Leach expands lawsuit, names 7 individuals

By ADAM COLEMAN
SPORTS EDITOR

Attorneys for former Texas Tech coach Mike Leach filed a fourth amended petition Friday claiming the former coach's firing was predetermined and done so to help the university save money. In the filing, six Tech officials are being sued individually for damages: Tech Chancellor Kent Hance, Board of Regents members Jerry Turner and Larry Anders, Tech President Guy Bailey, Tech Athletic Director Gerald Myers and Tech Investigator Charlotte Bingham. Craig James, the father of Adam James was also named as a defendant. One of Leach's attorneys, Ted Liggett, said Friday that the individuals are being sued — especially Hance, Turner and Anders — because they went "beyond the scope of their job." Liggett pointed out that it was Bailey and Myers' responsibility to deal with the Leach situation and no one else should have been involved. Liggett believes the filings show that Leach's firing is derived from the contract negotiations last spring. "We are able to do that under the law whenever and individual acts in a capacity that's beyond their scope of employment with the university," he said. "It allows us to seek damage against them individually. And that's what we've done."

LEACH

After allegations Leach harmed Tech receiver Adam James surfaced, Liggett said Myers and Bailey were ready to reprimand Leach instead of fire him. But the filings claim that Hance, Turner and Anders wanted to use the James situation to get rid of Leach and save money. Leach was fired on Dec. 30, 2009, three days before Tech was scheduled to play in the 2010 Valero Alamo Bowl. The firing also occurred a day before Leach was supposed to be paid an $800,000 bonus. But Tech's attorney Dicky Grigg, said both the lawsuits and Friday's court filing are acts Leach's attorneys are using to deter the undisputable facts against them. "Today's action by Mike Leach and his attorneys is another absurd act of desperation," he said in a statement Friday. "This is the legal strategy one deploys when the facts and the law are irrefutably against him." Leach's attorneys have not deterred from the lawsuit against the university. Liggett said that lawsuit is still in effect along with Friday's filings. Leach's attorneys believe the conspiracy to fire Leach has been discovered through text messages and e-mails, which Liggett said are used as exhibits in Friday's filing. Liggett said Adam thought his situation with Leach was funny and the Tech receiver thought "Mike shouldn't have been fired because of that." One of Tech's defenses in this case has been the sovereign immunity claim, which points out that an individual cannot sue the state, of which

Tech is a branch. But Leach's attorneys believe the Tech administration has waived that through numerous causes, such as the Board of Regents making its own policies and procedures, therefore acting as its own legislative body. As far as damages are concerned, Liggett said his attorneys are working on that figure daily, but it has not been determined yet. But Liggett said on Friday that Leach's attorneys intend to go to trial at this point. "It seems incredulous to me and I think it has to go with what happens a lot of times in business and in life, ego and pride," Liggett said. "... He wasn't the good ol' boy, button down football coach that they wanted to have for Texas Tech and they were looking for a reason to fire him." >> adam.coleman@ttu.edu

Red Raiders put on fast-paced show in Spring Game

By JOSE RODRIGUEZ
STAFF WRITER

After losing a handful of key players on the defensive side of the ball throughout the spring, Texas Tech head coach Tommy Tuberville probably knew the offense would have the chance to put up some big numbers. Although the offense was able to control the tempo of the Tech's annual spring game at Jones AT&T Stadium, Tuberville said he was encouraged to see some fundamental progress from a defense with missing pieces. "We didn't do a lot today, but I'm proud of them," he said. "We probably got a little tired. In this fast-paced offense we run, it's pretty tough on the defense. We got more injuries on the defensive side; we were short-handed to begin with. Our tackling is improved; our mental toughness improved." To say the Red Raider offense played fast may be an understatement. The absence of quarterbacks Taylor Potts and Steven Sheffield did not seem to impact the production of the offense, which was paced by a combined 530 yards on 47-of-68 passing from starters Seth Doege and Jacob Karam. The offense managed to keep the defense on its toes with a constant, no-huddle attack. Also, offensive coordinator Neal

Brown mixed in the running game to create balance. Tech players accounted for 62 runs, including 19 rushes from Harrison Jeffers for 68 yards and 12 rushes from Aaron Crawford for 40 yards and a touchdown. Running backs Baron Batch and Eric Stephens combined for 12 rushes and 73 yards on the ground. The receiving core rounded out the offense's production by amassing 51 catches and 547 yards, including 115 yards from Alex Torres and 106 from Cornelius Douglas. Doege connected with Douglas for a 64-yard touchdown in the second quarter. Torres said the spring has allowed for the offense to get accustomed to the quicker style of play, with speed being a top priority for the unit. "Just learning all the transitions, getting used to everything and then really the tempo of everything is a lot faster right now," he said. "We're really working on trying to just be as fast as possible from snap to snap."

