Pastors' Retreat' Opens Tonight at First Baptist Church

100 EXPECTED TO COME HERE FOR SESSIONS

Approximately 200 of them from an area about Cisco that comprises roughly one-fifth of the state will gather at the First Baptist church here at 7:30 tonight for the first session of a "pastors' retreat" that will last throughout the week.

The gathering of ministers for spiritual prayer and study, is being held in and in no way connected with any financial or organizational program of the denomination. The ministers, in effect, will be associated entirely from other churches and devote themselves to the study of the Bible, to inspirational messages and to prayer.

TRIPLE SLAYING TRIAL DELAYED UNTIL FEB. 19

FORT WORTH, Jan. 22. — The state's attempt to prosecute the alleged slayers of three men here last week was postponed in criminal district court until February 19. The trial was postponed unexpectedly after a two-hour round of fighting between prosecution and defense attorneys to see which of the defendants would be brought to trial first.

Further Word from Rev. E. S. James

Word had been received at Cisco today from the Rev. E. S. James, now in Butler, Okla., where his sister is near death, since 10 o'clock Sunday morning, when he telephoned Asa Skiles that this sister, Mrs. Bryant, was still alive but no hope was held for her recovery.

The Rev. Mr. James, Mrs. James and their children left for Oklahoma Friday morning.

Agents Fear Bremer Killed by Kidnapers

MARKET DRIVE STIMULATED BY MONETARY BILL

In its weekly review of business and financial conditions The Wall Street Journal says: The constructive interpretation placed on the president's monetary program supplied the impetus for a forward movement in stocks during the past week which enabled the market to surmount the December highs. Led by the railroad stocks, the list pushed forward in a resumption of heavy trading which saw a number of stocks carried to the highest price since 1931.

While the rise cheered the financial community, there was no disposition to minimize the possible adverse influences which the market might have to face. Such matters as the possibility of legislation designed to regulate the securities markets, a falling off in government payments to workers now employed on civil works administration projects and the high ratio of current prices of stock to current earnings were in the background, temporarily, but may be brought to the fore at any time. The rise was characterized by more restraint therefore, than have been the two most recent major upswings in stock prices.

The president's monetary program, involving devaluation of the dollar to 60 cents, with the possibility of a further cut to 50 cents, is a compromise which has drawn support from varying shades of monetary opinion. It enacted by congress, and there is every reason to hold the view that it will be pushed through, a basis will be laid for a wide expansion in credit. There isn't any assurance that this expansion will bring any major increase in the use of credit, but the prospect of stabilization of the currency, at least to a fairly narrow range, has cheered the business element.

A continuing business news has provided a helpful background for the market. The sizeable percentage gains over the corresponding period of 1933 being shown by railroads and weekly electric output figures have brought buying into both groups, although it should be well recognized by this time that comparisons are being made with a per cent of which business was at a very low level. Widening consumer buying is helping chain store companies, and the general level of industrial output is continuing the gradual upward movement which got under way in November.

Steel activity showed unexpected strength for this time of year, operations for the business beginning January 14th rising of 34.2 per cent of capacity compared with 30.7 per cent the week before. The impetus in the reversal from the downturn which was shown around the year end was greater than anyone in the steel trade expected.

The automobile trade as a whole was rather slow in beginning operations, because of delays in necessary equipment for new models. In view of his, some sluggishness was expected in the demand for steel in January. Miscellaneous buyers were believed to have stocked up prior to the end of 1933. However demands from various parts of the country showed surprising vitality. Some attributed this to the PWA and CWA expenditures, and also to the greater purchasing power of the farm communities.

The week's range of the Dow-Jones averages follows:

	High	Low	Last
30 Industrials	$105.60	$98.66	$105.60
20 Railroads	48.23	41.62	48.23
20 Utilities	26.78	24.36	26.78
40 Bonds	88.55	86.52	88.55

Week ended January 19, 1934.

5 DIRECTORS FOR CHAMBER TO BE NAMED

The board of directors of the chamber of commerce is due to convene in regular session tomorrow night at 7:30, in a meeting at which officers for the new year are customarily chosen.

SECOND NEGRO HUNTED AFTER FARMER SLAIN

WEATHERFORD, Jan. 22. — Murder charges were filed at Aledo, in Parker county east of here, today against two negroes in the fatal shooting yesterday of W. S. Golden, Parker county farmer.

