Back on the Little Fellow

In the hysteria for tax reduction, when in 1932 and 1933 homeowners and landowners rose in revolt, the legislature, instead of shifting the burden to natural resources or monopolies, rushed to submit to the voters a proposed constitutional amendment arbitrarily limiting taxes to be collected by the state for all purposes to $11.25 per capita per year.

That amendment will be voted on Nov. 6, and citizens are just now finding its promise misleading and its effect injurious instead of beneficial.

Study of this proposal has discovered these criticisms: Its benefits would go to the large taxpayers, and not the everyday small taxpayer.

It would protect monopolies that collect huge profits, and those who exploit natural resources, rather than the homeowners, who already has been given state tax exemption.

It would jumble state finances to a point where the ad valorem tax could not be cut, when fixed far in advance, and the limit would come on other forms of taxes.

It would withhold much school aid to the public school system; and thus force back the burden upon added local taxation which could be applied to land and homes and real property only, and where the homestead exemption would not save the small man from the levy.

It would seriously injure the University of Texas and A.M. college, whose available fund revenues are pledged to pay for their building programs, while the legislature would be forced to reach further into this fund than the present $400,000 a year, for running expenses.

The state already is two years behind with eleemosynary housing, and is suffering from it. This amendment would practically nullify all future efforts to provide requisite hospitals and ward buildings for the institutions.

It would bar the state from setting up new revenues to finance either the present relief bonds or future relief on one hand, or to finance an adequate centennial on the other.

Tax on Marble Machines

The legislature can pay for its new special session by passing a six-line law that will withdraw the special privilege of tax evasion now enjoyed by operators of marble and coin slot machines.

For more than a year, the operators of 20,000 to 30,000 of these marble machines have escaped all state taxation, due to mistakes of a former legislative session in its effort to levy an occupation license fee upon them.

Revenues would amount to at least $250,000 a year, all out of the profits of these coin-operated devices. Early in 1933 operators of some of these machines secured an injunction to stop the collection of state occupation taxes, they have had a free ride, so far as the state is concerned; and two sessions of the legislature have failed to remedy the discrimination that now exists in their favor.

The law was nullified because it was held to be unreasonable and discriminatory. Instead of a graduated tax on penny, nickel, dime, quarter and other machines, as apply in other sections of the law, it undertook to lay a flat rate upon the machines, regardless of the variations in the coins used to operate them.

Compt. George H. Sheppard's department's hands have been tied by the injunction, and the five minutes necessary for the legislature to have started the state again collecting the quarter of a million dollars a year has not yet been devoted to this end.

Those who debated whether the cost of the coming special session, dedicated to creating work and public improvements, might stand in the way of the call have suggested that perhaps Gov. Ferguson will ask revision of the marble machine tax law, so as not only to pay the whole cost of this session out of a tax on the profits of these machines, but would collect the state enough money to pay for a session each year.

Stone "newspapers" have been unearthed in the old Roman port of Ostia. All in all, the modern city room is perhaps more restful than a quarry.

"The functions of the citizen and the soldier are indivisible in the fascist state," says Il Duce. Right shoulder, balloons!

AUSTIN, Oct. 8.—Gov.-elect James V. Alfred had tendered the entire strength of the attorney-general's department to the senate today for the senate committee on education, and pledged his full cooperation to its work.

The committee now is working behind closed doors, not disclosing what it is doing in connection with the proposed tax-enforcement activity it will tackle first.

The state already is two years behind with eleemosynary housing, and is suffering from it. This amendment would practically nullify all future efforts to provide requisite hospitals and ward buildings for the institutions.

the report said, was the $866,961,942 total paid by the motoring public in 1932. The statement said the taxes have increased steadily each year from $202,000,000 in 1919. Even the billion-dollar total isn't complete, it said, because it did not include the income and property

The Clew of the Forgotten Murder

BEGIN HERE TODAY CHARLES MORDEN, reporter for The Blade, telephoned the newspaper a report of the death of EDWARD HILLINGBY, senior detective believed to have been killed by "CINCINNATI NELL LAMPTON, gangster. The owner, eight months pregnant, was FRANK B. CATHAY of Riverside, wealthy and prominent. It is thought to be headquarters on suspicion of driving while intoxicated. With him is a girl who says she is MARY BRIGGS, hitch-hiker. Both are released. Morden telephoned the facts to his newspaper. Next day the real 'cat' calls on HICK KENNY, city editor of The Blade. Cathay claims his reputation has been injured, and demands damages and a retrial. DAN BLEEKER, junior partner and publisher of The Blade, turned to Morden, his police reporter. "I'm putting someone else at your desk down at headquarters," he said. "You get busy and chase down every lead you can get on Frank B. Cathay. Dig into Cathay's life with a spade, and dig deep. There'll be plenty there that he won't want to have brought out—there always is. The trouble with men of his type is that they pose as being altogether too perfect. They put up a front that isn't human. When you get back of that front you find a lot of stuff that nobody knows about. You get busy and find out."

"You know," Mrs. Cathay said, "husbands would very frequently make fools of themselves if not for the restraining hand of a wife." Ethel West pulled the door behind her as she returned under office. "Sit down, Mrs. Cathay," Dan Bleeker said. "I wanted to see you about your husband," Mrs. Cathay said. "Yes, of course." "Oh, did you know I was going?" "No, but I naturally assumed that was what you wanted me about when my secretary told you were in the office." She squirmed about in her chair, settling herself in a slight posture of the shonky quick twist of her head. Her deep hazel eyes were smiling. "You know, Mr. Bleeker," she said, "husbands would very frequently make fools of themselves if not for the restraining hand of a wife." Bleeker surveyed the woman with a quick eye. "I'm a bachelor, myself," he said. She gave a low nervous laugh. "And," went on Bleeker, "can't you get down to business?" "My husband," she said, "is a man of very strong will." She paused and Bleeker said nothing. "At times he's quite impetuous. That is, in his rages, you know. He reaches some decision, and then he's too proud and obstinate to back up." She seemed to snuggle into her fur coat with a quick squint motion. Her head, tilted back, rested against the chair. Her eyes, as well as lips, smiled intimately at Bleeker. (To Be Continued)
