in a rare mood, that appears scrid and dull in some other mood... If that article catches the reader in the right mood it appears humorous or fine as the case may be... Odd, how mortals are, isn't it?... An applause in the show last night was so realistic to a party in the audience, that they forgot themselves and clapped also...
Queer creatures we are... We like a show or a story if it happens to strike a responsive chord within our own souls... A romance that speaks of a sacrifice or a sweet memory of the long ago finds response in our own lives, perhaps, if we have a memory or a secret buried within our own hearts... We become heroic in our minds as we find kindred vibrations echoing from some long forgotten past... Youthful moments of happiness are recalled by a picture or a story that awakens that slumbering, but not dead, past... lovely flowers or a strange perfume reawakens childhood loves that we thought dead and folded away in forgotten recesses of the long ago...
Ambitions long dead and pushed aside, often prove that they may have been stilled but living still as we re-enacted a similar episode on the screen or in a story or song...
Does a flower, a spring meadow or a moonlight night rekindle some sweet, sad echo in your own life? Do you see yourself in imagery a youth again and thrill to the scene conjured up by certain stimuli?... Do you become lonely and sad as you muse on the emptiness of your life and cast vain regret in the dark of the night, as you think what might have been had you taken the path that you didn't choose? And do you sometimes cry out at the futile emptiness of your existence, and can only get sursure from your sadness by throwing the book aside and going out into the bright sunshine and the whirling activity of life?
How sad it must have been for the legendary Wandering Jew doomed to eternal life on earth because he handed Jesus the bitter gall when he cried for a taste of water! And when he had lived until all friends of childhood had died and been removed from the earth, he wandered lonely without friends to cheer his empty life... praying for the death that could not come... After all, we are queer creatures at times anyway, and sometimes the crazy musings of the near-unbalanced mind are the most interesting... And who can say who is sane after all?
Many have tried reading a poem while sweet strains of music formed a background that put them in the frame of mind to enjoy the grand picture intended for the men-

BRITISH YOUTH EAGER TO TRY NAVY SERVICE

By DAN ROGERS
United Press Staff Correspondent
LONDON, April 13 (UP)—Britons are scrambling for 11,000 new jobs in the rearmament program is opening in the Royal Navy—the oldest and best loved of England's armed services.
So real is the traditional Briton's love of the sea that no difficulty will be experienced in finding this number of new sailors, despite disadvantages which would be considered prohibitive by most American youths. Although the English army is pleading for recruits, the navy can afford to reject nine out of 10 men who offer themselves.
It cannot be the pay that lures them. An ordinary seaman's daily wage is at 1s (37 1/2 cents). An able seaman begins at 3s (75 cents) and after six years in that rating rises to 3s 8d (91 cents) by gradual steps. Boys in the British navy—and the fleet uses several thousands lads in their early teens—start at 9d (18 cents) a day. Cadets training to become officers receive 25 cents a day, and the highest officer in the navy, admiral of the fleet, is paid $13,215 a year, less than the salary of the New York City commissioner of docks.
Some Allowance Added
A meager marriage allowance is made, and there are several other allowances which raise the sailor's pay.
At the average rate of progress a reasonably intelligent man may become a petty officer at the age of 31, when he will get $11.81 a week. By the time he is 40 this may be as much as $15.89 a week.
An even greater objection to Americans would be the length of service required. The minimum enlistment for a British sailor is 12 years. At the end of 12 years, usually he can rejoin for 10 years to become eligible for a pension. As an alternative he may enlist, at the end of 12 years, for "special service," which means seven years more of active service with the fleet and then five years in the reserve.
Work 8 Hours in 24
A third of the crew of a British warship always is on duty. They work "four on and eight off," each man or officer averaging eight hours "on watch," during which each man performs the duties of his station, seamen and stokers have daily three hours "house work"—scrubbing decks, painting and similar pursuits.
Officers, during training as cadets, perform all the tasks of a common sailor and, when midshipmen, sleep in a sailor's hammock. There is a commissioned officer for approximately every 100 men aboard ship.
The sailor's living quarters are the mess decks, large compartments with wooden tables, benches and small lockers. They eat, play cards or do their mending on the tables, at night, or when off watch, they sleep in hammocks slung from the ceiling over the tables. There are always lights burning in the mess decks, but they get used to that and sleep just the same. Officers treat the mess decks as the men's "private houses" and, except for inspections, never enter without asking permission.
British sailors are allowed six weeks leave each year, given during periods of foreign service when leaves may be accumulated.

