Cuban President Agrees to Hour's Truce With Rebels

AGREEMENT ON EVACUATION IS BEING SOUGHT

HAVANA, Cuba, Nov. 9.—The government opened a bombardment of the fortress of Atares, where 700 rebels are holed up, at the conclusion of an hour's truce this afternoon. A mission attempting a compromise with the rebels to prevent loss of the apparently failed, and the government's heavy artillery began firing away at the thick walls of the fortress.

HAVANA, Cuba, Nov. 9.—President Grau San Martin agreed to an hour's truce with 700 rebels barricaded behind the walls of Atares fortress. The government hoped to arrive at a truce agreement for their evacuation. A Uruguayan minister was sent to the fortress, bearing a message from the president, and to act as mediator in a last minute effort to reach a compromise and end the fighting. Government forces began a brisk bombardment of the fortress at 11 a. m. from heavy field pieces. The bombardment was preceded by considerable machine gun fire and sporadic long distance attacks on members of the A. B. C. supporting the government, but the arms were ineffective against the heavy walls of the fortress.

LOOT TAKEN IN BURGLARY OF LEGION FOUND

All of the loot taken from the American Legion hut here in a burglary several months ago was recovered today, Cisco police announced. The loot consisting of a German machine gun, five army rifles, several billiard balls, had been hidden in a pasture near Moran, Ky. A youth, hunting stumps, found the guns where they appeared to have been lying for months. They were removed to a house in an area where Chief of Police Purand Bill Joiner, a member of Cisco post, identified the arms and brought them back to Cisco.

How May Be Used To Govern Liquor

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 9.—The war against the illicit liquor was decreed by federal today as it was indicated by A. A. codes might be utilized to control the legalized liquor industry when prohibition ends December 5. Attorneys have filed a marketing agreement with the agricultural and food administration and a code in practice with the NRA. It pointed out that the wine makers and brewers might be hit under similar codes to give government complete regulatory

THREE GUESSES

"White Collar" Relief His Aim

Relief for the nation's 2,000,000 "white collar" depression victims is the aim of Dr. Jacob Baker, shown above at his desk in the capital. Dr. Baker heads this work under the federal emergency relief administration and has several special rehabilitation projects under way.

FOUR MEN DIE IN BALLINGER HIWAY CRASH

BALLINGER, Nov. 9.—Four men were killed near here early today, three instantly, when an automobile and truck collided head on. The dead are: Millard King, Charles T. Matthews and Wolford Pierson, all of San Angelo, and Oscar Abernathy, of Sterling City. Pierson, who died several hours after the accident, was traveling with Abernathy in a motor truck which collided with an automobile in which the other victims were riding. The accident occurred four miles west of here.

TWO SOVIET MOVES, PEACE AND CONFISCATION, WORRIED ALLIES

Editor's Note: Following is the second dispatch of a series on the Russian revolution and the Soviet Union in world affairs.

By JOSEPH H. BAIRD
United Press Staff Correspondent
(Copyright, 1933, by United Press)

WASHINGTON, Nov. 9.—Hardly had the red flag of the Soviet Union been hoisted over the Kremlin before the outside world—particularly the allies fighting Germany—became seriously alarmed over two acts of Russia's new rulers.

The first was their almost immediate peace overtures with Germany. The allied high command envisaged millions of German soldiers, released from duty on the Russian front, already threatening to inundate Paris. Strenuous efforts were made to prevent Russia from concluding a separate peace—but in vain.

Reputed Czarist Debts

The second cause of alarm and hatred against the Russians was their decree repudiating the debts of the Czarist and Kerensky governments and confiscating the property of foreigners within the Russian state. Not only were these acts contrived to deprive the allied states and their nationals of hundreds of millions of dollars but—in the view of contemporary statesmen—they set a dangerous precedent which might be followed elsewhere.

Russia's first move for peace along broad lines, designed as a general peace to be participated in by all the Allies. To this end, Foreign Commissar Trotsky wrote notes to United States Ambassador David R. Francis and the other envoys of principal allied countries in Petrograd suggesting a general peace, "without annexations or indemnities."

The British ambassador summoned the other envoys to his embassy and the Russian proposal was discussed. They agreed unanimously to take no official notice of Trotsky's note, but sent it on to their foreign

12 ARRESTED IN KIDNAPING RING BREAKUP

CHICAGO, Nov. 9.—Operations of a well-organized and powerful gang of kidnapers which collected more than $500,000 from victims during the past 3 years was revealed today with arrest of 12 men. Confessions have been obtained from some of the alleged kidnapers under arrest, investigators for the state attorney's office said. All are to be charged with kidnaping, a crime punishable by death under Illinois law.

The confessions, it was stated at the state attorney's office, cleared up at least nine major kidnapings in the Chicago area and may result in the solution of five others.

Additional arrests were expected.

JOHNSON SAYS STRIKES HELP WALL STREET

OMAHA, Neb., Nov. 9.—Recovery Administrator Hugh S. Johnson was en route to Kansas City today to continue his appeal to mid-western farmers for support of the administration program. In a widely cheered speech here last night to an audience of 5,000 Johnson rebuked agrarians because of convictions that relief had not been faster.

"God knows no one can blame the impatience of people trying to save their homes, but such impatience should not take the form of going out and setting these homes afire," he said.

"Why all this fantastic whirling against our best interests? It's the inability of a few people to make a sacrifice in desperate times for the common good of all."

TWO RAILROAD BRIDGES BURNED

COUNCIL BLUFFS, Ia., Nov. 9.—Two railroad bridges were burned in this farm strike area early today. One near Portsmouth, Ia., in Shelby county, and the other two miles north of Thurston, Neb.

Both bridges were being repaired. Neither was destroyed, but both were damaged considerably.

TWO TAYLOR MEN ARE CHARGED IN ROBBERY

TAYLOR, Nov. 9.—Two Taylor men, one recovering from injuries sustained in an automobile collision, were held under robbery charges here today in connection with the $2,800 robbery of the Bank of Walburg in Williamson county yesterday.

The loot was recovered. Both men were captured when an automobile in which they fled from Walburg collided with at rock near Curciville.

Westbrook Goes to Washington Today

AUSTIN, Nov. 9.—Relief Director Lawrence Westbrook left today for Washington to confer with Emergency Relief Administrator Harry Hopkins and other authorities on the newly created civil work administration.

Weds Bandit, Pays in Prison

Married in haste to a gangster, Burnah White, 19-year-old blond beauty, will have years to repent. She lived through a honeymoon of five terror-packed days of banditry, then was a widow, headed for prison. Convicted in Los Angeles on 11 counts of assault and robbery as aide of Thomas White, slain after an orgy of crime, she is pictured here, awaiting sentence of five years to life.

BAPTISTS MOVE TO HEAL BREAK 34 YEARS AGO

FORT WORTH, Nov. 9.—The Texas Baptist general convention and the Texas Baptist Missionary association moved here today to heal a breach of 34 years.

The Baptist general convention, in session here, proposed to name a committee of 25 to meet with a committee of the same size from the missionary organization to iron out the differences which caused their split in 1899.

The two groups are to report at next year's convention.

The general convention and the missionary association separation came in a convention at Dallas as the result of a disagreement on the method of seating convention messengers.

The late Rev. S. A. Haden, publisher of the old Baptist Herald, led the missionary association out of a heated controversy with J. B. Cranfield, Dallas, then publisher of the Baptist Standard.

Two Taylor Men Are Charged in Robbery

TAYLOR, Nov. 9.—Two Taylor men, one recovering from injuries sustained in an automobile collision, were held under robbery charges here today in connection with the $2,800 robbery of the Bank of Walburg in Williamson county yesterday.

The loot was recovered. Both men were captured when an automobile in which they fled from Walburg collided with at rock near Curciville.

AGREEMENT IS BELIEVED NEAR WITH SOVIETS

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 9.—The Soviet-American recognition talks today reached the advanced stage where an agreement was ready for presidential approval, it was indicated after a meeting between Sec'y of State Hull and the Russian foreign minister.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 9.—Soviet-American negotiations on recognition were understood today to be proceeding rapidly towards a successful conclusion.

As a result of diplomatic spade work done yesterday by President Roosevelt, Sec'y of State Hull and Foreign Commissar Litvinoff, informed sources there would not be surprised if United States recognition of the Soviet Union is announced today, tonight or tomorrow.

Litvinoff had an engagement with Hull at 11 a. m. today to continue discussion of the technical barriers to recognition.

The vital point of the conversation was to be reached later in the day at the white house when Litvinoff meets Mr. Roosevelt again.

3 SKIRMISHES IN GAS RATE BATTLE LOOM

AUSTIN, Nov. 9.—Three skirmishes are due this week in the drive of Texas gas consumers against utilities for reduced gas rates.

A cold wave which swept down into the state, speeding up ticking gas meters as thermometers fell, accelerated the campaign for rate reductions.

At Austin railroad commissioners studied a proposed order setting a gate rate for gas from the pipelines of the $210,000,000 United Gas Public Service company. The unsigned order would set a gate rate of 32 cents per thousand cubic feet in the north Texas division of the United system.

At the pipeline gates of cities on the United system south of Wichita Falls, the rate would vary in proportion to consumption.

The proposed order would do more than that. It would give the railroad commission a basis on which to decide the fairness of rate reductions ordered by city ordinance in many communities served by the United Gas system.

16 City Rate Cases.

Sixteen such cases are now pending.

In 53rd district court here the city of Laredo, served by the United Gas system, was fighting a rate battle of its own. By ordinance the city reduced the domestic rate from 75 cents to 40 cents per 1,000 cubic feet.

Laredo waited for no general rate order such as now proposed. The reduction, opposed by the utility, was appealed to the railroad commission, which set the rate at 55 cents. The dispute was then carried to the district court.

In the progress of the case, Laredo made its own evaluation of United system's properties, set its own hypothetical gate rate. The city was appealed to the railroad commission, which set the rate at 55 cents. The dispute was then carried to the district court.