Those charged were Swift Lewis and Robert Butler, both of Fort Worth. Lewis was held in custody today after he voluntarily surrendered last night. Butler was still at large.

WEATHERFORD, Jan. 22. — Officers sought a second negro near here and at Fort Worth today as the actual slayer of W. S. Golden, 64-year-old Parker county farmer near Aledo yesterday.

Golden was shot to death when he, accompanied by his son, ordered two negroes from his farm where they were hunting. One of the negroes, according to the son, raised his shotgun and fired at Golden. A charge of shot entered the farmer's side killing him instantly.

The negroes then fled, one going east and the other south, abandoning their automobile. The son notified officers and a search began. One of the negroes shortly afterward surrendered at a nearby farm home. He did not do the shooting, he said.

The negro gave officers the name of another negro. The first negro, who gave his name as Swift Lewis, 39, of Fort Worth, said the second negro also was of Fort Worth.

Tired officers and citizens who had beaten the bushes in the broken country near Willow Creek all night, returned empty-handed early today. After breakfast and a rest, they started out again.

RISING STAR MAN NAMED UPON COMM'N

EASTLAND, Jan. 22. — The commissioners court Saturday appointed Frank Robertson of Rising Star, Texas, a member of the county board to fill the unexpired term of E. A. Ringgold who resigned to become county administrator.

Reduction in Crop Loans to Be Sought

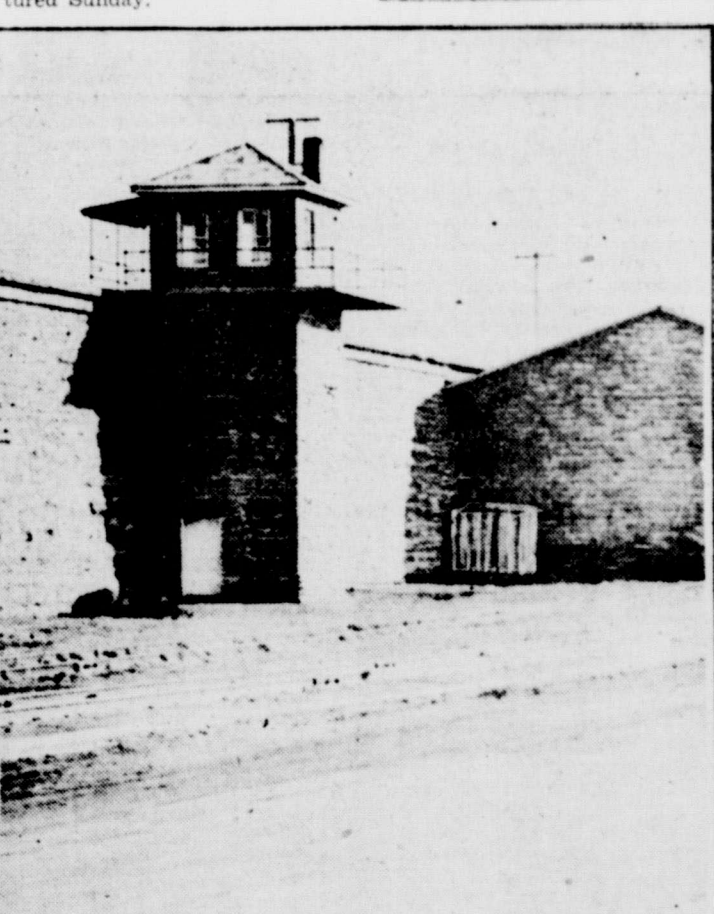

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 22. — Majority Leader Robinson told the senate today that the administration will seek a substantial reduction this year in the amount available to the farm credit administration for crop production loans.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 22. — The president's bill, described by many in congress as the most momentous piece of financial legislation of the century, faced a far different reception in the senate than was recorded in the house.

The house, passing the measure Saturday night with many of the democratic leaders frankly puzzled over its contents and significance, presented a picture of mass power which assured the democratic administration of prompt compliance with its policies.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 22. — Two men by the name of George Smith, and two girls named Thelma Smith, live on Church street, the shortest one in the town. When letters arrive for them, the mailman just guesses to whom they belong. They are not related.

