SGA Senate passes GPA increase bill Senators establish ethics committee

By ASHLYN TUBBS STAFF WRITER

The Student Government Association's student senate passed a bill Thursday after a month of debate. The bill raises the required GPA for senators and executive officers.

After some discussion during the senate meeting regarding Senate Bill 47.03, which would raise the GPA requirement to 2.5 for those wanting to join the student senate and 2.75 for those wanting to hold an executive office, the bill was voted on and passed.

"Basically, I, and the senators that voted with me, see it as a way to keep the standards of the SGA high," Senator Colin Davis said. "We haven't always had the best representation, and so I think if we're keeping ourselves to a high standard and making sure that we're doing the things that we need to do as an organization for students, I think a higher GPA is necessary for that to happen."

During the meeting's open forum, Jeramy Kitchen, a junior political science major from Meadows Place, voiced his concern that the student senate often forgets whom they represent.

The Cross Cultural Academic Advancement Center and Unidos por un Mismo Idioma, a student organization at Tech that promotes the Spanish language and culture, worked together to celebrate Viva Calaca: Día de los Muertos, or Day of the Dead.

On Thursday night, more than 320 people attended the two-part event, which honored the Hispanic tradition in the Frazier Pavilion.

"This is the seventh annual Viva Calaca event hosted by the Cross Cultural Academic Advancement Center," said Martha Mouret-Sanders, assistant director of the center. "Last year was the first time UMI joined us in hosting the event, and now this year we have over 10 Hispanic organizations that participated by creating an altar."

Multicultural fraternities, sororities, Hispanic-based student organizations such as the Hispanic Students Society and Lubbock High School created decorative altars to celebrate the life of a person who has died.

History professor recalls fighting in Vietnam War

By PAGE SKINNER STAFF WRITER

Not only does Ron Milam teach the history of the Vietnam War at Texas Tech, but he relives his experiences during every class he does so.

A Vietnam War veteran and published author, Ron served in the United States Army during the Vietnam War.

He said he enlisted in the Army as a "reluctant volunteer." He would have been drafted as soon as he finished graduate school, he said, but instead enlisted so he could become an officer.

He was 25 years old and had already been in training for two years when he was sent to Vietnam to fight, and just after he and his wife had their first son.

"I had been in training for almost two years before I went to Vietnam," Ron said. "I was an enlisted man for a year and was then in officer training for six months. I went to language school and I went to Special Forces school — I went to all those schools. So, I had already been in the Army for about two years. We pretty much knew that if the war continued, I would have to go. So, it wasn't a shock when I got my notice for Vietnam."

He said he got his notice in October and headed to Vietnam in May.

During that time, his son was born, and he said his wife, Maxine Milam, was a little depressed knowing he was going overseas to serve while she had to raise their three-month-old son alone.

Ron was stationed in Pleiku. which is a town in the Central Highlands of Vietnam, from 1970 to 1971.

"It's very mountainous," he said. "My job was what they called an infantry adviser to the Montagnards. These are tribal peoples: indigenous people of Vietnam."

I didn't get letters for probably two weeks, and that was really hard. I just remember rocking my son and just crying, thinking that was it."

She said her husband had written to his father explaining how bad the conditions were in Vietnam, but asked for his father to not tell her anything about it.

Finally, Maxine got a letter, and said she was very happy to hear from him.

Ron said he saw a lot of action while in Vietnam, but returning home proved to be a challenge as well.

He said Vietnam War veterans did not receive much respect from Americans who were still angry about the war and that it was a tough time to be a veteran.

"(Americans) were tired of the war and, in many ways, they took out their frustrations about being in the war on those who had fought in it," he said. "It was not a good time to be a veteran."

He said the veterans began to adopt the image other people had of them.

"A lot of us sort of accepted the image they had of us and grew our hair out long," he said. "And we probably did more drinking and (used drugs more) than we should have. But, that's the way people thought of us, so I guess we were trying to meet their expectations."

Ron said the hate for Vietnam War veterans got so bad the government passed a law called the "Vietnam Era Veterans' Readjustment Assistance Act of 1974."

The act put the veterans in an affirmative action state because companies would make assumptions and not hire veterans once they found out they had fought in the war, he said.

