COUNTY RELIEF WORK AT STANDSTILL

SHUTDOWN OF ALL PROJECTS ORDER GIVEN

Relief in Eastland county today was virtually at a standstill, following a general shutdown order on all work relief projects, with the exception of the live canneries in the county.

Local relief forces were unable to say for how long the shutdown would be in effect, but said that their orders came this morning from Eastland.

County Relief Administrator H. E. Driscoll, in a telephone conversation today, told the Daily News that the shutdown was temporary and due to necessary reduction in budget after the county allocation was slashed to a little more than a third of what he had requested.

AUSTIN, June 3 — Radically reduced allotments for the relief population of Texas are in prospect for the month of June, it has been announced by Adam R. Johnson, state relief administrator.

June funds will be spent by the counties for purposes described in the following budget:

WEATHER

West Texas — Partly cloudy tonight, Tuesday generally fair. East Texas — Partly cloudy to cloudy, showers on coast, Tuesday cloudy, showers.

Death Follows Flood In Midwest Valleys

92 LIVES ARE LOST IN HIGH RIVER WATER

By UNITED PRESS
Floods raged through fertile midwest valleys, leaving death and destruction while overcast skies created an additional threat of higher waters.

The Republican river, flowing through Kansas and Nebraska has taken an estimated toll of 92 lives. Property damage already exceeds $10,000,000.

In Colorado and Wyoming cloud-bursts brought death to 26. The Des Cygnes river flowed through the streets of Owawawa, Kan. Water was three feet deep in many stores.

Serious conditions were anticipated in northwest Nebraska where the North Platte and South Platte were converging on the town of North Platte. Each was carrying a six-foot flood crest. Towns of Big Springs, Pococoe and Brule were under water.

The Missouri river into which virtually all the floodwaters eventually will flow, was within a foot of flood stage at Kansas City. At Jefferson City it reached its greatest depth of 32 feet crest of the flood is not expected until Tuesday or Wednesday.

The great Bagnell dam poured millions of gallons of water an hour into the Missouri. All of its 12 spillways opened the release the flood built up on the 59 mile lake. In the 150 mile stretch from Booneville to Herman, Mo., 1,000 families moved to higher ground, according to army engineers estimates.

Prodigal Sons and Husbands

The prodigal son of the biblical parable is not in himself an edifying spectacle, but the fact that he came back home and reformed. And why did he come back home? Because he was hungry. "Had there been soup kitchens and free lodging houses, he would not have returned," says a director of the Indianapolis Foundation, addressing a welfare conference. This may sound like a hard-hearted knock at public charity by a professional charity man. He, however, reminds the public that there are millions of boys and men "riding around the country on freight trains and living on what they can beg or steal," and that the stream of tramps, beggars, hoboes and bums is steadily increasing. Also that a large part of these gentry are able-bodied men who have deserted their wives and children, or able-bodied sons who should be supporting themselves or their parents.

"After visiting the homes deserted by these men," he says, "and seeing how hard their families are struggling to maintain life, we can hardly endure with patience the mistaken spirit of benevolence which feeds and clothes the deserters."

It is natural human kindness to give food to those who ask for it, without much question of how they came to lack it. But in most cases, experienced charity workers insist, the kindness is misapplied. Real kindness consists in withholding help from the deserting vagabonds and driving the prodigal sons, husbands and fathers home to their own families.

Socialist Thomas Has New Plan

Norman Thomas is the leader of the socialist party of America. He has recommended heavy taxes on land and a capital levy on many industries. This is his alibi: "We are trying to use taxation as a part of a more comprehensive plan of social reconstruction." The Norman Thomas scheme is passed on to the vast army of land owning farmers of Texas. Since the coming of the New Deal administration these farmers who farm their own lands have been crawling out of the ditch. Now the apostle of Karl Marx socialism would double or treble the taxes on their farms.

California Enacts a Pauper's Bill

By a vote of 43 to 32 the California state assembly passed a bill to prevent paupers and vagabonds from entering the Golden state. Then the measure was sent to the senate. Although giving its emphatic approval to the measure the lower house refused to adopt an urgency clause. Gov. Frank Merriam is friendly to the proposed law. He had ever been a reactionary until 1934. Now Merriam is for the Townsend bill. He has expressed the hope that the American congress will enact the measure. This is a queer old world where a lifelong reactionary changes front and becomes one of the most radical of radicals. Practical politicians know how to play the game in a scientific sense. They are out for the votes of the people "at the next succeeding election."

