "La Gaceta."

Windhausen also has served as temporary information assistant at the United Nations Information Center in Buenos Aires, Argentina. In 1977 he was press and publications counselor for Tucuman's State Secretariat of Tourism and news editor of the Tucuman branch of Argentina's federal radio network.

Long before the honors started rolling in, Windhausen developed a love of jazz. He can recite a list of early jazz artists and recall an exclusive interview he had with Sarah Vaughn.

"My dad was a trombone player in the 1920s. I listened to 78 rpm records since I was real little. I heard Louis Armstrong, Benny Goodman and all the greats."

Argentina has developed some of the finest jazz players, and Windhausen feels that by publishing jazz critiques throughout the years he may be partially responsible for an Argentinian jazz band playing in the Newport Jazz Festival in New York in 1977.

Windhausen's major contribution to the United States while serving at Texas Tech is his proposal for a Latin-American Mass Communications Center, designed to be a clearing house for practicing journalists from both the United States and Latin America to study mass communications at Texas Tech.

The self-supporting center would incorporate Windhausen's help as a contactman after he leaves the school. The idea is unique to the United States. The full proposal will be submitted by April, with a decision coming late in the month.

Windhausen already is taking steps to conclude his Texas Tech visit. During the first week of April he will lecture in the New York area and at that time arrange his move to the Associated Press. The peaceful man, with posters in his office in his homeland Tucuman and a picture of musical instruments drawn by his son hanging on the wall, will leave even further behind him the turmoil and unrest of the Argentina he loves.

FAMILY PORTRAIT — A horse is a necessary ingredient for a portrait of the Mike Mendes family. Mendes, an instructor pilot at Reese Air Force Base, grew up a working cowboy in a rodeo-oriented family while Mrs. Mendes was raised around horses plus all the other animals her father, Wilbur Plaugher, used in his rodeo clown act. Nathan's acquaintance has been limited to Socks, which his father rides often at the home of a Lubbock friend, Clyde Day. (Staff Photo)

Pilot Prepares To Clown Around

By GERRY BURTON
Avalanche-Journal Staff

Saddling dogs and dressing monkeys was a way to fill the 18-month wait for a pilot training slot for Mike Mendes after college graduation.

The Reese Air Force Base instructor pilot and class commander may be doing that again when the 37th annual ABC Rodeo unwinds March 28-31 in Lubbock Municipal Coliseum.

If he does, it won't be work. The first lieutenant, who will pin on his captain's bars in June, will be lending a hand to his famous father-in-law, Wilbur Plaugher, the "clown prince of rodeo."

Plaugher, a longtime favorite with ABC Rodeo fans, will be back in the Lubbock arena after a short absence. His bicentennial clown show, which wowed audiences all over the nation, captivated Lubbock fans in 1976 when Mendes was undergoing pilot training at Reese.

Reese went down on Mendes' preference sheet after a Lubbock stopover while touring with Plaugher, doing the background work, climbing the rigging to hang the dummy and sometimes running a few bulls after regular show times.

Dressing a wiggling monkey was a real chore and saddling the dog was much harder than saddling the horses he had ridden on his father's ranch.

Shinnying to the coliseum roof to hang the dummy was easier. However, once he almost got run over by a bull while helping in the arena.

Rodeoing was no stranger to Mendes, whose father and five uncles had been regular competitors on the circuits. He doesn't recall the rodeo rounds which ended when he was six.

The elder Mendes, who was best at bullriding, and Plaugher, who was an all-round cowboy contestant, had rodeoed together, but their offspring never met until both were attending Fresno State College.

Smitten by her first glimpse of the handsome athlete, Zoe Anne Plaugher took her famous father to watch her work out with the weights so she might get to know him.

"My father had told me about Wilbur, and I knew about him from his work with the Fellowship of Christian Athletes; Wilbur took the FCA to rodeo."

Then, when no one would hire a man waiting to enter pilot training as soon as a slot opened, Mendes worked fulltime on the Plaugher ranch, then extended that to helping with the clown routine on tour which brought him to Lubbock and knowledge of pilot training at Reese.

At Reese he flies over country an oldtime cowboy, Holman Arnett, told him about while both worked cattle on the Plaugher spread.

He feels a part of the country when he points out the Spade Ranch as a landmark to his student pilots and passes on some of the tales Arnett spun of the South Plains.

As class commander of Class 79-07 Mendes is responsible for their military bearing, personal problems and graduation. His assessment of temperament and abilities helps determine whether a new pilot goes into a single cockpit fighter or into heavier crafts with other pilots.

Probably, he will have to help with Plaugher's clown preparations since Plaugher is planning on spending most of his time with Nathan, his tiny grandson.

Getting Ready

The preparations that the people of Elk City, Okla., made for President Carter's visit there this weekend may not have been as lavish as those for the peace treaty signing in Washington, D.C., but they were probably made with the same attention to detail. In the top photo, members of the U.S. Park Service rake the South Lawn of the White House Saturday under the huge circus tent where the president will host a dinner Monday night following the signing of the peace treaty between Israel and Egypt. Meanwhile, as shown in the bottom photo, Danny Ringer, left, and Vaughn Kennemer sweep the floor of the Elk City high school gym while technicians test the lighting. Carter was to preside over a town meeting in the gym Saturday night and then attend church services this morning before flying to Dallas. (AP Laserphotos)

Officials Approve Water Import Powers Bill

Avalanche-Journal Staff

PLAINVIEW — A preliminary bill creating a state agency to "exercise all the powers essential" to the handling of water imported to 46 West Texas counties sitting atop the Ogallala formation was approved Saturday by area representatives who met here.

Although the Ogallala Water Import Authority of Texas, as listed in the bill, cannot be formed until water for import becomes available and a deal finalized, J.W. Buchanan, manager of the North Plains Underground Water Conservation District in Dumas, said that the bill creating the agency is essential.

"By having the bill already passed and the agency ready to operate," Buchanan said, "we'll save several years, and be able to bring the water in almost immediately.

"When water becomes available, we've got to be ready to grab it, because we certainly aren't going to be the only area trying to get it," he added.

Presided over by Buchanan and Water Inc.'s Duncan Ellison, the informal gathering of about 50 persons revised its bill, which as of yet has no official title, ironing out several technical wrinkles and debating controversial ideas concerning taxation and the agency's boundaries.

The group hopes to finalize the bill soon and have it introduced into the Texas legislature during the current session. State Rep. Bob Simpson of Amarillo has indicated he is willing to submit it as local legislation since it does not affect the entire state.

"Creation of this agency beforehand also serves as a strong, positive sign that the people of West Texas are serious about importing water," Buchanan said. "Some people have openly doubted whether we were serious about this and I think this proves we are serious. We want to solve this as soon as we can."

Under the bill, the 46 county area of West Texas would be divided into 15 precincts of equal population, each with one director serving on the executive board. The 15 directors would serve staggered two-year terms.

As a state agency, the operation would be funded by state taxes, which would be established by voters and the board, and collected by county and state tax collectors, according to the bill.

General provisions of the bill state that the agency's purposes are to: obtain supplemental supplies of imported water for use on an equitable basis within the boundaries of the authority; to preserve, conserve, protect, replenish, prevent waste, recharge, store, manage, treat, distribute, drain, exchange and sell imported water; contract for imported water; and provide for the storage, sale, management treatment, drainage and distribution of imported water.

Other general powers provided for in the proposed legislation include the agency's ability to contract freely for water, develop all facilities needed to handle the water, and buy and sell property necessary for the exercise of the powers allowed the agency in the bill.

Also attending Saturday's meeting were representatives of the Greenbelt Water Authority in Clarendon, the Red River authority in Wichita Falls, the Panhandle Underground Water District in Panhandle, Panhandle Regional Planning Commission in Amarillo and the High Plains Underground Water Conservation Distrcit in Lubbock.

City Councilwoman Carolyn Jordan represented the city of Lubbock, and assistant Amarillo city attorney Larry Toomey spoke for Amarillo.

Buchanan said he expected Saturday's meeting on the bill to be the last unless matters not discussed at the Saturday meeting arose.

"We're pretty well on our way. There are, of course, some legal matters to be worked out, but those won't affect the bill's passage through the legislature," he said.

Annual Gridiron Rite Parodies News

WASHINGTON (AP) — To the tune of "Anything You Can Do, I Can Do Better," newspapermen caricaturing Democrats sang in spoof Saturday night to Republicans: "Anything you could do, we can do cheaper. We can cut anything deeper than you."

In the same Washington rite of spring, a character portraying Henry Kissinger sang to Secretary of State Cyrus Vance: "When I write history, I'll be the greatest. History will show that I'm greater than you."

Someone playing the part of Phyllis Schlafly sang of Bella Abzug: "Any cause she supports, I could not work for. I won't knee-jerk for the things she supports.

And a character portraying Ronald Reagan sang to John Connally: "Anything you can do I can do slicker. I can win delegates quicker than you."

The star of the show, according to the script, was inflation watchdog Alfred Kahn, who broke precedent by impersonating himself.

In his song, with a melody borrowed from Gilbert and Sullivan, Kahn complained that his policeman's lot is not a happy one when "the bad news comes in bunches like bananas."

He lamented:

"When nobody is inclined to shout hosannas

"And both businessmen and labor want my head

"And the bad news comes in bunches like bananas.

"I would I could have stood at home in bed.

"My job is one to make me cry, 'Oh brother.'

"A policeman's lot is not a happy one."

Kahn's reference to bananas was in the order of a double entendre. Last November, Kahn irked President Carter by warning of a "deep, deep depression." He took, in subsequent pronouncements, to substituting "banana" for "depression."

He would say things like, "The danger of a serious banana is increased if we do not bring the inflation rate down."

Carter, who made a trip to Elk City, Okla., was not present to be amused.

Gridiron President Robert Boyd of the Knight-Riddder Newspapers, taking note of Carter's weekend visit to the nation's heartland, said in the traditional "speech in the dark" that Carter went out to Elk City "to be near what's left of our oil."

Boyd spoofed Kahn. He said his guidelines were working well — with the exceptions of business and labor. And he lauded CIA Director Stansfield Turner for the CIA's assurance that the Shah of Iran was safe on his throne. He said Carter was particularly pleased with that intelligence, in view of Turner's assurances to Carter that he would be overthrown in 1980.

According to advance plans, Rosalynn Carter delivered an off-the-record response for her husband, another precedent. Among the 500 guests were members of the Cabinet, the Supreme Court and the diplomatic corps.

In the show, other victims of Gridiron impersonations were:

—Ronald Reagan, singing: "Gonna take my campaign to the folks one more time. They tell me havin' birthdays ain't no crime. I'm heading for the last roundup."

—John Connally: "With oil in my shoes and milk in the bank, Thank God, I'm a country boy."

—Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, complaining that Carter's fiscal integrity is a drag. "More," the senator said, "is my middle name."

—Henry A. Kissinger: "Isn't it bliss? Isn't it odd? Why have a president ... When I can play God?"

—Vice President Walter Mondale, who clad as a Cub Scout, sang to the tune of "I Believe" that he believed in everything — the weather forecasts, the efficacy of prayers by the Senate chaplain, the CIA's predictions and the president's popularity.

Dandelion Festival Proclaimed

By JULES LOH

VINELAND, N.J. (AP) — Ah, spring. Harvest time.

Harvest time, that is, if you live in the self-proclaimed Dandelion Capital of the World and instead of waging chemical warfare on the damn things you eat them.

"Do not curse the dandelion," scolded Mayor Patrick Fiorilli, the Dandelion Booster of the World.

"The dandelion is one of the most fruitful products of modern day existence. It could become the savior of mankind. Come to our dinner and you will see."

When the subject is dandelions, His Honor is not exactly given to understatment. But, yes, he does indeed throw an annual dandelion supper, a springtime harvest festival.

On April 7, he and his guests will gather at the St. Francis of Assisi church hall. They will eat dandelion salad and dandelion soup. They will savor chicken dandelion cacciatore and dandelion ravioli in red sauce. The mayor will crown Miss Dandelion of 1979. He will toast her with dandelion wine.

As the poet said, a little madness in the spring is wholesome even for the king.

"There is no question dandelions are wholesome," said the Dandelion Dietician of the World. "They are rich in vitamins A and C and iron. They are delicious. Do you have a recipe book?"

Forgive the mayor a minor exaggeration. In his office are stacks of pamphlets — at best, booklets — containing 14 dandelion recipes between covers of dandelion yellow. In any case, he will mail one to any backyard gourmet who asks.

"In Vineland," the mayor said, "dandelions are a $70,000 crop. "Our growers ship to restaurants from here to St. Louis.

"I confess that I did read somehwere of some town — I think in Maine — that ships a bigger crop, but they cook them and can them. Ours are fresh. All right," he said, swallowing hard, "I will qualify it. We are the Salad Dandelion capital of the World."

Patrick Fiorilli, like a great many others of his generation among Vineland's 50,000 citizens, is the son of Italian immigrants. He was born in 1929 two days before the Black Friday stock crash.

"I guess every Italian kid around here during the Depression ate dandelion salad in the spring," he said. "After all, it was free.

"That was about the time some of our farmers began growing them commercially. Now we only have about 15 dandelion farmers, but they produce more dandelions than were produced back then.

"Go to the South Philly markets, or to Little Italy in New York. The dandelions you buy were grown in Vineland.

For those who care to try their own dandelion recipes, Mayor Fiorilli advises picking the dandelion leaves while they are green and tender, before the yellow flower appears.

He also advises against picking them at all if you have used chemical weed killers or fertilizers on your grass.

"By the way," said the Dandelion Missionary of the World, "I have invited Mr. Wyn Entis to our dinner and he has accepted. I have told him what I think of his efforts."

Mr. Mayor, who is Mr. Entis?

Nerve Gas Release In Utah Postponed

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — The Army's plan to release nerve gas into the air — the first such intentional release in 10 years — has been postponed because of weather conditions.

The explosion of 26 deteriorating land mines filled with the deadly gas in a remote area about 50 miles southwest of here had been planned for today. An Army spokesman said Thursday the explosion now is planned for Monday. Gov. Scott Matheson dispatched three state health inspectors to the site.

Yellow Rose May Roll Into Hub City

Proposed Plan Links Lubbock With Other Cities

Avalanche-Journal Staff

Lubbock would receive Amtrak passenger train service connecting the Hub City with Dallas, Denver, Phoenix and other cities, if the Railroad Passenger Association of the Southwest has its way.

The RPAS, an Arizona-based organization dedicated to reviving passenger rail service, is lobbying Congress for extension of Amtrak service throughout the Southwest, despite threats from U.S. Department of Transportation Secretary Brock Adams to substantially reduce the number of passenger trains because of financial difficulties.

Under the RPAS expansion program, Lubbock would receive daily service from a passenger train called the Yellow Rose, which would run between Dallas and Albuquerque, and allow passengers easy connections to Phoenix, Denver and Los Angeles. Beginning in Dallas, the Yellow Rose would stop in Fort Worth and pass through Abilene before arriving in Lubbock. The leg from Lubbock to Albuquerque would be nonstop, according to the RPAS Program of Intercity Rail Service.

No concrete timetable for the expansion into Lubbock has been established, according to RPAS spokesman Robert Bohannon, who explained all growth can come only from authority of the federal government, which operates Amtrak through the DOT.

If implemented, the new routes "would give travelers a viable alternative to flying or driving," Bohannon said. "Trains are the most efficient form of long distance travel."

"Brock Adams says Amtrak is a national system but it's not. And it may get worse if these cutbacks are implemented," he added. "Lubbock taxpayers are paying the Amtrak subsidies, but you don't have a train."

The cutbacks which the RPAS so strongly opposes would eliminate more than half of Amtrak's 27,000 miles of track, including two of the three trains running through Texas. Congress must reject Adams' reduction proposal by May 15, or the cutbacks will be in effect by Oct. 1.

The Lone Star, operating between Chicago and Houston, and the Inter-American, running between Chicago and Laredo via Houston, are destined for the chopping block, leaving only the Sunset Limited, operating between New Orleans and Los Angeles via Houston, San Antonio and El Paso, running in the state. And the tri-weekly Sunset remains under fire for its arrival and departure times in Houston and San Antonio, which fall between midnight and 5 a.m. in both directions.

Most of the trains not included in the DOT cutback plan operate in the Northeast Corridor, the highly populated portion of the Atlantic Coast between Washington and Boston.

"Our first step is to encourage the public and our lawmakers to reject the DOT proposal to reduce service. There are lots of ways to improve the system, and it seems silly to shut it down to such a small service," Bohannon said.

"Amtrak is such a mess because its so small. In most places there aren't enough trains to offset the number of employees," he continued, citing the Albuquerque station as a prime example — according to Bohannon, the Albuquerque station has 14 employees to service the Sunset Limited, which passes through town only six times per week.

"More trains would mean better and more efficient use of employees, so the burden to taxpayers would be less, not more, and we'd all get something for our money."

Amtrak operates on an annual budget of approximately 550 million, which is about four percent of the DOT's annual budget.

Even if Congress accepts the DOT proposal to limit the Amtrak passenger system, Bohannon said increased service could come about if individual states are willing to strike up a deal with Amtrak.

"We feel two things might happen to make our ideas look pretty good," Bohannon said. "One is that gas is going to go so high that tourists won't be able to afford to drive to the Southwest from the Midwest and other parts of the country, and they'll be looking for other ways to travel. They'll still want their vacations.

"The second is that cars will keep getting smaller, and they'll be uncomfortable to make long trips in, and people will look for other modes of travel.

"We'd rather see the government run Amtrak as an alternative to other modes of transportation. Even with a big subsidy, it would reduce our dependence on foreign oil."

Bohannon and his cohorts have been calling, writing and making public appearances on behalf of the RPAS, but he admits to a tough, uphill struggle, admitting almost wistfully: "I wish we had more influence. Unfortunately, for us, we're a policy suggesting group rather than a policy making group."

He and other RPAS supporters are going to Washington in April in hopes of meeting with Adams and other influential government officials in an attempt to peddle his ideas. He's hopeful, but isn't expecting immediate success. "I wrote Mr. Adams a letter and he ignored it. I never even heard from him. But our senators (Barry Goldwater and Dennis DiConcini) are open-minded about the ideas."

The RPAS was formed in reaction to a report published by the DOT last summer indicating the need to reduce service because the system was becoming physically and financially inefficient. The RPAS opposed the report, and proposed as its basis the following statements:

1. Western long haul routes are not the cause of Amtrak's deficit; the blame lies primarily with the proliferation of employees added when Amtrak took over the Northeast Corridor several years ago.
2. Western taxpayers are being asked to subsidize Northeast rail service without receiving a fair share; only one new train, the Pioneer from Salt Lake City to Seattle, was added to the west when the proliferation of employees began.
3. Rail service covers as much of its costs as do other modes of transportation; Amtrak's budget is only four percent of the total DOT budget.
4. The DOT ignored the Southwest's important tourism industry; Denver, one of the few western cities with strong rail service, ranks fourth behind Los Angeles, New York and Philadelphia in number of passengers handled per train.
5. The public wants rail service; a recent Harris survey showed the public placing more emphasis on improved rail service than additional highway and air travel expansion.
6. If space per passenger is considered, trains are the most energy-efficient form of long distance travel.

Alien Land Purchase Disclosure Studied

By JOHN MOULDER
A-J Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Unless alien acquisition of U.S. farmlands is halted, Americans one day will be negotiating with a cartel controlled by foreigners for food as we are now dickering for oil.

This alarming projection was laid before the House Agriculture and Livestock Committee last week by witnesses supporting versions of four bills which would require disclosure of alien acquisition of agricultural land.

Rep. Bob Close of Perryton, sponsor of HB 146, said money paid to OPEC — Oil and Petroleum Exporting Countries — is being returned to the U.S. as investment capital. By 1985, he said, OPEC is expected to have $1.2 trillion in surplus funds. He said that's enough money to buy 30 percent of all America's farmland.

But most of the farmland purchases are not being made by the Arabs, said Close. "Most of the evidence shows that Europeans and Japanese are buying up the land," the legislator said. "When OPEC starts a new round of bidding, it will drive the price of land upwards and will have a devastating effect on the family farm tradition."

Close's bill requires the filing of reports of alien acquisition of agricultural land with the commissioner of agriculture within 90 days after the date of acquisition. The proposed law would go into effect Jan. 1, 1980. Foreign front corporations posing as domestic corporations are covered in the bill.

Rockdale Rep. Dan Kubiak's HB 432 is similar to Close's bill, except it requires filing of reports with both the secretary of state and the county clerk of each county in which any part of the property is located.

Rep. Bill Keese of Somerville and Rep. Betty Denton of Waco are authors of two other related bills calling for foreigners to file reports of farmland purchases.

After two hours of testimony, the committee turned all the bills over to a subcommittee headed by Rep. Kubiak to review and submit a recommendation.

Dr. Richard Floyd, real estate economist of the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, said his agency had asked county agricultural extension agencies to report on the scope of alien acquisitions of farmland. "But our agents said the sheer numbers were so voluminous they could not go through all the records to determine which ones were foreign owners," Floyd said.

Researchers of the bills said 19 new state employees would have to be hired to carry out the alien disclosure law. But one witness questioned why so many employees would be necessary when the federal government has recently put into effect its own disclosure law.

The federal law requires foreign interests to report their land purchases to U.S. Soil Conservation Service offices within 90 days after the transaction. The witness said the statek could merrly ask the federal agency to forward the information to the state.

Wilma Allred, a housewife from Wildorado, a community in Oldham County near Amarillo, testified that a family from India bought a motel in Wildorado a year ago, then allowed the motel to become deteriorated. "It is now rundown and has become an eyesore," she said.

"The foreigners get our cheap dollars and use it to buy up our land in the United States," she said. "But they have no pride in the country."

Jay Naman, president of the Texas Farmers Union, said his organization strongly supports legislation to halt the move of foreign interests to buy up U.S. farmlands.

He noted that reports on the amount of land owned by foreign interests vary from 2.5 per cent to 21 per cent. Rep. Close asked Naman if he feels a state disclosure law might lead to more credible information.

"I feel it will always be a vast grey area," said Naman. "There are many ways to conceal ownership. It might help us see the light about what the situation is."

Sue Duncan of Lubbock, a staff member of the Texas State Teachers Association, claimed foreign interests recently have acquired more than 6 million acres, much of which is in the Lubbock area.

No. 55

WHEREAS, Section 12.17 of Chapter 12 of the Texas Education Code providing for the adoption of a system of uniform textbooks, requires the chairman of the State Board of Education to give public notice of meetings of the State Board of Education for the purpose of adoption and making contracts for textbooks two months in advance of such meetings.

WHEREAS, in accordance with the provisions of the Texas Education Code, the policies of the State Board of Education, and the special general provisions hereinbelow stated, each participant shall adhere to the content and intent of the adoption procedures:

NOW, THEREFORE, in accordance with the provisions of the said act, I, Joe Kelly Butler, chairman of the State Board of Education, do hereby gives public notice that Saturday, November 10, 1979, at 8:30 a.m., in the Texas Education Agency offices, 150 E. Riverside, Austin, Texas, the State Board of Education will hold its session and will at that time receive and open publishers' formal proposals* filed with it for contracts to furnish textbooks to the State of Texas to be used in its public free schools on the subjects hereinbelow mentioned for periods of not more than six years nor less than one year beginning September 1, 1980, to wit:

Elementary Subjects
NONE
High School Subjects

Beginning Typewriting
Advanced Typewriting
Health Education I
Computer Mathematics
Civil Government
V.I.E. Automotive Trades

*Each Publisher's Proposal, without exception, shall include the following official documents: Bid, Corporation Affidavit, Eligibility and Agency Affidavit, Anti-Trust Affidavit, State of Texas Treasurer's Receipt for a deposit of $2500, and a statement from the Secretary of State affirming that the publisher's permit to do business in Texas has not been withdrawn.

1. TEXTBOOK CONTENT—GENERAL

1.1. The content of all textbooks called for in this Proclamation shall be in accordance with Description of Subject Content of Textbooks attached as Exhibit A to the Proclamation, copies of which are available at the Texas Education Agency.

1.2 Textbook content and suggested readings which are in violation of these general content requirements and limitations shall be deleted from any adopted textbook and teacher guide prior to purchase of the textbook by the State.

1.3 Textbooks that treat the theory of evolution should identify it as only one of several explanations of the origins of humankind and avoid limiting young people in their search for meanings of their human existence.

(1) Textbooks presented for adoption which treat the subject of evolution substantively in explaining the historical origins of humankind shall be edited, if necessary, to clarify that the treatment is theoretical rather than factually verifiable. Furthermore, each textbook must carry a statement on an introductory page that any material on evolution included in the book is clearly presented as theory rather than fact.

(2) Textbooks presented for adoption which do not treat evolution substantively as an instructional topic, but make reference to evolution, indirectly or by implication, must be modified, if necessary, to ensure that the reference is clearly to a theory and not to a verified fact. These books will not need to carry a statement on the introductory page.

(3) The presentation of the theory of evolution should be done in a manner which is not detrimental to other theories of origin.

1.5 Textbook content shall promote citizenship and understanding of the free enterprise system, emphasize patriotism and respect for recognized authority, and promote respect for human rights. Textbooks adopted shall be objective in content, impartial in interpretations, and shall not include selections or works which encourage or condone civil disorder, social strife, or disregard for the law.

(1) Textbooks shall present positive aspects of America and its heritage.

(2) Textbooks shall not contain material which serves to undermine authority.

1.6 Violence, if it appears in textbook content, shall be treated in context of cause and consequence; it shall not appear for reasons of unwholesome excitement, sensationalism, or as an excuse for relevance.

(1) In the design of textbook content the amount of violence should be minimal.

1.7 Textbooks offered for adoption shall not include blatantly offensive language or illustrations.

1.8 Textbooks offered for adoption shall not present material which would cause embarrassing situations or interference in the learning atmosphere of the classroom.

1.9 Textbooks, whenever possible, shall present varying life styles, shall treat divergent groups fairly, without stereotyping, and shall reflect the positive contributions of all individuals and groups to the American way of life. Illustrations and written material will avoid bias toward any particular life style, group, or individual and should present a wide range of goal choices and life styles. Particular care should be taken in the treatment of ethnic groups, roles of men and women, the dignity of workers, and respect for all productive work.

(1) Textbooks shall provide an objective view of cultural confluence, with the information necessary for developing mutual understanding and respect among all elements of our population. Materials shall reflect an awareness that cultural and language variation does exist and can be utilized to promote successful learning.

(2) The books shall present examples of men and women participating in a variety of roles and activities and shall further present the economic, political, social and cultural contributions of both men and women, past and present.

(3) Content which treats aspects of the world of work should reflect the positive contribution of all types of careers to the American economic system and way of life. People presented in the books should reflect varieties of work and should be treated without bias toward particular kinds of work.

(4) Traditional roles of men and women, boys and girls shall be included as well as those changing roles in our society.

(5) Textbook content should not encourage life styles deviating from generally accepted standards of society.

1.10 Authors of all textbooks offered for adoption under this Proclamation should have expertise and experience which provide authoritative credibility to their work.

1.11 All textbooks offered for adoption should present up-to-date, factual information accurately and objectively without opinionated statements or biased editorial judgments by the authors.

1.12 Textbook content should be organized to facilitate both teaching and learning.

2. FIELD TESTING

In the developmental stage of each textbook or system, authors should have field tested the material with teachers and students in planned field trial or pilot test. Written evidence from such testing, showing how the publisher (authors) used the results of the field trial or pilot test in completing the book, should be made available to the State Textbook Committee.

3. MANUFACTURING CHARACTERISTICS

3.1 The STate Board of Education requires that manufacturing specifications for all books, including books in systems, adopted shall be equal to the Official Manufacturing Standards and Specifications for Textbooks as approved by the State Board of Education. Publishers shall file for each book submitted (or each series of books, if all books of the series are manufactured under identical specifications) a copy of a true and correct statement signed by an official of the company and made on Form B, Publisher's Report Form and Warranty, giving all of the required tests and minimum manufacturing standards and those of the official sample to be filed in the Textbook Division, Texas Education Agency. State funds will not be expended for the purchase of regular paperback books. Soft back books will only be purchased when specified in Exhibit A or B. Soft back books must be submitted using 17 pt. acrylic or equivalency. (See Exhibit B for filing deadline for Form B.) Consumable books need not b submitted in acrylic bindings.

3.2 Textbooks adopted in all subjects, whether bound in soft or hard covers or in single or multiple bindings, and all non-consumable components of learning systems and supplemental materials, which indicate faulty manufacturing characteristics, the use of interior materials, or the use of materials that are noncompatible during the first two years of use, must be replaced by the publisher(s) at no cost to the state.

3.3 A textbook in two or more bindings, soft or hard back, shall be packaged in shrink wrap for initial handling and shipping purposes. Shrink wrap is defined as a sealed plastic WRAPPER (envelope) for packaging multiple bindings. Each binding must carry the uniform ownership label and a list of all the bindings included in each book (the package).

3.4 All Smythe-sewn books shall be bound tight back.

3.5 Adhesive bound books are not to be bid.

4. LEARNING SYSTEMS AND SUPPLEMENTAL MATERIALS

4.1 Learning Systems — Textbooks for bilingual instruction may be "free textbooks and supporting media" (Section 12.04(a), Texas Education Code, as enacted by S.B. 121, 63rd Legislature, 1973.) Textbooks for kindergarten children mean books and any apperatus, including three dimensional manipulative materials, which convey information to the scholastic or otherwise contribute to the learning process. (Section 12.04 Texas Education Code as enacted by Acts 1971, 62nd Legislature).

Sect. 25, Section 12.01 Texas Education Code, "Textbooks or books as used herein shall mean books, systems of instructional materials, or combinations of books and supplementary instructional materials which convey information to the pupil or otherwise contribute to the learning process," as enacted by Acts 65th Legislature 1-C.S.

To be eligible for State Adoption a system shall encompass the following definition: A system is a package of intructional learning materials with accompanying media designed to enable students to achieve desired outcomes for a specific content area or course of study. Items included must be related by design and must be integral and essential parts of the system.

To be eligible for State adoption, supplemental materials shall encompass the following definition: Those instructional media deemed adjunctive but not essential to supplying information and experience stimuli to allow learner achievement of stated objectives or goals contained in the essential set of information, namely, an adopted textbook.

Criteria to determine areas where systems and supplemental materials are to be adopted shall be developed each year as planning takes place to call an adoption.

A limitation on the price and per cent of consumables shall be placed on kindergarten systems. Since there are no textbooks adopted (as per definition prior to kindergarten adoption) in this category, the formula for cost per pupil would not apply as a price limitation. If only systems are called in any subject area, limitations will be placed on both total price and per cent of consumables.

4.2 Learning systems and supplementary materials may be submitted for adoption only if specified in Exhibit A.

4.3 Instead of sampling the complete learning system to State Textbook Committee members, each publisher shall make available to State Textbook Committee members and their advisors a prospectus of the system or detailed explanation of supplemental materials.

4.4 Prospectus — A full description of the system and its components, including:

- information about authors of the materials;
- a rationale for the system related to a specific body of research;
- the educational purposes for which the system is intended;
- a guide for the teacher's use of the material consistent with the rationale and stated purposes;
- evidence of field testing among various student populations and valid statistical treatment to support the results;
- evaluation criteria and procedures built into the system;
- detailed content of each component to include pictorial or graphic examples.

4.5 Publishers shall be required to have one copy of each system and each of the supplementary materials being offered for adoption on display in the Textbook Division. One additional sample of each system and each of the supplementary materials shall be placed ine ach of 10 Education Service Centers. Education Service Centers shall be paired geographically to ensure state-wide availability for review. The grouping is as follows:

Amarillo (16) — Lubbock (17)
El Paso (19) — Midland (18)
Abilene (14) — San Angelo (15)
San Antonio (20) — Victoria (3)
Corpus Christi (2) — Edinburg (1)
Beaumont (5) — Houston (4)
Austin (13) — Huntsville (6)
Richardson (10) — Waco (12)
Kilgore (7) — Mount Pleasant (8)

The samples shall be deposited with the Education Service Center listed in the left hand column on the first date specified for such deposit. A second date will specify the depositing of the system and supplementary materials in the Education Service Center listed in the right hand column. It will be the responsibiyty of the publisher to effect the transfer of said samples from one depository to the other. Notification shall be made by the Education Service Center of the date each system and each item of supplementary materials are received. See Exhibit B for deadline if applicable.

Successful bidders shall file one additional sample in each of the Education Service Centers listed in the left hand column. Such sampling shall be immediately following adoption by the State Board of Education, thus ensuring the opportunity for review by local school districts.

4.6 Publishers may lend a system to a State Textbook Committee member for no more than a two-week period upon request of the member.

4.7 The bid for each system or supplementary materials shall show a total wholesale price and the quantity and pricing for each component of the system. All such systems will be contracted for without exchange. Consumable components must be so marked. Systems shall be bid in multiples of 25 students and 1 techer for the elementary grades. Systems for junior high and high school subjects shall be bid on the basis of class size. Pricing shall include consumables for the term of the contract. The state label shall be placed on the box.

4.8. The State Textbook Committee, in making its recommendations on systems, shall consider the quality of the materials instead of the price of the system.

4.9 Samples of systems and supplementary materials will not be mailed to schools. Instead, a listing of systems with prices and a detailed description of the component parts will be distributed to schools by the Textbook Division and a detailed prospectus will be distributed by the publisher. Publishers shall provide a complete and detailed description of the component parts to the Textbook Division at the time they file the Official Sample.

4.10 Systems submitted for adoption shall be self-sufficient for the period of adoption. Non-consumable components will be replaced by the publisher during the warranty period. The state will not replace components except those that are consumable.

4.11 No less than two nor more than three systems may be adopted, and each system must meet the cost per pupil served formula with the exception of kindergarten systems.

5. REVISED, IDENTICAL, OR SPECIAL EDITIONS

5.1 Publishers who offer books for this adoption that are revisions of textbooks now under contract must file a complete list of deletions, additions, and changes in printing, illustrations, organization or materials, and format. (See Exhibit B for filing deadline.)

5.2 Textbooks which are identical in content or substantially similar in content to books already adopted will be purchased only in such quantities as are necessary to replace worn-out copies and for increased enrollment.

5.3 Serious consideration shall be given to special editions of texts offered at lower prices than regular editions if the contents are the same.

6. GRADE DESIGNATION

All elementary texts for grades 1 through 6 offered for adoption singly or in series must show the grade or level placement, using numbers or symbols, on the outside of the book cover. Symbols shall be definitive of grade or level of book.

7. RETENTION OF OUT-OF-ADOPTION BOOKS

7.1 The State Board of Education reserves the right to permit school officials in local districts to retain out-of-adoption texts in quantities of at least 25 percent of the number on hand or as many as may be justifiably needed for reference, teaching aids, and library use.

7.2 In accordance with Section 12.63(1), Texas Education Code, these books may be made available to city and county jails, the Department of Corrections, and other state institutions maintaining libraries.

8. LARGE-TYPE TEXTBOOKS

Each publisher's books adopted under this Proclamation shall be made available to the state in large type. The publisher can produce his own books in large type, contract with some company to do the job, or let the Agency contract for the work. Specifications for large-type books may be secured on request from the Textbook Division.

9. OFFICIAL SAMPLES

9.1 Each bidder shall deposit samples with the Commissioner of Education, as executive officer of the State Board of Education, at Austin, Texas. Five copies of each textbook being submitted for adoption shall be filed. To the extent possible, all five copies of each book should be packed together and should show the contents and publisher's name on the outside of each carton. In each copy there shall be entered the prices and other information required under provisions of the law and which the State Board of Education may require.

One copy of each system and one copy of each item of supplementary material shall be filed. Packaging should be delivered in as few cartons as possible and should show the contents and publisher's name on the outside of each carton. A copy of the form listing prices and other information required under the provisions of the law and which the State Board of Education may require shall be included with the sample submitted. (See Exhibit B for filing deadline.)

9.2 In addition to the five samples of each book, one copy with the price information sheet completely filled out shall be deposited as the Official Sample. The Official Sample shall be wrapped separately and clearly marked "OFFICIAL SAMPLE." Official Samples received after the deadline will not be considered by the State Textbook Committee. (See Exhibit B for filing deadline.)

9.3 Samples of teacher's manual or edition and workbooks as specified offered for adoption shall be filed in conjunction with official textbook samples.

10. TEXTBOOK BIDS

10.1 All bids shall be made on the Official Textbook Bid Form, without alteration, and bids made on any other form will not be considered.

The Bid Form shall show the price or prices at which each book will be furnished for the term of the contract that may be awarded by the State Board of Education and shall stipulate the price "with exchange" and the price "without exchange." Zero exchange will not be accepted. The bid shall be sealed in a separate envelope marked "Official Bid" and filed not later than 8:30 a.m. on the date that the State Board of Education meets to adopt textbooks. At the time of filing his bid, each publisher shall deposit with the State Treasurer $2500, which deposit may be made in cash or by certified or cashier's check payable to the order of the State Treasurer. This deposit shall be forfeited to the state if the bidder fails to execute any contract awarded on such bids or fails to furnish the required bond therefor. All other official papers in Publisher's Proposal must be filed along with the sealed bid except Corporation Eligibility and Agency Affidavit which shall be filed on or within five days immediately preceding the day on which bids are opened. (See Exhibit B for filing deadline.)

10.2 Copies of all required affidavits, bid forms, and contract forms will be supplied to each bidder by the director of the Textbook Division, Texas Education Agency, as requested.

10.3 A bid will not be considered unless the publisher shall have complied with each and all of the prerequisites of the statutes by filing affidavits, copies of texts, specifications reports, information as to prices and agents, and otherwise qualifying to bid; and a bid will not be considered from any person, firm, or corporation that is not legally eligible to bid.

10.4 Bids shall conform to all applicable legal provisions and shall supply all information requested on the official form.

10.5 Any book bid in multiple bindings shall be subject to an adjustment of distribution by the Commissioner of Education.

Textbooks in multiple bindings, when called, shall be developed toward individualized instruction. Pricing should be comparable to a regular textbook. If modular textbooks are higher in cost, distribution should be made to provide a comparable cost per pupil to other books on the list.

10.6 The State Board of Education reserves the right to reject any or all bids.

11. READOPTION

Publishers to whom contracts may be awarded under this Proclamation shall be prepared to make the editions adopted available for one or more extended contract periods of not more than four years each if it appears to the Commissioner of Education and the State Board of Education at the expiration of the contract that the best interests of the state will be served in making such extensions.

12. CONTRACTS

Bidders to whom contracts may be awarded shall sign contracts drawn on Official Textbook Contract Form without addition, change, or modification, including a bond or bonds payable to the state under the provisions and containing the terms and conditions set out in Sec. 12.26 and 12.27, Texas Education Code. (See Exhibit B for filing deadline.)

