ROUGH BREAKING RAINS ARE COSTLY

NEARLY SCORE OF LIVES LOST IN TORNADOES

BULLETIN
BURKBURNETT, Tex., May 20. — J. V. Morton, believed to have perished when a Red river bridge collapsed Saturday, drowning 4 persons, returned to his home here today. He said he was caught on the Oklahoma side of the river when the bridge collapsed, and was unable to reach the Texas side because of high water until today.

By UNITED PRESS
The southwest today paid with nearly a score of lives and millions of dollars worth of crops and property for the boon of rain. Cloudbursts in four states, accompanied by tornadoes in Texas, broke an unprecedented drought, but left death and destruction behind. Floodwaters of the Red river and its tributaries buried thousands of acres of farm land, swept away homes and bridges and drowned seven persons in southwestern Oklahoma.

The Red river carried away a bridge at Burkburnett and with it five persons. At least three were drowned. The other two were rescued.

Tornadoes which struck nearly a dozen Texas points killed seven persons. The overflowing Brazos and Trinity rivers each claimed one life. Damage to buildings, bridges, and communications and utilities systems was in the millions of dollars. Damaged farms through water erosion was tremendous. Fields and pastures, virtually denuded by the drought and dust storms, shed the rain almost as fast as it fell, causing overburdened streams to leave their banks. As the flood receded the land was left furrowed and scarred, robbed of its rich top soil.

FAMILIES FLEE BEFORE OKLAHOMA FLOODS

Man's Greatest Restraint

Look around you, and you will see that the greatest restraint of the anti-social tendencies of men is fear, not of law, but of the opinion of their fellows.

Observe that the conventions of honor bind men who break legal, and moral, and religious bonds; and, while people endure the extremity of physical pain rather than part with life, shame drives the weakest to suicide.

Every forward step of social progress brings men into closer relations with their fellows, and increases the importance of the pleasures and pains derived from sympathy.

Huxley observed that we judge the acts of others by our own sympathies, and we judge our own acts by the sympathies of others, every day, and all day long, from childhood upward, until associations, as indissoluble as those of language, are formed between certain acts and feelings of approbation and disapprobation.

The result is, Huxley points out, "It becomes impossible to imagine some acts without disapprobation, or others without approbation of the actor, whether he be one's self or anyone else. We come to think in the acquired dialect of morals."

Thus an artificial personality, the "man within," is built up beside the natural personality. He is the watchman of society, charged to restrain the anti-social tendencies of the natural man within the limits required by social welfare.

Huxley terms this evolution of the feelings out of which the primitive bonds of human society are so largely forged, into the organized and personified sympathy we call conscience, the ethical process.

Do You Make Life Interesting?

People who find this world dull and uninteresting can generally trace the fault to themselves. If they only knew where to find them and how to look for them, they would find excitement and thrills aplenty, and not only on legal holidays, either. Usually it is the dull who find everything stupidly tedious.

Some lucky souls—their numbers are legion—get pleasure out of the most commonplace things of life. They make an exciting game of their work, whether it be mental or manual. Their hours of recreation are adventures. There is no ennui in their lives.

Educators have found it necessary to teach children in the public schools how to play. While this sounds paradoxical, it is the truth that millions of children do not know how to play nor what to play. This may explain why so many adults look upon life as an unpleasant duty.

Many obtain their daily ration of romance from the newspapers, with their human interest stories, stark realism, vital current history, and a record of the people who pass by. They show the progress of science and invention, and life in the factories, mills and offices, for humanity consists of countless groups, none of which know how the countless others live, but the doings of all are of interest.

Faithful in Church Attendance

A Cleveland lawyer makes the proud boast that he has attended church for twenty-five years without ever missing a service, which makes 1,300 consecutive Sundays. More than that, he declares that he has never been late to the service.

He was almost late several times, he admits. Once he had to walk three miles through deep snowdrifts. Once he fell asleep on the street car and had to take a taxi back to the church. Once he forced himself to attend as usual on a Sunday morning when his son lay dying.

That is taking church very seriously. But is not necessarily a unique record. There are far more people in America who are serious and faithful about their religion and their church-going than would be supposed from casual observation of the every-day crowd.

Feminine Cleanliness a Vital Force

Says a prominent American physician, giving health advice:

"Get the women behind you whenever you want to carry out a successful health program. Men don't know how to keep clean. Women realize the importance of cleanliness and will fight for any measure which safeguards their homes and children. Every important health campaign put over in this country has been put over by women."

Every male will have to admit the truth of that. What boy or man doesn't know from experience how it feels to have a woman not only "behind him" but after him, imperatively demanding that he keep clean? Women, as the disgusted manservant says in Locke's story "Septimus," are "always awashin'" of "emselves in hot water," and worse still, making their menfolk do the same. Now they insist on carrying this pernicious activity into their community housekeeping, and men look on admiringly even while they suffer.

