PERPETUATING AN IDEAL

The nation today presents its flowers to the living. The first birthday anniversary of the president of the United States in office is the occasion for a season of national felicitation and happy commemoration...

The people of the United States, in celebrating the birthday of Mr. Roosevelt in this effective way, are not simply making it possible for so many boys and girls to receive a certain amount of treatment at a nice resort...

LONG RANGE RELIEF

Long range aspects of the government's program to rehabilitate the nation after the depression are beginning to appear under the confusing surface movements of the emergency program.

There is room for everybody in this broad land, and there is no reason that one group should endure the distress of poverty while another enjoys the full fruits of prosperity.

"EVERYTHING WILL WORK OUT ALL RIGHT."

William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, is optimistic. He had a conference with the president. They were closeted together for an hour.

President Roosevelt hopes that the CWA workers can pick up their shovels and go into private industry before May 1. They have been carried through the winter.

THE CELLARS OF FRANCE

Through the Editor's Spectacles

By GEORGE

We white folks think that the country is our exclusive possession. We have a depression, and complain, along comes a Moses and shows us the way out.

About the time we are patting ourselves on the back for having done such a good job of appreciating we discover to our chagrin that some other folks, of whom we had taken but little thought, have outdone us in comparison with our means.

The colored people of Cisco think as much of Mr. Roosevelt as we. As a matter of fact, based on what they are doing to celebrate his birthday tonight, they think more of him than do we.

There is room for everybody in this broad land, and there is no reason that one group should endure the distress of poverty while another enjoys the full fruits of prosperity.

Smith Haynes, teacher of the colored school: "President Franklin D. Roosevelt's Fifty-Second Birthday. It is indeed wonderful to note what a blessing it is to be servants of a true God...

"The God we serve is able to look fifty-two years into the future, see the condition and needs of a nation, and cause to be born into it a babe a midst of a golden age, a babe a hero and a man to be a refuge, and guiding star, through a crisis like this."

"Far back as ancient history tells, God saw that the Israelites would need a liberator, and a Moses was born; in modern times as early as January 30, 1882, he saw that the United States of America would be engulfed and infurated under the greatest financial and industrial burden the world has ever known...

"Today all over this fair land and country, more than four thousand cities, towns, and other units of society, are celebrating the birthday of our President Roosevelt, who yet lives and works among us, and for us."

"I have loved near with a kettle. Someone had made a sort of tent with sheets over the big, wide flat bed with the pineapple posts. The doctor straightened at Gypsy's entrance."

"Nothing but a little croup," he said easily. "Frightening at first, of course. Your mother had quite a turn..."

"But he was perfectly well—he was fine when I left him," Gypsy kept saying in her bewilderment. Some one brought her a chair; her knees were trembling with the reaction. The baby slept quietly now, one crumpled roseleaf tucked under above his head.

Even if the brake-testing got too obnoxious, the whole highway patrol might be repealed, just like the old speed-trap, hiding constable and roadside justice court and fee-paid speed officer were repealed. Just like a stupid, fee-grabbing headlight test law was repealed.

Married Flirts

MABEL McELLIOTT

Begin here today GYPSY MORELL and TOM WEAVER were married on the same day as LILA HOTELING and DEBER BLISS, but LILA expects to live in luxury while Gypsy keeps her job teaching in a settlement school.

Gypsy has to struggle to keep expenses within Tom's income. Another trouble is Tom's jealousy of wealthy MARRIO BROUGHTON, who once asked Gypsy to marry him when they meet at the Blisses' home.

When the doctor tells Gypsy she is to have a baby she gives up her job. Sumner comes on and is intensely hot. Gypsy and Tom move to a cottage on Long Island owned by a friend.

The baby is born in late September and the Weavers return to their apartment. Gypsy finds housework with the baby to care for exhausting. They spend the Christmas holidays with Gypsy's parents in New Jersey. New Year's night Tom and Gypsy are summoned home from a party by news that the baby is ill.

