When A Man is Ill

A group of people were talking about their respective professions, as people will, even in these days when there is supposed to be no time for conversation. Said the physician:

"The hardest thing about my profession is that I never get a chance until the mischief's done. Consider for a moment. There are three important divisions in the business of healing. The first is to know when you're ill. The second is to find out what the illness is. The third is to plan a regime of curing the illness. Which is most important? The first, of course. And that is the one that is left to the ignorant layman.

"Does a man know when he's sick? Not unless he has some acute thing with pain or discomfort. The pain and discomfort may come from a trifling thing never to be repeated. Or they may be the signs of illness already too deep-seated to be cured.

"The chances are dollars to doughnuts that by the time a man gets around to his doctor, he's got something bad. Then it takes a lot of trouble and money to get him straightened out again.

"If he would go to his doctor every three months and let the doctor take a good look-see, get some good advice and then follow it, he wouldn't ever have to have these bad things.

"If a lot of people did that, the doctor would have a steady income, and would not have to charge so highly for big emergencies. So both doctor and patient would be better off. But the great gain would be in escaping most of the big emergencies."

The lawyer and garage man agreed. Their own troubles weren't so very different.

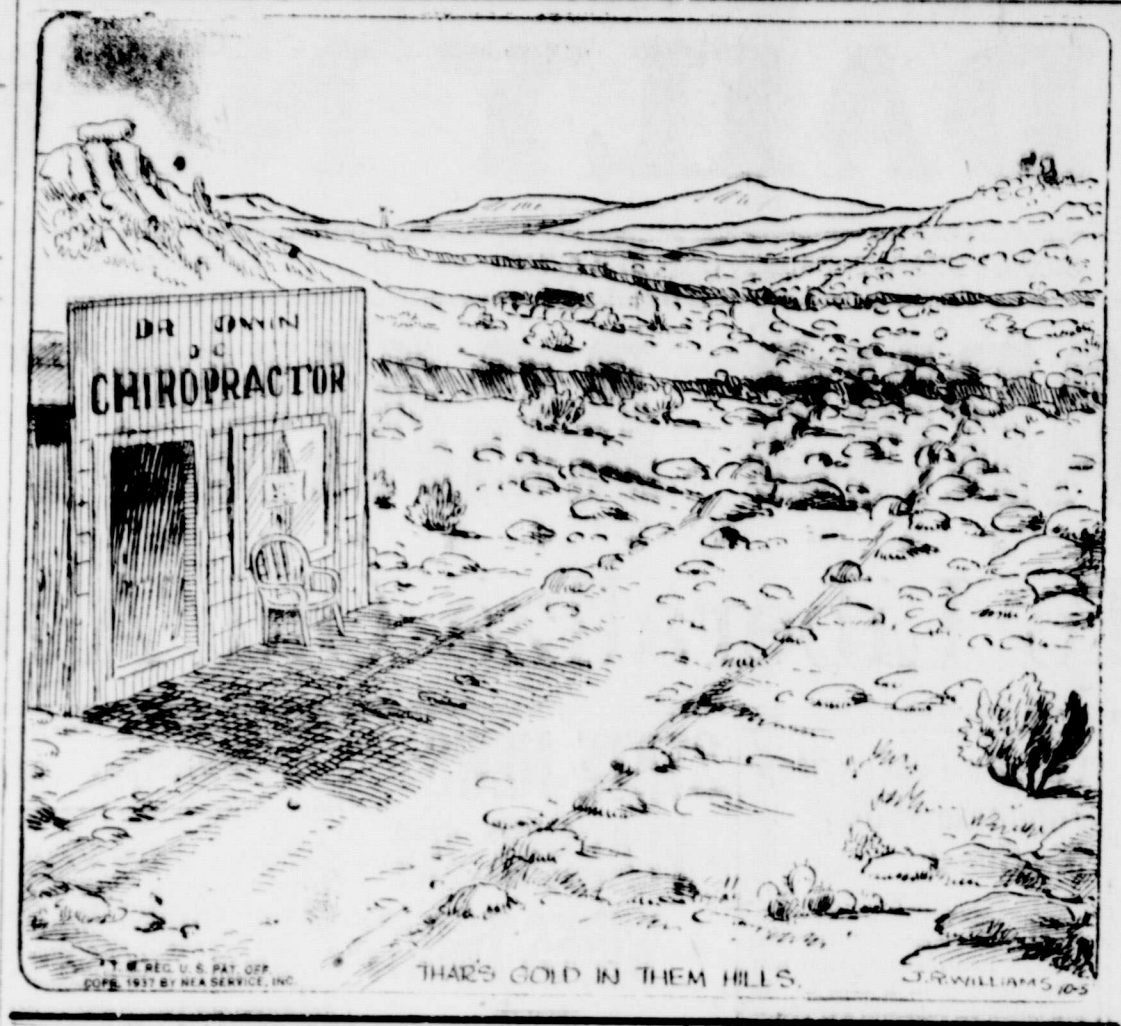

Importance of Clean Garages

A woman writer on motor subjects makes a plea for clean garages. Women, she says, do not like to leave their cars "in garages where tools and auto parts strew the floor, where there are piles of oily waste, openly inviting a stray spark or lighted cigaret stub, where men, greasy and grimy from head to foot, loiter on shining fenders" and deal without much interest in car troubles. "Work with machinery is necessarily dirty and grease-inspiring, and, still further, a garage is neither a tea room nor a modiste's shop. But a repair shop for sick cars, like a hospital for sick bodies, and it should advertise and practice a certain rigor and system." Most women drivers, she says further, feel a real affection for their cars, a pride in their performance and appearance, and they are apt to seek the garage which is fastidious rather than that which is slovenly. When they are parking in a garage, they like