Marketing Farm Crops Through Dairying

The dairy program for Cisco farmers is a fitting one. The farm territory lying north and west of Cisco, is small grain and grazing land, tight black or limy soils that can grow wheat, oats, barley and corn or any of the maize. The rough hills and valleys grow grass pasturage almost continuously throughout the year.

To the south and east, the sandy, lighter soils will grow grain, sudan grass, maize, kaffir corn and sorghums, and good corn on the heavier soils. Thus all of these soils are fitting for feed, and thus, for dairying purposes.

The program is also timely. Time was when all of these farms, especially in the lighter soils, were the seats of vast cotton producing areas. Three things tended to destroy that program.

The boll weevil wrought havoc and his ravages still continue, though in a measure controlled.

The soil depleted by means of a one-crop program, year after year, and hence could no longer produce rapidly, which was necessary to combat the weevil.

Then the changing in the standard of living for farmers every where, has had much to do with making cotton no longer a profitable crop. Farmers do not care to take their wives and children into the fields at daylight and keep them toiling until dark, as was the case when king cotton was in sway. Nothing short of that kind of work can make cotton profitable in the small farm section.

And so dairying is a needful program. Feed can be grown, but does not answer for a money crop. It is not profitable as a shipping crop, and when farmers make a bumper feed crop on account of increased acreage to food, there is no local demand because every farmer has more feed than he can use himself.

Thus the dairy program will take care of this surplus of feed than can be produced abundantly any year by increasing the acreage, and thus the milk program fills the place of the needed money crop.

Further, the land, where terracing was neglected, depleted by the one-crop plan through the years, must be rebuilt either by commercial fertilizer or by restoring in some other way. The by-product from dairy herds supplies the fertilizer needed to restore the land and make it richer and more productive each year, without an out-lay for commercial fertilizer.

And so it is a paying program. Dairying provides a market for feed grown on the farms; it provides fertilizer for keeping up and increasing the fertility of the soil each year; and provides an added return through the natural increase of the herd by calves.

No other program has ever had so many advantages. Let's start it now.

Scientist says that as people grow older their ears get larger. Which reminds us—according to a recent item, Clark Gable was a step-grandfather.

Hitler based his latest move on Germany's Welianschauhing (World Outlook). France, however, seems to think it more a matter of World Look Out.

OUT OUR WAY

LETTERS FROM OUR READERS

To The Editor:
For the past week or so I have been noticing the articles and editorials you have been carrying in your excellent newspaper, encouraging the farmers of the Cisco trade territory to cooperate with the chamber of commerce and the gentlemen from Abilene in trying to bring a milk depot or a cheese factory to this city.
I like the attitude you are taking in this matter and the foresight you are portraying in trying to bring us an industry that has a future to it, one that will build the community substantially in the years to come. I don't know of any industry that builds a community any more substantial than the dairy industry. Not only does it bring the farmer a nice check of fifty or sixty dollars or more a month, but it also is an industry that naturally conserves soil and diversifies the whole farm program with its companion industries like poultry raising, hog raising, and the raising of feed stuffs.
If farmers would stop and think a moment of benefits derived from this industry they would not have to be encouraged to furnish milk for a cheese factory or creamery. I believe if our farmers were wide awake they would have given up the raising of cotton and peanuts and other one-crop sources of income and would have been in the dairy business in a small way a long time ago and demanding a market instead of sitting by and having one practically forced on them.

