Titan silo blows; At least 22 hurt

DAMASCUS, Ark. (AP) — A fiery explosion that lit the night sky "like daylight" rocked an underground Titan II missile silo early today, injuring at least 22 maintenance workers, the Air Force said. The Strategic Air Command would not say whether the missile carried a nuclear warhead or whether any radiation leaked.

Authorities evacuated the area within a five-mile radius, routing about 1,000 people mostly in the tiny towns of Damascus, Bee Branch and Gravesville. Physicists from the state health department were sent to the scene to check radiation levels.

Tom Mahr, a public information officer at SAC headquarters in Omaha, Neb., said his latest information was that 22 people were injured, 18 of them seriously enough to be hospitalized.

Sources at the Pentagon said the missile contained a single nuclear warhead, that it was not damaged and that no radiation was leaking.

Gov. Bill Clinton said Air Force officials told him that no nuclear explosion had occurred and that none could have occurred in the silo housing the 103-foot-long intercontinental ballistic missile which is capable of delivering this nation's largest hydrogen bomb to a target 6,300 miles away.

The "most significant ... question is whether there is any radiation coming out of the silo. The military is trying to get guys and equipment there to be sure there is no radiation from the armament," he said.

Maj. Lew Lambert at SAC headquarters in Omaha, Neb., said the explosion scattered debris around the surrounding area and that Arkansas officials reported some foliage had caught fire. By midmorning, he said, the fire had subsided.

It was not immediately known whether the missile itself or only fuel exploded. The silo, covered by concrete doors, was "just a big rubble inside" after the blast, Clinton said.

The explosion occurred as a maintenance crew tried to neutralize a fuel leak in the first-stage of the missile, said SAC spokesman Col. Richard Kline.

The fuel tank had been punctured by "some form of human error, apparently" and 10,000 gallons of fuel began leaking, according to Clinton.

The Air Force said at least 10 workers were injured. Six were taken to Conway Memorial Hospital, most suffering from burns, said hospital administrator Bill Langford. He said four would be admitted in good condition and the others treated and released.

Three workers were taken to Baptist Medical Center in Little Rock, 52 miles away, where one was reported in critical condition, one in serious condition and the third in fair condition. It was not immediately known where the 10th injured person was treated.

It was the second accident this week involving sophisticated Air Force weaponry. On Monday, a B-52 bomber caught fire at Grand Forks Air Force Base in North Dakota.

Oswald's grave won't be opened

FORT WORTH (AP) — A judge today blocked exhumation of the body that lies in the grave of Lee Harvey Oswald, accused assassin of President John F. Kennedy.

State District Judge James Wright, in granting a temporary injunction, said "no necessity or compelling reason for the threatened exhumation or autopsy are shown in this record. In short, rumors, speculative theory, conjecture, and public curiosity will not suffice."

Lawyers for British author Michael Eddowes, who tried to have the body dug up, said they were studying the ruling and would decide later whether to appeal.

The dispute started when Eddowes received permission to have the body removed and an autopsy held to determine if Oswald or a Russian spy were buried there.

Oswald's brother Robert filed suit to stop the exhumation.

Wright rejected Eddowes' argument that the consent of Lee Harvey Oswald's widow, Marina Oswald Porter, to exhume the body was a controlling factor.

That "is not a correct view of the law," Wright said.

The judge also held Eddowes "mistakenly asserts the point" that Robert Oswald should not be heard in the matter.

"It is the opinion of this court that the plaintiff (Robert Oswald) has shown a probable right and a probable injury," Wright said. "Therefore, the plaintiff's application for temporary injunction as to the defendant Eddowes should be and it is hereby granted."

The judge denied Oswald's application for an injunction against Rose Hill Burial Park on the city's east side, where Lee Harvey Oswald is buried.

"With regard to the injunction sought against the defendant Rose Hill cemetery, there has been no showing in this case that the cemetery has taken, or intends to take, any action concerning the disinterment ... It is therefore the opinion of this court that plaintiff's application for a temporary injunction as to the defendant Rose Hill cemetery should be, and it is, hereby denied."

Hospital to join in study of east, southeast needs

By SUE FAHLGREN
Staff Writer

Midland County Hospital District board of directors approved a motion Thursday to join in the Chamber of Commerce's Objectives for Midland — The Eighties program in a study of the needs of east and southeast Midland.

Approving a motion to pay $6,000 of the necessary $50,000 for the Urban Land Institute study of east Midland, the directors agreed the study would be most helpful to the hospital in learning the problems of a population where many of the hospital's indigent patients and emergency outpatients live.

Ed Magruder, president of the board, told board members about the group doing the study. "They've done this sort of thing before in this area (in 1967 in the downtown area). It's a highly professional group. They are a non-profit organization that is well-versed in the problems of urban economy," he said.

"They will do a good job and what comes out of it will be worth it," Magruder said. Although he added, "It might be a little far-fetched to advocate the good that comes out of it."

All five directors agreed the study would help the hospital and the city. Magruder added he expected to "specifically incorporate questions on outpatient needs." He said it was important for the hospital to learn from this study the residents' needs for "health care and its delivery as it bears on the hospital's responsibility and on the district's responsibility."

Part six: Not a fluke of history, but a president

BY MERLE MILLER

Within a few hours of John F. Kennedy's assassination, everybody in the world with a television set knew what Lyndon Johnson looked and sounded like: A huge Texan with preposterous ears and a Texas accent.

But beyond that, most people knew very little about him, and many of those who did, or thought they did, didn't care much for what they knew. The impression was that Johnson was a legislative wire-puller and manipulator.