HONORS MRS. ROOSEVELT

GALLIPOLIS, O., — The name of the new community center at Red House on Kanawha, a few miles removed from this city, will be changed to Eleanorville, honoring the wife of President Roosevelt. Mrs. Roosevelt sponsored the community settlement and visited it several times during the construction period. Nearly all the 150 homes are now occupied.

OFFERS EMPTY DISH

SOUTH HAMPTON, N. H. — Rover, a Scotch collie dog, has developed a few habits of his own. When Gilman Smith, the owner, fails to feed the dog enough food, it takes its plate in its mouth and presents the empty dish to its master. Rover also has acquired the habit of ringing the door bell with a paw when ready to come in.

Composite Picture of Opinion on Government Spending

UNDER THE DOME AT AUSTIN

AUSTIN, May 20 — Gov. James V. Alfred has not changed his belief that young men give zip to government and get things done.

No pensioners fill the state offices which he fills by appointment. It may be because the governor has grown up politically in a younger generation.

His latest appointee, who will become state banking commissioner on September 13, is now but 33 years old. Half of Irvin McCreary's years, however, have been spent as a bank executive at Gatesville.

The governor's other recent appointment was to a place usually reserved for elderly men. But when a vacancy occurred on the bench of the state supreme court, Richard Critz, still in his fifties, was named.

Youngest of the governor's appointees is Gerald Mann, Secretary of state who was appointed at 24. R. B. Anderson was named tax commissioner at 25.

R. C. Waters was appointed insurance commissioner at 39 and F. E. Nichols, state labor commissioner at 39. Adjutant General Carl Nesbitt is 38.

Politically, the governor also looks to youth for his aides. Waters was his campaign manager.

Paul Wakefield is a valued young political advisor and keeps the governor in close contact with older men in the national administration.

Myron Blalock, Marshall, at 40 was the governor's pick for chairman of the state democratic committee, and Vann Kennedy, 40, his choice for democratic executive committee secretary.

R. W. Calvert of Hillsboro was the governor's choice for speaker of the house at 30, but lost to the more seasoned Coke Stevenson.

Some of the Texas representatives have a feeling that the senate "city-slicked" them on the final appropriation of $50,000 for contingent expenses of the legislature.

After the $50,000 had been voted, the senate ordered the board of control to install an addition passenger elevator in the east end of the capitol and charge it up to the contingent expense.

The senate occupies the east wing of the capitol; the house has the west side of the building which will have no special elevator.

Gov. Alfred has yielded so frequently to the numerous requests that he designated "weeks" that he mixed up the dates on his proclamations boosting two separate tomato weeks.

Tomato seasons are different in different parts of the state, so two weeks had to be proclaimed.

In the proclamation for one, the same dates were used that had been used for "Insurance Week."

Corrected dates for the tomato weeks are: De Witt and Lavaca counties, week of May 20-25; Jackson, week 2, 3, 4, and 5.

The 44th legislature proved no exception to the rule that some "bull" is made in the rush that marks the closing of a session.

Rep. McCalla got action from the senate on the final day upon a group of bills that repealed absolute

Assignment of Ranger Captain

Tom Hickman to headquarters company at Austin is believed to put him in line for an active part in the organization of the new department of Safety, which will be authorized under an act effective August 9.

He has been mentioned as a possible director. The director is to be named by a commission of three, who, in turn, are named by the governor.

Until they are named it will be difficult to guess the director.

It is a wild flight of the imagination to suppose that the ideal of universal peace can be assured.

To entertain such a possibility, it would be necessary to believe that every nation, be it powerful or weak, would remain for all time satisfied with its present position in regard to all other nations.

Nations have risen, nations have fallen; nations once powerful have sunk to comparative obscurity, and others, once obscure, have increased in strength.

So surely that is the way it must ever be!

JOSEPH WEAR SHOWS COURAGE AS NON-PLAYING TENNIS CAPTAIN

By STUART CAMERON United Press Sports Editor

NEW YORK, May 20 — Joseph W. Wear of Philadelphia already has qualified as the most courageous of American sportsmen in 1935. He has accepted an invitation to officiate as non-playing captain of the United States Davis cup team.

This means, above all else, one thing very definitely: If the U. S. falls in its quest of the cup Wear will be the goat.

Best Tennis Traditions This is in keeping with the best American tennis traditions. Last year's non-playing captain was R. Norris Williams, also of Philadelphia. The Americans failed, dramatically and he was the goat. Before him came Fritz Egan and a third Philadelphia, and the aristocratic Bernard Prentice of New York.

Of Williams' unsuccessful captaincy it may be said that he didn't care what his critics set down. He had the trip to Europe and the glory that went with it. The boys lost, but probably would have lost anyway, so what of it?