The defense, however, also made some strides throughout the day. Defensive coordinator James Willis' new 3-4 scheme proved its worth, racking up five sacks and 17 tackles for a loss. Willis experimented with some moves during spring practices such as the position switch between linebackers Bront Bird and Brian Duncan — Bird moved to the middle, Duncan to the outside. SGA transfers leadership posts

By JOEANN BON-JORNO

A change in leadership took place Friday for the Student Government Association at its annual installment banquet at the Lubbock Country Club. The executive officers transferred their leadership positions to the new officers and thanked those who helped throughout the year. Drew Graham said as the new SGA president he hopes to increase diversity and transparency and talked about goals for next year. "We can do some great things," Graham said. Chancellor Kent Hance was a speaker at the banquet and congratulated the executive officers and those elected to serve next year. "The issues will change, but dealing with people and passing legislation won't," Hance said. Suzanne Williams, the exiting SGA president, said the year was filled with accomplishments and thanked everyone involved for making the year one she will remember. "It was a privilege to serve as student body president," Williams said. Sarah Saunders, internal vice president, said the senators and their commitment to serving students inspired her. She said her favorite part was the relationships she formed with everyone she worked with and described SGA as a family. College coordinators, chairmen of the student senate academic committees and members of the office staff were recognized for their service. Graduating seniors received their cords and were thanked for their participation in student government. Senators voted Clayton Cobbs Outstanding First-Year Senator and Brandon Taylor Senator of the Year. Gifts were given to Hance, President Guy Bailey and Michael D. Shonrock, the senior vice president of Enrollment Management and Student Affairs, for their support of the SGA. "Over the past decade I've had the tremendous privilege of getting to know the student government, and I simply can't express how grateful we are for the leadership, service and passion these students have for the university," Shonrock said. Fans get chance to check out new-look Red Raiders

TEXAS TECH RUNNING back Baron Batch signs autographs for fans after the spring game Saturday at Jones AT&T Stadium.

Some Red Raider fans vowed to never attend another Texas Tech football game after the firing of former Tech head coach Mike Leach. But if the 2010 Spring Game was any indication, most fans are still behind the Red Raiders, regardless of what coach is at the helm. "Well, you know, I liked Leach," Austin resident John Forgey said. "I liked what he did for the school and the program. I got to know many of the coaches and I was sad when all of that went down. I was sad to see a lot of the coaches that I came to have relationships with have to go. But no, I'm optimistic around the program and the momentum that we've got and I have great expectations for next year." Forgey loaded up his car at 4 a.m. Saturday and made the drive to Lubbock with his family to catch coach Tommy Tuberville's first major event as the football coach at Tech. It was the third consecutive Tech Spring Game Forgey attended, and his friends from the Dallas area also joined him on this occasion. The Red Raiders did not disappoint them either. The offense racked up 761 on 106 plays — mostly through the air. True to his word, Tuberville allowed his young quarterbacks to air the ball out with 547 yards on 76 passing attempts. But it also is evident running backs will be more important to the offense as they rushed the ball for 214 yards on 62 carries. The defense looked strong as well considering they played 106 plays and were able to tie the offense 24-24 in a complex scoring system. "I thought they did an honorable performance," said Chuck Zenderson, a Lubbock resident and Red Raider fan. "I think it looks good for offense and defense this year, and that's what I was hoping to see. A balance of offense and defense. Sometimes change is good, and I think some of the changes are going to be really good for the team." FANS continued on Page 7 >>>

Texas Southern freshman killed near campus

HOUSTON — Houston police are looking for a gunman who killed an 18-year-old Texas Southern University student by firing 10 times into a crowd near campus.

Police say the gunfire erupted after a fight broke out at a party at about 1 a.m. Saturday. Freshman Joshua L. McMackle, of Front Royal, Va., was shot in the back and died at a hospital. Another student was injured, shot in the ankle.

Police spokesman Kase Smith said Sunday that authorities are still looking for the shooter.

TSU spokeswoman Eva Pickens tells the Houston Chronicle the party was not sanctioned by the university.

NASA to astronauts: Rain delays likely for return

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — NASA warned space shuttle Discovery's astronauts Sunday to expect rain delays as they wrapped up their two-week mission and got ready to come home.

Discovery and its crew of seven were scheduled to land Monday morning at NASA's Florida spaceport.

Shuttle commander Alan Poindexter said Sunday that he enjoys spending extra time in orbit and doesn't mind if Discovery can't make it back to Earth until Tuesday.

Mission Control promised to keep monitoring the weather in case the forecast improved. In the worst case, Discovery could always aim for the backup landing site in Southern California on Tuesday.

Poindexter and his crew are returning from the International Space Station after stockpiling it with supplies, science experiments and extra spare parts, including a tank full of ammonia coolant. It took three spacewalks to install the tank.

Elaborate state funeral for Poland's first couple

KRAKOW, Poland — Some 150,000 Poles paid their last respects to Polish President Lech Kaczynski and his wife, Maria, as the couple were interred Sunday among kings, poets and statesmen in the ancient Wawel Cathedral in a ceremony long on tradition but short on world leaders whose travel plans were wrecked by the enormous plume of volcanic ash that blanketed Europe.

President Barack Obama, French President Nicolas Sarkozy and German Chancellor Angela Merkel were among those canceled at the last minute because of the expanding ash cloud, dangerous to airplane engines, that left nearly all of the continent's airports since late Thursday.

"All the French people will be, in their thoughts, with the Polish people" on Sunday, Sarkozy said in a letter sent to acting President Bronislaw Komorowski expressing his regret for being unable to attend.

The volcanic ash from Iceland did not deter everyone. The leaders of Baltic and Balkan states came by car for the stately event. Czech President Vaclav Klaus took the train and car to get to Krakow.

Tearful pope says church will better protect young

VALETTA, Malta — Pope Benedict XVI met Sunday with a group of clerical sex-abuse victims and told them with tears in his eyes that the Catholic Church would seek justice for pedophile priests and implement "effective measures" to protect young people from abuse, the Vatican and victims said.