Bill Moyers, a former White House press secretary: "He knew that he was not a legitimate president. Constitutionally, he was president. Politically, he had not been asked into that office by the people. This made him very uncomfortable. He also knew many of the people who had been for Kennedy considered him an intruder."

The first occasion for Johnson to present himself as president to the nation was an address to both houses of Congress. It was a resounding success, remembered mainly for one line — "Let us continue," a familiar reference to Kennedy's inauguration speech, with its theme, "Let us begin."

Even the New York Herald Tribune, which rarely had a good word for any Democrat, editorially praised the Johnson speech. "Fine words, fitting words, at times inspiring words. As he stood before Congress and the nation not a fluke of history but a president."

During the month of mourning for Kennedy, Johnson built bridges — by calling organizations, business people, labor people, church people, ethnic groups, telling each, "I need you. I need your help more than Jack Kennedy did, and I'm the only president you've got." He enlisted their sympathy and understanding, and built a strong and impressive base that way.

JAMES ROWE JR., a Johnson friend and adviser: "The one thing I used to say when Kennedy died and Johnson came into office, I used to say my boss Roosevelt had both style and substance. And Kennedy had style. And this fellow Johnson had substance. I still think this is true. Kennedy looked fine, made nice speeches, but he didn't get much done."

Everyone, it seemed, had something to say on that subject. Charles De Gaulle once called Kennedy the mask on the face of America, while Johnson WAS America.

Benjamin Bradlee of the Washington Post: "If you read the dictionary about style the fact is that Johnson had more style than Kennedy. If style is individuality — that individuality by which one distinguishes a person — he (Johnson) was just a goddamn bank vault of style."

Hubert Humphrey may have said it best: "Of course, every presidency has its own personality. Kennedy's had great grace and charm and class. Johnson's presidency was more like a developer moving into an area that needs rehabilitation. I think when you look back, you will see that with Johnson — he didn't get all the little paintings on the wall, and he didn't get the gold plate on the dome and didn't shine up the doorknobs, but he got the foundation in, got the sidewalks up, got the beams put across. The structure was there."

One piece of legislation alone, the 1964 Civil Rights Act, illustrates the difference: Lyndon made sure he got everything he asked for. Kennedy, faced with inevitable Senate opposition, would almost surely have compromised somewhere, traded the deletion of one section, say, for the passage of the rest. Lyndon refused to delete, refused to compromise, anywhere.

The first two preoccupations of the Johnson administration were civil rights and a tax cut, plus an investigation of the Kennedy assassination.

THE SPECIAL COMMISSION to investigate the assassination of President Kennedy, as it was officially named, delivered its report on September 28, 1964, saying that Lee Harvey Oswald, acting alone and unaided, and slightly crazed, killed John F. Kennedy. There were some who refused to believe the report told the full

Bomb scare in Manila

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Hundreds of employees spilled out of the Asian Development Bank today after a caller warned urban terrorist bombers would strike next at the regional developmental institution, bank officials said.

The scare occurred after anonymous callers threatened to bomb the cultural section of the Soviet Embassy, two schools and several private establishments in Manila and suburban areas, police said. No bombs were immediately found in any of the buildings threatened. Police said they have been receiving an average of 50 bomb threats daily since a wave of bomb explosions killed an American woman and wounded 30 other people last Friday.

A group calling itself The April 6 Liberation Movement has claimed responsibility for the bombings, which it said it will continue until it forces an end to President Ferdinand E. Marcos' eight-year-old martial law regime.

Soviets changing tactics in Afghanistan

LONDON (AP) — Soviet military commanders in Afghanistan are launching helicopter-borne commando raids against Moslem rebels in a major tactical shift from previous large-scale ground operations, the Times of London reported today.

Kabul, quoted unidentified "military observers" as saying the Soviets also are bringing in "older and more experienced" troops to replace the young and largely inexperienced draftees, who make up the bulk of the occupation army.

According to the Times, the Soviets are shifting away from the widespread use of tanks and other armored vehicles and large formations of troops, which are difficult to maneuver in the mountainous terrain favored by the guerrillas as bases for their hit-and-run attacks.

Rebel resistance is "sufficient to worry the Soviet forces and keep them on a constant war footing," the newspaper said. But Tharpar quoted unidentified diplomats in Kabul as saying they believe the Soviets will eventually succeed in gaining control of the country.

The current situation is a "moving stalemate" with the guerrillas' continued resistance dependent on how much aid they can get. "not just local support, but arms and money from outside Afghanistan," one diplomat was quoted as saying.

The paper said the Soviets are "making rapid preparations for a long stay in the country. With the winter snows only a few weeks away, the Soviets are building new roads, arms and fuel depots and concrete winter barracks to replace the vast tent cities that have housed the Soviet forces since they first moved into Afghanistan last December.

Meanwhile, a standoff reportedly continues in Kabul over a Soviet soldier who sought asylum in the U.S. Embassy. Reliable diplomatic sources in neighboring Pakistan said the Soviets are claiming the man is a "simple, confused enlisted man" wanted for an unspecified "crime" in

Drug may prevent angina attacks

Dear Dr. Solomon: My husband continues to play tennis even though he is bothered by attacks of angina when he exerts himself. When this occurs, he is able to relieve the symptoms with nitroglycerin. Is there any reason he should not take the nitroglycerin before he begins to play in order to prevent an attack? — Mrs. A.S.

