Killing The Railroad Goose

Because railroads cannot adjust their rate structure quickly to fluctuations in cost of operation, the steady rise in railroad taxes is an economic problem which demands serious control." Mr. Leversidge feels that the political maligning Game Convention to

So far as the Federal government is concerned, railroads are taxed on the same basis as industry in general. Abuses have appeared in state and local taxation. The railrods represent an investment of $26,000,000,000, and their lines traverse practically every county in the United States. Local officials have gone to tremendous ends to exploit this great industry for revenue purposes.

Railway taxes in 1936 totaled $319,700,000, of which 81 per cent was collected by state and local governments. This amounted to 28.3 per cent of the lines' net operating revenue. In other words, more than one-fourth of the property, activities and traffic of the railways was devoted to producing net operating revenue sufficient to pay the tax bill. In the case of a stringently regulated industry, whose rates are fixed by public bodies, this is an excessive and dangerous pro-

No one can object to adquate taxation of the railroads. And a case might even be made for excessive taxationif at the same time we made it possible for the lines to increase thir revenues to meet the cost. But we cannot continue to bleed the lines of every possible dollar of revenue and expect to enjoy the lowest cost trassportation.

Such a policy must in the long run lead to railroad bank- OUR WANT ADS PAY BIG DIVIDENDS ruptcy. If that should happen, all units of government would be deprived of one of their main sources of support. You can't get blood from a turnip-or money from an industry taxed beyond its earning capacity. The present situation leads to one of two sources-the rails must be allowed to readjust their rates in the light of growing operating costs, or local governments must revise railroad taxation on a basis of fairness, not ruthless exploitation.

Opportunities Still Exist

Commenting on the "opportunities for youth in the electric industry," H. P. Liversidge, vice president, Philadelphia Electric company, said: "Twenty-five years ago a young man with an engineering education accepted as a forege conclusion the fact that one of the most desirable openings for him was the electric light and power industry."

He then pointed out the remarkable growth of the industry, the constant downward revision of rates, the fact that no nation in the world approaches the United States in the wide availability of electric service, and said: "This has been accomplished through the traditional American system of encouraging individual enterprise under suitable regulation and of the industry is going to run its course and that the soundness of the American system will finally confuse the socialistic propagandists.

'Speaking of the profit system,' he says, "We may theorize to our heart's content and draw glowing pictures of an era of production for use and not for profit, but, human nature being what it is, when a nation pursues any plan in which profit is eliminated, it will find itself building up a loss that ultimately must prove a hardship to the very public it was endeavoring to benefit."

He points out the opportunity for growth of the industry and the many advantages that still remain for the young men who wish to enter it as a life work. What the industry has done is but a sample of what it can do in the future if private enterprise is allowed to develop the nation's resources as in the past. If it is not, the field for young men will be limited, not only in the electric industry, but in many other endeavors, as governmental regimentation curbs private enterprise. The answer is up to the people and to the very young men who are now considering their future.

50 Conte Saves Man $144 in Jury Pay

LONGIEW, Aug. 16. (U.P.)-An investment of 50 cents saved Gregg county $144 in jury pay, according to Dozier Skiper, Jr., district clerk. Attorneys on both sides of a case told Judge D. S. Meredith, Jr., they wanted to try it.

"Are you sure?" the judge wanted to know. "It's the only jury case on the docket."

"They were sure, so Judge Meredith had the jurors summoned. Then one of the attorneys announced that it would be impossible to try the case. It was then that Skipper bought

50 cents worth of post cards and sent them to 50 men who had been summoned, telling them they would not be needed. Two of the 50 men came in for jury service, not having got the card countermanding their summons. They were paid the regular $3 daily fee. But the other 48 men got their penny postcards and did not appear.