Contracts shall be issued in accordance with available budgets.

13. CORRECTIONS AND CHANGES

13.1 When publishers are officially notified of corrections and changes in their textbooks, they will receive instructions as to when the corrections and changes must be made and which of their titles the state will not buy as samples. (See Exhibit B for deadline.)

13.2 Two corrected copies of each student textbook, teacher's manual or edition, workbook materials, and one copy of component of systems or supplementary material as specified must be submitted to the Textbook Division for approval prior to sampling in school districts or prior to purchase for use in public schools. (See Exhibit B for deadline.)

13.3 The Agency will provide on request one set of corrected copies of textbooks, teacher's manuals or editions, and workbook materials as specified to each regional Education Service Center upon return of uncorrected copies.

14. SAMPLE STOCK

The only samples to be purchased by the state will be those that are corrected samples, samples requiring no corrections, and those with only minimal changes in noncontent areas. In no case shall samples be purchased which would be in violation of the applicable proclamation including Exhibits A and B.

15. DEPOSITORY DESIGNATION

In order to handle sample books properly and process annual and supplemental requisitions for the succeeding school year, publishers holding a textbook contract or contracts with the State of Texas shall officially identify their depository and fiscal agent to the Textbook Division Fifteen (15) days prior to November 10, 1979, effective January 1, 1980. This will be a continuing designation from year to year until notice of change in depository status approved by the State Board of Education under Sec. 12.31, Texas Education Code, is filed in the same sequence, 15 days prior to the November meeting of the State Board of Education and effective January 1 next. This provision will apply to publishers now holding contracts who wish to change depository status and to new publishers who may be awarded contracts by the State Board of Education in November 1979.

Application to establish depository status or to change depository status forms are available in the Textbook Division.

16.1 Textbooks for all subjects of the high school level shall be distributed on the basis of 110% of subject enrollment.

17. STATE TEXTBOOK COMMITTEE

In the event a member of the State Textbook Committee changes positions after appointment by the State Board of Education, he or she may continue as a member of the Committee for the appointed term if the new position is within public education in Texas.

WHEREAS, Section 12.17 of Chapter 12 of the Texas Education Code providing for the adoption of a system of uniform textbooks, requires the chairman of the State Board of Education to give public notice of meetings of the State Board of Education for the purpose of adoption and making contracts for textbooks two months in advance of such meetings;

WHEREAS, in accordance with the provisions of the Texas Education Code, the policies of the State Board of Education, and the special general provisions hereinbelow stated, each participant shall adhere to the content and intent of the adoption procedures;

Riverside, Austin, Texas, the State Board of Education will hold its session and will at that time receive and open publishers' formal proposals* filed with it for contracts to furnish textbooks to the State of Texas to be used in its public free schools on the subjects hereinbelow mentioned for periods of not more than six years nor less than one year beginning September 1, 1980, to wit:

Elementary Subjects

*Each Publisher's Proposal, without exception, shall include the following official documents: Bid, Corporation Affidavit, Eligibility and Agency Affidavit, Anti-Trust Affidavit, State of Texas Treasurer's Receipt for a deposit of $2500, and a statement from the Secretary of State affirming that the publisher's permit to do business in Texas has not been withdrawn.

1. TEXTBOOK CONTENT—GENERAL

1.1. The content of all textbooks called for in this Proclamation shall be in accordance with Description of Subject Content of Textbooks attached as Exhibit A to the Proclamation, copies of which are available at the Texas Education Agency.

1.2 Textbook content and suggested readings which are in violation of these general content requirements and limitations shall be deleted from any adopted textbook and teacher guide prior to purchase of the textbook by the State.

1.3 Textbooks that treat the theory of evolution should identify it as only one of several explanations of the origins of humankind and avoid limiting young people in their search for meanings of their human existence.

(1) Textbooks presented for adoption which treat the subject of evolution substantively in explaining the historical origins of humankind shall be edited, if necessary, to clarify that the treatment is theoretical rather than factually verifiable. Furthermore, each textbook must carry a statement on an introductory page that any material on evolution included in the book is clearly presented as theory rather than fact.

(2) Textbooks presented for adoption which do not treat evolution substantively as an instructional topic, but make reference to evolution, indirectly or by implication, must be modified, if necessary, to ensure that the reference is clearly to a theory and not to a verified fact. These books will not need to carry a statement on the introductory page.

(3) The presentation of the theory of evolution should be done in a manner which is not detrimental to other theories of origin.

1.5 Textbook content shall promote citizenship and understanding of the free enterprise system, emphasize patriotism and respect for recognized authority, and promote respect for human rights. Textbooks adopted shall be objective in content, impartial in interpretations, and shall not include selections or works which encourage or condone civil disorder, social strife, or disregard for the law.

(1) Textbooks shall present positive aspects of America and its heritage.

(2) Textbooks shall not contain material which serves to undermine authority.

1.6 Violence, if it appears in textbook content, shall be treated in context of cause and consequence; it shall not appear for reasons of unwholesome excitement, sensationalism, or as an excuse for relevance.

(1) In the design of textbook content the amount of violence should be minimal.

1.7 Textbooks offered for adoption shall not include blatantly offensive language or illustrations.

1.8 Textbooks offered for adoption shall not present material which would cause embarrassing situations or interference in the learning atmosphere of the classroom.

1.9 Textbooks, whenever possible, shall present varying life styles, shall treat divergent groups fairly, without stereotyping, and shall reflect the positive contributions of all individuals and groups to the American way of life. Illustrations and written material will avoid bias toward any particular life style, group, or individual and should present a wide range of goal choices and life styles. Particular care should be taken in the treatment of ethnic groups, roles of men and women, the dignity of workers, and respect for all productive work.

(1) Textbooks shall provide an objective view of cultural confluence, with the information necessary for developing mutual understanding and respect among all elements of our population. Materials shall reflect an awareness that cultural and language variation does exist and can be utilized to promote successful learning.

(4) Traditional roles of men and women, boys and girls shall be included as well as those changing roles in our society.

(5) Textbook content should not encourage life styles deviating from generally accepted standards of society.

1.12 Textbook content should be organized to facilitate both teaching and learning.

2. FIELD TESTING

In the developmental stage of each textbook or system, authors should have field tested the material with teachers and students in planned field trial or pilot test. Written evidence from such testing, showing how the publisher (authors) used the results of the field trial or pilot test in completing the book, should be made available to the State Textbook Committee.

3. MANUFACTURING CHARACTERISTICS

3.1 The STate Board of Education requires that manufacturing specifications for all books, including books in systems, adopted shall be equal to the Official Manufacturing Standards and Specifications for Textbooks as approved by the State Board of Education. Publishers shall file for each book submitted (or each series of books, if all books of the series are manufactured under identical specifications) a copy of a true and correct statement signed by an official of the company and made on Form B, Publisher's Report Form and Warranty, giving all of the required tests and minimum manufacturing standards and those of the official sample to be filed in the Textbook Division, Texas Education Agency. State funds will not be expended for the purchase of regular paperback books. Soft back books will only be purchased when specified in Exhibit A or B. Soft back books must be submitted using 17 pt. acrylic or equivalency. (See Exhibit B for filing deadline for Form B.) Consumable books need not b submitted in acrylic bindings.

3.2 Textbooks adopted in all subjects, whether bound in soft or hard covers or in single or multiple bindings, and all non-consumable components of learning systems and supplemental materials, which indicate faulty manufacturing characteristics, the use of interior materials, or the use of materials that are noncompatible during the first two years of use, must be replaced by the publisher(s) at no cost to the state.

3.3 A textbook in two or more bindings, soft or hard back, shall be packaged in shrink wrap for initial handling and shipping purposes. Shrink wrap is defined as a sealed plastic WRAPPER (envelope) for packaging multiple bindings. Each binding must carry the uniform ownership label and a list of all the bindings included in each book (the package).

3.4 All Smythe-sewn books shall be bound tight back.

3.5 Adhesive bound books are not to be bid.

4. LEARNING SYSTEMS AND SUPPLEMENTAL MATERIALS

4.1 Learning Systems — Textbooks for bilingual instruction may be "free textbooks and supporting media" (Section 12.04(a), Texas Education Code, as enacted by S.B. 121, 63rd Legislature, 1973.) Textbooks for kindergarten children mean books and any apparatus, including three dimensional manipulative materials, which convey information to the scholastic or otherwise contribute to the learning process. (Section 12.04 Texas Education Code as enacted by Acts 1971, 62nd Legislature).

Sect. 25. Section 12.01 Texas Education Code. "Textbooks or books as used herein shall mean books, systems of instructional materials, or combinations of books and supplementary instructional materials which convey information to the pupil or otherwise contribute to the learning process." as enacted by Acts 65th Legislature 1-C.S.

To be eligible for State Adoption a system shall encompass the following definition: A system is a package of intructional learning materials with accompanying media designed to enable students to achieve desired outcomes for a specific content area or course of study. Items included must be related by design and must be integral and essential parts of the system.

To be eligible for State adoption, supplemental materials shall encompass the following definition: Those instructional media deemed adjunctive but not essential to supplying information and experience stimuli to allow learner achievement of stated objectives or goals contained in the essential set of information, namely, an adopted textbook.

Criteria to determine areas where systems and supplemental materials are to be adopted shall be developed each year as planning takes place to call an adoption.

A limitation on the price and per cent of consumables shall be placed on kindergarten systems. Since there are no textbooks adopted (as per definition prior to kindergarten adoption) in this category, the formula for cost per pupil would not apply as a price limitation. If only systems are called in any subject area, limitations will be placed on both total price and per cent of consumables.

4.2 Learning systems and supplementary materials may be submitted for adoption only if specified in Exhibit A.

4.3 Instead of sampling the complete learning system to State Textbook Committee members, each publisher shall make advailable to State Textbook Committee members and their advisors a prospectus of the system or detailed explanation of supplemental materials.

4.4 Prospectus — A full description of the system and its components, including:

- information about authors of the materials;
- a rationale for the system related to a specific body of research;
- the educational purposes for which the system is intended;
- a guide for the teacher's use of the material consistent with the rationale and stated purposes;
- evidence of field testing among various student populations and valid statistical treatment to support the results;
- evaluation criteria and procedures built into the system;
- detailed content of each component to include pictorial or graphic examples.

4.5 Publishers shall be required to have one copy of each system and each of the supplementary materials being offered for adoption on display in the Textbook Division. One additional sample of each system and each of the supplementary materials shall be placed ine ach of 10 Education Service Centers. Education Service Centers shall be paired geographically to ensure state-wide availability for review. The grouping is as follows:

Amarillo (16) — Lubbock (17)
El Paso (19) — Midland (18)
Abilene (14) — San Angelo (15)
San Antonio (20) — Victoria (3)
Corpus Christi (2) — Edinburg (1)
Beaumont (5) — Houston (4)
Austin (13) — Huntsville (6)
Richardson (10) — Waco (12)
Kilgore (7) — Mount Pleasant (8)

The samples shall be deposited with the Education Service Center listed in the left hand column on the first date specified for such deposit. A second date will specify the depositing of the system and supplementary materials in the Education Service Center listed in the right hand column. It will be the responsibility of the publisher to effect the transfer of said samples from one depository to the other. Notification shall be made by the Education Service Center of the date each system and each item of supplementary materials are received. See Exhibit B for deadline if applicable.

Successful bidders shall file one additional sample in each of the Education Service Centers listed in the left hand column. Such sampling shall be immediately following adoption by the State Board of Education, thus ensuring the opportunity for review by local school districts.

4.6 Publishers may lend a system to a State Textbook Committee member for no more than a two-week period upon request of the member.

4.7 The bid for each system or supplementary materials shall show a total wholesale price and the quantity and pricing for each component of the system. All such systems will be contracted for without exchange. Consumable components must be so marked. Systems shall be bid in multiples of 25 students and 1 techer for the elementary grades. Systems for junior high and high school subjects shall be bid on the basis of class size. Pricing shall include consumables for the term of the contract. The state label shall be placed on the box.

4.8 The State Textbook Committee, in making its recommendations on systems, shall consider the quality of the materials instead of the price of the system.

4.9 Samples of systems and supplementary materials will not be mailed to schools. Instead, a listing of systems with prices and a detailed description of the component parts will be distributed to schools by the Textbook Division and a detailed prospectus will be distributed by the publisher. Publishers shall provide a complete and detailed description of the component parts to the Textbook Division at the time they file the Official Sample.

4.10 Systems submitted for adoption shall be self-sufficient for the period of adoption. Non-consumable components will be replaced by the publisher during the warranty period. The state will not replace components except those that are consumable.

4.11 No less than two nor more than three systems may be adopted, and each system must meet the cost per pupil served formula with the exception of kindergarten systems.

All other official papers in Publisher's Proposal must be filed along with the sealed bid except Corporation Eligibility and Agency Affidavit which shall be filed on or within five days immediately preceding the day on which bids are opened. (See Exhibit B for filing deadline.)

10.2 Copies of all required affidavits, bid forms, and contract forms will be supplied to each bidder by the director of the Textbook Division, Texas Education Agency, as requested.

10.3 A bid will not be considered unless the publisher shall have complied with each and all of the prerequisites of the statutes by filing affidavits, copies of texts, specifications reports, information as to prices and agents, and otherwise qualifying to bid; and a bid will not be considered from any person, firm, or corporation that is not legally eligible to bid.

10.4 Bids shall conform to all applicable legal provisions and shall supply all information requested on the official form.

The Bills of Particulars, as filed by individuals or groups, become a part of the official record. It is, therefore, incumbent upon the petitioner to submit bills which can be duplicated and bound. Bills shall be on 8½x11 inch white paper with margins at least two inches on the left and one inch on the right, top, and bottom of each page.

All information furnished in support of protests by a petitioner shall be included in the Bills of Particulars. A separate Bill of Particulars shall be filed for each publisher and all protested textbooks of that publisher shall be covered therein.

Bills of Particulars must be addressed to specific books, chapters, statements, illustrations, or selections, and must not be generalized charges. Clarity must be present so that the respondent to the Bill can understand and specifically address petitioner. The Bills of Particulars must not compare, rate, or endorse textbooks. Where applicable those portions of the proclamation should be addressed specifically, I.E. 1.7, 1.8, etc.

Whereas the State Board of Education and the Commissioner of Education wish to provide every opportunity for citizen review documentation, it is incumbent upon the Commissioner and his staff to examine all petitions for compliance with requirements stated and to exclude those which are in non-compliance.

Organizations filing Bills of Particulars and wishing to make presentations at the ensuing hearings shall follow these guidelines:

1. Bills must be signed by the individual petitioner and/or chairperson with the name of the organization appearing below the signature.
2. Testimony may only be presented by an individual signing a Bill of Particulars in the subject area to be discussed or the chairperson if necessary to represent the organization.
3. A letter of intent shall be submitted to the Commissioner of Education listing the individuals to speak to each subject. (See August 3 for details.)

Bills of Particulars must be filed by a petitioner before that petitioner can participate in the hearings before the Commissioner of Education and the State Textbook Committee and before the State Board of Education.

July 20 — Final date for publishers to file the original and two copies, all of which must be typewritten and signed, of Answers to Bills of Particulars with the Commissioner of Education. Answers to the Bills of Particulars sent to the Texas Education Agency by mail must carry a postmark metered by the post office on or before July 20. Copies of the Answers are sent by the textbook director to the petitioners affected.

Publishers' Answers to Bills of Particulars must be in the same format (as to size of paper, margins, paper, and original signatures, not a facsimile, on each copy) as the Bills of Particulars. Publishers' Answers must be addressed to each specific charge of the petitioners and must not be in general terms.

Whereas the State Board of Education and the Commissioner of Education wish to provide every opportunity for publishers to Answer Bills of Particulars, it is incumbent upon the Commissioner and his staff to examine all answers for compliance with requirements stated and to exclude those which are in non-compliance.

All information furnished by a publisher in response to specific protest shall be in this Answer to the petitioner's Bills of Particulars.

Answers to Bills of Particulars must be filed by a publisher before the publisher can participate in the hearings before the Commissioner of Education and the State Textbook Committee and before the State Board of Education.

July 21 — Beginning July 21 and until the State Textbook Committee has transmitted its final title recommendations in all subjects to the Commissioner of Education, there shall be no contact, either directly or indirectly, through a third party, or in any manner whatsoever between any member of the State Textbook Committee or advisors and any textbook publishing company, depository, or petitioner. Responsibility for proper observance of this regulation lies equally with each member of the State Textbook Committee or advisor, the representatives of any textbook publishing company or depository, and the petitioner. This restriction is not intended to prohibit the State Textbook Committee, in session, from calling before it a representative of a textbook publishing company or petitioner for conference.

August 3 — The Commissioner of Education shall publish procedures regarding the organization of the hearings to be held before him and the State Textbook Committee on August 13, 14, 15, 16, and 17. Procedures and schedules for the hearings shall be followed by petitioners and publishers alike. The schedule will be developed so that each petitioner shall present testimony by publishers named in the order shown.

Organizations petitioning shall file with the Commissioner of Education a list of persons appearing and the textbook they wish to speak to. Only one person may speak to each book protested. Testimony may include several petitions but shall be presented by one person.

August 10 — Final date for State Textbook Committee advisors to file suggested changes, corrections, and deletions with State Textbook Committee.

Publishers shall file finished and complete samples as to content, by 5 p.m. with the Texas Education Agency Textbook Division.

Riverside, Austin, Texas, or elsewhere in Austin on Petitioners' Bills of Particulars and Publishers' Answers. The Commissioner of Education or his designated hearing officers shall chair the joint hearings.

Purposes of the hearings are (1) to provide the Commissioner of Education, his staff, and the State Textbook Committee with full information about the Bills of Particulars and Answers and (2) to develop a full record for use by members of the State Board of Education.

In order to contain the hearings within the designated dates, the Commissioner of Education may limit the time of each petitioner and each publisher, and or may name two or more hearing officers who will conduct hearings concurrently during the designated dates.

No petitioner, individual or group, may participate in the hearings unless a Bill of Particulars was filed. No publisher may participate in the hearings unless an Answer to a Bill of Particulars was filed.

Petitioners and publishers may present witnesses for the purpose of giving supportive testimony. Publishers' witnesses must be employed or retained by the publishing company involved. Petitioners' witnesses must not be connected in any way with any publishing company taking part in the adoption and must qualify to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of Education or the hearing officers as expert witnesses in the subject matter or professional use of textbooks to be discussed.

Any documentary evidence in narrative format must be read into the record and presented to the hearing officer for inclusion into the record. Any documentary evidence in exhibit or illustrative format must be described in a brief and concise form and submitted to the hearing officer for inclusion into the record. No exhibit may be considered for the record unless it is introduced properly and made a part of the record at that time. No exhibit or illustration may be used unless it is of an 8½"x11" format that can be made part of the record of the hearing.

Presentations shall be specific and limited to objections duly registered in the previously recorded Bills of Particulars and Answers. The hearings are not to be considered a forum for expressing philosophical beliefs or positions.

The amount of time used by the petitioner to expand Bills of Particulars will also be given to the publisher to answer. Time for rebuttal by petitioner shall not exceed 50 percent of time used by the publisher in answering the petitioner. Rebuttal shall be limited to the specifics of the publisher's answer.

The Commissioner of Education or the hearing officers shall conduct the hearings in accordance with rules of the State Board of Education governing administrative hearings before the Commissioner of Education, except that the hearings shall not be adversary in nature and only the Commissioner of Education or the hearing officers may examine the parties and or witnesses. State Textbook Committee members shall submit questions in writing to the hearing officer.

The Commissioner of Education shall have a complete record of the hearings made and transcribed.

Within 10 days after the hearings are held, the Commissioner of Education shall send to the State Board of Education, State Textbook Committee, the petitioners, and the publishers copies of the record of the hearings, including official exhibits, copies of Bills and Answers shall be provided to the State Textbook Committee, the Commissioner's staff, and each Regional Education Service Center.

The State Textbook Committee may call before it a representative of a textbook publishing company or a petitioner for conference purposes.

The State Textbook Committee shall take no formal action on the Bills and Answers, but each State Textbook Committee member shall give full consideration to the Bills and Answers before voting on textbooks to be recommended by the State Textbook Committee. After consideration of the petitioners' Bills of Particulars, the publishers' Answers, and information presented at the Commissioner's hearings, the State Textbook Committee will initiate selections of textbooks and presentation of its report to the Commissioner of Education.

The State Textbook Committee shall recommend to the Commissioner of Education a list of five books in each adoption category and may recommend a list of no more than two alternates in each adoption category. The list of alternate books should be ranked by the State Textbook Committee in order of preference. In the event that a book from the list of five books in each adoption category recommended by the State Textbook Committee is removed by action of the Commissioner of Education or the State Board of Education, the alternate books shall be considered for placement on the recommended list of five books in that adoption category.

The State Textbook Committee shall select one but not more than three of its members to be present during the special and regular meetings of the State Board of Education in November to provide information on the State Textbook Committee's final title recommendation of textbooks in each adoption category.

The State Textbook Committee shall not consider complaints about textbook adoption procedures or about conduct of persons engaged in the adoption process.

Future Homemakers of America is "more than a name:
FUTURE — next, yet to be, near at hand, coming, eventually HOME — Residence, environment, shelter, dwelling, nest
MAKERS — producers, creators, composers, authors, architects
AMERICA — government, country, homeland, nation"

Home Economics Education Designed To Enrich Personal, Family Life

Only a few years ago, the young woman who enrolled in home economics education in the public schools would enter a program designed to give her cooking and sewing skills, with a little training in home decorating and nutrition. Then, such a young person would be assumed to be heading toward a life as a full-time homemaker after, perhaps, teaching for a few years.

Today, home economics education encompasses much more than food and clothing, and the student enrolled in such a program is not necessarily female. The goal of Home Economics Education is to improve the quality of personal and family living.

Pertinent subject areas now include consumer education, housing and home furnishings, human development, social issues, changing roles of men and women, home and family living, parenting, child development and preparing for the future.

Future Homemakers of America (FHA) is a youth leadership organization comprised of male and female home economics students. The HERO (Home Economics Related Occupations) FHA members are male and female students who are currently involved in classroom and on the job training in related fields of home economics, through Home Economics Cooperative Education (HECE). There are currently 18 active FHA/HERO chapters in the city.

This week various FHA/HERO chapters in the Lubbock area will have an opportunity to impress upon their schools and community the goals and purposes of their organizations as they observe National FHA/HERO Week.

To mark the occasion, students will participate in a variety of events which include teacher appreciation day, color day, picnics, rose bush planting and banquets.

The major HERO activity for the week will be a career seminar, "Opportunities Unlimited," held at Dunbar-Struggs High School and hosted by members of all five HERO chapters of the city. Approximately 200 students will be welcomed by Ed Irons, superintendent of Lubbock Schools, as well as Roy Roberts and Tom Brown, principal and assistant principal of Dunbar.

In addition to special activities throughout the week, FHA/HERO chapters have united to accomplish a city-wide service project during the course of the school year. The projects are designed to make the young people aware of the special needs of others in our community as well as to provide a service to others. This year's theme was "Grand Generation."

Each of the 18 local FHA/HERO chapters has been assigned to a different nursing home. Activities include holiday get-togethers, bingo parties, puppet shows, gift sharing and visiting.

Home economic classes across the city have studied the aging process and the special needs and problems of the elderly. Grand Generation has given students direct contact with these citizens.

All in all, home economics education in the schools is no longer confined to preparing future homemakers; it now extends to preparing young people to be well rounded, contributing members of the larger society. Personal career goals as well as the service of others are important aspects of this training.

In My Corner

By FRANCES LOWE

You know that Spring has arrived when you say, "Who wants to go to the store with me?" and the answer comes back, "Do I have to put my shoes on?"

I always figured that if God had meant children to wear shoes they would have been born with them. My kiddoes spent their early years unshod. In spite of the dire predictions of their grandmothers and other public health officials, they seem to have suffered no terrible consequences.

Sure-footed as a little mountain goat, the Princess grew up without shoes, climbing walls, trees, the furniture, and occasional strangers. The scrapes and wounds she received were to her elbows and legs and knees, not to her feet which, brown as berries, carried her through the summers until the first day of school when we would, against her better judgement, cram them into new tennies. She seemed to adjust rather well to wearing them to school; midway through the year I discovered that there, as at home, she shed them as soon as she arrived. Her clever teacher had learned that a room full of barefoot childern was less noisy and did less damage to each other and to the furniture than they would have in shoes.

My neighbor in those days was a nurse. Her children always wore shoes, and she was irritated because her kids couldn't figure out why they had to wear shoes when mine didn't. She used to lecture me a lot on the evils to be found in the soil. But I had long since given up, as a lost cause, trying to keep shoes on their feet.

Usually they had shoes — somewhere. I was forever buying shoes, all in the same color and as cheap as I could find, in hopes that we would be able to find two that matched. They appeared, droves of navy blue tennis shoes, in odd places about the house and yard: on the coffee table, in my purse, in the crooks of trees — always in singles. I never could figure out how they could reproduce so quickly when they were never together.

Ever the optimist, their grandmother is always trying to teach them to keep track of their shoes. When she is visiting, she "throws them down the cellar steps," (although we no longer have a cellar, that is what she used to do when we were kids, and the name has stuck) and they have to try to find out where she has hidden them.

My friend Mary has a kid who keeps his "other" pair of tennies in the warming oven of the stove; it took me a long time to figure out why she was always baking tennis shoes. Finally she explained to me that he has two pair; while one is drying out in the oven he wears the other pair.

At the last minute before we leave for church or school or a party, there is a frantic scramble to find a matching pair. I have never sent them off to school, as a friend of mine once did, in bedroom slippers, but I have been known to take them to church barefoot.

"Just tuck your feet under the kneeler, and don't look down," I would tell them, "and nobody will notice."

Himself has little patience with the whole thing. When he is ready to go somewhere he is ready to go right now. As soon as they are in the car, of course, the shoes come off again — a child cannot ride in a car and wear shoes at the same time. Once on a cold winter night, after a long trip, he lifted them out and set them down in a snowbank, barefoot.

For a while they did try to do better, and would keep popping their heads over the seat to inquire, not, "How much farther is it?" like most children do, but "Is it time to put my shoes on?"

I do have a few rules: they have to wear shoes when walking on the pavement, at the zoo, in school and in public rest rooms. The last can be something of a problem on a long trip. Himself limits pit stops to one minute, which is plenty of time for him to do whatever he has to do, but hard for three females even if they didn't have to stop to put their shoes on.

They have small feet, which causes more problems, although they don't outgrow their shoes every two weeks as some children do. Because Himself and I have such small feet a friend announced, when we were expecting our first child, "Its legs will come down to a point at the end," and after the Princess was born, she looked at the child's feet and said, "See? I told you so!"

It is mortifying for a teen-ager to have to buy her shoes in the children's department, and the Princess lives in terror of being seen there by one of her friends. When I take her shopping on a Saturday in blue jeans and without makeup, the man brings her a pair of Mary Janes to try on. If we are lucky enough to find something that fits in her size, they cost an arm and a leg. I am glad that we are almost at the point where I can wear her hand-me-downs, since I've never been able to afford such expensive shoes for myself.

As I pay for them, I reflect on when we first moved to Texas and, seeing the "Shoes required" signs in public buildings, she wailed, "Will I have to wear shoes all the time?"

Her sixth-grade teacher, the marvellous Mr. Harper, delighted her by introducing her to the class as "This girl is from Georgia, so of course she doesn't have any shoes."

Somebody, I forget who, is promoting the idea that we should all remove our shoes, Eastern style, on entering a house, and go about barefoot. That would be good for the rugs, good for our feet, and save wear and tear on the shoes. The girls think it is a terrific idea, since that is what they do anyway.

I don't agree. I wouldn't, for all the money in the world, go barefoot in our kitchen, strewn as it is with broken glass, cat food and jelly spots. Neither would I go about on the rug without shoes: the thing is full of needles and pins and far more dangerous than the yard.

Besides, I have a theory that you can tell a lot about a person's character by his/her feet. A psychologist told me a couple of weeks ago that feet are erotic. I think the things should be kept decently covered.

MARRIAGE MADE IN HEAVEN

Adolescent girls indicate that their ideal marriage would be a partnership, with rejection of the domineering male, but with a sense of shared responsibility, including the rearing of children, reports Dorthy Taylor, a family life education specialist with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

DEAR ABBY

DEAR ABBY: I teach a Bible class for adults and was told that you had written a set of "Ten Commandments for Husbands" and also one for wives. Will you please run them again?

M.B. In Pasadena

Dear M.B.: Although I've published these "Commandments" three times, and have granted literally hundreds of reprint permissions for church publications (always without charge), here they are again:

TEN COMMANDMENTS FOR HUSBANDS

1). Thou shalt put thy wife before thy mother, thy father, thy daughter and thy son, for she is thy lifelong companion.

2). Abuse not thy body either with excessive food, tobacco or drink, that thy days may be many and healthful in the presence of thy loved ones.

4). Forget not the virtue of cleanliness.

6). Forget not to say, "I love you." For even though thy love be constant, thy wife doth yearn to hear the words.

7). Remember that the approval of thy wife is worth more than the admiring glances of a hundred strangers. Cleave unto her and forsake all others.

8). Keep thy home in good repair, for out of it come the joys of thy old age.

9). Forgive with grace. For who among us doth not need to be forgiven?

10). Honor the Lord thy God all the days of thy life, and thy children will rise up and call thee blessed.

DEAR ABBY: I've been going with this guy for five months. Both of my parents liked him a lot until he grew a beard. When he showed up at my house with his new beard, my parents were actually rude to him.

They said he looked like a bum or someone who was trying to overthrow the government. Abby, I think his beard looks great and told him so. It's not shaggy or neglected-looking — it's carefully cropped and really looks neat.

I was so embarrassed when my folks put this guy down, I didn't know what to say or do.

Abby, how do you feel about beards?

Pam

Dear Pam: If they're neat and well-cared for, I think they're great. Some of the most important men in history had beards: Moses, Jesus, Abraham Lincoln and Sigmund Freud, to name a few. And don't forget the Smith Brothers who coughed up a fortune.

SIGNS OF ZODIAC CREATE COLORFUL CRAFTS ITEMS

By "Mr. Do-It-Yourself" Steve Ellingson

Astrology fascinates the world. It was well known in ancient China and flourished in India. Astrologers advised Egyptian rulers of the first dynasty and this art then continued its travels, influencing people in ancient Greece, Rome and Arabia.

Now for the "star-gazers" in our audience, we have created 12 traceable patterns for all the signs of the zodiac. Do one ... do them all. They can be traced onto wood plaques, painted and then varnished. Or, the designs can also be traced onto material, painted with fabric paint, then affixed to throw pillows. All 12 signs come with suggested color schemes and can be blown up to any size desired. It's great fun whether you're doing them for yourself or as gifts for friends. Also included is a brief thumbnail sketch of personality traits commonly associated with each sign.

To obtain the booklet of 12 traceable patterns, order ZODIAC PATTERNS U-102. The price is $2.75 and includes first class postage and handling. Send check or money order to Steve Ellingson, c/o: Avalanche Journal Pattern Dept., P.O. Box 2383, Van Nuys, Calif. 91409.

ALL NEW! The 1979-80 edition of PATTERNS FOR BETTER LIVING! 112 pages containing over 600 ideas for woodworking and handicraft projects. $1.75 (includes postage).

TOMATO FISH ASPIC

2 6-oz. cans tomato juice (1½ cups)
½ cup cold water
1 cup flaked cooked white-flesh fish
1 scallion, minced
Salt and pepper to taste
Salad greens
Tangy French Dressing

Sprinkle the gelatin over ¾ cup of the tomato juice to soften — about 5 minutes. Heat the remaining ¾ cup tomato juice and the water until boiling; add to the softened gelatin and stir to dissolve. Stir in the fish, scallion and salt and pepper. Chill until slightly thickened; stir lightly. Turn into six ½-cup molds or custard cups; chill to set. Before serving, unmold; garnish with the salad greens; offer with the tangy French dressing to complement the aspic's mild tomato flavor. Makes 6 servings.

FAT CHANCE

STUTTGART, West Germany (WNS) — Erika Godel, 24, told the first stout beau who proposed to her that she might marry him if and when he slimmed down from 200 to 160 pounds. "Unfortunately," she said, "another girl grabbed him when he hit 165." She has a new fiance, a 210-pound wrestler. This time, she says, "I'll get him slimmed down to 160 after the wedding and honeymoon."

HEALTH INSURANCE

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Confused by the sales pitches for many different health insurance companies? The Consumer Information Center of the General Services Administration has a booklet to help clarify the situation. A health insurance policy should pay for most costs of illness or injury, the agency says. If your particular group coverage has serious gaps, supplement it with a low-cost personal policy, the booklet says. Before you buy any policy, find out how many hospital days it covers. Most plans limit the number of days the insured person can collect benefits. For a free copy of the booklet, write for it by title to the Consumer Information Center, Dept. 582G, Pueblo, Colo. 81009.

Choirs Participate In UIL Competition

By CONNIE CHAPMAN
Family News Staff

"The joy of victory" is not reserved exclusively for the athletic field. Throughout their school years, students compete in many kinds of contests. Winning, or being a part of a winning "team," brings as great a source of pride and accomplishment as any sports triumph can bring.

Music students have several opportunities to take part in such events. One of the most recent contest was the UIL choir event which was held in Coronado High School for District XVI.

Participating in the three-day event were 62 choirs. Many schools entered more than one choir. As in athletic competition, schools of comparable size compete with each other for ratings.

Performance is judged by music teachers (three judges for concert and one for sight-reading in junior and senior high categories) from beyond this district to insure impartiality. Choir directors receive the information which the judges record as reasons for the ratings they give. Judges' comments aid the teachers in reinforcing good qualities and in knowing ways the choir can improve.

Also like athletic competition, participants in these music events put in many long hours in preparation and anticipation of the upcoming event. There is even an informal "scouting" of competing choirs by the students in cross-school community activities.

The recent UIL choir event, however, was also an example of the spirit of cooperation. The director of one of the junior high schools was taken ill a short time before the event and the director of one high school choir pitched in and worked with that choir and even directed the group during the contest.

The highest award, the equivalent of the Olympic gold medal, is a sweepstakes award which means that the choir has received a I rating in both concert performance and sight reading.

In the choir event, three Lubbock choirs and one area choir achieved this rating. Mixed choirs from both Monterey and Coronado were so honored in the senior high division and choirs from Smylie Wilson Junior High and Levelland were so rated in the junior high division. Numerous other choirs received a I rating in either concert or sight reading.

During the remaining months of this school year, contests similar to this recent one will be held for bands and orchestras.

Music Fraternity Plans Annual University Sing

The 26th annual University Sing will be held at 7:30 p.m. Saturday in the Lubbock Municipal Auditorium.

University Sing is a musical competition sponsored by Phi Mu Alpha Sinfonia, the professional music fraternity at Texas Tech University.

Competing groups will include Saddle Tramps, Sigma Phi Epsilon and Pi Beta Phi; Alpha Tau Omega and Chi Omega; Phi Kappa Psi and Sigma Kappa; Kappa Alpha and Alpha Phi; Phi Delta Theta and Delta Delta Delta; Tau Kappa Epsilon and Zeta Tau Alpha.

Musical themes such as "Girls, Girls, Girls;" "African Trilogy;" "The Sound of Music;" "Bye, Bye Birdie;" "South Pacific;" "OZ;" and "My Fair Lady" will be performed by the groups in competition.

Special appearances will be made by the Texas Tech Varsity Stage Band.

Judging this year's event will be Phil Anthony, Coronado High School band director; Jeff Whitmill, Wilson Junior High School band and orchestra director; and Steve Davis, Monterey High School choir director.

This year's University Sing chairman is David Atchison. Assistant chairmen are Mark Frost and Paul Schmidt.

Tickets will be available at the door or at the University Center ticket office. Proceeds will go to a scholarship fund for the music department at Tech.

Potatoes Highlight Hearty Breakfast

Steak and potatoes often held the main course spotlight for a hearty breakfast for seamen in the U.S. Navy, before going into battle during World War II. You might not need as hearty a breakfast, but if you really want to wake up the flavor of doughnuts, scrambled eggs or omelets — add potatoes. What a warm and nutritious eye-opener potatoes can be on cool mornings!

For Potato Doughnuts and Potato Omelets, begin with the mashed potatoes you served the night before. To prepare Potato-Egg Scramble or Potato Pancakes with Cheese Sauce, buy baking or old potatoes. These potatoes have a higher starch content that makes them light and airy, almost souffle-like in consistency.

POTATO DOUGHNUTS

6 cups flour
7 tsps. baking powder
1 tsp. salt
1 tsp. nutmeg
3 eggs
2 cups sugar
1½ cups warm mashed potatoes
6 tbsps. melted shortening
¾ cup milk

Sift together flour, baking powder, salt and nutmeg. In a separate bowl, beat eggs; then blend in sugar, mashed potatoes and melted shortening. Add dry ingredients and mix only until flour disappears. Chill thoroughly. Place about one-third of the dough at a time on lightly floured surface. Roll dough to ½ inch thickenss. Cut with floured doughnut cutter. Fry until golden brown in deep fat at 375 degrees. Drain on absorbent paper. Makes 4½ to 5 dozen doughnuts.

POTATO OMELET

2 cups mashed potatoes
Minced parsley or sauted chopped onions

For four servings, beat eggs until frothy and add to seasoned mashed potatoes. Drop by spoonfuls into well-greased skillet. Fry slowly, over low heat, until nicely browned. Sprinkle with minced parsley or sauteed chopped onions, and fold each "omelette" in half. Serve immediately.

POTATO-EGG SCRAMBLE

2 bacon slices
2 cups sliced raw potatoes
1 tsp. salt
4 eggs, beaten
¼ cup milk

Cook bacon slices in a fry pan until crisp. Remove from the pan. Then fry thinly sliced raw potatoes in the bacon fat until they are well browned, sprinkling with salt when they start to brown. Cover the pan closely and cook over low heat until potatoes are tender.

Combine 4 beaten eggs with milk, season with pepper, and pour over the frying potatoes in the pan. Cook slowly, stirring occasionally, until eggs are set.

POTATO PANCAKES WITH CHEESE SAUCE

2 cups grated raw potato
¼ cup milk
1 egg, beaten slightly
2 tbsps. flour
1 tbsp. finely chopped onion
1 tsp. salt; pepper

Stir grated potato immediately into milk. Add other ingredients. Drop mixture by spoonfuls into greased frying pan and cook slowly until well browned and crisp on both sides.

MRS. SHIRLEY McKAY

Telephone Operator Likes Variety Of Evening Calls

By JEANNE LIVELY
Family News Staff

Shirley McKay, telephone operator, has been with the same company, Southwestern Bell, for nine years. About half that time she has worked the evening shift.