Dear Mrs. S.: For many people, taking nitroglycerin a few minutes before starting an activity that usually precipitates an anginal attack very often prevents the attack. Some patients follow this procedure routinely whenever they anticipate becoming involved in an emotionally charged situation, or before participating in any physically stressful activity, such as sexual intercourse, tennis or golf. Check with your doctor to make sure it's OK.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My closest friend recently was killed in an automobile accident at the age of 34. I find it ironic that he didn't smoke, drank only moderately and generally took good care of himself. In fact he used to kid me about the need for losing a little weight. His death has got me to thinking that we have little control over what happens to us, and that we might as well enjoy life while we can. If that means smoking a couple of packs of cigarettes a day or putting on a few extra pounds while indulging in favorite foods, so be it. Whether a person lives or dies apparently is determined by fate. What good did it do my friend that he didn't smoke? — Casey

Dear Casey: I can understand why the death of a close friend at such an early age might make you a fatalist, but I cannot agree with your conclusions. Although accidents do happen, many events are not beyond our control. For example: Everything else being equal, people who are heavy smokers generally will not be as healthy or live as long as people who do not smoke. Possibly even more important, the quality of life of nonsmokers — that is, their ability to enjoy themselves and get satisfaction out of life — will be superior to that of smokers.

Just consider the extent to which personal behavior contributes to the development of serious injuries and diseases. Many of our more serious health problems are attributable to such habits as smoking, excessive drinking, inadequate nutrition, excessive use of medication, careless driving habits and unrelenting pressure to achieve. Do you doubt that at least some of these problems could be avoided if people only practiced greater discretion in these areas?

Nor are environmental influences caused by fate. To a considerable extent, contamination of our air, food and water, as well as excessive exposure to radiation and to dangers on the job, is a product of conscious decisions made by people in positions of authority.

Your friend's death emphasizes that no one can be guaranteed long life; accidents do and will continue to occur. But some aspects of health care are well within our ability to control.

Man gets a rush from Rushmore

By JULES LOH

MOUNT RUSHMORE, S.D. (AP) — A man with a fear of heights has no business dangling from a cable over Mount Rushmore, but Bob Crisman would not trade that duty with anyone.

"I've come to have very strong feelings about that sculpture," he was saying the other day, safe on the ground under the gaze of those four presidential faces.

"It's hard to put into words, but once you've been out there, touching it, moving over every square inch of it, you develop a certain attachment to it, a pride such as the men who actually carved it must have felt.

"It's a personal matter. I asked for the job, they let me have it, and I don't want anyone else to do it but me."

The National Park Service titles Bob Crisman's job "sculpture maintenance," an accurate but juiceless description of what he actually does.

What he does is strap himself in a bosun's chair and allow himself to be lowered over the face of the mountain, or rather the faces, by two trustworthy friends above operating a hand winch that was left for that purpose when the carvings were finished in 1911. Same old winch, same old cable.

From below, he looks like a tiny puppet on a string. Thus deployed, 300 feet above "impact level," as he puts it, he goes about filling hairline cracks in the granite so that water won't get in them, freeze, and possibly break off somebody's nose, or lip, or eyebrow.

"Don't worry," he said. "These are not cracks that have developed. They were always there. The rock is crazed, sort of like an old plate, with cracks from the size of a hair to the size of a pencil lead."

"When the sculptor, Gutzon Borglum, finished it, he filled all those cracks with a mixture of granite dust, white lead and linseed oil. I use the same thing. The cracks I fill are in the fillings. I have never seen any new cracks."

Bob Crisman's affection for the monument is apparent — he has read every word he can find about it — and also ironic.

He was born and raised on a ranch 13 miles from here and never troubled to go look at the sculpture, except a few times from a distance. When he got out of high school and then the Air Force, seven years ago, he took a job with the Park Service at age 24.

That was when he got his first close-up look at Mount Rushmore. "Once I saw it," he said, "I was really awed."

Canadian feds to go ahead on new construction

OTTAWA (AP) — Canada's federal and provincial governments are heading for a stormy debate following Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau's decision to recall Parliament ahead of schedule and unilaterally work out a new constitution.

Trudeau will think over the options this weekend before taking off on a week-long trip to the Northwest Territories. A date for the recall of Parliament has not been decided and the Trudeau trip means the legislature probably could not return before Oct. 1. "This cabinet meeting was an attempt to find an easy consensus," said one source.

Rotting bodies litter battlefield near Ethiopian city

WARDER, Ethiopia (AP) — Charred tanks, spent shells and rotting bodies litter the landscape around this tiny oasis, symbols of what Ethiopia claims is its ongoing war with ethnic Somali rebels and Somali regular troops fighting for control of the Ogaden wilderness.

Warder, a community of 1,300 dwellings, boasts one of the few water sources in the sprawling Ogaden wasteland. It was a major battleground in the 1977-78 Ogaden war between Ethiopia and Somalia.

Ethiopia won the war, with the help of Soviet aid and Cuban troops, but it claims this oasis and other towns and military strongpoints in the Ogaden remain targets of rebels of the Western Somali Liberation Front.

Ethiopia also says regular Somali troops mounted at least one major incursion since the end of the war, a charge denied by the Somali government.

The Ogaden, ceded to Ethiopia at the turn of the century by the withdrawing European colonial powers, is inhabited primarily by ethnic Somali nomads whose culture, language and religion makes them kin to the natives of Somalia.

Guerrillas of the Western Somali Liberation Front claim the Ethiopians are colonial oppressors, and they demand independence or a merger with Somalia. Somalia supports this claim.

Ethiopia says the Ogaden, which makes up nearly one-third of its 395,000 square mile land mass, belongs to it — a claim recognized by the Organization of African Unity.