But by excepting Laredo, the commission will subject its proposed general rate order to the claim it is indiscriminatory. On that peg the commission's rate order temporarily hangs.

Lone Star Plea.

Plea of the $160,000,000 Lone Star system for a permanent injunction restraining the railroad commission from enforcing an order gate rate of 32 cents per 1,000 cubic feet is scheduled to be heard by a three-judge federal court in Houston Saturday.

The commission's order reduced the rate from 40 cents a 1,000 cubic feet. The reduction would mean an estimated saving of $1,400,000 annually to rate payers on the Lone Star system.

The utility claims the 32-cent

Capitol Opened to Farm Strikers

In an unusual setting—the assembly room of Wisconsin's capitol—farm leaders met and voted continuation of their strike, gaining impetus in the Badger state, defying the order of Gov. Alfred Schmedeman to keep highways open. The picture above shows the meeting, attended by 500, in progress. No peace until cost of crop production is assured was their rallying cry.

Cisco Has Sympathy of Oil Belt as Lobos Approach Game With Bulldogs

The Cisco Lobos approaching their game with the league-leading Ranger Bulldogs Saturday, have the sympathetic interest of the other defeated teams in the oil belt but nobody's confidence. Popular and private opinion have it that the eleven iron men of the Ranger squad are due to hammer out another victory here Saturday afternoon beginning at 2:30 as the annual Armistice day clash of the two schools occurs.

Meantime at Ranger all resources are being brought to bear to exterminate every vestige of the over-confidence that proved so fatal to Ranger's hopes in 1930 when they sprang a surprise later to defeat Beckenridge, and but for the Cisco defeat would have had a district championship. Yesterday's Ranger Times carried a featured interview with Cisco coaches and players, all of whom, according to the story, predicted a victory for the Lobos that day. The interviews are quoted liberally and prominently for the edification of the Bulldogs.

Is This True?

Bill Rutledge, end; Claude Blackburn, captain, and Leonard Latch, ex-captain, are among those quoted by the Ranger writer as having assured him the Lobos will win. The correspondent also writes that he interviewed "the assistant coach, the superintendent, some of the teachers, the starting lineup," and even the substitutes and the school janitor, all of whom declared that Cisco will win Saturday.

This is published in the Ranger paper as a warning against the nemesis that has proven so disastrous to Ranger in the past.

Meantime, further columns are devoted to a review of past and similar records in the oil belt where, in Ranger, with a decided advantage by the dope, fell to inglorious defeat in spite of it.

An Idea of Support

An idea of how the fans are viewing the game is to be gained from the ticket sales. Tuesday afternoon local officials sent 413 reserved seat tickets to Ranger. By early yesterday afternoon all had been sold and a representative came for 450 additional reserved seat tickets and 500 general admission tickets.

Meantime, Cisco had bought 52 reserved seat slips by noon today.

Merchants of the city, however, will lend the support of closing their doors for the duration of the game. Stores will close 30 minutes before the contest and continue so until after the game is over.

In the high school a week of pep rallies will be climaxed with a bon fire and rally at the football grounds Friday night, it is planned.

5,000 Expected

The contest, falling on a holiday, is expected to draw an attendance of at least 5,000 persons, reviving the rich and vibrant colors of more prosperous football seasons in the oil belt when there were no such things as night-semester rules to hinder the finest development of the high school sports and its stimulation community interest.

Dressed for the occasion in new uniforms, the Lobo band will form an important splash of the general color scheme. The Lobo pep squad of pretty girls in pretty gold and black costumes, will be another important splash. Both organizations have been rehearsing for their part on the program.

Tickets are on sale at the Moore Drug company here where a plot of reserved seats provide for 420 places, most of which are yet open.

In addition there are a thousand or more general admission seats of choice variety.

A jury in the third trial of Oscar Privett, Ranger, tried twice previously on a charge of murder in connection with the slaying of Melvin Duneson, found him guilty and assessed punishment of 16 years in state prison in a verdict reported to Judge George Davenport of 91st district court this morning. The jury arrived at its verdict at midnight but was unable to report until this morning.

The trial began Tuesday. The jury occupied two and a half hours with deliberation.

COMPLAINT OF MISUSING BANK FUND IS MADE

HOUSTON, Nov. 9.—State Senator Gus Russek, of Schulenburg, was charged today by the federal government with misapplying and converting to his own use $2,037 in funds of the First National bank, of Schulenburg.

Russek formerly was active vice-president of the bank. He was further charged with making false entries in the bank-book and records by charging the account of the Union National bank, Houston with $2,037 with intent to defraud the Schulenburg bank.

The charges were filed before U. S. Comm'r Carothers by J. V. Murphy, agent of the department of justice.

Bond of $5,000 will be asked for Russek, according to Asst. U. S. Attorney Albert Thomas, who authorized filing of the charges. Russek is now in a hospital at San Antonio, Thomas said. The charges were filed after alleged discrepancies were found in the bank's records by a bank examiner.

ROTARIANS OF EASTLAND GIVE PROGRAM HERE

In the first of a series of programs to be interchanged a delegation from the Eastland Rotary club today were the guests of the Cisco Rotary club at its noon luncheon.

The visitors had complete charge of the program which was under the direction of Leslie R. Gray, whose classification at Eastland is electrical engineering.

A well-balanced Rotary program was presented, with Dr. J. H. Caton delivering a Rotary talk, Mr. Gray a talk on his classification and Mrs. Gray Pippin and B. M. Collier singing a duet.

Dr. Caton briefly reviewed the organization, objects and the obligations of Rotary and pointed to its benefits. Mr. Gray discussed interestingly the identity of the "kilowatt" which, he said, is the unit of measurement of the quantity of electrical energy consumed and equivalent to the work of ten men for one hour. He explained that electricity is applied work which, by reason of its various phases of character, can be bent to do a great variety of work.

President Phil Pettit thanked the visitors for their program. The Cisco club will return the visit at an early date.

Present as guests of the club today were: Mr. and Mrs. Grady Pippin, Dr. Caton, Earl Bender, Mr. Collier and Mr. Gray, from Eastland, and E. R. McDaniel from Abilene.

Count of Kentucky Vote Favors Repeal

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Nov. 9.—Count of Kentucky's ballots from Tuesday's election today showed an evenly sustained majority for repeal of the 18th amendment, placing the state as the 37th to approve repeal.

Verdict Assesses Privett 16 Years

A jury in the third trial of Oscar Privett, Ranger, tried twice previously on a charge of murder in connection with the slaying of Melvin Duneson, found him guilty and assessed punishment of 16 years in state prison in a verdict reported to Judge George Davenport of 91st district court this morning. The jury arrived at its verdict at midnight but was unable to report until this morning.

The trial began Tuesday. The jury occupied two and a half hours with deliberation.

THE REVOLT OF THE VOTERS.

A number of interesting deductions are to be drawn from the election results of the past few months, climaxed by the repeal of the 18th amendment and the disasters that befell such powerful political machines as Tammany in New York and the Vane organization in Pennsylvania. The final state votes needed to eliminate the 13-year-old 18th amendment from the constitution and return the question of liquor control to the states were put into the record Tuesday. The day marked also the belated breaking of the steady procession toward repeal when North and South Carolina swung to the anti-repeal cause.

In New York the record of Jimmy Walker, playboy mayor, was a handicap exposed by alert investigators that all the minute and careful organization of the Tammany machine could not overcome. Its refusal to accept McKee as its candidate was also unfortunate, if necessary, for McKee is a sort of Prince Promising, a character of young honesty to catch the public eye and make it forget the Jimmy Walkers and their ilk. New Yorkers of the regular democratic persuasion liked McKee, to judge from his plurality over Tammany, and to spurn him in favor of fat, easy-going O'Brien was to fasten further suspicion, deserved or undeserved, upon Tammany's motives.

So LaGuardia, sharp, aggressive and fiery of tongue, and his joining of republicans and anti-Tammany democrats have captured the plum tree of the biggest and richest city in all the western hemisphere, a community of seven millions of souls, more populous than all the state of Texas with several neighboring states combined. It was another of those revolutions of the voters that have been turning the country upside down since the depression.

In Cuba they are killing people in armed uprisings, with the same motives that caused the American public to turn Hoover out under a tremendous landslide of discontented votes, and call upon the democratic party and Mr. Roosevelt to lead them out of the wilderness of depression and economic confusion into which three administrations of republican mismanagement had guided them. Issues are matters more of emotion than thought. We vote as we feel. We are impatient and we demand results without considering how those results are to be obtained. Mutterings of the impatient against the slowness of the present recovery program are to be heard. They do not stop to think that it took more than a decade to get into the mess, and that to get out of it will take more time.

But the present series of political upheavals has its interesting moments. It is a test of the sufficiency of this government of, by and for the people. While Cubans are killing their neighbors in revolt after revolt, the American public is expressing its dissatisfaction with things as they are at the polls. In the outcome will be read the verdict upon the democratic concept.

NEW RELIEF PLAN.

The national administration will meet the threat of winter and its acute emphasis on distress with a broadened relief program through which it is calculated to desert the bare subsistence theory and broaden the basis of relief to such an extent that 4,000,000 men may be put to work upon a 30-hour week basis. As now, the federal relief administration distributes money to cooperating states which in turn allocate the fund among local units for relief purposes. Under the new plan as it is understood, however, the government will appropriate $150,000,000 per month until February to the new civil works division of the relief administration which will take 2,000,000 of the present 3,000,000 off local relief rolls and put them to work on a great variety of federal, state and local items of construction and repair, including roads, water systems, sanitation, parks and playgrounds, pest control and so forth.

Under the present system the average relief roll worker earns about $20 per month. Under the new this income would be increased to about $50 per week, on the basis of a 30-hour week at the minimum prescribed wage.