Principals and Scene in Prison Break

One of the guard towers and the wall at the Kansas state prison at Lansing where seven convicts, led by Bob Brady and Tom Clark, recaptured recently following their escape in the Memorial day break, escaped Friday morning. No guards were in this tower and the convicts succeeded in scaling the wall directly to the right of it, dropping to the ground at the corner made by the wall and the small building at the right.

BITTER SENATE DEBATE LIKELY FOR MONEY BILL

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 22. — President Roosevelt's money program was plunged into a senate maelstrom today with indications that bitter debate would delay passage for several days.

Driving for speed on the dollar devaluation bill, the senate banking and currency committee arranged to complete hearings today with the testimony of Owen D. Young and Prof. George Warren.

The president's bill, described by many in congress as the most momentous piece of financial legislation of the century, faced a far different reception in the senate than was recorded in the house.

The house, passing the measure Saturday night with many of the democratic leaders frankly puzzled over its contents and significance, presented a picture of mass power which assured the democratic administration of prompt compliance with its policies.

THREE GUARDS DISCHARGED AT PRISON FARM

CROCKETT, Jan. 22. — Neglect of duty was blamed today for the dismissal of three guards at the Eastham prison farm southwest of here in connection with the escape of five convicts last Tuesday.

VAST MERGER OF TELEGRAPH SYSTEMS SEEN

NEW YORK, Jan. 22. — Amalgamation of the most powerful telegraph communication system in the world into a single, American owned and government supervised monopoly was forecast today in New York and Washington.

CHARRED BODY IS FOUND IN BURNED BARN

BURLESON, Texas, Jan. 22. — Officers began a search today for two men reportedly seen Friday night with T. B. Gullett, 18-year-old Whitney youth, whose charred body was found in the smoldering ruins of a hay barn near here last Saturday.

The quest for a solution of the mysterious circumstances surrounding the youth's death was intensified when J. A. Allison, a neighbor of the Gullett family in Hill county, told officers he had seen two men with the youth on Friday night.

The body was positively identified by the youth's father, T. G. Gullett. The father said his son had left home Friday night in the family automobile to visit a girl in the Whitney community, 50 miles from the barn where the body was found.

Physicians said death had resulted from a blow on the head. Officers were convinced the youth had been killed and left in the barn before it was set afire. A motive for the slaying, however, had not been established.

WHAT HAPPENED TO COTTON

A twelve-cent mark returned to the cotton quotation boards of America when the monetary plan of the President was submitted to the congress. As for the New York exchange, an advance of approximately $2.50 a bale was reported and was attributed to general buying "which became more active and aggressive following publication of the president's special message and an announcement that the domestic gold price had been fixed at $34.45 or 30 cents above the recent quotation."

GOV. LANGOR GIVEN KNOCKOUT

Gov. William A. Langor of North Dakota officially placed an embargo on out of state shipments of wheat. His legislature enacted a statute and the governor made the statute function. An appeal was taken from a state to a federal court—a court of three federal judges. The federal court declared the Langor proclamation "without force or effect."

A WARNING TO VIOLATORS OF PRO LAWS

A warning has been passed on to violators of pro laws in pro states. The supreme court of the United States declined to open prison doors to people convicted of violations of the national prohibition act. This happened when the court declined to grant a writ of review sought by a pro lawyer, an inmate of a federal prison, who contended that because of the repeal of the 18th amendment, it was not a five to four decision or a divided decision—the court held "there was no ground for a writ."

R. F. C. GIVEN ANOTHER LEASE OF LIFE

President Roosevelt has not lost his grip on the congress of the United States. An administration measure extending the life of the RFC for a year and increasing its borrowing power by $850,000,000 "was swept quickly" through both houses of congress Jan. 15 and then sent to the White House for presidential signature. It is significant that the measure received senate approval after brief debate and two hours later went through the house by a standing vote of 186 to 1.

Col. Jesse H. Jones of Texas continues to sit at the head of the RFC table. As for the head of the treasury, Henry Morgenthau of New York, the government still plans to borrow $10,000,000,000 for meeting recovery costs, but has given positive assurance that profit on gold devaluation will not be employed to meet governmental expenses. Said Mr. Morgenthau:

"We do not plan to use these profits to meet current expenditures. We still plan to borrow. New gold certificates to be issued federal reserve banks in return for their huge gold stocks would be a new type of certificate which the treasury would guarantee to keep above par in dollars."