She loves her job and especially likes working the hours she does.

"There are several reasons why I like to work an evening shift. On this shift if you work past 10:30 p.m. you work only six hours but get paid for eight. I still have two days off, of course," Miss McKay said.

"But the telephone company has always had generous vacation periods for employees, and they even remember to include smaller benefits such as allowing you to call a taxi to go home (and paying for it) if you work past 12."

Miss McKay also likes to work the evening shift because there is more variety. "Daytimes," she said, "there are mostly business calls. Evenings you have such things as emergency calls or other service calls that make you feel like you are helping someone."

Mrs. Dorothy Hudgins, manager of operator services (Miss McKay's supervisor), said that it is not difficult to get people to work the evening shift.

"Mostly," she said, "people who work that shift are those like Shirley who have been with the company several years or others who have even a good deal more of seniority. Some employees presently working the evening shift have as much as 25 years of service with the company.

"There are some employees, however, who like the night shift because they have children at home. That way the husband can stay with them while the wife works."

Mrs. Hudgins added that one young woman presently employed works nights and goes to Texas Tech University during the day in order to complete degree requirements.

When asked if her working hours create any problems regarding social life, Miss McKay said she does have several nights off. "But, if something important comes up, I usually can switch hours with someone," she said.

Is she disturbed by telephone calls before time for her to get up?

Miss McKay said she probably isn't bothered anymore than anyone else.

"You get used to it," she said, "and, of course, most of my friends know when I work and don't call during the times I should be asleep."

March of Dimes Sets Walkathon In Fight Against Birth Defects

Walkers for the March of Dimes Walkathon will meet at the Lubbock State School Chapel parking lot at 8:30 a.m. Saturday for a 20-mile walk to raise funds for the fight against birth defects.

Participants can either walk the 20 miles themselves, or sponsor someone with contribution pledges to do the walking for them. Pledges are received from interested friends, relatives, neighbors and business concerns by the walkers. Sponsor sheets for the event are still available at Lubbock Burger Kings and Seven-Eleven Stores.

The walker who raises the most money will win an all-expense paid weekend in Dallas, courtesy of World Wide Travel and the Lubbock Jaycee-ettes.

The money raised at the Lubbock Walkathon will be used to support the March of Dimes fight against birth defects in the Lubbock area. The money will be used to help with community services such as providing educational materials, supporting two research grants sponsored by the March of Dimes at Texas Tech University School of Medicine; and providing preparental education on pregnancy to pregnant women.

Local Medical Auxiliaries Mark Doctors' Day Friday

On March 30, 1842, Dr. Crawford W. Long, a Georgia physician, first used ether as an anesthetic agent in a surgical operation. In recognition of his discovery, a statue of Long stands in the corridor which leads to the Senate wing of the Capitol in Washington, honoring him for his service to all humankind.

Appropriately, Saturday is also Doctors' Day, and local hospitals and auxiliaries will honor the physicians who work with them.

The red carnation is the symbol of Doctors' Day and traditionally physicians are presented with a flower to wear during the day. Other activities will include special refreshments served at local hospitals, and dinners for the physicians.

One of the groups honoring local doctors will be the Lubbock-Crosby-Garza County Medical Auxiliary.

SPECIAL DAY — Sister Maureen, St. Mary of the Plains Hospital administrator, pins a carnation of the lapel of Dr. Robert Smith, chief of staff. Activities marking Doctor's Day will include special refreshment areas in hospitals and dinners.

CANCER ANSWER LINE

A man in his 50's writes: "Many years ago, during the War, I worked in a Navy shipyard. How do I know if I was exposed to asbestos and what is the danger?"

ANSWERline: Most people who have been exposed to asbestos never develop any of the diseases that have been related to such exposure. However, there is a risk of lung cancer, a chronic lung disease called asbestosis, or mesothelioma — a rare form of cancer. To learn about your own possible Naval shipyard asbestos exposure, write to "Asbestos" National Cancer Institute, Bethesda, Md., 20012 or call this toll-free number: (800) 638-6694. Your local American Cancer Society Unit can answer other questions you may have about the asbestos exposure situation.

A high school student asks: "Why were cigarette commericals taken off television and why are they still being advertised elsewhere?"

ANSWERline: After much debate and pressure for reform, both houses of Congress passed a "Public Health Cigarette Smoking Act," one section of which banned cigarette advertising on radio and television as of Jan. 1, 1971. Since that time, because there are no laws to the contrary, the cigarette industry has concentrated millions of dollars in newspaper, magazine and billboard advertising with a far smaller portion of the advertising budget devoted to special promotions such as sponsorship of sports events. In 1977 the National Commission on Smoking and Public Policy, a group of distinguished community leaders and scientific experts, made several recommendations about advertising in their report to the American Cancer Society. The Commission recommended that the warning on cigarette packages and cartons and in advertising be more explicit and that the Federal Trade Commission require that tar/nicotine and carbon monoxide content be prominently printed on every package. In addition, by voluntary agreement between the cigarette companies and the FTC, all models should be eliminated in advertising, advertising of all brands above a certain tar/nicotine content should be eliminated, and there should be no promotion aimed at people below 19 years of age.

A florist asks: "What is meant by cancer incidence?"

ANSWERline: The term refers to the number of new cases of cancer diagnosed in a population. It is often expressed in terms of cases per 100,000. For example, based on the most recent national survey, cancer incidence in the U.S. is approximately 300. This means that cancer is discovered in approximately 300 out of every 100,000 Americans each year. The actual number of people who will get cancer in this country is expected to be 700,000 new cases in 1978.

Tune In Tomorrow

By JON-MICHAEL REED

ALL MY CHILDREN: Kitty cared for Myrtle at home after Myrtle was briefly hospitalized with heart problems. Erica railed against Mona's plans to join Charles in Rome. Billy and Edna's setup of allowing Estelle to find a drugged Benny in Edna's bed backfired. Estelle and Benny reconciled and she went off to get a divorce from Billy. Wally insisted he wants to raise Bonnie, his and Devon's daughter, and he made kidnapping plans. Problems between Chris and Jeff flared up again and she suggested moving to San Francisco. Phil was promoted to sergeant.

ANOTHER WORLD: Eileen served as a decoy for Alice to trap Olive, who was caught and jailed but not before throwing acid in Eileen's face. Joey and Eileen's aunt and uncle, Paul and Rita, rushed her to the hospital. Susan departed for Boston. Sylvie warned Iris against pushing Ted toward Elena. Janice got Mac to help Willis reactivate Frame Enterprises which angered Gwen. Ada kicked Burt out of her house because of his case for Cory's custody. Dennis believed Elena was falling for Red's act. Rachel ordered Larry to track down Blaine and Jaime, even though Mac insisted Rachel not interfere. Alice blamed herself for John's death and Eileen's injuries.

AS THE WORLD TURNS: Beau and Melinda were married. Bob was surprised to learn that Penny's London friend turned out to be gorgeous Dana Woodward. Tina left town after confessing that she had been out to snare Grant, who, nevertheless, didn't patch things up with Lisa. Grant insisted their marriage won't work because there's no trust. Susan left for a job in Seattle. Joyce found it wearing to tend to wheelchair-bound Don. Ralph realized that Don is on Mary's mind. Kate acted strangely after learning Valerie wants to take her to the farm and Alex fretted the burden is too much for Val.

DAYS OF OUR LIVES: Trish claimed she was near David's apartment when someone tried to molest her. Later, Alice learned that Donna allowed Trish to visit Scott secretly. Bob hired a detective to locate Linda and insituted security checks at the plant when he signed to do a government project. Stephanie stalled being fingerprinted and burned her hand on purpose. Amanda's long-distance marriage to Peter grew strained and she agreed to a date with Neil. Marlena and Don honeymooned. Doug and David told Julie not to interfere with David and Stephanie's relationship.

THE DOCTORS: Carolee held Steve at arms length because of sexual hangups resulting from the rape. M.J. resisted Colin's advances, saying that lovemaking isn't a game. Mona agreed to call off the search for Jason. Sara tried to revive Mike's sexual urges, even though he's confined to a wheelchair. Billy moved out on Greta, who realized she's been living a fantasy.

EDGE OF NIGHT: Witnesses claimed they saw Winter leaving Wade's apartment the night of his murder. She admitted arguing with him but insisted he was alive when she left. Elliott found new employment as Margo's "paid companion," and he found a gun in her purse. Mike caught Diana lying about maneuvering his office secretary. Calvin comforted Star when she feared she'd soon be unemployed.

GENERAL HOSPITAL: Bobbi conned Luke to tip off Laura's parole officer that there was trouble in the Webber family. Lesley agreed to stay with Rick for Laura's sake but they maintained separate beds because of the Monica business. Jeff resurfaced but remained aloof. Heather thought it was because he blamed her for her miscarriage. Edward agreed to help Tracy secure a senatorship for Mitch. Larry Joe got a job thanks to Susan. Howard wined and dined Dory. Rick treated Edward's heart condition.

GUIDING LIGHT: Justin kissed Elizabeth, but she and Mike reconciled and talked marriage. Roger temporarily retrieved Christina from Rita, who was caring for the child, but he was later arrested for raping Holly. Lucille hid the fact from Amanda that she's capable of caring for herself. Ben rescued Amanda from her drunken binge. Mark played "dating games" with Katie. Hillary decided to try to get reinstated at the hospital.

LOVE OF LIFE: Ben got a gig playing guitar and teased Meg about Scott. Dr. Carl Applegate told the Slaters that he had loved Leona Baxter and her child, Bambi, but they had disappeared after being bugged by Richard Brewster. Carrie broke her leg and urged Bambi to tell the police who beat up Bambi. More than a dozen women claimed to know or to be the real Barbara Brewster.

ONE LIFE TO LIVE: Dick Grant played peeping Tom on Pat and Adam. Karen and Larry separated and he figured Dorian was tying to replace him with Dr. Kipling because of Karen's scandalous revelations. Dorian worried about Melinda's sanity when Dorian spotted her drawing "jealous" sketches of Jenny and Peter. Jenny found racetrack tickets in Brad's suit, but he insisted they were Adam's. Katrina feared Talbot would have her killed, but Greg refused to help Talbot escape and he was nabbed. Carla and Ed's marriage went downhill.

RYAN'S HOPE: Mary blamed Siobhan when Jack was beaten unconscious while saving Siobhan from a mugging. Rae brought Nancy and Pat together and they rediscovered their mutual attraction. But Nancy bellyached to Bob about the futility of a future with Pat. Roger operated on Jack. Seneca barred Frank from visiting Jill, who went downhill because of drug dependence.

SEARCH FOR TOMORROW: Laine and Gary met on the sly. Carolyn realized Sharon had lied about Buck. Janet proposed an underground parking lot to resolve the housing problem. Nick took an interest in Lisa's singing. Stephanie feared having a biopsy and prayed John would sympathize after he learned from Tom that Travis had financed the film with Steve's music.

THE YOUNG AND THE RESTLESS: Leslie and the Maestro feared that Vanessa is causing trouble to spite Laurie. Jill planned a trip to New York to investigate artificial insemination possibilities. Nell told Chris not to contact Nell's son. Casey decided to give Nick a chance to prove himself. Van taunted Lucas that Les will dump him someday for Lance. Suzanne slipped Kay more drugs.

COUNT TO TEN

BRUSSELS (WNS) — Employment specialist Catherine Martin, who finds jobs for office workers in European Common Market nations, has reported that many efficient and attractive young women are hard to place because they do not smile freely or don't know how to smile properly. She trains them herself with instructions like these: "Begin with a natural pout, then slowly curve your lips upward while silently counting from one to 10. A bit of a wink at the count of 10 will help seal the deal." And, says Mme. Martin, it usually does.

Jumbo Cookie Pops Are Naturals At Children's Parties

Cookies Double As Dessert, Decoration

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn. (Special) — Party food that obviously has taken extra time to prepare tells guests that you think they are special.

Brightly-decorated Jumbo Cookie Pops are going to take considerably more time and effort than opening a carton of ice cream for dessert. But when you present them in their own little flowerpots as an edible table decoration and dessert, guests from young children to sophisticated adults will remember them long after the party is over.

These Jumbo Cookie Pops are a natural for children's parties. And if you fill the flowerpots they bloom in with nutritious nuts, cereal or raisins for munching, mothers will applaude your good judgment in not loading the kids with sweets.

These edible flowers are equally appropriate at showers and luncheons and they'll be conversation pieces at club events. Teenagers might like to do their own decorating as part of the entertainment.

A good way to shortcut preparaton time is by using refrigerated slice and bake sugar cookie dough. You get 18 jumbo cookies from one roll simply by sandwiching a popsicle or meat stick between two sliced of dough and baking. The dough puffs and spreads just enough to make the 3-inch cookies.

Since the roll of refrigerated dough is a uniform shape, it's easy to get round cookies that are all approximately the same size.

Ready-to-spread frosting, simple decorating equipment and decorating candies and sugars are all the extras you need for your flower decorations. Your cupboard will provide other inspirations like coconut or chocolate chips.

Buy the small three-inch clay or plastic pots for individual servings. A six-inch pot filled with an arrangement of bright cookies makes an attractive centerpiece. Even the cleanest-looking pot should be thoroughly scrubbed before using.

JUMBO COOKIE POPS

18-oz. roll sugar slice n' bake cookies
18 wooden popsicle or meat sticks
Cake and cookie decorators or pastry tube and tips and tinted frosting
Decorator candies, gumdrops, jelly beans, tinted coconut and tinted sugar 18 new 3-inch diameter clay or plastic flowerpots, well scrubbed or lined
Unsweetened cereal, peanuts or raisins

Heat oven to 350 degrees. Slice well chilled dough into 36 slices ¼ inch thick. Place 18 slices on ungreased baking sheets two inches apart. Place end of wooden stick in center of each cookie. Top each with a second cookie slice; press gently. Bake at 350 degrees for 10 to 12 minutes or until light golden brown. Cool one minute; remove from cookie sheet. Cool completely on rack before decorating. Frost or glaze cookies, as desired. Trim with decorator tip and candies or coconut. Fill each flowerpot with a mixture of cereal and peanuts or raisins. Insert cookie pops. Makes 18 cookie pops.

Tips: To make glaze, combine can ready-to-spread frosting with 1/3 cup water. Mix well. Place cookies on a cooling rack over waxed paper. Spoon glaze evenly over cookies. Allow to dry for four hours or overnight.

Eight ounce plastic or paper drink cups can be substituted for the clay or plastic flowerpots.

To use as centerpieces, fill three well-rounded or lined five-inch diameter clay or plastic flowerpots with cereal mixture. Insert 6 cookie pops in each.

Three-inch flowerpots or eight ounce drinking cups hold one cup cereal mixture; five-inch flowerpots hold three cups of cereal mixture.

'Sentry Genes' Combat Cancer

DALLAS (Special) — Existence in humans of "sentry genes" that are nature's protection against cancer cells has been confirmed at the University of Texas Southwestern Medical School.

Dr. Donald J. Capra, professor of microbiology, said in an interview that the preliminary evidence has been gathered "in mice and men" to show that a special group of genes control immunity to cancer. His research was supported by an American Cancer Society grant.

Dr. Capra said his colleagues and other researchers now believe that a "fault or deficiency" in a particular group of recognition genes is responsible for failure of the body to fight off the disease or prevent cancer from starting.

Recent research in this area, he said, indicates that the "sentry genes" are located in the "I region" of the 16th chromosome in man and the 17th chromosome in the mouse.

Lymphocytes (cells active in the immune process) from human spleen tissues and from similar mouse cells are being studied simultaneously. The mouse cells are more dependable for genetic experiments because they are derived from highly inbred strains while human cells are always from a mixed ancestry.

Molecules which stimulate the special cancer immunity are extracted from the spleen cells to discover their structure and function. They are also used to make "anti-sera" which could either block or enhance their activity.

The next step and one that might be decisive in solving the cancer problem is to identify the flaws that occur in the special group of anti-cancer genes.

Designers Predict 'Mini' Return

By SUE ABBOT

LONDON (WNS) — They buried it with full honors in 1970. No one wanted it any more, they said. It was too frivolous for those grim times, and men (well, most of them) as well as women were sick of the sight of it.

Four years later, they were saying it all again. The miniskirt, assassinated by the fashion pundits, simply refused to die. The same thing happened two years later in 1976 when the skirt that leaves virtually nothing to the imagination made yet another comeback in the Paris collections.

And now — watch for it — 1979 could well be the year when the mini, shorter and more daring than ever, sparks off the biggest short-skirt revival since the long-legged look first burst on the fashion world 13 years ago.

Who says so? None other than Mary Quant, pioneer of short skirts back in the swinging '60s, and who relaunches the mini for 1979 with the prophecy: "I'm certain there's going to be a mass return to short skirts. We can all look forward to a terribly sexy summer ..."

Included in Mary's newest fashion collection are mini-bloomers and minis in shiny satins and "provocative" shades like deep purple. Nor is she alone in her prediction that 1979 will be the year of the mini. Halston, one of America's most fashionable designers — he dresses Jackie Onassis and Liza Minnelli, among others — has already announced eight-inch-above-the-knee minis for the coming year.

He's backed by another of America's influential couturiers, Rudi Frenet, who declares: "At least there will be one thing to look forward to in 1979. It's been a hard time for the wolf-whistle brigade since hemlines dropped."

Ever since Quant and Ande Courreges dreamed up the mini in 1965, it's proved the truth of the maxim: what goes up must come down.

From a mere inch above the knee in 1966, it soared to 10 inches in the following two years. It was banned by the Vatican and attacked by everyone from bosses and politicians to road-safety officers.

By 1970, the mini hemline was on its way down. But not for long. Another peak of popularity was followed by yet another slump. By 1974 it was virtually impossible to buy a mini in any major London store and the style was pronounced extinct.

Two years later, it had made yet another miraculous recovery.

It was during the last boom that the mini seemed intent on proving that the thigh's the limit. With skirts reaching 10 inches above the knee, new categories had to be invented.

Said one columnist: "Now there is the mini, the micro-mini, and the 'Hello officer.'"

What do women think of the latest bring-back-the-mini campaign? A recent fashion poll found that 27 percent of girls in the 20 to 24 age group would like the miniskirt back. The percentage dropped to 19 percent in the 25 to 34 age bracket and 2 percent among the over-35s.

Men, on the other hand, can't wait for short skirts to return — nearly 80 percent said they hoped the mini would be back in 1979. The highest level of approval came not from the youngest, but from the 25-to 35-year-olds.

A typical comment came from a 40-year-old father of three, who said: "Hemlines are lower this year than at any time since I started taking an interest in such things! Girls are swathed in warm woollies right down to mid-calf. The long-legged look can't come back soon enough for me."

But not everyone agrees. Pierre Courreges always has maintained that "only girls with beautiful knees should wear a really short skirt and beautiful knees are very rare."

Royal couturier Sir Norman Hartnell is also apprehensive about the return of short skirts: "When the mini was all the rage last time, many girls wore it when they just hadn't the legs for it. I don't think this would happen again. Girls are too discriminating nowadays."

That bible of American fashion, Women's Wear Daily, a devoted force of the miniskirt for more than a decade, is already doing all it can to stop a revival. It has named the latest version "The Skimp," and has remarked that it's reminiscent of the "teenyboppers look" found in the chain stores 10 years ago.

But Mary Quant — whose fashion predictions have a habit of being right — thinks that a new mini boom will be here nonetheless as a reaction against the current trend of hemlines which are lower than at any time for the past 30 years.

CHILI CHEESE

8 oz. pkg. cream cheese, at room temperature
½ tsp. seasoned salt
¼ cup mayonnaise
8-oz. can Italian peeled plum tomatoes
4-oz. can chopped green chilies, drained and liquid pressed out
3 tbsps. minced sweet onion
Tortilla chips

Beat the cheese with the seasoned salt until fluffy; gradually beat in the mayonnaise. Drain tomatoes in a strainer; with a spoon press out liquid and break up the tomatoes — there should be 1/3 cup; stir into the cheese mixture with the chilies and onion. Cover tightly and chill overnight to let stiffen and flavors blend. Serve with the tortilla chips as a spread or dip. Makes about 1½ cups.

Select Chocolate Desserts For Spring Entertaining

Tasty Desserts Tempt Chocolate Lovers

HERSHEY, Pa. (Special) — Mousse, cheesecake or parfait — which to select when planning a special dessert? Anyone of this trio in chocolate will surely rate you raves of approval.

Chocolate mousse is frequently considered the most superb dessert among chocolate lovers. Although there is confusion about what separates a mousse from an ordinary pudding, or a mousse from a cold souffle, this one is a classic. Such a mousse must be light and spongy with a smooth, firm texture. Surprisingly easy to make, it keeps well in the refrigerator several days. Delectable when piped with whipped cream and chocolate curls before serving.

Cheesecake, a favorite dessert among many, becomes an extra taste treat when it's chocolate cheesecake. Made with semi-sweet chocolate, it is interestingly different and a nice flavor comination, especially when garnished with sour cream and cherries or strawberries.

Parfait means perfect — what could be more refreshingly perfect following a springtime luncheon or dinner than mint and chocolate parfait? Melting marshmallows in milk is all the cooking required. If you prefer, flavor with crushed peppermint candy instead of creme de menthe.

Perfect for parties. All three desserts can and should be made well in advance and kept waiting in the refrigerator for friends and guests.

CHOCOLATE MOUSSE

½ cup butter
1 cup (6 oz.) semi-sweet chocolate chips or mini chips
1 tsp. vanilla or 1 tbsp. rum
4 egg yolks
¼ cup sugar
3 tbsps. water
4 egg whites
¼ tsp. cream of tartar
2 tbsps. sugar

Melt butter in small saucepan; remove from heat. Add chocolate chips, vanilla or rum; stir until melted. Set aside to cool.

Beat egg yolks in small mixer bowl until thick and lemon-colored. Heat sugar and water in small saucepan until mixture boils rapidly. Remove from heat; immediately pour hot mixture in thin stream into egg yolks beating constantly. Place bowl in pan with almost boiling water. Continue beating five minutes or until doubled in volume. Remove from hot water. Fold chocolate into egg yolk mixture; chill 20 minutes. Beat egg whites with cream of tartar in small bowl until foamy; gradually beat in two tablespoons sugar. Beat until stiff peaks are formed. Fold whites into chocolate mixture; spoon into one-quart serving bowl or individual dessert dishes. Refrigerate several hours or preferably overnight. Garnish just before serving with sweetened whipped cream and chocolate curls, if desired. Makes eight to ten servings.

CHOCOLATE CHEESECAKE

Crumb Crust:
1 cup (6 oz.) semi-sweet chocolate chips or mini chips
3 pkgs. (8 oz.) cream cheese, room temperature
1 cup sugar
3 eggs
½ cup dairy sour cream
3 tbsps. all-purpose flour
2 tsps. vanilla
½ cup dairy sour cream, optional
Cherry pie filling or sweetened strawberries, optional

Prepare Crumb Crust: refrigerate.

Melt chocolate chips in top of double boiler over hot water. Set aside. Beat cream cheese and sugar in large mixer bowl until smooth and creamy. Blend in eggs. Gradually pour chocolate mixture beating on low speed until well blended. Add ½ cup sour cream, flour and vanilla; blend until smooth. Pour into prepared crust; bake at 350 degrees for 55 to 60 minutes or until filling is firm. Turn oven off; cool cheesecake one hour without opening door. Cool completely. Chill several hours or overnight.

Garnish just before serving with sweetened sour cream made by combining one tablespoon sugar with ½ cup dairy sour cream. Top with cherry pie filling or sweetened strawberries. Makes 12 to 14 servings.

Crumb Crust:
2 cups graham cracker or vanilla wafer crumbs
2 tbsps. sugar
1/3 cup butter or margarine, melted

Combine crumbs, sugar and butter; press mixture into bottom and two inches up side of a nine-inch springform pan.

CHOCOLATE MINT PARFAITS

3 cups minature or 30 large marshmallows
½ cup milk
1 cup semi-sweet chocolate chips or mini chips
¼ cup heavy cream
2 tbsps. creme de menthe or ½ tsp. mint extract plus 2 drops green food color

Combine marshmallows and milk in saucepan; place over low heat and stir until marshmallows are melted and mixture is smooth.

Add chocolate chips and confectioners' sugar to the remaining marshmallow mixture; return to low heat and stir until chips are melted. Remove from heat; cool to room temperature.

Fold remaining whipped cream into chocolate mixture.

Alternately spoon chocolate and mint mixtures into parfait glasses. Chill thoroughly or freeze. Garnish with candy mint leaves, if desired. Makes five to six servings.

Peppermint Variation: Substitute two tablespoons crushed peppermint candy; add one or two drops red food color, if desired.

Working Mothers: Topic Of Book

By JOY STILLEY
AP Newsfeatures Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Working women whose other roles include those of mother, wife and housekeeper need all the help they can get, believes Barbara Kaye Greenleaf, a working mother herself who has set out to give other women that help.

The number of U.S. working mothers with children under age 18 is approaching 16 million, and 40 percent of women with children under the age of 6 are working, says Mrs. Greenleaf, who with pediatrician Dr. Lewis Schaffer has just written a book, "HELP: A Handbook for Working Mothers."

"Unfortunately, when a woman sets off to work she doesn't exchange the office for the home; she adds the office to the home and is chronically fatigued," she said in an interview.

"That leaves her cranky and impatient with her kids at night. But it's the mother who suffers most, since studies show the child is not short-changed when the mother works."

There are advantages as well as disadvantages for the family in which the mother works, she points out. One major gain is that the salary the mother brings into the house can lift the family above the poverty level, reducing tension caused by lack of money.

"The children get a sense of independence and kids who have working mothers have a less stereotyped view of what a mother is," Mrs. Greenleaf adds. "There is a correlation between a mother's mental health and her children's mental health, and their chances of being on an even emotional keel are improved when the mother has self-esteem and feelings of satisfaction stemming from her job."

To lessen the impact of a mother's going back to work, Mrs. Greenleaf advises that children be carefully briefed in advance, "being as complete and definite as you can within the limits of the child's understanding. The younger the child, the closer to the event you tell him or her.

"I would include the kids in the celebration of getting a job," she says. "Take them on a tour of the new premises if possible; show them where you'll be sitting so they visualize where you are; tell them the arrangements made for their welfare. Be as positive and upbeat as possible — children take their cues from their mother."

She suggests preparing for possible illness of the child: get the medicine cabinet stocked; have a good rapport with your doctor; leave a notarized letter authorizing any necessary treatment; have a list of specially qualified sitters, such as unemployed teachers, or know schedules of relatives who can be relied on in an emergency. Sometimes, she notes, women save up their vacation days so they can stay home.

In the area of housework, a woman has to make a tradeoff, buying precious leisure for the price of her home's not meeting previous standards, says Mrs. Greenleaf, who conducts seminars for women employees in business and government on how to cope with a family and a job.

"Despite all the publicity about how fathers are pitching in, the mother is still the psychological parent and psychological housekeeper," she says. "It's assumed the house and kids are her responsibility even though younger fathers seem to be taking more of a hand with the kids.

"I consider us the interim generation," she says. "Our mothers did not expect to work; our daughters expect to work and not to suffer for it; we work but expect to pay a high price."

She believes in a "fair but firm" stand on help from the husband. To achieve this, she suggests making a list of the wife's chores — "for which she'll probably need a scroll from a California redwood" — and a list of the husband's chores — "for which she'll probably need only a gum wrapper."

"Ask him to compare the lists and maybe he'll take some over," she says.

In any case, her rules for organizing the household include: throw out 20 percent of everything; put items near where they are used; leave as much out in view as you can stand; make a permanent place for things and return them there so you'll know where they are; experiment with schedules and systems.

Mrs. Greenleaf carries a little black looseleaf notebook, with sections labeled for appointments, a daily to-do list, notes concerning husband and children, work and food. "This is my bible, my liaison between office and home," she says.

Mrs. Greenleaf, who is in her early 30s, lives in Armonk, N.Y., with daughters aged 6 and 10 and her husband, an advertising executive, who "is a terrific baby sitter, does the marketing, sews on buttons, bakes cakes and pitches in wherever needed."

Meat Selection Saves Money

See if this will save you money. Next time you are at the meat counter, compare the price of the full round with that of each individual cut of the top round, bottom round and eye-of-round.

The full round contains three muscles which vary in tenderness, says the U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA). If you buy the full round, you can cut it into the three muscular sections yourself. Allow about 6 to 8 ounces per person.

The top round or inside round is the tenderest of the three muscles, says USDA's Food Safety and Quality Service. The bottom round is not as tender but can be cooked with moist heat in all grades. It is often sold with the eye-of-round attached.

Communications Skills Workshop Scheduled By Tech For Singles

By BEVERLY O'BRIANT
Family News Staff

Society is becoming increasingly aware of the needs of its members. Parenting classes, group therapy, sex therapy, Marriage Encounter, Youth Effectiveness Training, and Couple Communications — all help people cope with life in some specific way. The Texas Tech Counseling Center and the department of home and family life at Texas Tech University are focusing their attention upon another group of people — single women.

A 12-hour communication skills training program will begin April 9 for Lubbock area widowed, divorced and not-yet-married women, according to Dr. Arthur Avery of the department of home and family life. One evening a week for four weeks, participants will attend three-hour sessions whose membership is composed of other single women.

The program will provide training in building self-esteem, developing awareness in relationships and communicating more effectively. Participants are requested to join the class with a single female friend. Not only will the class encourage the further development of that friendship, but the partner will provide someone with whom to practice skills learned outside of class.

According to Debi Hegi, coordinator of the program, single women do not have the support systems automatically provided by marriage. It is important, she said, that single women have a network of friends (both male and female) to provide the needed support system. This system is critical in establishing life satisfaction and a good adjustment level for single women.

The class is designed to be a community intervention program. In other words, if skills are provided before problems arise, that person can cope much more easily. It is also an attempt to broaden the services provided for citizens. Miss Hegi explains that social scientists have become more interested in the needs of single women. "Lubbock has a big population of single women," she noted. Much of the communications skills training has been devoted to couples. A new focus is sought as people are becoming aware of relationships and their importance, Miss Hegi said.

The skills learned in the communication skills training program enhance the relationship of the partners, but they are also valuable in general communication. The same skills can be used in other relationships, whether with dating partners, children, parents or employees/employers. According to reports from the department of home and family life, single women have the task of independently developing meaningful relationships. This program is designed to help implement that process.

The five trained staff members will be able to work with about 70 people. The format of the program will be a group conceptual presentation, followed by a breakdown into small groups for practice. The staff will "present new information, demonstrate skills and give participants feedback as they practice the skills with their partner," Miss Hegi said.

All interested women may register by calling Miss Hegi at 792-6948. The registration deadline is April 2.

Calling All Homemakers

By SYD MOORE, A.S.I.D.

Have you seen the new chairs that swivel, rock or recline to many positions. They're better made and more attractive than ever before.

One way to figure the value of furniture is to estimate how many years it will reasonably last and then divide the number of years into the price to get the cost per year. Many people find good furniture costs less per year.

One of the major trends has been the increasing popularity of bigger beds. People have found that they are simply more comfortable in a bigger bed.

Here's a tip: If you want to use a group of pictures, and you aren't sure exactly how to arrange them, you can avoid putting unnecessary nail holes in the wall while you're deciding which picture should go where. Cut pieces of paper the same size as the pictures and place them on the wall with masking tape in the arrangements you are considering. You can move them around till you settle on a final arrangement.

Underweight Newborns Suffer More Developmental Problems

By TED BERLAND

HOUSTON (WNS) — Skinny newborn babies are starting life with one strike against them, according to a 16-year study at Baylor College of Medicine in Waco, Texas.

A pediatrician, Dr. Reba M. Hill of Houston, has followed the progress of 46 children from the day they were born. They have been given just about every known test to assess their physical and mental development. All of the children were born into middle-class homes. Their mothers had gained proper amounts of weight during pregnancy.

But 33 of the children have had development problems, and 13 have not. Dr. Hill has pinpointed the difference: how skinny or fat they were at birth.

The problem-children were not underweight at birth. But they looked as though they were undernourished, "like little old people," in her terms. Their flesh hung loose on their bones. They were wrinkled. By contrast, the well-nourished babies were plump and full.

While the plump babies had few medical problems, the skinny babies had frequent incidences of congenital heart disease, were more jittery and irritable. They sucked weakly at bottle or breast, they vomited easily, their breathing was shallow.

With proper feeding, the skinny infants became plump babies, but they continued to have more problems than the babies who had been born plump. They had greater incidences of dental problems, crossed eyes, hyperactivity, seizures, tremors.

As they grew into childhood, their motor skills were never on a par with the other group of children. Nor were they as smart. In fact, Dr. Hill reported to a meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, even at the age of 14 years the children born skinny scored 10 to 20 points lower on IQ tests than the babies who were born plump.

In reviewing her records Dr. Hill found a few significant differences between the mothers of the two groups of children More mothers of skinny newborns smoked regularly, drank alcoholic beverage occasionally, and had high blood pressure than the other mothers. Also, the average weight gain during pregnancy of mothers with skinny babies was 22 pounds, while the other group of mothers gained 28 pounds on the average.

Dr. Hill believes her study highlights the importance of adequate nutrition during pregnancy. And that does not mean diet alone. How much nutrition the unborn baby receives depends greatly on the health of its mother. High blood pressure, for instance, can cut back the amount of nutrients the baby receives, just as certainly as if the mother were on a strict weigh-reducing diet.

Other infant studies, made at the University of Washington, also point up the effects of alcohol on the development of unborn babies. Psychiatrist Ann P. Steissuth has found that babies born to alcoholic mothers are more likely to have learning problems and lower IQs later in life. Also, alcoholic mothers have a higher-than-normal incidence of mentally retarded children.

Psychiatrist Sharon Landesman-Dwyer found that mothers who were social drinkers — that is, had about two drinks a day — also had higher a incidence of small babies who were more likely to have learning and coordination problems.

Drs. Hill, Streissguth, and Landesman-Dwyer all agreed that if they were pregnant now, they would not drink, smoke, or take drugs, and would eat a well-rounded diet free of junk foods enabling them to gain up to 35 pounds during those critical nine months.

Funds raised from the performance will benefit the Institute of Logopedics in Wichita, Kan. "Speech Town," as it is often called, is dedicated to the problem of speech handicaps (cerebral palsy, aphasia, cleft palate and stuttering). Funds also go toward the group's traveling expenses.

The Singing Plainsmen's Chapter, organized Aug. 2, 1945 was the first chapter in Texas. Original members were O.R. Cole, Elmer Campbell, Harry Delaney, J. Ray Dickey, L.C. Ellis, Raymond Hamilton, Jack M. Hall, Russell S. Hardin, Marshal Harvey, George A. Meiser, Bert Pinson, C.W. Ratliff, R.S. Robertson and Cecil L. Williamson.

Grandparents Lobby For Visitation Rights

By LILLIAN G. GENN

NEW YORK (WNS) — What happens to grandparents when a family divorces? Is visitation a privilege or a right? This question is wrinkling the brows of family experts and legislators.

Groups of "Grandparents Anonymous" are springing up to lobby for a visitation rights bill, and some states have already enacted such a statue. The new laws have made divorced parents anxious. Who wants ex-grandparents around?

But the problem is broader than admitted. Some families that do not break up have, more or less, banished grandparents. Isolated from the core of the family, they are rarely in contact with their grandchildren. This split has caused family antagonism that sometimes leads to tragedy.

Time was when grandparents were figures of authority with great veto power in the family. Insidious myths were created that still leave a residue of ill-will.

But today's grandparents are a different breed. They are involved with other activities and are not apt to be meddlers or monsters. Stripped of authority, they know their place.

Why the astigmatism of our young parents? Generally they know everything there is to know about everything, yet seem ignorant about the importance of family kinship. A common refrain is, "I married my husband, but not his family."

Nevertheless, family connection have a strong influence on all members of the family. Their past is part of their present. It is a natural heritage, a link in the chain of family history.

Grandparents should be regarded as a valuable resource in the family clan, especially when the home breaks up. If the mother works or is "doing her own thing," if the father has a succession of "girl friends" or remarries, the child feels abandoned. He loses trust and confidence. Nearly 10 million children are thus disenfranchised from love.

Psychologist-anthropologist Dr. Ronald P. Rohner, who has made a worldwide study of the behavior patterns of parents and children, report in his book, "Love Me, Love Me Not," that the loss of emotional support can have a more profound effect on children than many social scientists believe. Family is the place where rejection and conflict hurt most. Where grandparents are present, the children are likely to be reared in a warmer, more loving atmosphere.

"The family ties should not be dissolved," he says.

Liz Smith who authored "The Mother Book," (Doubleday) a lively, entertaining opus concerning mothers, motherhood and maternity, has this to say:

"When families had to stay together for survival with several generations in one house or neighborhood, and when the only baby-sitter was a grandparent, childhood experience was indescribably rich. The situation of live-in grandparents had and has its drawbacks, to be sure, but I believe it was better than the current trend toward isolation, despair, loneliness, and abandonment of the aged and the cutting off of children from their rightful relationship with a removed generation that has so much to teach."

Anthropologist Margaret Mead, a grandmother herself, wrote in her autobiography, "Blackberry Winter," that one of the great advantages she had in her childhood was that her grandmother lived in her home, and that she had her grandmother as a teacher until high school.

Her grandmother, she wrote, "opened the windows of the world to me. Whatever knowledge I had was because of my background. I grew up well ahead of my time. The older generation has lived through change, and the young need to know about it. Our grandchildren don't have this perspective.

"It is wrong for grandparents to keep themselves out of the picture, not to interfere, not to spoil, not to insist, not to intrude ... and (for us to) expect them to go and live apart."

Dr. Charles W. Shedd, minister, educator, family counselor, and author of "Then God Created Grandparents, and It Was Very Good" (Doubleday), when asked the question, "What need for grandparents?" replied:

"They help the child to wonder! Most fathers and mothers are too busy. Could be the Lord made grandparents for total focus.

"Grandparents are for having fun with. That's the way to keep children out of mischief. They need fun that is sort of 'protective therapy.' Sometimes it spells trips together or a family session, or sometimes it is good shared, or supportive communication. Spell it many ways, but spell it 'grandpa,' 'grandma.'"

Real To Reel

By William D. Kerns

Slipping his shoes off and asking a theater employee to bring him a beer, Bob Shane, the sole remaining original member of the Kingston Trio relaxed in an upstairs office at the Country Squire Dinner Theater and reflected on a legendary past and hopeful future. His current version of the trio, really the fourth version since three rather naive college kids strapped on guitars and adopted the name back in 1957, had just finished bringing a sellout crowd to its feet with a concert barrage of traditional and contemporary good-time songs.

