"Start where?" she asked. His face showed surprise. "Why," he said. "start home, of course." "Where?" she said.

"Home." She sucked in her breath, proparatory to making some swift statement, but received a warning glance from Mr. Happ.

"You feel all right?" be asked.

MILLICENT struggled to her feet. This man had the only bit of evidence which she had been able to salvage from the whole ghastly occurrence - the purse which had been substituted, a purse which contained much of the personal property of the one who had made the substitution. The things might not mean a great deal to a man, but, to a woman, the shade of powder used, the type of lipstick. the brand of perfume, meant . great deal. Millicent determined that this man would not again get out of her sight until she knew more about him.