He was asked by a member of the press conference, "Will new currency be issued on additional profit from revaluation?" Morgenthau says a lot in a few words, "I can't say." He did say that the proposed $2,000,000,000 fund for dealing in gold and foreign exchange "may never be used, its existence may prove sufficient."

Rising Star School Dollar Retail Sales CWA Project Sent Increase During Dec.

RISING STAR, Jan. 22—Rising Star high school officials this week sent plans for an improvement campaign at the high school here for final approval to officials in Austin. In case the plans are accepted and approved work will begin soon on sodding the playing field in Winstead park adjacent to the high school campus.

Also included in the program is a project for painting the high school gymnasium, both inside and out. Only the front of the gymnasium has ever been painted since its erection last winter and spring, and a coat of paint would aid greatly in preserving the building, as well as making it more attractive school officials state.

Labor for the project, if and when it is begun, will be furnished by CWA funds, through the Rising Star office.

Rising Star's football field has been in need of improvement for several years, and with the planting of a good variety of grass this winter, the field should be vastly improved when football season opens again in September. A special variety of seed will be used, coming from a Stephenville nursery, it was announced.

Maybe the Treasury Department Ought to Try It

Speaking of President Roosevelt's Monetary Plan

By HUGH NUGENT FITZGERALD

Sen. Dunsen of Florida is chairman of the senate banking committee. He is recognized as an authority on monetary matters as well as a very wise interpreter of the proposals contained in the message of the New Deal president to the congress. He is responsible for a boiled down synopsis of the plan which he says will receive the endorsement of the congress. It is well for all the people who read it and then place it in their scrapbooks.

Title to all federal reserve gold would pass to the United States and the reserve system would be given credit in equivalent amount in dollars.

The secretary of the treasury would be given power to regulate the conditions under which gold could be held, acquired, transported, carried or used.

Illegal gold would be subject to forfeiture by the government and the holders subject to a penalty of twice its value. All gold coins would be withdrawn from circulation and coinage of the metal would be abandoned.

No currency would be redeemed in gold, except gold certificates owned by federal reserve bank in such amounts as the secretary of the treasury decided were necessary "to maintain the equal purchasing power of every kind of currency."

The secretary of the treasury would be authorized, with the approval of the president, to purchase gold in any amount at home or abroad. He could also anticipate the payment of interest on the public debt by not to exceed a year and sell gold at home or abroad.

To stabilize exchange, the treasury secretary could purchase, sell or discount drafts, checks, bills of exchange, acceptances or other evidences of indebtedness. A two billion dollar fund would be created to permit the secretary of the treasury to stabilize the exchange value of the dollar, including the purchasing of direct obligations of the government, the president would be limited in changing the gold content of the dollar to a maximum of 60 per cent of its present weight.

There you have it, but not in a nutshell.

Texas continue to be in the picture under the big dome at Washington and elsewhere. It is a matter of public records that Sen. Tom Connally was the first in the senate to propose and urge cutting the gold content of the dollar. He introduced his bill on Jan. 24, 1932, and he continued his activity for nearly a year. Now the president's monetary plan as well as his message speaks for the New Deal administration. It is important to all the people. It is a reminder that government controlled currency is on the way, and that Washington and not New York is to be the capital of the republic, at least during the lifetime of the Roosevelt administration. Wall Street, speaking through its various newspaper correspondents and newspaper editors, stressed that the president in his message walked in the middle of the road for a middle-of-the-road policy. That is, his monetary plan will not satisfy those who are termed wild inflationist nor give a balm in Gilead comfort to the leaders of the bloc known as the "hard money men," meaning gold standard and nothing else.

Cotton prices jumped with the receipt of the news from Washington in all the exchange markets of the world. Grain prices were hiked. Stocks and bonds showed a lot of real life. Watch the ticker daily. Watch its tickings. Watch its price quotations. This is a new civilization and the wisest men regardless of their personal viewpoints gradually admit the New Deal financial plans are going over the top in the very near future.

