How Graduate Education in Nursing Could Contribute To a Changing Society

The Doctor of Nursing Science (DNS) formalizes preparation of the registered nurse to fulfill advanced levels of human health care that are relatively new to the health care industry in America.

Curricula recently submitted to the Coordinating Board, Texas College and University System, for the Master of Science in Nursing (MSN) and the Doctor of Nursing Science (DNS) to be offered by the Texas Tech University Health Sciences Center (TTUHSC) School of Nursing in Lubbock focus on advancoing skills in clinical competence. It will include the research techniques which can evaluate, develop and refine nursing therapeutics (nursing interventions provided in various health care settings which can improve health status). These care levels have been pioneered by nurses who wished to advance their skills in the clinical care of patients with specific, complex health problems. The increasing complexity of health and the public's increasing expectations regarding health care emphasize the value of research that can advance nursing theory.

An example of clinical nursing at the doctoral level is provided by Alice Demi, R.N.,D.Sc.N., currently chairman of community nursing for the Medical College of Georgia's School of Nursing, whose research into grief mechanisms has led to two new nursing services.

Demi's feelings of helplessness when faced with the horror, guilt and grief among families of teenage suicide victims began a search for possible source of solace within the community. Finding none, she became instrumental in setting up a training program for grief counselors in a suicide prevention center. Soon, people who had lost loved ones suddenly, by means other than suicide, began coming for help.

Her study into the sources of guilt in bereaved parents led her to develop a theory of bereavement guilt and to publish information for nurses caring for the bereaved. From this Demi developed the Hospics of Marins, designed to improve the quality of life for terminal patients and to provide emotional support for family members both during and following the death.

Dr. Demi's work has improved and modified nursing practice. She continues to assist in setting standards and evaluating the quality of hospices and to contribute to the body of knowledge available to clinical nursing care.

Tech's graduate nursing programs would enjoy scholastic advantages because the School of Nursing is part of a health sciences center and located on a university campus. Emphasis on the nurse as part of the health team can be tailored through interaction with HSC professionals in the social sciences, speech and hearing, child development, computer sciences, education and other fields. Numerous courses within the university's six colleges would support nursing, including philosophy, psychology, sociology, mass communications, counseling, physical sciences, etc. Tech's graduate nursing programs would serve multiple publics by integrating curricula for the master's and doctoral levels. Except for the thesis, courses for the master's degree are a requirement of the doctoral degree, allowing candidates to enter or exit at the master's level.

Fifty Years Ago This Month

This note is the first in a series tracing the development of the Social Security in Congress 50 years ago. It was prepared by William J. Nelson, Jr., Office of Research, Statistics and International Policy, Office of Policy, Social Security Administration.

President Franklin D. Roosevelt, in his State of the Union message to Congress on January 4, 1935, promised to present legislation that would "cover the broad subjects of unemployment insurance and old-age insurance, of benefits for children, for mothers, for the handicapped, for maternity care and for other aspects of dependency and illness where a beginning can now be made." Such legislation, the President noted, was necessary to provide for "the security of men, women and children in the nation" who must be protected "against the major hazards and vicissitudes of life."

On January 17, 1935, the President transmitted to Congress a message on economic security, which embodied the recommendations made to him 2 days earlier by his Committee on Economic Security. The Committee, consisting of Cabinet members and chaired by Frances Perkins, Secretary of Labor, had been established in June 1934. Its mission was to develop a comprehensive social insurance system covering all major personal economic hazards, especially the hazards of unemployment and old age. This included studing the problems relating to economic security and making recommendations for a program of legislation.

Upon presentation of the Committee's work to Congress, President Roosevelt focused on the recommendations dealing with old-age insurance when he noted that -

In the important field of security for our old people, it seems necessary to adopt three principles - first, noncontributory old-age pensions for those who are now too old to build up their own insurance; it is, of course, clear that for perhpas 30 years to come funds will have to be provided by the States and the Federal Government to meet these pensions. Second, compulsory contributory annuities which in time will establish a selfsupporting system for those now young and for future generations. Third, voluntary contributory funds by which individual initiative can increase guarantee this country against the dangers of future depressions but we can reduce these dangers. We can eliminate many of the factors that cause economic depressions, and we can provide the means of mitigating their results.

This plan for economic security is at once a measure of prevention and a method of alleviation. The concept of a contributory old-age insurance system, of course, became the foundation of the old-age and survivors insurance program. The Committee believed that his proposal would lighten the burden on future generations imposed by support for the aged:

With an increasing number and even more rapidly increasing percentage of the aged, the cost of supporting old persons will be a heavy load on future generations regardless of any legislation that may be enacted. In order to reduce the pension costs and also to more adequately provide for the needs of the not yet old but who will become old in time, we recommend a contributory annuity system on a compulsory basis, to be conducted by the Federal Government. A contributory annuity system, while of little or no vlaue to people now in these older age group, will enable younger workers, with the aid of their employers, to build up gradually their rights to annuities in their old age. Without such a contributory system, the cost of pensions would, in the future, be overwhelming. Contributory annuities are unquestionably preferable to noncontributory pensions. They come to the workers as a right, wheras the noncontributory pensions must be oncditioned upon a "means" test. Annuities, moreover, can be ample for a comfortable existence, bearing some relation to customary wage standards, while gratuitous pensions can provide only a decent subsistence. The Committee further noted that while "children, friends, and relatives have borne and still carry the major part of the cost of supporting the aged," this burden had become unbearable for many children because of the depression and because the number of old persons who were dependent upon public or private charity had greatly increased: Many children who previously supported their parents have been compelled to cease doing so, and the great majority will probably never resume this load. The depression has largely wiped out wage earners' savings and has deprived millions of workers past middle age of their jobs, with

President Roosevelt, recommended action on the Committee's proposal by concluding that -

The establishment of sound means toward a greater future economic security of the American people is dictated by a prudent consideration of the hazards involved in our national life. No one can

For years there has been some tendency toward a decrease in the percentage of old people gainfully employed. Employment difficulties for middle-age and older workers have been increasing, and there is little posibility that there will be a reversal of this trend in the near future.

Each camp costs $45 for the first child and $40 for the second child form a family. The cost is $35 for each additional child. Camp insurance is included in the fee.

Registration is accepted on a first-come, firstserved basis. Parents can register their children at the Recreational Sports Office in the Student Recreation Center.

Air Force Officer Opportunities

Lowry AFB, Colo. -- "The United States Air Force has immediate openings for more than 500 college graduates to become commissioned officers. We have exciting and rewarding challenges in a variety of skills for young men and women who qualify. We also need about 70 people with degrees in computer science," said Master Sergeant Terry Rowe.

Selected applicants attend a 12-week course at Officers Training School (OTS), San Antonio, Texas. There they are provided with the essential military knowledge and skills needed to become effective officers. Upon commissioning as second lieutenants from OTS, new officers proceed to their new assignments or go on to a career related technical school.

New officers enjoy a variety of entitlements. These include 30 days of vacation with pay each year. Comprehensive medical and dental care, good starting pay, and the opportunity to earn a graduate degree.

The opportunity to become an officer in the United State Air Force this year will exist for a limited time. People interested in serving their county and having the respect and privileges of an Air Force officer should act now," said Sgt. Rowe. To learn more about Air Force officer opportunities during this special drive, contact Sgt. Rowe at 1017 University Ave., Lubbock, Texas or call (806) 762-4886. Collect calls accepted.