Benedict expressed his "shame and sorrow" at the pain the men and their families suffered and prayed with them during the meeting at the Vatican's embassy in Malta, the Vatican said.

It was the first time Benedict had met with abuse victims since the worldwide clerical abuse scandal engulfed the Vatican earlier this year, and it marked his most personal and forceful statement on the spiraling scandal since a letter to Irish faithful a month ago.

"He prayed with them and assured them that the Church is doing, and will continue to do, all in its power to investigate allegations, to bring to justice those responsible for abuse and to implement effective measures designed to safeguard young people in the future," the Vatican statement said.

The Vatican offered no further details of what measures would be implemented.

Victims' advocacy groups have demanded that the Vatican take concrete steps to protect children and remove abusive priests, saying the pope's expressions of date of solidarity and shame were meaningless unless actual action is taken.

The Vatican said the group of eight men, in their 30s and 40s, met with Benedict in the chapel of the Vatican embassy.

"Everybody was crying," one of the men, Joseph Magro, 38, told Associated Press Television News after the meeting. "I told him my name was Joseph, and he had tears in his eyes."

He said the men received a call Sunday morning to come to the embassy and that the pope spent a few minutes with each one of them. He said the overall encounter, which lasted about 35 minutes, was "fantastic."

Lawrence Grech, who led efforts to arrange the encounter, said the pope told each of the men: "I am very proud of you for having come forward to tell your story."

Iran nuclear conference urges Israel to join NPT

TEHRAN, Iran — An Iranian-hosted international disarmament conference concluded Sunday with a demand that Israel join the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty to assure a nuclear weapons-free Middle East.

The two-day conference followed closely behind a 47-nation nuclear security conference hosted by President Barack Obama in Washington last week, which excluded Iran and nuclear-armed North Korea. Washington and its allies suspect Iran's nuclear program is geared toward producing weapons, which Tehran denies.

As the conference was ending Sunday, Iran staged an annual military parade where it displayed missiles capable of carrying nuclear warheads.

The forum, which Iran said was attended by representatives of 60 countries, gave Tehran a platform for challenging Washington's assertion that it wants to see a world without nuclear weapons and for defending its own nuclear program. It criticized what it called a double-standard by some nuclear powers that urge disarmament while ignoring the nuclear arsenal Israel is widely believed to possess.

A nuclear weapons-free Middle East requires "the Zionist regime to join the NPT," said the concluding statement of the conference, read out by Iranian Foreign Minister

Taliban say buildup under way

KANDAHAR, Afghanistan — The Taliban are moving fighters into Kandahar, planting bombs and plotting attacks as NATO and Afghan forces prepare for a summer showdown with insurgents, according to a Taliban commander with close ties to senior insurgent leaders.

NATO and Afghan forces are stepping up operations to push Taliban fighters out of the city, which was the Islamist movement's headquarters during the years it ruled most of Afghanistan. The goal is to bolster the capability of the local government so that it can keep the Taliban from coming back.

The Taliban commander, who uses the pseudonym Mubeen, told The Associated Press that if military pressure on the insurgents becomes too great "we will just leave and come back after" the foreign forces leave.

Despite nightly raids by NATO and Afghan troops, Mubeen said his movements have not been restricted. He was interviewed last week in the center of Kandahar, seated with his legs crossed on a cushion in a room. His only concession to security was to lock the door.

He made no attempt to hide his face and said he felt comfortable because of widespread support among Kandahar's 500,000 residents, who like the Taliban are mostly Pashtuns, Afghanistan's biggest ethnic community.

"Because of the American attitude to the people, they are sympathetic to us," Mubeen said. "Every day we are getting more support. We are not strangers. We are not foreigners. We are from the people."

It is difficult to measure the depth of support for the Taliban among Kandahar's people, many of whom say they are disgusted by the presence of both the foreign troops and the insurgents. Many of them say they are afraid NATO's summer offensive will accomplish little other than trigger more violence.

Mubeen said Taliban attacks are not random but are carefully planned and ordered by the senior military and political command that assigns jobs and responsibilities to its rank and file. The final arbiter is the Taliban leader Mullah Mohammad Omar, who heads the council, or shura, that decides strategic goals which are passed down the ranks to commanders in the field, he said.

"We are always getting instructions from our commanders, what suicide attacks to carry out, who to behead if he is a spy," Mubeen said, gesturing with a maimed hand suffered during fighting in 1996 when the Taliban were trying to gain control of the capital of Kabul.

Then, like now, his enemies were members of the Northern Alliance, dominated by Afghanistan's minority ethnic groups and returned to power by the U.S.-led coalition following the Taliban's collapse in 2001.

Mubeen, a native of Zabol province, worked with the Taliban's civil aviation minister, Mullah Akhtar Mohammad Mansoor, during the Taliban's five-year rule. In the final days before the Taliban abandoned Kandahar in 2001, Mubeen played a crucial logistical role, helping move weapons and supplies to hideouts outside the city.

Mullah Mansoor was one of two senior Taliban figures named by Mullah Omar to replace the No. 2 commander, Mullah Abdul Ghani Barader, who was arrested in Pakistan in February.

Mubeen said that in the first years after the Taliban were routed, fighters had to survive in the mountains, rarely making forays into Afghan towns and villages. He attributed the Taliban comeback to deep resentment — especially among ethnic Pashtuns — to the presence of foreign military forces and public disgust with the Afghan government.