Earlier this week, the Ethiopian government in an apparent effort to prove its claim of Somali involvement in the continuing Ogaden fighting, invited 29 Western and Eastern bloc reporters to visit the territory. The Westerners were the first non-communist journalists to tour the area from the Ethiopian side in nearly three years.

Their visit, heavily monitored by Ethiopian authorities, came less than a month after Somalia claimed it repulsed an Ethiopian invasion along its border. Ethiopia denied it attacked its neighbor in the strategic East Africa Horn.

Traveling for two days by plane, newsmen visited four towns and cities: Warder in the south central area, Degahabur in the north central area, Jijiga in the northeastern, and Dire Dawa in the northwest, just outside the Ogaden perimeter.

There was apparent evidence of recent fighting in all three towns in the Ogaden proper.

On the outskirts of Warder, 120 miles west of the Somali border, Ethiopian officials showed reporters the charred hulks of what they said were four Somali tanks. Nearby, in a pile of spent shell casings and other battle debris, lay the sunbaked, rotting bodies of two soldiers identified as Somalis.

Lt. Fanetah Temtimeh, operations officer for the Ethiopian garrison at Warder, said about 14,000 Somali regulars besieged the town in June and July.

There was no independent confirmation of his claim.

Temtimeh said 1,336 Somalis were killed and more than 2,000 wounded in the battle in which the attackers rained rocket and artillery fire on the Ethiopian defenses and nearly breached the government lines in a series of assaults.

The lieutenant claimed his forces suffered nearly 300 casualties. The Ethiopians say they control the area around Warder. But the reporters were driven through the area in convoys escorted by two armored vehicles, and troops formed skirmish lines every time the journalists got off the vehicles.

"Sometimes they (the Somalis) get very close to the town perimeter," an Ethiopian official explained.

In Degahabur, a heavily fortified garrison town ringed by deep trenches, is a major resettlement site for Somali nomads displaced by the fighting. About 17,000 refugees live in huts on the edge of town, supplied with food by the Ethiopians.

Government officers said many of the refugees were originally forced to flee to Somalia by retreating Somali forces during the war and only recently were able to "escape" back to Ethiopia. They said others came from nearby villages destroyed by insurgents in recent fighting.

Ethiopian officials showed reporters eight prisoners in Dire Dawa who claimed they were Somali regulars captured earlier this year after crossing the border.

Jijiga, one of the key battlegrounds in the Ogaden war, now appears to be comparatively peaceful and serves as a major base for Cuban combat troops, who continue to aid the Ethiopians. Although heavily fortified, the city has reportedly been free of fighting since the war, although authorities said outlying villages have been periodically attacked.

Some say hike want hurt much

By WILLIAM GLASGALL
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — American motorists and homeowners shouldn't suffer much from Saudi Arabia's decision to raise the price of its crude oil by $2 a barrel, industry analysts say.

The Saudi increase will add "less than a cent a gallon" to average U.S. retail gasoline or heating-oil prices if dealers choose to pass the increase to consumers, said Tom Peake, manager of the economics department of Standard Oil Co. of California.

There will be "an insignificant increase" in oil-product prices in the United States, amounting to as little as "a quarter-cent-a-gallon," said economist John Lichtblau of the Petroleum Industry Research Foundation in New York.

The new Saudi Arabian price of $30 for a 42-gallon barrel of crude, announced Wednesday after a three-day meeting of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, is 125 percent above the $13.34-a-barrel OPEC's largest member was charging on Jan. 1, 1979.

OPEC oil ministers also agreed to cut the cartel's official base price from $32 a barrel to $30 and to freeze prices of all members except the Saudis' until the ministers meet in Bali, Indonesia, on Dec. 15.

Because no member's price will decline as Saudi Arabia's rises, the cartel's move amounts to a 70 cents-a-barrel, or 2 percent, increase in the average OPEC price to about $32.20 a barrel, analysts said.

But Lichtblau cautioned the Saudi increase "was a clear move toward a $32-a-barrel level" for the country that produces one-third of OPEC's oil. Saudi Arabia's price had been $4 under the former official OPEC base price.

Saudi Arabia provided the United States with 1.35 million barrels of oil a day in the first five months of 1980, equivalent to 8 percent of U.S. oil needs, according to Department of Energy statistics.

The impact of the $2-a-barrel Saudi price boost will be "less than the effect of decontrol," said Peake, referring to the lifting of federal price controls on crude oil produced in the United States.

Despite the upward pressures on crude prices, U.S. retail gasoline and heating oil prices have risen little since early summer because demand has been slumping.

"The oil market is extremely soft" following the more than 130 percent jump in OPEC prices since January 1979 which came after the revolution in Iran and subsequent Iranian oil production cutbacks, said Peake.

"There's a surplus of oil in world markets in excess of 1 million barrels a day," said William Brown, an economist at Chase Econometric Associates Inc. in Bala Cynwyd, Pa. According to Peake, the slump in oil use has left industry storage tanks "about as full as they can get."

Saudi Arabia said before its price increase was revealed that it would not cut its 9.5 million barrels-a-day oil output this year despite the world oil oversupply.

The Saudi refusal to reduce production could extend the oil glut, bring pressure on OPEC hawks including Libya, Algeria and Iran, to limit future price increases, and unify the cartel's current free-for-all pricing system.

The cartel's prices traditionally have been based on the charge for crude oil from Saudi Arabia, and the Saudis since last year have been attempting to win acceptance of a long-term program of moderate OPEC price increases every quarter.

The plan would tie the price of OPEC oil to changes in inflation, economic growth and foreign-exchange rates in the West and could be adopted at the December oil ministers' meeting in Indonesia.

