Commencement Costs

Says a reporter who has been investigating the high cost of education in American high schools, graduation costs boys about $65 and girls about $50 apiece. The additional cost for sons includes "prom" tickets which daughter does not have to buy. In some schools where the class dance comes out of the common class treasury, the sums might be more nearly even, except, of course, in schools where daughter makes her own commencement dress while father has to buy son's new outfit. The other items of expense include the class ring or pin, the school annual, the heavy exchange of photographs, the commencement invitations and cards to go with them, the tickets for fond relatives who attend the exercises, and flowers. Possibly there are some foolish or needless items on the list, but we'd hate to be the reformer to point them out. Anyone who thinks back to his own high school commencement will at once realize what a serious, happy, exceedingly import- Long the status of "dictator." ant business it is. The Young Ice Man

Daughter Seventeen evinced a growing desire to see the ice box was kept clean and showed a strange willingness to do the dishes Saturday afternoons so that mother could get her marketing over earlier. Mother happened to be in the kitchen one Saturday when the ice was delivered, and the secret was out. One of the nicest boys in school was working on the ice wagon Saturdays to help with his college fund. Mother and father smiled a bit, and mother continued to take advantage of her early marketing and the neater care of the food. "Sometimes these crushes last as much as six weeks," she told father, "and meanwhile, behold our progress in domestic science!" Then one night when one of those cars in the last rattling stages which seem the approved means of transportating high school youths and maidens home from meetings and play rehearsals drove in with a half dozen kids in and on it, the driver ran daughter in to the back door instead of leaving her at the front. "I'm more used to going to the back door," he remarked to the ret solemnly. Father and mother smiled again, but with thorough approval. Here was not only a boy of fine family, willing to do a little honest hard work; but so far from being ashamed of it, he was acclaiming it as a matter of fact and taking his back door business as a joke. Lots of sensible kids floating around