"The assumptions were that we had committed terrible atrocities," Ron said. "We were called 'baby killers' and all of us were (accused of being) drug addicts. Those were the allegations against us. And, the government passed a law that said that's just not the case (and that) you can't treat a veteran that way." When Ron returned home, Maxine said it was hard to adapt. By the time he was back from Vietnam, their son was one-yearand-three-months old.

getting adjusted to him and of a lot of men. About 58,225 men guys," which is an approach not man next to you alive. Not in our son getting adjusted to his dad," Maxine said. "So, he had to do that whole thing, whereas I was not used to anyone telling our son what to do and what not to do. He would come home and try to reprimand (our son) or whatever, and it was hard on me used to because he was already a year old by that time."

the history of the Vietnam War at Texas Tech

She also said her husband became tougher and took everything a little bit more seriously. Now, Ron teaches a course on the war and visits Vietnam every summer to teach a course on the American War in Vietnam.

"It's full circle for me," he said.

Ron said he thinks America had and women died fighting that war and millions and millions of Vietnamese died — not only as allies of us, but also as enemies. That's a sad thing. It's a really sad thing. I served. I did what my country asked me to do. When you are a citizen of a country and because it wasn't something I was they ask you to represent them in battle, I did what my country asked me to do.'

Ron is also the author of the book, "Not a Gentleman's War." He said he writes about "the little many other professors or authors choose.

"War is about the worst of human behavior and the best of human behavior," he said. "But, it's also about the love you have for the men next to you. I teach a whole course on why men fight and it has nothing to do with belief in democracy or belief in communism, if you're on the other side. It has almost everything to do — once the fighting starts — with trying to keep the keeping yourself alive, but in trying to keep the man next to you alive. Also, it's in trying to show the man next to you that you have what it takes to protect him. It's a very strange environment to be in and thank goodness there is only a very small percentage of people who ever have to do it."

Ron said there is not a day that goes by where he doesn't think about the things he did in Vietnam more than 40 years ago. >>> pskinner@dailytoreador.com

Case against Jackson's doctor goes to jury

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The case of Michael Jackson's doctor was placed in a jury's hands Thursday after contentious legal arguments over who was to blame for the superstar's death — the celebrity who craved sleep at any cost or the doctor accused of providing the drugs that killed him.

In final statements delivered in a packed courtroom, a defense attorney cast Dr. Conrad Murray as a victim of Jackson's celebrity, saying he would never have been charged with involuntary manslaughter if his patient was someone other than Jackson.

"They want you to convict Dr. Murray for the actions of Michael Jackson," attorney Ed Chernoff said. "This is not a reality show. It is reality."

Prosecutor David Walgren portrayed Murray as a liar and greedy opportunist who put his own welfare before that of Jackson.

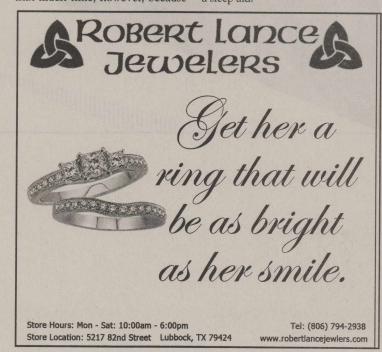

"Conrad Murray is criminally liable for the death of Michael Jackson," he told jurors. "Not because it was Michael Jackson but because Conrad Murray is guilty of criminal negligence."

Superior Court Judge Michael Pastor submitted the case to jurors after a full day of arguments and told them to begin deliberations Friday.

If convicted, Murray could receive a minimum sentence of probation or a maximum of four years. He would be unlikely to serve that much time, however, because of jail overcrowding.

Earlier, Walgren, in a carefully structured argument enhanced by video excerpts of witness testimony, spoke of the special relationship between a doctor and patient and said Murray had corrupted it by giving Jackson the anesthetic propofol as a sleep aid.

LETTER TO

Mike Leach is a non-issue and has been ever since he got fired.

First and foremost, Mike Leach was not fired due to the Adam James issue. This was simply the straw that broke the camel's back.

He was fired for insubordination. He constantly threw himself out at other jobs without the consent of our "power-hungry" administration, effectively breaking his contract to get leverage in negotiations for his new contract, which was created the year before his termination.

You can argue that using Adam James was a bad reason to fire him. You can point at the emails between administrators, ESPN and Craig James. The fact is Tech wanted him out, and for good reason.

The potency of our offense is actually just as effective as it was when Mike Leach was here. The running game is something all championship teams have and Leach's lack of one hurt him many times. Running the ball yields less overall yards, but results in more effective game control.

We experienced this last year as well with Baron Batch. If it weren't for the game last week, Texas Tech would be ranked in the top 10 this year — much like it was under Leach's tenure.

Remember: Mike Leach lost some head-scratchers as well. Oklahoma State in 2005 comes to mind, as well as TCU in 2006 and Colorado in his later years. Houston in his final year was also unbearable.

Leach demeans our university whenever he talks. We need to drop him like a bad habit, for that's what he is.