"Toward year-end, price unity will be reached," Lichtblau said.

Silver advertisement presents buy info

By BARBARA BRY
The Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — How would you like to buy silver for $60 an ounce — three times the market price?

You could if you answered an advertisement that ran this week in the Los Angeles Times and other publications across the United States.

The ad, headlined "Buy a silver ingot for $10 until Oct. 14," tells consumers that they can purchase a "troy gram bar" of silver for $10 plus $2 in shipping, handling and insurance costs.

With 31 grams in a troy ounce, about six of these bars — costing a total of $60 — equals one troy ounce of silver. The metal now is priced at about $20 an ounce on the commodity exchanges.

It could not be learned how many consumers rushed to buy these "ingots" — actually one and one-fourth-inch-long, wafer-thin rectangles — at a price that is significantly above even the record for the metal of just over $50 an ounce, set during the short-lived period of panic buying earlier this year.

Efforts to reach any top officials at North American Minerals Ltd., which placed the advertisement, were unsuccessful. Although the ad tells consumers to write to an address in Hicksville, N.Y., an information operator told a reporter that the company is located at 1200 Shames Ave. in Westbury, N.Y.

The telephone number for North American Minerals — 516-334-2099 — is the same as for H.M. Fisk Ltd. and Abernathy and Closter Ltd., two other firms that have used similar marketing methods.

In June, Fisk ran ads across the United States for $5, 1-carat emeralds plus $1 for shipping, insurance and handling. Abernathy and Closter advertised 0.25-point, 10-facet round diamond earrings in July for $5 plus $1 for shipping. Earlier this month, it publicized 14-carat gold floating heart pendant charms for $5 plus $1 for shipping. Each company has a different address in the ads, but the telephone number is the same.

The ads appear to give an accurate — though limited — description of the merchandise. The emerald was an emerald, although of poor quality. The earrings came with a small, industrial-type diamond set in the middle of what looked like a cut-glass setting and the heart pendant was a thin outline of a heart.

Last year, a Washington Post reporter tracked down H.M. Fisk to 208 W. 38th St. in New York, which housed a tobacco store called Stevens Smoke Shop. The newspaper reported that the shop served as the retail outlet for Jay Norris Corp., a national mail order company that operated out of a warehouse at 31 Hanse Ave. in Freeport, Long Island.

Since then, Jay Norris Corp. and its sole owners and shareholders — Joel Jacobs and Mortimer Williams — have been the subject of a Federal Trade Commission cease and desist order, originally issued May 1, 1978. The company and Jacobs and Williams appealed the case to the U.S. Supreme Court, which declined to hear it last December.

The FTC order forbids them from representing in any advertisements the "safety or performance characteristics of any product unless respondents have a reasonable basis for the representations consisting of competent and objective material, available in written form, that fully and completely substantiate such representations."

According to an FTC spokesman, the order stemmed from several products marketed by Jay Norris Corp. ranging from television antennas to roach powder.

Jay Norris Corp. has since gone out of business and is in the process of filing bankruptcy proceedings, the FTC spokesman said. A reporter was told by an information operator on Long Island that there was no longer a telephone number for the firm, and that the old number had been unlisted.

Robert Ullman, who said he was a New York attorney representing North American Minerals, H.M. Fisk and Abernathy and Closter, said that Mortimer Williams and Joel Jacobs as well as Jay Norris Corp. have no connection with the firms. "They aren't owners or principals," Ullman said.

He also said that Williams and Jacobs "may have been paper officers of Fisk at one time."

Ullman said that the FTC order against Jay Norris Corp. and Williams and Jacobs has nothing to do with North American Minerals, H.M. Fisk and Abernathy and Closter.

Concerning the price of the 5-gram silver ingot, Ullman said he didn't know whether the commodity market price of $20 an ounce includes making the silver into an ingot that the $10 for five-grams does.

allow the Saudis to increase their $30-a-barrel oil price to $32 by late this year, one oil trader said. He asked to be quoted anonymously.

Other sources in Vienna told The Associated Press a $32-a-barrel Saudi oil price could be announced by December. Saudi Arabia, OPEC's largest member and the supplier of 8 percent of U.S. oil needs, raised its price for a 42-gallon barrel of crude oil to $30 from $28 at a special meeting of OPEC oil ministers Wednesday.

The Saudis said before announcing the price hike they would leave their oil production level unchanged for the rest of 1980. But a communique released by the oil ministers after their meeting made no mention of the cartel's output.

Economists estimate a drop in oil demand following a nearly 150 percent jump in OPEC prices since December 1978 has left the world with a more than 1 million barrel-a-day oil surplus.

Several major U.S. refiners this week responded to the surplus by reducing wholesale gasoline prices as much as 2 cents a gallon.

A 10 percent production cut by Saudi Arabia would amount to 950,000 barrels a day, just under the 1 million barrels-a-day reduction many analysts had predicted before the OPEC conference began.

No other OPEC members were reported to have planned production cuts.

The action "could be the first step in a well-thought-out plan" that would with rebuilt engines and high performance sports cars use less oil when they get a thicker type than the low-viscosity Mobil 1. The low viscosity, or thinness, allows Mobil 1 to escape quickly through openings between engine parts in these cars, the commission said.

The FTC staff said Mobil received about 3,600 consumer complaints about Mobil 1 from March 1976 to April 1979.

Mobil said in a statement that its ads were "accurate and informative" but said prolonged argument over the phrasing would waste time and legal expense.