Now go on with the story CHAPTER XXIII

It was a nightmare—a hideous, black, absorbing nightmare. The rush home through the silent streets, slippery now, fast glazing under the moon; the first sight of the Morell house lighted throughout, with the doctor's coupe parked at the driveway. Gypsy scarcely waited for Tom to put on the brakes. She was out of the door, halfway up the stairs by the time he had fairly stopped the car.

"David... mother, how is he?" The big guest room, with its rose-garlanded paper, its peeling cream woodwork, was one blaze of lights. Gypsy saw only the tiny figure in the bassinet with Doctor Bonnerman bending over it. There was a peculiar smell in the room. Gypsy hovered near with a kettle. Someone had made a sort of tent with sheets over the big, wide flat bed with the pineapple posts.

The doctor straightened at Gypsy's entrance. "Nothing but a little croup," he said easily. "Frightening at first, of course. Your mother had quite a turn..."

Mrs. Morell began volubly to explain. Her children, she said, had never had croup. She was terrified when she heard young David's heavy breathing—when he began to choke.

"But he was perfectly well—he was fine when I left him," Gypsy kept saying in her bewilderment. Some one brought her a chair; her knees were trembling with the reaction. The baby slept quietly now, one crumpled roseleaf tucked under above his head. Lights were turned down and the watchers in the room moved softly, speaking in whispers.

Tom told Gypsy to go to bed; he'd watch David himself. But she was stubborn. She wouldn't sleep, she told him. What was the use? She refused even to take off her frock but sat, wrapped in her woolly robe, her eyes on the crib.

young mother. She discovered that the love she felt for him was tinged with fear—fear she might lose him, that something might strike, out of the blue, at his smallness and helplessness.

Yes, motherhood had changed her more than a little. It had sobered and sweetened and saddened her. It made her all at once more womanly, more gentle, more thoughtful while the experience of being a father, she considered gravely, had altered Tom not at all. When they were together, in their own little home, and Gypsy's glowing face and bright eyes were turned up to him, Tom forgot everything except that she was his, infinitely dear and adorable.

When she unlocked his door at night it was Gypsy he wanted to see, first of all. The sound of her light laughter was the sweetest music he knew and he was still filled with wonderment at the thought that she had chosen him out of all the world. The baby came second; Gypsy was first always.

While this did not make any real difference between them, Tom was conscious that under Gypsy's love for him ran always, without change or cessation, her passionate concern for the boy. David completed the circle... he and Gypsy and David. Well, that was as it should be, he knew that. And yet... and yet... Gypsy had been more completely his before David's coming.

Perhaps it was natural, as the months went by, that he came to spend a little more of his time at the office. For one thing, there were the new demands that David's needs placed upon the Weavers' slender income. And for another, Gypsy was wrapped up in the baby's welfare. She did not feel free to go about as she had before. She was often actually too tired to go to the movies in the evening.

She even urged Tom to go by himself or with the Matsons, another young couple who lived on the same floor.

At first Tom protested. No, he'd rather stay at home. He'd much rather be with her. But Gypsy was sometimes too weary to talk. She would make an excuse to creep off to bed early. Small wonder that Tom dropped into the habit of going out without her.

SOMETIMES she was frightened at her own weariness and dullness and her absorption in the baby. Tom would tire of her, she would tell herself wildly, glancing at her image in the mirror. She had nothing to talk about these days. The young mothers she met in the park were deep in the mysteries of formulas and pureed carrots and orange juice. How could she, after an afternoon of this conversation, be bright and amusing for her husband? And wasn't David worth any self-sacrifice?

One evening in March they went to dine with Tom's boss, a rubicund gentleman who owned a charming house in Scarsdale. It was all very pleasant—food, host and guests. But Gypsy felt quite out of it. Her frock was unflattering and her small talk rusty. She hadn't been to any of the new plays, she didn't do the night clubs. Her hostess was smooth, manicured, beautifully dressed and jeweled. Gypsy considered, with a humorous despair, asking them to her home and gave up the project in five minutes.

