About Our Friends

By STEVE A. LONG
Kendallup, October, 1914
A. St. John has been receiving congratulations of his friends on account of having received the appointment as postmaster of this city. The news came to him yesterday that the appointment had been made. Mr. St. John is a courteous and will make an efficient postmaster. There were a number of applicants, but only one could get the appointment, and, since, all the others have been disappointed, but no criticism has been heard by the Roundup editor about the appointment of A. St. John. He will take charge of the office in the middle of December.

Pavement of Leeray Cutoff Starts Today

HIGHWAY WILL BE MODEL FOR STATE IS AIM

Work of paving Highway 167, the Leeray cutoff, began this morning, with between 15 and 20 men at work.
Joe Blankenship and Mr. McGee have charge of the work, it was learned.
The road is to be a model highway for Texas, the Daily News learned, with the highway department using it as an experiment.
Two miles in the middle of the nine-mile cutoff will be of double-course treatment, while each end will be of triple-course treatment.
It was estimated today that approximately 30 days will be required to complete the work of paving the entire stretch, which will be a connecting link between Cisco and Highway 67 to Breckenridge.

Base Is Ready
The crushed rock base for the pavement was completed some time ago and the work of paving the road was ordered to begin as soon as possible.
The road was repaired after it had become deeply pitted and very rough from constant use by heavy oil field traffic.
When completed, it will form a very definite link in the highway system about Cisco and will be instrumental in drawing much traffic through the city that now passes elsewhere.
The road will be smooth and well paved and will be a decided improvement over the old road, even at the time it was constructed.

Slain Publisher Feared Assassins

MINNEAPOLIS, Dec. 10—Walter Liggett, crusading Minneapolis publisher, slain last night, feared he would die at the hand of an assassin and had hidden evidence to support charges against his political foes, it was revealed today.
Liggett told friends less than two months ago he feared an attack and had secreted "in the east" a complete file of evidence in connection with the bitter campaign of his Midwest American.

TWO CHARGED WITH MURDER FOR SHOOTING

By United Press
SAN ANTONIO, Dec. 10—Murder charges were filed today against Mrs. Erna Curth and Narcees Washington, 64-year-old negro, in connection with an alleged plot which resulted in the killing Saturday of Mrs. Curth's estranged husband Reinhold Curth, 42, at Seguin.
Curth was shot to death on the front porch of Mrs. Curth's residence. Sheriff A. W. Saeger said both Mrs. Curth and Narcees made signed statements, the negro claiming he was promised $150 for the shooting, and Mrs. Curth asserting she agreed to pay him $100 out of the $500 insurance she expected.
Mrs. Curth is under technical arrest in a hospital where she was undergoing treatment for an abdominal disorder she said resulted from four ribs being broken a month ago in a fight with her husband.

PEACE HANGS BY THREAD IN NEW PARLEYS

By United Press
Peace in Europe hung in a very delicate balance today and the optimism that prevailed in Paris and Rome over chances of success of the Franco-British proposal for settlement of the Ethiopian war was not shared elsewhere.
It depended entirely on whether Emperor Haile Selassie and various powers at Geneva—notably Russia and Rumania would consent to Italy's taking over nearly half of the emperor's kingdom. There are powers at Geneva who have made it plain they will not approve the action, which they regard as a "grab" by Italy, on the ground that it would condone the act of an aggressor by sanctioning seizure of spoils, thus setting a precedent under which no weak nation would be safe in the future.

PEACE CONVERSATION HITS NEW SNAG

LONDON, Dec. 10—Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin intimated in the house of commons that a hitch had occurred in the Franco-British negotiations to settle the Ethiopian war.
"We have been examining all morning messages regarding the matter. Frankly I am not at all sure that finally has been reached," Baldwin said, referring to a lengthy emergency session of the cabinet.
There has been a leakage in France, which has made these most difficult and delicate negotiations incomparably more delicate and difficult but I am informed by those who have studied the originals and the newspaper accounts of them that there are substantial differences.
Baldwin is expected to make a full statement tomorrow.

Hauptmann's Pardon Status Is Mystery

TRENTON, N. J., Dec. 10—Governor Walter Hoffman today said no one knows how he will vote when the convicted kidnaper, Charles A. Lindbergh, Jr., Bruno Richard Hauptmann, comes before the court of pardons in his last defense to escape the electric chair.
"I have expressed to no one in the world my opinion as to the man's guilt or innocence," Governor Hoffman said.