The plan is expected to encourage local projects of a minor character, materials for which would be purchased with local funds. The program will probably open the way to a realization of a number of local plans that have been halted by reason of government regulations on the securing of public works grants and so forth—the settling basins for Lake Cisco, for instance.

THE ITALIAN AIR ARMADA

Is the Small Town Passing?

(EDITOR'S NOTE: Here the president of a large Dallas financial institution discusses one of the most vital and often-asked questions arising from present day conditions. Is the small town passing? Every small town merchant has asked himself that question. Every citizen who has seen his Main Street dwindle into speedy highways, or watched his post office become a delivery point for an increasing mail order business, has asked it. What is happening to the small town? Let Mr. Thornton, in an article distributed by the Dallas chamber of commerce, reply.)

By R. L. THORNTON, President Mercantile National Bank at Dallas. Fifteen to twenty-five years ago, in bad road days, the smaller towns all over Texas — did a flourishing business. Then, with the advent of good roads and the novelty and efficiency of the automobile, the business of many of the small towns began to dwindle and some of them have almost passed out of business existence. The blacksmith shop has given way to the filling station; the horse-drawn carriage to the auto; the church house as a gathering place in part to the picture show. And so, the change in human amusement and activity.

Yet, we are still people with the same or better average rate of human intelligence and about as good as we ever were — still spending most of what we make for the things we need and want. The old free credit business in the main has changed to either a thirty-day or cash business. We go on getting along better or worse — some that were better are now worse and some that were worse are now better — and many of the old patrons of the "old day" store have passed on and a "new day" generation have taken their place; are doing the making of the money and the spending of it.

So, we know generally what has happened to the business of many of the smaller towns, but the big question is what brought it about and will the business return again; will the small town return to its normal or radius function or has its business gone elsewhere — never to return?

Business left the smaller town largely for three reasons: first, a new method of transportation, with good roads made roamers, so to speak, out of our people. They went to the larger trading centers, primarily because it was easy and they wanted to go some place — to move to some new place, not because prices as a rule were lower, but there was more excitement, more people, and everybody else was going. Second, the larger trading centers afforded a wider variety of style and quality, a greater "Circus Day" event more hilarity, more entertainment, more fun, and both the young and the old liked it and always have. Third, the merchants of the larger trading centers advertised, told the smaller town folks all about their bargains, price, style and fitness to a great degree than ever before, and the smaller town folks liked that. It was, in a way, something new to them, that is, advertising in a different way and a more thrilling way. Then, what happened? The small town store, losing its business, ceased to carry what the people wanted — reduced its stocks and simply surrendered, so to speak, saying that this town is through for good and the auto and good roads have ruined this town and my business. Some of the better small town merchants went to the larger trade centers, and the county seat town raised the same complaint in part, saying their customers with autos and good roads had gone on to the cities where still more glamour and greater excitement, greater stores, and more fun existed, all of which, in part, has happened.

I know county seat towns that sold more goods in dollars twenty to thirty years ago than they do today. All these changes have affected banking in these respective towns and communities, for as the business of a town ebbs and flows, so flows the business of the banks of that town.

Paved streets, big lighted streets, big fire departments, all of which we like, must be paid for by merchants and other tax payers and have a direct bearing on the expense of doing business, and are reflected in the prices of goods sold.

So, many of the larger cities are now over-merchandised with an ever-increasing overhead cost of doing business; and, to prevent the purchaser about finished their "joy riding" and now ready to come back home? If merchants will invite them back with "up-to-now" modern stocks and modern methods of doing business, fun and entertainment, won't the same auto that carried them away bring them back? And can't they come back over the same good roads they went away over? The purchasers have begun to learn that it takes money to run an auto 20 to 100 miles, let alone wear and tear. He has begun to learn that high city taxes and high costs of doing business are also placed on the price ticket of the article he buys. He has also begun to learn that there is not nearly so much advantage with the quantity buyer as there used to be. The buyer is now an educated buyer. The radio, the newspapers and the merchants themselves have taught him a lot more about merchandise than he ever knew before. So, hasn't all of this created a new opportunity for the smaller town merchant of equal merchandising ability and with equal or proportionately equal capital?

My own view is that we are running over many green fields looking for greener ones. The capable smaller or county-seat town merchant has many basic advantages in cost of doing business. He is closer to and understands the wants and necessities of his trade territory. The question of small and quick deliveries is no involved. He sits close to the seat of our fundamental purchasing power. If he is a merchandiser, he can sell the best quality at as low a price as that article can be profitably sold anywhere. To illustrate that the small town has not gone, though many would-be merchants have passed on and out:

According to statistics compiled by the U. S. Department of Commerce, 30.2 per cent of the merchant, disc bought at retail by the people of the United States was bought in towns and hamlets of 10,000 and less. Doesn't this surprise you when you take into consideration the thousands of large trading centers of 10,000 and over in the United States? After all, it's the masses that are doing the great majority of our buying.

Entertaining merchants and business men built most all the towns and cities of this country. This same type, that is the New Day, up-to-date, wide-awake merchants and business men, can rebuild them and will, for for there is opportunity there and men seek opportunity and dare the world for it.

But don't forget that we are all scientific now. Just anybody is not a merchant any more than just anyone is a doctor or a preacher or a lawyer, whereas in former days, anyone that had enough money to buy a few goods and offer them for sale to the public was a merchant. That was usually for only a short time.

So, my thought is the country town has not passed, but as the country rights its economic wrongs, sees the light of a sounder economic day, the smaller town will perform its sound economic function by serving those that it is best equipped to serve in every line, and just as the cities serve, and no until then will we reach our maximum of a well-balanced prosperity, for it takes prosperous hamlets, prosperous towns and prosperous cities to make up a well-balanced prosperous country.

Through the Editor's Spectacles

By GEORGE

From the looks of the plat at the Moore Drug store today might be of you Cisco people have any right to criticize the Lobos. Only 52 reserved seats out of about 420 had been sold.

For a contrast, let's turn to Ranger. Day before yesterday the school authorities sent 413 reserved seat tickets to the Bulldogs' home town and yesterday afternoon a messenger hot-footed it over here with the news that every seat had been sold and the Rangerites were clamoring for more.

In other words, about eight Ranger fans bought seats for the game to every one Lobo fan.

Now, who do you think will win the game next Saturday? You can see some reason for why I have been predicting a victory for the Bulldogs. I have remembered also the fact that the Cisco side of the football field for both the Eastland and Breckenridge games looked mighty scattering while visitors brought at least a third more to the support of their teams. In the face of that, the Cisco boys are to Imagine a football team organized in the wide open spaces with the wind for a pep squad, the sun for its inspiration and the sepulchral silences of the great open spaces for its cheering section. Then conceive of an opposing team backed by thousands of yelling folks, all of whom have every ounce of hope and faith pinned on it. Imagine this team running upon the field under the dining cheers of its supporters, urged to victory by the pleading eyes and voices of hundreds of school boys and girls who think it is the greatest single thing on earth; and by the fan encouragement of several thousands of papas and mamas. Put both of those teams, evenly matched in potential strength together, and tell me who wins.

You know darn well you'll win. And if this keeps up you know darn well who will win next Saturday, regardless of how much you may disagree with my prediction and attempt to make all the school kids up at Cisco high dislike this column for being frank.

You ought to be ashamed of yourselves, those other 368 of you who should have had your reserved seats long ago.

Ranger is helping their football team win here Saturday. Cisco is asking the Lobos to go it alone. Now, would you blame the boys if, being criticised, they should tell you to repair to that boomer of flame and sulphurous fume from which there is no pardon or release?

LONE STAR SAYS RULING NOT CLEAR.

DALLAS, Nov. 9.—The Lone Star Gas company does not feel a ruling of the Texas Railroad Commission makes clear its rights in advertising. L. B. Denning, president of the company, wrote recently Sam P. Harben, secretary of the Texas Press association.

The railroad commission action recently made public a letter which it said it allowed the line company to advertise.

Denning's letter to Harben to the commission had ruled the company's advertising must be for the purpose of securing new business, increasing sales and that the expense should be borne by the distributing companies. "If the ruling of the commission should be followed it would, in our opinion," the letter said, "completely eliminate Lone Star Gas company from any form of advertising, also any advertising by the distributing companies which, in the opinion of the commission, did tend to increase sales or secure business would be interpreted, political under the ruling and prohibited."

The gas company official who wrote the letter to the commission, Harben was not a part of the proceedings of the rate case and "is inconsistent with the official opinion order in the rate case." This is the main issue unsettled, namely the future allowance of expense advertising by the pipe line company," the letter said.

The ruling in regard to the pipe line company's advertising was made in connection with a recent order of the railroad commission cutting gas rates on the Lone Star system about $1,400,000 yearly.

CHAPTER I

DAVID BANNISTER nodded to the waiter to refill his cup of coffee. He said slowly, "But was murder—!"

"They couldn't prove it," Jim told him across the table. "It wasn't a scrap of real evidence. It was five days later his cap and ashore. Aside from that— he just disappeared and no one knows any more about it to than they ever did. The woman wasn't even questioned. I've understood that part of it. It was mentioned in his will, but for a large amount. I think his wife contested later—"

"Poor old Louie!" Bannister said and the cup of coffee, then set down again. "It happened that I was in Mexico," he said. "I never heard the whole story be—"

David Bannister

And neither has anyone else. The whole story of what happened that night on that yacht would in fact be a lot of people. If Louie was murdered—"

"I can't believe it!" Bannister interrupted. "I simply can't believe anyone would bump off old Louie. It just doesn't seem like—"

"Do murders ever seem likely?"

"Of course. Lots of them do— in our business. Inevitably. But I can't believe Louie Kane was murdered, even if he was a double-dealing old pirate with a lot of enemies." Bannister said suddenly. "There was something about the wholesale business of the fellow—," he went on. "Why, Louie would have been in the face—and I'm sure I know he was lying—and I'm sure I know he was lying—and I'm sure I know he was lying—"

was Bannister who sat back, listening intently, now and then interrupting. Not a handsome man. The most generous judge would have rated Dave Bannister's features no better than "common or garden variety." Nevertheless there were qualities in that face—intelligence, tolerance, generosity. That much of what Dave Bannister was could be read at a glance.