service, too. A woman will often go blocks out of her way to park at a garage where a courteous attendant takes her car at the door and returns it to her there. Even skilful drivers often have a sort of nervous panic over steep narrow ramps which must be ascended or descended, but that's the way they are. And they drive more cars every year and need more car attention. It's a wise garage owner who realizes all this.

About Our Friends—

must face the other half with the same limitations. They see perhaps what they should do to keep step with the world, to find their place, or to rectify their mistakes, but they are too old to change. Here enters the psychiatrist. Said Dr. Alice E.

Johnston in a late survey. "You are not too old to change if you are young enough to wish to change." She lays down four rules of mental hygiene which will make the latter half better. "Do not say yes and no at the same time." Decision is necessary for growth. Better make mistakes than do nothing. You are not old until you quit learning. You are not too old if you can adapt yourself to modern conditions. If you are too old to change, then you are indeed too old. Take things and people as they are, not what they should be. All things have prices. Be willing to pay the price or leave the thing alone, in the latter case, you are again too old for success. Cease vain regrets if you have had them. If you have not had them do not begin them. It is only the old who look back. The old man lives in the past, the youth never. Youth only sees ahead. If you can still have ambition, the desire to do something, to still learn, then you are still young regardless, if the birthday says you are fifty, sixty or ninety. Do not allow an accumulation of unfinished business. Face difficulties or unpleasant questions, find an answer and clear the mental desk. Do not dwell on antagonisms or dissatisfaction. Yesterday, Cilly decided to do a bit of "scouting" from the St. Ann Apartments. On her way to the roof she meets the Corbets and decides she doesn't want to stop long in their apartment.

CHAPTER XVIII
"COMON, baby! One more I'll drink with papa!" Tom Corbett swayed as he hung over Cilly. Would he never let her go? She'd been there half an hour, and one by one the lights across the street were going out. If she stayed much longer, there would be nothing to see from the roof.

Across the room, Mrs. Corbett was beginning to nod in her chair. Her words, as she babbled on, were thick, and every few minutes they trailed off to a vague nothingness.