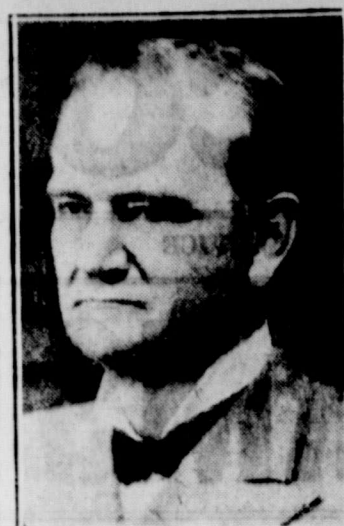

Every one who reads, knows of the profitable farms in Wisconsin, Iowa, and other northern states. They also know these farms with their fine houses, big barns and silos were built exclusively through the dairying industry.
Of course there are some who try to argue that Wisconsin especially, is adapted to dairying and it cannot be carried on as profitably in Texas as it is there. That idea is all wrong and absolutely without foundation.
I was in northern Wisconsin twenty-five years ago when the dairying industry was in its infancy. Here is how the dairying industry got its start in Wisconsin:
The big lumber companies had millions of acres of cut-over land that contained nothing but stumps, undergrowth brush, side hills, and soil so poor that about the only thing that could be raised on it was a quarrel over whether a fellow should have it given to him or not.

But that land was sold to thrifty foreigners—Germans, Norwegians, Danes, and others who knew the value of the dairy cow in their native country. They stocked their farms with a few cows and raised their feed between stumps and rocks. The cows brought in the ready cash, through cream checks, built up the herds through their off-springs and the gravel soil was built up through fertilizer from the herd.

Had those farmers attempted any other procedure such as the growing of grain for market, potatoes or any other farm product that brings nothing back to the soil they would have starved or the government would have had to set up a relief fund and a dozen A's long before it did.

Climatic conditions in Wisconsin are anything but favorable for dairying. The growing and pasturage season is exceedingly short. Barns have to be built warm. Silos must be built to furnish green feeds for the cows. But the industry thrives there and those farmers are making money. They have hogs, chickens, and a cellar full of vegetables and fruits and being of foreign descent, they also have wine.
Now I just wonder what could be done here in Texas where climatic conditions are ideal for pasturage and crops, and the general comfort of the dairy cow. In my estimation this is the ideal spot for dairying and our farmers should jump at the chance of having a market offered them.

Did you ever notice the difference in the aroma of Chesterfield tobacco?

Every person who knows about tobacco will understand this... for to get a pleasing aroma is just like getting a pleasing taste from fruit.

Flowers Planted On Vacant Spot

In keeping with the beautification spirit now occupying the time of the garden club, aided by the Twentieth Century Club, and assisted by the Junior Chamber of Commerce with their cleanup campaign, Mrs. Harriett Evans at the Moore Drug store, has planted a little flower garden at the curb at the north front of the store.

Mrs. Evans explained that the spot was serving no good purpose except to separate the sidewalk from the building and that she considered some Flanders (red) poppies and Zenias would add a touch of color.

She has done the planting and "Doc", the colored porter, is doing the labor.

High-Speed Living Taxes Digestion

RUSH HOUR—tired nerves tighten, often send us to the table in no shape to enjoy food. Camels have the pleasant effect, during and after meals, of aiding and promoting digestion.

Smoking Camels found to have a positive beneficial effect upon Digestion...

Our modern "eat-and-run" way of living is hard on digestion. Experiences with indigestion are common! Hence unusual interest attaches to the following fact: that smoking Camels has been found to have a marked beneficial effect in aiding digestive action. You'll find Camels milder too, packed with the rich enjoyment of choice tobaccos.

Turn to Camels for digestion's sake... for the pleasure to be found in Camel's costlier tobaccos. Camels set you right!

A SENSATION! Henry Taft Snowdon, '34, intercollegiate wrestling champion. Snowdon says: "It's my experience that smoking Camels after meals and between meals aids digestion."

OTIS BARTON, inventor of the "bathysphere," says diving tests condition—especially digestion. "Camels help make my food digest better."

LESTER STOEFFEN, former U.S. Doubles Champion, says: "Camels help food to digest easier. Eating at odd hours all over the country, I smoke Camels for digestion's sake."

COSTLIER TOBACCOS!

Camels are made from finer, MORE EXPENSIVE TOBACCOS—Turkish and Domestic—than any other popular brand.

"CAMELS ARE A FAVORITE with us here," says Mr. Joe Moss, who presides over New York's Hollywood Restaurant (above). "I see Camels on lots of tables. We've found that success comes through giving people the best. The fact that Camels use costlier tobaccos and people prefer Camels shows that they appreciate the same policy in other lines too."