Tremont society—for it was chiefly Tremont society that was gathered about the tables in the oak-paneled, crimson tapestried hotel dining room—enjoyed this opportunity to inspect David Bannister. Tremont society had known him not at all in the old days. Now they were aware that, with the publication of his first novel a year before, Bannister's picture had appeared in newspapers and magazines. There had been a motion picture made from the novel. There had been some short stories, too, under his signature in a weekly magazine boasting the largest circulation in the country.

It was the Hollywood phase of Bannister's career that seemed most glamorous to Tremont, whose 140,000 population patronized two dozen motion picture houses. There were those who wondered why, after such triumphs, the young man should be back in the home of his boyhood. Looking at him as he sat at the table with Jim Paxton, it was hard to believe Bannister was making the visit to his aunt because, as the Evening Post had stated, he needed a rest. David Bannister seemed the picture of health.

Paxton was talking now—jerkily, with that characteristic nervous emphasis. "I think Burns is in Guatemala," he said. "At least he was the last I heard. And Snodgrass—remember Snodgrass, don't you? Well, by George, he's raising chickens!"

Bannister smiled. "A worthy enterprise," he commented. "May-life come when you're on a boat. You never get them sitting at a desk in an office. When I think of those old days—oh, well, what's the use? I suppose I'm getting old!"

"Almost 30, aren't you?" Paxton asked, smiling. "Well, the offer's open. We'll take you on at The Post any day. By the way, if you're really going to stay here for a while, Nora and I want to see a lot of you. She'll be back next week. Want you to come out to the house soon. We'll have a crowd in for dinner. They all want to meet you, you know. You're a celebrity!"

"I'd better warn you," he went on, "that Nora is expecting you to give her the low-down on Hollywood. Who's getting the latest divorces and why. Whether it's really true that the star's pet dogs wear diamond collars. And I think there was something in one of the gossip columns about you being seen at the Brown Derby, lunching with Mae West or Baby Peggy or one of the other beauties. Nora'll be sure to ask about that—"

"Wait a minute!" Bannister stopped him. "I don't know anything about Hollywood's private life. All I did was work there."

"Try to make Nora believe that!"

"Well, if Nora has any such ridiculous notions in her head—which I doubt—you'll have to remove them. You're talking like Aunt Kate! Amazing as it seems, I have discovered that my aunt is one of the nation's most inveterate movie-goers. Never misses a change of pictures at the State. That's where she is tonight."

"You still have to answer for that luncheon at the Brown Derby. Was it Mae West or Baby Peggy?"

"Neither. I tell you were authors aren't invited to take part in the gilded social whirl out there. Authors are herded into small cages and told to start pounding the typewriter."

"Well, I've warned you," Paxton said. "If you haven't any true stories of the movie great you'd better start manufacturing some. Anyhow we'll get up a little dinner next week. And how about some golf Saturday?"

BANNISTER applied the flame of a lighter to his cigarette before he spoke. "My golf is a slip and you know it," he said levelly. "A great one you are to talk about Louie Kane's prairies! You haven't a chance in a thousand of roping me in on that West Haven corral!"

He glanced down at his wrist watch. "Lord!" he exclaimed, "it's nearly nine o'clock. I had no idea it was so late."

Paxton said, "Let's see if we can't round up a couple of others for some bridge. Sam Paradise is usually around here—"

Bannister shook his head. "Sorry," he said. "I'll have to be getting on. It's been great to sit here, chewing the fat about old times. Hope we can have another session soon."

"Of course we can," Paxton agreed. The dining room was almost deserted as they left the table. To the headwaiter's bow Paxton said casually, "Good night, Frank."

Outside in the lobby the two men hesitated. Bannister said, "I'll take a cab. Can I drop you off anywhere?"

The other shook his head. "No," he said. "I think I'll see if I can find Paradise. Stop in at the office tomorrow, why don't you?"

"Maybe I will," Bannister promised. "Well, I'll drift along now. Good night, Jim."

"Good night, Dave."

CHAPTER I-A

BANNISTER went through the revolving doors out to the street. A fine mist had begun to fall and the air was colder. He walked to the edge of the curb and halted there. Then after a moment he remembered. No use waiting and expecting a cab to come by, cruising. He would have to go to the other entrance of the building where there was a cab stand. Cabs did not cruise, expecting to pick up fares, in Tremont.

He walked to the Sixth street entrance of the hotel, stepped into a cab and a few moments later was riding eastward toward his aunt's home on the less fashionable side of town.

He leaned back in the seat and closed his eyes. It had been good to see Jim again. He'd enjoyed swapping yarns with him. The two had been friends ever since they first met. They had been friends in spite of the fact that Paxton's father owned the newspaper and Bannister's weekly pay envelope contained $20. But Jim had always been a square-shooter, never pressing advantages that were his by right of inheritance.

Yes, it had been good to talk over old times. And then suddenly Jim had spoiled everything by speaking of dinner parties and golf and bridge games. The West Haven Country Club where Tremont's elect gathered on Saturday afternoons and holidays!

Dave Bannister sighed. What difference did it make whether he was in Westchester or at Malibu Beach or in Tremont? Bridge. Golf. The same bores performing in the same way, though with different backgrounds. The same social climbers. The same silly quarrels and petty enmities. The same adulation for current favorites, to be dropped shortly for a newer crop.

BANNISTER opened his eyes and saw that the rain was coming down faster. He noted this absent-mindedly, without interest. His thoughts continued in the groove they had taken.

Of course he knew why he had refused Jim Paxton's invitation to join a bridge game. There would be no one at Aunt Kate's house when he arrived there and there was no reason for him to return. No reason, at least, but one that was completely and utterly illogical. He knew that when he arrived he would go to his room and begin another letter to Adele Allen—a letter which, quite likely, would tear up when it was finished, just as he had torn up the last one.

But it was certainly better to tear them up than to send them. After the other one had been returned. "I'm all kinds of a fool," Bannister told himself. He meant it. He had belabored himself in the same way a hundred times before.

That was why he had been so irritated by Paxton's chatter about Hollywood. Jim hadn't meant anything by it, he knew. But suppose some of those infernal gossip writers should pick up something about Adele and himself? A bitter smile crossed that thought instantly. No chance of that! Those professional gossip distributors Adele had been given a part in a picture starring Donald Quayle. They might—and no doubt would—write of Adele but it would be to couple her name with that of Donald Quayle, the leading man whose fan mail was so enormous. Anyone who knew Hollywood would understand why Adele Allen had thrown over Dave Bannister for Donald Quayle. Bannister was, to be sure, a promising young writer. One of the new names in literature. But Donald Quayle was an established success. Handsome. Wealthy, too, with a box office following reflected directly in his contract. Certainly it was easy to understand why Adele found Donald Quayle so fascinating.

Bannister stopped thinking about Quayle and thought about Adele. Adele's eyes, mocking and mischievous, danced before him. Adele's copper tresses. The slim figure, so perfectly graceful, perfectly rounded. Her soft, throaty laughter. Lips that were warm and inviting—

The picture disappeared in the cold, drizzling darkness outside. Bannister had known the girl in New York three years before. She had played a small part in a production that had had a long run in the metropolis. He had met her at parties, taken her to dinner, been friendly in a casual way. Then last spring in Hollywood he had seen her again. That time there was no mistake about it. Suddenly, inevitably, he had fallen head over heels in love. Adele was playing small parts still but they were in pictures.

DAVID had fallen in love and it had been for the first time in his life. There had been weeks when the joy of Adele, the beauty of her, the amazing, unbelievable sweetness of her were overwhelming. Weeks that had been—oh, well, they were over now! For lighted doorway. Suddenly the door opened and a girl appeared. She was dressed in green and she halted, apparently dismayed by the rain. Then, head bent to shield her face, she ran down the steps toward the cab.

From his glassed-in section the driver rumbled protests, but the girl did not appear to hear. She came directly to the cab, pulled back the door. It was then she saw Bannister. She cried in a startled, muffled voice, "I—oh, I'm sorry—!"

"Not at all!" Bannister put a hand on the opposite door, opening it. "You wanted a cab, didn't you? I'll be glad to let you have this one." He moved to step out into the street.

"Listen, lady!" the gruff voice of the chauffeur objected. "I gotta fare. See? This cab's occupied."

The girl had drawn back. Bannister, too, stood in the street now, the rain trickling down inside his collar. "Get inside," he said harshly. "You're drenched already."

OBEEDIENTLY she climbed into the cab. "But," she appealed, "I can't let you do this! I can't take your cab from you!"

She was a pretty girl. Very pretty. In the dim light Bannister noted a pair of grave, wide-set eyes and saw that her hair was blond. He was aware, too, that the constant trickling of dampness inside his coat collar was uncomfortable. Chivalry be hanged!

He said, "It's a bad night and we both seem to need shelter. Since there's plenty of room for two in this cab perhaps you'd be willing to let me ride with you—"

"Of course I will! It's your cab really. If you'll let me go as far as the Hotel Tremont I'll be ever so grateful! I wouldn't think of taking your cab away from you."

Bannister stepped back into the cab, leaned forward and said to the driver, "Hotel Tremont." It meant retracing the entire way they had come but what of that?

He drew out a handkerchief, wiped away the rain drops from his neck. "Rotten night," he said easily.

"Yes—it is."

He turned toward the girl and was surprised to see that she was gazing directly ahead. As though she were staring at something he could not see. He asked quickly, "Is there anything wrong? If you're ill we can find a doctor—"

She turned then. "Oh, no! I'm—perfectly all right."

But she wasn't; a fool could see that. She was pale and the wide-set eyes stood out in the white face. There was a break in her voice as she spoke and he thought that her lips trembled faintly.

