Court limits student speech in 'Bong Hits 4 Jesus' case

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court tightened limits on student speech Monday, ruling against a high school student and his 14-footlong "Bong Hits 4 Jesus" banner.

Schools may prohibit student expression that can be interpreted as advocating drug use, Chief Justice John Roberts wrote for the court in a 5-4 ruling.

Joseph Frederick unfurled his homemade sign on a winter morning in 2002, as the Olympic torch made its way through Juneau, Alaska, en route to the Winter Olympics in Salt Lake City.

Frederick said the banner was a nonsensical message that he first saw on a snowboard. He intended the banner to proclaim his right to say anything at all.

His principal, Deborah Morse, said the phrase was a pro-drug message that had no place at a school-sanctioned event. Frederick denied that he was advocating for drug use.

"The message on Frederick's banner is cryptic," Roberts said. "But Principal Morse thought the banner would be interpreted by those viewing it as promoting illegal drug use, and that interpretation is plainly a reasonable one."

Morse suspended the student, prompting a federal civil rights lawsuit.

The winning side in the case was quick to assert that the decision was not anti-free speech

In their concurrence, Justices Samuel Alito and Anthony Kennedy specified that the court's opinion provides no support for any restriction on speech that goes to political or social issues.

It's a narrow ruling that "should not be read more broadly," said Kenneth Starr, whose law firm represented the school principal.

Students in public schools don't have the same rights as adults, but neither do they leave their constitutional protections at the schoolhouse gate, as the court said in a landmark speech-rights ruling from Vietnam era.

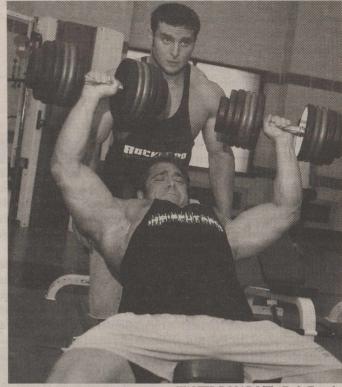

The court has limited what students can do in subsequent cases, saying they may not be disruptive or lewd or interfere with a school's basic educational mission.

Frederick, now 23, said he later had to drop out of college after his father lost his job. The elder Frederick, who worked for the company that insures the Juneau schools, was fired in connection with his son's legal fight, the son said. A jury recently awarded Frank Frederick $200,000 in a lawsuit he filed over his firing.

Joseph Frederick, who has been teaching and studying in China, pleaded guilty in 2004 to a misdemeanor charge of selling marijuana at Stephen F. Austin State University in Nacogdoches, Texas, according to court records.

Conservative groups that often are allied with the administration are backing Frederick out of concern that a ruling for Morse would let schools clamp down on religious expression, including speech that might oppose homosexuality or abortion.

on campus?

...to experience diversity...

Living on campus has allowed me to get to know so many diverse people that I believe I've changed in the way that I view others

It also gives me access to all the places I need to be in a short time and with less hassle. My experience here at Texas Tech University as a first-year student has been made so much easier by living on campus. When I think about times when I might have an evening exam, it is so nice to know that I don't have to rush and add the additional stress of running back and forth and worry about a late-night bus.

Carter's Hamas views prove to be humanitarian hypocrisy

The Israeli-Palestinian conflict has caused many problems and rifts between countries and political leaders for years, not to mention a human cost for those in the region. In a move that raised eyebrows around the nation, one of the United States' former presidents has decided to a side.

Jimmy Carter, the 39th president of the United States, harshly criticized the United States' view of the often-violent Hamas Islamic Resistance Movement — which recently wrested control of the Gaza Strip in a series of bloody coups. These attacks began after Palestinian President Mahmoud Abbas and his moderate political party, Fatah, purged the Palestinian parliament of Hamas representatives. When the Palestinian government began to share power with the radical group, the United States — along with the European Union and Israel — severed diplomatic relations and resumed them as soon as Hamas was no longer involved.

According to The Associated Press, Carter bemoaned the situation June 19 while in Dublin, Ireland, ironically for a humanrights conference. "The United States and Israel decided to punish all the people in Palestine and did everything they could to deter a compromise between Hamas and to say the Bush administration's actions, by refusing to recognize a Hamas victory after the Palestinian elections in 2006, were "criminal" and a "consensus of the U.S., Israel and the (European Union) to start funneling aid to Abbas' new government in the West Bank but continue blocking Hamas in the Gaza Strip represented an effort to divide Palestinians into two peoples."

Carter also offered opinions as to why he believed Hamas gained political power in Palestine. According to The Associated Press, "(Carter) said the vote was 'orderly and fair' and Hamas triumphed, in part, because it was 'shrewd in selecting candidates,' whereas a divided, corrupt Fatah ran multiple candidates for single Fatah," he said. He continued seats." When approached about possible reconciliatory talks between the two Palestinian parties, Palestinian President Abbas said there could be "no dialogue with those killers."

