We are raising two little filly colts this year. With the average gross income per farm population at around $200.00 per year. I surely think it is practical for farmers to help nature "grow" some of our farm power and spend the $200.00 Get your Adding Machine paper at with the same business men for something we want that we can't help nature grow.

If and when the farmers we move by taking their land and working it with tractors, can find profitable employment "producing" some material thing, I will buy a tractor and easily double the average farm. It is sensible that as a nation we could be more prosperous, that way.

But listen, Mr. Sensible Man! Be careful that you don't foolishly contra! many times the average farm, work it with mechanical power that you must pay for out of the sale of farm products. spend many times the average gross income that the farmers do receive. You in turn place these same farmers on relief and force upon yourself the job of supporting them for they are ducing nothing, yet they must consume something.