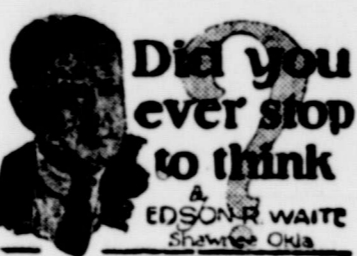

Chain Tax Hits Major Oilers

Iowa lawmakers enacted a chain store tax on service stations. Now the big companies promise a general withdrawal from the state. It is said that more than 3000 company owned or operated stations would either be leased to individuals or closed before the coming of July 1. There are approximately 10,000 service stations in Iowa. Standard Oil magnates take the lead. They leased 350 stations to individuals, which the company estimated would result in the discharge of some 800 employees. Five hundred other stations leased by Standard Oil in the Hawkeye state and operated by its agents, will be turned back to private owners. This is the Iowa law; Chain stations must pay a unit tax beginning with $5 per station for each station in excess of one and running to $150 for each in excess of 50. Its gross sales provision applies a tax of $25 on receipts not in excess of $50,000 and runs to 10 per cent on receipts of more than $9,000,000.

Municipal rulers of the city of Fort Worth enacted a filling station tax. This tax was upheld by the supreme court of Texas. Not long ago (before the political upheaval at Dallas) an ex-city manager, John N. Edy suggested taxation of filling stations as a possible source of revenue but the Dallas council gave it no consideration. The Edy plan at that time was to tax them for the privilege of using the sidewalks as driveways and as part of the space used in their business. Now a new city manager has ordered a survey made immediately to see how many filling stations there are in Dallas and what percentage are owned by companies or individuals.

What was it said in the long ago that "the power of tax is the power to destroy." Speaking of Fort Worth and its municipal leaders, they have ordered a drive to collect $100,000 in city license fees from operators of filling stations, due over a six year period. Fort Worth has 700 filling stations. When in doubt tax petroleum regardless of the load that the motorists of America are compelled to carry and the double taxation imposed upon the owners of property within easy reach of the tax collector.

No Mail

P. T. Hines, advertising manager of the Greenboro (N. C.) News Record, says: "It is not unusual to hear a man say especially some man from the professions, that he does not believe in advertising. The use of paid newspaper space is termed unethical and wasteful. "While I have always considered newspaper advertising the best means of securing paid publicity, my definition of advertising is broad and all-inclusive. To me, advertising is anything that brings merchandise or service to the attention of prospective clients.

"Any man who does not believe in advertising, if he is consistent, will avoid the use of signs, lettering on office doors, display windows and will discourage word-of-mouth praise of his business, skill or trustworthiness. He will force people to search him out, with nothing to guide or direct them.

"When you say all this to such a man, his answer will usually be 'Nonsense!' In truth he is really answering himself and does not know it. 'Nonsense' is the right word to use when a man tells you that he does not believe in advertising. No business practice in America today is better established than advertising. Advertising is a necessary public-service. It is the cheapest way of spreading business news — and the spread of such news is essential to both consumer and advertiser.

"Good advertising is news in the truest sense — and, being classified as news, it is welcomed by the reader as helpful and informative and is recognized by the alert merchant and business man as being essential and a necessary part of good service."

Texas Topics

By RAYMOND BROOKS

AUSTIN, June 3 — Dry and wet campaigns starting in high, will test the ability of ballyhoo to arouse a indifferent electorate during the next 80 days for the decision August 24 of far-reaching social and economic effect whether the 17-year experiment in prohibition shall be put to an end, or whether continued.

Organization meetings of the dries have been held in Dallas, and of the wets in Austin. Well-established campaign practices will generate much steam and heat around campaign headquarters; but whether the voters really will be stirred to any great interest remained uncertain.

A large vote August 24 is assured, not merely by the liquor repeal amendment, but chiefly by the opportunity to vote an old-age pension plan, and to outlaw the fee system of compensating public officials.

Complaint grew out of the Austin meeting of the repealists that many thousands of the Moody-Sterling supporters who wanted to vote for regulation under repeal are being antagonized by the prominence of the McDonald-Ferguson forces in the repeal campaign. Moderate repealists objected to the fact that Former Gov. James E. Ferguson was called to make a keynote speech of the repeal campaign.

Observers at the Texas capitol in a dry administration believe if the campaign fails to attract much attention, repeal will go over, but if a serious campaign really is created the dries will have an excellent chance to defeat repeal. This is based on the record of electing Hobbs, Neff, Moody, Sterling and Allied as governor and Sheppard and Connally, United States senators, all dries, during the prohibition era, with only Mrs. Ferguson, the product of political issues other than prohibition, having been elected who did not represent the dry forces.

