Tuberville waiting to see what happens with arrested athletes

By CAITLAN OSBORN
News Editor

While Texas Tech football players Jace Amaro and Kenny Williams did not play in Saturday's annual Red-Black Spring Game, head coach Tommy Tuberville said both players will practice with the Red Raiders, and is waiting to see what happens with charges before taking further action.

"You don't know what they're going to be charged with," he said after the game. "You hear a lot of things, but that's not happened (yet)."

Amaro and Williams were arrested March 9 on two state felony charges for credit/debit card abuse and misrepresentation of age by a minor, according to statements released by their attorneys March 13.

Amaro also was issued a Class A misdemeanor offense of possession/use of an altered driver's license.

Tuberville said the arrests were an "unfortunate incident."

A magistrate released the football players on their personal recognizance March 10, pending further investigation by law enforcement.

Jonathan Stewart, of the Lubbock Police Department, said the case is still under investigation.

While everyone makes mistakes, Tuberville said, Amaro and Williams should have known better.

"I don't put up with that, they know that," he said. "(Unfortunately) it happens at every school. It happened here and it'll happen again. These are college guys that we're dealing with, but we hold them to a higher standard than anyone else around here, and they know that."

The police report said the students, both 19, were in possession of 22-year-old Harrison Holmes' Bank of America card and attempted to use the card to purchase alcoholic drinks at the Firehouse Grill and Bar on Buddy Holly Avenue. The report states the card was used without the owners consent. Amaro also attempted to use a fake ID to purchase the drinks.

Amaro and Williams also were in possession of a card belonging to sophomore Trent Williams.

Blayne Beal, associate director of media relations for Tech athletics, confirmed Holmes was on the university's 2008 baseball roster, though he did not make the team the following spring.

Beal also confirmed Trent Williams is on the 2012 football roster, and is a friend and roommate of Amaro and Kenny Williams.

Tuberville said the players are already living with the consequences of their actions.

"They're embarrassed, but we'll work through this and they didn't play today," he said. "I'm not going to charge them with anything until we hear what the (district attorney) says and the police."

"There's going to be some consequences, but I'm not going to jump to any conclusions."

Hoodie March: Tech students march for justice in honor of slain Florida teen

By MICHAEL DUPONT II
Staff Writer

A large group of Texas Tech students coordinated a march Friday afternoon, in protest of the way a Florida teen's death case is being handled by the police, and in honor of him.

According to Sanford, Fla. police reports, 17-year-old Trayvon Martin was shot to death by neighborhood watchman George Zimmerman, while walking home Feb. 26. Zimmerman claims he was acting in self-defense and currently no charges have been filed in the case.

Martin was allegedly wearing a hooded sweatshirt when Zimmerman found him to be acting suspiciously and called 911. The police then told Zimmerman to stop following the teen and wait for policeman to further handle the situation. Martin was dead when the police arrived.

President Barack Obama is among the many who have already spoken out against the case, describing it as a tragedy.

President Obama is not the only public figure raising awareness about the incident. The National Basketball Players Association issued a statement on its website expressing support for Martin, calling for charges to be filed against Zimmerman and the resignation of the police officials who originally handled the case.

Students reacted on the Tech campus by staging an impromptu march on behalf of Martin. These marches have been taking place not only on Tech's campus, but also on college campuses and cities across the country, under the name of the Million Hoodie March.

Christian Ikner, a junior advertising and public relations major from Arlington, said he does not believe race was a contributing factor in the death of Martin.

"I really don't think it's a race issue," he said. "I just think it was handled poorly, the fact that Zimmerman hasn't received any punishment or investigation is unfair. I think it's important because if we let things like this pass over as small, then when a larger issue rises, we can't have our voice heard on that. We need to make sure our voice is heard when things are not right."

The march brought together students of different genders, races and ethnicities — all in support of justice.

Chris Davis, a senior university studies major from Houston, said he thinks the situation should have been handled differently as well.

Architecture students return from India, share experiences in exhibit

Essays, photos on display for showcase

By PAIGE SKINNER
Staff Writer

Ten Texas Tech students traveled to India for two weeks for an architecture seminar.