Wear of course, is leading with his chin. No tennis expert gives the young American combination more than an outside chance against Britain, holder of the cup, and few expect them to get past Australia, almost certain finalists in the European zone competition.

Fair Showing Greatest Hope: The best Wear can hope for is a fair showing—two victories in the five matches that will decide the game—as contrasted with last year's rout in which only the doubles match was captured.

Incidentally it may be remarked that Wear accepted the assignment only after the most earnest insistence of the tennis fathers. There are precious few men qualified for the job of non-playing captain, and for what reason no one knows, most if not all of them are in brokerage business.

Price High Two months away from home in the midst of a lot of excitement, hope and publicity would be fun enough, but the price is high when business is considered. Once upon a time a non-playing captain sailed bravely away, his business apparently secure. But his ventures blew up, higher than a kite, while he was away.

Wear has been a Davis Cup captain once before. He led the U. S. squad to Auteuil in 1928, when, for the first time since 1920, the Americans were in the role of challenger instead of defender. America lost to France in the challenge round that year, four matches to one. The lone victory came in Bill Tilden's win over Rene Lacoste.

Onion Crop Is Aid To Willacy County

RAMONVILLE, May 20 — Onions have made Willacy county, in the Lower Rio Grande Valley, one of the most prosperous counties in the nation.

Growers are now engaged in harvesting the last of their crop, which averaged a return of $100 an acre. There were 6,000 acres in the county planted to onions.

By far the largest part of the crop—approximately 1,100 carloads—was shipped by rail. Truck shipments were expected to raise the total to nearly 1,400 carloads.

The average price this year was $1.40 per bushel.

Large profits this season enabled many farmers to pay off indebtedness on their farms.

BEGIN HERE TODAY

KATHARINE STRYKHURST, beautiful, 20, is restless and discontented with the tediousness of social activities that make up her life. She persists in seeing MICHAEL HEATHEROE, who runs a riding club.

Sally Moon, local coquette, also enrolls at the club for riding lessons.

PARKER, Katharine's friend, sent to Europe to forget a love affair with GIBBS LARKIN, returns. She persists in seeing VIOLET MERSER. In the evening Michael comes to see her.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY CHAPTER X

LONG shadows lay across Violet Merser's old-fashioned garden when Michael Heatheroe, brave in gray tweeds, his stern young face bronzed and anxious above the crispness of linen, came to inquire for Katharine.

The girl, lying limp amidst pillows in the cool, low-ceiled upper room, heard his step on the porch, heard the slow roll of Lavinia's hearty African laughter in answer to his voice.

Mrs. Merser was established in one corner of the white-curtained room with a book. Katharine had been dozing. Far below, in the fields, the faint shouts of the children could be heard. They had been cautioned to be quiet while Miss Strykhurst slept.

"I'll go down," Violet Merser said. "It's that young man—the riding club owner. I'm not sure of his name."

"He's Michael Heatheroe," said the girl faintly. She gave the syllables an upward flick, like a caress.

"Oh!" Violet Merser widened her eyes at the tone. "Do you want to see him?"

Color washed across Katharine's face like a tide, leaving her mute and helpless. "I—I don't know."

The older woman's gaze was touched with compassion, and with something else, perhaps. She had heard Bertine's fretful voice a few hours before.

"Perhaps it would be wise. He's been ringing up all day. Guess he's been fearfully worried."

"If you think it would be all right . . ."

"Of course, I do."

MICHAEL had to stoop his head a trifle to enter the door. "Miss Strykhurst is just splendid," said Violet Merser easily. "I'll go speak to Lavinia for a moment. Those little Indians of mine have gone off the reservation."

She was gone, with a faint rustle of silk like a whisper or like a kiss . . .

Lace rose and fell with the quickening of Katharine's breath. "You're all right?"

"Of course. The doctor ran in again. He said I can get about tomorrow."

"Gosh," confessed Michael youthfully. "You don't know what a load that takes off my mind!" Katharine allowed herself the ghost of a smile.

"She's sent the dog away," he ventured further. "Mrs. Merser? Yes, I know. The children were heart-broken about it."

The girl, lying limp amidst the pillows in the cool, low-ceiled upper room, heard Michael's step on the stair.

"Little devil," said Michael thoughtfully, of the terrier.

"Oh, the poor thing didn't mean to be mischievous. He was only a puppy."

Katharine wasn't conscious of the meaning of the words. She only knew she had to say something, while Michael continued to stare at her like a man bemused. There was a subtle singing in her blood; her pulses thudded . . .

"He'll be all right out there in the country," Michael said absently. "You like dogs, don't you?"

