A small boy, aged six, was making a tiny wreath with loving care. The pansies and leaves were twined. "What is it for?" inquired his mother. "I know you said you heard a mouse in the pantry?" "I know you said you heard a mouse in the pantry?" "I know you said you heard a mouse in the pantry?"

A sad-looking man at the corable had been waiting a very time for his order. At last a fish will be coming any time, now, sir."

A newspaper publisher in Nevada had a prize for the best answer to the following conundrum: "Why is a newspaper like a woman?"

A departing guest had been asked to sign a bill, and shortly after the manager said to the head waiter, "You gave the man in the bill, didn't you?" "Yes, sir," was the reply.

"I didn't forget to charge for anything," said the man. "I didn't?" Inquired the manager. "I know of," answered the waiter. "Very strange," muttered the manager. "I can still hear him talking."

"The third birthday of the five famous girls, Time recalls, emphasized that within a scant 15 years they will reach their majority, come into fortunes their guardians have already invested for them, and begin to make their own decisions each an individual yet the life of each indissolubly linked with the fame and destiny of her four sisters.

AUSTIN, June 7 (U.P.)—Texas legislators launched a crusade against gambling today after receiving a message from Gov. James V. Allred on that topic.

Ten house bills and five senate bills were offered to prohibit gambling. Bookie shops, dog racing, transmission of information on wagers, bank night, automobile raffles, slot machine, marble board and all forms of chance profits were attacked.

Governor Allred specified gambling on dog racing, bookies, slot and marble machines. He served notice that he will veto any bill that repeals or modifies the bill passed last week against race track pari-mutuels. He planned to sign that bill Tuesday.

Allred's message opening up the general topic of gambling for the legislature was not delivered personally.

To tighten the present law against the bookies, he recommended conviction to be authorized on showing that the bet was made without proof that the race actually was run.

Confiscation of machines used for gambling was recommended as the most effective method of dealing with them.

A Study of Southpaws

The department of zoology and entomology at Ohio State university is studying left-handedness with the purpose of discovering whether it is an hereditary trait. It asks left-handed individuals to write the department stating whether one or both parents are also left-handed. Says Prof. W. M. Barrows, acting head of the department, "Left-handed people at present constitute between 4 and 6 per cent of the population and are relatively easy to find, but the families we are looking for are those in which both parents are also left-handed. It is only by finding a large number of such families and finding out the 'handedness' of their children that we can make deductions as to how it is passed from one generation to another."

Unhappy Laughter

Prof. F. Aveling, Reader in Psychology at London University, has heartlessly exposed laughers. The person who laughs much is not really happy, he says. People who are genuinely and deeply happy only smile. "The really happy man does not need to laugh," we are told, "for laughter, like weeping, is a relief of mental tension—and the happy are not overstrung. Laughter is an antidote to sympathy. It is a device to banish care, personal or vicarious, and if I laugh at any mortal thing, 'tis that I may not weep." He describes laughter as a kind of behavior, "which begins in a puckering of features and ends in jelly-like convulsions of the whole body." And he meanly reminds us that no other animal, except the hyena, laughs, and the hyena's laugh is really more like a snarl. It's all very depressing, until one realizes that he must be referring to a very special sort of laughter. There is hysterical laughter that serves as a screen for tense nerves or emotions. But thank goodness there is also laughter that comes from the heart and that is music to the ear and tonic to the soul. And thank goodness, too, there are sane mortals who do indulge in this sort of laughter now and then.

other children their society is pleasantly varied among themselves. But the very fact that they are varied characters must cause complications when they become self-conscious, form likes, dislikes and prejudices. For inevitably they will be forced upon each other's society as long as they all live as the World's Original Quintuplets. Problems of beaux and husbands will not be as hard for them as for Siamese Twins but what if some of them want to settle down while the rest would go on tour? The world's amazement and curiosity about them will never cease. Will that make exhibitionists of them, or will it make them try to escape the world? Already the wisecracks of Callander predict that little Marie is going to be a nun. "The 750,000 visitors who will look in at them during the 1937 tourist season, may value the following birthday data on what they see: Cecile, 34 3-4 in. 31 lb.

