BANK DEPOSITS UP

The great increase in bank deposits in three of Texas largest cities since June 30, a year ago, is cited by President Law of the American Bankers association as indicative of restored confidence of the public in the banking institutions. The increase in the deposits of the banks of Houston, Dallas and Fort Worth totaled more than $121,000,000 between June 30, 1933, and June 30, 1934, the date of the last bank call. Speaking of the increase, President Law pointed out that "it is a little unusual for deposits to show an increase at this time of the year," when there is ordinarily a seasonal decline due to the withdrawal of funds for vacation trips. June 30, he said, is generally the low mark for bank deposits throughout the country. No doubt that history was taken into consideration in the issuance of the call. It should assure the compilers of recovery statistics of the minimum

A comparison of the statement of the Cisco First National bank issued in response to the March 5, 1934, call and of that issued subsequent to the June 30, last, call reveals that the resources of the bank increased over the By HUGH NUGENT FITZGERALD, were enacted by the congress of the | mond Hamilton, who escaped with versist that the resources of the bank increased over the period. The increase was not great, but it substantiates locally what President Law encouragingly pointed out in relation to the banking situation in the larger cities. The bank's resources, as published through the columns of this paper, totaled on March 5, $918,568 plus. On June 30, they were $921,528 plus. Deposits were about $1,000 greater on the later date. Between June 30, 1933, and June 30, 1934, the Cisco bank's deposits increased $198,684.74, a ratio greater than that for the large city banks.

In this period of industrial unrest, a condition some ob. the 18th amendment. He made the there shooting blowholes in all the servers declare to be a concomitant of recovery, it is interesting to note the entire absence of conflict between the maning to note the entire absence of conflict between the management and employes of the Humble company. The same is true of many concerns, whose management-employe relationships have been established upon a basis of recognized mutuality of interest, but the Humble situation is particularly noticeable here because of proximity and because Cisco feels it has a more or less proprietary interest in a large section of the vast industrial community which the name Humble covers. It is a very simple matter to convincingly that the so-called wisest financiers and economists the republic had known in its history from day to day detailed the business prospects of the business prospects of the nation. Thomas B. The Humble management-employe relationship in its present aspect is the product of the application of 20 principles defined over a period of 14 years of consciously striving toward a closer cooperation between the two groups, These 20 principles, published in the latest edition of the Lubricator, the Humble company's official periodical, plainly show that they are based, not merely upon an opportunity for the employe to be considered a part of the company, but upon the outright recognition that he is a unit, and an important unit, of the company. Shortsighted policies, usually encouraged by monopolies or boom conditions which put no premium upon service, often regard the personnel of a company as just so much of the machinery. The social result of this attitude is the same as the results of this social regimentation against which a political cry is being raised at this time, while the waste of human interest and human energy is appalling. The thousands of men and women who make up the personnel, management and employe, of the Humble form the company's most valuable resource, as the 20 principles upon which its industrial house is ordered appear to recognize. Some of these, which go beyond the guarantees stipulated in recovery legislation and embody advanced features of the social insurance projected for the continuance of the New Deal, are:

"Health supervision by a competent medical staff.

'Payment of sickness benefits after one year's service. Opportunity for special training to qualify employe for better work, with standard system of keeping records of service performed.

"Promotion according to ability demonstrated and length of service. The success of our company requires that ability be recognized and rewarded.

A letter from Frank Langston arrived at the editorial desk this morning. Frank went to Waco this summer, and between the Wac News-Tribune and Baylor university he seems to have his hands full. A forty-four week under the editorial direction of Frank Baldwin, Wacc editor, is no man's idea of a snan o I hear; but Frank has added to that task four full courses at Baylor 11 She was tried Three are a full schedule, so he writes. Included in his educational duties are the job of grading psychology papers for one class supervision of the Brooks hall office for an hour and a half a day.

> Another Cisco youth with a yen for writing things about people has staked out a job afield. He is Richard (Dick) West who has sign. ed on with Millard Cope, of the Sweetwater Reporter. Dick, you remember, graduated at Texas university last spring, completing a course in journalism during which he served as instructor in charge of the laboratory of the department of journalism. The laboratory correspondents to the city room of real life journalism.

Dick will begin his duties within two or three weeks, I understand, meanwhile taking a final fling at freedom by going to Chicago for a glimpse of the World's fair, and other places of interest. Beginning work upon a newspaper, or in any association with the highly infec tious printer's ink, is similar to marrying a wife you can't get rid of. It is fatal to every sane ambition and desire for peaceful life. Ideals the hope of a happy home, the anticipation of a blissful future of economic success are summarily dispos ed of, and the unfortunate victim of its virus can no more compose himself outside its uncertain glories and questionable successes than he can fly without mechanical He's got to be in the swim, cost what it may. And there, strange to say, he is supremely happy.

In one community where I worked there was an ex-hireling editor who had been fortunate enough to obtain a lucrative private business The business was pleasant, blessed with a beauty of commodity and atmosphere, and exempt from nervekilling rush and excitement. the poor fellow was like a fish in not water. He was entirely out of his element, and in spite of the calm character of his new profession, he had the jitters. Eventually, he disposed of the business and is

I don't mean to discourage in any way the ambitions of these youngsters, for there is in journalism a field of noble service to which the greatest minds and the greatest characters should be applauded to aspire. And I judge, also, that the ratio of the number who climb its higher rungs to the number who are content with menial service at its foot, is no less than the ratios in other professions. It's a great game, and some day some one will write another piece that will express given up or lost to achieve it. One of these boys may be that someone.

FIRST OF TENNESSEE VALLEY

Chairman of the Tennessee Valley

(Written for the Uinted Press) KNOXVILLE, Tenn., July 6 —The irst of the definite projects of the Tennessee Valley Authority is the generation and transmission of electric power. For some years the great power development at idle. It now is the policy, to put that power to work and give it greater value with additional dams, and connecting transmission lines.

The value of a power project is in general the value of the power that can be furnished steadily throughout the year. With the completion of the Norris dam, a storage reservoir with a capacity of 3,600,000 acre feet, will be created. Wheeler dam, about 15 1-2 miles above Wilson dam at Muscle Shoals, will provide supplemental storage in a lake about 100 square miles in area.

War Measure Wilson dam was undertaken as war measure. Its completion after the war was opposed by those who insisted that the generation and distribution of power should be solely a private industry. Finally Wilson dam was completed, and then it lay almost idle for six years while a contest was fought out in congress between the advocates of public and those of private generation and distribution of power. Twice congress passed bills for the public operation of the Wilson dam power plant, but each time the bill was vetoed by the president. Finally President Franklin D. Roosevelt proposed his gener-al program of public generation and transmission of power as a part of the Tennessee Valley Authority program. One of his aims was to prepare a "yardstick" of public ownership with which to compare the costs of private ownership.

When the river is very low, there is water enough for only 30,000 horsepower there. By building additional dams, a vast storage reserveir will be formed which will reg. uiate the flow and also produce

Don't Suffer From Heat!

You can now enjoy cooking in cool comfort through the summer heat. The new Hotpoint insulated over uses all the heat for cooking. The heat is not dissipated to give your kitchen an oven temperature. The Hi-Speed Calrod unit is so constructed that the cooking utensil rests directly on the burner, thereby losing practically none of its heat over the room. The Hotpoint oven is automatic, which releases time for many leisure hours.

Through the hot summer months your kitchen can be cool with an Electric Range installed. Investigate today!