"No, no more, really!" Cilly insisted. She still sipped the first drink he had made for her.

She stood up abruptly. She'd made a mistake coming here, all right, but she didn't have to stay. One didn't compromise with drunks. Quickly she walked to the door.

Quickly, but not quite fast enough.

Sensing her action, Corbett was there first, arms outstretched, blocking the way.

"So! You wanna run out on me, eh?" He enfolded her in his enormous arms. "Oh, no you don't." Cilly struggled to free herself. "Mr. Corbett!" she shouted.

Back in the living room, his wife opened half an eye.

"Whazzat, deary?" she inquired sleepily. "Whajoo say?"

Mr. Corbett let Cilly go. "Scuse me," he pleaded. "Scuse me. But don't try to go yet. It's early! Lemme fix that drink."

THOROUGHLY annoyed now, Cilly went back to the living room. Here was a nice predicament, she thought. Whatever possessed her to ring the Corbets' doorbell? She might have waited downstairs until someone from the apartment came along, and then explain that she'd forgotten her key.

She sat down beside Mrs. Corbett. The woman was not going to sleep, not if she could help it. "Mrs. Corbett," she said. "I wanted to ask you something about Sunday night..."

"Sun-day night? Oh, my Gawd!" She straightened, shuddered. "Don't remind me. Sunday night, Tom was out west. Tom's always out west. Travelin' man, that's my Tom." She giggled foolishly now. "Travelin' man, Tom, tell her 'bout that time... that time out west... tell her, Tom... that time you—"

"Shut up! Keep your mouth still!"

Tom, standing in the kitchen doorway, looked menacingly at his wife.

Mrs. Corbett waved her arms in a pathetic dramatic expression of submission.

"O. K.," she grinned fatuously, but with condescension, "if you won't tell her, I will. I'll tell about that time you were out west—way, way out west. In... in... where was it, darlin'? Where were you that time..."

In three quick strides her husband was at her side. "Shut up! I told you," he shouted. "Shut up! You talk too much. Why don'tcha go to bed? Go to bed!"

"No! I'm gonna tell..."

Cilly jumped to her feet. In another second, she could see, Corbett might strike his wife. She wanted to escape and now. "Mr. Corbett," she said with determination, "I'm going home, and if you try to stop me, I'm going to scream until every policeman in Brooklyn gets here. And there have been altogether too many policemen around here lately."

The man's mouth dropped in sulky displeasure. He slumped into a chair, waved his drink in the air.

"Gwan home," he said gruffly. "Who asked you over anyway? Gwan home. Who cares?"

CILLY breathed a deep sigh of relief as she closed the Corbett door behind her. What people! And what a curious contradiction Mrs. Corbett was—a mild, nervous little woman one day; coarsely drunk the next.

She wondered what the story was that the woman had tried to tell her—the story of Mr. Corbett's experience out west—way, way out west? And why was he so intensely set on not having it told?

She unlatched the door to the roof and stepped out. Slowly she closed it behind her, careful lest it slam. She took a deep breath, before she stepped forward toward the edge.

Suddenly, as she stood beside the three-foot wall enclosing the roof, she wondered just what she expected to discover. Now that she was here, the whole trip seemed utterly folly.

open for new aspects of truth. If you cannot be open-minded to new ideas, then you are old. The cement is never past the changing stage until it is set; then there is no possibility of making it different. If your mind is set, cannot accept new ideas as the world moves along, then you are old.

Because truth appears to you in new forms it is no less the truth. Disregard what is merely personal. The men and women who keep their minds open for new ideas, new acquaintances, new learning, willing to accept new ideas and able to be convinced of things different from their long accepted ideas, are still young. You are not old until you are incapable of change—until your mind has hardened like the cement on the sidewalk.

You are as old as you feel. Keep interest in life and things about you, keep doing something, learning something, if you would stay young. Once you lose interest in the world you are old, regardless of how few years that have passed you by. Look ahead, not backward.