Annette, 34 5-8 in., 31 1-2 lb. Yvonne, 34 1-2 in., 30 1-2 lb. Emile, 34 in., 30 lb. Marie, 34 in., 27 lb.

"Emile and Marie each have 17 teeth, the others 16. They can now brush their own teeth, comb their own hair, dress themselves completely (except for shoe-tying), go to the toilet alone. They feed themselves and for the past month have been carrying their empty dishes from the table to the pantry.

Yvonne is the most lively and adventuresome. She regards herself as 'mother of the rest. Marie is the quietest and most musical. When Marie 'draws' she prefers to make straight, vertical lines. Cecile, the tallest, loves mirrors and red objects. Annette draws in sweeping circles. Yvonne paints spirals and is the most inventive. Lately their favorite game has been hitting each other, and they know that the punishment for this is being sent to country. Each has distinct color preferences. Every detail of this sort is carefully recorded, for the development of these five sisters in identical circumstances is as important to child psychologists as to pediatricians. In charge of them last week was Jacqueline Noel, a psychologist as well as a trained nurse. Assisting her were Nurses Claire Tremblay who is also a trained teacher, and Mollie O'Shaughnessy.

Toys are all educational, and are changed as the infants master complexities. Last week they were in the nest-of-boxes and the hammer-and-peg stages. They match shapes and colors unerringly. Walls of their playroom are covered with animal pictures cut from magazines and books. The infants recognize the different creatures. A duck bothers them because his mouth is open, and nurses have taught them that this is bad form. They recognize their own pictures and can pick themselves readily out of groups.

"They kneel for prayers and put their dolls in the same posture at the same time. They dance round dances and can carry a measure or two of tunes. But they cannot talk much. Their vocabulary consists of a few dozen words, most of which they cannot enunciate clearly. They say 'dodo' for 'dormer' (sleep), 'bis' for 'biscuit', 'guar' for 'grain' (gruel), 'gogo' for 'gateau' (cake). Lately, according to Dr. Duffoe they have learned to string their words together into such simple sentences as 'c'est beau', 'c'est bon', 'bonjour, docteur', or 'un moment petit bebe', the last when any quintuplet is too eager to leave the table."

BEHIND THE SCENES IN WASHINGTON

BY RODNEY DUTCHER NEA Service Staff Correspondent WASHINGTON—It might be nice to suppose that the presidential veto of the bill authorizing $5,000,000 in federal funds for New York's world fair was really an economy gesture, however small. The unannounced motive, however, was political. Actually a reduction of the sum mentioned to $3,000,000 is only a technical saving if that. For the bill didn't really appropriate any money, leaving that to Congress at some later date. But the bill provided for a United States commissioner general for the fair at a salary of $10,000. And then it provided for two assistant commissioners general at $7500 who must be "not of the same political party." Legal sharks at the Department of Justice pointed out that this might mean compulsory appointment of two Republican assistant commissioners. Furthermore, the Senate had amended the bill so as to give the appointments for those three jobs to a government's world's fair commission, to be composed of three cabinet members and seven members of Congress. The appointments and the millions of dollars to be handled by the appointees make up the sort of item that in these days the White House wants to control. If Roosevelt and Jim Farley have anything to say about it, the substitute legislation will contain different provisions. The senator managed to get him a job in one of the minor New Deal commissions. Occasional lapses from grace were overlooked until a recent warm day when the brother came into the office carrying a fish which spectators say weighed about 50 pounds and was quite dead. Very shortly thereafter the young man was found asleep on the floor, the fish nesting in his arms. (Copyright, 1937, NEA Service, Inc.)

