BOISE, Idaho, Sept. 7 — The New Deal has brought a "prune deal" to Idaho this year, according to Henry McBirney, president of the Idaho Prune Growers' association. Marketing regulations now in effect establish the following prices below which no prunes can be sold by local dealers:

$3.25 on suitcases.
$.75 on faced lugs.
$.75 on jumble half bushels.

$.75 on four-basket crates.
The local Idaho dealer and shipper is tied hand and foot to maintain this market for the grower, McBirney said, and it is up to the grower to see that it is lived up to. If the grower sells at a lower price to outside sources, he can make it possible for some organization to wreck the entire set-up.

"Show Down" In Textile Strike Seen

There are indications that the textile strike will be made the battleground for a "show down" between labor and capital upon the New Deal theory of industrial relationship. The textile mills, unlike the automobile industry, are in a position to stand a siege. Indeed, the strike gives them opportunity to reduce surplus inventories that had been a source of concern. They will be able to come to grips with the labor element on a long-time basis and reap the benefits of higher prices with savings in labor costs by reason of the walkout. Surplus production under the codes has been a problem in the industry, it is said. Markets did not respond as rapidly as production costs mounted by reason of increased wages and employment. That was natural. Something must lead out, and in this instance it was wage costs, which is contrary to the usual history of recoveries according to the manufacturers. The strike gives opportunity to liquidate surplus products through market channels, it is explained, so that the mill owners are not as bad off as might be expected.

On the other hand, the textile workers have an ace of their own. Idle, they can depend upon federal relief to sustain them as they prosecute a fight for shorter hours and higher wages. This sustenance gives them a support that they have not had in previous periods of industrial disturbances and consequently emboldens strike leaders to demand the utmost. At the same time it places a potent influence in the hands of the government to persuade labor to modify its stand if the time comes when the administration regards that as necessary to an adjustment.

There is no doubt that conditions in the textile industry, speaking of wages and hours, should be much better. There is no doubt, also, that these conditions must be governed by the markets and the prosperity that the industry enjoys. There is a middle ground whereupon both labor and capital can meet to the best mutual advantage and that ground should be found. Neither element can long exist at the other's expense.

Man Must Work To Live

Rural rehabilitation as one means in a program for restoring families on relief rolls to self-supporting status is beginning to receive emphasis in this county. W. P. Wood, district farm rehabilitation director and L. L. Hooker, Cisco relief administrator, yesterday explained features of the program at the News office.

Repair of tenant houses and "grub-staking" of relief subjects to the equipment and the supplies necessary to begin operations on a small tract of land are items of the plan. The relief administration will provide a team, chickens, a brood sow, one or more milk cows, feed and equipment necessary to produce a crop. Those offered this form of relief and refusing it will not be admitted to the relief rolls for further assistance at public expense.

The theory is the doctrine that must be put into emphatic practice if the restoration of the millions of relief subjects to self-dependence and self-respect is brought about. Even in this advanced day, the doctrine of self-help is the only sound doctrine upon which citizenship may be built. The early Romans experienced the undermining influences of free corn in a degeneration of the stern fibre of republican citizenship that led to monarchy.

The same prospect confronts any people who encourage a large element to live at the expense of another, no matter whether by direct gift or by illegal and immoral practices, such as crime and the treachery of the class which controls the accumulation of wealth. Men and women, no matter how advanced, how intricate or how luxurious their civilization, must work to live.

Putting Italian Women In Their Place

Mussolini is contemplating plans for taking Italian women out of jobs and putting them where he says they belong—at the business of raising new citizens. Il Duce has a population goal of 60,000,000 inhabitants for Italy by 1950. He has been disappointed by the current rate of increase however. Italy now has about 43,000,000 people, and statistics on births and deaths project but a slight inflation of this figure by the year set.

The ambitions of Il Duce can argue but one thing. Italy is already supporting a population as large as its resources can conveniently maintain. Increase in this number means an expansion that will elbow other peoples out of the way and establish a predominant Italian race over a large area of the Mediterranean where it is evident that Mussolini seeks to make Italy supreme. That purpose means future war, for population pressure inevitably results in conflict when it fails to overrun and absorb the peoples with whom expansion brings it in contact. Mussolini's recent declaration anent war leaves no doubt in mind about the motives that actuate the dictator. Italy, to his mind, has a large place to fill in the map of southern Europe and it must have the population with which to make itself a power both in war and peace to achieve that destiny.

