TARIFF TRADING

A department of commerce survey showed Japanese export increases ranging from 100 to 1000 per cent into a majority of South American countries, "concededly to the detriment of American exports in many instances." These figures, placed beside others, showing that a 50 per cent decrease in American foreign trade in 1933 as compared to 1930, were cited by one department of commerce official as the cause of an administrative desire for speed in negotiating preferential trade treaties.

A policy of tariff trading is something rather new to American international relations. The plan has been used to good effect by other nations. The old system of fixed tariffs, such as prevailed under the administrations of a dead prosperity, appears doomed before a new policy of flexible tariffs which place a potent argument in the hands of the administration as it bids for world markets for the industries of the nation.

STATE VS. FEDERAL OIL CONTROL

A congregation of oil men at Tyler the other day denounced the Texas Railroad commission and demanded a federal oil control law be passed at once. The voice of a single man in that group counselled deliberation and a more cautious approach to the alternative of state control or federal domination of the industry. This voice, promptly suppressed by the blatant majority, warned that it is a serious thing to desert the principle of state's rights and appeal to federal intervention.

The anti-federal control side of this argument, which means more to Texas than to any other state for the reason that it is the greatest producing state of the four principal producing states, is aptly presented in an article in the Austin American, of which the following are excerpts:

"The people of Texas get one million dollars a day cash money for Texas oil—by far the biggest crop we have. If the control of this cash crop is turned completely over to a federal czar under the so-called Ickes bill it is only fair to presume that the 40 states which must consume more oil than they produce will plug for consumers as against producers. Texas, California, Oklahoma and Kansas will be outvoted by 40 consuming states. If you don't believe it, read the report of the so-called Consumers' Council protesting against proration as an artificial method of raising gasoline prices to the American public. Further: 'And now, under the Ickes proposal we find supporters declaring that we can only maintain proration under federal control and that the oil business will be destroyed if such bodies as the Texas railroad commission continue the sovereign power. 'One hand of the federal machine in the oil business wants no proration; another hand wants more strict proration. With a house divided within itself, what chance has the small Texas producer if the big federal machine takes over complete oil control, and a civil war between producers and consumers opens up in Washington?' Again: 'In this call to arms to defend the awakening prosperity of Texas, no one, whether or not he produces a single barrel of oil, should believe for a minute that he is not vitally affected if he is a Texan. His university, his school and road taxes, his ability to prosper as a retailer, a wholesaler or as an employe of any business of Texas will certainly suffer if oil prosperity does not continue within Texas borders.' Lastly: 'If anyone believes that Texas is incompetent to control its oil industry, he should remember that most of the trouble in reaching a proper control stage was caused by federal court decisions—not state court decisions—and when one realizes that wealth in terms of hundreds of millions invested in large oil companies can maintain permanent offices in Washington, similar to the great Standard Oil building at the nation's capital, to assist in getting what it wants where there is conflict between the great and the small in the oil business, there is only one argument. The six million people of Texas should take the position that the great can protect themselves but that the small producer in the desert sands of west Texas, fighting for permits and allowances as against his great competitor off-setting him, cannot carry such a fight on a permanent basis of his petty business to the city of Washington with any hope of fair representation.'

Terrific War to Be Launched on Bootleggers

By HUGH NUCENT FITZGERALD

Bootleggers in Texas and elsewhere—that is, manufacturers of moonshine or retailers of the same—have been given their warning. A force of nearly 4,000 will be mobilized before the passing of this week under command of a naval officer and a Kansas lawyer who is a dry but not a fanatic. In other words, he says he is not a fanatic dry.

In an effort to speed up the disposition of federal criminal cases the supreme court of the United States prescribed new rules of procedure effective Sept. 1 to apply after a verdict or plea of guilty. Criminals or rather violators of federal statutes, are reminded the revision was authorized by congress last March 8. This new rule is intended to prevent convicted persons from indefinitely postponing their commitment to the service sentences by furnishing bail. It specifically provides that bail shall not be allowed after conviction pending appeal unless it appears that the appeal involved is a substantial question which should be determined by an appellate court.

Tomorrow's Star Signals

Prepare your plans for the day early. It will be well to make a list of the clothes you will need for the summer. The evening is important. Use your mind for business planning. Signing papers is doubtful. Beware of trickery.

The professions best suited to Capricorn people (Dec. 22-Jan. 20) are among the following: Bankers, Financiers, Realtors, Insurance Agents, Merchants, and Buyers.