"I'm perfectly all right," she repeated.

There was a slight motion and Bannister saw that she had dropped her handbag. He bent, reaching for it, just as the girl reached, too. The bag jolted and their shoulders collided awkwardly. Bannister grasped the handbag.

And just then the cab jolted again. The clasp of the leather bag, dislodged in the fall, snapped open. Something slipped into Bannister's hand. It was something that was cold and smooth and heavy.

He looked down as the light from a street lamp shown directly into the cab. The yellow glow fell on the object in his hand, catching the gleam of polished metal. It was a revolver.

WAR HAS JUST BEGUN W.T.C.U. LEADER SAYS

By IDA B. WISE SMITH

President National W. C. T. U. CHICAGO, Nov. 9.—The repeal of the 18th amendment may look like the end of the road to many, but Ida B. Wise Smith, it simply is an episode in the war against man's greatest and oldest enemy—intoxicating drink.

Prohibition never was an end in itself; but rather a method of dealing with the liquor traffic. The nation had tried every other known method; all failed. We believed prohibition to be the best method; if we can not have prohibition we will try to reduce the evils of liquor to a minimum by some other method.

Start Over Again.

We will start all over again in a new and improved campaign of education. It will be scientific and, I believe, adequate.

But education in alcohol and its effect, must keep step with progress. A hundred years ago we could talk about "horrible examples" and show startling charts indicating the effect of liquor on the human stomach; but educational methods have changed and progressed. Today we should show what sobriety does for life; for happiness, accuracy, scholarship, athletics, etc.

Total Abstinence Goal.

America must adopt a total abstinence goal; if it adopts a moderate drinking goal the people are lost. All drunkards got their start in moderate drinking.

Against public school temperance education will be launched an organized and skilled propaganda in favor of moderate drinking; this will be a part of the commercial advertising of the liquor interests. I am in favor of curtailing liquor advertising; it should be prohibited. It should not be permitted in newspapers, magazines, billboards, radio, or anywhere else.

There will be a part of the people who will oppose the government of any state which is in the liquor business. It is that way in Canada. There the liquor manufacturers are in politics. There is a strong dry movement slowly bearing down on the Canadian liquor systems, trying to reduce the quantity sold.

Fight for Dry Laws

Wherever prohibition laws remain, the W. C. T. U. will fight to retain them. We expect to be opposed by liquor politicians. We will try to vote the saloon and the liquor business out as much of the United States as we can. On the other hand we expect to see the liquor business try to vote the liquor business into as much United States territory as it can.

The great need of the hour is a revival of civic consciousness. The W. C. T. U. is trying its best to arouse women to their full duty with respect to the ballot.

Restoration of Key House Is Problem

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 9.—How to restore an ancient structure which has only the foundation and two walls remaining, is the problem facing the National Capital Park and Planning Commission.

The project under consideration is the restoration of the Francis Scott Key House, one-time home of the man who wrote the "Star-Spangled Banner," located in the historic Georgetown section of Washington.

As far as the commission is concerned plans are prepared and work will begin as soon as funds can be obtained. But a snag has appeared in the person of Lieut. Col. Francis

STRAWN, Nov. 9.—Bert Wisley, 45, of this city, was instantly killed about 11 a. m. Tuesday when his car struck a post on the Bankhead highway a mile from here and plunged into a creek.

Wisley was manager of the Even-son Oil company at Strawn. Funeral arrangements have not been announced.

MAN CHARGED IN WIFE'S SLAYING

PALO PINTO, Nov. 9.—Lewis Lang, of Strawn appeared before the Palo Pinto county grand jury here Tuesday charged with murder in connection with the slaying of his wife who Monday appeared with him as a witness before the grand jury.

The Langs quarreled in their home at Strawn Monday while their three children and a neighbor child covered in the corner of an adjoining room, the children said. The children told officers that soon afterward a shot was heard. Rushing into the room the children found Mrs. Lang slumped on the floor. She was dead before a physician arrived.

done since Congress adjourned is to keep out of Washington and the national limelight.

OFFICIALS are figuring what goods we best can afford to buy from Russia in return for what we sell her after recognition, so that all our exports there won't be bought with American credits. Furs and caviar seem to be the most popular suggestions so far.

Here, as in Latin-American trade agreement negotiations, the great difficulty is in finding goods for import which will not compete with some domestic product. Though the rains far outweigh the losses, producers who are hurt always can shriek loudest. Which leads one of the officials chiefly concerned with trade negotiations to say wistfully:

"Somehow, sometime, we must obtain acceptance of the idea that a general benefit is worth a minor loss."

MEMBERS of regional NRA labor boards should be "high-minded" as well as disinterested, according to the National Labor Board's instructions to its regional boards. No definition of that term is obtainable here.

But elsewhere one gets the official distinction between: 1—Conciliation, which consists of fetching the two sides together. 2—Mediation, which goes a step further and puts each side a proposed settlement. 3—Arbitration, in which the two sides agree to agree, otherwise, agree to accept the board's decision.

It was the second game of the series against Brooklyn, in the Robins lineup were Johnston, Daubert, Myers, Wheat, Cutshaw, Mowrey, Olson and Miller, and the opposing pitcher was Sherrod Smith, he of the four-pronged splitter.

With Ruth were Hooper, Walker, Walsh and Lewis in the outfield, big Dick Hoblitzel at first base, Jimmy at second, Deacon Scott at third and Larry Gardner at third. Thomas caught. Ruth won that game, but not with his bat, as Southpaw Sherry whiffed the Great Man twice. The Babe struck out Daubert, Myers, Cutshaw and Olson. The score was Boston 2, Brooklyn 1, in 11 innings.

Against the Cubs

In the 1918 world series Ruth pitched the first game and in the batting order of the Cubs were Flack, Hollocher, Mann, Paskert, Merkle, Piek, Deal and good old Bill Killefer. Big Jim "Hippo" Vaughn opposed the Babe in the box.

OFFICIALS are figuring what goods we best can afford to buy from Russia in return for what we sell her after recognition, so that all our exports there won't be bought with American credits. Furs and caviar seem to be the most popular suggestions so far.

Here, as in Latin-American trade agreement negotiations, the great difficulty is in finding goods for import which will not compete with some domestic product. Though the rains far outweigh the losses, producers who are hurt always can shriek loudest. Which leads one of the officials chiefly concerned with trade negotiations to say wistfully:

"Somehow, sometime, we must obtain acceptance of the idea that a general benefit is worth a minor loss."

MEMBERS of regional NRA labor boards should be "high-minded" as well as disinterested, according to the National Labor Board's instructions to its regional boards. No definition of that term is obtainable here.

But elsewhere one gets the official distinction between: 1—Conciliation, which consists of fetching the two sides together. 2—Mediation, which goes a step further and puts each side a proposed settlement. 3—Arbitration, in which the two sides agree to agree, otherwise, agree to accept the board's decision.

SISTER MARY'S RECIPES

BY SISTER MARY NEA Service Writer

MANY housewives are more or less confused by the term "brown" rice. They have a vague idea that brown rice is in some way superior to ordinary rice but are not sure how or why.

White rice, which is always polished rice, has lost both the germ and the bran layer and the grain is made lighter in color.

Unpolished rice is polished rice which has not been coated with talcum powder. Since rice is always thoroughly washed before cooking there's no reason for not using the coated rice because the coating of powder easily washes off.

"Broken" rice usually is cheaper than "fancy" rice and if it's to be used as filler answers the purpose as well as the higher priced grade.

Thorough Washing Necessary The cooking of rice is of utmost importance. It too often appears as a sticky, shapeless mass which is both unappetizing and tasteless.

Unpolished and uncoated rice can be washed by putting the grains in a strainer and holding it under running water. Turn to be sure every grain is exposed to the water and become perfectly clean.

Rice is an exceedingly versatile food and may appear in almost any meal. It combines well with milk, eggs, cheese or left-over meats to make attractive and nourishing dishes.

There are several methods of cooking rice. Varying degrees of watchfulness are necessary for the success of each method.

Chinese Method The quickest way to cook rice is by the Chinese method. Thoroughly washed rice is put into a large round-bottomed sauce pan with four times as much cold water as there is rice.

There is a rice ball on the market that is convenient to use and insures well cooked flaky rice. You can boil rice in a large quantity of boiling salted water if you watch it constantly.

Dancer Suing Tobacco Heir

But, perhaps my readers will ask: Are there then no favoring circumstances and conditions in life? Yes, doubtless, but only for those who work and wait, not for those who lie and wait or set and wait.

We Americans know full well the meaning of the term "push" for we are the most pushing people on the face of the earth.

I do not think our local, government or Red Cross charity organizations have merit to tear down true American citizenship - but I see it doing such in my own community.

We have too many in Cisco and Cisco community walking up and asking for their gifts of charity. I do not think one thing should be given a big strong able bodied man or woman.

I have not had a single man or woman yet to come to my door and ask to work for me to get food or clothing in return.

Hog killing time, how many women have offered to render up land for a buck in return.

If you have sickness the whole of Cisco is at your demand. But I certainly do not approve of giving one cent to a man or woman who is able to work and nothing should be given unless he gives value received in labor.

I sent for a woman last week that I wanted to come to do some work for me. Her husband came by with her one night after supper.

I do not criticize the welfare, R. F. C. or Red Cross or Mr. Editor, in an ill feeling way, but to show you what is being done to our citizenship not realizing what charity can do, and should do.

I do not know all there is to know about charity work, but I doubt if GAL 2-LETTERS is any one in Cisco has had any more cases to handle than I myself have had.

Let's figure about a can of fruit. Not many cans were put up in Cisco this year, for it was too high and scarce.

If you go in for "light" reading matter, you'll be interested in the 28-page volume of Omar Khayyam that Hamilton Woods and Frederick Vroom have just published in Worcester, Mass.