Guitar rhythm and vocal harmony still provided the foundation (and lewd jokes the insulation) but, even now, Shane shuns the obvious label of folk music. "That labeling stuff was pure junk from the very beginning," he said. "We were calypso-oriented at the start; that's why we took the name Kingston. But they called us folk. Now if you looked at this country's real folk singers at that time, guys like Burl Ives, you could see how silly all this was. Even so, since the critics called us folk, our success opened a lot of doors for folk music back then."

Indeed, Shane, a self-described "crazy Hawaiian" who appears to refuse to take his status seriously, is nevertheless very much aware of his part in musical history.

BOB SHANE
Keeping The Kingston Trio very much alive

The original Kingston Trio — Shane, Dave Guard and Nick Reynolds — not only enjoyed the success of seven gold albums, but also created a new trend in widescale concert touring. They left an influence on the music business. And they left an impression on their fans, through memorable diversions like "MTA," "Greenback Dollar," "Scotch And Soda" and, of course, their biggest hit "Tom Dooley." But not even success can bind the gaps of professional differences or hold back time, and the trio thus experienced quite a few transitions.

The first came in 1961 when Guard left the trio. Shane recalled the time with, "Dave and me were real good friends; we were both raised in Hawaii and were both real crazy. A couple of walking qualudes. But Dave started becoming engrossed in doing new things with music. He was more interested in music theory than I was. Nick and I realized that our success was based on just having a good time on stage and sharing that with the audience. But that wasn't enough for Dave, and we fought about it.

"Finally, we paid him $300,000 to buy him out, to just get him off our backs, and that was a lot of money in those days. Then, in 1976 he started pestering me with the idea of a reunion. I guess he'd flopped at whatever he was trying to do. But I still didn't like his attitude."

Guard was replaced in '61 by John Stewart, a marvelous composer who had already sat in with the trio a few times and written such pretty tunes as "Chilly Winds." But by the mid-1960s the trio's label, Capitol Records, had a hot new act called The Beatles. There was a shift in musical interest and the label eased off on promotion for the Kingston Trio. So the band jumped ship to the Decca label.

Even this didn't provide salvation, though, and the trio finally disbanded in disappointment in 1967. Shane then kept his foot in the door at Decca, trying for solo success. He might have made it, too, with a little promotion. Lord knows he had the material.

"Oh, you wouldn't believe the songs I had," he remembered. "In 1968, Bobby Russell wrote a song especially for me called 'Honey.' I knew it would be a million dollar hit, but Decca didn't promote it. Believe it or not, the label still thought we'd screwed them by disbanding the trio. "Anyway, Bobby Goldsboro finally comes along and records 'Honey' and you know how big it was.

"But Decca still didn't learn, because I was also the first one offered a song called 'Little Green Apples.' The same thing happened all over again."

So in 1971 Shane put together a band and called it The New Kingston Trio; that new idea got old real fast, thanks to personality conflicts, and soon disbanded. But Shane was not through. Asked why he didn't just quit, he snapped, "Well, I've got five kids in school." That answer surely would have satisfied most as reason enough, but he soon added, "And show business is just that: a business. I'd been in it a long time. You don't just up and leave without missing it."

Driven by memories of what had been and confidence in what could be, Shane brought Roger Gamble back from the 1971 group and found George Grove and —voila! — another Kingston Trio was born in 1976. And judging by the professionalism displayed during the Lubbock concert, as well as the crowd response, it would appear Shane has finally re-located his winning combination.

His opinion?

"We're much better now than we ever were before. Even the older fans who really love the classic Kingston Trio songs come up and tell us we're better now."

For the moment, the trio is busy playing dinner theaters and major clubs. One reason, says Shane, is the fact both the trio and dinner theaters are most popular among people aged 33 to 44. (Grove expands their listening audience to those between 30 and 50.) Another is that dinner theaters can range from, say, the 344 capacity at the Country Squire to giant buildings providing dinner and show to well over 1,000 people each night.

The younger set also often find themselves attracted to the music, usually thanks to their parents. As Shane explained it, "We do play in front of a lot of kids, because parents will take their kids along and tell them 'This is the kind of music we dug when we went to school.' So why don't we still play college campuses? Because we're too hip for them. Heck, we were the aware college kids. Where were today's college kids back during the Haight Ashbury Days?"

But the younger audience may be reached again when The Kingston Trio releases its newest album called "Aspen Gold" in late April. Recorded on the Nautilus label, one which Shane applauds as being extremely technically advanced, it is the first LP provided by the trio since the late '60s. The album will consist of new tunes like the title song and "The Longest Beer Of The Night," but will also include quite a few oldies.

What! Old songs on the new album? But wasn't the trio's disdain for having to perform old material one of the reasons for the 1967 split?

"Well," explained Shane, "I don't mind playing the old songs now because they sound new. We've beefed them up with added instrumentation. (The trio travels

By KIM COBB
Avalanche-Journal Staff

Norma Klein sits with one leg tucked under herself, a rain-spattered window serving as a backdrop. She's in Lubbock, she says, to drop off some work for exhibit and sale at a local art gallery.

But you get the impression she's here just for kicks.

Granted, the New Mexico painter's work is currently on sale at the Lubbock Lights. And this is, after all, a business proposition. But she likes talking about what she does and that's an excuse to stay a little longer.

Working chiefly with watercolors, Mrs. Klein is noted for her paintings of household interiors. Some of the rooms include people or pets — others are empty. But according to Mrs. Klein, a room by itself is still an eyefull.

She compares people's homes with bird nests, saying it's as easy to tell a person's characteristics from their living quarters as it is to tell a bird from its nest.

"It's hard to find people who really know how to live," she stressed in a recent interview. Most of us are content to move in with somebody else's furniture and belongings, she said.

She took the analogy a step further, comparing people to cowbirds, who are notorious for moving into other birds' nests, being too lazy to build their own.

She describes her painting style as "sophisticated primitive," a term which suits her method of painting from a perspective which suits her — not reality.

Looking at her work, you get the feeling that she was afraid to leave anything out. She admitted to feeling guilt at not including every detail of a room's appearance when she first started painting in 1971. With time, she has come to believe that including only objects which reflect something are necessary to the painting.

She explains her primitive perspective, saying if she can't see everything on, say, the label of a can of beans, she will walk over to the beans, read the label, and sit back down to paint the label word for word. It doesn't matter that the label can't be read from where she is sitting (and painting).

Painting in such detail can get tiresome, she admitted, leading her to paint smaller, less detailed "fun" work. Most of these include animals engaged in some form of activity such as dancing, eating or fighting. These animal scenes usually end up as a reflection of human foibles.

During the past year or so, Mrs. Klein has started doing what she hesitantly calls "psychological" paintings. In describing these, she compared them to the Grimm's Fairy Tales she shivered about as a child.

For example, she described another of her interior studies, which includes a little girl sitting huddled under the covers in a large bed. The room is dark and she stares with saucered eyes at a little dog in the corner of the room, the bedclothes tucked under her chin.

But at closer examination, the dog is not a dog, but a hyena.

Mrs. Klein grinned as she described the scene, saying that many of her painting parallel experiences we've all had. The little girl and the hyena seems to typify everyone's experiences with "things that go bump in the night."

"And at the moment of awakening, you know it's a hyena," Mrs. Klein said.

Having no formal art training, Mrs. Klein stumbled into painting by way of some donated mat-board. When a friend gave her several pieces of white cardboard which had been used to mount photographs, she couldn't bring herself to waste all that white space.

Her first effort at painting was to reproduce her husband sitting at the dinner table — food scraps and all. She was pleased with the results but didn't actually start selling her work until about a year later.

She thinks the only drawback to her work is that people don't think it's serious enough. But she thinks her pieces are fun and wants others to enjoy them too.

"I'm having more fun," she admitted. "I know I've got it good — I'm no fool."

She would like to show her work on a wider basis. Her paintings are exhibited in New Mexico, Dallas and Lubbock and she'd like to try for Houston.

She grins when she says she has been told her work would go over well in Chicago since, "They're slightly warped up there.

More Stars Signed To Help End World

The five stars will join Paul Newman, Jacqueline Bisset and William Hoden in the Warner Bros. release now before the cameras on location on the Kona Coast on the island of Hawaii.

In the adventure drama, Albert, son of actor Eddie Albert, plays the role of a resort manager; Buttons portray an embezzler pursued by a New York detective to a South Seas island; Carrera will be seen in the role of an island-born beauty loved by two men; Karras plays an oil wildcatter and foreman to Paul Newman, and Meredith has been cast as a former circus tightrope walker.

Ex-Beatle George Harrison More Commercial On New Album

By DOUG PULLEN
A-J Rock Correspondent

Rock music sure is easier to make than it used to be. Build a studio, pay a competent man an adequate salary to flip the right switches and turn the right knobs and — voila — commercial sound.

George Harrison didn't do exactly that with his new album: "George Harrison" (Dark Horse). But the former Beatle already is being charged by some people with producing an overly slick, unimaginative and lifeless album.

"George Harrison" is his first album release in more than a year. Harrison's last album was insipidly boring, and was called "33 1/3." The album's title and release marked Harrison's age at the time in a less than devastating manner. The new album is reminiscent of its predecessor in that Harrison places heavy emphasis on his light, delicate melodies. His voice is equally fragile and his guitar playing just as brilliantly restrained.

What separates the new album from its predecessor is the care and intelligence with which the new album was recorded. Sure, it reeks of commercial excesses — "Faster" and "Here Comes the Moon" are prime examples. But Harrison doesn't smother his new album with bad taste or pseudo-sophistication. Perhaps that's why he chose such a simple title to convey the album's content.

The music contained on "George Harrison" is the most straightforward the guitarist has recorded in years. Harrison cut the album in a home studio, backed more than adequately by the likes of Steyie Winwood, Willie Weeks and Andy Newmark. Eric Clapton contributes a lick during the introduction of the album's first song, "Love Comes to Everyone."

Lyrically, Harrison avoids his past attempts at preaching his religious beliefs. Like the music, Harrison's messages are more implied than actually stated. His songs divide into two typical categories: narratives and gently worded advisories. He has nothing negative to say, and his positive thoughts aren't stated overbearingly.

Finding a particularly outstanding song is difficult: all of the album's 10 songs flow smoothly into one another. Each seems to fit as curiously proper as the pieces of a jigsaw puzzle.

But Harrison doesn't approach the album as if no challenge came with it. "George Harrison" must have been a difficult project simply for its attention to minor details and its concentrated subtly. There isn't a fast song on the album, a fact which should disgruntle Beatle fans who still expect Harrison and the other former Beatles to put out Beatles music, although the band dissolved nearly a decade ago.

In a time when rock 'n' roll is thriving amidst a rejuvenated recording climate and dense creative competition, George Harrison doesn't choose to sit back and sing what might make him as popular as the oft-repeated tripe we hear on today's popular radio airwaves. Instead, he chooses to sit back and sing about the experiences that have shaped his languid existence for the past couple of years (one song, though, was written back in 1968). He probably wouldn't have it any other way.

That's George Harrison. And that's probably why he choose to make and name a record as simple as his newest one.

LINER NOTES. George Harrison: guitars, bass and lead vocals. Willie Weeks: bass. Andy Newmark: drums. Stevie Winwood: keyboards. Neil Larsen: keyboards. Gary Wright: keyboard. Produced by George Harrison and Russ Titelman.

The Lubbock Symphony Orchestra will be featured in concert at 8:15 p.m. Monday and Tuesday at the Civic Center theater. Guest artists are Gail Barber, harp, and David Hickman, trumpet, both faculty members with the Texas Tech University music department. Call the symphony office for ticket details.

Both artists have toured extensively as soloists with orchestras in the United States and Mexico.

Hickman is a professor of trumpet and has performed with the Denver Symphony, Wichita Symphony, National Repertory Orchestra and Brevard Music Center Orchestra. He has toured extensively as a recitalist and has released several solo albums. He published the texts for "The Piccolo Trumpet" and "Contemporary Trumpet Studies."

Hickman received music degrees from the University of Colorado and Wichita State University and, in addition, has studied briefly with Maurice Andre, Adolph Herseth, Roger Voisin and Armando Ghitalla. His many awards include the coveted Music Teachers' National Association solo competition, Naftzger Young Artist Award and the C.D. Jackson Prize from the Tanglewood Music Festival.

In July, 1977, Hickman was selected by "Musical America" as one of the 10 most successful new solo artists in the United States and was the only wind player so honored. He has served on the board of directors of the International Trumpet Guild, and has toured as soloist with the Illinois Symphonic Band. He also performed as a faculty artist at the National Trumpet Symposium and International Trumpet Guild Conference.

Gail Barber made her musical debut as a pianist at the Palacio de Bellas Artes in Mexico City at the age of 13. She first saw a harp when she entered Baylor University planning to major in chemistry or math. She became entranced with the instrument, started lessons and, 15 months later, was admitted to the Eastman School of Music as a sophomore harp major. The following season she won an audition to perform with the Rochester Philharmonic and Eastman Rochester Orchestras, and later that season was awarded the performer's certificate in harp.

She toured extensively as a soloist with the Chicago Little Symphony and has been featured with the Peninsula Festival Orchestra and symphonies in Lubbock, Midland-Odessa and Roswell.

A member of the board of directors of the American Harp Society, she has served as editor of "The American Harp Journal" since 1971. Her compositions and transcriptions for harp and harp ensemble are recognized internationally. "Windmill Sketches," original compositions for harp related to the history of the Southwest, have been included in the repertoire lists for both the American Harp Society National Competitions and the National Federation of Music Clubs.

Miss Barber will be guest of honor at the International Harp Contest in Israel in September.

Roger N. Titus and Mickye Adams have been cast in the lead roles in the Lubbock Theatre Centre production of Arthur Sumner Long's "Never Too Late," slated to be staged April 13-14 and 20-21.

The comedy details the hilarious upheavals which arrive when an elderly couple find they are to expect another baby. Titus is cast as the 60ish husband devastated by the news he will no longer enjoy peace and quiet in his home. Miss Adams is the middle-aged wife who regards the new situation joyously, though she has difficulty getting her crotchety husband adjusted.

PANCHO RIDES IN — Clifford Ashby's musical production of "Pancho!" will be staged at 8:15 p.m. April 6-11 at the Texas Tech University Theater. Reservations and ticket information are available by calling the University Theater box office. Playwright-director Ashby indicates his play is recommended for mature audiences due to rough language. In the scene at left, Pancho Villa (Terry Marrs) tells camp woman Vicki Wooldrige of his robbery of a Spaniard. Miss Wooldrige is featured in the center photo in a scene after the Battle of Prieta, where she kneels before a stricken comrade. And in the photo at right, Villa draws his pistol after soldier Sam Cornelius has been wounded in battle. (Staff Photos by Gary Davis)

'Pancho' To Be Staged At Tech

"Pancho!", an original musical play written and directed by Clifford Ashby, will be staged at the Texas Tech University Theater at 8:15 p.m. April 6-11.

Four years in the writing, the play represents a lightly-serious look at the life of Mexican revolutionary Pancho Villa. Villa is shown as a Mexican "Robin Hood," born very poor and learning to rob and kill for survival and excitement. He becomes a colorful figure in the revolution through his attempts to initiate land-ownership reform — with a little help from his friend, God.

Ashby takes a broad look at the revolutionary process, showing the United States as a villainous meddler whose only interests are its huge land holdings and exploitation of Mexico.

The role of Pancho has been filled by Terry Marrs, the only person in the cast who appears in only one role. The other 34 cast members perform multiple roles, sometimes running off stage, changing costumes and running back on stage as a different character.

The play has eight songs and six dances. Stick horses even have their moments on stage. Because the language is "rough" in places and scenes are "strong and realistic," the show is recommended by the author for only mature audiences.

Concerning historical dramas, Ashby said, "Once history is put on the stage, it isn't necessarily true anymore. The play is an attempt to put impressions on stage."

As a result, he has taken "poetic license" with the factual background surrounding the story. However, the events portrayed prove to be accurate historically, and the "license" that he takes is authenticated throughout the play by use of slides and films showing realistic scenes from Pancho's life and death. Ashby identifies his playwriting tools as music, dancing, sex and the macho mentality.

Reservations may be made by calling the University Theater box office.

The structure of the California event will insure even greater control, comfort and freedom of movement around the Coliseum and adjacent Sports Arena.

Tickets will be limited to 80,000 people for each of the two 12-hour days. Advance ticket sales have been set at $15 per day or $25 for a two-day combination ticket. All tickets will ensure access to all concert and auxiliary entertainments. Limited day of show tickets will be $20 each.

The line-up for April 7 headlines Ted Nugent and Cheap Trick and also features: The Fabulous Poodles, Mahogany Rush, Toto, REO Speedwagon, The Outlaws and Cheech and Chong.

Aerosmith and Van Halen head up the April 8 show which also includes: Mother's Finest, AC/DC, Toto, Eddie Money, UFO, Cheech and Chong and Brownsville Station.

Auxiliary entertainments on the gound will run on a continuous basis for the entire two days. A Rock and Roll Midway, organized by R.G. Canning Productions, Inc., comprised of music-oriented rides, thrill attractions, games and prizes will be featured in addition to "The World's Biggest Rock'N'Roll Supermarket" featuring everything from belt buckles to rock-underwear. R.G. Canning is also handling booth space for the auxiliary events.

The Sports Arena will also house a giant record store and a special stereo display featuring the latest in new equipment. There will be a gaint food fair featuring booths with specialized ethnic delicacies and exotic treats of all kinds. A special skateboard show and demonstration will provide another unique diversion from the music; and for those with a penchant for more commercial pursuits, a swap meet will be set up to buy or sell merchandise.

The "World's Largest Movie Theatre" will be set up within the Sports Arena, enabling 8,000 people at a time to view feature films. And as a prelude to the whole event, a "Battle of the Bands" contest will be held the night before in the Sports Arena featuring the winners of local competitions statewide. The winner of the finals will open the California World Music Festival the next day.

Each evening will feature an extravagant laser show and will conclude with a giant fireworks display.

Wolf and Rissmiller, the promoters of the California World Music Festival, are insuring special medical and health facilities and have obtained full cooperation from the Los Angeles Police Department. Security is being handled by Contemporary Services.

Food and beverages will be available and easily accessible to all attending. It promises to be one of the most controlled and well-run rock music events ever staged.

Tickets are available by mail; a money order payable to California World Music Festival, plus a self-addressed envelope and 50 cents handling, sent c/o the Los Angeles Sports Arena, 3939 So. Fibueroa St., Los Angeles, Calif. 90037, will get your tickets mailed back to you. No cash or personal checks will be accepted and a maximum of 8 tickets per order will be processed.

Which is a pity, since this scholarly dictionary of names by George R. Stewart is a wonderful source into which to plunge periodically and at random to unearth some most interesting — often humorous — information.

It starts with "Aaron" and ends with "Zuriel," and in between these two is a vast collection of names, each with a paragraph, sometimes with a page or more of text, describing the name's origins, meaning and any other information that Stewart considers important.

Stewart leads off his dictionary with, "The people of the United States — like other peoples generally — 'give' names to their children. These 'given' names, stand in contrast to the 'family names,' which are inherited."

He then presents a most scholarly and highly interesting historical sketch of just how given names came into usage and where they were drawn from. The sketch starts in the days when Old English was spoken and moves through the many years since — with especial concentration on American given names — up to the present.

The dictionary follows. It presents such oddities as "Mahershalalhashbaz," which translated means "hasten the spoil, rush upon the prey," and, according to Stewart, at least "one American (in 1668, a citizen of Rhode Island) bore this name."

On a simpler level, "Adolph," for example, is Germanic and means "noble wolf," "Joy" appears to be "simply the English word applied as a name," and "Barry" is, of course, Irish and derives from a word meaning "spear."

THE PRICE WAS HIGH: The Last Uncollected Stories of F. jscott Fitzgerald. Edited by Matthew J. Bruccoli. Harcourt Brace Jovanovich. 785 Pages. $19.95.

Although he did not have all that many creative years allotted him, F. Scott Fitzgerald was a prolific writer. In addition to the novels — for which he now is mainly remembered — he also turned out some 164 stories.

Fifty of those stories have been included in this oversize volume, many with prefatory notes by Editor Matthew J. Bruccolli which tell where and when the story was written, what magazine it appeared in, and, often, a bit of comment on the story itself.

In his introduction, Bruccoli points out that the stories in this book were written for money: "Fitzgerald lived off his stories. His intention was to write stories only to finance his novels. Like so many of his practical plans, it did not work out."

Bruccoli also observes, "The stories in this volume are not Fitzgerald's best. They are worth collecting because he wrote them."

Maybe so. If not the best Fitzgerald was capable of, many of the stories here are far better than the best efforts of lesser authors. Fitzgerald was a fine writer, and even though these stories were written to bring in some money they still show flashes of the author's genius.

"The Smilers," for example, is a well turned contrapuntal tale that contrasts the attitude toward life of those who have everything and don't find it enough and those who have nothing but still consider life well worth living.

"One of My Oldest Friends" presents in bittersweet prose the idea of friendship and how even though it may wither it never can completely die. There are many other stories equally well written and entertaining: "Dice, Brassknuckles & Guitar," "The Adolescent Marriage," "On Your Own," and "The Woman from Twenty-one," to single out only a very few.

Fitzgerald admirers will treasure this book. Those who know only the novels might enjoy using it as an introduction to his many stories.

It has been more than 40 years since Adolf Hitler rose to power in Germany, and over 30 years since his death and the fall of his Third Reich.

Yet the flow of books, films, television shows and the like centering around this small sliver in the timeline of history is evidence of the fascination it still holds for the public.

One of the newest Nazi chronicles is "The Bunker," a book about the last few months of Hitler's regime. The title refers to the huge maze of underground rooms, originally planned as a bomb shelter, which became Hitler's final headquarters and from where he directed the final stages of the war.

The bunker is the scene of action for many of the chapters of this narrative. Hitler's suicide takes place there, as well as the aborted attempt by Hitler's architect and Minister of War Production, Albert Speer, to poison the Fuehrer. Again, the bunker is the locale for the remaining staff members to plan and execute — successfully for some — their escape, as Red Army troops advance.

Author James P. O'Donnell tells his story well. Each chapter is like a long but intriguing magazine article, and many of them could stand up well on their own.

Although some of the material presented might fall into the category of "old news" for those who have acquired a Third Reich expertise, the book still has many fascinating tales to tell, and doubtless many readers will find much that is new here, along with the tragic, the macabre and the blackly comic.

JOHN HUSTON. By Axel Madsen. Doubleday. 280 Pages. $10.

John Huston started out with the very best; the first film he directed was "The Maltese Falcon," the classic Sam Spade detective yarn with Humphrey Bogart, Mary Astor, Sydney Greenstreet and Peter Lorre.

He went on to prove that was no fluke of talent; he directed the likes of "The Treasure of the Sierra Madre," "Key Largo," "The African Queen" (all of those with Bogart), as well as "The Asphalt Jungle" (Marilyn Monroe), "Moby Dick" (Gregory Peck) and "The Misfits" (Monroe with Clark Gable and Montgomery Clift). On the flop side of the cinema coin were the likes of "The Unforgiven" and "The Kremlin Letter."

In more recent years, he has taken to character roles as well, portraying a cardinal in Otto Preminger's film of that title, and Noah, in his own production of "The Bible."

For trivia devotees — as well as for sheer uniqueness of life — Huston directed his father, Walter Huston (that fine character role in "The Treasure of The Sierra Madre") and his daughter, Anjelica, (in that less than significant movie, "A Walk With Love and Death").

Huston, Missouri-born, took up Irish citizenship some years ago, but now, at age 72, lives in Puerto Vallarta, Mexico, where he filmed "Night of the Iguana," "Fading Into Legend," as Alex Madsen puts it in this biography.

Creative professionally, one who drank all that life had to pour, and gave back as much — that is John Houston. In the end, one writer said of Huston, he may have directed no finer production than his own life.

This biography may fall short of matching the "swashbuckling" life of its subject, but it is surely a worthwhile, highly readable and informative chronological narrative of one of America's finest film directors, a fascinating figure apart from his work.

BY REASON OF INSANITY. By Shane Stevens. (Simon & Schuster, $10.95)

With a slambang opening that will rock the reader out of his chair, this thriller proceeds with one exciting twist after another.

A young amoral California woman is raped in a lonely lover's lane and becomes convinced her attacker was Caryl Chessman, the kidnaper-rapist who terrorized the West Coast in the late 1940s and eventually was executed.

Nine months later she gives birth to a boy she believes is Chessman's son. The woman, harshly mistreated by men all her life, takes her aggressions out on the boy, Tom Bishop, and as her mind deteriorates, her beatings of her son turn to outright torture. She keeps taunting him, telling him his father is rapist Chessman.

As a teen-ager, his mind snaps. He kills his mother and burns her body in a wood stove. By now, he is demented beyond recall. He spends the next decade in an insane asylum, gradually learning to handle himself so people will not recognize the twisted hatred that consumes him.

At the age of 25 he escapes and leaves a trail of murdered women across the country. As his mother despised men, so Bishop loathes women and takes revenge for his father's death by murdering them.

Enter an investigative reporter who becomes obsessed with capturing the killer and the chase begins. Bishop commits one appalling crime after another while the reporter doggedly follows lead after lead.

It's the tried and true chase theme but masterfully handled. By viewing the world through the eyes of the insane killer, we plunge into the netherworld of the insane. And as the deranged man plans and executes his crime, we are pummeled with shock waves. Here is pure entertainment at its thrilling best.

AMERICA'S FASCINATING INDIAN HERITAGE. (Reader's Digest, $17.95)

We Americans talk as if the idea of living together before marriage originated with flaky young people in the 1970s.

Actually, the Five Civilized Tribes followed that custom long before white people arrived from Europe, according to this beautiful book.

Those five American Indian tribes were among the most advanced societies north of Mexico, hence the name. They were skilled builders, craftsmen and farmers and knowledgeable also in the use of herbal medicine. They lived in the southeastern part of what is now the United States.

Trial marriages were arranged by the principals' maternal aunts at the request of the young men. Each girl was given a chance to accept or reject proposals. If, after one year, a couple was still living together, their marriage "... was considered a firm union.

If not, their ties to each other were automatically dissolved. In either case, the house now belonged to the woman." So much for community property.

One tribe, the Sanpoils, who lived in what now is the Pacific Northwest, were pacifists. The book tells us they accepted attacks without retaliation and acted as peacemakers for other tribes.

One chief is quoted as counseling his tribe: "Our children are dead and our property is destroyed. We are sad. But can we bring our children to life or restore our property by killing other people? It is better not to fight. It can do no good."

Such insights into tHe lives and customs of native Americans make fascinating reading.

CARTEL. By Edward Jay Epstein. Putnam. 316 Pages. $9.95.

When you're writing a novel of international intrigue and need talent to play the bad guys, you pick on the CIA. At least that's what many writers are doing today, and Edward Jay Epstein is no exception.

To maintain a facade of realism, Epstein has peopled his book with some real names, at least at the top of the spy network. Obviously reluctant to link such real-life figures with fictional murders and acts of violence, the author emphasizes that those at the helm are kept unaware of the darker deeds of their underlings.

The plot revolves around a handsome young Harvard professor with the unlikely name of Jake Jasmine. Our hero is a political science lecturer who has become an expert, in theory, on the anatomy of coups d'etat. He isn't surprised when he's invited to Washington to help the State Department work out an imaginary coup in a fictitious state as part of a course in crisis training for budding diplomats. It's called "The Game."

Jasmine becomes fascinated and plays with gusto until he discovers with the aid of an astute British girl friend that it is no game but a real coup he is working out. The imaginary state of Ajax is really Iran and the prize is oil. It is not the State Department but the CIA Jasmine has been working for and he has been drawing up a blueprint for the assassination of the Iranian prime minister. The show is actually being run by an international oil cartel.

There ensues an international chase in which repeated attempts are made to silence Jasmine.

They told me that if you do 40 to 50 per cent of your old material, the people will sit back and accept your new stuff, too.

"I mean, hell, there's no way we could do a concert with just the songs off the old Kingston Trio albums. In 10 years, we recorded over 300 songs. And the people who bought those albums not only know all the lines to the songs, they also know the order the songs appear on the records. At least 100 songs were on gold records, but we probably never ever played more than 35 or 40 different songs in concert.

"We never even really learned most of them. We just did them once for the albums, because you have to have a certain amount of songs on every album."

As for the type of songs Shane prefers, he indicates his personal and professional tastes may differ at times. That is, he doesn't want complex material for the Kingston Trio. "That's just not what we are," he said. "I can remember David Crosby bringing me material in the '60s, and me telling him I couldn't use it because it was too complicated, too advanced for the Kingston Trio. As for today's music, I like most kinds of music except electric drums. You know what I mean?"

Just to make sure his point was made, he added, "Disco just doesn't do anything for me. But I have to admit it's served a purpose. By getting people dancing, it may have also played a part in the renewed interest in ballroom dancing. And I like that."

But don't pigeonhole this 45-year-old, silver-haired musician as some old fogey from a past era. For one thing, he's very much in tune to popular music today. For another, he says the folk movement has never died anyway. Getting up from his chair, nervous energy finally getting the better of him, he said, "Listen. I'm a rock and roller. I like listening to hard rock because I think it gives me a definition of the times. There's some good songwriting in there, too.

"But don't ever think folk music is a thing of the past. OK, the big folk era was 1957-64, true. But folk music isn't dead. Peter, Paul & Mary may have gotten together for a reunion last year just for the money. But there are still folk singers who have lasted, who still sell, who are still popular. People like Judy Collins, Joan Baez, Bob Dylan and Gordon Lightfoot. And then there's John Denver. Hell, he's nothing more than a folk singer, too."

And you can bet your last "greenback dollar" Bob Shane is aware of the fact that he and his original Kingston Trio are part of the reason these new success stories ever got off the ground.

The Lab Theater at Texas Tech University will stage Sam Shepard's "Curse Of The Starving Class" at 8:15 p.m. Friday through April 4, and it promises to be a unique production. Director Jerry Cotton said, "The play is about the stuff that dreams are made of, but it is about living in an environment that is stifling.

"In a sense the play is a metaphor of 20th century America."

In the hands of playwright Shepard, whom Cotton considers "the most significant American playwright writing today," it makes sense. The play revolves around the Tate family: middle class and struggling to keep their land in the face of gangsters, bill collectors and starvation.

Cotton, who is also in the cast, has guided his actors through an unusual method of rehearsal. The setting for the production was decided upon collectively by the company. The director said, "The cast found the room (the kitchen of the Tate family) within the theater."

They "found it" where the audience usually sits. So the audience will be seated on what is normally the stage of the Lab, as well as on cushions on the floor surrounding the action of the play.

In explaining this new audience-actor relationship, Cotton said, "As far as the audience is concerned, it is more than a spacial releationship. The characters often talk directly to the audience in a very presentational style. They talk about their dreams and fears and, in the end, they are all destroyed and they destroy each other because they are unable to communicate."

Tech graduate student Sara O'Neill has the challenge of designing lighting for the production, and costume designs are by Tobyn Leigh Probasco. Richard Rodean will compose and perform original music on the bassoon for the production.

Call the University Theater box office for ticket information.

Country Notes

By Bob Campbell

"Rainy Night in Georgia," the classic song recorded by Brooke Benton, Hank Williams Jr. and 85 other singers over the past 10 years, would never have been written if a young Louisiana man called Buck hadn't spent one summer driving a truck in Marietta, Ga.

Tony Joe ("Buck" to the home folks in Good Will, La.) White is best known for "Polk Salad Annie," which he recorded himself and had a hit from, but he has written hit songs for several other artists, including "I Got a Thing About You, Baby" for Elvis Presley and "Rainy Night in Georgia."

"I was staying with my sister one summer in Marietta, Ga., and driving a dumptruck for the highway department," he said between sets during a recent appearance at Cold Water Country. "That was before I got into music. Then about six or seven years later, I was in Corpus Christi, playing clubs. I wrote 'Polk,' and about a week later, I got to thinking about them days in Georgia, rainy nights, you know, and I wrote both those tunes in about the same two weeks. I hit a little groove.

"I never would have thought it would come out like that. I cut it and put it on an album, but I didn't really think much about it. And a year later Brooke Benton came out with it, and I said, 'Man, I really like that.'

"When I heard him do 'Rainy Night,' it made me know how to do that song. My version was real raw. When I heard him, I said, 'Hey, I want to sing that myself.'"

Tony Joe is a good guitarist with his own style and a highly professional stage performer as well as a uniquely talented songwriter, and his show at Cold Water Country, where there was an embarrassingly sparse crowd, incidentally, was his first performance in Texas in four years.

He was undisturbed by the turnout, though, and said he wants to play Lubbock and Texas again as soon as possible.

"Playing in France, England, Australia — that's all good," he said. "But I miss the atmosphere. Texas people are real."

Writing a great song, he said, "means the most when I first hear it," and he is more concerned with moving ahead than taking satisfaction from past successes.

TONY JOE WHITE

"Music is now, and it's tomorrow and weeks from now," he said. "It's something where you can't just sit back and say, 'Remember me? I wrote this 10 years ago or eight years ago.'

"That's good, but people don't want to hear that. They want to hear what you're doing now: 'Can you do anything now?' And I can. I'm writing better now than I've ever wrote.

"The feeling is there. I'm at the best time of my whole musical career right now as far as the feel of things. I know my songs are there, and I feel my songs when I sing 'em. I'm not just singin' 'em to rattle 'em off. I really mean 'em. That's a good feeling. There's a lot of times when you just do it by reflex."

Some recent work of which he is proud is a song called "Billy" on the "I've Always Been Crazy" album of Waylon Jennings and a new "swamp song" called "Alligator" that he plans to record himself.

In a music world where Louisiana musicians have their own corner, White draws a distinction between his Louisiana music and that of Jimmie C. Newman, Doug Kershaw, Frenchie Burke and others from the bayou state.

What they do, he said, is Cajun music while his, as defined by a Paris, France newspaper early in his career, is "swamp rock," which means he is an original.

Hiller To Direct New Comedy For Orion

NEW YORK (Special) — "The Best Selling Season," a "black comedy" about the frightening and profitable international arms trade, will be directed by Arthur Hiller and produced by Marcia Nasatir and Ron Clark from an original screenplay by Clark for Orion Pictures Company.

Hiller, who recently completed filming Warner Bros.' summer release, "The In-Laws," has brought to the screen such boxoffice successes as "Love Story," "Hospital" and "Silver Streak."

Clark has co-written such motion picture comedy hits as "High Anxiety," "Silent Movie" and "Revenge of the Pink Panther." He is also the co-author of the long-running stage comedy, "Norman, Is That You?"

"The Best Selling Season," which will be an Orion Pictures Company release through Warner Bros., will go before the cameras this summer.

Deborah Kerr: Reflective—Eternally Beautiful

By WESLEY G. PIPPERT

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The visitor looked at Deborah Kerr and recalled her words from a famous play: "Years from now ... when you think of this ... and you will ... be kind."

Miss Kerr, sitting on a sofa in her apartment, leaned forward and corrected him with all the warmth and gentleness that she gave those lines spoken to the timid, lonely teen-aged boy in Robert Anderson's "Tea and Sympathy."

NEW BAND IN TOWN — The Great Rubber Band will play nightly Monday through Saturday at 3838, a new restaurant located at 3838 50th Street. The six-piece band plays swing, C&W, bluegrass, jazz, Dixieland, Irish and '50s tunes. There is no cover charge. Call 3838 for further information.

"Years from now ... when you talk of this ... and you will .... be kind."

Miss Kerr, now a grandmother, reflective and eternally beautiful, was interviewed just before her touring play, "The Last of Mrs. Cheyney," finished a five-week run at the Kennedy Center on her 58th birthday.

But her attention was drawn back to "Tea and Sympathy."

"Those are the most marvelous, marvelous, marvelous lines ever written," she said of her words to the young man about being kind.

That role mirrors her own sense of who she is.

"I really am Laura Reynolds," the older woman in the play who helped the timid, lonely boy discover his manhood, she said.

As she talked, she was dressed in white jeans, a white blouse and jacket with a gold ring, bracelet and earrings.

"Life is full of problems," she said. "Everybody has family problems. People are born and people die, and one has to cope. One has to maintain — at least I have to, and I find it comes instinctively to me — when there is trouble I find myself calming everyone down and staying very cool and calm and collected.

"I find it helps other people as well as helping me."

As was Laura Reynolds, who violated her own marriage to the abusive coach to help the boy, Miss Kerr is aware of her own humaness: "Deep down I'm not as calm or serene — I always give the impression of being very serene, very cool, very calm and totally in control."

"I'm just as human as anybody else."

"I can't live in an unhappy atmosphere. I can't function, work or live. I couldn't, if my personal life and my family life were not ... by serene I don't mean all roses and honeysuckles."

That inner calm, however, "can be jostled," she said. "I can be a great deal more frightened and nervous than people think I am."

"But if I say I am, I am admitting it to myself and it will get ahold of me," she said. "That's something I can't let it do. I am talking more about work. In private life one can let one's self go and say 'I'm petrified.'"

Her personal life is in order. Her two daughters are grown, and she and her husband have the joy of their younger daughter Francesca's two-year-old son.

Miss Kerr notices "a lack of quality" in the world in her journeys back and forth between her homes in Switzerland, southern France, London and the United States.

"There's less quality in the whole world. By quality I don't mean only material things, but quality in people in their attitudes toward each other as human beings," she said.

Her gentleness shows through in her current production, a 26-year-old play by Frederick Lonsdale that her husband, Peter Viertel, rediscovered and recommended to her. The play moves on to St. Louis, Toronto, Boston, Orlando and Fort Lauderdale, Fla., Baltimore, Denver and San Francisco.

In the play, Mrs. Cheyene turns out to be a beautiful and gracious — but conniving — lady. "An enchanting rascal," Miss Kerr called her.

"It's really quite fun," Miss Kerr said. "It starts off with that feeling, 'Oh, there she is again, fine and beautiful' — I'm using words about myself that the press uses' — and all of a sudden there's this little change.

"She's really quite unscrupulous, quite wicked in her own way. She lies barefaced to him, absolutely. You never do know right until the end whether she really — she never once says, 'I love you.' She's always evading. You feel she's really going to lead him one hell of a dance."

ART TALK

Gimmicks

By LA WANDA MURFEE

If selling your art work is your ultimate goal, you might be wise to find a gimmick, develop it, exhibit it, and finally market it in several different ways.

Study the methods of several artists. One man who is widely sold, buys four colors of paint, spreads out long sheets of watercolor paper along his studio wall, then paints windmills, barns, barren trees with a few birds flying around. The best results of the painting are then cropped, his wife mats and frames them. Together they travel and market the pictures at several galleries and fairs. They are very successful, have all the creature comforts. He found his gimmick.

A lady likes flowers, not a particular species, but a variety of her own. After she perfected a certain painting style and a dramatic flair in coloring, she is now teaching and selling large paintings through her class outlets.