TOMORROW'S BIRTHDAYS

You will encounter difficulties through your profession, parents or elderly people from Sept. 28 through Nov. 26. Your partner can be of assistance to you during the fore part of February, 1935, if you will agree not to overspend. June 21 is a good day for dealing with the opposite sex. Be cautious on May 21. Your mind will be very active this year, but you will be inclined to be pessimistic.

mer and when doing so was sitting nearer the crowd, and the editor was spending most of his time in the kitchen some distance from the orchestra, it could easily be understood why the editor could not see beyond Bill Wallace, and thus conclude that the entire orchestra was somewhat off color.

"W. J. Armstrong has been keeping Bill Wallace in the field so much that any person that had travelled as far as the editor had, could easily make as honest a mistake as the editor made. Notwithstanding this, however, we feel that the editor should make proper explanation to Messrs. Schaefer and the others."

"One Who Was There."

Now the most difficult thing about that letter for my mind to accept is the opening sentence. Since having been associated with the directors and most of the stockholders in the club, I am unable to see how the boys could be humiliated by anything, much less by any statement that Messrs. Hittson, Schaefer, et al, were colored. It appears to me that Ernest, Harry and the rest of the very accomplished orchestra should be the ones to come to the Daily News and demand a retraction of the news article that put them in the wrong racial category, and let me explain that I wasn't even in town when the thing happened. But none of them came around, and I suppose they were not incensed or hurt by the account.

I am inclined to believe, however, that my complainant is wrong about the cause for Bill's enviable coat of sustenance. I am told that W. J. Armstrong has lost all control over Wallace since the latter took up gardening, and that the well-turned appearance of Wally's epidermis is due to vegetables and not oil.

At any rate, regardless of how it came about, I stand corrected, and offer public apologies to the humiliated feelings of the country club directors and, through them, to the orchestra.

Nature and Human Nature

"My wife's gone to the country. Hoory! hoory!" may be meant for a man's song of freedom, but might appropriately be an unselfish man's rejoicing for his wife's well-earned rest. To the country is where I

Through the Editor's Spectacles

A fortune awaits the chemist who invents a slick aspirin. A drug so indispensable to this neurotic world of ours ought to slide down the gizzards easily, certainly without scraping the esophagus and creating the uncomfortable feeling that it has lodged halfway down where no amount of dry convulsion of the Adam's Apple will dislodge it. A pharmaceutical engineer who accomplishes this improvement will be a universal benefactor. Just think of the millions of aspirins that travel down the throats of the world every day! And just think of the enormous relief that such an advance in medical preparation would bring!

I am in receipt of a complaint about something I did not do but for which I must bear the blame, since one must be charitable about society editors who fill in at the news desk when the editor goes to a Rotary convention. The communication is unusual, for the reason that it generously undertakes, in the same lines with the complaint, to explain away any cause of complaint.

Says it: "To 'Speers': 'The directors and stockholders of the Cisco Country Club felt very much humiliated when your article came out stating that a "colored orchestra" played at the Country club party last Saturday night. 'In view of the fact that the editor of the paper was very much there in person, the first impression would be that there was no justification for the grossly erroneous mistake. Everyone there well knew that the music was furnished by Messrs. Schaefer, Hittson, Moyer, and others, home talent who did better than any outside orchestra could have done. 'In view of the fact that W. W. Wallace was pinch-hitting a good part of the time as the snare drum-

Madeline was pale and weary when she bade the crowd good night. Then she sat down to wait for her husband's return. She had few illusions about her marriage. Con had played the gallant to save her, with an intention of marrying her, really. Between herself and Renfro he had been catapulted into a publicity stunt that made a husband of him. Nevertheless, she argued, he need not insult her this way.

"You've got to believe that." "If you loved me nothing could have kept you away from me last night," she said. He took her hands and pulled her around, facing him. "Let's get this straight, Madeline. I never said I was crazy about you but I think you're a nice kid. I'm fond of you. You said you loved me and would take me just as I was. I'm no good at pretenses—and if I was I wouldn't make them. Too much of an effort. But there's no reason why we can't be happy together if you don't get those notions and jealousy in your head. Probably I'll make you a better husband than if I were mad about you. And I promise not to walk out on you again. Forgive me!" "Yes."