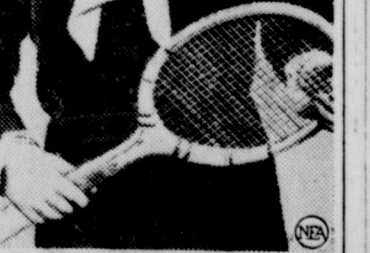

Should I or any other woman in Cisco give this to able bodied man who is able to receive the same by working for it?

One flower of France that refuses to fade out of the tennis picture is Miss Suzanne Lengien who, a decade ago, was beating all the world's women players.

gotiations with Germany and the other central powers. The negotiations lasted from November until March and were interrupted several times. But finally, on March 3, 1918, at Brest-Litovsk Russia and the central powers signed a peace treaty which ended the World war, so far as the Soviet union was concerned.

The new rulers of Russia embarked on another course which led to hatred and recrimination — the repudiation of debts and the confiscation of private property. Even yet the effect of this policy on America and American citizens remains a complicating factor in restoring American-Russian relations. President Roosevelt and Foreign Minister Maxim-Litvinoff will attempt to reach an agreement on these matters during their conversations here.

Soviet Debt Reasoning
The Bolshevik, it should be remembered, regarded the Czarist and Kerensky regimes not as representatives of the Russian people but of a small favored class. Hence they saw no reason for assuming the state debts of their hated predecessors. During the rule of the Social democrats under Kerensky, when Russia still was in the world war, the U. S. treasury agreed to loan the Russians $325,000,000. At the time of the Bolshevik revolution about $187,000,000 of this had been advanced.

Another decree confiscated the property of foreign nationals in Russia. Americans lost some $400,000,000. There was consternation abroad. The envoys of foreign powers in Petrograd met and protested. But the decree stood. The Russians would not weaken in their determination to wipe out all vestiges of capitalism.

THE REVOLT OF THE VOTERS.

A number of interesting deductions are to be drawn from the election results of the past few months, climaxed by the repeal of the 18th amendment and the disasters that befell such powerful political machines as Tammany in New York and the Vane organization in Pennsylvania.

In New York the record of Jimmy Walker, playboy mayor, was a handicap exposed by alert investigators that all the minute and careful organization of the Tammany machine could not overcome.

So LaGuardia, sharp, aggressive and fiery of tongue, and his joining of republicans and anti-Tammany democrats have captured the plum tree of the biggest and richest city in all the western hemisphere, a community of seven millions of souls, more populous than all the state of Texas with several neighboring states combined.

In Cuba they are killing people in armed uprisings, with the same motives that caused the American public to turn Hoover out under a tremendous landslide of discontented votes, and call upon the democratic party and Mr. Roosevelt to lead them out of the wilderness of depression and economic confusion into which three administrations of republican mismanagement had guided them.

But the present series of political upheavals has its interesting moments. It is a test of the sufficiency of this government of, by and for the people.

NEW RELIEF PLAN.

The national administration will meet the threat of winter and its acute emphasis on distress with a broadened relief program through which it is calculated to desert the bare subsistence theory and broaden the basis of relief to such an extent that 4,000,000 men may be put to work upon a 30-hour week basis.

Under the present system the average relief roll worker earns about $20 per month. Under the new this income would be increased to about $50 per week, on the basis of a 30-hour week at the minimum prescribed wage.

The plan is expected to encourage local projects of a minor character, materials for which would be purchased with local funds. The program will probably open the way to a realization of a number of local plans that have been halted by reason of government regulations on the securing of public works grants and so forth—the settling basins for Lake Cisco, for instance.

Is the Small Town Passing?

EDITOR'S NOTE: Here the president of a large Dallas financial institution discusses one of the most vital and often-asked questions arising from present day conditions. "Is the small town passing?"

By R. L. THORNTON, President Mercantile National Bank at Dallas. Fifteen to twenty-five years ago, in bad road days, the smaller towns all over Texas—did a flourishing business.

Yet, we are still people with the same or better average rate of human intelligence and about as good as we ever were—still spending most of what we make for the things we need and want. The old "cred" business in the main has changed to either a thirty-day or cash business. We go on getting along better or worse—some that were better are now worse and some that were worse are now better.

So, we know generally what has happened to the business of many of the smaller towns, but the big question is what brought it about and will the business return again: will the small town return to its normal or radius function or has its business gone elsewhere—never to return?

Business left the smaller town largely for three reasons: first, the new method of transportation with good roads made roamers, so to speak, out of our people. They went to the larger trading centers, primarily because it was easy and they wanted to go some place—to move to some new place, not because prices as a rule were lower, but there was more excitement, more people, and everybody else was going.

Trading centers advertised, told the smaller town folks all about their bargains of price, style and fitness to a greater degree than ever before, and the smaller town folks liked that.

I know county seat towns that sold more goods in dollars twenty to thirty years ago than they do today. All these changes have affected banking in these respective towns and communities, for as the business of a town away from the banks, so flows the business of the banks of that town.

So, many of the larger cities are now over-merchandised with an ever-increasing overhead cost of doing business; and, to haven't the purchaser about finished their "joy riding" and now ready to come back home? If merchants will invite them back with "up-to-now" modern stocks and modern methods of doing business, fun and entertainment, won't the same auto that carried them away bring them back?

My own view is that we are running over many green fields looking for greener ones. The capable smaller or county-seat town merchant has many basic advantages in cost of doing business. He is closer to and understands the wants and necessities of his trade territory.

According to statistics compiled by the U. S. Department of Commerce, 30.2 per cent of the merchandise bought at retail by the people of the United States was bought in towns and hamlets of 10,000 and less.

Enterprising merchants and business men built most all the towns and cities of this country. This same type, that is the New Day, up-to-date, wide-awake merchants and business men, can rebuild them and will, for for there is opportunity there and men seek opportunity and dare the world for it.

So, my thought is the country town has not passed, but as the country rights its economic wrongs, see the light of a sounder economic day, the smaller town will perform its sound economic function by serving those that it is best equipped to serve in every line, just as the cities serve, and no until then will we reach our maximum of a well-balanced prosperity, for it takes prosperous hamlets, prosperous towns and prosperous cities to make up a well-balanced prosperous country.

Through the Editor's Spectacles

By GEORGE

From the looks of the plat at the Moore Drug store today might we see you Cisco people have any right to criticise the Lobos. Only 52 reserved seats out of about 420 had been sold.

For a contrast, let's turn to Ranger Day before yesterday the school authorities sent 413 reserved seats to the "Buildogs" home town and yesterday afternoon a messenger hot-footed it over here with the news that every seat had been sold and the Rangerites were clamoring.

In other words, about eight Ranger fans bought seats for the game to every one Lobo fan.

Now, who do you think will win the game next Saturday? You can see some reason for why I have been predicting a victory for the Buildogs. I have remembered also the fact that the Cisco side of the football field for both the Eastland and Breckenridge games looked mighty scattering while visitors thought at least a third more to the support of their teams. In the face of that, the Cisco boys are to

He commended for winning despite a feeble support.

Imagine a football team organized in the wide open spaces with the wind for a pep squad, the sun for its inspiration and the sepulchral silences of the great open spaces for its cheering section. Then conceive of an opposing team, backed by thousands of yelling folks, all of whom have every ounce of hope and faith pinned on it. Imagine this team running upon the field under the dinning cheers of its supporters, urged to victory by the pleading eyes and voices of hundreds of school boys and girls who think it is the greatest single thing on earth; and by the fan encouragement of several thousands of papas and mamas.

You ought to be ashamed of yourselves, those other 368 of you who should have had your reserved seats long ago.

Ranger is helping their football team win here Saturday. Cisco is asking the Lobos to go it alone. Now, would you blame the boys if, being criticised, they should tell you to repair to that bourne of flame and sulphurous fume from which there is no garden or release?

The Cisco Lobos have handicap enough as it is. They will go into the game Saturday with everybody's (excluding Ranger's sympathy and nobody's confidence. Prexy Anderson, sports editor of the Able Morning News, views the outcome of the game as being certain that the Buildogs will win.

So, you see there is little chance for the Lobos Saturday, unless they have got what most folks think they haven't a spirit that won't let them be defeated, no matter what the odds.

LONE STAR SAYS RULING NOT CLEAR. DALLAS, Nov. 9.—The Lone Star Gas company does not feel a recent ruling of the Texas Railroad Commission makes clear its rights in advertising, L. B. Denning, president of the company, wrote recently to Sam P. Harben, secretary of the Texas Press association.

The railroad commission at Austin recently made public a letter, which it said it allowed the pipeline company to advertise.

Denning's letter to Harben says the commission had ruled the company's advertising must be for the purpose of securing new business, increasing sales and that the expense should be borne by the distributing companies.

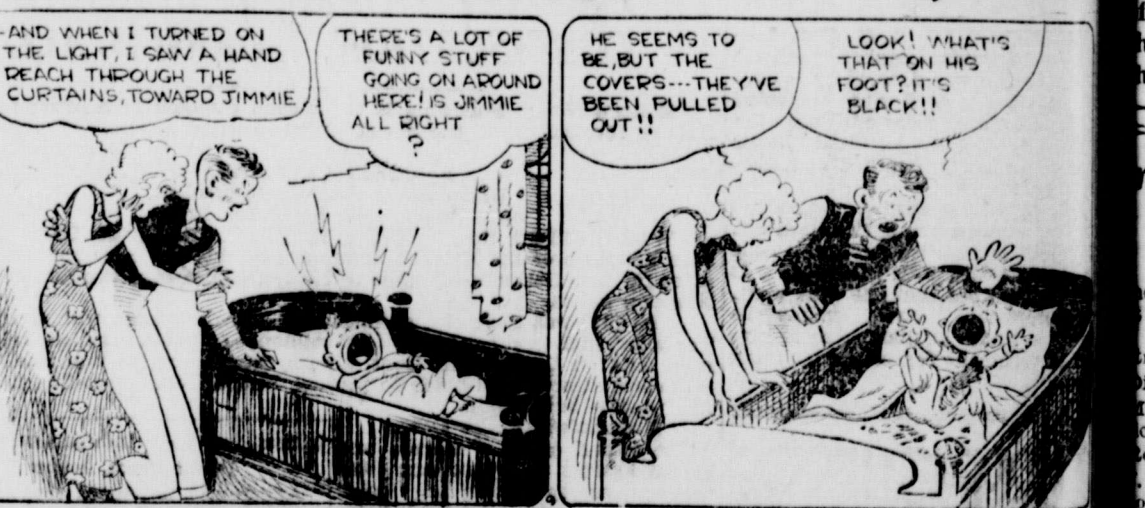

The ruling in regard to the pipeline company's advertising was in connection with a recent vote of the railroad commission cutting gas rates on the Lone Star system about $1,400,000 yearly.