Another artist paints the Southwest. He travels extensively making color slides instead of sketching. From a portable screen set up by his studio easel, he reproduces the slides in brilliant colors, thin paint in the dark areas, heavier impasto in the lighter places. If not painting from slides, he paints small still life setups placed besie the easel. His dramatic compositions demand four figure prices.

A fourth artist found his gimmick in juicy paint. He concentrates on no particular style or subject as he successfully turns out paintings of figures and portraits, still life or landscapes of places he visits. His painting are a varied as the alphabet. His use of richly textured paint and beautiful color sense captures any admirer.

Still another painter found his paintings of antique toys and ancient bottles sold quickly. He settled on one technique and has been very successful. He travels to international antique shows searching for quality toys and glass bottles retrieve from the sea. Set up in the studio, he then paints the subjects in a very precise, detailed manner and ships them to his New York gallery.

A very sophisticated vagabond who had been a perfume bottle designer in France came to the United States to paint and travel. He markets paintings from the back of his station wagon. During summer months he and his wife sell and paint in the north, while during the winter months, he paints the Southwest. His gimmick? Super salesmanship.

HY GARDNER HAS THE ANSWER:

Glad You Asked That!

Q: About actress Margot Kidder who played Lois Lane in "Superman" — I heard that, during the filming of the movie, she was going through a terrible period in her personal life. What happened? — M. Jefferson, Athens, Ga.

A: Her five-year marriage to writer Tom McGuane was just ending in divorce. During the many months of filming, devastated by the divorce, she had to hide her heartbreak. "I wept all night and didn't sleep," she confessed, "and then I'd go to work in the morning." Very insecure, Miss Kidder felt that everything she'd done was awful. But co-star Christopher Reeve came to her rescue. Very supportive, he helped her pull herself together. Currently completing her latest film ("The Amityville Horror" with James Brolin), the actress is not too thrilled with her sudden fame. "I don't like the idea of not being able to let my hair down at a party and go crazy," she says. "But I know I can't because the entire room will be watching me to see what a a fooll make of myself."

Q: I always thought Billy Carter sometimes acted like a damn fool. Is it true that now he's gone and joined an actors' union? — Clem Austin, Philadelphia.

A: Yes. A frequent talk show guest and spokesman for several commercial products, Brother Billy recently became a member of the Nashville local of AFTRA (American Federation of Television and Radio Artists). Incidentally, he was recently cancelled by "Hollywood Squares" because of his controversial comments about the Arabs and the Jews.

Q: Did the late billionaire J. Paul Getty ever give any tips on how to get rich? — Amy Marcel, St. Louis.

A: Yes. Getty strongly believed that if you want to get rich, you must work for yourself. "Going to work for a large company is like getting on a train," he once said. "Are you going 60 miles an hour, or is the train going 60 miles an hour and you're just sitting still?" Though successful in business, he was a failure in marriage. Married and divorced five times, Getty said, "I would gladly give all of it away for just one lasting marital success."

Q: My wife claims it takes more strength to be a ballet dancer than a boxer. Who's she kidding? — Jack C., Seattle.

A: Your wife is on her toes! "It takes more strength to get through a six-minute pas de deux than to get through four rounds of boxing," claims Edward Villella of the New York City Ballet. "The entire body is being used, every part of the body, in a calculated fashion," he says. And, according to Dr. William G. Hamilton, physician to the ballet, "it requires tremendous strength, endurance and timing, mobility of joints and great flexibility." Ballet is second only to football in the severity of its physical requirements.

Q: Does anyone know if Robert F. Kennedy Jr. has any interest in a career in politics? — Marie Williams, Minneapolis.

A: When a reporter asked him this question not too long ago, the son of the late senator cracked: "If David Eisenhower runs, I'm staying out."

Q: I once saw a sign in a doctor's office — something about God healing all wounds, etc. I was very impressed with it and wondered if you could find the exact quote? — Mrs. R.W., Canton, Ohio.

A: You're probably thinking of this one dating back to a humble French surgeon in the 16th century, Ambroise Pare. He insisted that on the wall of every room in his hospital this sign be placed, "I dressed the wound, and God healed it."

Q: Aside from their music, it seems to me the names of the rock groups are getting more and more difficult to make any sense out of. Is there any relief in sight? — The Miller Family, Jersey City, N.J.

A: Judge for yourself with the names of these "punk rock" groups who appeared in Canada in the last year: Battered Wives, The Ugly, Johnny Garbagecan, Rough Trade — and an all-female group calling themselves The Curse. Oh, for the days of The Three Suns and The Crewcuts.

Roller Rinks Catch Disco Fever

By ED LION

NILES, Ill. (UPI) — The "Saturday Night Fever" disco craze sweeping the nation has spread from the dance floor to the roller rink.

"It's becoming increasingly popular with our members," says George Pickard, executive director of the Lincoln, Neb.-based Roller Skating Rink Operators Association. "It's kind of been rolling through our industry for a year now."

Pickard estimates about 70 percent of the association's 1,500 member rinks have replaced organ and other traditional skating music with hot disco tunes and pulsating strobe lights.

"'Saturday Night Fever' probably is a teen-age phenomena," he said in an interview. "Teen-agers can't get into discotheques because of liquor sales. We give them an alternative. They come to the roller skating rink."

The Axle Rink in the Chicago suburb of Niles went disco four sessions a week in January. Manager Bill Simpson said attendance increased 100 percent for the sessions.

On a recent Friday night, the Axle was filled by eight o'clock with about 600 high school age skaters. The lights dimmed, a pulsating $15,000 light system danced around the walls and the disco music supplied by a disc jockey blared on as the organ stood idle.

Male skaters, many in jetblack disco dancing pants and silk shirts opened wide at the chest, strutted around the rink — swaying to the music on their skates. Girls in nightclub attire skate-danced with them doing such things as the "Conga", a disco foxtrot, and the "Backward Strut."

"They used to come in jeans and T-shirts," said Simpson. "But now it's just like a disco. They wear nicer shirts and nylon slacks."

"More girls come now," said Perry Gabuzzi, 16, of nearby Skokie, as he prepared to get on the floor. "It's better to skate to rock and disco than the organ. That's bubblegum music."

Said Linda Baublitz, 16, of Wheeling, as she twisted to the music: "It's much better. It just gets your adrenalin flowing."

Her friend Jerry Chasen, 24, of Chicago, is old enough to get into a discotheque. But he prefers disco-skating: "I love the music to get you going. I like to move."

Pickard said rinks are offering disco dancing classes and have disco skating contests. Prices range from $1.50 to about $4 for disco sessions, Pickard said, in many cases far below cover charges at discos.

"I'm sure every rink has two or three or a dozen of the dancing (John) Travolta's (on skates)," he said. "They can do anything that can be done on ice skates or in the ballroom — that and more."

The winner of the Axle's contest featuring the soundtrack of the film about 1950s teen idol Buddy Holly was Danny Wehr, 17, of Niles. "He's John Travolta Jr.," said a friend after Wehr deftly moved about the rink twisting and swaying just as if he were dancing.

Pickard said he recommends member rinks not convert totally to disco lest they lose traditional clients and be left without customers if the winds of dancing change start blowing.

Young Actor's Looks Lend Credance To New Disney Movie Role

BURBANK, Calif. (Special) — Edward Herrmann's blondish, wire-rimmed look made him easy to believe when he portrayed the late President Franklin D. Roosevelt as a young man on TV's "Eleanor and Franklin." It also helped him play the young scion of a wealthy Boston family on the "Beacon Hill" series.

Now it lends credence to hs performance as a crime-fighting minister in Walt Disney Productions' "The North Avenue Irregulars."

In the film, Herrmann plays Rev. Mike Hill, too new at preaching to realize there are some things he shouldn't say. Hill quickly finds that his town is overrun by mobsters and, not finding any men to help him fight, he enlists the aid of a group of female parishioners. Also starring are Barbara Harris, Susan Clark, Cloris Leachman, Karen Valentine, Patsy Kelly and Virginia Capers.

Herrmann believes he comes across as a precise actor because the profession gives him so much pleasure. "So few people do anything that gives them nourishment. You can tell when a person is getting more from their work than money. It shows in their faces, their demeanor, everything."

His biggest break came when he was signed to play Franklin Roosevelt in "Eleanor and Franklin" and "Eleanor and Franklin: The White House Years." He was nominated for Emmys for both shows, and for the latter won the Television Critics Circle Award as best actor of 1977. He also appeared last year in "The Louy Gehrig Story" in which he played the baseball great.

Herrmann was born July 31, 1943 in Washington, D.C., while his father was stationed ther during World War II. The actor was raised in Gross Pointe, Michigan. Herrmann says his love for acting grew gradually. "When I was a little boy, I wanted to be what every other little boy wants to be — a fireman, a poet," he says offhandedly. "But I did throw myself into every book I ever read."

He attended Gabriel Richard Elementary School, Pierce Junior High School and Grosse Pointe High School, from which he graduated in 1961.

Herrmann graduated from Bucknell University with a major in English. For the following three years he acted at the Dallas (Texas) Theater Center, a regional repertory theater where he did everything from building sets and hanging lights to playing the lead. In 1968, he received a Fulbright Scholarship and went to study at the London Academy of Music and Dramataic Art. He stayed for a year, then returned to Dallas before trying New York on for size in 1969 at the Circle-in-the-Square.

After some stock touring, he returned to New York City and rented an apartment to wait for work in commercials.

He was in several Off-Broadway productions, including "The Basic Training of Pavlo Hummel" and a Lincoln Center production of "A Midsummer Night's Dream," in which he played Flute.

He starred in "Moonchildren" at the Arena in Washington, D.C., and went to Broadway in it for two weeks. Then he appeared in "Major Barbara" with Jane Alexander at the Stratford Festival in 1972. Herrmann next landed the role of Frank in "Mrs. Warren's Profession" on Broadway and won a Tony Award in 1976.

Ramblin' Rhodes

By Don Rhodes

SO WHAT KIND of year was 1978 for country music?

It was one of anniversaries including the 10th birthday for a television show which critics thought could not last. As Roy Clark once said, that donkey on "Hee Haw" wouldn't stop kicking. When a television axed the show, producer Sam Louvello offered the series for syndication. Today it is more popular than ever, attracting millions of viewers each week.

Minnie Pearl, that grand ole lady of the Grand Ole Opry, celebrated her 38th anniversary with the Opry, and Nashville talent agency Top Billing Inc. marked its 10th anniversary.

Tandy Rice, head of Top Billing, had a good year with his noted clients, including Jerry Clower, Jim Ed Brown and Porter Wagoner. Rice scored a major publicity coup in managing First Brother Billy Carter, but his attempt in 1978 at doing the same thing with the former Mrs. George (Cornelia) Wallace bombed.

As with every year, 1978 was a time of illness, misfortune and death for some celebrities. Lester Flatt, a bluegrass music legend, suffered a brain hemorrhage late in the year. Reportedly, he is on the way to recovery and has left the hospital.

Donna Fargo was a victim of both an illness and bad television production. She is recovering from a muscular disease, while her television series is beyond hope.

Tammy Wynette told police authorities she was kidnapped from a prestigious Nashville shopping center, driven miles from Nashville and was beaten by her abductor. Nashville is a publicity-concious town, though, and several people in the business do not believe the kidnapping happened, although no one can prove it didn't.

DEATH CAME IN 1978 to Mother Maybelle Carter, a country music pioneer. The mother-in-law of Johnny Cash was one of three original members of The Carter Family. The sound of her guitar playing on "Wildwood Flower" and her autoharp playing long will be remembered.

George Jones continued to be in the news and not for recording reasons. His long-time friend and songwriting partner, Earl Montgomery, had a court order taken out to make Jones keep his distance after Jones reportedly threatened his life. The brother of Jones' ex-duet partner, Melba Montgomery, co-wrote with Jones "We're Gonna Hold On," a big hit single for Jones and his ex-wife, Tammy Wynette.

Bill Anderson turned out the first "country disco" record with "I Can't Wait Any Longer," while Dolly Parton soared into the rock field with "Two Doors Down," "Heartbreaker" and "Baby, I'm Burning."

Barbara Mandrell also continued her streak into super-stardom by appearing on such television specials as the "Lucy Goes To Nashville" show, turning out hit singles and touring with the Statler Brothers.

LORETTA LYNN, FOR THE first year in a long time, failed to win any major Country Music Association award, while The Statler Brothers were knocked out of their long-held Vocal Group of the Year position by another formerly gospel group, The Oak Ridge Boys.

The Oak Ridge Boys song "Crying Again" was easily one of the best produced singles in 1978, with Dave and Sugar's "Tear Time" following close behind.

New stars showing promise in 1978 of great things to come in 1979 include John Conlee, Gene Watson, Carlene Carter (June Carter Cash's daughter), Louis Mandrell (Barbara's sister), Stella Parton (Dolly sister), Crystal Gayle (Loretta's sister), Janie Fricke, Colleen Peterson, Randy Gurley, Linda Hargrove and Jewel Blanche.

No matter how 1979 ends, one things is for certain: As long as there's music, there will be interesting people making it.

Sarah Weddington Has Difficult Role As Women's Peacemaker

By KATHLEEN BURNS

WASHINGTON (UPI) — In her job as White House adviser on women's issues, Sarah Weddington has been assigned the arduous role of peacemaker amidst the warring factions that have polarized viewpoints among women.

The path she has chosen is an economic emphasis on issues that involve all women — married or single, white or black, young or old; urban or rural.

Among the pocketbook issues she plans to tackle are Social Security and pension reform, tax law inequities, credit questions, divorce settlements and the veterans' preference which eliminates most women from equal competition with men for federal jobs.

While she still will deal with such emotional issues as ERA and abortion, the Texas-born lawyer who succeeded Midge Costanza on President Carter's staff prefers a behind-the-scenes approach on controversial topics which have alienated some women and outraged others.

"I personally will continue to be involved in ERA and we will continue to work on all the issues of the International Women Year," she said.

Miss Weddington is the attorney who successfully argued before the Supreme Court in 1973 on the case that established women's abortion rights. But she echoes Carter's more conservative stance, saying "the Administration is really trying to push contraceptive availability and research. I will be involved in the president's commitment to provide alternatives."

As chairman of an intergovernmental task force involving 15 federal agencies, Miss Weddington plans to work in tandem with the Women's Congressional Caucus, which also has targeted economic issues as a priority.

To illustrate the differences in Social Security benefits for men and women, she pointed to a family with a man earning $12,000 versus a married couple with each partner earning $6,000. Under current laws, "women will receive 61 percent greater benefits from the single worker family than from the dual worker family," she said.

Another area of inequity is equal pay, in spite of recent legislation: "It's still true that men earn, on the average, 60 percent more than women."

Pension reform is another thorny question she first became interested in during the eight years she spent as a divorce attorney in Texas.

"Those in the retirement group are generally men, whose wives have not worked long enough (or at all) to establish their own benefits," she said. "In almost every private pension plan it is optional at the time you retire to choose survivor's benefits, and if you do, the pension will be less. This has an economic impact on the wife."

In divorce settlements, Miss Weddington thinks judges should view the husband's pension and Social Security benefits as a form of community property, especially in the case of nonworking wives.

Credit problems continue, in spite of legal changes, Miss Weddington noted. As a young attorney putting her husband through school, she was required to get his signature on her credit application. Through her efforts, the state of Texas finally changed its laws.

One of five women among the 250 students in her law class, she recalls that some professors refused to call on women in class. After graduation, some firms refused to hire women, asking such questions as who would make dinner.

"Society ought not to have preconceived models for people to fit into but rather that it gives individuals a choice to exercise for their own lives," she said.

After three months at the White House, she tries to remain a realist, unaffected by the aura of power. She misses trial work but loves her current job.

"I never planned to go to law school," she says. She earned a teaching degree but, realizing she didn't want to teach, went to graduate school instead.

"I didn't plan to run for office and decided three days before the filing deadline" to run for the Texas legislature. She won two terms.

"I never thought I would come to Washington and then Agriculture undersecretary John White (now chairman of the Democratic National Committee) called" and she became general counsel at USDA.

"I never planned to come to the White House and then Rosalyn Carter called," she said.

Her next step? That depends on the saying a Texas professor passed on to her: "Where you are tomorrow depends on who you meet today."

Being In Love Can Improve Health

UNIVERSITY, Ala. (UPI) — Lovesickness is a misnomer, says anthropologist William Dressler. More often than not, being in love improves personal health, he says.

Dressler, an assistant professor of behavioral sciences at the University of Alabama, adds that some common symptoms of being in love are daydreaming, increased blood pressure and heart rate, stomach "butterflies," clammy hands and blushing — most resulting from an increase in hormones such as adrenalin.

Irwin Shaw: I'm A Product Of My Times'

By JOHN LEIGHTY

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — Irwin Shaw likes good whiskey, fast horses, pretty women and spinners of tall tales.

The Brooklyn-born writer is appreciative of the first three and a master of the latter, having written short stories from hotel rooms and bars the world round.

"They're as good as any novel," says Shaw of his minor pieces, many of which appeared in major magazines.

The rough-hewn wordsmith says he works at instilling the "spirit of the times" into his stories, 63 of which were chosen for inclusion in a collection spanning 50 years and titled, "Irwin Shaw, Short Stories; Five Decades." (Delacorte Press $14.95.)

An author of nine novels, five plays and two non-fiction books, Shaw sold his first story, "No Jury Would Convict," for $75. Others have sold for thousands of dollars in the heydays of magazines such as the Saturday Evening Post, Colliers and Esquire.

"At one time you could make a good living writing short stories," Shaw said over lunch. "Not any more. You could, but you wouldn't be eating lobster."

Shaw, whose last few novels have been best sellers, said only a handful of writers, such as John Cheever and John Updike, can sell short fiction today.

"There's a prejudice and it's unfounded," the author said of the unwillingness of publishers to handle collections of short works and of magazines to buy fiction.

"I blame it on TV," he added.

Shaw has written prolifically with humor and insight on the human experience in Brooklyn, Paris, Rome, North Africa, the Alps, on ships, in deserts, and "bits and pieces on transcontinental trains."

"I am a product of my times," Shaw, 65, writes in introducing his short story collection.

He was often where the action was and his contemporaries included Ernest Hemingway and F. Scott Fitzgerald. When Paris was liberated in World War II, Shaw was there as part of a combat camera outfit.

"When I got out in October, 1945, my total financial position was that I owed $300," said Shaw.

Shaw said when he graduated from Brooklyn H.S. 15 he belonged to a writer's club and bet $5 that he would be the first to become a writer. He was, but he admits it's sometimes a rugged way to make a living.

"When I started out as a writer I knew I was in for a life of misery and poverty," he said.

"One of the boldest and most brilliant American films in recent years. 'The Deer Hunter' is filled with strong, evocative emotion. Director Cimino makes clear that he is spectacularly gifted." — WALL ST. JOURNAL

"'The Deer Hunter' has qualities that we almost never see any more—range and power and breadth of experience. What really counts is authenticity, which this movie has by the ton. An epic." — NEW YORK Daily News

"An extremely ambitious and important film on a crucial theme. It demands to be measured against the classic uses of the screen to illustrate the way we live and die...A savagely strong piece of filmmaking, it is an earnest, serious and impressive work. 'The Deer Hunter' joins a thin company that aspire to greatness." — LOS ANGELES TIMES

"So real, you can feel it in your bones. DeNiro has accomplished an amazing characterization and the others make you see a world you've never known. Director Cimino has made a picture that resounds and echoes with a true American voice." — N.Y. POST

Playboy Pose Helped Candy's Marriage

By PAMELA REEVES

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Candy Loving, the small-town woman chosen by Playboy magazine as its 25th anniversary Playmate, says being a centerfold subject has brought her closer to her husband.

Playboy does not mention a husband in its photo layout on Miss Loving, but she said during a recent publicity stop in Washington she has been married for 2½ years.

She said her husband, Ron Prather, 27, supported her desire to apply for the $25,000 Playmate job last spring. He decided about the same time to switch from a low-paying Oklahoma high school teaching job to an airline steward's job in Houston.

The changes have opened a new life.

Miss Loving said the best thing about being a Playmate so far "might be the relationship with my husband. I guess something like this really draws you together because I need him more maybe now than I ever did.

"It's so refreshing to know someone who knows me for myself and has always liked me."

Miss Loving is an attractive, busty 22-year-old brunette who says she maintained a B average during her first three years at the University of Oklahoma and never posed nude prior to her Playboy venture.

Like thousands of other college students, she wants to be a journalist and like many before her, she says her favorite book is "The Prophet," by Kahlil Gibran.

And just as countless other young couples did, the Prathers met and married in the small town where she grew up — Ponca City, Okla. — and didn't have much money when they started out.

Unlike most, they made a bid for the big time and won.

His job with Texas International Airline gives them almost-free travel; her $25,000 from Playboy provides a house down payment, a year of publicity stops and possibly much bigger money offers for other posing and modeling jobs.

Miss Loving, whose parents named her Candice but spelled it Candys, said her husband is not worried about any lust her nude pictures might inspire, and she isn't either.

"He says — and I think it's kind of funny — that everybody can look, but he's the only one that can touch. He's very secure in our relationship because he knows that I love him a lot. He doesn't worry."

As for other people, Miss Loving said, she is ready for criticism.

"People say to me, 'Doesn't it bother you, don't you know that you're the object of many jokes and things?' I say no, it doesn't bother me, because I don't have to listen to that, and if I do, I take into account who it is coming from.

"I like sex to be open, something that is not dirty, something that is nice ... so I guess I have taken it on myself to stand up to those people who say all Playmates are stupid and all they can do is take off their clothes, because that is wrong."

Miss Loving said her mother, two sisters and a brother supported her when they learned what she planned to do, and her father, long divorced and out of touch, also is behind her.

Is she turned-on by posing nude, and does she think of herself as a sensual person?

Student Risks Life For Tuition Funds

By CLIFFORD KRAUSS

ACAPULCO, Mexico (UPI) — With a prayer to the Virgin of Guadalupe on his lips, and machismo in his heart, Carlos Enrique works his way through school diving for dollars from the rocky edge of La Quebrada cliff 100 feet to the shallow bottom of a narrow Pacific inlet.

Carlos, 19, studies during the day to be a television technician. At night he thrills hundreds of tourists as one of the 26 champion Acapulco cliff divers.

"It's a fabulous feeling that a parachutist or motorcyclist must get. It's a feeling you probably never have," he said when explaining why he dives.

There's also the reward of between $30 and $50 — 80 percent from tips, 20 percent from the overlooking Mirador Hotel — when he safely splashes into a thunderous tide only 12 feet deep, with a rocky bottom. If his jump is ill-timed, the inlet is only half as deep.

With his hair still matted over his round boyish face after his dive, Carlos said he couldn't make the leap without first praying to a statuette of the Virgin of Guadalupe mounted over the cliff.

"I pray to my God. I must pray to the Virgin before I dive. It's a very tense, nervous moment, but I have confidence. When I'm not confident I wait a few moments to calm myself," he said.

Under the illumination of a red light above the Virgin, he crosses himself twice, steps on the stone platform, tightens his bathing suit, ignites two torches, and without hesitation spreads his arms into the swan position and dives.

Carlos began diving at age 10 from near his Acapulco home. After six months he dared at times to plunge head-first from cliffs as high as 45 feet.

For the past four years, Carlos has dived in the most challenging inlet around Acapulco, where he trained for two years before making the big leap for cash. Most of the divers are close in age to Carlos, although they range from 19 to 52.

"Two years is absolutely necessary before making the big jump. You have to prepare the body for jolts from the tide," he said.

"The most dangerous parts of the dive is the takeoff and crash. You have to leap 18 or 20 feet out to avoid the rocks and land perfectly straight and stiff."

Dawn Young, a 24-year-old tourist from St. Paul, Minn., was thrilled by Carlos' performance. "It just gives me shivers to see him with his toes hanging over the rock," she said.

College-Level Math Prevents Superior Student Drop-Outs

By DALE SINGER

ST. LOUIS (UPI) — Some students are so smart they drop out of school.

This problem has led to a math program offering college-level courses — with college credits — to talented students as young as sixth graders.

The program was developed by CEMREL, an educational laboratory, with about $2 million in federal money over the past 11 years.

Program director Burt Kaufman says textbooks for the project were designed to provide a fresh outlook.

"We gave the writers the opportunity to create an ideal math program for bright kids, with no prior conditions," Kaufman said. "It was our job to make it teachable.

"The object was not to get the students turned on, because these are bright kids. We wanted to get them intellectually involved so they weren't just wasting their time."

Nearly 50 students from throughout the St. Louis metropolitan area enrolled in the program this fall, the first time the new courses have been offered on a widespread basis.

They attend regular classes at their neighborhood schools most of their school days, then visit CEMREL twice weekly for advanced math training.

Webster College allows the students to earn college credits for the math program upon payment of reduced tuition fees. Kaufman said the arrangement is ideal for students intellectually superior but socially immature.

"Every five or six years one hears of some very precocious youngster who enters college at age 11 or 12," he said. "Such students are very rare — about one in 10 million — and usually can handle the social upheaval that results from such an early entrance into university life.

"However, there are many truly gifted students who are not mature enough for such drastic action, but for whom the standard school curriculum is totally inadequate."

Those students go to CEMREL instead of college to tackle such topics as abstract algebra, calculus and Lebesque integration while their peers are plugging away at more traditional math.

Kaufman said most of today's math curriculum is too far behind the times.

"People who write high school math books aren't up on what's being done in the forefront of mathematics today. They still think that what was significant 25 years ago is valuable today, even though it isn't.

"A whole year of oldfashioned Euclidean plane geometry, usually taught in the 10th grade, is about as useful as Sanskrit. Many teachers still teach the old way to do square roots, but no one really has to do that anymore."

Emphasis on outmoded methods made the CEMREL program necessary, Kaufman said.

"The best student I ever had got his Ph.D. at Harvard four years after high school, but he swears he was so bored with school he would have dropped out if it hadn't been for this program. He had to stay in school to stay in the program.

"If one-third of three high school years is wasted on geometry, it's a tragedy to a real bright kid. It's a crime. Those are really useful years."

Not all students in the accelerated program will become professional mathematicians. Kaufman and his colleagues know there isn't room for so many newcomers in limited academic fields.

"Our goal was never to create a lot of mathematicians. It was to give them some advanced material to chew on. But those who do have professional ambitions will be three or four years ahead of the game when they get out."

No matter what their future is, everyone in the program will benefit from their early concentrated exposure, Kaufman said.

"We're teaching math to seventh graders who are getting college credit for it, so you could say they're getting college level math. But for these kids it's seventh grade math, and there are actually many college students who couldn't handle it."

DON'T MAKE A MONKEY OUT OF ME—Mary Jo Marshall, a keeper at the Louisville Zoological Garden, rewards one of the seven wooly monkeys turned over to the zoo by people who had kept them as pets. Miss Marshall has to teach the monkeys how to be monkeys. She said they're used to living in a house, sleeping with children and eating off the table. She said the woolies have never "seen another monkey. They think they're human." (AP Laserphoto)

Student Papers' Attempts At Sex Education Thwarted

By DALE SINGER

ST. LOUIS (UPI) — When it comes to sex, if all teen-agers know is what they read in their high school newspapers, they don't know much.

Efforts to get the who, what, where, why and how of sex into high school papers have triggered many showdowns with anxious administrators trying to control the news put out by young reporters.

The losers, say officials of the National Alliance for Optional Parenthood, are teen-agers hungry for accurate information they need to decide their sexual future. The officials say students are much more likely to accept such information when it comes from someone their own age.

"I think all of us realize that teen-agers trust their peers more than anyone else for information," said Carole Goldman, executive director of the nationwide group that is sponsoring seminars to help high school journalists get their message across.

"We tried to think how best to get the information to teenagers, and we realized the best way is to do it through teenagers themselves."

Several conferences have been held across the country. Miss Goldman said both students and faculty advisers have gained a better understanding of what they may do and what they should do.

"We don't want the schools to think we're riling the students up to write obscene or controversial articles," she said. "That's why we wanted their advisers there. We want to give them their rights and stress their responsibilities at the same time. These kids aren't rabble rousers."

Miss Goldman and Marie Bernardy, head of the St. Louis chapter of the Alliance, said the teen-agers need the right information to help them make the right decisions.

"Many, many kids don't have anyone to talk to about this subject except each other, and they don't really have good information," Miss Goldman said. "There's a lot of pressure on kids today to be involved in sex and not to admit being a virgin.

"Some people are afraid that to initiate this dialogue is to open the door to increased sexual activity. But we find that bringing the facts out tends to lessen it. It's already happening, and if you put your head in the sand and ignore it, it's going to happen in a destructive way."

At the conferences, high school reporters learn First Amendment rights, including legal rulings against the censorship powers school administrators over the content of school newspapers. Miss Bernardy said that news is a big surprise to many students.

"A big problem we found was one of student self-censorship," she said. "Students felt they couldn't write about sex because the story would never get past anyone. We don't want them doing that to themselves."

"We tell them their rights, but urge them to make careful decisions."

Computer May Help Reduce Injuries To Skiers

By PAMELA YIP

DAVIS, Calif. (UPI) — An award-winning computer about the size of a cigarette pack may mean fewer injuries for skiers in the future.

Researchers at the University of California at Davis have developed an experimental computerized ski binding that could reduce injuries while giving skiers better control while schussing down the slopes.

The computer-controlled binding, the first of its type to be designed and laboratory tested according to the researchers, mounts on the surface of the ski behind the boot.

The device won a national design award from the American Society of Mechanical Engineers for mechanical engineering students Kevin Allen and Donald Westwood.

Maury Hull, assistant professor of mechanical engineering, helped the students develop the device and called their work "a significant step toward developing a safer and more functional ski binding." The project involved more than seven months of research and development.

Hull speculated that commercial versions of the device might be available in five to 10 years, but may cost twice as much as mechanical bindings. More testing is needed, however, before the new binding can be sold commercially.

"Conventional bindings now cost about $125 a pair," Hull said. "The computerized binding would cost you about $250 for a pair if you were to buy it today."

Hull explained the device incorporates three basic systems: a dynamometer, a release mechanism and a computer.

The dynamometer converts the forces between the ski boot and the ski into electrical signals. These signals are then transmitted to the computer, which controls the binding release. If the computer determines that the pressure to the lower leg is strong enough to cause damage, it will release the ski binding.

The battery-powered computer must be recharged after about 12 hours of skiing, said Hull, a skier himself.

Hull said 40 percent of skiing injuries occur in the knee, 40 percent in the ankle and 20 percent in the lower leg.

"Ninety percent of skiing injuries to the leg are attributed to binding malfunction," he said. "This statistic represents about 250,000 injuries annually in the United States."

He said conventional ski bindings are designed to clamp the skier's boot to the ski and to release the ski from the boot if injury to the skier's leg is imminent.

Hull said although new designs of conventional style bindings have appeared on the market there has been no notable decrease in the injury rate.

Allen, 21, and Westwood, 22, said conventional mechanical ski bindings do not protect the skier adequately. The current trend, they said, is to make the binding more elastic so that it can absorb leg pressure without release.

This is a disadvantage to the skier, the students said, because the lack of rigid attachment between the boot and the ski impairs control.

Aboard Zephyr: Conductor Recounts Lifetime Of Railroading

By DAN CHISZAR

DENVER (UPI) — The train had stopped in Denver for an hour, then pulled out in a drizzle, rolling free of the train yard along the South Platte River, heading for Chicago.

There was a solid rumbling beneath — none of the unsettling tenuousness of the jet airplane ride.

It was slower, too. The bar car was open until midnight. Travel became an extended verb, not just the shortest time possible between two points.

We passed the stockyards. The rain picked up and so did the train, blasting its whistle long and short. The rain tapped harder at the window, accompanied by the clacking rails.

A porter came by and dropped a pillow onto the seat. None of the set smile of an airline stewardess. The porter's action was brisk and swift, the way ordinary business should be done, without the grand false sweeps.

We slid by cultivated fields and grazing cattle. The Colorado Rockies faded from view.

I was riding in Car 609, coach, one car behind the crew's sleeping quarters, two cars behind the baggage car, three cars behind a car heaped with gray mailbags, four cars behind the two huge diesel engines hauling the whole affair — 14 cars in all, counting those behind mine.

Sundown came somewhere after Fort Morgan, and the countryside passed in shadows outside the window.

The conductor sat at a small table two cars back. His cap was tilted back on his head, showing white hair. His shirt was white, his tie burgundy, his uniform the traditional black. He wore glasses.

On my way to the bar car I stopped to talk to him. "H.P. Cotton," he said his name was. "I could tell you a lot of things." And he did.

Harry Cotton was the sixth conductor to come on the San Francisco Zephyr since it had left Oakland. He had been with Burlington-Northern 44 years, a conductor since 1943. He had been on the stretch between Denver and McCook, Neb., where he lives with his wife, for three years.

We were traveling 79 miles an hour. Harry said. The car rocked gently, and Harry's shoulders rolled with it.

"I've been 44 years a railroad man," he said. "I'll take my pension the 29th of this month. I've flown north, south, east and west. I have a brother in Houston, a son in Great Falls, Mont., and a son in York, Pa. And I have friends in San Diego."

"Look outside," he said. "You can see the terrain. Now we're going through the High Plains. This is a part of our western lore, just like in that book 'Centennial.'

"How many times when you've flown, after you reached your altitude, have you seen the ground? You can't.

"The only time I've seen anything on a flight was from Denver to San Diego and that was the Colorado River. And then you come down; you start your descent. By the time you land everything is over, and the seating is so close.

"Here, you can get up and walk around. You can see the countryside. Here, all of our meals are prepared on the train. There's nothing frozen or reheated. They have a kitchen back there.

"We have a bar. You can buy a can of 7-Up and individual bottles of whiskey and mix it yourself. The reason for that is the Bartenders Association would get into it."

Harry paused for a few seconds, then proceeded more slowly.

"The railroads have forgotten that the traveling public is king and should be catered to," he said. "We can't compete with the airlines because of the unorthodox way they reduce their fares. You can fly crosscountry cheaper than taking a train from Denver to Chicago.

"They tell us airline traffic has increased 40 percent. We can't, under any circumstances, compete with speed.

"The government says we can go 80 miles per hour on a single track. We can't leave early from a station because we'd miss passengers. There's no way we can make up a delay."

Here, the conductor paused again. We were approaching Akron, Colo., and he would have rounds to make.

"I've been a railroad man since 1934," he said. "My father was a railroad man, and I had grown up with them. It was in my blood — this is more or less a normal way of life."

"Railroading is a fascinating game," Harry Cotton said, getting up to prepare for the stop. "I don't know anything about your game, but if it's as fascinating as this game — well, you'll never get out of it."

Akron -9:10 p.m., 26 minutes behind schedule. Harry got up to go about his business.

Shortly after midnight, another conductor came aboard and Harry got off at McCook, Neb. I never saw him again.

My trip continued. In two weeks, I was on the Zephyr again, heading back from Chicago to Colorado. It was dark early morning when the train blew through Omaha, and in the mid-morning we stopped in McCook to take on a new crew.

I remembered Harry Cotton had said the month before he was taking his pension soon. I asked a porter if he knew of H.P. Cotton.

"I think I know who you mean, but he's gone," said the porter.

A trainman said he knew Harry Cotton, but he wasn't sure. Coming aboard was La Moine Keene, the conductor for this leg of the trip.

"Do you know H.P. Cotton?" I asked.

"Yes I do, but I didn't know him all that well," said Keene. "He just took his pension." Keene had white hair and wore glasses. He loitered awhile and talked about his business and trains and how long he had been on them.

"A conductor is sort of like the captain of a ship," he said.

LakeRidge Country Club Announces Plans For $1 Million Club House

Plans for the construction of a new million dollar club house for the LakeRidge Club have been announced by Mike A. Myers, chairman of the board of directors of LakeRidge Country Club Inc.

LakeRidge is Lubbock's first new country club in a quarter of a century and will feature an 18-hole, 6,789-yard championship golf course, according to developers.

The club is incorporated within the LakeRidge Country Club Estates, a new luxury home community located at 82nd Street and Slide Road in Southwest Lubbock. When completed it will include a golf course, a spacious 23,000-square-foot club house, eight tennis courts and a junior Olympic size swimming pool.

The construction of the golf course is presently in its final phase and officials predict that it will be ready for play by late summer. Designed by Billy Martindale, it includes over 40 acres of water in two scenic lakes which have been utilized to present the golfer with challenging play hazards. The course includes 30 strategic sand traps, hand-sprigged grasses and over 1,000 trees.

The clubhouse, overlooking the golf course and 25-acre lake, will have a full array of services in its dining areas, smaller alcoves and card room. The main dining room is planned around a massive fireplace. Thompson-Parkey Associates Inc. of Dallas designed the facility which will be constructed by Claude Martin & Sons Inc. of Lubbock.

Extensively landscaped tennis courts are designed to professional specifications and will be staffed by a full-time professional and other personnel. The courts will be located adjacent to a snack bar, restrooms, a well-stocked tennis pro shop and a patio social area. Five more courts are being planned.

Adjacent to the clubhouse, the championship swimming pool will be strategically located to take advantage of scenic vistas of the golf course and one of the lakes.

A full professional staff will direct the operation of the club.

Membership is by invitation only and will include family resident membership which will entitle the holder to unrestricted use of all club facilities and a family tennis membership with unrestricted use of all tennis facilities, swimming pool and clubhouse.

"At LakeRidge Country Club, we are blending traditional service and friendly warmth with modern elegance to create from the vast West Texas landscape a bold new facility which will feature a full spectrum of activities for members and their guests," Myers said.

The facility, designed by Thompson-Parkey Associates Inc. of Dallas, will be constructed by Claude Martin & Sons Inc. of Lubbock. Attractive Spanish Design 'Sets Off' New Estes Plan

By HIAWATHA ESTES

Here is an excellent example of an attractive Spanish exterior which is so popular today. A heavy wooden railing surrounds the deck above the garage and adds considerable interest to the exterior. Other design features include shutters; the detailed column with its light fixtures which is supporting part of the deck and is repeated on both sides of the doors opening from the master bedroom to the deck and again at each side of the garage door; the vertical siding above the master bedroom doors; the band sawn corbels projecting from under the gable roof; the deck and, the last item which ties all these together, the tile roof.

This design is only available with a concrete slab floor. Adding to the overall design interest, the floor of the living room is lower than the remainder of the house. An ornamental iron railing partially separates the living room from the entry and the dining area.

The oversized farm kitchen will probably be considered the outstanding asset of this home, especially by families of a gregarious nature. Sliding glass doors opening from this room and the dining area to the rear patio will appeal to anyone who enjoys outdoor living.

A bedroom and bath are located on the first floor while two additional, large bedrooms with private dressing areas and baths are on the second floor. All baths have pullman lavatories.

