CONFERENCES ARE ALL OFF, SAYS MARTIN

DETROIT, Mich., Jan. 18 (U.P.)—Attempts of General Motors and United Automobile Workers to open negotiations on wages, hours and working conditions failed today, "Present conferences are all off," said Homer Martin, strike leader as he left a meeting attended by William Knudsen, vice president of General Motors and other officials.

General Motors made no announcement immediately. The breakdown of negotiations came quickly. The rival parties were deadlocked when the meeting opened, each insisting the other had violated the truce reached last week.

General Motors accused the Union of breaching the agreement by failing to remove strikers from two plants in Flint. The Union said General Motors was guilty of "bad faith" because it tried to re-open the Cadillac plant here after sitdown strikers moved out. It refused to permit picketing at the lamp plant in Anderson, Ind. It agreed to bargain collectively with non-union employees who were not parties to the Lansing truce.

LEWIS SAYS READY TO NEGOTIATE

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18 (U.P.)—John L. Lewis, informed that General Motors officials and United Automobile Workers were conferring in Detroit, said today: "Our people are ready to negotiate to a conclusion with the situation in status quo."

Officials said they believed the Union was in a strong position as a result of occupation of two Fisher body plants by strikers. They declared General Motors would be unable to make automobiles so long as body production was halted.

Prosperity and Labor Troubles

This is the time when the professional forecasters swing into action—and the business and financial magazines have all come out with oversized "Review and Forecast" issues. Generally speaking, the commentators and the magazines agree in their guesses as to the course of future events, namely that business is getting better, the public's power to consume is gradually approaching industry's power to produce, the national income is on the rise (though the rise is being offset to a considerable extent by rises in commodity prices) and wages and dividends are reflecting the improvement. But there is at least one big fly in the ointment—labor troubles, existing and prospective.

In the words of the conservative Annalist, "The three largest manufacturing industries enter the new year with heavy unfilled orders. Ordinarily such a situation would virtually guarantee a satisfactory state of business, even though a few important industries remained depressed. But the expected outbreak of labor disturbances is becoming serious enough to constitute a threat to general business stability."

Labor is split wide open today. On the one side is the A. F. of L., with its faith in craft unions. On the other is John L. Lewis, advocate of one big industrial union and direct action. Some think that Mr. Lewis' ambition is to build up a labor political party, such as exists in France and England. Whether that is true or not, Mr. Lewis seems bent on bringing the old closed-shop vs. open-shop issue to a head.

One aim of the United Mine Workers (Mr. Lewis' union, which is supported by a number of other large unions) is to unionize steel, adamant defender of the open shop. This is about as difficult a job as could be imagined and, whichever side wins, must result in controversies continuing over a period of years. So in the meantime, Mr. Lewis has centered his attack on a big industry which he—and most unprejudiced observers—regard as being highly vulnerable. That is the automobile industry.

Reasons for motor's vulnerability is that it is dependent for existence on other, scattered industries—glass makers, time makers, machine-tool makers, etc. These related industries, though big when all units within them are considered, are mainly broken up into small, decentralized units. In other words, it is sometimes possible to tie up a big automobile manufacturer by bringing about a strike in some relatively small factory which makes, for example, glass.

Mr. Lewis has centered his circuit attack on General Motors. It being a representative big car maker. Demands are plain and unequivocal—and heading them all is the demand for a 100 per cent closed shop. General Motors through its president, Alfred Sloan, has replied that it cannot countenance this, that it will dicker with unions or any other employe representatives, but that it will not demand that a man belong to any organization before it gives him a job. That is, it stands firmly for the open shop.

The feeling is growing that if the menace to stability caused by labor troubles is to be eliminated with fairness to both sides, the Federal government must do a great deal more than it has in the past. There is strong sentiment in the west—where a seaman's strike has kept all Pacific coast shipping tied up for nearly three months—in favor of the president taking a hand, something he has formerly refused to do. Mediation by the parties involved has got nowhere, and there is little reason for believing that it will get anywhere in the future. As a result, the "labor question" will undoubtedly appear as an issue in the current Congress, and will be thoroughly thrashed out.