The result was an exhibit, "India: In Our Own Words and Images."

The 10 students went to the country to observe Indian life, culture and architecture. When they returned to the classroom, they wrote essays about their first-hand experiences and observations.

The essays they wrote after the trip and the photographs they took while on the trip were shown in an exhibit, which opened at 4:30 p.m. Friday in the Architecture building.

Joe Aranha, a professor of architecture, said the trip was partially sponsored by the Rai Foundation, a philanthropic organization in India. This was Aranha's second time to take students to the southeast nation.

He said he thinks the students gained valuable experiences from traveling to India and he was pleased with the outcome of the essays and photographs.

"The class is dedicated to students learning about multicultural issues, about diversity, about cultures and about architecture as well," Aranha said. "And so, from reading their essays, I think their comments are very thoughtful and I think they got a lot from the experience. It made them think about things that they take for granted here, or think about things that maybe they've never thought about or see things in a different way. I think that was the benefit."

The students read each other's essays, looked at the photographs and shared their experiences in India.

Alejandra Cordes said she wrote in her essay that her time in India was "eye-opening."

"That's the only thing I can think of when people ask me that," said the senior architecture major from El Paso. "Every aspect of the culture, like food, religion, the way people are, the way people act in public, it's completely different. It's very humbling because people survive off of nothing. People would shower with dripping water. They would eat stuff that you would never think of. They would sleep anywhere. It was very eye-opening and humbling."

Law organization hosts immigration forum

By BETSY EPPLER

Immigration reform dominated discussion at Texas Tech's Hispanic Law Student Association's meeting Friday.

Krystal Gomez, a representative from American Civil Liberties Union of Texas and one of the event's two speakers, said she came to introduce the union's immigrants' rights campaign to Tech law students.

"I think that West Texas is a little behind the rest of the state when it comes to immigrants' rights advocacy," she said.

Gomez said many individuals suffer from unjust punishment and abuse due to the broken immigration system. One of the huge issues, she said, is the criminalization of illegal immigrants.

The law states that crossing the border without permission is a civil violation not a criminal violation, she said, and it only becomes criminal after the first offense.

Gomez said the events of Sept. 11, 2001 are responsible for the current conduct toward illegal immigrants. She calls the resulting treatment "criminalization."

The second speaker, Velma Gonzalez de Solórzano, an immigration attorney in Levelland, is also the mother of the student association's president, Isaias Solórzano.

Gonzalez de Solórzano said she came to inform students about some of the obstacles they are likely to see in immigration law. As a former Tech law student and self-described reformer, she said she wants students to come together to make a difference.

"If they are planning on doing immigration law," she said, "I'd like for them to be the best."

Shawn Gyomlai, a first-year law

AUSTIN CARRIZALES, A second year law student from Lubbock, gathers information about immigration from the American Civil Liberties Union of Texas during a Hispanic Law Students Association meeting in the Texas Tech School of Law on Friday.

student from Houston and a member of the association, said immigration is the reason she wanted to study law.

While she worked for AmeriCorps, she said, where she helped prepare high school seniors for college, Gyomlai was struck by the system's injustice towards undocumented students.

"A good number of my students were undocumented," she said, "and they don't have rights in this country that their classmates do. Even though they came up through the exact same schools, took the same classes, speak the same language, got the same grades."

As president of the association, Solórzano said he thinks events like this one raise awareness for civil rights in general, not merely immigration rights.

Solórzano said he works to create informal gatherings to make them conducive to learning.

After the presenters spoke, the audience viewed a "Frontline" episode called "Lost in Detention," which illuminated some of the shortfalls of the U.S. immigration system.

Matthew Manning, a third-year law student from Austin and member of the Black Law Student Association, said he knew little about President Barack Obama's immigration policies before watching the episode.

"I didn't realize that he had been so tough on deportations," he said.

Manning said he has thought about working in immigration law after he graduates in May, but he thinks every law student should pay attention to immigration regardless of his or her concentration.

"In light of legislation, like in Arizona and similar states," he said, "it's important that we as burgeoning attorneys have a perspective on immigration as an issue."

Santorum beats Romney in Louisiana

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rick Santorum won the Louisiana Republican presidential primary Saturday, beating front-runner Mitt Romney in yet another conservative Southern state.