TEXAS RELIEF ASSURED FOR THIS WINTER

By United Press
AUSTIN, Dec. 10—Texas relief will be carried "through the winter," although a federal allotment received today by Governor Alfred was announced as "positively the last."
John Wallace of the state board of control, which administers relief, revealed that enough state funds have been held back to carry through until March on a rigidly economical scale.
With the federal grant today, there is available approximately $3,400,000 for general relief from all sources.
The federal grant received today really was a November grant. It had been authorized for November but did not arrive then.
"We have insisted to the federal representatives that relief must not be stopped in midwinter. To prevent that we have used federal funds and held back state funds where possible," Wallace said.
Wallace explained that on December 7, the last statement day, there was on hand approximately $2,000,000, from state "bread bond" proceeds and $400,000 federal aid for general relief.
The amounts will not all be available for direct relief. From it funds will be required to close up relief records.

5 KNOWN DEAD AT HOUSTON IN BAYOU FLOOD

By United Press
HOUSTON, Dec. 10—The list of known dead in the gravest Texas flood grew to five today when the body of a negro girl was taken from the receding waters of Buffalo Bayou.
Bodies of four other negroes, three of them girls, were recovered today. Police reported 11 other persons missing.
Hundreds of volunteers, national guards, police, and WPA workers searched the waters for other victims from the point where the bayou enters the city to far down the Houston ship channel.
Red Cross workers improvised shelters to care for families made homeless by the flood. Calls for contributions of food, clothing, and money were broadcast. All relief work was turned over to the Red Cross.
Approximately 1,000 refugees were being cared for in four shelters. The victims will be returned to their homes as rapidly as the waters recede.

WEATHER

West Texas—Fair tonight and Wednesday; slightly colder extreme southeast tonight; warmer panhandle Wednesday.
East Texas—Partly cloudy, probably occasional rains on coast tonight and Wednesday; slightly colder northeast and central portion tonight, rising temperature northwest Wednesday.

Roosevelt Defends the New Deal

Departing from his usual smooth manner of addressing the people, President Roosevelt yesterday flayed his critics as "a pression profiteers" and their henchmen who are seeking to wreck the recovery program of the nation for personal gain.

The address, delivered before 18,000 persons at the annual convention of the American Farm Bureau Federation, was directed at the "dispensers of discord" who, he charged are playing the city against the farm in order to keep up their profiteering.

The president, before an enthusiastic audience, pointed to the agriculture record to justify the measures taken by the administration to aid the farmers of the nation.

The president apparently was firing the opening gun in the campaign against the critics of the administration, who have been howling long and loud in recent months. He was defending the policies which are aimed at giving the farmer a "break", at placing agriculture on a parity with industry. American industry is defended by a protective tariff. The AAA is attempting to give agriculture the same protection. Maybe its method so far has been wrong. Maybe the proper one can be substituted. But whatever the method, the farmer needs the same protection that the industrialist is given.

Since the AAA has been functioning there has been much weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth. But the howling has been on the part of the industrialists who had been making their profit at the expense of the farmers.

The equitable thing to do, it seems, is to put the various classes—agriculture and industry—on an equal basis, with protection for farmer and industrialist alike. Whether the AAA has done that is yet to be decided. It has aimed at it. Some claim it has not gone far enough. Others throw up their hands in horror and say that it is the worst mistake the New Deal has ever made.

The New Deal has made mistakes, many of them. But it has been working toward perfection all the time. Anyone or any organization makes mistakes, but the test of it is whether it rectifies them and prevents the same mistakes from occurring a second time.

Perhaps the best argument for the New Deal, which the president touched upon briefly, is the condition of the country itself. Of course it is far from ideal at present. There are still many wrongs to be righted, but it is in far better condition today than it was on that gloomy day of March 4, 1932.

Behind the Scenes in Washington

BY RODNEY DUTCHER

NEA Service Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON — Probably the most important development in the American labor movement in the last 25 years is this:

The militant wing of the American Federation of Labor has organized itself to go out and organize the American workers. This is an outgrowth of the fight led by President John L. Lewis of the mine workers at the Atlantic City convention and its chief aim is organization of mass production and other industries on a basis of industrial unionism.

