United States Testing China's Salesmanship

Agreement between the United States and China to Under the Domeexpand their co-operative monetary program with a plan (CONTINUED FROM PAGE ONE for bartering gold and silver is interesting news for those who like to keep tab on "how the wind blows" in our for- exhibit building. Thirty-seven other eign relations, and also, incidentally, for people who have states have made such an approsome loose mney they would like to put away in foreign priation or are seriously consider

The new understanding announced jointly by Treasury Secretary Morganthau and H. H. King, Chinese finance the fair commission. The land out minister, provides simply that the Chinese government will purchase gold from the United States, payment for the gold to be made from the large silver reserves of the Central

This follows up the agreement of May, 1936, by which permanent use within the state. the United States agreed to purchase "substantial" amounts That leaves speculation wide open of silver from the Central Bank of China, and to make dollar Another clue is that the exhibit exchange available to that bank for stabilization purposes.

As far as the American public is concerned, the immediate effect will amount merely to an increase in the issu- exciting reenactments the colorfu ance of silver certificates.

But something just a little more tanglible than that is expected by the astute Chinese. Significantly, Dr. Kung, when he visited the United States to negotiate the new pact this summer, suggested frankly that American citizens the planning board's recommendawould find China a good place for investments.

His attitude was that China, a "united, fast-moving nearly $100,000 and there is some and progressive" nation, having demonstrated its good faith in seeking a respected place in the world, has fulfilled the requirements of a reputable borrower.

No one doubts Dr. Kung's sincerity. China may be the unconquerable land of untold riches, and its government may be responsible for all its obligations, insofar as circumstances permit. But it's just those "circumstances" that may bring the embarassing pause as Dr. Kung braces himself for the rush of investors.

For instance, among those "circumstances" might easily be another of the incessant border clashes or bandit raids; another of the serious skirmishes with one or more of the roving Chinese Red armie. There may be more unannounced invasions by Japan, new insurgence among the powerful Cantonese, or even another of those "courtesy" kidnappings, of which President Chiang Kai-Shek himself was a victim not

If the United States government can, under conditions which safeguard its own interest, be of any assistance to struggling China, no one can honestly begrudge that much

But individual investments are another thing to a peo-ple who remember how "smart" they were when they played their bankrolls on the "responsible" governments of Europe. As a result, the proverbial Chinese patience may be tested to the limit before its salesmanship bears fruit.

Flags Used to Line Nests of Squirrels 32 War flyer

Mutchler, custodian of Forest Hill emetery, who has been sitting up nights trying to catch the thief stealing flags off soldiers' graves sleeps peacefully now.

So many of the flags disappeared that the remaining old ones were replaced. Then the new ones started to disappear-and Mutchler sat up nights trying to catch the small boys he believed responsible for the flags vanishing.

A hard wind storm solved the mystery. A squirre!'s nest was blown out of a tree. It was lined with 21 new American flags. Mutchler climbed trees and examined other squirrel nests. All were lined with flags, old and new.