HOME, SWEET HOME!

Texas Topics

By RAYMOND BROOKS

AUSTIN, September 7.—James V. Alford, nominee for governor, is giving intensive effort to setting up a new democratic party organization in accord with the state's new deal. This means stripping the last vestige of the old Ferguson influence from party control; but remarkably, it embodies this result while healing some of the past discord, rather than rubbing fresh sores. Alford has gone about the job with veteran skill, although it is new to him. From the day of his nomination, he has been consulting with democratic leaders in various sections, and carefully studying, day by day, the steps to be taken at the Galveston convention of building the party anew from its lowest foundations. It is the privilege of a new administration to name the state executive committee and to take charge of party machinery. This year, in addition, Alford and his friends will name—have already, in effect—named liaison officer with the national party administration. Mr. Ferguson's retirement in favor of Vice President Garner recognized an accomplished fact: That Texas' chief leader in national affairs will be its official spokesman in national party matters.

Key men of the state's new deal will be made executive committee men. The influence of the party will be aligned with the administration to cooperate with the law-making body in a spirit of progressive action. It is fair to say that, including the administration party leaders, and the legislature, the dominant forces in Texas now will be overwhelmingly against any of the loose radicalism, the destructive revolutionary proclivities, sometimes carelessly associated with a progressive movement.

Claud C. Westerfeld, a newcomer to Texas politics, has been named senator for the key district of Dallas. He won the nomination in a distinctive upset of the political dope-bucket at Dallas. Rep. Sarah T. Hughes only woman member of the present house, and one of its best lawyers, might likely have made the senate race, except that it was generally agreed Sen. George C. Perl, able member of the present body, was sure ofrenomination. But Westerfeld is in; and serving the second largest city of Texas, he will have the opportunity of great influence, as he convinces his colleagues of his capabilities. He will have a high mark to shoot at: Sen. Perl generally has been acknowledged the hardest-working member now.

fall mornings, when the sky is leaden, the breeze from the north, and a quilt uncommonly comfortable, do not invite a person to stand shivering in a dripping bathing suit and look at the cold mists rising from the swimming pool. So J. C., whom Phil Pettit once introduced as a railroad magnate (because he draws business) has resigned from the regiment of brave spirits who dare lose sleep to gain vigor. Earlier in season when it was pleasant to be wet, his broad figure could be seen every morning patiently plodding its way around the shattered mirror of the big pool.

Now he has quit. Ugh! And he shivered at the thought! These mornings aren't made for swimming.

But Bold Spirit Jim Collins continues to think so. Collins still goes, dog-swimming, twice around each morning, gazing at you with great solemnity over the succession of wavelets that tap him lightly on the chin.

BEACH CLUB GIRL

BEGIN HERE TODAY
BOOTS BARRON, 18 and pretty, is snubbed by wealthy SILVIA RIVERS. Due to Silvia's gossip, Boots is forced to resign from the Juniors. Both girls live in Larchbrook, fashionable New York suburb.
Hurt and humiliated, Boots accepts the attentions of Russ' L.N.D. swimming instructor, MISS. RABBIT returns from a trip out of town and Boots dreads her mother's hearing what has happened. On impulse she marries Russ, who takes her to live with his brother and his wife. Russ has no job and apparently no ambition. Soon Boots begins to see him as he is.
Russ goes to Miami, promising Boots he will send for her later. She gets a job in a big department store. After a few months she has an affair with DENIS FENWAY, young author.
NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY CHAPTER XXVI
BOOTS faced Denis Fenway across the expanse of a white cloth. There were drooping pink roses in a silver vase but Denis had set this vase aside so that he could see her better. He was smiling. What a nice smile he had, she thought idly! And yet she hadn't in the least liked him when she had first met him. He had seemed so superior—"snooty," she had called him to herself.
"So you're going back to work tomorrow?"
"I want—I'm terribly anxious to pay you back," she said, her voice thickening treacherously. She winked back the tears—it seemed to her that she was such a fool lately, always weeping about nothing at all. But Denis seemed not to notice, she was glad to observe. He was snubbing a cigaret out in the heavy hobnail ash tray.
"I wish you wouldn't worry so much about that." His matter-of-factness was heartening. He never asked questions; that was one of the nice things about him. Other people did—the nurse, even the doctor, Mrs. Mooney and the girls at the store. Everyone was so curious about her affairs. Not Denis. He accepted things as they were. He knew that she had married Russ, had broken with her family, Lois hadn't told him. He hadn't seen Lois. He had told her that Lois and Dr. Hart were having a year in Germany. So he hadn't known a thing about—about her marriage.
"But you saw me that night, coming out of the Willowmere," Boots persisted. "You—I know you weren't thinking pleasant things about me that night."
The veil that sometimes came over Denis' dark eyes shut down at that moment. She was sorry she had said the words. She had a feeling she had hurt—perhaps offended him.
"Yes, I saw you." He looked away and his air of cold aloofness hurt her. There was always something puzzling about Denis. When you warmed to him, in simple friendliness, he was very likely to freeze toward you in this fashion. You didn't know what you had said or done that was wrong.
"Yet she persisted, determined to turn the knife in the wound, determined to know what his reactions were.