Resignation of Lewis from his A. F. of L. vice presidency is equivalent to a formal declaration of war against a federation of conservative craft unions. It was precipitated by overt action of the federation executive council in seeking to nullify some of the victories won by Lewis at the convention, and to block extension of the militant influence.

The Lewis resignation is regarded as a first step toward possible secession of the miners' and other unions from the federation.

A business-like suite of offices has been opened in the Rust building by the Committee for Industrial Organization. In charge is John Brophy, director for the committee.

The A. F. of L. claims some what more than 3,000,000 members. The militant group believes there are 25,000,000 other workers available for organization and will aim its efforts at the largest batches of them.

PROBABLY it will make more of a dent on the industrial situation than the A. F. of L. itself, since the controlling hierarchy of the federation is chiefly interested in preserving craft unionism and keeping the vigorous industrial unions from gaining a voting majority.

You must take the new movement seriously, because the co-ordinating unions, representing more than a million organized and unorganized workers, have numbers, unity and money. And most of all because the leaders of these unions include the most successful, aggressive strategists in the whole labor movement.

MOST of these unions have spectacular records of assistance to workers striking in other industries.

They hire the best brains in the labor movement and the best organizers—besides building up the biggest war chests—and their staffs will be available for the big organization drive of 1935-36.

Consequently, you can expect some intensive unionization efforts in such industries as steel, automobiles, public utilities and electrical equipment, chemicals, rubber, textiles, and metal mining.

THE committee will shower unorganized workers with literature and advisers, organize a corps of speakers, and establish a press service for inter-communication.

Moreover, it will propagandize the whole labor movement for the minority report on industrial unionism rejected by the last convention, help all labor groups in their jurisdictional fights against craft unions, assist in presenting cases of such groups to the A. F. of L. at its next convention, and encourage federal labor unions to send pro-industrial union groups to the convention.

With All My Love

BEGIN HERE TODAY

After the death of her parents, lovely DANA WESTBROOK comes from abroad to make her home with a grandmother she has never seen, MRS. WILLIARD CAMERON.

Dana's half-sister, NANCY WALLACE, resents Dana's coming. Dana's grandmother plans for her young granddaughter to marry rich RONALD MOORE. Dana, meanwhile, has become attracted to DR. SCOTT STANLEY.

Nancy, who masks her love for Ronald behind an antagonistic attitude, unhappily watches the progress of the romance between Dana and Ronald. Just as anxiously, RONALD LONG watches Scott Stanley's interest in Dana increase.

Ronald becomes jealous of Scott and stays away. Dana wonders what has happened. Mrs. Cameron asks Scott to stop visiting Dana, but they meet at a dance and recklessly decide to marry. Mrs. Cameron watches the wedding ceremony with a bitter expression in her eyes.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

CHAPTER XVIII

MRS. CAMERON kissed her granddaughter cozily, and shook hands with Scott. Aunt Ellen drew Dana close in her arms and, surprisingly, gave Scott an affectionate peck on the cheek. The minister congratulated them. Sarah brought a tray filled with wine glasses, and there was a toast to happiness.

Then Scott was rushing Dana away, into the gray car, and Mrs. Cameron was turning aside—perhaps to hide the sudden rush of tears to her eyes. She was muttering to herself as she went up the stairs and her dark prophecy reached Aunt Ellen and Nancy, "It won't last! It won't last!"

"Where in the world did Dana get the smart wedding outfit?" Nancy asked, her eyes on her sister. "She went out this morning and came back loaded with boxes. Did she suddenly inherit a fortune or something?"

"I'm sure I don't know," Aunt Ellen lied bravely (and for the first time in her life), mentally praying for forgiveness. "She looks very sweet, doesn't she?"

"Write to us," Nancy called from the porch.

Scott grinned at that. "Wish I could take you on a real honeymoon, Mrs. Stanley," he said. "But I guess that's out."

"A honeymoon doesn't mean going places. It means being married—to you," Dana said.

SCOTT had started the motor. "Hey—wait!" he said. Stopping the car, he leaned over and kissed her. Dana blushed. "Just look at those people staring."

"Who cares about staring people," Scott said. "Besides it's good luck to start a honeymoon with a kiss."

