FOREIGN COMMERCE SHOWS SPRING GAINS

A bulletin issued by the department of commerce on United States foreign trade is very interesting. It shows figures increased more than seasonally in March when exports gained $27,000,000 and imports $25,000,000 over February. Exports were $190,000,000, compared with imports of $158,000,000, to give a favorable balance of trade of $32,000,000 compared with a favorable balance of $13,155,000 in March last year. This is the highest point scored since 1931. More than seasonal gains brought the adjusted index of export value to 50 per cent of the 1923-25 average, or the highest point since July of 1931. Imports were 44 per cent of the average, the highest with one exception since December, 1931.

Secy. Hull of the department of state appeared before the senate finance committee and urged that body to approve the administration bill granting President Roosevelt increased power to negotiate reciprocal trade agreements was interesting. "Extraordinary conditions calls for extraordinary methods of treatment, and this measure of relief is urgently needed at this time. The bill is designed to supplement our almost impregnable domestic markets with a substantial and gradually expanding foreign market for our most burdensome surpluses." It is said that more than 100 similar trade agreements have been entered into by other nations to restore mutually profitable exchange of surpluses. And he added that it is vitally necessary that the president be given wider authority so that the United States might enjoy similar privileges.

Surplus cotton of America producers must find a foreign market. There is always a wheat surplus, a corn surplus, and always the complaint on the part of farmers that the high tariff walls of the United States are responsible for many of their ills or financial losses.

THE ISSUE NOW

Texas bank resources show a considerable gain, according to a survey, results of which were recently made public by the state banking department. Resources of state banks, the survey revealed, increased $4,266,681 from December 30, 1933 to March 5, 1934, although there were fewer than 14 banks reporting. Total resources of state banks and bank and trust companies, as of March 5, were $189,743,436. The report showed an increase of $987,186 in individual bank deposits. Resources of the seven Morris plan banks in the state were listed at $2,728,747.

Bank raiders have been extremely bold in the smaller cities and towns of Texas and these have taken a considerable sum, no doubt. The loss was borne by the insurance companies. But it represents a loss to the banking community as a whole since insurance is simply a form of spreading the loss evenly over the whole. The deprivations of the bandits are not a crime against money in the banks. More than they have stolen, or would probably steal, would profitably be spent in their extermination. War against the breed is the issue in Texas now, regardless of what otherwise may be advocated as the need of the hour.

BLUE EAGLE FLIERS MUST HELP PAY

President Roosevelt has issued an important order under which future display of the blue eagle will be allowed only to those firms which contribute to expenses of code administration wherever such outlays are required. To protect employers from racketeering by organizers of industrial groups the president required that all code authority rates of assessments and budgets of expenditures must be approved by Administrator Hugh S. Johnson before a penny could be collected. The executive order does not command that every firm under every code pay dues but substantially leaves this government controlled method of financing administration the only avenue which may be followed. Industries under the order will not be required to but will have the right to apply to NRA for approval of a financing plan which shall be put into effect if Administrator Johnson "shall find approval by him if such a clause is necessary." Moreover, non-payment will constitute a violation of the code, subjecting the firm involved to withdrawal of the eagle as well as all other code privileges and expose it to suit for collection on the part of the code authorities.

GAS TAX EVADERS GIVEN WARNING

A conviction under the new law designed to strengthen enforcement of the gasoline tax has been affirmed by the Texas court of criminal appeals. The conviction was of a person found guilty of transporting by truck 1185 gallons of gasoline under a billing of 985 gallons, the tax being paid on the small amount. However, the validity of the law was not questioned in the appeal.

The East Texas chamber of commerce has resolved that it will continue its efforts to insure enforcement of state production laws. Announcement was made at the close of the 1934 annual convention of the chamber. In the so-called "good old days" the beef industry was recognized as first in a dividend making sense in Texas. Now oil is the best dividend payer of all with the exception of the combined cotton and wool and mohair money yields of the commonwealth.

MARCH FIGURES FOR TEXAS INDUSTRY

A gain of 43 per cent in the number of bales of cotton consumed by Texas mills in March, this year compared with March last year, was reported by the bureau of business research of the University of Texas in the closing week of April. A gain of 12.5 per cent over February consumption also was recorded. Cloth production was 17.5 per cent above March of 1933. Texas cement production in March was 54.6 per cent greater than in February and 15.5 per cent greater than in March, 1933. Col. Jesse H. Jones must have known his figures when he made the announcement that the Southwest had made very rapid strides toward recovery under the new deal setups of the national acts.