The moderate 32 best amendment scored a 100,000 majority. By no means, the dries insist, do all those who wanted to compromise on beer want to return to hard liquor. The wets feel that the double election, leaving the machinery and system to the legislature now but giving the voters a chance to order the state monopoly plan in 1936, will allay fears of middle-groundsers and give them a better showing this year. They will point to this as a safeguard against abuses if private-profit sales procedure is adopted. Both sides feel confident about the outcome. So far, it is a leaders' campaign, with the average voter little concerned. The campaign itself will determine whether the electorate catches the enthusiasm to make it comparable to historic wet-dry battles of ballots in the past.

Behind the Scenes in Washington

BY RODNEY DUTCHER
NEA Service Staff Correspondent
WASHINGTON — The private lives of government clerks have just become one of those teapot-tempet issues which politicians so frequently make into big headlines for the local newspapers.

There's a section of the badly riddled but still extant Economy Act which provides that married persons with husbands or wives in the federal civil service must be fired first wherever personnel reductions are necessary. Witnesses protesting this clause testified before the House civil service committee that it had the effect of causing young folks on the federal payroll to live together without benefit of clergy. One of the witnesses was President E. Claude Babcock of the A. P. of L., American Federation of Government Employees.

Sexual morality of government clerks is by no means one of Mr. Babcock's major concerns. He just thought it was a point of argument against the "married persons clause" which would appeal to a southern congressman or two who might actually be worried about the morals of this town.

Later he insisted he knew of nine such cases of unmarried life, but he didn't suggest that he had ever qualified himself as a genuine viewer-with-alarm by suggesting to these young people that they mend the error of their ways.

THEN, just as if he, too, lay awake nights thinking about such problems, Congressman Cochran of Missouri dashed into print with the assertion that Babcock had "insulted every single man and woman in the government service" and urged that Babcock be fired or, possibly, tarred and feathered.

Cochran made a fiery diatribe of the morals of the boys and girls of the town, insisting Babcock caused great "mental anguish" to the ladies of the government as well as to their folks back home. Cochran doesn't care, either, does he know as much about the situation as Babcock does? It merely happens to be the wife of the "married persons clause" is grimly determined to defend herself. WHICH explains how and why the morals of government employees played to become a hot issue in this town and to press itself—as if Congress had nothing else to worry about, the congressman's chairman of the committee mandated specific, definite procedure. Nothing has been done to the problem of the 3000-ya and the $1200 boy who would get married on the theory "two can live as cheap as one don't dare. Incidentally, most of them plenty of $500 or $10,000 on the federal payroll who do have wives who also draw general salaries and needn't worry cause they have "drag" or on the civil service lists.

THERE'S a girl in FERA named Marcia Hello and she is a typographer and not a telephone operator. Last time Gerstein came to town with his Alice B. Toklas, he wrote a letter to his friend, Ellen LaMotte follows: "It will be nice with you. Emily, I think, is so are you. And so, perhaps, which is nice for all (Gertrude.)" J. V. HEYSER IS HONORED UPON HIS BIRTHDAY

Twenty-one friends of J. V. Heyser gathered Saturday evening at a surprise party at his home which had been specially lighted and decorated for the occasion, honoring his fifty-second birthday, and partook of a birthday dinner which had been prepared by Mrs. Heyser without knowledge of the honoree.

Tables had been placed on the lawn which had been strung with colored lights, and the men who composed the stag party, gathered and formed part of the surprise which awaited Mr. Heyser when he returned from his pasture, to which he had been enticed by certain neighbors at the instigation of Mrs. Heyser.

After Mr. Heyser had greeted his friends and "cleaned up a bit," the guests were invited into the dining room where a sumptuous feast had been spread about the presentation of a package of thick Tinley tobacco. After the cheers had subsided and before Mr. Heyser could erase the abashed grin from his face and speak any words of appreciation, Rev. Mr. Turner produced a fine pair of cowboy boots and made the further presentation of them to Mr. Heyser, with wishes for as many more happy birthdays.

When these ceremonies were finished, Mrs. Heyser had the guests provide themselves with plates and silver and pass about the table, cafeteria style, and hear their plates with barbecued beef, chicken with gravy, yellow wax beans, English peas and carrots, buttered new spuds, butter, pickled beets, corn salad, sliced cucumbers and onions, dewberry jelly, peach pickles, homemade light bread, strawberry ice cream, devil's food cake, fruit punch. These were taken back to the lawn, where punch and refills on the above items were generously pressed upon the already over-fed men. Home-made strawberry ice cream and cake and more punch formed the dessert.