"We're still here. We're still fighting. We still believe, as this race really shows," Santorum told supporters in Green Bay, Wis.

Although the victory gives Santorum bragging rights and 10 more delegates, it does not change the overall dynamics of the race; the former Pennsylvania senator still dramatically lags behind Romney in the hunt for delegates to the GOP's summertime nominating convention.

Even so, Santorum's win underscores a pattern in the draw-out race.

The under-funded underdog has tended to win in Bible Belt states that include Tennessee, Mississippi and Alabama. Romney — a deep-pocketed, highly organized former Massachusetts governor — has persistently struggled in such heavily conservative regions.

Said Santorum: "I'm not running as a conservative candidate for president. I am the conservative candidate for president."

Neither candidate was in the state as Louisiana Republicans weighed in. Nor was former House Speaker Newt Gingrich, who was trailing in Louisiana. With 100 percent of the precincts counted, unofficial returns showed Santorum with 49 percent to 27 percent for Romney. Gingrich was far back at 16 percent, followed by Ron Paul with 6 percent.

Romney tweeted his congratulations to Santorum: "Congratulations to Rick Santorum in LA. I look forward to the contests to come and to defeating (at) BarackObama in November."

Romney took a rare day off Saturday, with no public events. Santorum spent the day campaigning in Pennsylvania and next-up Wisconsin, which votes April 3 and represents one of his last chances to beat Romney in a Midwestern state.

Afghan father tries to cope with shooting rampage

HARMARA, Afghanistan (AP) — Mohammad Wazir can barely take a sip of water because it reminds him of his 7-year-old daughter, who brought him a glass three days before she was killed with 10 other loved ones in a shooting spree allegedly carried out by a U.S. soldier in southern Afghanistan.

Wazir said he had asked his wife for a drink but his daughter Masooma brought it instead.

"She said: 'Ask me, daddy. I can bring you water too,'" Wazir recalled. "She was the beauty of my house. She had black magical eyes."

Army Staff Sgt. Robert Bales was charged Friday with 17 counts of premeditated murder and could face a possible death penalty if convicted. But that has done little to ease the pain of those left behind, who are demanding justice as they struggle to rebuild their shattered lives.

Students celebrate Holi Festival of Colors

By PAIGE SKINNER
STAFF WRITER

Colored dust filled the air as nearly 500 people celebrated the Holi Festival of Colors.

The South Asian Student Association hosted the fifth annual Holi Festival of Colors at 2 p.m. Saturday at Urbanovsky Park.

Texas Tech students, Lubbock residents and others celebrated the Hindu tradition by throwing colored powder into the air.

Pooja Patel, president of the S.A.S.A., said the celebration has a religious connotation to it.

"It's to celebrate the battle versus good over evil and to bring in the spring season," said the senior exercise and sports and sciences major from Lubbock. "Because of the lively colors and stuff, it kind of distinguishes all the differences in people. It helps people come together and forget about the past years and just bring in the spring season with new lively feelings and things like that."

The different colored powders do not mean anything in particular, Patel said, but the S.A.S.A. wanted to choose bright colors including green, blue, purple and pink.

Once everyone had arrived to the event and collected their powder, Patel told the crowd to grab a fist of powder and throw it into the air once she had counted down from three.

When the crowd finally heard, "One," a haze of color appeared.

As Bollywood music played in the background, people threw powder at each other, into the air and even on themselves.

Luke Plumlee, a senior political science major from Wichita Falls, said he had never heard of the Holi Festival before and wanted to check it out.

Plumlee's friend, Lyle Goodyear, said the powder even changed the color of his spit.

The senior psychology major from Hurricane, Utah, said because of all the powder, he inhaled some of it and when he spit, it was purple.

While Goodyear and Plumlee weren't positive of all the details of the celebration, their friend, Jack Adams, knew a little about it and said it was supposed to represent a "spiritual rebirth."

Once people were covered in the different colors of powder, many of them stopped and took out their cameras to capture the moment before grabbing the Indian food offered.

Emily Furillo, a junior graphic design major from San Antonio, said she had heard a little about the Hindu celebration.