DAYLIGHT crept under the blinds, streaking a pattern of yellow on the strip of carpet beside her bed. It made gray and bleak the whitewashed walls of the stateroom and showed the girl's swollen eyelids, the tense lines about her mouth, and the bluish pallor of her face. Madeline rose, swaying dizzily, and stared at her reflection in the mirror. "My wedding night," she laughed grimly. "My wedding night! Well, the joke's on me! What a hag I look!" She bathed her face in cold water, opened her makeup box and proceeded to rouge her cheeks and want to go if I ever work hard enough to earn a rest. No doubt it seems ridiculous to the farmer and his wife, and possibly to his son and daughter, that anyone should talk of coming to the country for rest. But if he could associate country life with freedom from a daily grind, with some leisure to get his breath and to collect his thoughts and contemplate his surroundings, and with convenient means of getting away when he wanted to for a sight-seeing excursion or for certain cultural advantages, perhaps even the rural dweller would not ask for a better place to live than in a rural cottage amid a rural landscape.

I grew up on a farm and do not recall having any urge to hurry away from it except as called by the work I was trying to do. I have never got very far away from it. If some one should tell me that there is where I ought to be today I would thank them for the compliment anywhere than amid rural scenes or among associates of community gatherings. When it becomes necessary to live in a city I like to develop a miniature farm on the back lot or at least in the backyard. As soon as I can I discover the nearest direction to the open districts where I can recover peace and tone whenever needed. "Rural aid," "rural schools," "rural churches," and "community life," are some of the terms of sociology that describe certain problems which indicate the importance of country life in any scheme for national welfare. Modern conveniences and ideals have reached rural communities too. Improved machinery, roads, schools, and organizational life are among their benefits from present day progress. Social leaders awake to the seriousness of a growing movement to the city with the results that grow out of such a congestion of population.

The attempt to check this flow has not been unwise prohibition, but wise promotion that seeks a greater attractiveness of and a greater interest in rural life. The solution of some of our economic, educational, moral, and religious problems will be helped a great deal by this plan. I do not know of any more important project that has appeared in the present relief plans than the one that is helping men to help themselves by putting them on tracts of land.—W. F. BRUCE

BEULAH POYNIER

He laughed and, bending, gave her a perfumery kiss. She clung to him, her moist lips pressed against his. "I love you so," she sobbed. "I love you so terribly, Con."

"But you mustn't. Too much love only causes heartache. I know from experience." She drew back with a sharp intake of breath. "Donna!" she cried. "Stop it. I was in love with her once, but that's dead. I wouldn't walk across the street to save her from perdition now. Just remember that when green devils get hold of you."

"You—hate her?" breathlessly. "I certainly am not going to waste affection on another man's wife." "Oh, Let's get back to the stateroom before the others are awake." "Maybe you can rustle some coffee. Gosh, I've got a head and I didn't drink anything."

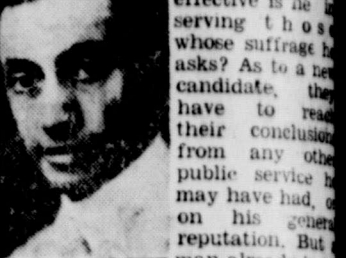

"The trip was an unusually long one and the circus train did not arrive at its destination until after 10 o'clock. Long before that hour, however, in spite of the festivities that had kept them awake so late, most of the performers were moving about, busy at chores. Lines of stockings and handkerchiefs hung across the cat aisle. Letters were written and clothing was mended. Band instruments were tuned and polished. Con, who always attended mass when it was possible, asked Madeline if she wanted to accompany him. She agreed eagerly, but when she added that they might have a priest marry them with a church ceremony, he frowned and said it could be done later when they played a longer engagement somewhere.

By one o'clock, when they returned from services, the tents had been raised and Con stroled off to inspect his care of cats. While the men who cared for and fed the animals were to be trusted, Con never failed to visit them. An aching tooth, an ingrown nail or an irritating insect might cause his own death. The new Bengal tiger, in a cage alone, snarled viciously and Madeline, beside her husband, shrank back with a little cry of terror.

"Con laughed at her fears. 'The poor thing is nasty because she isn't used to confinement, and isn't she a beauty?' Don't believe I ever saw a handspan animal. Wait until you hear my sprit is broken, old lady," he added, leaning near the bars. "Don't do that!" Madeline rasped. "That's no way to begin," she said, turning to her. "The first thing you have to do is to conquer your own fear. I think we'll have your first rehearsal this afternoon." "Not today, Con! Wait until I'm not so nervous." "If I do there'll never be a rehearsal. The only way to overcome nervousness is to talk the devil between your teeth—now. Yes, after lunch we'll see how you can have in a cage of lions." Budget Loan Basis Saves Farmer Money

HOUSTON, May 11 — Farmers and livestock men in Texas who are borrowing from production credit associations are saving money on their production costs this season by obtaining their loans on a budget basis, according to figures released here by the production credit division of the Farm Credit administration.

