ROUND ROCK (AP) — Bringing an end to a federal lawsuit filed by some students and their families, the City of Round Rock is dropping charges against 70 students who participated in last spring's immigration protests.

The city and the Round Rock school district have agreed to pay $91,750 in legal fees and eliminate the incident from students' records. The students must attend a three-hour seminar on civics education.

The conditions of the agreement were reached after mediation among the parties.

TOKYO (AP) — A moderate earthquake jolted central Japan on Sunday, injuring at least five people, damaging houses and a 400-year-old castle, police and officials said.

The 5.4-magnitude quake hit at 12:19 p.m. local time and was centered in Mie prefecture, about 200 miles southwest of Tokyo, the U.S. Geological Survey said.

About six hours later, a magnitude-4.5 temblor believed to be an aftershock struck the area, Japan's Meteorological Agency reported.

Tech relationship with loan lender comes under fire

By NAOMI KASKELA STAFF WRITER

The financial aid services at Texas Tech have garnered national attention.

In a recent New York Times article, Tech's practices concerning financial aid services and criticisms of these practices

The specific issue addressed in the article questioned why individual calls to the Tech financial aid office are directed to individuals from Nelnet, a company in the student-loan industry based in Lincoln, Neb.

Criticisms mentioned in the article centered on the claim that a school using a lender as a call service is a conflict of

However, this type of practice is a state-approved contract call center, said Paul Blake, associate director for reporting and legislative issues in the Office of Student Financial Aid. At Tech, Student Business Services and the Office of Student Financial Aid team up to use the call center.

He said Tech went into a contract with Nelnet in September 2006 after reviewing bids from several other companies.

The reason Tech began looking into using an outside source to field calls at the Office of Student Financial Aid and Student Business Services was because of lack of funding and the increasing number of phone calls, Blake said.

In a single year, the Office of Student Financial Aid and Student Business Services each receive approximately 99,000 phone calls, he said.

"There are several companies who (provide call services) and we got the idea from other schools who use it," he said. One of the other schools using Nelnet as a call center for questions pertaining to financial aid is Wayne State University

Wayne State was also mentioned in the same New York

Despite the criticisms citing a possible conflict of interest, both Blake and Deirdre Moore, interim director of student financial aid at Wayne State University, defend the practice of using Nelnet and similar services.

Moore said through reading the news, she has heard of other administrators using similar services in a manner that results in a conflict of interests or other problems; however, she does not see it happening at Wayne State.

"I don't see those kinds of activities at all," she said. At Tech, Blake said the practice of using "secret shoppers" checks to make sure Nelnet individuals at the call center are answering only students' questions. "...any agency we do business with we use secret shoppers," he said. "We've had no complaints, and it's allowing us to provide the service with students in a timely manner." Ben Kiser, spokesman for Nelnet, said the contracts prevent a conflict of interest from surfacing.

"We respond to questions based on the procedures and scripts that have been approved by the school," he said.

"I think this type of service is helping to lower the cost of education for families," he said. "I think this provides a good opportunity for schools to maintain excellent call services."

The stipulations concerning the call centers vary from contract to contract, he said, as well as the fee Nelnet receives for each call answered and the length of the contracts.

SGA inducts new officers | Movement encourages Lubbock to become emissions conscious

The Texas Tech Grassroots Environmental Organization coordinated a literary reading as part of the Step It Up 2007 campaign Saturday at J & B Coffee Co.

The goal of the campaign is to encourage Congress to reduce carbon emissions 80 percent by the year

The event showcased readings of popular authors as well as original poems, songs and other literary compositions written by Tech students and organization members in an attempt to raise awareness about current environmental initiatives.

As of Saturday, 1,417 groups hosted similar events across the country to raise awareness about environmental causes, according to the campaign Web site, http://www. stepitup2007.org.

Imus incident promotes double standard

Tometimes it's true less is more. That's been very clear since the mere utterance of three words have seemingly wrecked the career of a longtime media mainstay. We now have reached a lull in the Don Imus controversy, but it won't last for bear with the descriptive slur on apologies.

Imus made quite a few mistakes over the last weeks. He should have held his tongue on his show, but unfortunately, he didn't. Subsequently, he decided to become owed no apologies.

Jesse Jackson released a statement Even though Imus would not to MSNBC saying, "Imus is on 1,040 hours a week, and yet they have any means, I've always enjoyed virtually no black show hosts. That is true for other networks as well. We must raise the ethical standard for all of them."