"It was the next day we—we were married," she said faintly. "Russ got me a room there. He was staying with his people in Astoria."
His warm smile flashed over her again. It was as if the sun had come out. There was something almost apologetic in his manner now.
"As if you needed to explain that," he said. But she was glad, just the same, that she had explained. The veil fled from Denis' eyes. There was a warm, friendly note in his deep voice again.
Glory and Lou had accepted the facts of Russ's death with their usual apathy, rousing themselves only to ask if Russ had left any insurance. He hadn't. Denis had paid the bills and Russ rested in a little Florida churchyard. Some day, Boots promised herself, she would go to his grave. She could not bear to think of Russ, so full of life, being stifled forever.
She was breakfasting this particular December Sunday with Denis at the Lafayette. French waiters moved deftly to and fro, absorbed in the intricacies of their service. Denis had ordered for them both: eggs Benedict, mushrooms, crisp triangles of buttered toast in a twisted napkin, pots of steaming coffee.
Boots was thinner, was definitely more mature. Her pale hair made a fluid halo underneath her old blue hat. The collar of her blue coat framed her face.
Tomorrow there would be the salesbook at Lacy's again, the thousand questions and the pushing, frantic, buying women; the scent of cheap perfume and face powder and human bodies, all jumbled together.
Denis had moved into the apartment. Boots had not seen it yet. She was to see it this afternoon when, Denis said lazily, lighting his cigaret, "some people" were coming to tea.
"Why not come right along with me now?" Denis was arguing lightly. "Why not come back to the apartment and help me to choose some flowers on the way and see that the cushions are plumped up properly, and tell Hong how hot the water must be before the tea is made?"
But Boots was adamant. No, she protested, she must get back to her room. She had a thousand things to do before tomorrow. So Denis put her into a taxi and, having paid the driver, stood on the corner, baredheaded in the brilliant December sunshine, as she drove away.
"He's... oh, I don't know—nice." Boots murmured, inelegantly, peering back at him through the square of glass in the rear of the cab. Already, she thought, Denis had forgotten her. The lights had changed from red to green for cross-town traffic and his tall, lean, elegantly dressed figure lost itself in the drift of pedestrians passing by. Ah, but why shouldn't he forget her the instant she passed from his sight, she thought, with a gasp and searing humility. She was a stray kitten he'd been kind to pick up and saved from destruction. Yes, Denis with his doctor and alert nurse, his expensive medicines, had saved her life; there was little doubt of it. She mustn't expect any more from him after that.

Why was it then that a certain dreariness descended upon her spirit when she left the taxi at the foot of Mrs. Mooney's stone steps? She had a pleasant afternoon ahead of her instead of loneliness. Denis' fire and the chairs in the Van Sclivers' dining room, about which he had already told her, waited to receive her.
SHE deliberately shook off her mood. This tea was no ordeal to be feared—rather a pleasant interval to look forward to on a Sunday. But would Denis be the same when surrounded by a dozen other people, all strangers to her? Wouldn't she be shy and gauche and awkward among all the clever people?
She hadn't heard from her mother and father nor from Lois, although there had been a pleasant notice of Russ's death in the New York papers. Maybe they had seen it or maybe they were waiting for her to make the first move. Well, she wouldn't do that. Wasn't she, she had her pride. She would stand on her own feet.
She climbed the stairs wearily to her own room. Denis had already established a more comfortable chair there. It was one he had had in storage, he said. She would be doing him a service to give it a work before she had realized the value of it. She thought he had gone into a shop and bought it for her, after investigating the tag-springs of Mrs. Mooney's furniture.
The affair of the $10 bill of Lacy's had been cleared up. She wasn't sure whether it had been found or not but she learned Denis had seen young Mr. Ellis. They had been classmates at college together. Bliss had been evasive when she had asked about the money but had implied the affair was settled once for all.