"Our brothers are already here and ready," he said. "Our people are skilled now. They know a lot of things, how to make things more difficult and to be more sophisticated in our attacks."

Top general says US withdrawal from Iraq on track

WASHINGTON — The planned withdrawal of nearly 45,000 U.S. troops from Iraq by the end of August is on track in spite of a recent increase in attacks by militant forces, the top U.S. military commander in Iraq said Sunday.

Army Gen. Ray Odierno said that al-Qaida's strength in Iraq is steadily degrading. Unless there's a dramatic and unforeseen change in the security situation, the U.S. troop drawdown will go ahead as scheduled, he said.

There are now about 95,000 U.S. troops in Iraq, according to Odierno. The U.S. plans to cut that number to 50,000 by Aug. 31, when it will end combat operations.

"I fully expect us to be at 50,000 by the first of September," Odierno said on "Fox News Sunday."

As part of an agreement with Iraq, the U.S. will withdraw all forces by the end of 2011.

Odierno's remarks came as he prepared to leave Iraq at the end of the summer as part of a scheduled rotation. His replacement will be Lt. Gen. Lloyd Austin, the staff director for the Joint Chiefs of Staff, The Associated Press reported last week. The announcement has not been formally made by the Pentagon.

"Nobody has contacted me yet about leaving," said Odierno, who has been the senior U.S. commander in Iraq since 2008.

A wave of deadly bombings in and around Baghdad following Iraq's disputed March 7 parliamentary elections raised doubts about whether Iraqi security forces were prepared to protect the country as American forces began to leave.

But Odierno described al-Qaida in Iraq as an enemy on the run. The number of attacks and casualties to civilians and military personnel dropped in the first three months of 2010, he said.

"Iraqi security forces are now in the lead at going after al-Qaida," he said.

Neighboring Iran continues to play a destabilizing role, providing lethal aid and training for insurgent elements, Odierno said. Asked if he'd like the authority to go into Iran and take out the training camps, he said he doesn't think it is necessary to conduct such operations.

"I think what's more important is to build up the Iraqi capability to protect their own homeland," he said.

Jumpstart promotes good reading habits to children

By ALEXANDRA PEDRINI
STAFF WRITER

Bringing part of its weekly routines to the South Plains Mall on Saturday, the Jumpstart organization, along with 10 other Texas Tech and community organizations, hosted Jumpstart for a Day for local children.

Jumpstart is a program that gets college students working with underprivileged and lower-income children to prepare them for kindergarten and first grade. The students do not work with children who are at the top and bottom of their reading levels because they are not professionals, said Stacy Willis, a freshman human development and family studies major from Aledo.

Because the program focuses on promoting literacy in children, Saturday's event had booths set up with various children's games and activities, all of which revolved around a children's book.

"It's kind of putting (the book) into action," said Rochelle McMeans, Jumpstart volunteer coordinator and senior nutrition major from Big Spring. "Making it where it's fun to read the book. Instead of just reading, the kids have the activity that goes with it."

Volunteers were encouraged to read the books to the children if there was a long line, McMeans said. The event was offered free to any child passing by who wanted to participate, and parents were given bags from Jumpstart with information about the program as well as information about how to do the activities at home.

"It's a way to show the community about our program," said Beth Callaway, a program assistant and graduate history major from Burkburnett. "It's a way to get families together to learn what we do and learn about literacy and getting involved with their kids lives."

Face painting, a Mardi Gras march, musical instruments and the Oobleck stations were some of the children's favorites because they were very hands-on, Willis said.

"When you can make something and take it away, it's fun," Willis said.

The Jumpstart core team did not host the event alone. Jumpstart for a day enlisted their help of 10 other organizations to create and work booths, McMeans said. The group used TechAnnounce to get the word to other on-campus groups and went to local school districts asking if any of their organizations were interested in helping since many groups require members to have community service hours.

"It's good to get kids involved and get involved with the entire community; that's kind of the whole point," said Kari Bunting, of the College of Human Sciences recruiters and a freshman nutrition major from Lubbock.

Since many kids came to the event throughout the day, parents and children became interested in what was happening. Dustie Stark, mother of 3-year-old Delyla Stark from Levelland, said her daughter was interested in the event because she was able to interact with other children. Because the event was free, she said she believes it allows more children and parents to participate rather than if there had been an admission fee.

"I think it's great," Stark said. "It was a great learning experience and they gave us a free book; books are always great for kids."

NM library offers a trove of Hispanic genealogy

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — Pat Vigil pages through a 2-inch thick, spiral-bound genealogy of his family, identifying photos of his parents, his grandmothers, a brother playing ball in a community league. He points out a grandfather's will and a hand-drawn map of a few blocks of Albuquerque's old Barelas neighborhood, then unfolds a 12-generation family chart.

The 81-year-old Albuquerque native spent several years in the 1980s researching his family and compiling the book that's now part of the archives at the genealogy library at the National Hispanic Cultural Center.

His work, he said, would have been easier had the 10-year-old genealogy library existed when he started.

"My suggestion to anybody (with Hispanic ancestors): Start here," Vigil said.

The library, housed in a historic elementary school building Vigil once attended, offers resources ranging from New Mexico land grant documents and 200 years of records of the Roman Catholic Archdiocese of Santa Fe to censuses and church and government records from El Paso, Texas, and Chihuahua and Durango in Mexico.