DAVID was happy, rosy, untouched the next morning. The brief and frightening attack of croup vanished without leaving a trace—upon the baby, at least. But it had quite a lasting effect on his

The next day Gypsy made a lot of new resolutions. She would "fuss more" over her own looks, would never neglect cold creaming rites at night, would give herself a daily manœuvre. Tom had seemed to find that young copy-writer very charming last night. She, Gypsy, had been considered a most delightful companion once upon a time. Where had all her amusing repartee vanished?

When the telephone rang late that afternoon and Tom's voice came to her she was pleasantly excited. Often when he called this late it was to announce that some newspaper friend had given him second night tickets to a play. "But, darling!"

But her voice dwindled; the ring of pleased expectancy died out of it. He had to work? Oh, that was too bad! She had been mentally freshening up her best black frock, doing her hair.

Tom was sorry, he said. There was a big new account in the office. He hated leaving her alone but honestly he had to work on this stuff. She was a good sport! It was all right, then?

GYPSY put the telephone down with a sensation of disappointment and defeat. The long evening stretched out before her with a lonely and solitary dinner to boot. Well, it was too bad, but it couldn't be helped.

She got David ready for the night, a lovely, laughing serenade of babyhood in his ribbed nightgown. But after he had been tucked away in his crib, the light turned out and the windows opened, a feeling of deep forlornness swept over her. She stood at the kitchen window, her forehead against the cool pane, gazing out at the lighted streets below. Far to the west she could see the lights of the gay street, Broadway. An advertising sign twinkled on and off, red and yellow, red and yellow, half a block away. Night sounds, sounds of the city throwing off its daytime mood of seriousness, making ready for play, came to her faintly. The hooting of taxis, the scrape of brakes. A radio blared out across the way. Dinner music. Somewhere down in the city men and girls were dancing to the strains of that music, were dining and smoking and laughing.

"I—I feel like Cinderella," Gypsy said to herself, trying to smile. But tears pricked at her eyelids. She swallowed hard. Why, she was being just a baby! She'd had to eat her dinner alone, before this. What was the matter with her?

The chop and the baked potato and the spinach all tasted like dust and ashes to her. She picked up a magazine and tried to read but the type itself swam together. The stories were trite and uninteresting. What was she doing, in this strange little apartment, high up above the uncaring city, alone? She needed laughter and good talk and the kind faces of friends.

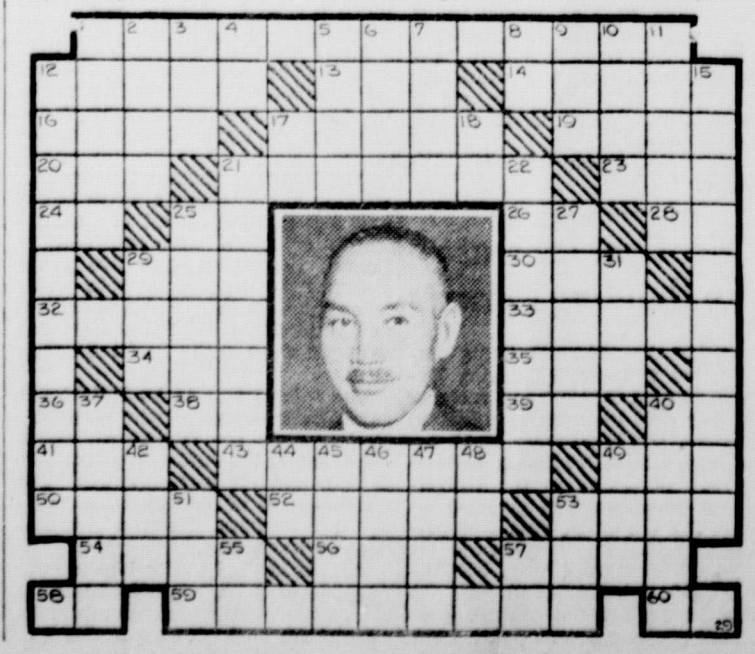

She piled the dishes in the sink, resolving to wash them later. Slipping quietly past the bedroom in which David slept, she washed and powdered and donned her black frock. If she had to be alone, at least she could make herself fresh and presentable. Nothing would happen... nothing ever happened to her any more. Her life was at a standstill.