Well, her life stretched before her now, lonely and uncomplicated. She had been a wife. Now she was a widow. Russ had died before they had really known much about each other. Bravely she faced the fact that their marriage would have been a success, ever. Their aims and ambitions were too far apart. She had not been the best of wives. She had realized that. She was sad; a dark mood settled upon her. What had she done with tea parties and smiling faces and the light laughter of people on a Sunday afternoon? She was a stray cat that Denis had picked up and been kind to. She mustn't impose upon him further. Oh, she would telephone him and tell him she couldn't come after all. She couldn't face all those people, widen her eyes and smile while this canker ate at the core of her soul...
Mrs. Mooney tapped.
"Mister Fenway just telephoned and he says the car'll be waiting downstairs for you at five. You oughtn't to walk, you don't so strong and all... Dear, kind Denis! She must lose him. He was her only friend."

required to bring report cards.

There will be no formal opening exercises, Supt. Cluck said, but parents and friends of the school have a cordial invitation to be present for the enrollment, especially parents of new or beginning students. It is hoped to have a program of some character Friday, he said.

Assignments of teachers have not yet been completed, the superintendent said. Announcement of these was promised Monday afternoon.

No word had been received this morning from Dallas where E. C. Pennington, employed as teacher of commercial subjects in the high school, was in a hospital critically injured in an automobile accident yesterday morning. He was en route to Cisco at the time of the accident. No announcement could be made concerning the conduct of the commercial department, plans for which Mr. Pennington's injury momentarily had disrupted, Mr. Cluck said.

Changes and Additions

Additions to the courses and changes in organization which are expected to improve the operation of the system over last year were enumerated as follows:

- 1—Physical education course added to high school curriculum.
- 2—Public school music added to grade schools.
- 3—Course in diversified occupation added to high school for benefit of students not anticipating vocational training elsewhere.
- 4—Vocational agriculture and home economics courses offered students in sixth and seventh grades, instead of being confined to high school.
- 5—Courses in Latin restored and courses in commercial law and vonational guidance added to high school curriculum.

6—Addition of teacher to relieve crowded conditions in grammar school and west ward.

7—Reorganization and assignments which place all high school teachers as instructors in the fields in which they majored in college and university.

The increase in the faculty and the reorganization, it was explained, will make it unnecessary this year to dismiss the first grade at 12:30 p. m. in order to release teachers needed for work in other departments.

Another improvement, expected to have a healthful influence on discipline and routine, is the addition of a vice principal to the high school. C. C. Duff, formerly superintendent of Moran schools, has been employed for this post as well as to teach science.

CISCO - BRECK GAME WILL BE HOME-COMING

BRECKENRIDGE, Sept. 7 — Memories of boom days in Breckenridge when $3.50 oil gushed over derricks tops will be revived here October 26 when the hundreds of oil operators and workers who lived here during those stirring days but have now drifted to other places will be invited to return for a homecoming.

A joint luncheon of the Breckenridge high school athletic council and the school board representatives Thursday noon endorsed the project which had previously been proposed by the Lions club.

Big Football Game

Jake Sandefer, Jr., presenting the matter to the council proposed that October 26, the date of the Cisco-Breckenridge football game and the day following the dates for the big event. His suggestion met the unanimous approval of the council, and was to be discussed further at today's luncheon of the Lions club.

Statewide publicity will be given the event in an effort to attract as many Breckenridge boomers as possible.

Tentative plans call for a band contest for all west Texas a rodeo and possibly a softball game as additional features.