People We Meet

By Winifred Clark White

Is there anything more tantalizing than a scrap of conversation heard on the street? A vivid phrase flung carelessly from strange lips can catch one's mind and hang there for days, calling to memory a face, a hurrying form that was never seen before and will likely never be seen again. And one finds that the person and the phrase have somehow fitted themselves into the background of one's life, to be so long as the memory of them lives a source of fanciful speculation. What is the life of that person like? Was the phrase in character, or a bit of superficial mimicry? If some time one should cross that person's path, would he live up to those bright words, or blur the memory of them by exhibiting a mediocre personality? One cannot know these things. The person and the phrase are like some forbidden book that one gazes at longingly in childhood.

AIR CORPS GETS DENVER SCHOOL

DENVER (U.P.)—Denver will become one of the major air centers of the nation soon with an establishment here of a U. S. army air corps technical school.

The government has allotted $963,000 of WPA money and Denver is prepared to issue $750,000 in bonds to build, equip and start the school, to be located west of the city, near the foothills of the Rocky Mountains.

In addition, an appropriation of $2,275,000 by the next congress is expected for maintenance of the school. Items expected to be included in the appropriation are:

- Barricks.....$935,000
- Hospital and administration building.....260,000
- School building.....540,000
- Runways for air field.....300,000

Location of the proposed air school is the site of the Agnes Hippie Memorial Sanatorium and grounds. The sanatorium buildings will be altered to the school's requirements.

The project calls for employment of 1,000 men until next June, when alterations of the present buildings, construction of new buildings, grading and leveling of a landing field and establishment of a bombing and gunnery range are expected to be completed.

Details of the project are being worked out by Brig. Gen. A. Owen general of the army. He is being assisted by Col. Junius W. Jones, air corps commandant of Chanute field, Ill.

Colonel Jones is expected to become the first commandant of the new Denver school.

Personnel for the Denver school will be sent from the Chanute field. The photographic and armament school now at Chanute will be moved here. Approximately 50 instructors will be sent here.

When the school finally is completed it will accommodate from 1,000 to 1,200 officers and men, including about 700 students.

Dry Weather in West Hampers Farm Work

The growing season of 1937, which began with plentiful rains, is ending with a serious lack of moisture in many parts of the United States, particularly the Midwest. September has been too dry for the preparation of the soil and the seeding of winter wheat in most western States. In the Great Plains and a few adjoining areas, according to J. B. Kincer, chief of the Weather Bureau. On the other hand, last month, with practically no damaging frosts, provided weather generally favorable for the ripening and harvesting of crops.

Experts Report on Aircraft Safety

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 5 (U.P.)—The Aviation Section of the Commonwealth Club of California, comprised of airline executives and authorities on aviation, has submitted a report to the club outlining "the causes for recent airplane crashes" and adopted recommendations toward greater air transport safety. The group listed the following as "the primary causes of recent crashes":
Failure of certain pilots, usually under the stress of bad flying conditions and other factors, such as radio failure, to adopt suitable action.
Over-dependence on instrument flying because radio equipment is not yet 100 per cent dependable.
Failure or inadequacy of ground personnel, or facilities, including both private and Federal weather services.
The fact that no adequate test of fitness has yet been devised which may be given a pilot immediately prior to take-off.
Recommendations of the Section for correcting these conditions included:
De-icing leading edges on wings and control surfaces at times and localities where icing conditions occur.
"Slinger ring" de-icing devices for propellers.
A sealed recording graph, automatically recording altitude flown and number and time of radio contacts attempted.

"FAIREST OFFER I EVER HEARD OF!"