CHAPTER I

DAVID BANNISTER nodded to the waiter to refill his cup with coffee. He said slowly, "But it was murder—!"

"They couldn't prove it," Jim Paxton told him across the table. "Wasn't a scrap of real evidence. Four or five days later his cap drifted ashore. Aside from that—well, he just disappeared and nobody knows any more about it to-day than they ever did. The woman wasn't even questioned. I've never understood that part of it. She was mentioned in his will, but not for a large amount. I think the wife contested later—"

David Bannister

"Poor old Louie!" Bannister raised the cup of coffee, then set it down again. "It happened that fall I was in Mexico," he said. "Never heard the whole story before."

"And neither has anyone else. The whole story of what happened that night on that yacht would interest a lot of people. If Louie Kane was murdered—"

"I can't believe it!" Bannister interrupted. "I simply can't believe anyone would bump off old Louie. It just doesn't seem like—"

"Do murders ever seem likely?" "Of course. Lots of them do—when you know the facts. Inevitable! But I can't believe Louie Kane was murdered, even if he was a double-dealing old pirate with plenty of enemies," Bannister looked up suddenly. "There was something about the whole case—something of the fellow—," he went on. "Why, Louie would stand and lie to you until he was black in the face—and know that you knew he was lying—and I'm damned if I didn't like him while he was doing it! Say, do you remember the time Alex Schneider was so sure he had the nomination for senator sewed up and Louie got the boys together in his room at four o'clock in the morning?" "Sure I do!" Paxton grinned. "And I remember how Schneider let the ceiling when he found he was beaten. But the best trick Louie Kane ever pulled was that time down in Pittsburgh—"

"They were at it then. For half an hour the two men were lost in reminiscences. Stories about Louie Kane, the ruthless local politician whose death on his private yacht 18 months before was still surrounded by an aura of mystery. Stories of the adventures—and such adventures!—of two young newspaper reporters who had followed run-of-the-mill news, written about politics and crime and the inventions of fraternal organizations, about court battles and party contests and the mine strike. The two had worked together sometimes; at others they had been rivals. Dave Bannister, ill in his teens, and Paxton, a year or two older. Both of them willing to break a leg to give the remotest Evening Post an exclusive banner line story for its some edition."

"All that had been 10 years earlier, but as the men's voices drifted on, rising and falling, now and then interrupted by quiet laughter, the 10 years disappeared. Others in the room turned frequently to glance at the table in the corner, to nod and murmur and then to look again. Always the gaze of these men lingered on Bannister. They seemed just a little in awe of this broad-shouldered young man with the chestnut hair, slightly ruffled, and the dark eyes. Paxton's rather square face was animated and his words came nervously, with a rush. It was Bannister who sat back, listening intently, now and then interrupting. Not a handsome man. The most generous judge would have rated Dave Bannister's features no better than "common or garden variety." Nevertheless there were qualities in that face—intelligence, tolerance, generosity. That much of what Dave Bannister was could be read at a glance.

Tremont society—for it was chiefly Tremont society that was gathered about the tables in the oak-paneled, crimson tapestried hotel dining room—enjoyed this opportunity to inspect David Bannister. Tremont society had known him not at all in the old days. Now they were aware that, with the publication of his first novel a year before, Bannister's picture had appeared in newspapers and magazines. There had been a motion picture made from the novel. There had been some short stories, too, under his signature in a weekly magazine boasting the largest circulation in the country.

It was the Hollywood phase of Bannister's career that seemed most glamorous to Tremont, whose 140,000 population patronized two dozen motion picture houses. There were those who wondered why, after such triumphs, the young man should be back in the home of his boyhood. Looking at him as he sat at the table with Jim Paxton, it was hard to believe Bannister was making the visit to his aunt because, as the Evening Post had stated, he needed a rest. David Bannister seemed the picture of health.

Paxton was talking now—jerkily, with that characteristic nervous emphasis. "I think Burns is in Guatemala," he said. "At least he was the last I heard. And Snodgrass—remember Snodgrass, don't you? Well, by George, he's raising chickens!"

Bannister smiled. "A worthy enterprise," he commented. "May

He come when you're on a boat. You never get them sitting at a desk in an office. When I think of those old days—oh, well, what's the use? I suppose I'm getting old!"

"Almost 30, aren't you?" Paxton asked, smiling. "Well, the offer's open. We'll take you on at The Post any day. By the way, if you're really going to stay here for a while, Nora and I want to see a lot of you. She'll be back next week. Want you to come out to the house soon. We'll have a crowd in for dinner. They all want to meet you, you know. You're a celebrity!"

"I'd better warn you," he went on, "that Nora is expecting you to give her the low-down on Hollywood. Who's getting the latest divorces and why. Whether it's really true that the stars' pet dogs wear diamond collars. And I think there was something in one of the gossip columns about you being seen at the Brown Derby, lunching with Mae West or Baby Peggy or one of the other beauties. Nor'll be sure to ask about that—"

"Wait a minute!" Bannister stopped him. "I don't know anything about Hollywood's private life. All I did was work there."

"Try to make Nora believe that!" "Well, if Nora has any such ridiculous notions in her head—which I doubt—you'll have to remove them. You're talking like Aunt Kate! Amazing as it seems, I have discovered that my aunt is one of the nation's most inveterate movie-goers. Never misses a change of pictures at the State. That's where she is tonight."

"You still have to answer for that luncheon at the Brown Derby. Was it Mae West or Baby Peggy?" "Neither. I tell you mere authors aren't invited to take part in the gilded social whirl out there. Authors are herded into small cases and told to start pounding the typewriter!"

"Well, I've warned you," Paxton said. "If you haven't any true stories of the movie great you'd better start manufacturing some. Anyhow we'll get up a little dinner next week. And how about some golf Saturday?"

BANNISTER applied the flame of a lighter to his cigarette before he spoke. "My golf's a sin and you know it," he said levelly. "A great one you are to talk about Louie Kane's miracles! You haven't a chance in a thousand of roping me in on that West Haven course!" He glanced down at his wrist watch. "Lord!" he exclaimed, "it's nearly nine o'clock. I had no idea it was so late."

Paxton said, "Let's see if we can't round up a couple of others for some bridge. Sam Paradise is usually around here—"

Bannister shook his head. "Sorry," he said, "I'll have to be getting on. It's been great to sit here, chewing the fat about old times. Hope we can have another session soon."

"Of course we can," Paxton agreed. The dining room was almost deserted as they left the table. To the headwaiter's bow Paxton said casually, "Good night, Frank."

Outside in the lobby the two men hesitated. Bannister said, "I think I'll take a cab. Can I drop you off anywhere?"

The other shook his head. "No," he said, "I think I'll see if I can find Paradise. Stop in at the office tomorrow, why don't you?"

"Maybe I will," Bannister promised. "Well, I'll drift along now. Good night, Jim."

"Good night, Dave."

FARM STRIKE CUTS RECEIPTS
CHICAGO, Nov. 9—Effects of the national farm strike were evidenced Wednesday when mayor agricultural market reported sharply reduced shipments with part of the reduction attributed to the farmers' movement.

Twenty large livestock centers showed a marked decline in receipts of cattle, hogs and sheep. The reduction in the marketing of hogs was largest. The strike has centered in the hog production area.

At the markets, it was reported pickets were halting few trucks but many farmers were cooperating by refusing to ship their livestock. Rail shipments have not declined appreciably.

BANNISTER went through the revolving doors out to the street. A fine mist had begun to fall and the air was colder. He walked to the edge of the curb and halted there. Then after a moment he remembered. No use waiting and expecting a cab to come by, cruising. He would have to go to the other entrance of the building where there was a cab stand. Cabs did not cruise, expecting to pick up fares, in Tremont.

He walked to the Sixth street entrance of the hotel, stepped into a cab and a few moments later was riding eastward toward his aunt's home on the less fashionable side of town.

He leaned back in the seat and closed his eyes. It had been good to see Jim again. He'd enjoyed swapping yarns with him. The two had been friends ever since they first met. They had been friends in spite of the fact that Paxton's father owned the newspaper and Bannister's weekly pay envelope contained $20. But Jim had always been a square-shooter, never pressing advantages that were his by right of inheritance.

Yes, it had been good to talk over old times. And then suddenly Jim had spoiled everything by speaking of dinner parties and golf and bridge games. The West Haven Country Club where Tremont's elect gathered on Saturday afternoons and holidays!

Dave Bannister sighed. What difference did it make whether he was in Westchester or at Malibu Beach or in Tremont? Bridge, Golf. The same bores performing in the same way, though with different backgrounds. The same social climbers. The same silly quarrels and petty enmities. The same adulation for current favorites, to be dropped shortly for a newer crop.

BANNISTER opened his eyes and saw that the rain was coming down faster. He noted this absent-mindedly, without interest. His thoughts continued in the groove they had taken.

Of course he knew why he had refused Jim Paxton's invitation to join a bridge game. There would be no one at Aunt Kate's house when he arrived there and there was no reason for him to return. No reason, at least, but one that was completely and utterly illogical. He knew that when he arrived he would go to his room and begin another letter to Adele Allen—a letter which, quite likely, he would tear up when it was finished, just as he had torn up the last one.