CAST OF CHARACTERS PATRICIA WARREN, heroine, secretary to Don Monteray, actor-physicist. TRISSY WARREN, Pats' cousin and roommate in New York. DON MONTERAY, Patricia's actor-employer. ROSAMOND AKERS, Patricia's rival. CHAPTER X Pats' mind skittered about like a leaf in a whirlwind. Confused with her diverse roles, she admitted faced a threatening dilemma. The detective spoke admiringly. "Say, you've got a nerve, hiding out at that swell joint on Park avenue. Pretty slick I say. I saw you go in and I saw you come out but not a soul in the place ever heard of you. I mean that takes nerve." Pats remained silent. He had seen her go in. When? She darted a glance at him. Suddenly the vague feeling that she had seen him before cleared and she remembered. It was he who had looked at her so strangely in the Goddard hotel. Pats' knees shook and only with difficulty she controlled her breathing. The more she tried to formulate a convincing explanation the more involved she became. Actually there was no such person as Goldlocks so how could she be explained? The district attorney, a well-groomed, youngish man, rose abruptly from his desk as Pats and the detective entered his office. Several reporters crowded near as he listened to the detective's story. Pats heard him say, "Been trainin' her—Avalon—bold as brass—fits description—has disguise in her bag—" The color drained from her face, it felt stiff and drawn. Then the district attorney asked her to step to the desk. PATS took a deep breath, swallowed hard with a little ducking movement of her chin. "Name, please?" "Mrs. Mrs. Don Monteray," she answered in a small voice. The district attorney's eyebrows raised just a trifle, the stoutish gentleman who had brought her in grinned. "And your address?" "Avalon hotel." Her eyes gazed at him imploringly. He looked kind, understanding. "Can you prove that?" With trembling fingers Pats opened her purse. Fumbling for her bank book the brown wig crowded into view. She felt rather than saw the significant glance which passed between the onlookers. Frantically she hunted. Everything got in her way—coin purse, tinted glasses, amber comb, compact, and always, the wig. Her questing fingers found the small wedding ring. About to display the ring as evidence she dropped it back. It was valuable. No initials had been engraved inside. Hers had not been that kind of a marriage. "What's the idea of the wig?" was the next question. Pats opened her lips. The truth—nothing but the truth. "I—I wear it sometimes," she faltered. "I see. Can't you find—whatever you're looking for?" Pats shook her head. The bank book was not there. It was no doubt in the bag she had carried that morning. She raised deep blue eyes—two huge tears were caught in the lashes. "I can't find it," she quavered with a pitiful little catch in her voice. "But I'm telling you the truth—please let me go—" AFTER AN hour's questioning, the attorney muttered something to himself. It sounded like, "Innocent as a baby—" Then he commanded, "Get Monteray on the telephone. You, Johnson—" Pats' thoughts raced madly. Frantically she yearned for Don. Although he was in the dark concerning her identity he would see her through this nightmare until explanations could be made. Throwing discretion to the winds she timidly told the district attorney where Don could be found. And, after a nerve-wracking wait, Johnson was talking to him. Non-committally, he told him where to come. Blood sang in Pats' ears. Don was coming. He would try to help her but what could he do? She had a wild idea of donning the wig and glasses, even tremblingly opened her purse but with the cold eye of the law upon her she was incapable of action. The room grew dark, the edge of the desk seemed to be slipping from between her fingers. Faintly she heard Detective Johnson arguing with his chief. "Mistake nothing. Just a clever actress—Monteray's wife dark—homey—" With every passing instant Pats' nerves grew more taut. Then there was the sound of quick steps beyond the door and Don burst into the room. His face was white, his eyes, darting in search of Pats, terror-stricken, his mouth grim. For a split sec-

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE ONE) More than a million scouts throughout America, will be present for the 10-day encampment. These scouts will represent practically every community within the United States. Scouts are attending the Jamboree at the personal invitation of President Franklin D. Roosevelt, himself an active scouting leader for the past 15 years, who broadcast his invitation in a nation-wide radio address February 8 last. Loan of 350 acres of land upon which the scouts will camp has been granted by Congress.

The Jamboree fee is $25 for the 10-day encampment including food, shelter and incidentals, plus transportation at special railroad rates from home communities, to one cent a mile. Most scouts will attend the Jamboree at personal expense, in many instances having earned and saved their money.

Activities will include a mammoth Camp Fire the opening night, a visit and review by the president, a convention July 4 at the foot of the Washington Monument, a boat ride down the Potomac to historic and scenic Mt. Vernon.

Each delegation will stage exhibits and demonstrations of historical and geographic points for which their home communities are famed.