The El Paso and Mexico documents are important because "nearly everybody who came this far north went through those areas, so if people work back far enough they're going to need to look at that information," said senior librarian Greta Pullen.

The library also owns thousands of volumes on history and culture of New Mexico, the Southwest, Latin America, Mexico "and everywhere that Spain ever went," to back up family searches, said Carlos Vasquez, director of the cultural center's history and literary arts.

"Our uniqueness has been being able to give some depth, historical depth, to genealogy that people do here" so they can put their family into historical context, he said.

Spanish exploration of what's now New Mexico dates from about 1540. Juan de Onate became governor of New Mexico in 1598, claiming the land north of what is now El Paso for Spain. New Spain won its independence in 1821, becoming Mexico. New Mexico became a U.S. territory in 1846.

Today, Hispanics make up about 42 percent of the state's population, but the library's reach goes beyond that because Hispanics intermarried with other groups over the centuries and New Mexicans moved elsewhere over the decades. In addition, censuses and church records encompass the total population, not just one group.

The library also can borrow microfilm from what's considered the largest genealogy collection in the world, the Family History Library of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in Salt Lake City.

People from all over call the cultural center's library, partly because its catalog and aids to its archives are online. The Hispanic section of the Library of Congress reading room lists some of the collection.

The library includes a history of the origins of New Mexico names by native son Fray Angelico Chavez, which lists the first time a particular name was recorded in the state. Most of the names are Hispanic; non-Spanish names don't appear until a supplement for the 19th century.

Pullen recommends people interview their family first.

"Because records are very dry," she said. "If that's all one is going to find then you haven't found much. The people are the source of those stories."

Vigil's interest in genealogy was spurred by his father's story of a great-grandmother born in Spain migrating to Mexico with her brother, a priest. Eventually, Vigil discovered that the story was confused.

Sante Fe Opera wraps up series, art festival

By HALLIE DAVIS
STAFF WRITER

With songs ranging from traditional German to pop culture, including a song using only the word "meow" over and over again, the Sunday performance of the Santa Fe Opera was a hit.

The performance, a part of both the Santa Fe Opera's Spring Tour and the Texas Tech Presidential Lecture and Performance Series, was hosted at the Memorial Civic Center as the finale of the Lubbock Arts Alliance Art Festival.

Trudy Putteet, a Lubbock resident, said she loved opera music and had tried to come to past year's performances but this was the first she attended.

"It's a wonderful educational opportunity, not just for the college," Putteet said. "It expands the awareness of the whole community."

Many from the community attended. Usher Lauren Spangler, a sophomore music major from Albuquerque, said she saw a few college students, though she saw many families with children and more people from the Lubbock.

"The opera's kind of an isolated thing, it draws more of an older crowd," said Spangler, who is also an ambassador for the College of Visual and Performing Arts.

The Civic Center auditorium initially was roped off for seating in only the bottom half, but that area filled before the show started, and the ropes were removed to allow more people seats.

"I will say there are probably more students here than it looks like," Putteet said. "It's too bad (for students that didn't come) they are certainly missing out on a great opportunity."

Students who attended said they knew they would be in the minority, and that was fine with them.

"It's kind of nice to get away from college for awhile," said Kristin Culp, a sophomore business major from Midland.

The first part of the performance was the short opera "Words and Music," written by Aschula Bastible, Charles Gamble and Kirt Pavitt. The show is about Webster, a muse of sorts, and Melody, a composer, fighting over what makes an opera memorable. It included famous pieces of other operas as well as Broadway tunes the characters used to prove their points. Spangler called the show "a collection of scenes."

"I liked the duets," Culp said. "It was really neat when they started mixing the melody and the words."

After soprano Jamie-Rose Guarrine, who played Melody, performed a piece from the French opera "Romeo et Juliette," baritone Sean Anderson, who played Webster, retorted with an excerpt from Taylor Swift's "Love Story."

"It made it contemporary without making it cheesy," Culp said. "It was different."

The contemporary qualities of the show made it easier to understand than what Culp said she expected of the performance.

After "Words and Music," there was a short intermission, then the two singers and pianist Kirt Pavitt returned to perform other arias. Pavitt began with "Claire de lune" and the whole show ended with Guarrine and Anderson performing "Papageno/Papagena Duet" from "The Magic Flute."

"I'm a singer so this was a natural thing for me to come to, especially since the Santa Fe Opera is such a great production," Spangler said. "It's always wonderful."

Hollywood vs. The Volcano: Ashes disrupt flights, events

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A volcanic cloud of ash hovering over Europe is causing quite a scene in Hollywood and beyond.

The ash spat out by an Icelandic volcano that has left thousands of air travelers stranded is also affecting celebrities, filmmakers, musicians and even pro-wrestlers.

With almost two-thirds of Europe's flights grounded, cancellations and postponements were popping up across the entertainment landscape on Saturday as Icelandic scientists warned that volcanic activity had increased and showed no sign of abating.

Organizers of the Coachella Valley Music and Arts Festival in Indio, Calif., tweeted that some acts were forced to pull out of the weekend event. British musicians The Cribs, Bad Lieutenant, Delphic, Talvin Singh and Gary Numan as well as Scottish rockers Frightened Rabbit and Chicago brass group Hypnotic Brass Ensemble, who were on tour in Europe, weren't able to make the lineup.