"Fast Becoming Bondholders' Tenants"

By HUGH NUGENT FITZGERALD

A statewide organization of taxpayers is known as the Industrial, Commercial and Agricultural conference of Texas. C. A. Jay is its executive vice president. There is always hope for the taxpayer so long as the press continues to champion actively his cause.

These facts or figures are passed on to the reading public: "Many Texas taxpayers are alarmed for fear the federal government is incurring debts it will be unable to pay; but they are utterly unconcerned about the larger problem which lies at their own doors."

This is the plan of action proposed by the conference: Every county in Texas should have a public expenditure committee with membership selected from the various taxing units in the county. It should be the duty of this committee of taxpayers to work with public officials in the county, the city and the school district to bring about economy in the expenditure of public funds. It should be the duty of this committee to see that every unit of government prepares a budget, holds a public hearing on it and lives up war period. But state and local governments present an entirely different picture. At the end of the fiscal year 1933 the outstanding debt of the state and local governments was approximately $14,000,000,000 more than it was 20 years ago.

Do you know that in the year 1933 state and local government in Texas expended 15 times as much as the federal government collected from Texas in income tax? Do you know that under the present organization there are 8466 different units of government in Texas with authority to levy taxes and incur public debts? These are some problems right at your own door which demand attention. At the rate we are going we are fast becoming the tenants of the bondholders.

This is the plan of action proposed by the conference: Every county in Texas should have a public expenditure committee with membership selected from the various taxing units in the county. It should be the duty of this committee of taxpayers to work with public officials in the county, the city and the school district to bring about economy in the expenditure of public funds. It should be the duty of this committee to see that every unit of government prepares a budget, holds a public hearing on it and lives up strict and county and local who are appealing for the votes of Texans year. Yes—"The ballot is the thing."

UNDER THE DOME AT AUSTIN

By GORDON K. SHEARER

United Press Staff Correspondent AUSTIN, April 29.—State peace officers have started a new sort of investigation. They are looking into past legislative records of the lawmakers and candidates who now are clamoring for adequate law enforcement aids.

"Why didn't he vote that way when he had a chance?" Ranger Joe Osaba remarked disgustedly, as he tossed aside the printed interview of a senator. "Last session he voted against everything that would help the peace officers."

A number of the legislators will surprise themselves if they consult their past votes and compare them with how they would vote today. Faculty members of the University of Texas have adopted a code of ethics for contact with legislators. It is declared unethical for individual faculty members to discuss university appropriations with representatives or senators.

Clyde Barrow, "Pretty Boy" Floyd, Ray Hamilton, Dillinger, et al are not so "bad" after all. More than $4,000,000 signed, registered and negotiable relief bonds were taken from Austin to Dallas recently. No attempt was made to steal them, although there was but a single Ranger guard. Time of the trip, of course, was kept secret.

Even the lawyers themselves have begun to be amazed at how they can twist things around. So distorted did one group of lawyers consider the statement of a case presented to the third court of civil appeals here that they warned the court only the imagination of a Jules Verne could equal it.

"We presume," said their opposing brief, "that, if called on to recount the action of Jesus Christ when the disciples rebuked the little children, that instead of telling the story according to St. Matthew, it would be about as this: 'And this man Jesus, without authority or permission from the parents, seized certain little children, brought them into the midst of a disreputable rabble and forcibly placed his hands upon their heads, thus inflicting an unlawful trespass and assault and fled.'"

Lawyers apparently all are close Bible students. Most of the references made by them in arguments are to Bible characters or narratives. One successful lawyer explained it this way: "Any jury of twelve is bound by the law of averages to have some members who are close readers of the Bible. A Biblical reference centers their attention. But the lawyer better be sure he is quoting correctly."

Attorney-general James V. Allred's father sat with pride apparent in his expression and heard his son argue the State Relief Commission suit in 98th District court here.

Without a dime at stake, for the contested relief commission office has no pay, the case attracted some of the most noted lawyers of the state. Former Governor Dan Moody; Judge Ocie Speer, former member of the commission to assist the state supreme court; Speaker Coke Stevenson; R. L. Batts, noted oil authority and former chairman of the regents of the University of Texas, were among the counsel. Elbert Hopper, first assistant, divided time with Allred in making the state argument.