MISSOURI WILL BAR ALL FEATURES OF SALOON

Edwin J. Becker is state superintendent of the liquor control board in and for the commonwealth of old Missouri. Supt. Becker is a hard boiled repealer. He is going to smash or bury the old American custom of treating Becker has announced state regulation. The bar will be forbidden in places where liquor is sold by the drink. Becker tells the reason why: "The bar fostered the treating system and treating was part of the old saloon. We intend to do away with all features of the old saloon. Democratic leaders of the nation who dominated the Chicago convention and drafted a platform calling for the repeal of the 18th amendment gave a distinct pledge to the people that the old saloon should not be permitted to return."

Missouri has a democratic governor and a democratic legislature. Well, the governor and his lawmakers are living up to the pledges made by the Chicago platform and the number of the last convention who is the president of the United States.

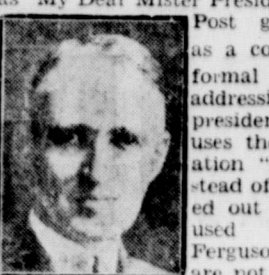

TRY AGAIN FOR VOTE

MONTREAL, Jan. 22—Undaunted by past rebukes from the legislature, women's organizations in the Province of Quebec have decided to attempt once more to obtain an electrical franchise during the next session of the house. They have chosen Dr. Gaspard Fautoux, M.L.A. for St. Marie, who, during his first session in the house, has voted consistently for their cause, as their champion for the next fight.

UNDER THE DOME AT AUSTIN

By GORDON K. SHEARER

United Press Staff Correspondent AUSTIN, Jan. 22—Gov. Miriam A. Ferguson has the sanction of etiquette expert Emily Post in her recent letter addressing the president as "My Dear Mister President". Miss Post gives that as a correct informal way of addressing the president. She uses the abbreviation "Mr." instead of the spelled out "Mister" used by Gov. Ferguson. If you are not chummy enough to address the president informally, the letter should begin: "Sir—"

SHEARER

J. J. Olsen farmer and cattleman of Yoakum, who represented Lavaca county in the 40th and 41st legislatures, again will be a candidate for the state house of representatives. "I guess I was ahead of the times, when I was here before," said Olsen on a visit to the capitol. He referred to his advocacy of cotton acreage reduction when he was head of a farm bloc in the house.

Gov. Ferguson believes in giving lawyers a break when the lawyers are going around in appointing attorneys to sit as special associate judges of the state supreme court, she picked Polk Shelton of Austin. W. P. McLean, Jr., of Fort Worth and Joe J. Alup of Temple. Special judges are appointed when regular judges are disqualified to sit in any particular case. Alsup is said to be the youngest attorney ever tendered such an appointment. He is but 22 years old and declined to serve. It developed that a judge of the supreme court must be 30 or more, under the constitution.

When Guy Bonham was approved by the State Relief commission as relief director for Bexar county, where there had been a bitter local fight, he expressed his thanks to the first member of the relief commission to emerge from its session. This happened to be W. A. Brooks, Jr., of Dallas. "Don't thank me," said Brooks. "I voted against you."

Gov. Ferguson soon will give Galveston an opportunity to make good on its boasted relief for hay fever sufferers. Suffering from her usual mid-winter attack she is planning to go there and see if the climate will be helpful.

House Speaker Coke Stevenson, Junction, visiting the capital city, came unofficially as a grandfather to see his granddaughter, Scotty Gail, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Coke Stevenson, Jr.

Although the Texas Relief commission continues to adhere to a resolution permitting absent members to give a proxy to a present member, Commissioner R. L. Holliday, El Paso, objects every time a proxy is voted. "I shall continue to object," said Holliday. "I do not think proxy votes should count."

Austin becomes the permanent home of many daughters of state officials. Both Gov. Ferguson's daughters married Austin men and reside here. Now Miss Georgia Sheppard, daughter of State Comptroller Sheppard, is to marry Thomas Gay Shepherd of Austin. She formerly lived in Sweetwater. He came to Austin from Coleman.

Carl Estes, Tyler member of the Texas Relief commission, referred incidentally at the last commission meeting to the flurry about Former Gov. James E. Ferguson's advice to persons on relief rolls to take cents a week for three weeks and arm themselves with poll tax receipts.

"They haven't had a vote for four years," said Estes, meaning that those on relief have been unable to pay poll taxes in recent years.

While news of the sensational prison delivery at Eastham street farm was being sent over the wire last Tuesday, no one thought of a notice state ranger headquarters. Newspapersmen finally informed the adjutant-general's office of the escape.