"I can't tell you how disappointed we all are," Numan posted on his Web site Saturday.

Bad Lieutenant announced Saturday it was also canceling concert dates through Wednesday in San Francisco, Chicago and New York because of flight disruptions.

"We're stuck in Manchester," said band member Bernard Sumner in a statement. "We were hoping that conditions might change at the last minute and we'd be able to come and play for our fans. Obviously, this is a situation out of everyone's control, and we are crushed that we won't be coming to America for these dates."

Whitney Houston was forced to ditch a plane for a ferry across the Irish Sea to perform in Dublin. The R&B diva, currently in the middle of her "Nothing But Love" world tour, opted for the not-so-glamorous boat ride after no-fly orders shut down airports across Europe. Houston is scheduled to perform the first of three shows Saturday at the O2 arena in London.

The ash cloud also grounded several other musicians in Europe. Welsh indie pop band Los Campesinos! canceled their Friday appearance at the Culture Shock Festival in Purchase, N.Y., as well as their Saturday concert in Hoboken, N.J. Pop singer Mika postponed his Friday concert in Lisbon, Portugal, after unexpectedly finding himself stranded in Paris.

"Volcano freak out," he tweeted. "This is bad."

Pot enthusiasts gather at Calif. expo

DALY CITY, Calif. (AP) — Medical marijuana users near San Francisco lit up Saturday at the opening of the two-day International Cannabis and Hemp Expo, where vendors displayed bong, vaporizers, hash brownies and other marijuana-related products.

Organizers of the event at the Cow Palace said they insisted on having an onsite medicating area before holding the expo. Under a white-canopied courtyard, young adults in baggy jeans and baseball caps smoked alongside aging hippies.

Adrian Hernandez said marijuana use helps him deal with chronic knee pain.

"Everybody needs their medication when they need it," said Hernandez, who is in his 30s. "We'd have to step out and go hide in our cars."

In 1996, California voters approved a measure that allowed sick people to use marijuana if they have doctor referrals and an identification card.

School of Music hosts World of Dance Gala

MEMBERS OF THE Ragtime Ensemble perform "The Entertainer" by Scott Joplin during the Dance Gala Friday at the Legacy Events Center.

The sounds of New Zealand, West Africa and Argentina could be heard coming from the Grand Ballroom of the Legacy Center Friday night.

Thomas M. Cimarusti, an assistant professor of musicology, performed in the Dance Gala alongside the Texas Tech University World Music Ensemble, a part of the Vernacular Music Center, which he also directs.

"I wanted to do something kind of exotic," Cimarusti said.

Music and Dance from all across the world came together at the first Worlds of Dance Gala at 7 p.m. Friday at the Legacy Center in the Grand Ballroom.

awareness in the community of the relationship, of any of the world music, between music and dance."

After the Worlds of Dance Gala ended, the musicians and dancers took the stage for another event called Dancing With Mr. Darcy Jane Austen Evening. Like the Dance Gala, Dancing with Mr. Darcy included ensembles of musicians and dancers coming together. This performance, however, was more of a production than the Dance Gala and included catering by the Home Café and elaborate costumes.

"We think the pay off will be worth it," Smith said. "The people that attend either or both of these concerts will have a very unique and special experience, one that they will really value."

The concert is really a way to pull together all of those ensembles on one stage for one night.

CHRISTOPHER SMITH
DANCE GALA RINGLEADER

The Dance Gala included 10 music and dance ensembles from the Vernacular Music Center. Christopher Smith, the ringleader of the Dance Gala, runs the center on campus.

"It's a small research that I run which does studies, teaches and presents concerts of music from around the world," Smith said.

Although this is the first year for the Dance Gala, center has been running for 10 years. They sponsor four music ensembles that includes, Early Music Ensemble, Celtic Ensemble, Ragtime Ensemble and World Music Ensemble. These groups are made up of Tech students, faculty, staff and people from the community. Along with these four ensembles, the Texas Tech Set Dancers performed traditional Irish, Polynesian and New Zealand dances, Smith said.

"The concert is really a way to pull together all of those ensembles on one stage for one night," Smith said. "It's also to celebrate the Vernacular Music Center's 10th year and a way to raise Although these ensembles produced several shows throughout the year, the performers prepared for this show since mid-November. Each ensemble rehearsed two to four times a week during the past two weeks to prepare for the Dance Gala, Smith said.

"The students and the directors have all really committed to this," he said. "They have committed to making the Dance Gala and the Mr. Darcy event very high quality and very world class in terms of their performance and preparation."

As the director of the Vernacular Music Center, Smith said he believed it was important to emphasize that the music center is a means to bring people together and connect one another from the music and dance world, as well as across the campus and the community.

STEPPING UP

Fans

But while the 2010 Spring Game's biggest selling point was change, the game was more than just about seeing Tuberville's coaching regime style compared to Leach's.

For some fans, it was an opportunity to expose a younger generation to the Red Raiders and collegiate football in general. For others it was an opportunity to show they will support the Red Raiders through thick and thin. Despite cold weather and overcast skies, many Red Raider fans stayed beyond the full 60 minutes of play for a one-hour autograph session on the field.

Zenderson attended the Spring Game in part because he thought his four grandchildren would like the experience of being in Jones AT&T Stadium, watching the Red Raiders play and getting autographs after the game.

Carmen Casner attended the game with her autistic son because she said she thought it would be a fun experience for him.

