LONE STAR FIRST AID ON PROGRAM

The Lone Star First Aid Safety team, winner of the national contest last year at Tulsa, Okla., over fifty competing teams, were the guests of H. L. Dyer, program chairman at the Lions luncheon today and made good on demonstrations of their work that looked to Lion members about 100 per cent perfect.

This team was introduced by E. K. Smith, pipe line superintendent of Ranger. Les Taylor, chief engineer of plant No. 1, Ranger explained the work of the six working members of the team, who although they were in the shirt sleeves, perspired freely so intense were their efforts on the imaginary patient, E. D. Williams of Breckenridge.

The first aid case was an injured head, dislocated shoulder and a wound and compound fracture of the thigh. The patient was hastily covered with a blanket and corded above the bad wound in the thigh. Work progressed rapidly, each worker calling out what particular thing he was doing while Mr. Taylor explained in general as the treatment continued.

The work was thorough and made a deep impression of the audience. O. L. Stamey requested that the team give a demonstration at the high school soon.

Those composing the visitors team were: E. K. Smith, pipe line superintendent, Ranger; Les Taylor, chief engineer, plant No. 1, Ranger; E. C. Lauey, Breckenridge; J. T. Keiknap, Ranger; W. D. Town and Country Cooperation

Both farmers and merchants benefit from mutual understanding and cooperation. Lack of this understanding and cooperation encourages antipathy and avarice. An article in a farm magazine suggests the establishment of community improvement organizations, composed of both city and farm residents, to analyze the shortcomings in community welfare and provide for remedying them. Says M. R. Bedsole, the writer of this article:

"While teaching in a small rural school recently, I sat in a small store and watched a merchant render real service to his farmer patrons. He ordered the best available poultry feeds for them. He bought their eggs by reference to daily market quotations furnished by the state marketing service. As a real friend to his farmer customers, he offered valuable criticisms and suggestions. This man, by keeping abreast of agricultural progress, thus rendered great service to his community. He realized that his future success depended on those who traded with him. He not only provided farm equipment and other supplies of superior quality, but arranged to purchase the daily production of surrounding farmers and send by truck to distant markets so as to secure higher prices for fresh eggs.

"In some towns local citizens have formed helpful committees for marketing farm produce. Some have contacted distant markets and shipped by consignment to reputable wholesale dealers. Others have effected similar results through competitive bidding in auction sales, members of the board of trade bidding in competition with purchasers from other places. This has generally brought about higher prices for farm produce and more satisfied understanding between producer and buyer.

"In conclusion, it appears that the white-collared town resident and the overworked farmer should consider first and last the welfare of the whole community, rural and urban. Does your community possess this kind of business men? Does your town provide all possible advantages and conveniences for farmer customers? For one thing, many towns do not have suitable facilities for metal construction and repair or suitable woodworking establishments for farm implements and devices. Progress in other sections is held back by the grasping short-sightedness of business men in importing inferior work animals and failing to help farmers to buy purebred swine and cattle sires and so develop a livestock industry. The communities are indeed fortunate which have town leaders continually interested in helping farmers prosper as the surest guarantee of prosperity for the town also."

In addition to the colored orchestra, blackface musicians and black magic that will be a part of the Lions minstrel entertainment at the high school auditorium Thursday night, much wit and humor will be floating in the air. Here is a sample of wisecracks that may be expected:

Old Mammy: "Ah wants a ticket for Euphonia."
Agent: "Where is Euphonia?"
Mammy: "Over there on the bench."

Bones, the star of the darktown strutters ball, says there is a law against being happy at his house and when asked what kind of law he replied, a mother-in-law.

The comedians all have some of the most heartbreaking stories to themselves and the most side-splitting to the audience, some of the subjects to be discussed are of course the mother-in-law, the darkey's mule, his chickens and various accidents that happen to a darkey.