Laundry facilities are in the oversized garage — 22' x 21' outside dimensions — and a water heater closet opens to the side yard.

Complete working drawings for plan 31118 can be purchased for only $19.95 for the first set and $10 for each additional set ordered at the same time. This plan will be available at these special prices until July 25, 1979. Please allow at least three weeks for delivery. A large reproduction rendering of the exterior is available for $4. Also available are six home plan books illustrating nearly 1,000 plans — a $9.75 value — for only $7.75 plus $1 for postage and handling. Send all orders to: Hiawatha Estes, P.O. Box 404-J, Northridge, California 91328.

THE U.S. AND YOU

William Steif

WHEN MRS. RUTH MINE of Millington, N.J., returned from a vacation in Sweden last August she wrote George G. Wynne, editor of a Washington newsletter with a circulation of 9,000.

She wanted to tell him that in all Swedish subway stations, or wherever an escalator is used, the escalators don't operate until "triggered" at the top or bottom step by a person passing an electric eye.

"We thought this was a fine way to conserve energy," Mrs. Mine wrote, "and I hope it can be used in the U.S."

She wrote Wynne because his newsletter "Urban Innovation Abroad," goes to the local officials all over the nation. It's one of the services the two and one-half year-old Council of International Urban Liason provides to promote good, new ideas to improve American life.

CIUL is non-profit and is run by John Garvey Jr., a former city manager of Richmond, Calif. In addition to Garvey and Wynn, there's one other professional, a couple of secretaries and one man in Europe. That's all.

AMONG IDEAS CIUL has promoted in the past two years:

— Audible traffic signals for the blind. The idea came from Japan. The signals now operate in Helena, Mont., and are under consideration elsewhere.

— Portable housing for the elderly so they can live near their children. The structures, known as "Granny flats" in Australia where they originated, are about to go up in Santa Maria, Calif.

— Verglimit, a Swiss substance which, when mixed with road-surfacing material, raises a road's surface temperature 16 degrees and eliminated the need for salting. Verglimit is used on bridges and overpasses, which ice up quickly. Wynne's had more than 102 inquires already.

— A West German swimming pool whose hydraulic system adjusts the pool's floor for the benefits of the handicapped. There are 600 such pools in Germany. Lakewood, Ohio, Erie, Pa., and a dozen other U.S. towns have built or are building such pools.

In the current newsletter, Wynne reports on one of the largest, most modern public transit systems in the world, that of Paris. The Parisian system has fewer financial worries than almost any other because of an "ingenious piece of legislation," a transit payroll tax on all Paris-area employers with 12 or more workers.

The levy, just over 1 percent, collected more than $500 million last year, which amounts to 20 percent of the cost of operating all buses, subway lines and commuter trains in a metro area of 12 million people. It's kept autos out of the downtown, provided lower fares, accelerated capital investment in new equipment, and is liked by employers because it gives them a wider labor market to draw on.

THAT'S NOT GOING to happen right away in the United States because no state has an employer-paid transit tax. But it's a possibility for the future.

A more likely immediate model for the United States is the Federal Garden show of West Germany, held every two years since 1951 in a major city. This draws millions of visitors and has left host cities with legacies of greenbelts, new public buildings and parks.

A Cleveland group, the National Parks and Recreation Association, and Rep. George Brown, D-Calif., are exploring the idea.

The ideas have to start somewhere, and that's where you come in. Wynne says there are two things citizens like New Jersey's Mrs. Mine, can do:

— "When you travel abroad (more than 12 million Americans do yearly) keep your eyes open" and write him with ideas in care of CIUL, 818 18th Street, NW, Washington, D.C. 20006, or phone him 202-223-1434 on your return.

— Press your mayor, city manager, local college, Kiwanis, Rotary or other civic clubs to subscribe to "Urban Innovation Abroad." At $24 a year, it's not going to break anyone, and it might furnish an idea to improve life in your area.

NEWSPAPER ENTERPRISE ASSOCIATION

Yandell To Head YWCA Drive

Howard L. Yandell, president of the First National Bank, has been named general chairman of the upcoming YWCA campaign, which will seek funds to build a standard-size, multi-purpose gymnasium.

The proposed facility will adjoin the YWCA Aquatic Center at 36th and Flint.

W. R. "Bob" Dunbar, division manager of the business office, Southwestern Bell Telephone Co., has accepted the position of general campaign co-chairman.

Announcement that the two community leaders had agreed to head the YWCA "Physcial Fitness Center" Fund drive was made jointly by Mrs. Doug Andrews, president of the YWCA board of directors, and Robert H. Brummal, division manager, Southwestern Public Service, chairman of the YWCA Advisory Council.

According to Mrs. Andrews, the proposed expansion will fulfill a major objective in the YWCA "master plan" for development, in which the expansion of both programs and facilities are geared to meet the diversified and growing needs of women and girls in the Lubbock area.

"With the growing emphasis on physical fitness as a vital key to good health, it is important that our community respond quickly and generously to this appeal," Yandell said. "The YWCA has an outstanding record of service. Last year, participation in its widely-diversified program of acitivies surpassed 65,000. Yet, many programs were limited by inadequate facilities. . . . others, desired by members, were non-existent due to the lack of proper space. . . . and those held outdoors were always at the mercy of the weather.

"The proposed Physical Fitness Center will bring benefits to hundreds upon hundreds of persons. . . . it will bring opportunities to participate in fitness and recreational programs which are not now available to many at a price they can afford."

Approval for the community-wide campaign effort was granted by the United Way, according to Brummal, following a thorough study by the Community Planning Council. Formal kickoff of the fund-raising effort is slated for early April with a Leadership Information Meeting at which time the plans and goal for the drive will be announced.

Apartment Group Plans Seminar

The Lubbock Apartment Association has announced it will sponsor a seminar entitled "Effective Communication and Motivation Techniques for Women in Business," from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. April 7 at the Lubbock Board of Realtors, 5015 Knoxville.

The program is designed to provide an opportunity for business women to improve communication abilities, to gauge personal levels of assertiveness, and to learn the difference between constructive and destructive assertiveness.

The entire program is directed toward increasing personal effectiveness, and will help participants learn more about the opportunities and problems that may be confronted in a particular business or organization, according to the association.

An "experiential workshop" format will be utilized at the meeting. Participants will be actively, not passively, involved in developing an understanding of themselves and their respective skills. Small group discussions, role-playing, and individual assessment and discussion will be used to illustrate the concepts and communication techniques covered by the workshop.

Workshop leaders are J. Duane Hoover, an associate professor of management at Texas Tech University, and Sarah Larson, who has a master's degree in communications from Texas Tech.

Persons wishing additional information or reservations, have been asked to contact the Lubbock Apartment Association, 792-6283.

Airline Reports Record Month

HOUSTON (Special) — Texas International Airlines has reported its 30th consecutive record traffic month with February, 1979, results.

Revenue passenger miles (one fare-paying passenger flown one mile) for February totaled 139.4 million, an increase of 34.4 percent over February, 1978.

Passengers carried in February, 1979, totaled 283,932, up 12.4 percent over last year when 252,691 passengers were boarded.

Load factor (percentage of seats occupied) for February, 1979, was 62.2 percent, a 4.6 point increase over last February.

The airline attributed its continued traffic growth to the popularity of its discounted "peanuts fares," which it said saved travelers $1.1 million on Texas International flights in February.

Braniff Marks Anniversary Of Trans-Atlantic Service

DALLAS (Special) — Braniff International recently celebrated its first anniversary as a trans-Atlantic carrier with a total of 689.5 million revenue passenger miles generated on the Dallas-Fort Worth-London route.

Braniff, which added Concorde service from Dallas-Fort Worth to London and Paris via Washington, D.C., two months ago, will further increase its trans-Atlantic operations on June 1 with the inauguration of non-stop flights to Paris, Frankfurt, Amsterdam and Brussels from both the Dallas-Forth Worth and Boston gateways.

The daily Big Orange 747 flights, as the first European service from Dallas-Fort Worth, operated with a 57.3 percent average load factor and carried a total of 144,591 passengers during the first year. In addition to Dallas-Fort Worth and London, these passengers originated in or were destined to 155 cities in the United Kingdom, Europe, Africa and the Middle East and 148 cities in the United States, Mexico, South and the Pacific.

As of June 1 with the start of service to Paris, Frankfurt, Amsterdam and Brussels, Braniff will be providing Dallas-Fort Worth with a total of 26 flight departures a week to Europe.

Sears Microwaves Proclaimed Safe

A Sears, Roebuck and Co. official has announced that owners of Sears table-top portable microwave ovens can continue to use their ovens without concern.

Al Thom, general manager of Sears stores in the Lubbock area, said news reports last week concerning the recall of one model had caused unnecessary concern among owners of other Sears microwave ovens.

The ovens involved will be found only in a free-standing range as a part of a combination microwave oven and conventional electric oven. No table-top models are involved.

The Food and Drug Administration, in announcing the recall, said the problem posed no imminent health hazard.

Thom emphasized that only 251 ovens involved in the recall were sold by Sears, and that the owners of these units are being contacted by the company to arrange modification of a door latch. An additional 2,394 ovens being recalled were sold by other retailers under the Roper brand name, he said.

Thom noted that none of the Sears microwave ovens being recalled had been sold in this area.

The Sears ovens involved in the recall were sold only in or near the cities of Pittsburgh, Minneapolis, Columbus, Ohio, and in the State of Virginia, Charlottsville, Petersburg and Richmond. The products involved are numbers 103.9547615, 103.9547625, 103.9547645 and 103.9547665. The numbers can be located on a nameplate in the upper right corner of the front frame, behind the storage drawer.

Thom explained that all microwave ovens are required to have a minimum of two safety interlocks which serve to prevent generation of microwave energy when the oven door is not fully closed.

In the ovens being recalled, one of the two switches fails to meet the strict definition of an interlock and the adjustment of the other can be affected by wear and abuse.

Operation of the microwave oven is not hazardous if all operating instructions are being followed, Thom said.

The units being recalled will be corrected without charge in the owner's home, he added.

The correction will involve installation of a new latch which will provide a total of three safety interlock switches.

"U.S. Savings Bonds are good for our country and our community."

Most of you know that United States Savings Bonds help raise the money America needs to continue growing strong.

But did you know that every Bond dollar works to fight inflation and protect the value of the dollars we save and spend right here in our own community?

That's why Bonds are such a great way to save. They're a safe and easy way to prepare for our own future. And they help our country and our community, too.

So buy Bonds. Through the Payroll Savings Plan where you work. Or the Bond-a-Month Plan where you bank.

E Bonds pay 6% interest when held to maturity of 5 years (4% the first year). Lost, stolen or destroyed Bonds can be replaced if records are provided. When needed, Bonds can be cashed at your bank. Interest is not subject to state or local income taxes, and federal tax may be deferred until redemption.

Take stock in America.

CHICAGO (UPI) — Night terrors — a form of nightmare — can increase heart beat from 60-80 beats per minute to 170 or more in a few minutes, say sleep experts at a Chicago mattress manufacturer. Such terrors occur most often in 3-to 5-year-olds.

PITTSFIELD, Mass. (UPI) — No planned obsolescence for this coffee brewer manufacturer: an early manufacturer of a non-electric filter-drip unit now makes an automatic model, but also sells the electrical unit separately for owners of the munual model. The automatic unit has a wetting cycle that pauses briefly after wetting coffee grounds initially. The manufacturer says this system yields a more flavorful cup of coffee. In addition, the warmer plate is thermostatically controlled for several diffecent serving temperatures.

CB Interference Problem Aired

By MIKE WENDLAND

Emerging as the year's most important radio inquiry —surpassing even the expanded frequency proposals in potential impact—is the FCC's effort to determine and then correct the massive radio and television interference problem.

The FCC is swamped with over 100,000 complaints each year from people whose television viewing, stereo listening or telephone conversations are disrupted by CB and ham communications.

But, because it costs money to correct the problem and added costs hurt sales, most manufacturers have been reluctant to clean up their gear.

Thus, as the CB and ham boom has escalated over the past few years, so has the number of interference complaints and lawsuits. One CBer in California even went to jail because his legal set interfered with his neighbor's poorly filtered television.

The FCC has decided that getting to the bottom of the problem is this year's major priority. They've asked for comments from all interested parties by May 1.

If CBers and hams don't make their positions known, it's clear that the manufacturers—who would just as soon avoid adding the filters—will instead argue for curbs on hobby radio.

Thus, it's time to pick up pen and paper. Let the FCC know your experience in correcting interference problems and your neighbor's reaction. Tell them your ideas on how to stop the problem and whether you think government-mandated controls are needed.

In making your comments on this and all FCC inquiries, it's important to note that FCC regulations require that you send the original and five copies. If you want each FCC commissioner to personally see your comments as well, include seven additional copies. Be sure to note the docket number on the first page of your comments. It is No. 78-369.

Q. On the television news the other night, there was a story about a ham radio operator who was monitoring the government's satellites and actually receiving their pictures right in his home. Is this legal?—J. V., Sacramento, Calif.

A. It sure is. One of the least-known but perfectly legal aspects of hobby electronics is satellite television reception. Hundreds of enthusiasts using equipment they made themselves are eavesdropping on the satellites. The weather satellites that regularly transmit space photos on 1619 MHz are particularly popular. Same with the recent satellite pictures from Jupiter. You don't need a license to monitor the satellites, though considerable technical expertise is required. If you'd like to know how to do it, write the American Radio Relay League, 225 Main St., Newington, Conn. 05111.

CB Break

Even my mail from readers of this column reflects the extent of the problem. I get more letters complaining of CB interference to television than on any other subject.

Now, after years of ignoring the problem, the FCC has begun a massive inquiry aimed at doing something about it. And what they decide to do is of crucial interest to radio enthusiasts.

Television sets and radios aren't the only victims. Almost everything from electronic organs to garage-door openers are susceptible to interference from hobby radio transmitters. In most cases, the device being interfered with is at fault. It simply wasn't built to filter out unwanted signals.

The Voice of Business

WASHINGTON — For years, the liberal message to the black community has been one blaring and unending commercial for more government as a cure to any and all black complaints. Those of us in the business community have sent a different message — free enterprise is the true philosophy of those struggling to get ahead. For while the wealthy usually have the influence to live well under any system, an ambitious poor person can only succeed in a climate of freedom which provides individual opportunity, rewards achievement and places a premium on dynamic economic growth.

It has become customary to believe blacks are, and will always remain in the liberal camp. Even if that perception was correct, it isn't anymore. Several factors have recently combined to increase the receptivity of blacks to business. The undeniable failure of so many supposedly compassionate federal programs; the willingness of liberals to take blacks pinned to the bottom of the economic ladder; the recognition by business of the special economic and social needs of the black community, and the growing commitment by business to marshal the resources of private enterprise and promote genuine economic change — these are all reasons why more blacks are increasingly looking to business for new leadership and a possible new partnership.

Americans are by nature a compassionate people. During the past decade they have voluntarily given billions of dollars in taxes to the federal government, thinking the money would be used to help those who cannot help themselves. But much of that money never reached the poor, because championing the disadvantaged has now become more than an inspiration, it is an occupation. Thomas Sowell, a black economist, describes this cruel hoax with these words: "To be blunt, the poor are a gold mine. By the time they are studied, advised, experimented with and administered to, the poor have helped many a middle-class liberal to achieve affluence with government money."

Many of these same liberals, who believe they alone know the real needs of the poor, are themselves promoting policies which keep the poor down. For example, the quest for a new future of no growth, soft technology and lowered expectations has become very chic for many card-carrying liberals who are already members of the leisure class. But just think what that would mean for poor families struggling to break out of the ghetto? No growth would freeze them into a permanent position of poverty and dependence.

Liberals are also fighting repeal of a whole series of laws and regulations which blatantly discriminate against poor working people. Benjamin Hooks, executive director of the NAACP, was recently quoted in Time Magazine saying unnecessary regulations were killing black neighborhoods because "nobody, but nobody is buying into a decaying black ghetto except blacks themselves. So the effect of some regulations is almost 100 percent to exclude blacks."

But that's just the beginning. Eminent black economists like Walter Williams have pointed out that the minimum wage law results in higher black unemployment because it often makes hiring unskilled workers too expensive for only marginally profitable business. Yet despite the pleadings of black economists, Congressional liberals refuse to support a youth-wage differential, while they continue to favor an unrealistically high minimum wage.

But what about blacks who already have a skill — say construction — and are hoping to get work under a federal contract? Chances are they'll be disappointed, too. If, like many blacks, they're nonunion, they could easily be zinged by the Davis-Bacon Act which requires all workers on federal construction projects to be paid at high prevailing levels. The administration's economists favor repeal of Davis-Bacon, but labor doesn't, so President Carter is leaving it alone.

Or what about black persons, for example, who would like to purchase a taxi? Sorry, even they face tremendous roadblocks. Some cities have tremendously expensive licensing fees. So many blacks who could become small taxicab businessmen, end up collecting welfare.

I believe the business community is approaching these very real problems with genuine solutions. Last year, U.S. corporations voluntarily bought $1.8 billion in goods and services from minority-owned business firms. Business is also trying to help straighten out the scandal-ridden CETA program and redirect it into the private sector training program where blacks can learn real skills for productive jobs.

Obviously, we must all do more. But I believe, along with Benjamin Hooks and an increasing number of other black leaders, that real progress can only come from a stronger private economy and more private jobs. In the words of Hooks himself, "at the national level, and in every local Chamber of Commerce and Better Business Bureau, black leaders and business leaders should be stitting down to deal on the points on which we agree."

Amen.

CB Static: Readers Air Gripes

Dear Mike: I'm a ham operator and I'm quite active on two-meter FM. My gripe is the newcomers who have just upgraded their licenses and get on the air for the first time. You hear them all the time saying things like break or 10-four or other rude, childish CB lingo. I wish they'd listen first before opening their mouths.—R.E., Irving, Texas.

Dear Mr. Wendland: I'm all for the new frequencies. And The FCC should make skip legal. They should also allow CBers to have more power, as much as 50 watts. We need the extra power to be heard over all the congestion.—J.H., Charleston, W. Va.

Dear CB Static: The FCC shouldn't give CBers any new privileges. CBers can't handle what they have now. Until they learn to follow the rules and act like civilized people, they should be ignored.—T.R., Port Huron, Michigan.

Utopia--Frayed At The Edges

THERE WAS A time shortly after World War II and before Vietnam when the U.S. in particular and the Western World in general lived more or less "from crisis to crisis."

For the most part, this "way of life" was brought about by what was then referred to as the Cold War. Detente and SALT I and II and nuclear deterrent and regional alliances were words which were in the future.

During that period, when many persons who had served in the Second World War were turning to an education, raising a family and putting down new roots, things still seemed to move at a somewhat leisurely pace.

THEN, IN ORDER came the Korean conflict, a sudden surge of inflation, the rise of Russia as an atomic power—possibly with stolen U.S. secrets—and later, the Cuban missile crisis.

The "Iron Curtain" was born. Hungary was raped by Soviet tanks and soldiers in full view of the world, and no one answered her desperate cry. Shah Mohammed Reza Pahlavi was firmly reimplanted on the Peacock throne in Iran, with the help of the CIA, it was asserted.

The Marshall Plan, to save Greece and other nations from Communism, was a success. Japan and West Germany, two erstwhile enemies, were given massive infusions of U.S. aid. The Berlin Airlift, also with U.S. backing, had worked. And a man named Harry S Truman, who had the guts to call 'em like he saw them to end World War II continued to do so as President.

In brief, it was a New World which had been born of bloodshed and hope. Surely, this time, the world, or at least a goodly part of it, had been made safe for Democracy.

NOW, SOME 34 years later, there is a question whether any of it is safe for Democracy.

For those who lived those four decades and more, the transition from one to the other has perhaps been more traumatic than even the under 30 younger generation has "suffered" through.

Many of the "great expectations" of the older generation have come to pass. We have all this and that homes. Cars are better engineered, even to quadraphonic sound. Medicine and science and wonder drugs now do wonders.

Suburbia, "a place in the country," is a reality for millions. Shopping malls make all-weather excursions a breeze. New churches, even the drive-in variety, have sprouted everywhere. People now travel to the four corners of the globe without so much as a second thought. Utopia, indeed, must be here!

BUT WHAT OF the people who have brought all of this progress about?

While it is true that from a health standpoint, man can expect to live longer, be cured quicker and survive injury, there are more persons dying from heart attack, cancer, tension and self destruction than ever before.

While our homes indeed are our castles, many are torn by discord and divorce. Child abuse is a common complaint.

While our cars are elegant and good-looking, we kill more than 50,000 persons a year in and with them.

Suburbia, while a haven from the asphalt jungle, also has become a nightmare to many as a Big Brother government moves in to regulate everything from working conditions to where a youngster goes to school.

And while we travel the globe and understand one another on a person-to-person, people-to-people basis, the leaders of the world talk of conflict and war.

IF THIS, indeed, is Utopia, then there must be something better.

In a world where "instant news" and instant replay brings everything from the Super Bowl to a Super Peace Treaty into our living rooms, along with a lot of other things, one would assume that mankind has reached the millennium.

With such wizardry, "solving our problems," personal, business, governmental and international, should be a snap. Just feed them into a computer, push the right button and they will come out "programmed."

Ah, Peace—of mind and the world—it's wonderful.

THE PROBLEM, of course, is that it hasn't worked out that way. There must be a reason.

At the risk of seeming simple and even preachy, we will be so bold as to suggest that while improving upon everything enumerated here, including the problems, we forgot the main ingredient—Mankind himself.

We forgot to do something about man's inherent weaknesses—greed, ignorance, inhumanity to one's fellowman, a failure to apply a few simple rules which haven't changed since man started sharing this earth.

We do not suggest that a "turn to religion," whether of the more orthodox, born again or cult, is the answer. We do suggest, however, that until we learn to apply the Golden Rule, to accept the fact that Life itself imposes certain responsibilities and obligations upon each of us in our dealings with one another, we aren't likely to change the basic things in our lives or postpone Armageddon forever.

Only an educated, well-meaning, God-fearing and worshiping individual willing to accept his role as a responsible individual can make it the kind of world we all claim we want.

It's not only something to think about this Spring Sunday, but every day for the rest of each of our lives.

HENRY J. TAYLOR:

Solar Energy Is A Hit And Myth Proposition

PRESIDENT CARTER'S demand that Congress come up with "an ambitious course for solar energy" leaves Congress totally bewildered. When you investigate solar energy's potential, it vanishes like a pricked balloon.

President Carter is beholden to the environmental extremists. He pampers Ralph Nader, constantly having him at the White House. Our President also favors the Nader groups, the Sierra Club, "Friends of the Earth," Wilderness Society, National Wildlife Federation, etc. And they have gone wacky about solar energy.

Moreover, President Carter makes it his business to see that they work hand in glove with the Environmental Protection Agency. It is an overblown bureaucracy. As if inflation were no problem in the United States, the EPA alone scoops up annually a multimillion-dollar payroll. The EPA has, as well, multitudinous freewheeling volunteers.

UNKNOWN TO our public, the EPA can blackball nearly all types of major construction merely by invoking the abused name of ecology. It is the final word on the majority of job-producing, consumer-needed projects.

The Nader groups have joined in making solar energy their baby. And, once again, these environmental extremists have gone wacky. They deal in constant oversimplifications, refusing to recognize the facts about solar energy.

The sun is a star, our nearest star. It is 93 million miles away. It is a small star and it is young; not yet living long enough to burn up much of its hydrogen.

OUR SUN IS sending the earth almost 200 billion megawatts of pure, pollution-free energy. This potential is the basis for outrageous oversimplifications.

The great Shell Oil Company is affiliated with a solar power concern. Optimistically, Shell executives tell me that by the year 2000 solar energy may supply not more than 15 percent of America's present energy needs. Even so, tremendous technical difficulties remain. And they are largely unknown.

On the practical side, solar energy is merely a dream. Rooftop water heaters, space vehicles, etc., already use sun power.

Shell executives and most specialists prefer a solar farm gathering sunlight on immense areas. They chose places like California, Idaho, New Mexico, Utah or Texas deserts. These focus on special pipes, heated by radial energy to possibly 1,000 degrees.

But a solar farm requires immense areas. Environmental extremists, mum as the Sphinx, must see that solar farms defeat the practical prospect.

ON THE OTHER hand, our technical centers have given us weather, communications, military intelligence, etc. satellites. And there is some prospect of solar-powered satellites orbiting continually in space. They could collect the sun's energy 365 days a year, convert this into microwave energy by a proven principle and beam it down to specially constructed receiving antennae.

Technicians tell me a satellite system would have about six times the power potential of an earthbound solar farm. But the solar cells are a basic drawback. A bigger satellite payload means they must be raised to at least 20 percent of theoretical capacity.

President Carter fails to tell us that solar energy is a long, long way off. He is as wrong about it as a summer oyster.

Denver City Woman Says Washington Created Crisis

Editor, Avalanche-Journal:

When the energy "crisis" hit us immediately following our 10-year war in Vietnam, I was and still am convinced that the crisis, if any, was created in Washington.

It has been almost 10 years since the vast oil field on Alaska's North Slope was discovered, yet not a drop of oil has reached most consumers because of government harassment of pipeline builders. It now appears that if we ever do receive Alaskan oil where it is needed, the little dictator in Panama, to whom our "statesmen" recently gave our canal, must be given the opportunity to seize the tankers or close the canal.

The current hullabaloo over a few worthless ducks found dead on a salt lake in Andrews County, that has shut down an oil field, is just one example of the government-inspired energy crisis. Incidentally, about 25 years ago, hundreds of ducks died on a lake in Bailey County, more than 50 miles from an oil well.

The gasoline burned by the promoters of the Andrews County hullabaloo is just as important as that used by productive citizens. Besides, the salaries of those government agents contribute to inflation because they create nothing but hardship for those trying to produce.

In my opinion, the much ballyhooed Israeli-Egyptian peace treaty is nothing more than a grand tax rip-off for Americans and an ultimate excuse to go to war, on behalf of Israel, against the Arabs for their oil. Then we shall see how cheap oil is.

Government holding the price of so-called "old" oil down to $5.25 per barrel is another example of how Washington creates the energy crisis.

Midland Man Says 'It's Not Too Late' To Save Canal

Editor, Avalanche-Journal:

The deadline for saving the Panama Canal is March 31. If we the people do not wake up in time the canal will be lost. According to the Constitution the House of Representatives must also voice its approval if some territory of the U.S. is to be given away or disposed of (Article IV, Section 3, Clause 2).

Rep. John Murphy, D-N.Y., returned recently from Panama and was shocked at the new Panamanian demands. Panama wants the right to tax American companies in the canal zone retroactively back to 1903.

They are demanding that all moveable property in the U.S. canal zone be given to Panama; that the Coco Solo naval base be completely restored after 20 years of non-use. So we would have to give Panama about $150 million of moveable equipment and millions of tax dollars to restore the naval base and all American businesses would close down if the retroactive taxation would become a reality.

Does this sound like the President said: That the give-away would not cost America "a single dollar"?

To give away the canal will cost the U.S. a minimum of $4.1 billion. However this does not include the replacement which could run to $20 billion, some say.

We can still write our representatives and tell them we oppose the giveaway of the canal for some of the reasons given above. Rep. Carroll Hubbard is the chairman of the House subcommittee on the Panama Canal. His address is: 3576 House Annex No. 2, Washington, D.C. 20515.

Citizen Offers Thanks To Firemen, Police In Storm

Editor, Avalanche-Journal:

Saturday night, March 17, 1979 my business was hit by high winds. I would like to take this opportunity to compliment Chief J. T. Alley and Chief Tom Foster of the police and fire departments of the City of Lubbock for the quality of their public servants.

To firemen from Station No. 5 and to Cpl. Ralph Bowen Jr. of the Patrol Division, I would like to say Thank You. My wife and I have never been treated with more concern and courtesy. These fine men risked their safety and worked tirelessly under the worst of circumstances to help in every possible way.

My family and business firm are forever grateful for their help. I have found still another reason for the old slogan "Lucky Me, I Live In Lubbock."

Lubbockite Raises His Voice In Praises For Hub City

Editor, Avalanche-Journal:

This might be called "Hub City."

I write this little ditty, about Lubbock, the Hub City; with its country and western singers, disco swingers and Red Raiders.

If you want to sweat (sic) some slick chicks, take a stroll on the campus of Texas Tech. Texas has cowtown and Big D, but coming on is the Hub City.

Amid the cotton and maize, with its long sunny days, I've been to Newark, Keokuk, Little Rock, but I'll settle for Lubbock.

The dust may blow and it might snow, but I'd rather be here, than Toledo or Chicago. And too I want you to know I like the music and singing of Lubbock's Chicano.

I came from the sun and sand country, but it wasn't for me; I like Hub City with its congeniality and hospitality.

I was born in corn country up by the Missouri. At night, there is that circle of amber light. There's things to see all around town, including a preserved Prairie Dog town. I'll close this little ditty by saying, a wide town with a wide smile, that's "Hub City."

Teaching Of Creation In Schools Urged By Reader

Editor, Avalanche-Journal:

The Bible tells us that God is Sovereign; that He is in absolute control. How can the world be in such trouble if an absolute righteous God is in control? The answer is that man has volition. It is man's choice that brought on the problems of today.

God in his infinite wisdom has so designed creation that all opposition to Him represents sin and all sin is destructive. Given a little time, all opposition to God will self-destruct.

Our Pilgrim Fathers were mostly Puritans fleeing the persecutions of the Church in Europe. They so firmly established the laws of God on this continent that a free nation was born. Freedom is founded upon responsibility to God.

Our Declaration of Independence states, "We hold these truths to be self evident that all men are created equal. That they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights..."

What we are seeing in our nation and the world is just the opposite. Man has chosen to deny God. For more than 50 years, we have been teaching evolution as a source of origin. This false and foolish philosophy has brainwashed students for so long that lawmakers and judges believe man to be a product of his environment. This applies to the criminal. It is not the criminal's fault, but society and environment, so we are making it soft for the criminal.

We are busing our school children to get the right environment. No consideration is given to the effect upon the individual, it is the environment that receives our concern.

We need to start teaching creation in our schools as an alternate source of origin. There are textbooks available that accomplish this without teaching religion. Then students have a choice and where this is done, their interests are greater, they do much better, and doubt is not cast upon Christian teaching.

VIRGINIA PAYETTE:

Dust To Dust...

ONE REASON Old Dad and I get along so well is that he's near-sighted. That means he can't see dust. He can't see it and I don't mind it. I can also live with peanut butter on the banister.

What's more, you'll never be able to see your reflection in my crockery. (You're taking your chances on most of my mirrors, too.) But Old Dad never notices, and that's a magic combination that beats anything Jack Sprat and old what's her name ever put together.

I mean, given a choice between a man who brings you flowers and one who never, ever, mentions that the top of the refrigerator needs dusting, there's no contest. And anyway, where does it say that tables have to shine every day?

However, there comes a time...

IN OUR CASE, it was money that did it. Lots of money. As in real estate prices. To get to the point, we are about to become part of a whole new set of statistics; namely, the almost 500,000 families who move every year.

The Census Bureau will take note, too. We are joining the hundreds of thousands of frost-bitten folks who are changing the national demography by moving to the sun-belt in hopes of never having to shovel a driveway again.

Changing your way of life involves calling in the real estate broker to help you make a killing on what you hope is the dream home of every prospective buyer. In our case, that also involved getting the cobwebs (and, yes, the dust) out of four floors. "Dream houses" are never dusty.

And so we have been caught up in a frenzy of spring cleaning. Goughing grunge out of corners, touching up paint nicked by tricycles and hauling out all manner of mysterious junk.

ONE REASON a lot of it was mysterious was that it wasn't ours. There's this dungeon-like storeroom in the basement, see, that was full of old doors, telephone books and curtain rods left by previous owners. Plus two baskets of coal, which will give you a rough idea of how long it's been since anybody cleaned in there.

We didn't waste time sorting and saving, although I lingered long over the pile of copper tubing in the corner. With what they're getting for copper these days, that might have covered the down payment on our next house.

But the real-estate gangbusters keep telling us time is what we don't have any of. That they've got clients lined up ready to pounce.

Some of them are so desperate they've been driving by our house, peering anxiously through our windows (dirty, of course) for some sign that we're ready to start the dickering ritual.

WHAT MAKES OUR property so hot, the brokers say, is that it is one of three or four in the village that either aren't (1) in the $300,000-to-$500,000 category or (2) what they call the pits.

They don't mention the state of the economy, but that's what interests me most about this house-selling business. Here we are, in the middle of a budget-busting inflation that has everybody screaming about the high cost of everything, and yet people will pay insane prices for a house with barely a whimper.

Actually, they probably don't have a choice. Given their druthers, most folks would rather not pay $135,000 for a six-room cottage that cost $3,000 in the '30s. But what it costs to build a new one is so scary (up to $100 a square foot and another zillion for the lot), they're forced to settle for an old one, overpriced though it may seem.

And it usually does. In the past year, the average cost of an older home went up 18 percent to more than $56,000. Since 1973, prices have exploded 75.8 percent, and in the last 12 months they've risen more than twice as fast as the consumer price index.

TAKING A longer look, houses now cost three times as much as they did 10 years ago. Mortgage money is tight and getting tighter. It's also expensive; interest rates are up to a record 10 percent and more, when you can find it. Then they add on "points" that up it another notch.

Even so, a record-busting 3,905,000 homes were sold last year, which is 9.3 percent more than the previous high set in 1977. There is, according to the National Association of Realtors, "an unprecedented demand for single-family homes everywhere in the nation."

There's also talk that the housing market has got to cool off one of these days. But until that happens, all a seller has to do, apparently, is list his house at an outrageous price, open the front door and step back to avoid the stampede.

And if the market's that hot, tell me, why am I worrying about dust?

PLEASED WINNER — Hien Nguyen, winner of this year's Lubbock County Spelling Bee, and her father, Duong Nguyen, stop for a moment to talk about the spelling bee and Hien's interest in it. Lubbock County Winner Anticipates Next Contest

As spring vacation neared, many children planned a week of relaxation and entertaining activities. Hien Nguyen, this year's Lubbock County Spelling Bee winner, wanted to use the week to prepare for the regional competition she faces Saturday. Her goal — 600 words a day. When asked how she would manage so many words, she explained that her usual number of words studied per day was 300. Therefore, she felt she could handle the additional amount with so much extra time to study.

Hien's reaction to capturing the Lubbock County title was, "I can't believe I won." Hien is very excited about the Lubbock Regional Spelling Bee Saturday and she's sure "I'll be the smallest one there."

The greatest ambition of this spelling bee winner is to become a doctor. She remarked, "I decided to become a doctor when I was in the first grade and it has stuck in my head since." Her strong interest in the spelling bee comes from the belief that it will help her later on, perhaps enabling her to attend a university with a good "pre-med" department.

A petite 13-year-old, Hien is a typical U.S. teenager who smiles at almost any provocation. She is an eighth-grade student at Christ The King Junior High School, which she attends on a scholarship. She participates in such activities as the yearbook staff and the spelling bee. She is certain that her life isn't very exciting, although some people might disagree with her.

The daughter of Duong Nguyen, a city employee who works in the microfilm department, Hien and her family came to the United States from Da Nang, South Vietnam, in June 1975. Hien is the youngest child and only girl in a family which includes four older brothers. She lives with her father and the two brothers still at home — Ey, 15-years-old and also a student at Christ The King Junior High, and Dein, a 17-year-old student at Monterey and Lubbock High Schools.

Hien's mother remains in Vietnam at this time. Nguyen explained that he hopes he and his children will become American citizens next year and then he will be able to bring his wife and parents to the states. The only way out of Vietnam presently is by ship and Nguyen indicated that is too dangerous. As a citizen, Nguyen could fly his family to the United States easily.

The Nguyen family has lived in Lubbock for the past four years and enjoy it very much. As a group, they feel that Lubbock is a good-sized city with little noise, reasonable traffic and easy accessibility. They feel the people here are friendly and helpful. As Nguyen explained, "I feel like Lubbock is my second city."

National Bee Encourages Goodwill Among Spellers

The opportunity to travel to Washington, D.C. and be honored as a National Spelling Bee finalist means many things to many people. The possibility of national recognition, seeing an entirely new and different place, visiting the nation's capital or simply meeting new people — all are reasons to desire the chance to attend the national bee. But when the time comes and the spellers gather to decide a national winner, the significant events are not always those which are obvious.

Last June, 106 children from across the nation met in Washington to participate in the National Spelling Bee. Finalists came from as far away as Alaska and Mexico City. Some children came only with the representative of the sponsoring newspaper, and other finalists came with parents, making the trip the family summer vacation.

A week packed with activities had been planned for them in addition to the scheduled two-day spelling competition. A grand old hotel of international fame, "The Mayflower" housed them.

There was a trip to Mt. Vernon, a visit to the Smithsonian Institute and a close examination of numerous national monuments. Near the end of the week, a surprise opportunity enabled the spellers to meet and be photographed individually with the First Lady, Mrs. Rosalynn Carter.

Few, if any, of the children were not thoroughly excited about the trip. The events planned, however, appeared to impress the adults of the group far more than the honored students.

The main interests of the spellers centered around two things — the spelling competition and its results and meeting and making friends with the other spellers.

The spellers were almost exclusively interested in the similarities and differences between themselves. The wide range of accents were noted and school systems compared. Everyone seemed to know the latest song by Andy Gibb — the sound of which filled every tour bus. The children quickly paired up, choosing from people they had never met before, a group of friends to share experiences with for the short week.

The spellers were continually juggled from place to place — there was too much to see in such a short time. The highlight of the week was a reception held on the South lawn of the White House for the spellers and their families and sponsors and subsequent visit with Mrs. Carter. Adults were not allowed in the White House as the spellers were photographed with Mrs. Carter. As the spellers quickly filed out of the Executive Mansion, anxious parents and sponsors asked about their experience. Most shrugged and said, "Oh, it was okay," and rushed across the lawn to obtain as many autographs of fellow spellers as possible to fill the autograph books given to them by the bee officials.

By the time most of the spellers arrived in Washington, they had been through rigorous training and competition. Most wanted to do well in the spelling bee, but the general attitude appeared to be one of indifference to the outcome. It would be disappointing to lose too early in the contest, but the chance to visit Washington was reward enough for a large number of the young spellers.

However, there were some children who pushed themselves very hard in order to do well in the meet. The petite, red-haired girl from Topeka, Kan., who won the National Spelling Bee had prepared for the bee four years prior to her visit to Washington. She had spent an unbelievable amount of time studying — far more than most children were willing to devote, especially those with numerous extracurricular activities. She may have come to Washington solely to win the spelling bee but many came to enjoy themselves.