FLOWER PALACE

PARIS, Jan. 22—A Palace of flowers is being planned for Paris municipal council and has been warmly seconded by various horticultural organizations, which members supply the cut flowers. The palace of flowers will be because of haphazard methods of flower distribution. It has been tentatively scheduled to be located between the Rue Beaubourg and Rue Saint-Martin.

DOG STEALS BONDS

LARKEPUR, Cal., Jan. 22—Bond worth $1,000, stolen by a mischievous dog, were found in an alley here after a hectic 24-hour search. The bonds belonged to Michael Eusterman, 19, and had been hidden in a woodshed. A dog gnawed its way into the woodshed, which was put into an old shoe box by Mrs. Josephine Moore. They were stuffed into a bottle which was put into an old shoe box by a gardener and playfully ran the shoe as he fled. He left it in an alley after losing the gardener.

QUINCY, Mass., Jan. 22—James E. Roosevelt, the president daughter-in-law, will be the sponsor when the new destroyer U.S.S. Farragut is launched at Portsmouth in February.

Married Flirts

BEGIN HERE TODAY

GYPSY MOORE and TOM WEAVER are married this morning at 11 A.M. at the home of their parents in Broughton. Gypsy is the daughter of Tom and Gypsy Moore, who are well known in the community. Tom is a well known lawyer and Gypsy is a well known social worker. They were married in a ceremony which was attended by many friends.

Shopping for Christmas, Gypsy meets Broughton who offers her a job cataloging his library and gives her an additional amount of $50. Gypsy decides not to tell Tom about this. She uses the money to buy his Christmas gift, a watch.

Gypsy, working in Broughton's library on Saturday, has just finished for the day when she hears someone arrive and recognizes Lila's voice. Gypsy manages to escape unseen.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY CHAPTER XVI

THE narrowness of her escape left Gypsy with a shaken feeling. She longed with all her heart to be finished with the work at Marko's so that she should not any longer lay herself open to the danger of being misunderstood. There was no reason on earth why she should not say now, to Lila or anyone, quite simply and openly: "I'm doing some work at Marko's place." Not the least in the world. Only — well, she couldn't. She hadn't told Tom before and it was too late now. He wouldn't understand. "But you say you started just before Christmas. Why — why — why — ?"

It was a bitter winter. Gypsy shivered at night when she plunged homeward through the darkness. She slipped along on icy pavements, hating the gray slush frozen in the gutters, the bitter wind that slashed at her skirts. Often and often she encountered gay groups of young people spilling out of apartment house doorways, on pleasure bound. Young women in white fur wraps with their slim ankles rising out of expensive slippers. Youth in evening clothes. She and Tom weren't partying much just then.

"Oh, I hate being poor!" Gypsy burst out rebelliously one night when they had spent the better part of the evening going over the accounts together. She was sorry the moment the words were out, as Tom was uncommonly sensitive on the subject. With dignity he shut the check-book and put the bills away.

"I'm sorry, Tommy, I didn't mean that."

"Oh, yes, you did," His tone was quiet but she knew just how deeply she had hurt him. "It all comes down to this," Tom said, white-faced. "We ought not to have married."

ONE particularly blizzardy night the telephone rang and Tom answered it. His polite, "How are you? We're both splendid!" left Gypsy guessing. "It's for you," he said, turning the instrument over to her.

Lila spoke. "Gypsy, darling, the most marvellous idea! Could you get away from the school for two weeks?"

ing some people on his yacht, Florida.

Gypsy's heart gave one wild leap. To get away from this freezing city—with its icy pavements and shrill winds blowing up from the river—would be heaven. But she checked herself in time. Lila was used to think of her, she said, but she couldn't get away. She would not say she couldn't afford the clothes—the inevitable extras.

Lila coaxed, argued. But Gypsy said, "Some other time . . ."

"What was that all about?" Tom glanced at her curiously.

She forced a laugh, but even to her own ears it sounded foolish and strained. "Lila's crazy," she said. "Wanting me to go south."

His mouth hardened. "Lord, I wish you could. Just what you need. Maybe we could . . ."

She laid her fingers on his lips. "Thanks, darling, but I don't want to. D'you think I'd leave you?"