Home-Grown Dinner

Another unique feature of the dinner was the fact, as announced by Mrs. Heyser, that, aside from the beef, which was a later addition, only after the abundant supply of chicken from the farm had failed to arrive in time to fill the meat course, the used used in making the ice cream, was the only expense of the whole menu provided by this resourceful hostess. Everything was home grown.

Those present were B. S. Huey, Dr. F. E. Clark, Homer McDonald, Dave Gorman, Charles Kleiner, Rev. Frank Turner, R. N. Clark, Jim Flournoy, R. A. Butler, L. F. Mendenhall, W. J. Armstrong, L. H. McCrea, Will St. John, P. P. Sheppard, C. O. Pass, K. W. Dawkins, J. E. Spencer, Jesse McCannies, W. J. Donovan, S. E. Hittson, and W. H. LaRoque.

Invited but out of town or with previous engagements were: F. D. Wright, H. S. Drumwright, W. D. Brecken, P. R. Warrick, Bob Weddington, Alex. Spears, Bob Mancill, R. E. Grantham, Oscar Cllett, Dr. D. Ball, Dr. E. L. Graham, Dr. C. C. Jones, Dr. Paul Woods, Rev. E. S. James, A. C. Green and Milburn McCarty.

Messdames Dave Gorman, Homer N. Donald, W. B. Brecken, and Ernest Hittson, assisted in preparation and in serving the guests.

Melvina Heyser, Margaret Ann McDonald, J. V. Heyser, Jr., and Jimmie Gorman served punch during the meal.

Summer Sweethearts

BEGIN HERE TODAY
KATHARINE STRICKHERST, beautiful, 29, is to love with MICHAEL HEATHEROE who runs a riding school. Katharine's father is rich and her stepmother, BERTINE, is snobbish.

ZOE, FATHER'S friend, Katharine's friend, has an unhappy love affair and is saved from suicide by young DR. JOHN HAYE.

SALLY MOON, local coquette, tricks Michael into an engagement and, when he tries to wriggle out, tightens her hold. Katharine hears Michael is to marry Sally and is broken-hearted.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY
CHAPTER XXII
KATHARINE brought her car to a stop before the drug store, the windows of which were emblazoned and placarded with picturesque endorsements. A life-sized cardboard figure of a blond girl ornamented the left-hand corner. Issuing from her mouth was a balloon explaining that daily use of some sort of patented product gave her that rose and gold complexion.

Two or three shabbily-dressed men loafed in the shade of the bank building. A child on roller skates came coasting dizzily down the incline and took the corner on high, both arms spreadeagled for balance. Katharine, nodding to Mrs. Endance who ran the lending library, disappeared into the drug store. She had a great many small errands to do for Bertine; there was soap and witch-hazel and mending tape and black ink on the list. The cut-rate drug store represented one of Bertine's pet economies. She could have telephoned to Captain's just around the corner, and had all the purchases delivered, as most of the people down on the Point did. But, while she could be wildly extravagant in larger matters, she drew the line here.

Katharine gave her order abstractedly to the clerk behind the counter. She was not thinking of her errands. She was reflecting, with some surprise, that it was really easier than she had thought to forget the tall, slate-eyed young man who sat his horse so easily and who had ridden quite suddenly and unexpectedly into her life last year, Michael Heatheroe.

She had learned to control leaping pulses when his name was spoken. She had learned to accept, without a sick plunging of the heart, the incredible news that he was going to marry the coquette Sally Moon.

Well, and so what? she asked herself. He's nothing to you, never was—and never will be. You have a life to live—20, 30, perhaps 40 years more. After all, she was not 21 yet, and she was strong, vigorous, full of an energy not to be denied.

THE answer was this: you didn't sit around sighing for a man who cared nothing about you and never did. That was only done in the days of your Victorian great-grandmother. You found something to do, and you did it as best you could.

Other girls did it. Every day in the week. The shops, the settlement houses, the Junior League classes were full of them. Easier classes, curved, rosy lips, bright eyes. Not all of them carried broken hearts about with them. Few—very few. A broken heart was hopelessly out of date. Like a hoop skirt.