May Light Field

Considerable discussion of a proposal to light the football field was held, winding up with appointment of a committee comprised of Jake Sandefer, Jr., Jimmy Brewster and W. G. Howell to determine the cost and recommend a finance plan.

Coach Shotwell, in opening the meeting with Acting Superintendent John F. Bailey presiding, declared this year's football team will be far ahead of that of last year. He said the chief problem he faces is lack of sufficient reserve material. He said new rules liberalizing the use of the forward pass will speed up the game.

Denton Scheduled

Denton high school, usually one of the strongest teams in North Texas, has been scheduled to play here Friday, November 16. Shotwell announced. Tentative arrangements had been made with San Antonio Tech, but when it was learned Denton was available, the San Antonio game was dropped.

FRAZER, Mont., Sept. 7 — The Farmers and Merchants bank here closed for an excellent, if unique, reason. Shutting their doors for good, bank directors announced it was "on account of so little business."

Because he feels that Freddie Lindstrom now has the managerial beat out of his bonnet, Terry would like to bring the Pittsburgh outfielder back to the Giants, and use him at third base, where he formerly starred.

Billy Myers, for whom the Giants are reported to have given the Cardinals' Columbus branch $25,000 and two players, is to get a thorough trial at shortstop next spring. If he makes the hill, Travis Jackson will be switched to the far turn, where Stoney will go sooner or later in order to prolong his brilliant career.

Dean Worth $200,000

TERRY puts Dizzy Dean in a museum setting by declaring him to be worth $200,000. While the Giants would dig deep for Dean, his manager does not believe they could afford to pay what the Cardinals would ask were the Oklahoma man on the market.

"If the Cubs gave $125,000 for Chuck Klein, whom I never considered a great ball player, Dean is worth $200,000," remarked Terry.

The efficient guide of the Giants attributes the Dean brothers' difficulty with Frank Frisch and the St. Louis club to "too many bosses." Sam Brandon, Branch Rickey, and Frisch each has a say in the direction of the Red Birds.

Behind the Scenes in Washington

WASHINGTON.—The rat situation has become highly troublesome. It's one of those things that ought to be co-ordinated.

The Bureau of Biological Survey says 7,527,000 rats have been done to death in CWA and other campaigns this year in Georgia, Alabama and Texas and that the areas attacked will be free of rats for seven months.

It is very proud of its own new rat poison, made mostly of red squill, which it says killed 6,904,000, while traps got the rest. Incidentally, it estimated that the average rat does damage of $2 a year, so you can figure the saving.

But Dr. H. E. Haseltine of the U. S. Public Health Service throws cold water on the Bureau of Biological Survey by insisting that rats can't possibly be eradicated, because they're so prolific. The best you can do, he contends, is to keep them within bounds.

SISTER MARY'S RECIPES

BY MARY E. DAGUE
NEA Service Staff Writer

LORD SANDWICH one day being in a great hurry and not wishing to take the time to dine in the proper manner, asked his shocked butler for a slice of meat between two pieces of bread. The concoction was so satisfactory that the rest of the court followed his example and there have been sandwiches ever since, steadily gaining in popularity and variety.

A sharp knife and well creamed butter are essentials if neat, attractive sandwiches are to be made. Bread of firm even texture is important too but less so than the keenness of the knife and the softness of the butter.

Crusts are permissible on children's full meal sandwiches. Dainty party sandwiches should have the crusts removed. Avoid waste by cutting off the crust before slicing the bread.

Children love sandwiches cut in fancy shapes with cookie-cutters. Hearts, diamonds, half moons and animals. Open-face sandwiches are often cut in fancy shapes, too, and are nice on a tray of assorted sandwiches.

Following are fillings for many varieties of sandwiches.

Children's Luncheon Sandwich

One cup chopped cooked liver, 1-2 cup grated raw carrot, 1-8 teaspoon onion juice, 1-4 teaspoon salt, cream.

Combine liver which has been put through food chopper with grated carrot. Season with salt and onion juice and add enough cream to make moist. Put between slices of buttered whole wheat bread.

Salmon Sandwiches

One-half cup cooked salmon, 1 tablespoon lemon juice, 1-2 cup finely shredded leaf lettuce, cooked salad dressing.

Tomorrow's Menu

BREAKFAST: Cantaloupe, cereal, cream, shirred eggs, toast, milk, coffee.