"Since its introduction (four years ago), the numbers of motorists using Mobil 1 has increased, while complaints have decreased. Based on the latest full-year's sales figures, consumption complaints occur with only four one-hundredths of one percent of customers," the company said.

The consent agreement contains no admission of a law violation. Before the company agreed to the settlement, it was accused of "unfair and deceptive" advertising.

UAE to make fourth quarter oil cut

By WILLIAM GLASGALL
AP Business Writer

The United Arab Emirates, a Persian Gulf ally of giant oil producer Saudi Arabia, will act to reduce the world oil glut by cutting its output 10 percent, or 170,000 barrels a day, in the fourth quarter, Oil Minister Mana Saedd Otaiba was quoted as saying Thursday.

The report, carried by the Gulf News Agency and monitored in Nicosia, Cyprus, touched off speculation among U.S. oil industry sources that the Saudis might be the next to announce a production cut.

The United Arab Emirates produces 1.7 million barrels of crude oil daily and supplies 1 percent of U.S. oil needs. Recently, it announced it had cut oil production by 70,000 barrels a day.

Mobil 1 oil add hit by commission

By JEFFREY MILLS

WASHINGTON (AP) — Mobil 1, a motor oil advertised as a way of cutting oil consumption, may actually increase it in some cars, the Federal Trade Commission charged Thursday.

The synthetic motor oil, sold to 750,000 users last year, is advertised as reducing oil consumption "up to 25 percent in engines in good mechanical condition."

The FTC announced its complaint at the same time as an agreement with Mobil Oil Corp. to settle the case. Mobil agreed either to stop the advertising claims or to add that some cars will use more oil and that users should check oil levels frequently.

Carter conference raises GOP's ire

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter's nationally broadcast news conference raised not only some expected ire from his Republican opponent — whose aides called the performance a "political commercial" — but also some surprising concern by television network executives.

Carter, who has refused to take part in a televised debate Sunday between presidential candidates Ronald Reagan and John Anderson, held sway before the TV cameras Thursday for about 30 minutes, four of them devoted to an opening statement in which he gave a "good news" report on his administration.

"I did not raise the issue of the Klan nor did I raise the issue of states' rights," he said. "And I believe it's best to leave these words, which are code words to many people in our country who suffered from discrimination in the past, out of the election this year."

He talked about the administration's efforts on Mideast negotiations, the economy, normalization with China, the hostages in Iran, auto imports, energy, and nuclear arms talks with the Soviets.

When it was pointed out that Carter's secretary of Health and Human Services, Patricia Roberts Harris, first questioned Reagan's endorsement by the Ku Klux Klan — an endorsement that Reagan already had rejected at the time — the president said:

"I am not blaming Governor Reagan. That is precisely the point. The press seems to be raising this point."

When it got down to questions, the preamble was mostly dropped and the president was asked repeatedly about recent campaign statements in which he linked Republican nominee Reagan's pronouncements on states' rights and the Ku Klux Klan with racism and hatred.

He also said: "I do not indulge in attacking the personal integrity of my opponents and hope I never shall."

While his campaign director was concerned about getting equal time, Reagan still was trying to get Carter to join the League of Women Voters-sponsored debate Sunday night between him a 1/2 independent candidate Anderson.

Four out of 12 questions dealt with that, prompting Carter to say he does not consider Reagan a racist and to reject any assertion that he is running a mean campaign.

The former California governor, in a statement, said the news conference was "Jimmy Carter's desperate attempt to fill the empty chair at Sunday night's debate."

"I think my campaign is very moderate in its tone," he said.

But what concerned the Reagan camp was the opening statement. Reagan's campaign director, William Casey, called it "an obvious partisan announcement" and asked that the Republican be given equal time under the Federal Communications Act.

It is time for Mr. Carter to stop hiding in the Rose Garden and participating in open debate where I can have the opportunity to refute his false and partisan version of his record," Reagan declared.

Network news executives seemed concerned, too. CBS News President William Leonard said the statement was "pretty obviously self-serving. I was a little bit shaken, frankly."

Carter insists he wants a one-on-one debate with Reagan before he debates other candidates. He said he would debate Reagan at the White House if the GOP candidate agreed.

And David Burke, vice president of ABC News, said it "did not distinguish the press conference in the traditional sense. And we will keep that in mind when requests are made in the future."

Questioned about public opinion polls that now show him approximately even with Reagan, Carter predicted a "sobering" among Americans voters as Election Day approaches.

The equal-time law specifies that broadcasters who permit candidates to "use" their stations must give an equal opportunity to other candidates for the same office. An exception is coverage of "bona fide news events."

"The issues begin to become paramount," he said. "The personal characteristics of the candidates ... become less important."

There were also these developments on the political scene Thursday:

Despite the opening statement, the president's 59th news conference since taking office was dominated by Carter's campaign conduct.

—The U.S. Supreme Court ruled that Anderson's name must appear on the general election ballot in Ohio. The court upheld an opinion that found Ohio's March 20 filing deadline for independent candidates unconstitutional because Republican and Democratic candidates did not have to file until later.

In Atlanta on Tuesday — two weeks after Reagan had mentioned the Klan — Carter told a partisan audience of black southerners that the campaign has seen "the stirrings of hate and the rebirth of code words like 'states rights'" and the Klan.

—Secretary of State Edmund S. Muskie said the administration plans $1 trillion in defense spending by 1985 and assailed the Republicans for saying that was not enough. It was an unusually political statement for a secretary of state.

"Hatred has no place in this country," Carter added. "Racism has no place in this country."

—Ralph Nader, the consumer advocate, said he would not endorse a presidential candidate but added that he found Carter to be probably the best choice from a consumer point of view.