Losing was a hard lesson for some of the children. A bright spot in the week was the compassion of a boy from Las Vegas, Nev. for the other children. He went out of the competition during the first round of spelling. He spent the rest of the time rescuing each speller who dropped out of the spelling, comforting them while he ignored his own elimination from the contest. In fact, that same boy spent much of his time that week helping other spellers with problems which came up during the spelling bee week.

After the spelling bee was over everyone could relax — except the girl who won. She appeared on "Good Morning, America" and was interviewed extensively. Other children would point her out as she walked to her place on a tour bus, seeming a little surprised to find the girl most of them had not really noticed suddenly a celebrity.

Finally, the week had ended and each party went its separate way. Most of the children had a multitude of autographs and addresses for correspondence with newly-found friends. All appeared disheartened at the idea of leaving the wonderful people they had come to care for behind them.

The week had definitely been a meaningful experience for most of the spellers. Many had never been far from home. The trip which was the result of long hours of study for a great number of students provided a valuable lesson of goodwill for all people involved in the spelling bee process.

Many Prizes Awarded To Regional Bee Winners

A child who participates in the spelling bee competition, at any level, gains a wealth of knowledge. A clearer understanding of the English language, improved spelling ability and a certain amount of self-confidence can be gained through the endeavor. However, there are other rewards connected with winning at the regional level. A number of prizes are offered to those ranking highly in the regional contest.

Winner of the Lubbock Regional Spelling Bee will represent the Lubbock Avalanche-Journal in the National Spelling Bee June 4-8. He will receive an expense-paid trip to Washington, D.C. and the chance to compete with spellers from all over the country for additional prizes. A number of activities and the opportunity to meet a wide range of different people from all across the United States will highlight the visit.

The second-place winner with receive a 30-volume set of "Britannica 3," the 15th edition of "Encyclopaedia Britannica." Offered by the publishers of "Encyclopaedia Britannica" to all winners of local spelling bees, it is the first new edition since 1929 and the first complete restructuring of the "Encyclopaedia Britannica" since the first edition was published in three volumes between 1768 and 1771.

The "Britannica 3" is divided into three parts — the Micropaedia, the Macropaedia and the Propaedia. The micropaedia consists of 10 volumes which serve as an index to the main text and as a short-entry encyclopedia. It provides a "concise statement of factual information about a particular subject and includes references to pertinent macropaedia articles."

Subtitled "Knowledge In Depth," the macropaedia contains 19 volumes which deal with scholarly subjects in depth. It also includes an annotated bibliography at the end of each entry for further study.

Finally, the one-volume propaedia serves as a table of contents and provides a "topical outline of human knowledge." Some of the areas of learning focused upon by the propaedia are matter and energy, art, technology, religion, human society and the history of Mankind.

A Zenith integrated stereo system with Allegro 1000 speakers has been donated courtesy of Amarillo Hardware, for the child placing third in the regional meet. The stereo features an AM/FM tuning meter, automatic frequency control, an automatic record changer, cassette tape recorder and player and a hinged dust cover. The speakers feature computer-designed tuned ports that enrich the reproduction of sound. This is the 29th year that Zenith and its distributors have participated in the National Spelling Bee as contributors of prizes.

Fourth prize will be "Webster's New Collegiate Dictionary," offered by G. & C. Merriam Co., publishers of Merriam-Webster dictionaries. The New Collegiate contains more than 150,000 vocabulary entries, 191,000 exact definitions, 23,000 verbal illustrations and 900 pictorial illustrations. Webster's New Collegiate dictionary was first published in 1973 and is updated with every printing.

Chosen as fifth prize in this year's Lubbock Regional Spelling Bee is "Webster's Collegiate Thesaurus," also offered by G. & C. Merriam Co. There are 100,000 synonyms, antonyms, related and contrasted words and idiomatic equivalents (including words and phrases recently incorporated into the English language) to be found in this thesaurus. Exact synonyms are offered, which according to Merriam, has never been attempted previously.

A "meaning core" is also used in this thesaurus. That is, a brief statement or definition shared by synonyms. Verbal illustrations to show use in context are utilized.

The Houghton Mifflin Co. has donated a copy of "The American Heritage Dictionary of the English Language: The New College Edition" as sixth prize in the regional bee. The 155,000 entries and 4,000 illustrations found in the dictionary include terms from business, science, and technology. Preferred usage of terms are built on decisions made by Edwin Newman's Usage Panel of over 140 writers, editors and public speakers. Definitions begin with central meanings.

A hard-cover copy of the "1979 World Almanac," specially engraved with the words "1979 National Spelling Bee," has been provided by World Almanac for use as seventh prize in the regional spelling bee. First published in 1868, 111 years ago, it contains such information as the top ten news stories of 1978, a listing of all U.S. senators and representatives, Supreme Court decisions of the past year, population statistics and sports records.

These prizes are awarded across the nation by sponsoring newspapers. In addition, the Lubbock Avalanche-Journal will present county winners with an engraved plaque recognizing that accomplishment. The regional spelling bee will receive the trip to Washington, but will also be given an engraved trophy cup to keep as a reminder of that event.

While in Berlin, she had flute lessons with the principal flutist of the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra. She also studied flute with Charles Osborn at Western Michigan. By competition she won a position in the Kalamazoo College Bach Festival, playing Bach flute sonatas. She also has played with the Fayatteville, Ark., Symphony Orchestra.

Citak has a bachelor of music degree in piano from Western Michigan where he studied with Phyllis Rappeport and the pianist-composer Curtis Smith. A master of music degree in piano was awarded by the University of Arkansas where his keyboard teacher was Jerome Rappaport.

Among his competitions he lists winning the Battle Creek, Mich., Symphony Orchestra competition where the prize was the opportunity to play a piano concerto with the orchestra. He has played a solo piano recital at Texas Tech and has accompanied at Central Arkansas State University where he recorded for a PBS television station with trumpeter Ron Fox.

Citak is the piano technician for Texas Tech. He has worked as a production supervisor for a piano company in Conway, Ark., in charge of quality control of grand pianos. While there he prepared pianos for such internationally famous pianists as David Barillan.

Mrs. Wilson, assistant professor of piano at Texas Tech, has performed at the church previously on piano, organ and harpsichord. In today's performance she is appearing as cellist with Mr. and Mrs. Citak.

She studied cello with Paul Ellsworth and Ben Smith at Texas Tech and with Tsuyoshi Tsutsumi at Indiana University. She has held the position of principal cellist with the Lubbock High School Symphony Orchestra, the Texas Tech Symphony Orchestra, the Midland-Odessa Symphony Orchestra and the Ames, Iowa, Symphony Orchestra.

The program tonight includes the Toccata, played by Miss Young, Parita No. 1 in B Major, played by Miss Jennings, and Sonata No. 5 for Flute and Continuo, performed by Mr. and Mrs. Citak and Mrs. Wilson.

The Toccata is a free structural form for organ, harpsichord or lute, characterized by virtuosity (rapid scales, arpeggios, etc.), free rhythms and a rhapsodic character. Bach wrote 12 of them for various keyboard instruments.

The Parita is a term which began to displace the term Suite by the end of the 17th century. Both forms included four or more movements, each having the character of a Renaissance dance: allemande, courante, sarabande, and gigue.

The Instrumental Sonata of J.S. Bach was composed of a for a solo instrument and "basso continuo." It consisted of several sections or movements in contrasting tempos and textures.

Lecture Slated On Ancient City

Friends of the Classics in Lubbock are sponsoring a lecture at 3 p.m. today in The Museum of Texas Tech University on Petra, the Rose Red City.

The free public lecture is being given by Brooke Najjab. The lecture on the ancient city is of particular interest to Bible scholars, archaeologists and travelers, according to Dr. Mary L. Brewer, spokesman for Friends of the Classics.

Mrs. Najjab received a bachelor of science degree in anthopology from the University of Utah. She spent two years at Petra as a member of a team of archaeologists from the University of Utah, making surface and sub-surface surveys of Petra.

Mrs. Najjab will receive a master of arts degree in museum science from Texas Tech University in June.

She is being assisted by her husband, Mohammed Najjab, whose firsthand knowledge of the area comes from living for many years with Bedouins in the area of Petra.

The ancient city in the Holy Land was rediscovered by explorer John L. Buckhardt in 1812.

Biblical scripture refers to Sela, the capital of the Nabataeans, people of Arab descent who moved into the Edomite territory from the south.

Sela, later called Petra, the center of this invasion, is often regarded as the fulfillment of the prophecy of Edom' desolation, found in the Book of Jeremiah 49: 16-18 and in the Book of Obadiah 1: 1-4.

Petra is a city of temples and tombs carved out of seven multi-colored stones. Through their knowledge of engineering, the Nabataeans controlled water routes of caravans bound for Egypt.

Modern American Society Presents Problems For Widows, Widowers

Deaths & Dying: Challenge & Change

(EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the 10th in a series of 15 articles exploring "Death and Dying: Challenge and Change." In this article, Helena Lopata, author of "Women as Widows," discusses why life for a surviving spouse is particularly difficult in urban America. This series was written for Courses by Newspaper, a program developed by University Extension, University of California, San Diego, and funded by a grant from the National Endowment for the Humanities.)

By HELENA ZNANIERKI LOPATA

THERE ARE OVER 10 million widows and about 1.8 million widowers in America today. The average age of a widow is 62, and that of a widower somewhat higher.

For many if not most of these widows and widowers, the death of their partner has meant not only the grief associated with loss, but emotional, social, and financial problems as well.

Life for widows and widowers in modern America is unique. Most other societies have not considered marriage to be as important a relationship as we do. Elsewhere, marriages are often embedded in kinship, village, or community values, needs, and goals. Surviving spouses thus have a variety of established supports to fall back upon when the crisis of death orcurs.

Most widowers soon remarry, and in many societies, widow inheritance, remarriage, or "levir" arrangements are usually available to the widow. The Bible mentions the levir system by which a male relative of the deceased "enters the hut" of the widow "to raise up the seed" of the late husband, insuring that the widow continues to bear offspring in his name.

The widow and her children are thus absorbed into a new unit or retain membership in the deceased's family line, guaranteeing care and social integration.

It is the absence of such an integrating group that makes life for the surviving spouse in urban America so difficult and potentially traumatic. There are no common or accepted procedures for the reinvolvement of the widow or widower in any family or social unit.

FURTHERMORE, THE DISPARITY in the number of widows and widowers, caused by the longer life span of women and the tendency for husbands to be older than their wives, means that many widows do not remarry.

There are other reasons besides lack of social support that can make the death of a spouse particularly traumatic for the surviving partner in our society. Americans infuse marriage with enormous importance, entering it through personal choice and leaving it through divorce if it is not sufficiently satisfactory.

Each spouse, moreover, is expected to become involved in many of the other's social roles, and as a couple they develop a particular lifestyle. Other social relationships, with the exception of parenting, are expected to be secondary to the marriage bond. Thus, the nuclear family is considered the main focal unit and source of emotional support, especially for the woman.

The death of the spouse is bound to have a profound effect on the survivor in cases in which the relationship is the very personal and emotional interdependent one idealized by many Americans.

A partner's death also disrupts those aspects of life in which the spouse had been involved as companion, source and object of love, and the person around whom time and work were organized. In addition, the spouse has often provided the major source of identity, particularly for a woman. The disruption of these roles by death can result in feelings of desertion, of desolation, of loneliness, and sometimes of rejection.

The death of a spouse disrupts other social relations and roles as well. A mother must develop new ways of acting as a parent. Children are affected by the loss of a father or mother and need special attention at the very time when the surviving parent is going through his or her own grief.

FRIENDSHIPS WITH OTHER couples are often affected by the death of one of the partners. A widow, for example, may be regarded as a threat by a married woman, and the imbalance of the previous symmetry can cause married friends to pull away. A widower, on the other hand,

QUESTIONS:

1. How many widows are there in America today, and what is their average age?
2. What makes widowhood particularly traumatic in the United States?
3. What kinds of feeling can result from the disruption of social roles by death?
4. Do women or men show greater signs of personal disorganization following the death of a spouse?
5. What kind of women do best in their adjustment to widowhood?

ANSWERS:

1. Over 10 million: 62.
2. The absence of a group that reintegrates the widow into society.
3. Desertion, desolation, loneliness, rejection.
4. Men.
5. Those with personal, social and emotional resources who have not been totally dependent on their husband.

whose wife had assumed the role of social secretary, may become isolated after her death.

Financial as well as social problems often confront widows and widowers. The death of the breadwinner can deprive the widow and the children of the main source of income. Social security, when available, does not replace paychecks. Employment outside the home is often difficult for widows with small children or those without suitable job skills.

The widower, too, may face heavy financial burdens if he must hire a homemaker. Men are often inefficient in the home, because of their upbringing and the prior division of labor.

It is important to remember that widows and widowers in America today form at least two historical generations — aged 64 and under, 65 and over — that are very different from Americans who will be widowed in the future.

Almost half of the present widows (48 percent), most of whom are old, were born into a non-industrialized society — on farms, in villages, or small towns, while slightly more than three-quarters were raised by non-urban parents. Many had minimal schooling. Their lives have been difficult, especially if they are members of minority groups, as they raised their families through depressions, wars, and inflation. They witnessed tremendous changes, including the shift from an agricultural to an industrial society, with all the consequences on family and community life that attend such a change.

MANY OF THESE widows had been taught not to take an active role outside their home, and to work for pay only until marriage or the birth of their first child. "Home" was relatively isolated from community life, from other families, and even from the extended kinship group.

As a result, many are unable to depend on anyone other than children for support, and the children grow up and tend to leave home. It is difficult for women who had been primarily homemakers all their adult lives to restructure their relationships after their children leave and again after the death of their husbands.

Many widows thus become increasingly isolated, always having been on the periphery of the urban world, "urban villagers" without a village-like neighoorhood to provide love and support.

There are, in contrast, widows who are able to retain a close family network. There are widows who are fully active in neighborhood, church, and job. There are widows who lead a truly urban life, utilizing the resources the society has developed to meet the social, service, emotional, and economic needs of its members.

These are the women with personal resources of ability, health, adequate finances, and past lifestyle habits to live independently, drawing to themselves support of their own choosing. They developed a network of relationships in marriage that they are able to continue, with modifications and replacements, in widowhood.

As our society moves into the future and women acquire more education and flexibility in moving in and out of the home and the job market, the numbers of such independent widows will expand.

We know much less about widowers because there have been few studies of their situation. According to a 1974 "U.S. News and World Report" survey comparing death, accident, alcoholism, and mental health statistics for widows and widowers, the men showed greater signs of personal disorganization than the women.

Yet our society seems less worried about widowers than widows—an attitude that reflects the traditional assumption that a woman cannot live independently without a man.

Recent research of metropolitan Chicago widows indicates that many are independent, and that the most successful are women who have developed their own personal resources rather than depending entirely on the resources provided by their husbands or children. Many others, unfortunately, live very restrictedly in spite of a vast network of resources that urban America has developed for its members in need.

The views expressed in Courses by Newspaper are those of the authors only and do not necessarily reflect those of the University of California, the funding agency, the distributing agency, or the participating newspapers and colleges.

Next Week: Vanderlyn R. Pine, author of "Caretaker of the dead," discusses traditional funeral practices and some recent criticisms of them.

Rome Planning Rail-Air Line

ROME (UPI) — Travelers arriving at Rome's Leonardo da Vinci international airport may someday be able to ride into town by fast train.

The government has agreed in principle that an existing railroad line from Rome to the fishing village of Fiumicino should be extended to the airport's international and domestic terminals. The money — $23 million — is there, but detailed plans still have to be worked out.

One big argument is whether the elevated railroad line should run over the statue of Leonardo da Vinci, the Renaissance artist after whom the airport is named.

Strait-Laced GOP Claimed Violator Of Tennis Rule

By DICK WEST

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The current issue of The Washingtonian magazine offers an "inside" look at "the good, the bad and the ugly" in the now-adjourned 95th Congress.

It includes more than 20 lists of lawgivers who distinguished themselves in such fields as publicity grabbing, temper fits, boring speeches and backstage deals. It might appear that these categories would run the gamut of congressonal character defects, but any veteran observer of life on Capitol ill could enumerate a good many more.

There was, for example, no mention of Rep. Paul Findley, an otherwise strait-laced Illinois Republican who is regarded by those in the know as Congress' most flagrant foot faulter.

On virtually every serve, according to informants who have seen him play tennis, Findley steps over the base line in violation of the rules.

It is not, these sources say, a case of occasionally dragging a toe a silly millimeter too far in one's zeal to get more body into one's serve. This is a blatant case of trespassing with both feet.

When Findley serves, which he does with a great deal of vigor, he takes two or three quick little steps, somewhat reminiscent of Johnny Unitas dropping back to pass, only forward. Momentum then carries him right onto the playing surface before he strikes the ball.

Why has such a chronic, habitual trangressor not been previously exposed and duly pilloried? This, after all, supposedly has been a year when Congress was acutely sensitive to misconduct among its own.

One answer may be that foot faulting is sort of the halitosis of tennis — even your best friends won't tell you. In a "friendly" game, calling attention to foot faults is considered picky.

There are, of course, notable exceptions.

President Carter is reported to call foot faults on his opponents in matches at the White House. And Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, confessed in an interview that he is something of a stickler.

"What do you mean your best friends won't tell you?" Bentsen scoffed. "I call a foot fault every time I get aced."

Neverthelss, at the public court level this particular infraction generally is overlooked. The guilty party, momentarily stunned by the surprise and wonder of having gotten his serve over the net, likely is unaware that his foot almost went over the net too. His opponent, if he notices the encroachment at all, politely ignores it.

But Bob Davis, a member of the Washington Area Tennis Officials Association, says it is not only "legally permissable" for one player to point out another player's intrusion; it behooves him to do so. Furthermore, an offending player is ethically obligated to call foot faults on himself.

"Foot fault rules are part of the game, like the one bounce limitation," Davis will tell you.

Positive Thinking

By Norman Vincent Peale

IS IT POSSIBLE to get on top of worry, depression and other negative emotions? Some have found that it is. A way that has proved successful for many is the use of twelve magic principles, magic because of the amazing way they work.

These twelve dynamic prinicples were first compiled by psychiatrist Dr. Smiley Blanton. I have passed these along to many defeated people who learned to eliminate defeat from victorious living through their application. I am sure they can produce results for anyone who really tries them.

It is possible to do little more than suggest these principles in the limited space of this column, but even a fregmentary statement will give you the general idea. Their proper use can help you gain freedom from those deadly destroyers, the negative emotions.

1. Think health, talk heath, act health and you will go a long way toward being healthy — provided, of course, you observe the common laws of body control.

2. Be an actor, acting love instead of hate. What you act tends to become fact.

3. Shift your attention deliberately from the thing you are worrying about. The mind can only occupy itself with the object of its attention. So give attention to positive attitudes not to worry.

The second trilogy of principles continues. 4. Cultivate opposites. If you are fearful cultivate courage. If you are weak cultivate strength. If gloomy cultivate joy. Act "as if" and you tend to become that — the opposite of what you are.

5. Rationalize your worries, hates, jealousies. Put them on the dissecting table: ruthlessly take apart. Usually you'll find there is very little substance to them.

6. Get a sense of the perspective of time and distance. How little great worries seem, how unimportant resentments, in the years after.

THE NEXT THREE principles are also vital ones. 7. Cultivate optimism. Always look on the bright side. Keep the mouth lines up. Smile and be happy. William James claimed that we are happy because we smile rather than we smile because we are happy. In other words, the smile comes first. Well, maybe so, but it's still a fact that happiness puts a smile on the lips. Cultivate optimism and you are likely to develop a happy state of life.

8. Don't talk trouble. It only activates more of it. Talk life up, not down. Talking always tends to create for its activities the immense power of thought. Don't practice negative autosuggestion by the use of destructive words. Remember Emerson's warning that a word is alive. It can by repeated use either create or destroy.

And the final three principles: 9. Develop Exo-centric versus Ego-Centric interests. Forget yourself, lose yourself in the big exciting world. One of the greatest of all laws is that he who forgets himself really finds himself. When you get outside your little constrictive self-world you grow bigger in the larger world.

10. Superimpose the positive on the negative. When a negative thought comes along practice cancelling it with a positive thought and affirmation. Do this enough and you will become positive in your attitudes.

11. Practice strong affirmation like: "Life is good." "I believe." "People are wonderful." "God loves me." Such affirmations lift you into the area of power. Affirmations tend to reproduce in kind.

12. Assert and dwell on your Divine origin. Say to yourself ever day, especially when things get dark and trouble stares you in the face, "I am a child of God." Doing this will help you to realize that whatever comes you have Someone watching over you and helping you.

ARE THESE TWELVE life principles practical or theoretical? Well a letter received from a 41-year-old engineer says: "When you suggested those principles in response to the troubles I was having, frankly, I couldn't help regarding them as well-meaning but impractical advice. But I simply had to find relief and a new way of life, my doctor had warned me that I was heading for a crack-up.

It wasn't easy for I was a very negative person, but the more I worked at this 12-point formula the more I found myself getting on top of things.

Basic Energy-Saving Features Outlined

TOLEDO, Ohio (UPI) — There are basic energy-saving features all homes should have: caulking, weatherstripping, storm windows and insulation to at least minimum standards, says Guy O. Mabry, vice president of Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corporation.

"Once you know your needs and have established a budget to meet them, you're ready to purchase," he points out.

Before buying, Mabry recommends consumers seek advice from a variety of reliable sources, including local utilities, building supply dealers and insulations contractors.

Not only will the energy-saving home improvements help cut home heating and cooling costs, he said, but they may qualify you for tax credit under the federal government's new residential energy conservation tax law.

EXPERIMENTAL DISC-CHAIN — This experimental disc-chain, under development by the Texas Agricultural Experiment Station at Vernon, shows promise of reducing cost and energy requirements by one-half to two-thirds for seedbed preparation on rough, log-littered, rootplowed rangeland.

Disc-Chain Aids Ranges

VERNON (Special) — An experimental disc-chain under development by the Texas Agricultural Experiment Station at Vernon shows promise of reducing cost and energy requirements by one-half to two-thirds for seedbed prepration on rough, log-littered, rootplowed rangeland, according to Harold Wiedemann, station engineer.

When used in conjunction with aerial seeding of Kleingrass, satisfactory grass stands for rangeland have been established by the end of the first growing season. Both the disc-chain and aerial seeding are well suited to treatment of extensive acres of rough land.

"Rootplowing and reseeding mesquite-infested rangeland offer excellent potential to control brush and increase forage production on highly productive sites," Wiedemann says.

The practice has been greatly hampered by costs, which often exceeded the potential of the land, to clean-up the log and stumps following rootplowing so a cropland type drill could be used to plant grass.

The need for raking is eliminated in most situations with the disc-chain — a savings of up to $25 per acre. Seeding rates of one-half of standard rates appear promising for satisfactory stands on rangeland and further reduce costs.

The disc-chain is one of several developments resulting from long-term reseeding research started in 1969 by Wiedemann, who is stationed at the Vernon Research and Extension Center. His work spans 21 ranch site seedings in an effort to develop more effective and economical brush control and reseeding equipment.

"In one of our first tests, six clearing operations were conducted and we still tore up the commercial drill," remembers B. T. Cross, a technician on the project.

Research on rootplowed rangeland at four ranch locations over a five-year period has shown seedbed prepared by discing to be consistantly better than chaining or roller chopping based on the number of seeded grass plants per square foot following the first growing season.

"Chaining, however, is substantially cheaper, so we decided to marry the disc and the chain to gain the advantages of both," Wiedemann says.

"Our most promising disc-chain was constructed by welding 24-inch diameter, one-fourth thick disc blades to every other chain link of an anchor chain weighing 34 pounds per foot."

Swivels made from D-8 track rollers are attached to each end of the chain. When pulled between two crawler tractors at a 45 degree angle, the chain rotates to give the discing action similar to a giant one-way plow.

Attaching the chain to the drawbar of the lead tractor and the corner of bulldozer blade of the trailing tractor provides maximum operation width and maneuverability.

Drawbar testing indictes that chain lengths up to 50 feet can be pulled by a D-6 Caterpillar tractor. The engineer says, however, that these tests are preliminary and do not reflect a broad range of conditions.

Exploratory tests in 1977 with a small disc-chain indicated excellent potential. Grasss stands in the same rootplowing study in clay soils near Vernon with smooth chaining plus aerial seeding were unsatisfactory, while discing plus aerial seeding were fair, and discing and drill seeding gave excellent grass stands.

In 1978, tests were conducted in cooperation with the W. T. Waggoner Ranch near Vernon, Wiedemann says. A clay loam site was rootplowed in the winter. It was infested with a dense stand of regrowth mesquite following aerial spraying, chaining, and two resprayings in the previous 25 years.

Smooth and disc chains were the only seedbed equipment capable of traversing the log and stump littered area without undue mechanical failure. Seedbeds were prepared in February and aerial seeding of selection-75 Kleingrass was conducted the first week of March. Treatment comparisons were based on grass densities following the first growing season.

Grass densities were three times greater in the disc-chained plots (0.41 plants per square foot) as compared with smooth chained plots (0.13 plants per square foot) using one pound PLS of Kleingrass per acre.

Seeding rate studies on disc-chained seedbed resulted in 0.44 and 0.52 plants per square foot for one and two pounds PLS per acre of Kleingrass. Two pounds per acre is the standard recommended rate.

Grass densities of 0.50 plants per square foot are considered a good stand for rangeland by the Soil Conservation Service, Wiedemann says. Many of the native grasses, such as sideoats grama, were not destroyed by the treatments.

Large-scale tests at four sites on the Waggoner Ranch totaled 1,450 acres. They were treated by rootplowing, disc-chaining, smooth chaining two times to break up large dry clods, and aerial seeding of 1 pound PLS per acre of Kleingrass.

COTTON INC. PRESIDENT DUKES WOOTERS last week said he found no fault with letters sent to cotton producers by former Cotton Inc. vice president John McNutt that are alleged to have channeled cotton export orders to specific growers.

At a press briefing in New York called by Cotton Inc., Wooters said: "When we started out, we had no guidelines. McNutt was just getting started. He didn't know."

Wooters said Cotton Inc. has since switched to a policy of sending inquiries to Amcot, a cooperative trade group, and the American Cotton Shippers Association, a merchant group, to get export orders filled.

Cotton Inc. has responded to a subpoena for its records from the U. S. attorneys office in Los Angeles, Wooters said, and the U. S. Department of Agriculture is conducting a special audit of the group's affairs.

THE FEDERAL INVESTIGATIONS into Cotton Inc. activities stem from a $60,000 supplemental salary arrangement Wooters had with the J. G. Boswell Co., a California producer despite a congressional mandate that his salary should not exceed the $63,500 salary of the secretary of agriculture.

McNutt, now working for Keith Walden, an Arizona cotton producer who is a former member of Cotton Inc.'s board, has acknowledged that he "sent more than one but less than 10" letters to U. S. producers with information about a European textile mill order.

Wooters also is alleged to have directed a European mill order for 10,000 bales to J. G. Boswell.

The Cotton Inc. president last week said he did not direct the order to Boswell but "mentioned to Boswell there was an opportunity to replace Egyptian cotton."

BOSWELL IS THE LARGEST U. S. PRODUCER and was the only one capable of filling the order, Wooters said. In helping one producer to sell cotton abroad, he said, he was, in effect, helping all to remove some pressure of supplies from the U. S. market and thus was aiding all cotton producers.

Wooters said he had a consulting job with J. G. Boswell for two years. His salary was $60,000, which was approximately the amount shaved from his cotton Inc. salary during the congressional mandate.

Whether the $60,000 was a refund requested by Boswell from its contributions to Cotton Inc. is not clear.

Asked about his current salary as Cotton Inc. president, Wooters turned to E. Hervey Evans, North Carolina producer and one of Cotton Inc.'s directors, who attended the conference. Evans said Wooters's salary is more than $121,000 a year but would not specify how much above that.

THERE IS NO LAW THAT SAYS COTTON INC. could not buy and sell cotton, nor one that says it could not channel cotton export orders, but it is Cotton Inc.'s policy to refrain from those practices, Evans said.

The USDA is reported to have said that Cotton Inc.'s charter does not allow it to get involved in the direct sale of cotton.

Wooters asked reporters to take note of a seven-page document in which Cotton Inc. board members expressed support of his activities as president.

Evans then emphasized a paragraph that says, in part: "We (the Cotton Inc. board) are confident that Mr. Wooters' arrangement with the Boswell Company in no way conflicted with his obligations to Cotton Inc."

ASKED WHO DRAFTED THE COTTON INC. board document, Evans said it was a composite work.

Concerning reports that 13 board members had declined to endorse the statement until after the investigation into Wooters' salary had been completed, Evans said, "There was no tally taken," but he acknowledged some board members had proposed waiting for the results of the federal probe.

Wooters pointed to accomplishments of Cotton Inc. while he has been president, including domestic development of fire-retardant cotton, new durable-press blends that use more cotton, and what he said was a new awareness of consumers about cotton content when buying clothes.

He said Cotton Inc. went into the European market because very little U. S. cotton was being sold there.

Spring Moisture Boosts Grain, Delays South Texas Plantings

A-J FARM NEWS

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — Spring has arrived on a wet note over most of Texas, boosting small grains and pastures in West Texas and the Plains, and bringing further planting delays in much of the rest of the state, said Dr. Daniel C. Pfannstiel, director of the Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

Cotton, corn and sorghum planting was about 90 percent complete in the Rio Grande Valley before the rainy spell, Pfannstiel said. In the Coastal Bend, corn and sorghum planting was 75 percent complete and about 85 percent of the cotton had been planted. Corn planting had also been active in Southwest Texas (Uvalde area), and corn and sorghum planting had been making good progress in the Central Texas Blacklands, South Central Texas and in parts of East Texas. Also, some corn, sorghum and rice planting had begun in Southeast Texas.

The National Weather Service reports the following four-inch soil temperatures: Weslaco, 72; Corpus Christi, 68; Uvalde and Dilley, 64; Austin, Beaumont and College Station, 61; Eagle Lake, 62; Lufkin, 55; Overton, 59; Stephenville and San Angelo, 60; McGregor, 59; Marfa, 56; and Lavon Lake (near Dallas), 57. Recommended minimum planting temperatures are 50 degrees F. for corn, 55 for sorghum and 65 for cotton.

Grazing is improving in most sections, particularly on wheat, Pfannstiel said. Much of the wheat in the plains will be grazed out rather than harvested for grain due to the strong cattle market.

The gardening season is off to a slow start because of the rainy weather, but onions and potatoes have been planted in many locations. Fruit trees are in full bloom, and a good fruit crop is in prospect, said Pfannstiel.

Reports from district Extension agents showed these conditions.

PANHANDLE: Rains ill boost grazing conditions and wheat crop. But more moisture is needed in western counties. Some wheat is being irrigated and preplant irrigation is starting. The spring oat crop has just been seeded. Stocker cattle are moving off wheat that will be harvested for grain. Calving continues.

SOUTH PLAINS: Good rains over parts of the region will help the wheat crop and planting conditions, but have slowed land preparation. Preplant irrigation continues. Some onions and potatoes are planted. Grazing remains below average.

ROLLING PLAINS: Rainfall should boost the wheat crop and provide planting moisture. Alfalfa is growing well. Kleingrass is being planted in Throckmorton County. Onions and potatoes are being planted. Cattle are improving but feeding continues.

NORTH CENTRAL: Rains have delayed land preparation and planting and home gardening. Wheat is growing but needs warm, sunny weather. Oats are doing well but stands are thin due to winter kill. Cattle are fair to poor; supplemental feeding continues. Calving is active.

NORTHEAST TEXAS: Many counties have surplus soil moisture. Land preparation and fertilization of small grain and hay crops is under way where conditions permit. Some corn and cotton are planted. Vegetable gardening is increasing.

FAR WEST: Area remains dry. Land preparation and preplant irrigation continue. Home vegetable gardening is active, and commercial cabbage and onion plantings (from seed) are up, and lettuce is emerging in El Paso County. Lambing is increasing.

WEST CENTRAL: Good rains should boost small grain and range conditions and provide some spring planting moisture. Spring gardening is active and fruit trees are in full bloom. Livestock conditions range from poor to good, with supplemental feeding still active.

CENTRAL: The area now has adequate moisture. Wet fields are slowing spring planting which had just gotten started. Half the corn crop and 25 percent of the cotton crop had been planted in Bell County. Small grains are improving along with grazing conditions. Vegetable gardening is increasing.

EAST: Heavy rains over the area have delayed field work in most counties. Some vegetable planting continues, and small grains and hay crops are being fertilized. Corn will be planted as soon as fields dry. Cattle feeding is still active due to below average grazing condi tions.

SOUTHEAST AND UPPER GULF COAST: Land preparation and some corn, sorghum and rice planting had been active before rains came early in the week. Vegetable gardening continues to increase. Fruit trees are in full bloom. Pasture conditions are improving slowly. Livestock are in fair shape, with calving heavy.

SOUTH CENTRAL: Rains over the area brought a halt to corn and sorghum planting. Home gardening continues to increase as weather conditions permit. Pecans are starting to bud and peach trees are in full bloom. Grazing and cattle conditions continued to improve.

SOUTHWEST: Warm weather and rains are boosting crop and forage conditions. Corn planting is active in southern counties and ranges from 20 percent complete in Uvalde County to 95 percent complete in Zavala County. Some cotton is also being planted. Fruit trees are blooming and buds on pecan trees are swelling. Good lamb crops are being reported. Sheep shearing is beginning. Onion plants are still being harvested in the Winter Garden.

COASTAL BEND: Spring planting continues, with corn and sorghum 75 percent planted and cotton 85 percent planted. Many wheat and oat fields are being grazed out due to good cattle prices. Little remains of the flax crop due to severe winter-kill. Grazing conditions are improving but supplemental feeding continues. Calving remains active.

SOUTH: Corn, sorghum and cotton planting is about 90 percent complete in the Rio Grande Valley. Okra, tomatoes and other spring vegetables are making good growth. Light supplies of carrots, cabbage and onions continue to move to market. Sugar cane harvesting is winding down. Citrus trees are blooming profusely. Grazing conditions are improving; calving is in full swing.

Public Forum Slated Here At Ag Show

The financial outlook for farmers of the Texas High Plains, together with some hints on how they can improve that picture, will be detailed at a public forum Thursday, April 5, in the Lubbock Memorial Civic Center.

The forum is an opening day feature on the second annual South Plains Farm Show, April 5-7, in the Civic Center.

The three-day exhibition also will feature what is described as farm implements and equipment yet assembled on the South Plains, a fashion revue featuring apparel created locally from materials of natural fibers, a special day saluting the Future Farmers of America, a state championship micro-mini tractor pull, and two nights of invitational tractor and four-wheel-drive truck pulls.

All events are free except the invitational tractor pull, which will be in the Lubbock Coliseum.

Theme for the forum will be: "Money for the Farmer — Where It Will Come From and Where It Will Go." It will begin at 10:15 a.m. in the Civic Center banquet hall.

Speakers will be Tom Benson, president of the Federal Land Bank, Houston, and Dr. Ronald D. Knutson, extension specialist in economics and marketing policy at Texas A&M University, College Station.

Benson and Knutson will analyze the current financial picture for farmers, explain the increasing importance of maintaining an accurate cash flow statement, and discuss various marketing alteratives that farmers can use to their advantage.

The South Plains Farm Show is sponsored by the Southwest Hardware and Implement Association with the Lubbock Chamber of Commerce, Texas Agricultural Extension Service, and Texas Tech University.

NEW FACILITY—This saturate gas plant was brought on stream recently at Marathon Oil Co.'s Garyville refinery as part of a $205 million project to more than double unleaded gasoline capacity to over 100,000 barrels per day. The overall project is slated for completion during the fourth quarter of 1979. The saturate gas plant extracts propane and a mixture of isobutane, butane and gasoline from selected refinery gas streams. Following treatment, the gases and liquids are either sold, used as blending stocks or burned as refinery fuel.

British Corporation Logs Meteoric Rise

TULSA, Okla. (Special) -In just three years British National Oil Corp. (BNOC) has grown from a two-man organizing committee to become the North Sea's largest crude oil trader, a position it will maintain throughout the coming decade.

The rise of the state corporation, backed by extensive legislated powers, has been meteoric, according to the Oil and Gas Journal.

In 1976 Lord Kearton, former head of one of Britain's biggest textile concerns, was persuaded to come out of retirement and set up the new state company with a civil servant from the Department of Energy, Jeremy Evans, now a managing director of BNOC.

They moved into the grand London mansion of former newspaper magnate Lord Beaverbrook and set in motion a development that has turned BNOC into a major force with equity interests in six North Sea oil fields on production or under development. The corporation has access to more North Sea crude than any other operator, a worldwide crude oil trading network, and an exploration commitment that is way ahead of any of its rivals in the private sector.

But more importantly, as the state company grows to maturity, its influence is expected to become even greater, particularly as a crude oil trader.

Throughout the 1980's it will be trading about one million barrels per day of crude, making it the biggest single marketer of oil from the U.K. sector of the sea.

It's a fact that is not lost on companies that are forecasting tight supplies sometime in the 1980s.

During the depressed market conditions that preceded the Iranian crisis international companies from the U.S., Europe, and Japan courted BNOC, signing supply contracts in the hope of forming relationships that would last into the 1980s and a much tougher supply environment.

It's not only the companies that want to build lasting relationships. Lord Kearton says BNOC is more interested in lasting relationships with potential customers and has purposely avoided the quick profits of the Rotterdam spot market as Iranian supplies have fallen away.

The state company has done everything it could to help its customers during the supply shortfall, says Lord Kearton, particularly those who came to BNOC for oil while market conditions were tight.

"It's a policy that has increased our standing in the marketplace," he says.

In reaching the position as the North Sea's No. 1 supplier of crude oil, BNOC will have access to oil from four areas.

The most important is the crude sold to BNOC at market prices under the U.K. version of participation agreements. Under these agreements, BNOC has the right to buy 51 percent of oil production from most U.K. North Sea fields.

BNOC also will have an increasing flow of crude from fields in which it has an equity participation.

In addition, agreements have been reached with a number of companies, including British Gas Corp. and Burmah Oil Co. Ltd., for the state company to handle their North Sea entitlements.

And Britain is expected to take an increasing amount of royalty in kind rather than cash. This crude will be marketed by BNOC.

At the end of 1978 BNOC was trading about 200,000 barrels per day. But the new year signaled the end of British Petroleum's participation holiday and a buildup of output from Sullom Voe terminal in the Shetland Islands.

This year BNOC will average more than 400,000 barrels per day through its trading outlets.

By the time the North Sea reaches its peak production of 2.5 million to 2.7 million barrels per day in 1983, BNOC trading will have risen to 1.1 million barrels per day, made up of about 200,000 barrels per day from the company's equity interests and the bulk of the remainder from participation.