PRIZES FOR DEBATES. STATE COLLEGE, Pa., April 30.—Two prizes, one of $10 and one of $5 have been offered by Delta Alpha women's honorary speech fraternity at the Pennsylvania State college, for women speakers who can deliver the best persuasive speeches. Each contestant will be allowed eight to ten minutes on the form to speak on any subject desired.

WRECKS STATION

NORFOLK, Neb., April 30.—Justly corn-row art of hog call has its place in the open spaces of the middle west, but its effects on radio equipment was devastating. When Fred Patzel, world's champion hog caller, let loose one "Pole" China whoop from his ranch throat over radio station WJL here, he wrecked the station. It pairs cost the operators approximately $500.

SCORES TEACHERS

PHILADELPHIA, April 30.—Teaching poetry "as if it were a secret" was charged against the principal schools in an address here by Stephen Vincent Benet. The not an American poet declared that "schools of today—and yesterday, that matter—teach poetry into pieces in an effort to teach grammar. They ignore completely the fire and beauty of poetry."

DONNA of the BIG TOP

by BEULAH POYNTER

ROBIN, perched on the limb of an elm tree by her window, awakened Donna at sunrise. She stretched with a feeling of well-being that made every nerve tingle with ecstasy. She could hear the cackle of hens and Mrs. Planter out in the yard calling, "Here chick! Here chick!" The fragrant aroma of coffee mingled with the sweeter odors of grass and flowers and warm, moist fields.

Donna crossed to the window and, kneeling beside it, rested her elbows on the sill. She lifted her head, drinking in the beauty of waxy corn fields and the golden glow of the rising sun across the acres of growing grain. A man carrying two great buckets of frothy milk, two dogs, emerged from a barn. As he drew nearer, Donna recognized him. It was Bill in overalls, with bare, brawny arms and looking larger, more masculine than ever.

He disappeared into a summer house adjoining the kitchen. Donna rose and bathed with the cold water she found in a pink-sprigged pitcher set in a basin on the marble-topped commode. Then she dressed slowly. Donna was unbelievably hungry, yet loath to go below and confront in daylight the unsuspecting victims of her masquerade.

At last she descended the stairs. In the kitchen she found Mrs. Planter mixing batter for pancakes. The housekeeper greeted Donna with a brief nod and an audible sniff.

"You rise early," Donna said. "Heckon you want some breakfast," Mrs. Planter answered. "You'll have to help yourself. There's a heap to do, even if it is Sunday."

Donna poured coffee from an earthenware pot and sat down at the pine table, scrubbed shiny and white. Without speaking, Mrs. Planter set a plate of biscuits and a glass of jam before her. "Is Grandfather up?" Donna asked. "Winter or summer he's out of here before five," Mrs. Planter told her, "but he sleeps a lot during the day. He's stubborn. A body can't do much with him. Maybe you could for a spell, but not long." Shrewd yellow eyes tried to read Donna's intentions. "Bill said this morning," Mrs. Planter went on, "that you was thinking 'some of comin' back here to stay. You wouldn't be happy. After Havin' the fast life you have a farm would be pretty lonesome." "Fast life!" Donna exclaimed. "Why do you say that?"

"I haven't seen Grandfather this morning," Donna said. Mrs. Planter's thin lips pursed. "I know something about circus and show folks. Ain't it fast to come out before people without your clothes and to cavort around in shameful fashion? Leastwise it seems fast to me."

"It's a matter of opinion," Donna said, determined not to lose her temper. "I feel myself fully clothed when I'm in the arena, and my life is as full of routine and duty as yours. At times it's very tiresome."

"Yes?" doubtfully. "I says to Bill, 'Don't you bank on it. Madeline hated this place when she was a child. She'll hate it more now. That's what I says to him.'" Bill's entrance just then prevented Donna from replying. He looked glowing with health and he greeted Donna with a cheery "good morning."

discover how the beating of her heart accelerated when Bill's brown fingers touched her arm. "He gets up with the birds but after early coffee he goes back to bed again for a snooze," Bill explained. "He'll be around in time for church though."

"I suppose you never attend services?" "It isn't possible very often. Must I today?"