Says ROLL-YOUR-OWNER, R. N. McCULLOUGH,

about Prince Albert's money-back-if-not-delighted offer

"FOLKS down here say I'm kind of fussy about 'makin's' tobacco. I tried them all before I found my choice—Prince Albert! It burns slow and cool. It's mellow and it rolls so smooth and firm. That's because P.A. is crimped. And it's processed with a special no-bite treatment that makes it mellow as you could imagine. So you can roll a lot of pleasure out of a tin of Prince Albert. That's why I say—Try P.A. on that no-risk offer!" (Special offer for pipe-smokers too!)

SMOKE 30 MILD, TASTY CIGARETTES BEFORE DECIDING...

Roll yourself 30 swell cigarettes from Prince Albert. If you don't find them the finest, tastiest roll-your-own cigarettes you ever smoked, return the packet in with the rest of the tobacco in it to us at any time within a month from this date, and we will refund full purchase price, plus postage.

Receives Medal From Governor

DENVER (U.P.)—Jack is just a plain, ordinary, brown and white collie dog, but he is eligible for a niche in dogdom's hall of fame. Jack, who saved the life of his young master, Tommy Pontius, 3 has been awarded a medal by the Governor of Colorado. The medal is inscribed: "To Jack—For Heroic Service." A short record of his deed is included on the medal. Attracted by screams of Tommy, who had fallen into a pit of hot ashes, Jack dug his teeth into the boys overalls and dragged him to safety.

Sealed Masonry Gets Cat for Prisoner

ST. LOUIS (U.P.)—Three days after workmen had completed sealing up the base of the City Hall steps, passersby were attracted by weird cries coming from the steps. Firemen chiseled through the concrete, found a half-starved cat that had wandered under the steps while they were being repaired. A saucer of milk restored the cat to purring normality.

JOBS ARE HELD BY 3 OUT OF 5 PARIS CITIZENS

By PETER C. RHODES
United Press Staff Correspondent
PARIS, Oct. 5 (U.P.)—Almost 3,000,000 of Greater Paris' 5,000,000 inhabitants are gainfully employed, statisticians show. There was a percentage increase after the Blum government took office, due largely, it is explained, by work on the Paris Exposition, both in production and the public service branches. The astounding fact revealed by figures is that Paris is one of the largest metal producing cities of Europe, and can lay claim to being the largest metallurgical center of any capital city. A total of 424,627 workers are employed in metallurgical factories inside the Paris area. Moreover, most of the factories are located within the city itself, and not in the suburban area of Greater Paris. Distribution between city area proper and outlying suburbs is respectively 2,891,020 and 2,042,825. Those employed inside the city itself number 2,072,229, many of whom are commuters from the suburbs. The suburban area employs 857,703 persons.

Ramparts Are Dividing Line

The division between city and suburban districts is clearly defined in Paris by the old ramparts which are being removed. This circular limits is girdled by a broad highway built on the foundations of the last city walls and forts erected after 1870. Four successive waves of growth can be seen on a street map of Paris by the highways built on the different walled areas which were successively city limits. Today with the last walls down, Paris has stepped a big march into the surrounding country. The largest classification of employed persons is that of merchants, clerks and office workers. Third in importance are domestic servants, with textiles and tailoring fourth, followed by transport workers, administrative workers, liberal professions and building workers, all

Workers Live Close In

Industrial workers, led by the metallurgists are first in the Paris area. Industries including textiles, paper, rubber, leather and glass, together with metal workers total almost 600,000 workers, placing Paris far ahead among French industrial cities. Most of these workers live within the city limits proper, in the outlying ring of districts which has been named the "Red Belt." Biggest change in recent years was the growth into the country of the suburban area. The municipality, as a result, has been a big scheme for the extension of all subway lines to two miles beyond the present terminals at the old city wall limits.

Game Warden Takes Men by Plane

PORT LAVACA, Tex. (U.P.)—The commercial fishermen have been shrimping in the closed waters of Espiritu Bay and getting away with it. That is, they did until Capt. W. H. Bauer, deputy state game, fish and oyster commissioner, thought of a way to catch them in the act. Fishermen previously had been able to observe patrol boats at a distance and escape by sailing away. Captain Bauer enlisted a coast guard plane which flew over the law violators, took aerial photographs as evidence and obtained three convictions.