He had to be satisfied with that. But he was to refer to it again and again in the days to come, when Gypsy drooped and dragged herself around. She didn't know, she said, what was the matter with her. She lost her appetite. She was always tired. Her childish color ebbed and her eyes lost their bright luster.

"Bumped shame you couldn't have had that Florida trip," Tom grumbled one night when she had let Dinah carry her plate back to the kitchen virtually untouched.

Gypsy sipped her coffee languidly. "Don't be silly," she said. She had never told Tom that Marko figured in the Florida plan. Tomorrow was her last day with the books at the Broughton library.

She would go to him. Marko would have her final check waiting. She would end the association once and for all.

BUT on Saturday she woke with a bad cold. She was feverish. Her throat was sore. Going out was simply not to be thought of. Tom said, and she agreed with him. She staid in bed, sorry she felt too genuinely ill to enjoy the unwonted luxury. Tom brought her hot tea, ineptly-made toast, and the morning paper and left with fond anxiety. Gypsy dozed and awakened through the long morning. Stupid of her to be ill on this particular day! What had she meant to do—oh, yes, she had Marko's books to finish off. She remembered, but it was like part of a bad dream, all of a piece with a bad taste in her mouth and her dull, persistent headache. At 12 o'clock she got uncertainly out of bed, the rosy wool coat wrapped around her, and staggered to the telephone. She called Marko's office number and sat, drumming her fingers impatiently on the table, waiting.

After a long wait the operator put her through to Marko's private wire. She explained, Marko, properly solicitous, answered. He was sorry she wasn't feeling well.

She turned away from the telephone, relieved at having the matter for the moment settled. What, then, was her surprise to see Tom in the doorway, watching her. He had the cool, withdrawn expression she recalled. Tom had heard her!

"I—I was just . . ." She began haltingly to explain but he stopped her.

"Yes, I heard you." His face was stony. Gypsy looked at him miserably. Her palms were wet, her throat dry. What was there to say? If Tom believed the worst, it was perhaps what she deserved. She was too ill, too miserable to care really what happened to her.

She stumbled past him without another word and collapsed into bed. Tom followed her, putting one of his cool firm hands on her forehead.

"Temperature," he announced coldly. "I'm going to call the doctor."

Gypsy kept her eyes closed. She did not protest. Tom, she reminded herself, didn't love her any more—wouldn't, at least, when he'd discovered all her foolish deceptions.

Huddled under the blankets, aching and wretched, she heard the doctor arrive; heard his heavy voice booming in the living room and Tom's polite replies. This was a new doctor—a man who had an office in the first floor of the apartment building. Gypsy shrank toward him. He wouldn't be in the lead like old Doctor Hannerman was.

This man was tall and dark and sure of himself. He put a professional finger on the patient's pulse, letting his shrewd eyes run around the little room.

"Been feeling run down?"

SHE nodded. He asked another question . . . and another. Gypsy's heart quickened its beat. What was the man trying to lead her? He was saying something coolly and assuredly, scribbling on a prescription blank the while.

"Yes, my dear young lady, you're going to have a baby. Touch of the 've got right now. That's the band of yours will have to see you take good care of yourself. Keep warm . . . lots of fluids . . . medicine every three hours . . ."

Her first impulse was to laugh hysterically. The man must have been feeling decidedly queer lately. Tom knocked and the doctor left him enter.

"Well, it seems you're to be congratulated." What a fatuous smile the man had, thought Gypsy, glancing him. He thought Tom was going to be glad of the news, of how wrong he was, because Tom didn't love her and it was tragedy to have a baby just when your marriage was shivering in pieces, as her's was.

She began to cry.

"She's a little nervous, perfectly natural," the doctor boomed, sliding into Tom's astonished face. "She's to keep perfectly quiet for a few days . . . lots of citrus fruits . . ." He strode out, Tom in the wake.

He came back excitedly a moment later. The hall door slammed. "Is he right? Is it true?"

She sat on the edge of the bed. She could smell his tweedy coat and the aroma of shaving soap and she was right on crying, because she didn't know how to stop.

"Gyps . . . darling . . . don't . . ." He had his arms around her, and he was holding her close. "You mustn't, sweet, because I'll be bad for you."

She found her handkerchief and dried her eyes. "I want to tell you all about Marko," she began wailing. "It was some work I was doing for him and I didn't think you'd like it . . ."