SHE was spared the ordeal of meeting any one who might remember the little red-haired girl who had run away from home, for when they returned to the house Grandfather announced he would say prayers and Bill could read the Bible and that he guessed the Lord would understand and excuse them from services because Madeline's stay in their midst was to be so short. Sitting in the cool, sweet smelling living room, Donna listened attentively to Bill's low, melodious voice as he read aloud the verses that took on new meaning as she heard them and gave her strength and courage. As a child she had knelt at her mother's knee and said the prayer beginning "Now I lay me, every night. Later in hotels she had read Bibles left by the Gideons, but the reading had been only a pastime. For the first time in her life now the words of the great Teacher gave her something she wanted to cling to with a fervor that awed her. "If only I thought stay here always," she thought. "If only I really were Madeline Siddal and this dear old patriarch my grandfather!"

There was dinner at one o'clock in the shadowy dining room that was used only on Sundays or winter there was company. It was a dinner of home grown vegetables, fried chicken swimming in rich cream gravy, not biscuit and strawberry shortcake served with thick sweet cream to pour over it. Donna forgot her life in the circus and seemed almost to become the girl she was supposed to be. She spoke of the circus, of the long, arduous rehearsals, the parades, the nomad existence she led, always traveling from town to town and from city to city.

When he sn disappeared behind the red barn she trudged through the fields with Bill, bringing the cows in from pasture and sat on a little stool beside him as he milked them.

THEN night came and there were more prayers and Scripture and another climb up the stairs to bed. For a long time Donna lay awake listening to the distant croaking of frogs and the rustle of leaves against the windows. If only she could come back against the enfolding arms of nature, the old man with his snowy hair and kindly manner, and Bill. In 24 hours the young farmer who had hoped to become a physician had done what no other man had ever done—won Donna's heart. She regretted that she had not told him the truth at their first meeting. It was too late now. He would not forgive such deception. Next winter when Madeline came back to the farm (as Donna was determined she must) Madeline would have to confess to the whole affair.

But Donna would have the memory of this beautiful day to keep always. She would go back to the circus, to the aromatic odors of animals, to the crowds and lights and music and sawdust and strive to put out of her heart and mind the sunburned, gray-eyed boy to whom sacrifice was but part of daily living. At nine o'clock next morning she bade farewell to Grandfather Siddal. There were tears in her eyes as his fingers caressed her cheeks. "God bless you for coming, Madeline," the old man murmured. "You'll come again?" "Oh, yes, yes." "The show life hasn't harmed you. You're sweeter than ever, child. Sweeter than ever." Bill drove her back to Lebanon. He was silent all the way. Even at the station he had nothing to say, and when the train pulled in and he helped her up the steps to the platform he merely gave her his hand in parting and said he was glad to have had the opportunity to know her. "Well—I'll see you again," she stammered. "I hope so—but I don't really think you will come back." A pane of glass separated them. Bill smiled and waved at her. Then, smiling abruptly, he crossed to his battered car and entered it. A film of tears obscured Donna's vision. She blinked them back resolutely and opened a magazine. (To Be Continued)

OUR GANG COMEDY

"I NEED HEALTHY NERVES, TOO, MR. CECIL SMITH, WITH A THRIVING FAMILY TO LOOK OUT FOR"

Robert E. Butterfield, Jr., who has two thriving youngsters, says:

"A father's job gives a fellow plenty of experience with nerve strain, too! Providing for the children keeps you keyed up to concert pitch. Then—coming home from work, with Dick insisting on movies—Bob's eternal tap dancing—that's the zero hour for a father's nerves! Although I smoke all I want, jangled nerves have passed me by. That's because I smoke Camels. Camels have the fine flavor of the choicest, most expensive tobaccos. And I find they never upset my nerves."

Cecil Smith, who rose to the top of the polo world this year with a ten-goal rating, says:
"Most polo players, myself included, smoke a great deal. And most polo players, myself included again, prefer to smoke Camels. They are milder. I like their flavor and they never upset my nerves."

How Are YOUR Nerves?

Nerves, nerves, nerves! You hear them discussed everywhere today. For most of us are more or less the victims of irritated, jumpy nerves.
If troubled that way, check up on your eating, your work, your recreation, your sleep. And to be on the safe side about "nerves," begin to smoke Camels.
Camels are made from finer, MORE EXPENSIVE TOBACCOS than any other popular brand.
No wonder they are milder, finer in flavor, free from irritation! Make Camels your smoke! You'll be delighted with Camels' flavor...the gentle mood of enjoyment...well-being...and poise which steady smokers find in Camels.