The car shot forward again. Scott said, "We might drive around the block. Then the papers could say 'Dr. and Mrs. Scott Stanley have returned home after a short wedding trip.' Or we might drive around two or three blocks, and they could spread it 'Dr. and Mrs. Scott Stanley have returned after an extended motor trip.'"

"Or," suggested Scott, "we might drive to our place in the country. And then it could truthfully be said that 'Dr. and Mrs. Scott Stanley left for an indefinite honeymoon stay, their destination unknown.'"

"Our place?" Dana marveled. "Have we a farm?"

"Nothing so important," Scott laughed. "To be exact, we have 25 ancestral acres with a bit of blue lake on them. There's a shack which I've been calling nothing at all, but which, henceforth, must be known as Honeymoon House. It has a few odd pieces thrown together. But at night the stars come out—"

He broke off, as though embarrassed by the poetic sound of the words.

Dana breathed: "How perfectly wonderful. What a darling place to spend a honeymoon!"

IT was something else for the town to talk about. To think of cooking your own wedding breakfast, one woman sniffed.

"It might be rather exciting, at that, to cook a wedding breakfast for Scott," her daughter answered.

But most of the talking was done in Dana's grandmother's home and by Dana's grandmother.

"I hope she's satisfied," Mrs. Cameron said. "Goodness knows I tried to warn her."

Mrs. Cameron had gone almost into hysterics after Nancy met Dana down town and came home with the news. Dana had driven into the city with Scott for provisions. They were having such a marvelous time that they had decided to extend their stay. Dana said she had caught a fish—the first of her life. And, with Scott's help, she had broiled it. One night they had pitched their blankets out under the stars. It was quiet and lovely.

"Did you ever know of anything so ridiculous?" Mrs. Cameron had asked vehemently. Answering her own question, she had snapped viciously, "I never did."

Later she had exclaimed, "A fish!" with such biting scorn in her voice that neither Aunt Ellen nor Nancy had ventured to protest.

In the privacy of her own room Aunt Ellen had smiled. It was nice that Dana was not one of those girls who required artificial excitement to make them happy.

The honeymoon was destined to end abruptly because one of Scott's, all-too-few patients had become worse. They returned to the city. "Just one of the disadvantages of being a doctor's wife," Scott told Dana.

"I think it's dreadful for wives to interfere with their husbands' professions," Dana said with youthful fervor. "I promise you I won't."

"That's fine," Scott said, teasingly. "and I suppose I'll be allowed to keep professional secrets." He grinned.

"He's got something up his sleeve," Dana decided with unerring intuition. "I'll drive you home before I dash for the office," Scott said.

To Dana's surprise, the car's nose was pointed in a direction exactly opposite to that which would lead to Scott's old-fashioned cottage.

"Where are we going?" "Wives shouldn't ask questions?" Presently they drew up in front of a large brick building, fronting a busy thoroughfare. They went inside, caught the elevator, and got out on the fifth floor. Scott slipped a key in a door and flung it wide: "Welcome home, Mrs. Stanley!"

Dana caught her breath sharply. Her bewildered eyes met Scott's smiling ones.

"Home? Why Scott!" "Sit down and take it easy." "I'll have to. I'm weak from amazement," Dana said.

HER eyes had taken it all in, in that first, quick glance. It was one of those efficiency type apartments. Behind the paneling would be a roll-away bed. Back of the door would be a small, gloomy, box-like kitchen. There was an enameled breakfast set in the alcove. The furniture was upholstered in a dull mulberry shade. Obviously the woodwork and floors had been recently "done over." Everything looked shiny and new.

Scott said, "I found I could rent the old house for enough to take this apartment. It was about an even exchange. I rather liked the old house, but it isn't very convenient. And, after all, you're the one who'll be spending most of the time at home."

So Scott had rented that darling old house with its mellow, ivory paneling and lovely old things for this—this place! Because of the electric ice box, because it would be warm this winter and easy to keep. So much easier than the rambling, picturesque cottage. He'd given up his home to make her comfortable.

Dana, her head against his shoulder, whispered: "It was dear of you to think of it—it's going to be play to keep."

"That's what I thought," Scott agreed contentedly. "It has all the conveniences. Hot water every minute. Electric ice box. Three exposures."

"How long is the lease?" Dana asked. "For a year."

A year would pass before she knew it. She wouldn't begin by letting material things matter. It was the spirit of it that counted. Scott's thinking of her before himself. Wanting to please her. So awfully proud of himself for being able to present her with this brand-new-looking and convenient apartment.