In the last act, a farce comedy, "The Hotel LaGuma" some inmates from the crazy house come to a hotel where a colored porter is employed . . . Then there is the cry of "Wild Bill is loose." The porter says, "Yeah, there is some more around here that is loose, too."

H. L. Dyer reads in the Lions code of ethics that:

"Always to bear in mind my obligations as a citizen to my nation, my state and my community, and to give to them my unswerving loyalty in word, act and deed. To give them freely of my time, labor and means."

—And he interprets that clause to mean, "Sell tickets to the Lions minstrel Thursday night."

King without a country by Robert Bruce

BEGIN HERE TODAY

Paul, King of Northumbria, becomes a private citizen PAUL FERROE when he surrenders his throne and marries ARDATH RICHMOND, Canadian-born actress. Paul's younger brother, JOSEPH, succeeds to the kingship.

Paul and Ardath choose a villa on the Bay St. Francis for a few days their life is glorious. Then the eyes of the world find them, pry in deep. Paul goes into seclusion, sick at heart.

Their only companions in this resort town of San Francisco are the vacuous COQUETTE DI MARCO, her playboy friend REGGIE VAN TWYNE, and MRS. VAN TWYNE. Paul and Ardath follow the casino crowds but it becomes a boring affair.

Paul, meanwhile, meets his old tutor, DR. WINDERS, archeologist. The doctor urges Paul to get a hold on himself, to do something. Paul and Ardath begin a European tour, and up in Paris. They attend a party at the home of DR. DE MONTMIRAL, intellectual and patron of the arts. A guest, not knowing Paul, opens the conversation about exiled kings and stuns Ardath. Enraged, Paul knocks him down, finds the man is a Parisian. The Duc warns Paul all Paris will hear of the encounter.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

CHAPTER VI
THE gloomy prediction of the Duc de Montmiral proved just correct. Before a week had passed all of Paris was reading hat the former King Paul of Northumbria had knocked down the novelist, Raoul Bayard, in a brawl at the home of a distinguished Parisian patron of the arts.

Some morbid instinct for self-justification led Paul to collect the Parisian journals and read the accounts of the affair—accounts which, in the repeating, were grossly distorted. He looked at them, in his hotel room, with a wistful smile on his lips.

"Don't, dear," begged Ardath. "You hurt yourself when you don't need to. What does it matter, after all, what those things say?"

"Very little, I suppose," said Paul. "And yet—look at this one." He held up an article for her to read.

"That the runaway king should light is neither surprising nor disturbing," said this article. "What is surprising is that he should have been a guest in the house of the Duc de Montmiral where the encounter took place. That house is France's most distinguished salon; there one may meet artists, scientists, musicians, replete folk who are far removed from the thoughtless crowd that nests the lovely Bay St. Francis. What, one asks, was this self-deposed monarch doing in that company? It is far more startling to learn that the distinguished patron would have him as a guest than to learn—"

"Ardath threw it on the floor. "I won't read it," she cried. "It's true—true—and so unjust! What do they know of you, anyway?"

Paul stood up. "They know what I have shown them, I suppose," he said. "After all, my dear, people are very often judged by the company they keep. And I—"

"Oh!" The color drained from her face. "And you have been . . . have been with me constantly, and my name is a byword, and—"

"MY darling!" He was at her side instantly, his arms around her. "Ardath, my love, my life, don't say that. You know I didn't mean that. You are all I have and all I ever hope to have. You—"

She put her fingers on his lips and looked up, hurt and serious. "I know you didn't mean it," she said gently. "But it's true. These people whom everyone suddenly seems to find so—so distasteful, are my people, after all. They're my friends, the friends I've always had. I'm a part of that set. I have brought this on you. Oh, Paul, Paul, my darling, what am I doing to you?"

He held her close.

"You are doing nothing to me," he said, "except make my life free. The rest—it doesn't matter, after all. The world at large may think what it pleases. I have you, and that's enough. It's everything."