But it was certainly better to ear them up than to send them. After the other one had been returned. "I'm all kinds of a fool," Bannister told himself. He meant it. He had belabored himself in the same way a hundred times before.

That was why he had been so irritated by Paxton's chatter about Hollywood. Jim hadn't meant anything by it, he knew. But suppose some of those infernal gossip writers should pick up something about Adele and himself? A bitter smile came that thought instantly. No chance of that! Those professional gossip distributors kept up with the times at least. They might—and no doubt would—write of Adele but it would be to couple her name with that of Donald Quayle, the leading man whose fan mail was so enormous.

Anyone who knew Hollywood at all would understand why Adele Allen had thrown over Dave Bannister for Donald Quayle. Bannister, to be sure, a promising young writer. One of the new names in literature. But Donald Quayle was an established success. Handsome. Wealthy, too, with a box office following reflected directly in his contract. Certainly it was easy to understand why Adele found Donald Quayle so fascinating.

Bannister stopped thinking about Quayle and thought about Adele. Adele's eyes, mocking and mischievous, danced before him. Adele's copper tresses. The slim figure, so perfectly graceful, perfectly rounded. Her soft, throaty laughter. Lips that were warm and inviting—

The picture disappeared in the cold, drizzling darkness outside. Bannister had known the girl in New York three years before. She had played a small part in a production that had had a long run in the metropolis. He had met her at parties, taken her to dinner, been friendly in a casual way. Then last spring in Hollywood he had seen her again. That time there was no mistake about it. Suddenly, inevitably, he had fallen head over heels in love. Adele was playing small parts still but they were in pictures.

DAVID had fallen in love and it had been for the first time in his life. There had been weeks when the joy of Adele, the beauty of her, the amazing, unbelievable sweetness of her were overwhelming. Weeks that had been—oh, well, they were over now! For Adele had been given a part in a picture starring Donald Quayle. She had caught the director's attention, had given life and vividness to the brief scenes in which she appeared and with that single performance she had stepped from the realms of the comparatively unknown to a place in the film firmament.

With equal ease, too, she had stepped into a new existence in which Donald Quayle was always opposite her at luncheon tables. Donald Quayle was driving with her, dancing with her, swimming with her.

David Bannister had returned to Tremont.

He was 2000 miles from Hollywood and what was the good of it? Adele's smile, Adele's throaty laugh, Adele's trim, flashing ankles were as much in his thoughts as they had ever been. He had come home to rest, to definitely erase from his mind the nightmare he had been living through. But he had not succeeded.

Tonight he would write another letter and then destroy it. He would write down the searing bitterness of his disillusionment. He would write, too, that he loathed and despised Adele, but he knew this was not true. He knew that he loved her. Scorned her, saw her for exactly what she was—and yet loved her.

The taxicab swerved, rounding a corner, and Bannister's preoccupation faded. He saw ahead two bright lights and recognized the entrance of the Shelby Arms, the city's new and only apartment hotel. The Shelby Arms had been pointed out to Bannister half a dozen times by prideful citizens. It was generally considered that the apartment hotel appreciably increased the metropolitan tone of Tremont.

Signal lights halted the taxicab directly in front of the building and Bannister studied the brightly lighted doorway. Suddenly the door opened and a girl appeared. She was dressed in green and she halted, apparently dismayed by the rain. Then, head bent to shield her face, she ran down the steps toward the cab.

From his glassed-in section the driver rumbled protests, but the girl did not appear to hear. She came directly to the cab, pulled back the door. It was then she saw Bannister. She cried in a startled, muffled voice, "I—oh, I'm sorry—!"

"Not at all!" Bannister put a hand on the opposite door, opening it. "You wanted a cab, didn't you? I'll be glad to let you have this one." He moved to step out into the street.

"Listen, lady!" the gruff voice of the chauffeur objected. "I gotta fare. See? This cab's occupied." The girl had drawn back. Bannister, too, stood in the street now, the rain trickling down inside his collar. "Get inside," he said harshly. "You're drenched already."

OBEEDIENTLY she climbed into the cab. "But," she appealed, "I can't let you do this! I can't take your cab from you!"

She was a pretty girl. Very pretty. In the dim light Bannister noted a pair of grave, wide-set eyes and saw that her hair was blond. He was aware, too, that the constant trickling of dampness inside his coat collar was uncomfortable. Chivalry be hanged!

He said, "It's a bad night and we both seem to need shelter. Since there's plenty of room for two in this cab perhaps you'd be willing to let me ride with you—"

"Of course I will! It's your cab really. If you'll let me go as far as the Hotel Tremont I'll be ever so grateful! I wouldn't think of taking your cab away from you."

Bannister stepped back into the cab, leaned forward and said to the driver, "Hotel Tremont." It meant retracing the entire way they had come but what of that?

He drew out a handkerchief, wiped away the rain drops from his neck. "Rotten night," he said easily.

"Yes—it is."

He turned toward the girl and was surprised to see that she was gazing directly ahead. As though she were staring at something he could not see. He asked quickly, "Is there anything wrong? If you'll tell me we can find a doctor—"

She turned then. "Oh, no! I'm—perfectly all right."

But she wasn't; a fool could see that. She was pale and the wide-set eyes stood out in the white face. There was a break in her voice as she spoke and he thought that her lips trembled faintly.

"I'm perfectly all right," she repeated.

There was a slight motion and Bannister saw that she had dropped her handbag. He bent, reaching for it, just as the girl reached, too. The bag jolted and their shoulders collided awkwardly. Bannister grasped the handbag.

And just then the cab jolted again. The clasp of the leather bag, dislodged in the fall, snapped open. Something slipped into Bannister's hand. It was something that was cold and smooth and heavy.

He looked down as the light from a street lamp shown directly into the cab. The yellow glow fell on the object in his hand, catching the gleam of polished metal. It was a revolver.

WAR HAS JUST BEGUN W.T.C.U. LEADER SAYS

By IDA B. WISE SMITH
President National W. C. T. U.
CHICAGO, Nov. 9—The repeal of the 18th amendment may look like the end of the road to many, but to the W. C. T. U. it is simply an episode in the war against man's greatest and oldest enemy—intoxicating drink.

Prohibition never was an end in itself; but rather a method of dealing with the liquor traffic. The nation had tried every other known method; all failed. We believed prohibition to be the best method; if we can not have prohibition we will try to reduce the evils of liquor to a minimum by some other method.

Start Over Again.
We will start all over again in a new and improved campaign of education. It will be scientific and, I believe, adequate.

But education in alcohol, and its effect, must keep step with progress. A hundred years ago we could talk about "horrible examples" and show startling charts indicating the effect of liquor on the human stomach; but educational methods have changed and progressed. Today we should show what sobriety does for life; for happiness, accuracy, scholarship, athletics, etc.

Total Abstinence Goal.
America must adopt a total abstinence goal; if it adopts a moderate drinking goal the people are lost. All drunkards got their start in moderate drinking.

Against public school temperance education will be launched an organized and skilled propaganda in favor of moderate drinking; this will be a part of the commercial advertising of the liquor interests. I am in favor of curtailing liquor advertising; it should be prohibited. It should not be permitted in newspapers, magazines, billboards, radio, or anywhere else.

There will be a part of the people who will oppose the government of any state which is in the liquor business. It is that way in Canada. There the liquor manufacturers are in politics. There is a strong movement slowly bearing down on the Canadian liquor system, trying to reduce the quantity sold.

Fight for Dry Laws
Wherever prohibition laws remain, the W. C. T. U. will fight to retain them. We expect to be opposed by liquor politics. We will try to vote the liquor business into as much United States territory as it can.

The great need of the hour is a revival of civic consciousness. The W. C. T. U. is trying its best to arouse women to their full duty with respect to the ballot.

As far as the commission is concerned plans are prepared and work will begin as soon as funds can be obtained. But a snag has appeared in the person of Lieut. Col Francis

PALO PINTO, Nov. 9 — Lewis Lang, of Strawn appeared before the Palo Pinto county grand jury here Tuesday charged with murder in connection with the slaying of his wife who Monday appeared with him as a witness before the grand jury.

The Langs quarreled in their home at Strawn Monday while their three children and a neighbor child cowered in the corner of an adjoining room, the children said. ## Soviet Revolt--- negotiations with Germany and the other central powers. The negotiations lasted from November until March and were interrupted several times. But finally, on March 3, 1918, at Brest-Litovsk, Russia and the central powers signed a peace treaty which ended the World war, so far as the Soviet union was concerned.

The new rulers of Russia embarked on another course which led to hatred and recrimination — the repudiation of debts and the confiscation of private property. Even yet the effect of this policy on America and American citizens remains a complicating factor in restoring American-Russian relations. President Roosevelt and Foreign Minister Maxim-Litvinoff will attempt to reach an agreement on these matters during their conversations here.

Soviet Debt Reasoning

The Bolshevik, it should be remembered, regarded the Czarist and Kerensky regimes not as representatives of the Russian people but of a small favored class. Hence they saw no reason for assuming the state debts of their hated predecessors.

During the rule of the Social democrats under Kerensky, when Russia still was in the world war, the U. S. treasury agreed to loan the Russians $325,000,000. At the time of the Bolshevik revolution about $187,000,000 of this had been advanced.

Previously the Czarist government had borrowed $75,000,000 from American bankers. Both these loans were wiped out by a soviet decree in January, 1918.

"All state loans concluded by governments of the Russian landowners and Russian bourgeoisie. . . . are annulled as from Dec. 1, 1917. The December coupons are not subject to payment."

Another decree confiscated the property of foreign nationals in Russia. Americans lost some $400,000,000.

There was consternation abroad. The envoys of foreign powers in Petrograd met and protested. But the decree stood. The Russians would not weaken in their determination to wipe out all vestiges of capitalism.