LUNCHEON: Ham rolls filled with potato salad, baking powder biscuits, red raspberry preserves, milk, tea.

DINNER: Squash stuffed with creamed left-over meat, French fried potatoes, green peas, melon and grape fruit salad served with open-face combination sandwiches, deep dish apple pie, milk, coffee.

Remove skin and bones from salmon. Mash with lemon juice and add lettuce. Mix thoroughly and add salad dressing to make moist. Put between thin slices of white bread and butter.

Ham and Egg Sandwiches

One-fourth pound cold boiled ham, 4 tablespoons minced onion, 3 eggs, few grains pepper.

Trim fat from ham and use to cook filling. Cut meat in shreds and add with onion to well-beaten eggs. Season with pepper and pour into hot frying pan lightly greased with fat. Cook slowly, stirring, until consistency of scrambled eggs. Put between thin slices of buttered bread. This filling can be used either hot or cold and is good between toast or plain bread.

Combination Sandwiches

Four tablespoons peanut butter, 4 tablespoons cream cheese, 1-2 cup grated pineapple.

Combine ingredients, working them with a fork until well blended. Put between thin slices of buttered whole wheat bread. This mixture is splendid to pipe around the edge of open-face sandwiches, too.

HOOKS AND SLIDES

ST. LOUIS.—Bill Terry, seldom wrong, has an idea that Babe Ruth will manage the Yankees next season, with Colonel Ruppert paying Joe McCarthy $40,000 in fulfillment of the third and last year of his contract, and sending him away from there.

Terry makes it unanimous by asserting that the New York Americans would make a grave mistake in not retaining Ruth as a buy—er—show window, if nothing else.

But baseball men point out that Ruth, the pinch-hitter, quickly would take on the general dimensions of a barrel on stilts. In the last few years it has been difficult enough for the Bam to keep down to playing weight as a regular, and his figure hasn't been anything syphlike.

Dean Worth $200,000

TERRY puts Dizzy Dean in a museum setting by declaring him to be worth $200,000. While the Giants would dig deep for Dean, his manager does not believe they could afford to pay what the Cardinals would ask were the Oklahoma man on the market.

"If the Cubs gave $125,000 for Chuck Klein, whom I never considered a great ball player, Dean is worth $200,000," remarked Terry.

The efficient guide of the Giants attributes the Dean brothers' difficulty with Frank Frisch and the St. Louis club to "too many bosses." Sam Brandon, Branch Rickey, and Frisch each has a say in the direction of the Red Birds.

Cards Club to Beat

DEAN trouble or no, the Giants still figure the Cardinals as the outfit they have to beat.

The Giants recalled Hank Leiber and Phil Weintraub from Nashville to add momentum to their drive down the stretch, while the Cardinals, with their eight subsidiaries, sit still.

"The Cardinals hesitate about bringing reinforcements from Columbus or Rochester, clubs fighting for the pennant in their respective leagues," explains Terry.

"The Cardinals' losses are made up by what is earned in Columbus and Rochester."

Rickey's chain store system now is serving a purpose other than what it was cut out for. The children now support the parent, through sales as well as gate receipts.

When business conditions improve, if ever, Terry suggests that the St. Louis National League franchise be transferred to Detroit. Newark is the place for it, he adds, but the difficulty with that would be an unbalanced circuit.

Seeks Bartell, Lindstrom

TERRY is said to have offered the Phillies a half dozen players, including Johnny Vergez, Blondy Ryan, Frank O'Doul, Homer Peel and George Grantham for the peppy shortstop, Dick Bartell. Peel and Grantham went to Nashville as replacements for Weintraub and Leiber.

Terry is believed to have given up on Vergez, who is hitting only .210, and has to straighten up to throw. Ryan definitely is an all-America out. Terry tells you that O'Doul has slowed up, and no longer can play regularly.

Because he feels that Freddie Lindstrom now has the managerial beat out of his bonnet, Terry would like to bring the Pittsburgh outfielder back to the Giants, and use him at third base, where he formerly starred.

Billy Myers, for whom the Giants are reported to have given the Cardinals' Columbus branch $25,000 and two players, is to get a thorough trial at shortstop next spring. If he makes the hill, Travis Jackson will be switched to the far turn, where Stoney will go sooner or later in order to prolong his brilliant career.