Yet it was not shrugged off quite as simply as that. A shadow had fallen across them, and it was a shadow that would not be talked out of existence. It was the shadow, perhaps, of a throne that had been given up, a shadow that no magic could ever dispel but that would remain forever, never quite forgotten, to chill even the flame of love itself.

They left Paris and went back to the villa San Margarete, Winter on the Bay St. Francis was as benign as summer. The blue water held just a little more chill, perhaps, the dawn light was just a little colder and less balmy than in the summer; but the afternoon sunlight was still a warm blanket beneath which one could drowse the day away, and the evenings were languorous under the rich blue sub-tropical sky.

But an increasing restlessness was on Paul; a restlessness that made even the warm sunlight, the exquisite loveliness of the sea and the unfeeling softness of the bay's famous breeze from the south, seem cloying and over-sweet. And he brought it all out, or tried to, one evening.

Ardath was in her dressing room, dressing for an entertainment to which they were about to go. Paul sat on a chaise longue, lighted a cigaret, smoked moodily for a moment, and then said, "Dearest, what do you say we chuck it all?"

"Chuck it?" she repeated. Startled, she turned to look at him; in her left hand she still held up the hand mirror in which she had been inspecting some detail or other of her make-up. "Chuck it?" You mean—our life with each other?"

"Sweetheart! No! No—I mean this . . . this life here on the bay. How would it be if we uprooted ourselves and went—went somewhere and made a fresh start?"

She laid the mirror down. Her face had grown pale at his first words; now the blood returned to it again.

"Where would you go?" she asked. "What would you do?"

"Oh—" Paul hesitated. "I'd get clear away from this place and—all of these people. I'd—"

He stopped, and very painstakingly tamped his cigaret butt in an ashtray.

"DO you know what I've always half-wanted to do?" he went on at last. "I've always thought I might like to live—"

he looked at her doubtfully, then continued—"to live on a ranch. In Canada, perhaps, or the western United States, or even in the Argentine."

She said, "A ranch?"
"Yes. Please don't laugh, dearest."
"I'm not."
She got up and came over to him. She sat beside him and tenderly put her arms around him.

"Paul, my dearest boy, my sweetheart," she said softly, "are you as bored as all that with me? Is life here so unendurable that you must dream a dream like that?"

"Love, love—remember, I've seen America. I've seen those ranches at close range. Those plains are wide, and they're lonely. The winters are cruel and the summers are scorching; they hit you with dust storms and tornadoes and drought and plagues of grasshoppers."

SHE broke off and stroked his cheek gently.

"Tell me, dear boy," she was saying, taking his face between her palms, "has it been a bad gain for you?"

"No, no, dear one," he cried suddenly, tightening his arms about her. "Oh, my darling, my angel—no!"

But as their lips came together they felt across them, unbidden and unadmitted, the shadow of the lost throne.

Ford Plant Makes 25,000,000th Car

DEARBORN, Mich., Jan. 20 — Henry Ford stood Monday at the end of the final assembly line at the Ford Motor company Rouge Plant and watched workman build the 25,000,000 Ford.

By his side was his son, Edsel Ford, the president of the Ford Motor company, and the chiefs of his world-wide organization. The only other observers of the historic event were a small group of newspapermen.

As the 25,000,000th car reached the end of the final assembly line and the inspectors had finished their work Mr. Ford climbed into the front passenger seat. His son slipped into the driver's seat, pressed the starter button and drove the car off the line.

Completion of the 25,000,000th Ford represented the manufacture, over the last thirty-three and a half years, of more motor vehicles than are registered for operation today all over the United States.

Mr. Ford, his son, other Ford executives and the invited guests watched the entire progress of the 25,000,000th car from the time it began its journey down the final assembly line—a bare frame, with running gear attached—until it reached the end, a sleek shining de luxe Fordor Touring Sedan, with body in cream, wheels in chromium and the 25,000,000th legend decorating the body panels and the trunk compartment hatch.