Walter W. Head, president of the Boy Scouts of America, chairman; Dan Beard, National Scout Commissioner, is honorary camp chief, while Dr. James E. West, chief

Farmer Still Wears 1908 'Sunday Suit'

BEELEVILLE, Ark. (U.P.)—A single suit and a few pair of overalls compose W. H. Curry's "lifetime" wardrobe. The Jackson county farmer wears the "Sunday" suit only on special occasions like his 69th birthday recently. The suit is "just as good as the day I bought it," Curry said.

Changes in the so-called "Sunday" changes in style do not bother Curry. Upon the few gala occasions in his life, he puts on the suit—purchased in 1908—and is "dressed up for the best."

Birthdays and funerals are the main events which Curry thinks warrant his wearing the suit.

Ranger May Be In Oil Belt Play

J. E. Meroney, secretary of the Ranger Chamber of Commerce, announced Saturday that Ranger would likely go into the Oil Belt football Association after all. The Ranger team dropped out of the league because of difficulties in the schedule, which a telephone conversation Saturday stated would be worked out and a new schedule mailed to the Ranger club.

If we can just find someone who knows enough about football to manage the team, and who has the time to give to it," Meroney said Saturday. "Ranger" will be in the schedule, because we want to be included."

We clip the following wedding announcement of Miss Lucine Lewis to James E. Harvey of Cisco from the Greenville Evening Banner of June 3 issue:
"An important nuptial event was heralded this afternoon at an informal tea given by Mrs. R. M. Lewis at the home of Mrs. V. G. Forrester, 4225 Lee St. from 4 to 6 o'clock when the hostess announced the approaching marriage of her daughter, Miss Lucine Lewis, to James E. Harvey of Cisco, son of Mr. and Mrs. M. E. This announcement tea, attractive in its bridal appointments comes at the first in a series of similar affairs for June which will reveal the engagement of a number of socially prominent Greenville couples. This wedding is to take place June 16 at 10 a. m. in the home of the bride's parents.
Blue and White Scheme
For this occasion the attractive home of Mrs. Forrester was enhanced with a profusion of cut flowers, with blue and white, the chosen colors of the bride-elect predominating notations. On the porch stood Colonial baskets of wild flowers in gay colors. The reception room was adorned with jasmine, cornflower and senecia.
In the dining room where the guests were invited by Miss Shirley Jenkins, the banquet-styled table was laid with a Mosaic lace cloth in natural shade. The centerpiece and appointments was exclusively of crystal. A large bowl resting on a reflector, held a bouquet of jasmine, sweet peas and maiden-hair fern. The face-laid buffet held a smaller but matching centerpiece, with a nosegay of the same flowers. Mrs. Ray Beene and Mrs. S. C. Flourney presided at the table serving punch, coconut balls, toasted nuts and mince.
Announcement on Scroll
The guests were greeted by little Miss Nancy Buster, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Reagan Buster, who presented each with an individual corsage of sweet peas to which tiny scrolls were attached with pastel ribbons. The scrolls read: "Lucy and Jimmie, June 16."
Members of the formally attired host party included the honoree, her mother, Mrs. R. M. Official of Social Security in Cisco

Charles von Rosenberg, representative from the Austin field office of the Social Security Board, will be here all day Wednesday, June 9, to interview public officials, civic leaders, employers and employees on phases of the Social Security act, it was announced today by Mr. J. E. Spencer, secretary of the Chamber of Commerce.
Von Rosenberg is on a tour of the Austin district, which includes this county in an effort to bring about better public understanding of the provisions of the Social Security law.
In a letter to the chamber of commerce, the Social Security Board official said one of the purposes of his visit here would be to enlist the support of local officials and civic groups in a campaign to assign social security account numbers to every worker covered by the old age benefits section of the law. Although the majority of workers in covered employments now have their cards, it is believed that there are yet many eligible employees who have not applied for numbers.
Since applications for account numbers may be filed through the local post office until June 30, it is pointed out that employees who have not yet applied should do so now. After June 30, it will be necessary to communicate with the Austin field office in order to establish social security account.
Plans are being considered for a public meeting at which von Rosenberg will explain the entire social security program.
This meeting will be held in the directors room of the chamber of commerce at 3:30 p. m. Wednesday, June 9. Mr. Rosenberg will be available at the chamber of commerce office from 8:30 in the morning, and will welcome visits from employers and employees alike to discuss and advise with them on any individual problems they may have.