But when pressed on the matter Thursday, the president said he did not believe Reagan was "running a campaign of racism or hatred and I think my campaign is very moderate in its tone."

Clements says Carter 'probably' will debate

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — President Jimmy Carter is just making "noises" and probably will show up Sunday for the big debate in Baltimore, says Gov. Bill Clements.

He said the Reagan-Bush campaign would make another statewide poll within the next 10 days to determine the effect of Carter's and Reagan's visits to Texas earlier this week.

"I think he is going to make all these noises and then come Sunday he will be sitting in that chair," Clements told a news conference Thursday. "And I hope he does."

Clements estimated Reagan would get from 25 percent to 35 percent of the Mexican-American vote in Texas. Both Reagan and Carter visited San Antonio, the Rio Grande Valley and Houston in obvious efforts to sway Mexican-American votes.

Carter has said he will not appear for the league's debate matching Ronald Reagan and John Anderson because he wants a one-on-one debate with Reagan first.

Clements said he got 32 percent of the Mexican-American vote in his 1978 campaign.

"I have the strong conviction that Jimmy Carter will be shooting himself in the foot if he is not present Sunday," Clements said. "I know it will hurt him in Texas. He will pay a price by his absence."

On other subjects, Clements said: — He felt he was booed by University of Texas students during a Tuesday appearance of vice presidential candidate George Bush and former President Gerald Ford, because he favors a college tuition increase.

Clements said he believed Anderson's candidacy as an independent would hurt Carter more than it would Reagan, "although I think Anderson's status is being vastly overstated in Texas."

— He feels no rebuff from the State Republican Convention passing platform planks against any increased severance taxes while he, Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby and Speaker Bill Clayton have been discussing a possible severance tax increase. "I did not pay any attention to it," he told the news conference. "They're the platform writers, and I'm the governor."

"My polls show he has about 9 percent now but I think by election day he will do good to get 2 percent of the votes," Clements said.

He said two recent polls, on Aug. 27 and on Sept. 13, showed 46 percent for Reagan in Texas, 37 for Carter and 9 for Anderson. "It's been about steady at that in the state for three weeks now."

State grand jury determines Pennsylvania lottery 'fixed'

HARRISBURG, Pa. (AP) — Gov. Dick Thornburgh said today that a grand jury has determined that the April 24th drawing of the state's $3.8 million Daily Number lottery game was fixed and recommended that six people be indicted.

"The grand jury found that a small, close-knit group of persons, including several members of the same family, purchased extraordinarily large quantities of lottery tickets (for the April 24th drawing) and received winning tickets valued at $1.18 million," Thornburgh said.

The grand jury alleged that security at the lottery drawing was so lax that Perry had control of the ping-pong balls used in the drawing "and set them up for use in two of the three machines used in the official drawing."

Thornburgh said the people recommended for indictment by the statewide grand jury included Nick Perry, the television announcer for the lottery drawing at WTAE-TV in Pittsburgh.

Thornburgh said pingpong balls used in the drawing were rigged by injecting them with a liquid. The result was a drawing of "666," which paid out a record $3.8 million.

Acting Attorney General Harvey Bartle said no charges had been filed against the people named in the grand jury presentation.

Alger Hiss trying to clear his name

NEW YORK (AP) — Elderly and frail but still adamant about his innocence, Alger Hiss today is returning to the courthouse where he was found guilty 30 years ago of lying about being a Communist in the famed "Pumpkin Papers" case.

Hiss said he wanted to set straight "whole currents of history."

Hiss, 75, served three years and eight months in prison in the early 1950s for his conviction. He had been accused of lying about charges that he was a secret Communist in the Roosevelt administration and gave government information to the Soviet Union.

Hiss says he'll use material from more than 60,000 government files that he got through the 1975 Freedom of Information Act to prove he didn't get a fair trial in 1949 and that his constitutional rights were violated.

"I have been struggling for more than 25 years to correct the injustice that was done," he said Thursday.

"Anybody who has been wrongfully charged would naturally feel a great sense of accomplishment to correct the record.

"But my interest goes beyond the personal, because my conviction has been used to confuse the whole currents of history. I think my effort to correct the injustice is important quite apart from my personal interest."

Hiss, a former State Department official who had accompanied Roosevelt to the Yalta Conference near the end of World War II, was indicted in 1948 following grand jury testimony by ex-Time magazine editor Whitaker Chambers. Chambers was a former espionage courier for Soviet agents in the United States and testified he and Hiss had been part of the same Communist cell in the 1930s.

The trial came at the outset of the Cold War and helped launch the political career of Richard M. Nixon, then a 36-year-old member of the House Un-American Activities Committee. Hiss said he had never met Chambers, but Nixon arranged a meeting of the two men at a New York hotel and later announced that Hiss had admitted knowing Chambers years earlier, but still denied charges of Communist activity.

Nixon also went to Chambers' Maryland farm to disclose finding the famous "Pumpkin Papers," documents which allegedly incriminated Hiss and were so named because they were hidden in a pumpkin patch.

Hiss plans to argue his case under a writ of "coram nobis," a British common law action aimed at righting an alleged injustice caused by failure to bring certain facts before the court.

In addition to other charges, Hiss maintains the assistant U.S. attorney who was chief prosecutor, now a semi-retired federal judge here, concealed evidence and misled the court.

Hiss' suit, filed in 1978, also charges that the government employed an informer who "infiltrated" the Hiss counsel during the trial.

"I have nothing on my conscience because I did not do the things that are charged against me," Hiss said. "I have been struggling for more than 25 years to correct the injustice that was done, and I now have the opportunity to get back into court to do that."