King without a country by Robert Bruce

BEGIN HERE TODAY PAUL I. King of Northumbria, becomes a private citizen. PAUL FERROSE when he advocates for the love of ARDATH RICHMOND, a leading actress. Paul's younger brother, JOSEPH, succeeds to the kingship. With calm dignity, Paul signs the formal abdication documents and then flies away to marry Ardath. They choose a charming villa on the Bay of St. Francis. Paul reveals in his new freedom, the joys of a life with his bride. And then one day he walks into the nearby village of San Lorenzo and finds he is not free at all—the eyes of the curious, possessive, whole world, are on him, as he goes to his home at San Lorenzo. He flies home to seek at heart.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY The characters and situations in this story are wholly fictional and imaginary and are not intended to portray any actual persons or events. CHAPTER IV STARTLED, Paul spun about. There stood a short man in a tweed suit—a short man, profoundly tanned, with a little gray nose, and with dark eyes that looked out of a network of fine wrinkles.

his to make, and—knowing him as I do—I am sure that he did not make it lightly. It is what comes after the decision that worries me now." HIS eyes sought Paul's and found them, held them, bored relentlessly into the soul of the man who had once been monarch. "But the time is so short," protested Paul at length. "After all, Doctor, it has only been six weeks since my abdication. What can I do, at this time? If I go out anywhere there are tourists and newspaper people and all sorts of idly curious gawkers to cluster around me. I almost fall over them. Can't I at least wait here until that sort of thing dies down a bit?" "It will never die down," said the archeologist. "You will carry around with you the king you used to be, for the rest of your life. He will stand at your elbow wherever you go, and you will see his reflection in people's eyes to the end of your life."

"I didn't exchange it for anything, strictly speaking. But if you must make a bargain out of it, let's say I exchanged it for—life, for freedom, for the chance to realize whatever potentialities I have for living." "Hmmm. And all of this is life, freedom and the chance to realize your God-given potentialities?" Paul colored. His old tutor could always make him feel like a stammering schoolboy who had scamped his lessons. "That isn't fair, either, Doctor," he said. "You take one night at a frivolous night resort and make it stand for a whole career." Dr. Sonders shook his head and thrust his goatee forward aggressively. "Paul, Paul, it isn't just one night. I read the papers, my boy." "The papers?" "SURELY. You don't suppose that the people of Northumbria are left in ignorance of the way in which you are spending your time, do you? They get all the details—including, doubtless, some that are quite imaginary. But unless there is a great deal more of imagination in these accounts than I have ever known our newspapers to be guilty of, this night is a pretty fair sample, after all." "I don't mean," he went on, raising a hand as Paul opened his lips to protest, "I don't mean that there's anything so terribly bad or abandoned about this crowd here tonight. There's no harm in them. Not in most of them, anyhow. But Paul, Paul—I do

LOSS OF SCALP LITERALLY TRUE IN INDIAN DEAL

TULSA, Okla., Jan. 18 (AP)—An example of Indian bargaining methods—a "friendly" offer of 20 ponies in exchange for a man's scalp—was closed today in records brought to light by WPA historians. Al Gifford and Jack Wimberly were cutting hay one sultry August morning in 1880 near Bigheart, Okla. A band of Osage Indians rode up. Their leader explained that they wanted Gifford's scalp, offering 20 ponies as payment. Gifford demurred. The chief explained that they had not taken a legitimate scalp in battle in several years and that the one which they used in their dances and ceremonies had been lost or stolen. Gifford refused to sell the top of his head, regretfully, but forcefully, the Osages overpowered him and took the scalp, anyway, leaving the 20 ponies as proof of their earnest desire to make it a peaceful bargain. Wimberly nursed Gifford to recovery, crediting his own escape to the fact that he was red-haired. Gages never were known to take the scalp of a red-haired man.

Student Earns Tuition as Cream Connoisseur

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Jan. 18 (AP)—Francis A. Chert of Boston, Massachusetts Technology Institute sophomore, is literally living off the "fat of the land" while earning college tuition. Chert is a "cream taster" at a local dairy. After two summers of ceaseless sipping to decide whether cream is sweet or sour, he has become a connoisseur. And his job enables him to pay his entire tuition as well as everyday expenses. Chert says the secret of success in "tasting" is to sip and not swallow. Though cream is supposed to be fattening, Chert lost 12 pounds on the job last summer.

BRITISH POSTOFFICE PROFITS LONDON (AP)—The British Post office made a profit of $71,000,000 in 1935, compared with $59,725,000 in 1934, an annual report reveals. The total value of the postoffice's transactions with the public during 1935 and 1936 exceeded $4,505,000,000—$200,000,000 more than the previous year.

Son of 'Scotty' Is in U.S.N.

Only child of Walter E. Scott and Mrs. Elizabeth E. Scott, Jr., is an enlisted man in the navy, stationed at San Diego, Calif. He spends most of his shore time with his mother, who has filed a suit for maintenance against the navy. He is the son of the "Scotty" who "settled" the desert figure, because she waited vainly for him for "Scotty" to "settle."