He interrupted. All the anger and jealousy had gone out of his voice and his face was smoothed out. "It doesn't matter," he soothed. "Whatever you did was have been right and good. You now, be a good girl and rest. You can tell me some other what you want. She must never know what sharp stab it gave his chest that she, who was to be his child's mother, had worked herself into this state.

The doctor had said: "Take good care of her. She needs it." (To Be Continued)

Their quality is quickly recognized and appreciated; their sales are mounting steadily. They give first class service and satisfaction. Newspaper advertising has made them known to the public, and is constantly reminding them. It is sound business for every concern to put their selling efforts behind nationally advertised merchandise, as they are the kind that satisfy. Advertising is swaying the buying public. The demand for well known lines is ever growing; people want no other kind. Newspaper advertisements are working morning, noon and night bringing buyer and seller together to their mutual satisfaction. Nationally advertised wares are the finest obtainable anywhere. AUSTIN, Jan. 22.—A piano in every subsistence colony home. That is the hope of the federal government. And a place will be provided in each subsistence homestead home for a piano. It was announced by Francis J. Clair, federal representative now in Texas supervising the plans for the buildings for about 400 families in five homestead projects.

This will be the first time that architectural service has been secured in building projects of this kind," Mr. Clair said.

He said the government is providing different types of homes for each of the five colonies and is designing homes to be the last word in modernity within the limits of low cost and simplicity.

"The placing of each piece of furniture, including a piano, will be definitely planned before the building is started," he said.

Further, there will be no straight rows of uniform cottages, but rather winding roads, shrubbery, the houses set back and given attractive yards, and the groups of houses in each section designed in keeping with the general spirit of architecture of that section.

Mr. Clair has inspected four projects at Wichita Falls, Beaumont, Port Arthur, Arlington and Houston. He also is inspecting a proposed unit at Marshall, held over for consideration later.

Pres. Roosevelt's plan for decentralization of industries is being experimented with by the government in Texas at the Three Rivers subsistence homestead colony, Francis J. Clair, federal representative, disclosed.

Three Rivers was selected for a homestead colony because it has an industry located in a small city. That is Charles R. Tips' glass factory. Upon the future of the glass industry in Texas depended the approval, just given, of the homestead colony, Mr. Clair revealed.

An instant result of the location of the colony, since the Three Rivers glass factory proved that it has orders and business in sight for permanent operation, was that outlined with by the government in Texas at the Three Rivers subsistence homestead colony, Francis J. Clair, federal representative, disclosed.

A fine dinner was served at the noon hour, and everyone present expressed congratulations to Uncle John, and wished him many more happy birthdays. He is an old settler in Rising Star territory, and is very well known throughout this section.

In attendance at the dinner, beside the honoree, were: James W. Clark, G. W. Plummer, C. J. Brewer, Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Kennedy, J. E. McBride, C. M. Pearce, Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Plummer, E. A. of state manufacturers in allied industry already have sent field men to Three Rivers for a survey as to the location of new factories there.

The government, taking its cue from Pres. Roosevelt's public utterances, proposes to encourage industries located in smaller communities and also to take advantage of their operation to make employment in them the basis of the home-ownership program of the subsistence farm groups.

Workers at Three Rivers will live in homes built for them and sold them on easy terms by the government. Realizing that some one else needed work beside themselves three eggnomies, G. F. Eubanks, Ernest Higgins and Edgar Smith after working awhile for the CWA turned their places over to others for a few days. It is to be hoped that others will do likewise.

"COWBOYS NEED HEALTHY NERVES— AND, BELIEVE ME, SO DO HOUSEWIVES"

Mrs. Phyllis L. Potter, Home Maker, Montclair, N. J., says:

"I don't doubt but what it takes healthy nerves to ride an outlaw horse! But any woman who is a home maker will agree with me that shopping, cleaning, and answering the doorbell a dozen times a day are enough to jangle anybody's nerves. I know that I have to be careful in choosing my cigarettes. I am a confirmed Camels smoker because I can smoke Camels freely without a hint of jumpy nerves."

Eddie Woods, All-Around Champion Cowboy, says:

"To have nerves that can take it, I smoke only Camels. I've tried them all but Camels are my smoke! They have a natural mildness, and I like their taste better. Camels do not jangle my nerves, even when I smoke one after another."