He declined to expand on the legalities of his case, saying "I don't want to try the case in the newspapers. I think the time for me to talk is after the opinion comes down."

Defendant amputates little finger

WICHITA, Kan. (AP) — Before closing arguments could be delivered in his trial on robbery and kidnapping charges, 22-year-old Raymond Griffin cut off part of the little finger on his left hand and gave it to his lawyer.

Sedgwick County Court Judge Ray Hodge, who earlier had refused an insanity plea by the defendant said Griffin might have cut off his finger "to kind of bolster his defense."

Griffin, from Wichita, was being tried recently on charges of attempted aggravated robbery, aggravated kidnapping, aggravated battery, and two counts of aggravated robbery in a Dec. 17 holdup of a convenience store and two women at a shopping center.

Hodge said the jury was out of the courtroom when Griffin's court-appointed attorney, Ross Alexander, approached the bench "as white as a sheet."

"My client has just amputated his finger and handed it to me in a plastic vial they keep pills in," the judge quoted the lawyer as saying.

Disease could devastate poultry

HOUSTON (AP) — Discovery of an exotic disease has forced a Houston pet shop owner to kill all 552 birds to help the Department of Agriculture prevent the spread of an infection that could be "devastating" to the country's poultry business.

Gary Henderson, owner of Pet Shop and Bird Inc., said USDA veterinarians destroyed all his birds, "including the tiniest little finch," Wednesday night after officials confirmed one of his parrots had Exotic Newcastle Disease.

"It was bad enough that I had to watch them kill them," Henderson said. The birds were placed in sealed boxes and fumigated with carbon monoxide, a USDA spokesman said.

Other Houston pet stores reportedly purchased the exotic birds from Pet Farm Inc., of Miami, said Karen Warlick of the USDA regional office in Dallas.

Tests were being run at several shops in Brownsville, San Antonio, Harlingen, Dallas, El Paso, Lubbock, New Caney and Wichita Falls, she said.

Confirmed cases also have been found in other states, and officials fear the disease may have spread to Canada, the Bahamas and the Netherlands Antilles, she said.

USDA officials have taken responsibility for allowing infected birds to enter the country through its Miami inspection station.

"When you buy birds through the proper channels you expect to get good healthy birds," Henderson said. "Normally you expect to find this kind of thing only in birds that are smuggled into the country."

Ms. Warlick said the infection could be "devastating" to the country's poultry business and cause higher prices for eggs and poultry in supermarkets.

Foreign birds are immune to the virus. However, domestic chickens are "particularly vulnerable" to the disease spread through direct contact or the bird's feces.

"Sometimes they also appear to have black eyes and have fluid running from their eyes," Ms. Warlick said. A vaccine can be given to combat the disease, she said.

An outbreak of the exotic virus spread through Southern California in the early 1970s after a shipment of tropical birds was imported into the country.

Officials said 12 million laying hens either died or had to be destroyed and cost poultry farmers about $56 million.

Ms. Warlick said an outbreak earlier this year led to the destruction of 3,000 birds in California, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts and Virginia.

Henderson said his bird had been quarantined for 10 days, and a bird was sent to the USDA's laboratory in Ames, Iowa, for tests. He was notified Wednesday that tests were positive and ordered the other birds to be destroyed.

"I didn't have sick bird in the store, but we couldn't take a chance. There might be the possibility of more being infected," he said.

Ms. Warlick said the USDA already has paid about $455,000 to store owners whose birds have been destroyed.

Henderson said he was unsure how much he would get from the government, but said he thought he would probably lose money.

Relatives can collect damages from airline

CHICAGO (AP) — Relatives of Illinois residents killed last year in the nation's worst air disaster can collect damages from American Airlines if they can prove that the victims suffered in the final seconds of their lives, a federal judge has ruled.

Such damages will be difficult to prove because none of the 274 people aboard American Airlines Flight 191 survived, U.S. District Judge Hubert L. Will said Thursday.

"I think we have come to the conclusion that the law in Illinois is such that if there is evidence of pain and suffering at the time of death, then it is compensable," he ruled. "But I think there is a real problem with proof in this case."

His ruling permits lawyers for the victims' families to seek information about what passengers may have experienced during the 31 seconds the DC-10 was in the air and whether they died on impact.

"I suppose it makes a difference where you sat and what the autopsy indicates," he said.

During its takeoff from O'Hare International Airport on May 25, 1979, the jet tipped sideways, stalled and crashed after an engine tore off a wing.

Will and U.S. District Judge Edwin A. Robson are handling more than 140 cases stemming from the crash of the Los Angeles-bound jetliner.

Will's ruling came in open court during a pre-trial conference in the case.

The judges denied a request from American Airlines lawyers to summarily dismiss pain and suffering claims by the mother of Rhonda Ann DeYoung, a 19-year-old college sophomore from Homewood who died in the crash.

"We're looking at ways that we can show what those people went through," said Rick M. Schoenfeld, the lawyer representing the young woman's family.

Miss DeYoung was heading for a vacation trip to Hawaii with two girlfriends when the DC-10 crashed.

"The point is this brings the crash details into nearly every case instead of having an antiseptic courtroom," said George F. Archer, a Chicago lawyer representing several victims' families.

Although most of suits before Will and Robson involve Illinois residents, the exact number was not immediately available.

American Airlines lawyers said such damages seldom reach juries for a decision.

"I've never been involved in a case when a judge let that issue go to the jury," said Robert Alpert, an attorney for American's insurance carrier. "Because there is no evidence ... there are no survivors."