Fruit and Milk Tested as Diet

MADISON, Wis. (UP)—Three University of Wisconsin students, who lived for periods ranging from seven weeks to four months on nothing but "mineralized" milk and a small amount of fruit are ready to get back on the liquid diet any time they get a chance.
They were the subjects in a nutritional and bacteriological experiment conducted by the College of Agriculture.
Especimen No. 1, Robert Goodrich, a senior, lived for four months on a diet of three and a half quarts of milk two oranges, and two apples daily. He lost no weight and did not tire of the unvaried diet.
"Didn't Crave Meat"
"It wasn't hard," Goodrich explained while drinking his last liquid meal. "I had no craving for meat. The only thing I ever longed for was candy and that went away whenever I drank some more milk."
Goodrich said that his weight held steady at 148 pounds during the period. A tasteless fluid containing iron, copper, and a trace of magnesium was added to the milk to supply him with elements normally missing in milk. He admitted that he became a willing subject to the experiment "to save money." His liquid diet was "on the college."
The others who tried the experiment, Emil Petrussek and Leonard Marshall, followed the diet for seven weeks without ill effects. Petrussek gained three pounds.
At no time, the men reported did they tire of drinking milk. Petrussek liked the diet so well that he usually drank more than his quota.
Suffered on Regular Diet
Goodrich said that when he re-

Alfalfa Found To Defy Drouth

WASHINGTON, April 13 (UP)—Creeping alfalfa taken from a stony goat pasture in northern Turkey has been successfully transplanted in the semi-arid regions of the Middle West.
The new type— to the Western Hemisphere— of alfalfa promises to be a valuable grazing and soil-building plant in the great plains area, according to H. L. Westover, forage specialist of the Department of Agriculture.
Westover discovered creeping alfalfa on a rocky hillside where it had grown for centuries. Goat herds drove their flocks over it before Christ was born. It has withstood long drouths almost every year for many centuries.
No Seed Available
For days Westover and others from the Department of Agriculture bureau of plant industry searched for seeds. But the goats had grazed the pasture so closely that it was impossible to find any. Nor could seed be found for purchase.
Finally, Westover dug up a root from the stony ground, packed it carefully in moist earth and shipped it 5,000 miles to Washington.
By careful cultivation agricultural scientists obtained 2,700 plants from the original root by a series of stem cuttings. These were sent to an experiment station near Hyannis, Neb.
Cuttings in 30-inch rows in the sand hill country of Nebraska sent out shoots that rooted the first season as far as 12 inches from the crown. It survived the drouths well. Similar studies are to be made in other states.
Cannot Be Mowed
The plant is a poor seed producer and does not grow high enough for mowing, which limits its use to grazing, and because of its strong root system, to protection against erosion.
Alfalfas are naturally semi-arid plants, but the growth habits of the new creeping alfalfa and the conditions under which it was found indicate it is even better equipped to withstand close grazing and drouth conditions, Westover said.
The Department of Agriculture has no seeds or plants of creeping alfalfa for distribution, Westover said.

Summer Sun is Cure For Strange Disease

FORT WORTH, April 13 (UP)—A strange blood disease has caused Lou Harris of Chico to take 29 blood transfusions in the last six months.
A recent attempt to give another transfusion was unsuccessful because her veins have been punctured so many times that there was no place for another injection.
Doctors said that the summer sun was the best treatment for her malady.