"It's a darling place," Dana said, and somehow meant it.

Her arms went around Scott. They kissed, when Scott kissed her like that, what did anything matter! (To Be Continued)

Texas Topics

By RAYMOND BROOKS

AUSTIN, Dec. 10.—Without waiting for the vast volume of Centennial year travel, people are riding more miles each year over Texas highways.

The state gasoline tax during the past two years has been increasing at the rate of about $600,000 per year. That means on an average of two million car miles per year.

Centennial year is expected, through the great number of out-of-state visitors and the extensive travel of Texans themselves, very greatly to increase this travel and augment the tax revenue fund.

The highway department has been advancing a very large road improvement and construction fund constantly adding more miles of good road, and in closing gaps by the construction of a few miles making hundreds of miles of paved highway available to motorists.

Two other factors have contributed to the higher revenues; substantial progress in recovery from the depression, and Texas' very steady and appreciable gain in population.

Representative Augustine Celaya of Brownsville foresees the "luxury" sales tax as the product of the January or February session of the legislature to finance old-age pensions.

He has pointed out what appeared true at the time, that the Texas house, on the final day of the recent session, would have accepted a luxury sales tax, coupled to the natural resources and occupation levies, had it been brought in. The house refused to withdraw instructions to its conferees against any form of sales tax, and as a consequence, turned down the increases which industries offered to pay.

The sales tax as will be offered will exempt all food articles and groceries, all farm products, medicine and services, and low-priced clothing.

But general indications are that there will be considerably less prospect of passing such a widespread levy next year than there was in November. The state has adopted sales taxes on gasoline, cigarettes and liquor, though the tax on liquor is in the form of excise levy and may be absorbed in the total price rather than collected separately.

UPSETS MARK 20-YEAR PLAY IN ROSE BOWL

EDITOR'S NOTE:—This is the first of a series on Rose Bowl football written by George H. Beale, who has seen all of the games he describes.

By GEORGE H. BEALE
United Press Staff Correspondent
NEW YORK, Dec. 10 — From a modest beginning as a means to all Southern California's winter climate to the world's attention, the annual New Year's Day Tournament of Roses football game has grown to be recognized as one of the brilliant closing contests of each intercollegiate football season.

Now the Rose Bowl attracts from 500 to 90,000 fans, the game commands universal attention and frequently settles the national championship.

An example of this is the coming tournament of Roses contest which is bringing together two of the outstanding teams of the nation.

Packed With Thrills

The success of the Rose Bowl games—all of which means the other success of the idea of publishing the climate—finds its base in the tradition that they have established football history through spectacular.

Every football fan, for instance, remembers that day in 1929 when Riegels, one of the game and centers the West ever had, ran wrong way to give Georgia an 8 to 7 victory over his own team.

Now gridiron followers can forget 1921 game when Harold Brickler threw a 70-yd pass that helped California demoralize and defeat State 28-0. The record books years carried it as the longest ever completed.

Another famous Rose Bowl contest saw Knute Rockne's Four men ride to a 27 to 10 victory over a great Stanford team that

BRITAIN FAILS IN QUEST FOR NEW MARKETS

LONDON, Dec. 10.—British Board of Trade's first official survey of the effects of the 1932 general tariff shows that British producers for the most part have succeeded in capturing the bulk of the home market but thus far have failed to make any headway with exports.

Since exports are considered vital to British economy, it is considered certain that this aspect of the tariff experiment will be raised in Parliament soon.

The Board of Trade's report, of which Part I has just been published, is a voluminous affair covering textiles, leather and clothing, food, chemicals and allied trades, and a number of miscellaneous industries. Other parts will be published as rapidly as they are completed.

Compared With 1930

What the board's statisticians have done is to compare conditions in 1930—the last wholly free trade year—with 1933, which was the first complete year under the new tariff regime. They point out warningly that world trade in general was lower in 1933 than it was in 1930, so that to some extent the failure of British manufacturers to increase their exports in 1933 may fairly be attributed to the fact that available markets has declined. To this the free traders reply that the new tariff increased British costs and that so long as those costs remain high, the markets lost in 1933 are lost for an indefinite period.