Amoco Project Recovers Gas On Flow Test

DENVER, Colo. (Special) -Amoco Production Co. has announced an apparent natural gas discovery in Northeast Utah's Overthrust Belt.

Gas was recovered during a short flow test in the Permian Phosphoria formation. Pressure data recovered during the test indicates that the well will produce commercial quantities of gas.

The well, No. 1 Joseph O. Fawcett & Sons, in Summit County, Utah, is about 45 miles northeast of Salt Lake City, eight miles southwest of the Yellow Creek field and 25 miles southwest of the Whitney Canyon field. Both of those fields are in Wyoming.

The gas from the test appears to be from a 14-foot drilling break in the Phosphoria formation within a test interval of 11,388-600 feet. Due to the hydrogen sulfide content of the gas, no flow rates were gauged.

Amoco Production is the domestic exploration and production subsidiary of Standard Oil Co. (Indiana) and has considerable oil and gas lease acreage near the new discovery.

J. W. Vanderbeek, Amoco Production vice president and regional manager, said that the well is drilling ahead below 12,724 feet in the Weber formation of Pennsylvanian classification, with a projected total depth of about 15,000 feet through all prospective horizons in the Absaroka thrust plate, which is a major geologic feature extending into Idaho as well as Utah and Wyoming.

The Whitney Canyon field, 25 miles away, was discovered by Amoco Production in 1977 and has proven production in various zones from the Triassic at 9,200 feet to the Bighorn formation of Ordovician age at 15,400 feet. The Yellow Creek field, eight miles away, was discovered by Amoco Production in 1976 and produces from the Triassic's Twin Creek formation.

Amoco Production is the operator of the Fawcett discovery with 83.33 percent working interest, and Champlin Petroleum Co., a subsidiary of Union Pacific Corp., has the remaining 16.67 percent interest in the well. Amoco has some 80,000 acres of leases along the trend.

Company Starting Construction On Gulf Production Platform

VENICE, La. (Special) -ARCO Oil and Gas Co. has announced that construction has started on a platform to provide space for drilling up to 24 wells to develop a new gas field in the Gulf of Mexico.

The announcement was made by Donald E. Jessup, a vice president of ARCO Oil and Gas and manager of the company's South Louisiana District.

The platform will be installed in Mississippi Canyon Block 148, approximately 15 miles southeast of the mouth of the Mississippi River. Water depth at the proposed location is 650 feet.

The field is located in ARCO's Block 148 and two offsetting blocks under lease to a group consisting of Gulf, Mobil, Chevron and ICI Delaware.

Jessup said that the successful drilling of four exploratory wells by ARCO and three by the Gulf-Mobil-Chevron-ICI group established the presence of sufficient reserves to justify the cost of the deep water platform and its equipment, and the drilling of approximately 18 development wells.

Total cost to prepare these gas reserves for production will amount to about $100 million, not including the cost of the exploratory drilling or the $26 million in lease bonuses paid to the federal government in the 1974 lease sale, the company said.

The entire field will be operated by ARCO under a unitization agreement, and each company will sell its production separately.

The platform will be constructed by Brown and Root Inc. at its facility at Ingleside, on Corpus Christi Bay.

Construction of the platform will take about 18 months, with installation scheduled for July, 1980.

Jessup said development drilling will begin immediately after the platform is installed. First gas deliveries are scheduled for 1981.

The platform's jacket—the main structure—will be built, barged to the location and installed in one piece. Previously constructed deep water platform jacket structures were built in two or three pieces.

THE ROUSTABOUT

By RAY WESTBROOK

A GEOTHERMAL ZONE along the Gulf Coast could become a new energy source for Texas, according to Dr. Myron Dorfman, director of the geothermal division at the University of Texas Center for Energy Studies.

Intense pressures up to 15,000 pounds per square inch are characteristic of geopressured zones, which make drilling into them a delicate operation, Dr. Dorfman said in a report on the research. "Until 20 years ago, you couldn't drill into geopressured zones."

Estimates indicate that the geopressured-geothermal zone of the Texas-Louisiana coast is about 100,000 square miles in size. The basin extends out in the Gulf of Mexico to the continental shelf and inland for 125 miles.

The geologic feature is believed to have been formed from delta deposits that were compacted to their limit. When the sands could be compressed no more, fluids around them began to take up the pressure, and the organic material in the compressed shales became methane.

Dr. Dorfman said current advances in technology and the need for alternative energy sources have drawn attention to the possibility of tapping the geopressured-geothermal storehouse of power—heat from waters trapped in the zones, kinetic energy from their great pressure and, in the case of Texas, natural gas.

THE CENTER for Energy Studies and the University of Texas Bureau of Economic Geology are coordinators for an $8 million project, funded principally by the U.S. Department of Energy, to drill a giant test well into the geopressured-geothermal zone in Brazoria County near Houston. Objective of the effort is to find out whether it is technologically and economically feasible to produce energy from that source.

An initial well was abandoned because of technical problems after reaching 15,600 feet.

General Crude Oil Co., test well operator, currently is drilling a replacement which is projected to over 16,000 feet.

The well, equipped especially for such a project, will contain flow tubing as large as the casing normally used in standard oil wells. A potential flow rate of up to 40,000 barrels per day is anticipated from the test.

Dorfman said the outcome of the first well isn't considered a major setback because most of the coring and logging had already been completed.

ONE OF THE PRINCIPAL targets of the research is the production of methane, or natural gas, dissolved in the hot waters. Estimates of the amount of recoverable gas vary from 150 to 5,000 trillion cubic feet. The current researchers place the level at 250 trillion cubic feet. At present consumption rates, that volume would supply the nation with gas for over 10 years.

Methane isn't the only objective of the project, however. With water temperatures in the geothermal zone of at least 300 degrees Fahrenheit, it is believed the heat could be recovered and used comercially in nearby pulp and paper mills, refineries, and frozen food plants.

In addition, the powerful force of the water surfacing under intense pressure has the potential of driving turbines to generate electricity, according to the researchers.

ROBERT J. OSMUNDSON, public affairs counsel for Chevron U.S.A. Inc., says Iranian crude production averaged over 5 1/2 million barrels per day, with exports of crude and products of about 5 million barrels daily for the first 10 months of 1978. That volume supplied approximately 10 percent of the free world's total oil requirement.

Osmundson said his company expects the free world's oil supply to fall below previously estimated normal demand by 2 1/2 million barrels daily for the first three quarters of 1979, and less than 1 million barrels daily in the fourth quarter.

Those conditions rest upon Iranian production reaching 1 1/2 million barrels per day in the second quarter, and 3 1/2 million barrels by the fourth quarter, and Saudi Arabia permitting production of 9 1/2 million barrels daily through the second quarter.

"This shortfall, about 5 percent of normal demand through the third quarter, can be met only in part by inventory management, and oil demand worldwide will need to be curtailed by 1 to 1 1/2 million barrels daily below the 55 million barrels per day it would reach with normal growth," Chevron said in a report on the matter.

The report continued, "This 2 to 3 percent reduction in normal demand is modest and is achievable by reasonable conservation, although with some inconvenience to consumers. In effect, it means holding consumption to slightly above the 1978 level."

API Schedules Pipeline Meet

DALLAS (Special) -The American Petroleum Institute's Annual Pipeline Conference will be held April 17-18 at the Dallas Hilton.

The objective of the conference is to review intra-industry and regulatory concerns, exchange technical and professional information within the petroleum pipeline industry, and examine developments which will have technical and operational impact on the industry in coming years.

Representatives from more than 100 U.S. and foreign pipeline companies are expected to attend the conference, which is sponsored by API's Central Committee on Pipeline Transportation.

The speaker for the Tuesday night, April 17, banquet will be Rep. John Breaux (D-La).

Other speakers and topics include:

Directions of API—Charles J. DiBona, API president.

U.S. Department of Energy and its relation to oil pipelines—Alvin L. Alm, assistant secretary of policy and evaluation, U.S. Department of Energy.

U.S. Department of Transportation viewpoint on pipeline safety—Leon D. Santman, director, Materials Transportation Bureau, U.S. Department of Transportation.

Colonial Pipeline expansion—T. H. Norris, vice president, Colonial Pipeline Co., Atlanta, Ga.

U.S. Environmental Protection Agency Impact on pipeline industry—EPA representative to be announced.

National Transportation Safety Board's pipeline safety priorities —James King, chairman, National Transportation Safety Board.

In addition, there will be sessions dealing with various technical aspects of the pipeline industry.

Convention Slated By Geology Group

HOUSTON (Special) -With "Our Ideas Find Oil" as its theme, the American Association of Petroleum Geologists (AAPG) will hold its 64th annual convention April 1-4 in Houston.

The combined forces of AAPG and the Society of Economic Paleontologists and Mineralogists (SEPM) will bring more than 7,000 earth scientists together for technical presentations and workshops relating to exploration for oil, gas and alternative resources.

Symposium highlights include sessions on giant discoveries of the past decade —which will feature a presentation by a delegation from the People's Republic of China, discovery forecasting, techniques for exploration, deep-ocean drilling, and resource abundance in Antarctica.

This year's theme "emphasizes that petroleum is discovered through a combination of creative thinking and inventive technology," said convention chairman Anthony Reso.

"Since we know that conservation, decreased demand, and stockpiling of petroleum cannot solve America's energy crisis, the convention's technical program centers on how geologists can bridge the supply gap by finding more oil and gas reserves, alternatives and substitutes," Reno said.

Featured speakers will be noted economist and historian Walt Rostow and AAPG president Robert D. Gunn. Gunn's keynote address will focus on the importance of the United States not relying on foreign sources for oil and the need for all forms of resources to be developed.

The American Association of Petroleum Geologists, the largest geological association in the world, is comprised of more than 21,000 geologists in 80 countries.

Processing Plant Announces Record

HAMLIN (Special) -Continental Oil Co.'s Hamlin gas processing plant has completed 17 years of operation without a lost-time accident.

The plant has not had a lost-time accident since February 20, 1962—a record of 273,515 manhours of safety on the job. The plant is currently processing 10 million cubic feet of gas per day and has an operating staff of 11 employes.

B. J. Howerton, plant manager, said the company will celebrate the safety record with a dinner for plant employes.

Two-Day Course Offered On 'Confident Parenting'

Sunset Church of Christ is hosting a two-day course Friday and Saturday on "Confident Parenting," sponsored by the National Training Institute, a division of Sweet Publishing Co. of Austin.

The course, which is being offered to members of congregations all over the area, is a Biblically-oriented seven-hour course, designed to help parents fulfill their responsibility of guiding their children toward proper spiritual development.

It has been stressed that the course will be most helpful to couples when both attend. The course also is designed for single parents, prospective parents, foster parents, as well as grandparents.

Ron Rose of the institute's staff will be the Christian family educator who will lead the study. He has done extensive work in family education with emphasis in fathering, family night and family communications. He currently works with Marriage and Family Encounters and edits the new "Family Notebook" page in Christian Bible Teacher magazine.

Easter Bunny Legend Ancient

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (UPI) — The egg and bunny illustrations on today's Easter cards have ancient origins, says creative director George L. Parker of Hallmark Cards.

Legend says the rabbit originally was a large and handsome bird, a pet of Eostre, Teutonic goddess of spring. One day Eostre changed the bird into a rabbit. That, supposedly, is why the Easter bunny builds nests and fills them with colored eggs.

The egg was seen by Egyptians, Greeks and Romans as a symbol of the universe and a token of spring and rebirth. Early Christians stained eggs red to represent Christ's blood, says Parker. Since then, coloring eggs at Easter has become traditional in many countries.

Tokyo's Sirloin $18.63 Per Pound

WASHINGTON (UPI) — If you think food prices are high in the United States, consider this: as of Jan. 3 this year, boneless sirloin steak that cost $2.89 a pound in Washington was $6.35 a pound in Bonn, West Germany, $8.67 in Copenhagen and $18.63 in Tokyo.

At the same time, whole broilers were 62 cents a pound in the nation's capital, but $1.73 a pound in Stockholm and Tokyo, $1.46 in Paris and $1.43 in Buenos Aires. The Argentine figure reflects a 52 percent increase over the Nov. 1, 1978 cost.

All the figures are taken from a food price comparison made monthly in 17 world capitals by agricultural attaches of the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

New Hand Vacuum Cleans Up Spills

TOWSON, Md. (UPI) — A major manufacturer of hand tools is entering the home care market with a cordless, rechargeable hand-held vacuum cleaner that picks up dry spills from hard and soft surfaces.

It comes with a permanent washable dust filter bag and a storage-charging unit that can be stored flat or hung on a wall.

The manufacturer says the unit, which weighs 1.6 pounds without the charging unit, can pick up such things as 31 pounds of sugar, 10 pounds of cat litter, 13 pounds of parakeet seed or eight and a half pounds of a well-known laundry detergent on a single charge.

For about $1.50 extra, there's an optional brush attachment for cleaning drapes and upholstery.

Games Help Break Up Tiresome Auto Trips

By SHARI LEWIS

I'm not very good at long car trips. I don't get sick. I get squirmy.

Lynn Rabidoux of Colchester, Vt., tells me that she plays the same car game that my daughter and her friends play. Lynn wrote:

"My nephew and I each pick a color of a car (blue, green, or any other color.) Then we set a time (say five minutes or so—we ask the driver to tell us when the time is up). Whoever can point out the most cars or trucks in the color that he or she pickes is the winner. When we get tired of this game, we each pick a brand of car, and try to locate the greatest number of our own brand."

Try this game the next time you're tempted to ask your folks, "Are we almost there?"

Friday's Brain Twisters: Put three checkers in a row so that they touch each other. Between the two reds put a black one. Can you move the first red checker? Here's the hitch: you must not touch the second red checker, and the black checker must not move a bit!

Answer: Place your finger on top of the black checker. Take the first checker (the one you want to move) and with the other hand, shoot that red checker against the black checker, it will not move—but force of the blow will make the other red checker slide away, and then you can simply place that first red checker in between the two!

Mysteries Still Surround Loss Of Subs In 1968

By DANIEL F. GILMORE

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The year 1968 was not a good one for submarines.

First, the 1,280-ton Israeli submarine Dakar disappeared in the eastern Mediterranean, about 100 miles west of Cyprus, with 69 men aboard.

The Israelis had bought the sub, the former Swordfish, from the British four years before. It was en route to Haifa from a refitting at Portsmouth, England, when the last radio signal went out Jan. 25 that all was well. Nothing more was ever heard from the Dakar.

Two days later, the French submarine Minerve disappeared in the Mediterranean while submerged only 25 miles southeast of the French naval base at Toulon. Commissioned four years earlier, Minerve had 52 men aboard. Its last signal was sent Jan. 27. No wreckage was ever located.

The Dakar and Minerve were both diesel-powered.

On Feb. 15, the U.S. Navy nuclear-powered attack submarine Scorpion left her base at Norfolk, Va., "for Mediterranean deployment with operating units of the (Sixth) Fleet."

More than two months later, the 3,075-ton sub is known to have come up near the surface and radioed Norfolk that she had completed her mission and was heading home with her crew of 99.

Scorpion "indicated her position to be about 50 miles south of the Azores" in the eastern Atlantic, according to the U.S. Naval History Division.

Norfolk heard nothing more directly. But on May 29, a navy patrol plane flying over the Atlantic only 110 miles east of Norfolk picked up a tantalizingly brief portion of a radio message identifying the sender with the code name for the Scorpion. That message never has been adequately explained.

Nothing further having been seen or heard, Scorpion was posted as missing and presumed lost on May 29, 1968.

Some 55 ships and 35 planes tracked the Scorpion's intended course home back from Norfolk to its last reported position off the Azores. On Oct. 31, the Navy announced that the $40 million sub had been located more than 10,000 feet below the surface of the Atlantic, 400 miles southwest of the Azores.

Pictures taken by cameras lowered from the Navy oceanographic research ship Mizar showed the submarine lying on its side with a split hull and tail and with part of the bow missing.

Meanwhile, it was revealed that the Scorpion had been on a "secret mission" from May 17 until May 21, the day before she disappeared. The nature of that mission has never been disclosed.

Ten years later, no one will say for sure what killed the Scorpion.

A seven-man Navy Court of Inquiry reported Jan. 31, 1969 after 11 weeks of intensive investigation and study of "a myriad of data and pictures" that the cause of the disaster was still uncertain.

The court said it found "no evidence of any kind to suggest foul play or sabotage" but at least one navy expert pointed out that no evidence was found either to rule out "more remote possibilities."

Theories have abounded that Scorpitn may have collided with another ship, or even another submarine, was sabotaged or deliberately sunk.

As recently as last month, a letter published in Sea Power, official publication of the U.S. Navy League, asked "could it be that Sctrpion had certain intelligence of such a nature that a foreign gomernment (friendly, neutral or hostile) would do anything to prevent it from getting into U.S. hands?"

"According to the Journal of Naval Proceedings," the letter said, "U.S. underwater listening devices detected catastrophic sounds in the vicinity of Scorpion's grave at about the same time she was believed to have sunk. The article did not define the word 'catastrophic.'"

Last May, two experts listed the most probable causes of the Scorpion sinking as:

— Accidental loss of depth control; or — Accidental loss of buoyancy; or — Accidental fire; or — Accidental weapons explosion; or
"Other, more remote possibilities."

Evolving their theories in the May issue of Sea Power were Dr. D.A. Paolucci, a Naval Academy graduate who during his career commanded two submarines, a submarine division, squadron and a flotilla before retiring in 1969; and Norman Polmar, a naval analyst and author of The Death of the Thresher, a book about the nuclear-powered U.S. Navy submarine of that name which went down in the Atlantic off New England in April 1963 with the loss of all 127 men aboard.

After discussing the probable and possible mechanical and human errors that could have sent the Scorpion to the bottom, the authors ventured into "other, more remote" and "highly improbable possibilities."

"The Scorpion WAS on a secret mission from 17 May to 21 May," they said. "She sank on 22 May. Was there a direct connection between the secret mission and the loss of the Scorpion? Very probably not, but it's impossible to know with absolute certainty."

"The Scorpion and a Soviet submarine may have had an underwater collision from which the Scorpion sank and the Soviet submarine limped away," the authors said.

Eqsally, the Scorpion could have been sabotaged.

"In every incident of the destruction of military equipment from unknown causes, the possibility of sabotage must be considered," the authors said. "It does not appear within the realm of reason that one of the Scorpion's crew would deliberately destroy his own ship — if indeed it were possible for one man to undertake such a task," Paolucci and Polmar argued. "But it is possible, however unlikely, that a delay-timed limpet mine was attached to the Scorpion at her last port of call. One can speculate on a variety of reasons why anti-U.S. terrorists or other enemies would desire to sink a nuclear submarine."

The Scorpion was the second nuclear-powered submarine to be lost at sea at that time. The first was the Thresher. A third nuclear-powered sub — this time Russian — was lost in the eastern Atlantic in April 1970. Intelligence reports, however, indicate that all the crew were taken off the Soviet sub by an attending ship before it went to the bottom.

The most bizarre Soviet submarine loss was of a Golfclass, diesel-powered submarine which went down in the Pacific in 1968 with some 80 Russian crew.

A netwok f U.S. sensors placed over wide areas of the ocean bed picked up the explosion which apparently occurred while the Soviet submarine was on the surface recharging its batteries.

By triangulation, its position was determined as some 7,000 miles northwest of the Hawaiian islands. The CIA was informed.

Aerial and satellite reconnaissance showed Soviet rescue and salvage ships later converging on the scene. After lengthy but fruitless attempts to find the sunken sub, the Russians gave up and went home.

The CIA later found out why: the 2,600-ton Soviet sub sank in waters almost three miles deep. Nothing that size had ever been recovered from such a depth.

But the CIA, biding its time, decided to try.

In a daring, $350 million operation codenamed "Jennifer," the CIA commissioned recluse millionaie Howard Hughes secretly to build the Glomar Explorer, a one-of-a-kind salvage ship that almost did the job in the summer of 1974.

After the Soviet hulk was located and cables attached to it, special cranes aboard the Glomar Explorer began the long haul to the surface. Two-thirds of the way up, the sub broke its back, the major part of the vessel tumbling down again to the bottom.

SOVIET PRODIGY

By International Master John Peters

The discovery of a new talent always excites chess fans around the world. Gary Kasparov, a 13-year-old candidate-master from Baku, Azerbaijan, astounded Russian chess by qualifying for the under-18 championship of the USSR. What's more, he won the tournament, and represented his country in the World Youth Championship in Holland. He repeated his success the next year in 1977, and gained the title of master.

In 1978, Kasparov won a strong 18-player tournament in Minsk, ahead of two

Grandmasters, and a qualifying tournament for the USSR Championship. His 9½-3½ score topped the 64-player all-master field. Kasparov's results surpass those of Karpov and Spassky at roughly similar ages. Normally cautious observers go wild in praise of him. Former World Champion Mikhael Botvinnik exclaimed: "The future of Soviet chess rests on Gary Kasparov's shoulders."

Living up to that may be too difficult, but Kasparov continues to improve. He has defeated Grandmasters Lev Polugevsky and Gennady Kuzmin.

Here's a win by Soviet pordigy Kasparov from a tournamet in Minsk, 1978.

Employees Paid To Lose Weight, Quit Smoking

By ED LION

SPRING GROVE, Ill. (UPI) — Jim Miller says trim and healthy employees make for better business so he pays them to quit smoking and lose weight.

Miller, 49, a self-avowed fitness buff, has dished out $12,000 in company funds to promote health and physical fitness among the 900 employes of Intermatic Incorporated, an automatic timer manufacturer based about 60 miles from Chicago. And he says the investment is well worth it.

"From a pure business standpoint," said the company president pointing to a tripling in sales figures in seven years, "it's a good investment. Healthy employees work better and are happier.

"And that definitely helps productivity, though it's impossible to pinpoint exactly how much is from this or other factors."

Miller, who quit smoking on his own and whose father suffered emphysema from smoking, has helped about 35 workers (out of 100 attempters) quit the habit for at least a year — with about $3,500 as the prize. The American Cancer Society, which has expressed interest in making a promotional film about Miller's program, figures six smokers quitting the habit equals one life saved.

First Miller offered $50 to every worker quitting the habit for a year and many of them permanently stayed off cigarettes, he said. Then in another carrot-and-stick contest the company put up a $1,000 pot for successful whole-year quitters to split. Additionally, the company made side bets of up to $100 with employees.

Successful quitters won the money and defeated tobbaco addicts paid the company. The firm, in turn, turned over the money — about $1,200 — to the American Cancer Society.

Miller, who is on a firstname-basis with all employees and gives them birthday and graduation checks, set up a mile-and-a quarter jogging and exercise trail on the company's premises and workers can use special tennis courts and a volleyball area, part of his battle against fat.

He has paid $3,000 to 41 overweight employees — $3 a pound. They were eligible for the fat bounty because they were at least 15 pounds overweight at the program's start and shed at least that amount of excess poundage by the time the year-long contest ended.

Altogether, 130 workers were in the program — losing a collective 1,258 pounds, though most didn't qualify for the bounty.

Miller is presently running another weight loss contest — this time paying a bounty of $4-a-pound if employees meet selfimposed weight-loss targets of at least 15 pounds. They will get $1-a-pound for additional weight losses above their targets. Employees failing to meet their target, but at least knocking off a 15-pound minimum will get $1 per lost pound.

Collectively, 204 employees have pledged to lose 2½ tons, and if they are successful it will cost the company $20,000 in fat bounties.

"I just got real upset looking at some of the fat on people at work," Miller said. "When you see a 20-year old girl overlap a stool by six inches on either side — it's sad and not healthy."

Miller said some workers have even become spoiled, awaiting contests before shedding pounds or quiting smoking. He said the money — and ribbing by fellow employees once the contestants are made known — often is just the proper incentive to bolster employees' will power.

"I don't know if I would have done it without the program," said Katherine Mahoney, 42, the biggest weight loser of the completed contest with a 50-pound loss and a new $150 savings account. "Now I feel great and my family is happy. I'm even in the new contest to lose more pounds."

Anita Wisniewski, 36, has set a target of 100 pounds to lose by April in the current contest and at the last weighing had lost 63 pounds. If she meets the target she stands to win $400.

"What am I going to do with the money if I win?," she pondered. "Probably buy a new wardrobe."

New Guide To Poisonous Ingredients Of Aid To Physicians In Emergencies

By D'VERA COHN

HANOVER, N.H. (UPI) — In rushing to a hospital, frantic parents cannot always recall the brand name of the furniture polish swallowed by their child.

That's where Dr. Robert Gosselin's fat green book comes to the rescue.

Gosselin, a Dartmouth Medical School professor, is originator and co-author of a bestselling guide to poisonous ingredients in everyday products, "Clinical Toxicology of Commercial Products."

A copy of the 1,800-page $60 book can be found in most of the nation's poison control centers and in many doctors' offices, hospitals and medical libraries.

To keep up with new product introductions, the authors publish a monthly bulletin and are planning a fifth edition.

"Companies are putting out new brand names all the time," Gosselin said. "They're also putting out old brand names with changes in composition — new and improved. We want to know what the new and improved formula is."

The book is so respected that some manufacturers who don't want their competitors to know their product ingredients have supplied the information secretly to the guide's authors. Poison control centers may get such information in an emergency.

The guide has triggered at least one research breakthrough. A decade ago, Dr. Roger Smith, a Dartmouth professor of pharmacology and toxicology, became intrigued by information on sewer-gas poisoning. He began research that led to an antidote.

The guide lists 20,000 commercial products, their ingredients and treatment for anyone who swallows them.

Some plants and berries are also listed because Gosselin, who heads his local poison center and studies poisonous mushrooms for a hobby, became aware people were asking about them.

The book's contents also include general formulas for some common products that are pretty much alike.

"Sometimes you know if a child has ingested furniture polish, but under the circumstances no one knows what the brand is," Gosselin said. "We know in general what's in furniture polish. From the point of view of their poisoning potential, they're not all that different."

Products such as epoxy resin glue and other hobby materials were unheard of 25 years ago, Gosselin said. Neither were tranquilizers and some weedkillers.

Gosselin said weed-killers and pesticides first attracted his interest when he was an assistant professor of pharmacology at the University of Rochester, N.Y., in the early 1950s. A local housewife, Marion Gleason, concerned by the lack of a list of poisonous ingredients in commonly used products, talked Gosselin into helping her prepare one.

Experts Say Lessons Should Start At Early Age

WEST LAFAYETTE, Ind. (UPI) — Children normally begin learning the value of money about age 6 — which is when parents should start teaching them how to handle it.

"It is then when a child learns to pass over a proffered shiny, new penny for a dull, worn dime, that he demonstrates for the first time an early understanding of money — and how easy it is to come by," says a team of Purdue University experts.

"How that early understanding develops depends upon lessons, good and bad, learned from parents, friends, school, allowance and jobs. It is a case of realizing you can't have your cake and eat it, too."

Jan Armstrong, professor of consumer sciences and retailing, said parents should sit down and explain situations to their youngsters.

"If the child has his heart set on summer camp, agree to split the cost," she said. "Stick to the agreement, but be realistic. If there is a shortfall, give the child an opportunity to make up the difference.

"If your little girl wants a kitten, be certain she understands that the care and feeding of the pet are her responsibility. If she habitually fails, then get rid of the pet — a hard choice, but one that must be made."

Economics professor Marianne Talafuse said children of the Depression era assumed chances were highly unlikely they'd get "it" — money, big Christmas presents or an ice cream soda.

"Today's children assume 'it' will be there and are surprised if 'it' isn't," she said. "It isn't so much a different conception of money but rather an assumption about money. They are confident the means will continue to be there, somehow."

Economics professor Dennis Weidenaar said an allowance shouldn't be canceled if a child breaks a window.

"Talk with the child and discuss ways the new window can be paid for," he said. "Let the child make the choice of giving up his allowance, returning part of it or taking on an additional chore.

The professors agreed children should be taught early about savings accounts and interest.

"If the savings are for a new bike, help the child celebrate when the great day comes, to instill a sense of accomplishment."

The professors also said there is no flat amount a youngster should have when leaving home for college or striking out on his own.

"Wealth is relative. A child, whether from a family of means or not, who is experienced in making hard choices and in helping to set goals and meet them, will have a better shot at life than one who is spoon-fed."

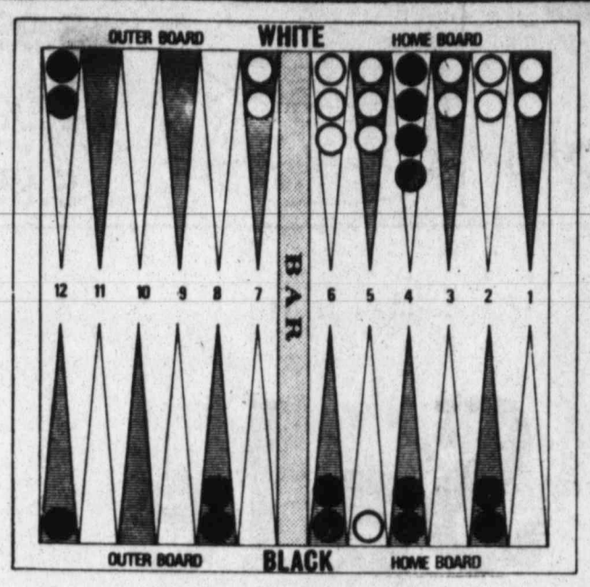
Backgammon

by Omar Sharif



Black rolls 1-1. How should he play?

ANSWER TO BACKGAMMON PROBLEM

Black can roll perfectly safely, either by making his bar-point and dropping two men to his own 12-point, or by hitting the White blot on the 5-point with two men from the 6-point.

It is the tendency of inexperienced players to make the safest move possible. Here, however, that overlooks the danger inherent in the position.

Black is in dire straits. He is so far behind in the race that it isn't even worth counting. White has a 5-point home board and his only loose man, on the Black 5-point, is poised to escape. If that man ever gets around, Black's game is lost. Therefore, Black's plan must be to contain the White man. Despite the fact that White has such a strong home board, safety must be thrown to the winds. One more man back is unlikely to make any difference to the outcome of the game.

First of all, Black must hit the White blot on his 5-point with the two men on the 6-point. That retains Black's three-point home board and puts a White man on the bar. Even though three points are open, there is always the chance that White will not come in and give Black some time to improve his board.

If Black is to salvage this game, he desperately needs to close some more points in his home board, or else to make his bar-point. Therefore, he should forget about safe play and try to bring down a builder. The way to accomplish this is to bring a man from the White 12-point to the Black 11-point. That does mean that White can hit if he happens to come in with 6-5 or 6-6; but that slight risk is worth taking.

TIP: Fearlessness is an attribute without which no competitor in any field can hope to climb the heights. The time for boldness is when the outlook is darkest.

'Spy School' Moving

By ARTHUR L. GAVSHON

LONDON (AP) — Britain is pulling a storied "school for spies" out of the olive groves of Lebanon where gunmen stalk — so ending another relic of empire.

"You could say the violence in the country is making its operation somewhat difficult," a Foreign Office spokesman said of the closing down of the Middle East Center for Arabic Studies, to give it its formal title, after 33 eventful years in the Mideast.

MECAS, which is tranferring to the Foreign Office Language center in London, was branded a British "school for spies" by the late Lebanese leftist leader Kamal Jumblatt, who wanted it closed way back in the early 1960s.

It was where Soviet agents Kim Philby and George Blake mixed with British, American, Commonwealth and Japanese diplomats and businessmen, studied Arabic and Mideastern politics and got acquainted with future local policymakers.

Philby, a Beirut-based journalist who ultimately fled to Moscow when his real role was established, never was an enrolled MECAS student. But he showed up at countless MECAS seminars, parties and receptions. Blake, another British diplomat-turned-spy, was at the center as a trainee.

The Foreign Office first set up MECAS in Jerusalem when Palestine was a British-run mandated territory in 1945. The aim was to train British diplomats in the Arabic language, politics and culture. Then, with the establishment of Israeli statehood in 1948, MECAS was moved to Jordan. Two years later it was relocated on the hillside village of Chemlane, near Beirut, in a setting of terraced olive groves.

Graduates from MECAS include a number of leading British ambassadors who have served with distinction in key Arab capitals. They have won for themselves a reputation for being Arab-oriented and their influence over Britain's Mideastern policies has always been strong, even though those policies have not helped much to preserve Britain's longtime dominance, among Western powers, in the region.

MECAS in its heyday used to have more than 60 enrolled students, a mix of army men, diplomats, businessmen and trusted foreigners including Americans, Japanese and old (meaning white) Commonwealth specialists.

Because of the Lebanese civil strife the number this year was about halved. In the Foreign Office view the concentration of some of their brightest young men in a place where gunners and bombers held sway posed serious security problems.

Current director of MECAS is Julian Walker, once a member of the Foreign Office News Department, specializing in Mideastern affairs.

JUSTICE SCALES SWING—Paroled after spending nearly 20 years in prison for two murders he confessed to but did not commit, Bob Williams, left, and attorney Roger Agajanian pose with "scales of justice." As an 18-year-old self-described "punk kid," he landed in a Northern California juvenile correction camp after slapping his girlfriend in 1956. Learning she was about to marry someone else, he confessed to a Long Beach murder he didn't commit, in hopes authorities would transfer him there, so he could talk to her. But he was convicted of the murder instead. (AP Laserphoto)

Advice Offered Pet Owners

SAN DIEGO, Calif. (UPI) — Dr. Charles D. Knecht of Purdue University has some advice for the owners of pets who meet with a catastrophe:

— Stop the bleeding. Use a pressure bandage over the wound — a handkerchief or a clean cloth or towel.

— Keep the wound clean, but do not attempt to clean it.

— Do not try to pick up a paralyzed animal. Use an "emergency stretcher," such as a board, window screen or a blanket pulled taut by at least three people."

— Call a veterinarian or emergency veterinary service for advice and to arrange for emergency care.

— Do not give any medication without the advice of a veterinarian.

— If a limb appears fractured or broken, wrap it firmly in a towel, newspaper or magazine as a temporary splint.

"Try to avoid muzzling the animal or use a muzzle for only a very short time and then remove it," Dr. Knecht said. "Try to avoid carrying any large injured animal in your arms — it makes breathing difficult and it could compound the injuries, particularly if there are broken bones involved.

Maybe you've noticed . . .
That to spread bag upon bag of fertilizer on a lawn and still have a lawn that leaves a lot to be desired is frustrating and expensive. You're often left, as they say, holding the bag.

Like people, a good, healthy lawn requires good, healthy eating habits. The proper mixture of water and nutrients must be added to the naturally available supply of light and air.
a-Perm-o-Green's lawn treatment program utilizes a liquid mixture of nutrients, insecticides, fungicides and weed control substances scientifically developed by a team of agronomists who understand your lawn and what it needs. Consisting of a precisely timed series of feedings applied by highly trained personnel, the a-Perm-o-Green Lawn program provides an economical and effective way for homeowners to enjoy vigorous, healthy lawns. Not just part of the year . . . but throughout the lawn's natural growth cycle.

In fact, the annual cost of the a-Perm-o-Green Lawn program is, on the average, substantially less than the cost of the homeowner attempting to maintain his own lawn with dry fertilizers, insecticides, fungicides and weed control. There's also the savings in time since a-Perm-o-Green takes care of everything. And there's no investment in a spreader and other tools.
The cost is based only on lawn area to be treated—not on total lot size. Prices start as low as $19.50 per application. Considering the great grass you'll be getting, that's not a great amount.

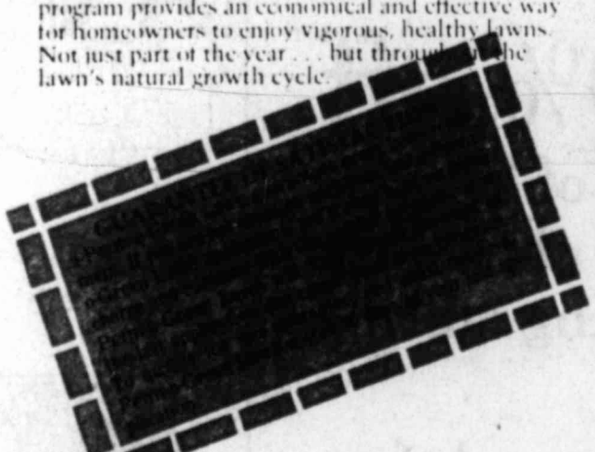
a-Perm-o-Green Lawn ®



Each seasonal application is designed to serve specific needs:
• In the spring, the balanced application includes nitrogen, phosphorous, potassium and trace elements to give your lawn a vigorous root system and strong shoot growth.
• In the early summer, your lawn will receive another balanced application of fertilizers plus slow-release nitrogen and insect control, if necessary.
• The later summer application consists of hot-weather nutrients plus slow-release nitrogen and insect control, again if necessary.
• The fall application provides winterizing nutrients to promote deep root growth plus fungicides, as required, to help control fall brown patch.

the COIN Box

By NORMAN DAVIS

THE POPULARITY of our silver 3¢ coin dropped pretty steadily after the first release in 1851. By the 1860's, people were sick of the tiny "trime."

Could the 3¢ denomination (value) be rescued? Obviously the coin should be larger. It also needed a change of metal: people were hoarding and exporting silver coins.

So in 1865 the U.S. issued a new 3¢ coin.

This was 17.9 millimeters across, the size of a modern dime. It was minted in cupronickel, 75 percent copper and 25 percent nickel.

The reverse is entirely taken up by Roman numeral III and a wreath. So "United States of America" is around the obverse rim, with the date at bottom.

These 3¢ pieces resemble the first Liberty nickels (issued later) in omitting the word "Cents." However, the plain-edged 3¢ was obviously too small and light to be a $3 gold piece.

Optimistic mint workers cranked out more than 11.3 million 3¢ pieces for the first year, and the new coin went into circulation.

In the second year, mintage plummeted to 4.8 million.

The 3¢ denomination might be perfect for buying a 3¢ stamp, but it was a bother otherwise.

As far as the American public cared, the 3¢ piece was a coin whose time had come — and gone.

If your collection doesn't yet have a nickel 3¢ piece, you might be pleasantly surprised by the prices. A specimen in Fine condition (F-12 in the American Numismatic Association system) should cost only about $7 for common dates.

Relatively few of us collect 3¢ coins by date; most collectors are content with one coin out of the series. This keeps demand and prices low.

Philadelphia kept minting nickel 3¢ pieces through the 1870's and 1880's, but mintage totals kept dropping. In 1877, 1878, and 1886 the entire mintages were in the form of Proof coins for collectors.

After 1889, mint officials gave up. Out of that year's total 21,561 pieces, about one out of every six was a Proof headed for somebody's collection.

That was the last year the U.S. issued a 3¢ coin. There have been attempts to revive this value, but every one has failed. And the 3¢ seems destined to remain a thing of the past.