> It's difficult to understand how a man who considers himself to be a leading advocate of human rights can support an organization such as Hamas, which is recognized as a terrorist organization within much of the Western world and the European Union. Human Rights Watch stated some of their issues with Hamas in 2005. "Hamas has repeatedly failed to respect a fundamental rule of international humanitarian law by attacking civilians and civilian objects," Sarah Leah Whitson, executive director of the Middle East and North Africa Division of at cole.shooter@ttu.edu.

H.R.W., said on the organization's Web site. "It is unacceptable for Hamas to express its unhappiness with the political situation by firing on civilians."

Unfortunately, Carter seemingly isn't worried by the proven violence and cruelty exercised by the Hamas party, and instead chooses to levy blame on the United States and its allies. One cannot be a good humanitarian and still support a political sect that has not only gained political power in the methods it used but killed innocent people in the process. Even a sweater won't cover up the hypocrisy Jimmy Carter is spreading now.

New act aims to protect religious rights of Texas students

By TREVOR WALLACE DAILY TEXAN (U. TEXAS)

When do the views of one infringe on the rights of another?

House Bill 3678, the Religious Viewpoints Anti-Discrimination Act, recently signed into law June 8 by Gov. Rick Perry, addresses this question. It is designed to protect students' rights to refer to their faith in a limited capacity without fear of litigation.

In recent cases, students were not allowed to wish U.S. overseas troops "Merry Christmas," and another student was disciplined for drawing a picture of Jesus for an Easter illustration.

Austin's increasing diversity has lead many teachers to change tactics, both ment where all children are comfortable.

for educational purposes and as a way to include all students.

"I had three Muslim students, a Hindu and an Asian who believed in Jesus, but didn't celebrate Christmas," said Carol Bryan, a first grade teacher at Live Oak Elementary in Round Rock I.S.D. "I change curriculum activities to not offend the others. We celebrated a Muslim holy day on Dec. 16th and the Chinese New Year in February," she said.

Live Oak in itself is an oddity, being the only hearing-impaired school outside of Austin in the Hill Country area. Bryan is also an ESL teacher, making her classroom more diverse than most.

"It's important to create an environ-

Everyone learns and gets to celebrate many cultures," she said.

However, she is a rarity. Most of her co-workers still display Christmas trees in their classroom, Bryan said.

"The law sounds like a good idea on its face," said ACLU Communications Director Amy Davis. "But we're afraid it is going to be used to promote one religion over another."

"The ACLU does not begrudge anyone [the] expression of their faith, but where does someone cross the line? Making an entire speech about Jesus at graduation or a pep rally is not appropriate when a large number of people don't believe in that," Davis said.

"Everyone has sensibilities and rights," she said.

While Christian prayer and other religious speech do not offend Addy Bagrodia, a Hindu Economics and Corporate Communication Senior at the University of Texas at Austin, he did feel a little left out while in high school.

"I had some friends in Young Life, and I knew they were having a good time, but I never even tried to get in because I didn't feel like I fit in. At first, I was scared, but as I gained confidence in myself, I started not to care so much about what other people thought. I no longer felt like I had to belong to something to be comfortable with myself," he said. Young Life is a ubiquitous Christian-based organization in high schools nationwide.

"The motto of Young Life is to respect the right of everyone to make their own decisions. We're not a missionary organization," said Steve Mueller, Austin director of Young Life.

"If anyone is forcing anything on someone or discriminating against someone, we would come in and say, 'look at the teachings of Jesus. He loved and taught out of his race and ethnicity," Mueller said.

But religion is not the only thing Young Life members care about.

"At meetings at the schools, we're big on talking about UT football and algebra," he said.

"We've never faced any trouble over religious speech. We save those conversations for more appropriate places."

Montoya gets first

SONOMA, Calif. (AP) — When team owner Chip Ganassi first came up with the thought of luring Juan Pablo Montoya back to America from Formula One, it was days like this that he had in mind.

Montoya used his well-honed road-racing skill to save his tires and stretch his fuel Sunday, winning the Toyota/Save Mart 350 at Infineon Raceway for his first NASCAR Nextel Cup victory.

"One of the nice things, working with him again, is he's matured in a way as a race driver that you could not write in a movie," said Ganassi, for whom Montoya won the 1999 CART championship and the 2000 Indianapolis 500.

"He's a lot calmer, if you can imagine that. He actually came on the radio today and said, 'It's a little too early to race these guys.' I was looking at (crew chief Donnie) Wingo and he was looking at me. Juan's a changed man, all in a positive way."

The NASCAR rookie, who qualified a disappointing 32nd in the 43car field, was the first driver to win on the Northern California road circuit starting further back than 13th.

Montoya, who jumped from Formula One to the stock car circuit late last season, got his first Cup win in his 17th start and, more important, gave Ganassi his first win in NASCAR's top series since Jamie McMurray won in October 2002.