Sadly, Sharpton and Jackson are not concerned with correct ethical joker — he had been known to standards. Sharpton certainly isn't much of a reverend (as if he were anyway) for advocating his message Once he realized he crossed of revenge against Imus instead of the line with his commentary on preaching forgiveness. He must not believe in apologies since he's never apologized for the 1987 Tawana Brawley scandal in which he cried racism against those who disagreed with — and later proved — the girl's story was a hoax purely because the girl he was speaking for was black.

In this case, Imus isn't a racist, but merely ran his mouth when he shouldn't have. He did bow to the real racists however, which was a big mistake. #### Army gets Air Force to fill some Iraq duties

CAMP BULLIS (AP) — A row of rumbling flatbed trucks and Humvees outfitted with gun turrets lurches toward a mock village of cinderblock buildings where instructors posing as insurgents wait to test the trainees' convoy protection skills.

The training range is Army, as is the duty itself — one of the most dangerous in Iraq these days. But the young men and women clad in camouflage and helmets training to run and protect convoys are not Army; they're Air Force.

They are part of a small but steady stream of airmen being trained to do Army duty under the Army chain of command, a tangible sign the Pentagon was scouring the military to aid an Iraq force that was stretched long before President Bush ordered 21,500 additional U.S. troops there.

Jury likely to decide Long Island church sex abuse suit

MINEOLA, N.Y. (AP) — The nation's sixth-largest Roman Catholic diocese is headed to trial this week in a $150 million lawsuit accusing church officials of recklessness for employing a youth minister who raped and sodomized

But despite its familiar scenario of youths abused by religious leaders, this case is unique: It could be one of the few decided by a jury, rather than a quiet, out-of-court settlement.

The U.S. Conference of Bishops estimates abuse-related costs from lawsuits have exceeded $1.5 billion, the majority out-of-court settlements. Many of the alleged acts took place so long ago their statutes of limitations have expired.

Many cases are settled out of court, in part to prevent details of the alleged abuse from going public, said Steve Rubino, a New Jersey lawyer who has handled hundreds of church sex abuse cases.

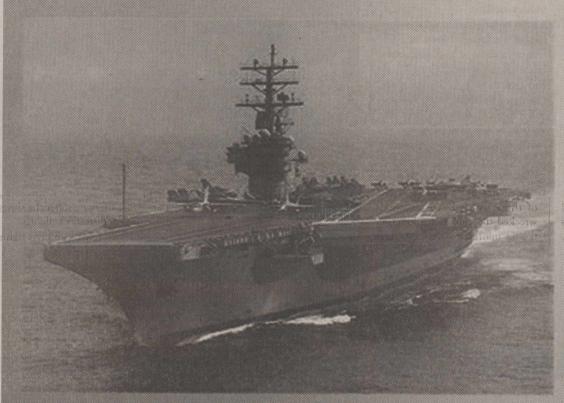

There is a tendency not to want to run that risk," Rubino said.

On Long Island, a grand jury found nearly two dozen cases of abuse going back decades in the Diocese of Rockville Centre, the nation's sixth largest with 1.3 million Catholics in 134 parishes.

Honors College discusses abuse of foreign workers

By ADAM YOUNG STAFF WRITER

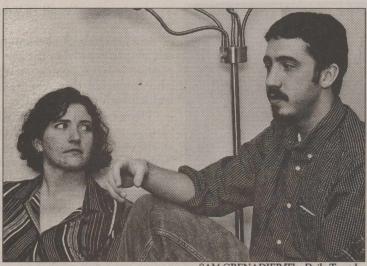

The Texas Tech Honors College hosted a lunch discussion Friday about the international issues students, faculty and staff members believe to be ignored by American media and public discussion.

Mark McGinley, an associate professor in the Honors College, said the Honors College hosts lunch discussions every Friday to provide students, faculty and staff members the opportunity to discuss current issues that commonly are not addressed.

Participants debated the potential abuse of foreign workers by American companies overseas as well as corruption in the Mexican police force.

"These are issues the media needs to cover more," said Christina Jones, a senior advertising major from Austin.

The discussion began with a debate about why some countries, like

An investigation found that Columbia was brought down in 2003 because a piece of insulating foam broke off the shuttle during liftoff and caused damage. Searing gases penetrated the shuttle upon re-entry and it disintegrated over Texas. All seven astronauts aboard died.

The Orlando Sentinel also reported that two astronaut families had ordered preflight insurance policies through NASA, but the agency failed to obtain the additional coverage before the accident. All the families threatened to go public before the agency paid the two families the additional insurance, the newspaper said.