As the car reached the end of the line it was halted momentarily while the Fordy led a parade of grapples. Then they led a parade through the highway maze of the Rouge plant and out the huge Ford Roundabout nearby, a replica of the central section of the Ford Exposition Building at the Chicago World's Fair in 1934.

There the 25,000,000th car was placed on exhibition as the central feature in a special display of the sequence of Ford models, side-by-side with the first experimental car made by Mr. Ford in 1893 and completed in 1896. The display was over for the occasion from the Edison Institute Museum four miles away in Greenfield Village, included all the important alphabetical models from the first Model A built by Ford in 1903, the seven others which followed, the various Model T's and Model A's and the V-8 models.

Chevrolet Workers Mass to Protect Against Enforced Idleness Caused by Strikers

More than 9,000 men, virtually the entire personnel of the Chevrolet Gear and Axle Division of General Motors Corporation, staged a demonstration last week against the strikes which have shut down General Motors plants and thrown out of work nearly 135,000 workers. The demonstration shown above occurred at the main plant of the Division's four units in Detroit. The employees assembled after this demonstration to receive their pay checks, their last pay until the resumption of operations. The employees' committee voted to publicize their opposition to the strike through personal telegrams to Gov. Frank Murphy of Michigan and to President Roosevelt. The mass demonstration of protest was held under banners carrying these legends: "We don't want a strike." "We want our jobs back."

"We object to minority rule," and "No labor dictators for us." In order to alleviate distress, the Corporation proposes to resume operations on a reduced basis in plants not shut down as a result of these strikes.

FROG FLASHES FROM FT. WORTH IN SPORTSDOM

FORT WORTH, Jan. 20—In 1929 the Horned Frogs had a guard for football captain. His name was Lester "Mike" Brumelow and his number was 44. The Frogs won the conference championship. In 1932 the Horned Frogs had a guard for football captain. His name was Johnny Vaught and his number was 44. The Frogs won the conference championship. In 1937 the Horned Frogs will have a guard for football captain. His name is Mason Mayne and his number is 44. "Man! Has T. C. U. gone superstitious?"

Sam Baugh, it turns out, is also a ladies' man. The girls of C. I. A. voted Sam their "favorite Southwest Conference football player" and gave him a gladstone bag in token of their appreciation. The girls have announced that their award will be an annual one.

To date, Sam has received six watches, two rings, three suits of clothes, two hats, the luggage from C. I. A., as well as numerous other lesser gifts. One of his watches came from San Francisco without any indication of who the donor might be. The watch is engraved with his name and the score of the T. C. U.-Santa Clara game. Also, Sam is developing into a professional goer-outer to banquets. He has attended 27 dinners since the Frogs returned from the Pacific coast and has at least six others scheduled.

The Horned Frog Band, which accompanied the football team all over the country during the season just closed, has done a bit of "all-opponent" picking. The T. C. U. musicians rate the Baylor band tops for musical ability and the Aggie organization first for drilling. They also place the Aggies at the top for reception and treatment.

T. C. U. is now the official Cotton Bowl champion. Prof. E. W. McDiarmid, chairman of the university committee on athletics and president of the Southwest Conference officially presented the Cotton Bowl trophy to Coach Dutch Meyer in a recent chapel ceremony. Coach Meyer, in turn, presented the trophy to Dean Colby D. Hall, who received it on behalf of the university.

DON'T GIVE A COLD AN EVEN BREAK!

Reports from health authorities warn against the danger of the common cold. It is an illness that should be regarded with utmost seriousness. With the warning comes the startling information that fifty per cent of all disabling diseases start with a common cold. If you do catch cold consult your family doctor before it has an opportunity to undermine your health.

If your home is inadequately heated... if you "huddle" in one or two rooms... if some rooms are kept warm while others remain cold, your family cannot avoid sudden temperature changes as they go from room to room. Quick changes of temperature within the home make it easy for the cold germ to attack. Therefore, don't give a common cold an even break. Take the important precaution of providing adequate heat and proper ventilation of fresh air in every room of the home during the treacherous weeks ahead.