"My husband graduated from Tech and my son has autism," said Casner, a Lubbock resident. "We used to take him to games but now he's so afraid of the noise so we just decided the Spring Game would be something he would enjoy. And he did a little bit."

Tech receiver Cornelius Douglas said seeing so many fans in attendance for the exhibition was a good sign for what is in store when the Red Raiders take on SMU at Jones AT&T Stadium in early September.

"Fans are what make the games," he said. "Without the fans, we wouldn't be in the game because fans pump you up and get you going. If you're doing bad fans start screaming and yelling and it will bring you up and you get the plays done."

Football

As a result, Duncan registered two tackles for a loss. Additionally, redshirt freshman Kerry Hyder contributed with two sacks and three tackles for a loss from the defensive end spot.

Defensive back Yashua Williams nabbed the game's only interception.

Willis said his defense's biggest change has occurred mentally, and believes the defense will no longer be in the shadow of Tech's renowned Air-Raid attack.

"I think we've been in the past just kind of thinking that we were second grade citizens or something like that," Willis said. "I think now they understand that on defense or special teams, we're a part of this team and we're very important to this team."

With the Red Raiders still under construction, Saturday was merely a preview for what fans can expect to see as the Tuberville era begins.

But if there's one thing Bird is sure of, it's that the 2010-11 season has the potential to be special for the program.

"Especially after just watching the spring, you see a lot of talent running around on the field," he said. "I think this is probably going to be one of the best years Texas Tech has ever had and I'll say that full-heartedly. Like I said, we're excited to play and I think we're going to be really good."

"I say that with no doubt in my mind."

Red Raiders take 2 from OU

By ADAM COLEMAN
SPORTS EDITOR

It wasn't that long ago when Texas Tech baseball was mired in a seven-game losing streak. Chad Bettis remembers it all too well.

"It was brutal point," he said. "We all remember that. We remember that seven-game losing streak and how hard of a toll it took on us. We definitely don't want to get back to that at all by any means, so we're just going to keep working like we are right now and see where we get at the end of the year."

All the Red Raiders' hard work has led them to three consecutive Big 12 Conference series wins for the first time since 2004. Tech took two games from No. 11 Oklahoma at Dan Law Field this weekend, splitting the doubleheader Saturday, and taking the series finale Sunday.

Tech (20-19, 8-7 in Big 12 play) won four consecutive Big 12 series against Nebraska, Kansas State, Oklahoma and Kansas in 2004. The series win against Oklahoma also marks the first time Tech won a series against OU and Oklahoma State since 2004.

The Red Raiders were faced with a familiar situation at the beginning of this series.

With inclement weather forcing a doubleheader Saturday, the Sooners (26-10, 6-7) jumped out on Tech 12-1. But behind Bobby Doran's pitching performance, Tech took the second game 7-3. Jay Johnson and a key first inning from Tech's bats led the Red Raiders to an 8-3 win Sunday.

Tech has been tested and responded in the same way for the last few games. Against Dallas Baptist, the Red Raiders overcame the nine runs the Patriots scored in the first inning to win 13-11. Before that, Oklahoma State gave the Red Raiders one of their worst losses of the year in the series-opener, 13-3. After dropping the series opener to UNLV, Tech battled back for a series split.

Because of the Red Raiders' play lately, Tech coach Dan Spencer said his team is garnering attention around the Big 12.

"I think the respect that our kids have around the league is there and in the country with the people we've played," he said. "If you played us, whether you beat us or we beat you, you have an idea that Texas Tech's got a pretty good bunch and they play hard. Those are the things I'm proud of."

After OU's ace Zach Neal pitched a complete game in their first matchup of Saturday's doubleheader, Doran answered with seven solid innings that included one earned run and seven strikeouts. The seven strikeouts tied his career-high as Red Raiders.

Johnson, who primarily has been in the bullpen this season, got his second start of the year Sunday and through 4 1/3 innings. He didn't disappoint.

The junior allowed six hits, one run and had three strikeouts in this outing, but it was Colt Farrar who got the win. Bettis nabbed his sixth save of the season.

All the intensity Johnson is known for showed up on the mound Sunday.

Ricky Eisenberg on second, Johnson was trying to protect a 6-0 lead with one out. Once he got Max White to hit into a 1-6-3 double play, Johnson walked off the mound yelling in excitement.

The junior said it's all a part of his game.

"I get and excited and stuff because my legs are under me, I get a little bit more adrenaline, be able to throw the ball where I want it," Johnson said. "Really just trying to stay calm too at the same time. Hitting spots and using all three pitches."

This series win has only Texas and Kansas State ahead of Tech in the standings and Tech utility player Barrett Barnes took notice.

The win is a little bit sweeter for Barnes though, considering not many thought Tech would be this high in the standings.

"When you win games over and over again, all they can do is give you respect and take you more seriously," said Barnes, who was 3-for-4 with a home run and two RBIs Sunday. "Because we were predicted to be dead last and now we're sitting comfortably in third place which is huge for us."

Tech softball goes 1-3 during weekend series

Texas Tech coach Shannon Hays categorized Thursday's softball doubleheader against Oklahoma as "weird."

The Red Raiders (31-12, 3-8 in Big 12 Conference play) blew a four-run lead in game one and gave up a walk-off grand slam in the bottom of the seventh. But in game two, the Red Raiders trailed the Sooners (32-10, 6-3 then continued their road trip with two games against No. 14 Missouri (31-8, 4-5 in Big 12).