"Yep," Michael confessed, smiling that altogether charming smile of his that lightened the sternness of his face and illumined his eyes. "I never had one," Katharine confessed.

"Never had a dog?" he demanded, aghast.

"No. My stepmother doesn't like them."

"Rotten shame," he contributed. "I always wanted a Cairn," Katharine confessed. "After my mother died I had a puppy. He—he was run over."

"Queer that she should be telling him this! She had never talked about Deggie to anyone before."

Mrs. Merser came back into the room. "Patient satisfactory?" "Oh, she's a wonder," said Michael. "It's a great relief to know that she's all right."

THE sun slipped behind the blue hills to the southwest as he went down the stairs, so that the brightness of the day actually faded with his going. Katharine could hear him chaffing the two little girls in the garden as he passed.

"I'm coming riding some day," said Sybil called.

"You do that," Michael told her. "Then he was gone. You could hear the sound of his old car, the broken-down one he had bought at that filling station for $25, chugging away down the road toward the town."

"He seems a nice boy," said Violet Merser, straightening pillows. She was thinking that the girl looked as if a lamp had been lighted behind those dark, long-lashed eyes of hers.

"Want anything before I marshal my two whirlwinds to bed?" Katharine shook her head. "Not a thing, thanks."

"Well then, I'll leave you for a bit. Ring the bell if you need anything. Lavinia will hear. The quaint way this house is arranged, the kitchen juts out just under this bedroom," said Mrs. Merser, with her low-throated laugh.

"It's just darling," said Katharine swiftly.

"You should have seen it when we took it over," Mrs. Merser told her. "Sybil was a baby then. We camped in the barn that summer. My husband fell in love with the place because of the maple trees. It has heaps of drawbacks, but every time I complain about the plumbing and go to see some shining, air modern house I come back loving this the more."

She went off with a small grimy hand in each of her capable ones, and Katharine could hear delighted shouts from behind a closed bathroom door. Presently two scrubbed faces, with shining locks brushed back, appeared in her doorway.

"Good night, Miss Katharine. Sybil says pleasant dreams."

Diana came to stand by her bedside, straight and tall in faded blue pajamas.

"Mummy says we may tell you good night. Will it bother you?" The soft little voice, the lambent, eager eyes stirred Katharine.

"Of course not."

Diana perched, bird-like, on the dressing table stool.

"Do you care for children? Some people don't very much. I had a teacher who didn't but she was moved to another school. Don't you think that was a break?"

"You do that," Michael told her. "Then he was gone. You could hear the sound of his old car, the broken-down one he had bought at that filling station for $25, chugging away down the road toward the town."

"He seems a nice boy," said Violet Merser, straightening pillows. She was thinking that the girl looked as if a lamp had been lighted behind those dark, long-lashed eyes of hers.

Syrian Chargined Over Old Oil Test

PALESTINE, May 20 — An oil test into which he sank his life-time savings 30 years ago still smokes John Nemer, a native of Syria.

Nemer drilled the well, known as the John Nemer No. 1, to 1,100 feet, using crude equipment of that date. Several shallow sands were found, but none in profitable quantities.

The well was abandoned because, when a plentiful supply of oil was discovered, there was too much water mixed with it.

After unusually heavy rainfall the well still flows oil over the ground.

But the only use made of it is to lubricate farming machinery of those living in the Jarvis area in which the John Nemer No. 1 is located.

HOUSTON, May 20 — Reduction of the local loading rate for scrap iron to meet competition of other Texas ports has been recommended by S. A. Dunlap, district manager of the Texas Transport and Terminal Port company.

He told the Port Commission that Beaumont and Port Arthur were reducing the rate to 20 cents per ton, 15 cents under the Houston loading rate.

He also said that Texas cities had equipment capable of loading scrap iron at the rate of 800 to 900 tons a day. Only 400 tons can be loaded in Houston with present facilities.

"THEY DON'T GET YOUR WIND" ATHLETES SAY

So mild, athletes smoke as many as they please—and that's real mildness!

Of course you want mildness in a cigarette. And the athletes—to whom "wind," healthy nerves, "condition" are vitally important—insist on mildness. Lou Gehrig, baseball's "Iron Man," says: "Camels are so mild they never get my 'wind.'" George Barker, intercollegiate cross-country champion, says: "Camels are so mild, they don't cut my 'wind' in any way." Bobby Walthour, Jr., star of the six-day bike grinds, says: "I've got to have 'wind' in bike racing. For my cigarette I long ago chose Camels."

Tommy Armour, speaking for golf, Bruce Barnes for tennis, and Betty Bailey for the aquatic sports—all agree: "Camels don't get your 'wind.'"

What this mildness means to you!...It means you can smoke as many Camels as you please. Athletes say Camel's costlier tobaccos never disturb your nerves—never tire your taste—never get your "wind."