Only she wished she might not ever catch a glimpse of either one of them—Michael or Sally—again. She hoped they might go out to California or Hawaii—anywhere that was definitely far and removed from Innicoek. Then she could take up her sketching, her delicate, definite water colors that Evelyn Vincent said were actually saleable; she could make something of her life.

Some day, perhaps years and years in the future, some shadowy, dark, tall man would come along. She would tell him it wasn't in her to care, really, any more; but he would persuade her, against her will and her better judgment, to marry him. . . .

"Black ink, did you say, miss?" The gangling clerk was staring at her frankly.

"Yes," She came out of her day dream to look at him abstractedly.

She had her purchases now. In a neat package wrapped in white paper and tied round with green cord. The library next, to return the Angela Thirkell book, "Wild Strawberries." What a delightful book it had been! So light and gay and easy, and with the love affair resolving itself so simply into happiness. If only life were a little more like that!

She sighed, turning to go. Two rather bulky men, in stiff city clothes, stood aside to let her pass. They were frankly strangers in Innicoek, where you knew everyone, from the man who swept the streets and rejoiced in the simple name of "Christmas," to the boys who sold the daily paper.

Katharine was aware of them now only as figures blocking her path. But as one of them spoke to the boy behind the soda counter, a name broke into her consciousness. Michael's name.

DRAWN by a curiosity she could not explain or deny, Katharine loitered at the weighing machine, apparently intent only on the black numerals which slid into sight as she stepped upon it and dropped a penny into the slot. But her eyes sought out the face of the older man, a smooth-shaven, ruddy face under the stiff straw hat.

"Feller who calls himself Michael Heatheroe," drawled this individual. "Where's the postoffice, buddy? Maybe we can get the information there." The soda boy was shaking his head in the negative. No, he hadn't heard of Michael Heatheroe. . . .

Katharine, biting her lips, shifting her package from one hand to another, was conscious of a queer lightness in her head. The gray-haired man shoved his detective's badge out of sight again.

Detectives—after Michael! She was never certain afterward how she got there—she didn't remember pushing open the swinging door and emerging from the coolness of the drug store to the pavement. But she was in her car, her foot on the starter, before the lantern-jawed man, the younger of the pair, came out into the street, staring up and down, and finally gesturing to his companion toward the postoffice half a block away.

Then she was in traffic, her small brown shoe pressing down hard, hard on the accelerator. Out the River Road, library and English novel and rolls for luncheon completely forgotten. Bertine had said, rather querulously, to hurry back. But Katharine could not bother about Bertine now. If you had a friend and he was in trouble, you did something about it, didn't you?

She did not argue it out; she was not aware of any problem needing to be decided. It was as simple as this. If Michael were in danger, and she knew of it, why then she must warn him.

She had always known, in the back of her brain, that there was some mystery about Michael. But whatever he had been or done, he wasn't to be caught like a rat in a trap. Those hard-faced men with the badges should have nothing to do with him.

She raced past the Merser house without turning her head. There were two white flashes on the lawn that she assumed to be Sybil and Diana, but Katharine dared not take her eyes off the road even to wave. Any moment the men would be turning out of Innicoek's main street to find the winding roads that ran back of the hills to the riding school. Any minute. . . .

A LOW-SLUNG, black car passed like a streak and for a moment Katharine's heart plunged again in fear. But the driver was only a slip of a girl in checked red gingham, with her wild curls flying in the breeze.

Katharine turned into the lane; there were already one or two cars parked there. Taps came out of the stable, with a look of surprise for her.

"Mr. Heatheroe about?"

"I think so. If you'll wait just a minute, miss. . . ."

Her relief was so great that her knees began to tremble. If he had been out on the bridge path however would she have got the news to him?

Taps disappeared. Katharine got out of the car, her ears straining nervously for the sound of a following motor on the lane. The postoffice might be busy—oh, dear God, make the clerks very busy.

"Hello, there."

His gay voice, his easy voice. And the well-remembered laughter lines about his eyes.

"Michael, can we talk some place? Away from here, I mean. Quickly."

"The house?" His cool eyes would have abashed her if she had not been so terribly intent.

"No, not the house," she exclaimed shrilly. "Clear away. Look, it's frightfully important. You're in danger."

"I? What's wrong?" He did not have the air of a guilty man—but then you never could tell.

"Get into my car." She threw a hurried look over her shoulder. "I can tell you there. They'll be coming any minute."

He opened the door for her and she swung herself in. She had the engine running, triumphantly.

"Come along," she cried. "Hurry."

He was in the seat beside her. She was out of the lane and away, winding up the road away from the town.