Unfortunately, the Red Raiders were unable to plate enough runs in the series as they were swept by the Tigers 3-1 and 5-2.

After Saturday's 3-1 loss, Hays said he was proud of the way his team battled against Missouri. The Red Raiders had two runners on the corners in the seventh with no outs but were unable to bridge the gap.

One thing Hays preaches to his team is making sure the team is in a position to win the game in the late innings.

"Just battle and the game's never over and we've had some really good comebacks," Hays said. "You know if you keep battling you give yourself a chance. We did that again today. We battled — you know our girls have battled all year long, I couldn't be more proud of them."

The Red Raiders return home for a doubleheader against No. 9 Oklahoma State at 5 p.m. Thursday at Rocky Johnson Field.

Track team battles weather during weekend

By TOMMY MAGELSSSEN

As Texas Tech pole-vaulter Shade Weygandt took first-place at the Mt. SAC Relays in sunny California, some of her teammates had to suffer through rain and wet conditions in Norman, Okla., at the John Jacobs Invitational.

"(The John Jacobs Invitational) had terrible weather," Tech coach Wes Kittley said. "It rained the whole time, and you know we just didn't get much accomplished (Saturday). I mean honestly it was just so bad of weather."

Having to deal with rain and temperatures in the 50s led to some poor marks overall and was not a very enjoyable experience, said Kittley.

Kittley singled out the performance of a few Tech hurdlers who were able to pull through in the rain. Senior Jansen Hyde managed to run a season-best time of 13.85 seconds in the 110-meter hurdles and teammate Bryce Brown won the 400 hurdles with a mark of 51.49. On the women's side, Tori Smith finished third with a time of 13.56.

Other first-place finishers at the John Jacobs Invitational were Veronica DiLullo in the triple jump, Matt Davidson in the 800, and the women's 4x100 relay team of Erica Alexander, Terra Evans, Candace Jackson and Taylor Evans.

On the West Coast, several Tech athletes competed against top competition from across the nation at the Mt. SAC Relays in Walnut, Calif. Weygandt's winning mark of 14-1 1/4 feet ties her school-record set earlier this season. Weygandt is fourth in the nation.

Although Weygandt was the only first-place finisher in California, Kittley said he was impressed with some of his other athletes nonetheless.

Darrell Roddick's triple jump mark of 53-7 3/4 is the third best distance in school history and ranks him fourth in the nation.

Kittley said there was not much to take from this weekend in Oklahoma, but it can be a valuable learning experience.

"We never got the rain to stop, it was just the whole day," he said. "But you don't normally get much good out of that. We just need to regroup and get ready for next week."

Up next for Tech is the highly anticipated Penn Relays beginning on Thursday in Philadelphia.

Emotions flare as Tech downs CU, Mizzou

By JOSHUA KOCH
STAFF WRITER

Emotions ran high for freshman Sandra Dynka and the Texas Tech women's tennis team as they played their final home matches of the season this weekend.

With Sunday being Senior Day, the Lady Raiders found themselves playing for more than just victory.

"There were times during the match where I felt like it wasn't only about tennis anymore," Dynka said. "I felt like I needed to come out for my team. Not only with the win, but just stay focused and calm."

Tech (9-10, 4-5 in Big 12 Conference) defeated both No. 63 Colorado (10-9, 3-5) and Missouri (6-14, 1-8) 5-2 Friday and Sunday, respectively.

The Colorado match originally was scheduled to be played outside, but was moved indoors to the Lubbock Country Club because of bad weather.

Tech took two of the three doubles matches to clinch the doubles point and the early lead. The Lady Raiders then went on to win four of the five singles matches to get the victory against Colorado.

With the rain cleared up, Tech was able to play its final home match of the season Sunday at the McLeod Tennis Center against last place Missouri.

Before the match the Lady Raiders honored their outgoing players, senior Kerryn Potgieter and junior Natalie Day with flowers and gifts from different teammates.

Potgieter has 55 singles victories, good for seventh all-time, and 53 doubles wins, which is eighth all-time. Day is graduating early in August and will seek her Master's in Counseling after that.

ning two of the three doubles matches against Tech.

During singles play there was some harsh heckling coming from Missouri fans as well as Tech fans. Eventually had to be stopped at one point to break up a near fist fight between a Tech and Missouri fan.

After the ordeal was sorted out, singles play continued.

Sophomore Natalie Leitch fell in the No. 2 spot to Missouri's Mallory Weber in straight sets, 3-6 2-6, bringing the match to two apiece. Tech went on to win the next three matches consecutively at the No. 6, No. 1 and No. 5 spots to clinch the victory.

Even with all the drama at the courts, freshman Caroline Starck said getting the win for the seniors is special.

"It means a lot, just because they didn't play today doesn't really mean anything," she said. "They've put a lot into this program; they come out every day, and work hard to make themselves better and the team. They're out there cheering for us every match, so this was huge for us to win for them."

The Lady Raiders will hit the road for their final two matches of the season against Kansas and Kansas State next weekend.

Tech coach Todd Petty said the squad's performance this weekend shows the program is making steps in the right direction.

"We didn't play well," Petty said. "But to win three straight Big 12 matches going into Kansas, Kansas State kind of shows this team is starting to peak and get better each week. I see the growth and the maturity process really coming together every day."