The doorbell rang resoundingly, as it answered to this thought. Flashing to answer it, she opened in amazement. "Why, Hunt! Where on earth did you drop from?" (To Be Continued)

BATTLE MONUMENTS TO U. S. TROOPS NEARING COMPLETION

Over 650,000 Americans were in this branch of the service. The eight chapels are located in the American cemeteries at Romagne, Belleau, Suresnes, Bony, Fere-en-Tardenois and Thiaucourt all in France! Brookwood, England, and Waerghem, Belgium. Chapel at Romagne As the largest monument is located in the Meuse-Argonne region where the main American force was engaged, the most impressive chapel has been built at Romagne, the largest American military cemetery. In the cemetery 13,219 American troops are buried. The graves, surrounded by crosses in Carrara marble are divided into eight mammoth quadrangles. Behind them rises the majestic chapel, dominating the countryside. The names of all those missing in the particular operation are carved on the walls inside the chapel. This has been done in all the chapels so that all those lost during the war will be remembered. The chapel at Belleau was built directly over the front-line of the Second Division after it had captured Belleau Wood. In addition to building the chapels, the Battle Monuments commission undertook the landscape work in the cemeteries and the erection of ornamental gateways, walls, flagpoles, benches and ornamental urns. The commission's work will probably be completed early this summer. It is now revising its guide-book to the American battlefields. The new book will contain complete information about the memorials for the use of pilgrims in years to come.

Dyer, of the Community Natural Gas company. H. S. Drumwright is in charge of radio installation by which the guests will hear the president speak and listen for a time to the big central celebration. Howard Fuller is in charge of musical arrangements. Mr. and Mrs. Jack Anderson are directing decoration of the ball room and Dr. and Mrs. Paul M. Woods and Mr. and Mrs. T. F. O'Brien will lead the grand march. Mrs. W. J. Armstrong and Mrs. W. Wallace are in charge of refreshments. W. J. Leach is official guest receiver. Sale of the tickets was mostly underwritten by various civic organizations. This celebration is a fitting manner in which to pay tribute to the president on his birthday by helping him to endow the institution at Warm Springs, Ga., which was the scene of his heroic fight back to health after an attack of infantile paralysis. He has personally contributed large sums to developing it into a health center for crippled children. Proceeds of balls in 4,000 cities and communities similar to that being held here will go into the endowment fund. General Chairman Bearman today made his final appeal to the people

REGAINED APPETITE AND WEIGHT WITH KELLOGG'S ALL-BRAN

Cereal Relieved His Constipation. If you are a sufferer from headaches, loss of appetite and energy, sleeplessness, or any other of the frequent effects of constipation, read this enthusiastic letter from Mr. McIntyre: "For a long time my system was not in very good working order. But since eating Kellogg's ALL-BRAN, I have regained my appetite and my lost weight. And my system is in good working order. Kellogg's ALL-BRAN sure does the trick." Mr. J. A. McIntyre, 160 Ruscomb St., Philadelphia, Pa. Tests show Kellogg's ALL-BRAN provides the "bulk" needed to relieve ordinary constipation. It also contains vitamin B and iron for the blood. You'll enjoy this delicious and healthful ready-to-eat cereal. Serve it with milk or cream—or use often in cooking. Just eat two tablespoons daily. Chronic cases, with each meal. If not relieved this way, see your doctor. Kellogg's ALL-BRAN is all bran with only necessary flavoring added. It contains much more needed "bulk" than part-bran products. Made by Kellogg in Battle Creek.

Old West Still Is Lure to Young Boys

EAGLE PASS, Jan. 30.—The lure of the old west is still strong in the hearts of young America. They come to Eagle Pass, by ones and two's every month, with the fire of adventure in their eyes, a few dollars in their pockets, usually a pistol or two in their belts, and an intense curiosity about this "last frontier."

Most of them, no doubt, are disappointed at not seeing Indians and desperados stalking about on the streets. Some, from their actions, evidently expect to have to "shoot it out" with some of the hardened characters who used to roam this section, but who are now a little more than a memory.