Let the Automobile Drink the Castor Oil

LOS ANGELES, Oct. 5—Running the family bus on that bane of childhood—castor oil—may sound like a pipe dream to the average motorist, but scientists are working on that very possibility. In fact, the day may not be far distant when the car owner saying "Fill'er-up" may be ordering, not gasoline, but any one of a number of strange fuels. So it is revealed by investigations of the Hemphill Diesel Schools Research Bureau into development work on possible automotive fuels of the future. This research group found that scientists and fuel experts of many countries are experimenting with such unorthodox fuels as cottonseed oil, soy bean oil, oils derived from peanuts, coconuts and olives, whale oil, and fish oils. When and if the motorist uses one or the other of these oils as fuel for his car, there will be a Diesel engine beneath the hood, state the directors of this research bureau. Only Diesel engines can operate on such oils, they explain, and while the average American motorist little realizes the possibility

Britain Tests Suits For R.A.F. Men

LONDON (U.P.)—British air pilots are to fly in fireproof clothes—asbestos suits in which a man could sit in a petrol blaze without serious injury. Ground fire fighting trials with heavy asbestos suits have produced the new flying type, said to be lighter than the lined flying suits now worn by R. A. F. men. The material is closely woven light asbestos cloth. Tests have shown that a pilot wearing such a suit has time after catching fire in the air to land his plane and escape. In an ordinary fabric flying suit a pilot cannot stand the heat of a real blaze in his plane for more than a few seconds. An injured man in a fireproof suit could live some time in a crashed blazing plane until rescuers pulled him clear. The suit consists of an overall "teddy bear" suit, helmet, gloves and emergency visor. Our job department is complete—let us figure on your next job. We can save you money.

HEROIC PIONEER TO BE HONORED

DETROIT (U.P.)—Praise for the memory of one of the most heroic figures in the history of Detroit will be sounded this month on the 175th anniversary of the birth of Father Gabriel Richard.

Co-founder of the University of Michigan, editor-publisher of Detroit's first newspaper, congressman and a life-long fighter for the hard-won liberty of the infant nation, Father Richard died 105 years ago, a victim of the cholera plague which swept the city in 1832. His death was said to be the direct result of exhaustion he suffered after ministrations to the stricken.

Father Richard, realizing the need for an educational center for the vast territory, founded the state university with the Rev. John Monteith a Presbyterian minister, in 1817.

First Site in Detroit
Its natural site was then within the city of Detroit, and it was not until many years later that Ann Arbor became its location.

As an adjunct to the university, the city's first public library was erected under the direction of the priest.
Serving in Congress — the only

Catholic priest ever elected to that body— he was a constant campaigner for better roads. He succeeded in obtaining a Federal appropriation with which the first road from Detroit to Chicago was built opening up the southern part of the state for settlement.

His patriotism at one point in his life caused him to be imprisoned. During the War of 1812 he was captured by the British refusing to swear allegiance to the English king, he was made prisoner of war until England's last effort to recover the rebellious colonies was brought to an end.

First Venture Failed
Father Richard's newspaper, the first to be published in Michigan, was short-lived, but the materials for its production were saved for later use. In 1809, after he had brought to the state the first printing press its inhabitants had ever seen, "The Michigan Observer," made its appearance. It ran just one edition, and the press was idle for eight years, until "The Detroit Gazette" appeared at its head, as color and publisher, was Father Richard.

The altar and pews of the pioneer-priest's church are preserved to this day. They are in a chapel at the present St. Anne's named for that early building which was the city's first cathedral 15 years after Father Richard caused it to be built. His chalice, inscribed with the date 1801, is preserved by the pastor of another Detroit church, and the spectacles the padre-stewardman-ducator wore are in a museum case at Marygrove College, a Catholic girl's seminary.