The figures show that production credit associations in Texas, although only recently organized, closed about 2,040 loans amounting to approximately $440,000 during the month of March. Only $270,000 of this amount was paid out immediately to farmer-borrowers. The remaining $170,000 of this amount was reserved for the budget accounts of individual borrowers who will be paid the proceeds of their loans as they need it for production purposes during the season. Farmers who have arranged to obtain this $170,000 in future advances will not be charged interest on this money until they started using it. Interest on loans made by the production credit associations are payable when the loan is due. Loans now being made by the associations bear 1-2 per cent interest.

The farmer-borrower may apply for a loan to finance his production costs for the entire season and receive an approval for the full amount, but as a result of his anticipated approximate dates of his necessary expenses he is able to arrange for a series of payments to be made by the production credit association to take care of his production expenses as they arise during the season. He pays interest on each advance only for the length of time he actually has the money. Borrowing on a budget basis rather than obtaining all the money at the beginning of the season should ordinarily reduce a farmer's interest charges from 1-3 to 1-2.

of the oil and gas committee and activities. He will be chairman of the oil and gas group conference at the San Angelo convention.

Charles E. Coombes, lawyer of Stamford, succeeded Hamilton, being elected at the Abilene convention in 1930. Coombes is on the program of the sixteenth convention to address the public officials of west Texas at their luncheon, Tuesday, May 15. During the past year he has served as the chamber's legal adviser on public work applications served by the organization for west Texas political subdivisions.

Houston Harte, San Angelo publisher, was elected president at Lubbock in 1931. Harte launched the west Texas beautification program and has remained chairman of the activity since. At the convention in San Angelo he will discuss federal relief before the rehabilitation group conference as a member of the Texas Relief commission. He will also make the award in the second year beautification contest.

Wilbur C. Hawk of Amarillo, a publisher, was the thirteenth president, and was elected at the Sweetwater convention in 1932. He is heading his city's delegation to the San Angelo convention which is seeking the 1935 convention for Amarillo. Since his election as a director from Amarillo in 1930 he has been active in the organization's affairs.

REGAINED APPETITE AND WEIGHT WITH KELLOGG'S ALL-BRAN

Cereal Relieved His Constipation

If you are a sufferer from headaches, loss of appetite and energy, sleeplessness, or any other of the frequent effects of constipation, read this enthusiastic letter from Mr. McIntyre:

"For a long time my system was not in very good working order. But since eating Kellogg's ALL-BRAN, I have regained my appetite and my lost weight. And my system is in good working order. Kellogg's ALL-BRAN sure does the trick." Mr. J. A. McIntyre, 160 Ruscomb St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Tests show Kellogg's ALL-BRAN provides the "bulk" needed to relieve ordinary constipation. It also contains vitamin B and iron for the blood.

You'll enjoy this delicious and healthful ready-to-eat cereal. Serve it with milk or cream—or use often in cooking.

Just eat two tablespoonfuls daily. Chronic cases, with each meal. If not relieved this way, see your doctor.

Kellogg's ALL-BRAN is all bran with only necessary flavoring added. It contains much more needed "bulk" than part-bran products. Made by Kellogg in Battle Creek.

Have You Seen the Frigidaire '34?

End your refrigeration worries the modern electrical way!

The safe preservation of foods, according to food chemists and medical authorities, require a temperature below 50 degrees... constantly maintained.

Modern Electrical Refrigeration assures this necessary low temperature... automatically. When the temperature in your Electric Refrigerator rises to 50 degrees, the freezing unit is automatically turned on... when it has been brought down to the correct level, the unit automatically switches off.

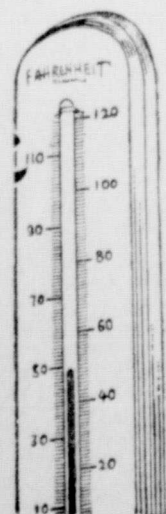

Moderate first cost and low operating expense are added considerations suggesting the immediate purchase of a new model Frigidaire.

The Frigidaire '34 operates quietly and with amazingly small amount of current, has automatic ice tray release, automatic defrosting and many other important features.

This is the "Electrical Age. A Frigidaire will be another step to your All-Electric Kitchen.

Your increased use of electric service is billed on a surprisingly low rate schedule and adds only a small amount to your total bill.