The latest prospective had men to arrive here lost no time in outfitting themselves for the life of true westerners. They were Robert Brown, 13, and Harry Brown, 10, brothers, who had run away from their father's home at Gladewater, Texas, two days before. Immediately after they stepped out of the bus, these youngsters went to a hardware store where they bought a 22-20 rifle, several rounds of ammunition, a large hunting knife, a hatchet, and paid for them in cash.

When they were picked up by a deputy sheriff that same afternoon they were looking for a couple of "cheap horses" for which they had $20 to spend. Where they would have gone if they had found a mount was a matter they were not permitted to decide, as the officer considered the young expedition too dangerous. Consequently, he took the two boys in custody and notified the father that his missing sons had been found.

JAMES A. REED IS SLATED FOR SENATE RACE

By RICHARD L. HARKNESS
United Press Staff Correspondent
JEFFERSON CITY, Mo., Jan. 30.—James A. Reed, Missouri's former United States senator whose fiery temper and virilic tongue made him famous throughout the nation, is listed as a candidate for his old position in the election this fall.

If the 74-year-old veteran does run, he will make a race spectacular enough to enliven the campaign. If he is elected, the Roosevelt administration will find an out-spoken critic on its hands.

Political observers at the state capitol here are predicting that Reed will come out of the retirement which he started in 1932 when his presidential boom at the Chicago democratic convention developed into nothing more than a loud noise before the Roosevelt band wagon.

They point to the former senator's recent marriage to Mrs. Nell Donnelly, wealthy Kansas City dress manufacturer, as an indication his hat already is on the edge of the senatorial ring. The new Mrs. Reed is an astute politician in her own right, and would be a competent aid to her husband.

Although "Old Jim" already has issued some scathing attacks on Rooseveltian policies and likes nothing better than to aim his barked sarcasm at the President's "brain trust," the administration has given out the word from Washington that it will not oppose Reed.

Reed's chief opponents, it appears now, will be Charles M. Howell, Kansas City, who was defeated in 1932 by Bennett Champ Clark, and Willis H. Meredith, speaker of the house of representatives of the state legislature.

Senator Roscoe Patterson, republican, also is slated to make the race.

DALLAS, Jan. 30.—The faculty of Southern Methodist university got a slap on the wrist from students through "The Campus," student publication, for not attending chapel, "except when convocation makes the occasion compulsory."

Ellis County Seeks Subsistence Colony

WAXAHACHIE, Jan. 30.—A subsistence farm or colony for Ellis county was the aim today of the Waxahachie chamber of commerce.

As long as there is a possibility that a colony might be obtained, efforts to get approval of the federal government will continue, leaders said.

Officials pointed out that such an arrangement probably would not be available in the immediate future, but that it likely was just a matter of time until funds may be had for its promotion.

"Regarding a subsistence homestead colony for Ellis county," Commissioner of Agriculture J. E. McDonald wrote Secretary Roy Conally of the chamber of commerce here. "I will say that five subsistence homestead projects have been definitely approved and one tentatively approved. The construction and establishment of these colonies will require all the federal money available at this time. However there are some funds available from the civil works administration appropriations for the establishment of homestead farms."

McDonald suggested that Connally write W. H. Kittrell care the Texas Relief commission. A tin, for further information. McDonald is chairman of advisory committee on subsistence homestead colonies.

SAFETY of Mobil Certified Lubrication

THE average car has about 40 different points (some as many as 78) to be lubricated, each requiring a specific amount of the right kind of grease.

Hit-or-miss greasing can't possibly get all of them. No one grease can resist heat, water, pressure and speed. So we have developed several different grades of Mobilgrease to meet each condition.

You will find it interesting to watch a Magnolia Man lubricate your car. With complete equipment, the correct grades of Mobilgrease and an accurate "Check-Chart" of your car at his finger-tips, he works with the precision and assurance of an expert. He knows his business because he has completed a thorough course of instruction and passed rigid examinations on scientific lubrication.

New car or old, Mobilubrication will give you smoother, trouble-free miles and more of them. The next time your car needs lubricating, take it to a Magnolia Station and discover how much Mobilubrication can add to the pleasure of driving.