A typical and important example of the trend shown is that of cotton piece goods. In 1930 Lancashire had 92.1 per cent of the home market and in 1933 it had increased its hold to 98.9 per cent. But whereas in 1930 exports demanded 72 per cent of its production, in 1933 exports had fallen to 58.0 per cent.

Another important example given is that of woollen and worsted tissues in which British manufacturers increased their hold on the home market from 85.2 per cent to 97.8 per cent while at the same time the proportion of their output for export fell from 35.9 per cent to 24.4 per cent. These two examples are of political importance, for the textile trades in the main have no enthusiasm for tariffs.

Output Gains Substantially

But protection of the home market, according to the report, has enabled British manufacturers to increase their output substantially as follows: rayon yarn, up 40 per cent; rayon piece goods, 249 per cent; thrown silk, 135 per cent; woolen and worsted manufacturers, 27 per cent; cotton piece goods 13 per cent; unfurled oils and tallow, 28 per cent; outer covers for cycle tires, 34 per cent; inner cycle tubes, 59 per cent; rubber shoes, 92 per cent.

However, for various reasons some industries contracted their output in 1933 compared with 1930. Example was only 71 per cent of that of 1930. Asbestos fell to 84 per cent of the 1930 level; white lead to 87 per cent; refined oils to 82 per cent; buttons to 67 per cent; glycerine to 77 per cent.

In all cases the 1933 figures are converted to 1930 prices to make them comparable.

MIDGETS END SEASON WITH SCOUT TEAM

The Cisco Grammar School Midgets will be playing their final game of the season when they meet the Cisco Scouts on Chesley field this afternoon at 4 o'clock.

The Midgets will be seeking a perfect record for the year—an unbroken goal line.

So far, they have run up a total of 205 points in eight games to none for their opponents. Only once have they been held to a one-touchdown victory, although they have consistently stepped out of their class to play larger and older teams.

Proceeds from the game will go to a fund to purchase letters for the Midgets.

Cowboys Work For San Bowl Contest

ABILENE, Dec. 10.—Hardin-Simmons university gridgers went back to work Monday for their San Bowl engagement with the New Mexico Aggies in El Paso, January 1. A two day layoff was given the Cowboys last weekend by Head Coach Frank Kimbrough.

The Ranchers will be without the services of Leslie Clary, regular right end, who has been out with stomach trouble since the Howard Payne game. Three other squadmen, Alton Terry, Gordon Wood, and Clifford Wheeler, all ends, have reported for basketball drills and will not make the El Paso trip. Kimbrough will take the rest of his forty-man squad to the Sun classic.

New Business For Texas On Increase

AUSTIN, Dec. 10.—The number of new charters granted by the secretary of state in November to corporations for carrying on business in Texas increased substantially over the preceding month and over November last year, and the increase in total capitalization was even more marked than the increase in number, according to records compiled by the University of Texas bureau of business research.

A total of 131 new corporations was chartered with aggregate capital of $2,617,000 an increase of 31 per cent in the number and 143 per cent in capitalization over the corresponding month last year. Groups showing the largest gains in new corporations chartered were as follows: Oil, manufacturing, banking, finance, and merchandising the bureau's report said.

TEXAS EXPERT BEATS OKLAHOMA MAN IN CIGARETTE-ROLLING CONTEST

Photo shows Frank Marts, of Texas, who recently rolled a cigarette with Prince Albert in 6 seconds, by official stop-watch time, in a friendly contest with a man from Oklahoma. The Oklahoma man's time was 11 seconds. "Rolling your own is sheer pleasure with Prince Albert," Mr. Marts says, "because P. A. rolls so easy and smokes so good."

Thousands and thousands have written us, commending Prince Albert for easier rolling, better smoking. For the benefit of others, we print below a fair and square proposition by which they can try P. A. at our risk.

Prince Albert uses choicest tobacco, "crimp cut" so P. A. rolls quicker, burns longer. The famous P. A. "no-bite" process assures mildness. And P. A. is packed in the big red two-ounce tin that keeps your tobacco in condition. Good in a pipe too!

WHAT'S YOUR TIME?

HERE IS OUR OFFER:
Roll yourself 30 swell cigarettes from Prince Albert. If you don't find them the finest, tastiest roll-your-own cigarettes you ever smoked, return the tin with the rest of the tobacco in it to us at any time within a month from this date, and we will refund full purchase price, plus postage.