She heard participants were supposed to wear old clothes to symbolize the rebirth.

Furillo had no idea what to expect and said she couldn't see anything once the powder filled the air.

Furillo's friend, Julio Gonzalez, said while he doesn't practice the Hindu religion, he knew the tradition was to celebrate spring.

"I liked it," said the sophomore history major from San Antonio. "It was an opportunity to learn more about culture and stuff. It was different."

"I feel that there is a major injustice going on and it's pretty cut and dry," he said. "If you shoot somebody and you kill them, you should be held accountable for your actions and you should be put through the justice system."

Glen Nwaefulu, a junior exercise and sports sciences major from Mansfield, said he fears the same situation could have happened closer to home and there should be a human element involved in this case.

"It could've been my little brother," he said. "It's unfortunate, but it's important for us to show that we care and justice should be served. We're all human beings; no one-person deserves to die."

Elton Ngamalue, a junior exercise and sports sciences major from Allen, said showing support was his reason for attending the march.

"There are laws in place that allow (Zimmerman) to be free, so now we're just going to march to show our support," he said.

Natasha Hemeng, a sophomore nutritional science major from Arlington, said in order for any action to be taken in terms of justice for the case, people need to come together to show their support.

"When I first heard about the Trayvon Martin case a lot of emotions ran through me," she said. "It could've been my brother. In order for us to be heard and things to get done, we must first unite. We are a force in numbers."

B.J. Hemeng, a senior chemistry and political science major from Arlington, said he thinks a large number of Americans across the country may be misinformed about some of the information in the case.

"Florida law states that (Zimmerman) has the right to commit murder if his life is in danger, but the thing is with the 911 phone call (the police) told (Zimmerman) to back down," he said. "That's what we're marching about. We're not debating the Florida law, we're just debating the evidence that's presented."

B.J. Hemeng said Tech students are eventually going to fill out a large number of voting ballots to change the current situation. They believe change is possible if they stand together, he said.

"Students are going to make up 25 percent of the voting in our nation in the year 2020, so students have a big voice and we don't even know it," he said. "When we have a united front we know that — as students from the age 18-28 — we have a big voice, and us having a united front could actually make a change for generations that come after us."

"The Hunger Games" failed to meet book's standards

"The Hunger Games" is an action/fantasy film adaptation of the novel of same name by Suzanne Collins, which takes place in a futuristic North America — known as Panem and ruled by the Capitol, which selects a boy and girl tribute from each of the 12 districts to fight to the death in an annual event known as The Hunger Games.

The film, directed by Gary Ross, stars Jennifer Lawrence and Josh Hutcherson. Supporting roles included Liam Hemsworth, Elizabeth Banks, Stanley Tucci, Woody Harrelson and Lenny Kravitz.

Katniss (Lawrence) volunteers to go in place of little sister, Prim, after she is chosen as tribute during the "Reaping," along with Peeta (Hutcherson) from their home, District 12. The battle begins with 24 tributes and only one can come out alive.

Having read the book, I eagerly anticipated this film, lining up hours early for the midnight premiere Thursday, along with tons of other fans. Less than halfway through the film, I found myself feeling disappointed and cheated because so much was not included in the movie from the book that made this story so special.

With no explanation of background stories and history, the movie assumed the audience already knew why everything was the way it was — which was the biggest mistake. This created a recipe for disaster. As I looked around the theater, some of the people that were screaming with excitement before the movie started were checking their phones, which said enough in itself.

Choosing to play the blame game, this was left in the hands of the director and cinematographer. The actors gave the best performances they could with how they were led, so the talent aspect was probably the best thing about the film.

Because the movie jumped inconsistently from scene to scene and toned down the gruesomeness of the novel, it was enough for any fan to become angry. People went into this movie expecting to see bloody battles, whether they read the book or not, but for some reason, we were fed an extremely toned down version of fight scenes. Maybe making this PG-13 was a mistake if that was the reason.

London Weldon

This issue made it hard to believe the emotion in the film, because it wasn't extreme enough to get emotional over.

At times, I forgot they were fighting for their lives because the overall direction of the movie did not convey this as serious as it could have been. It focused more on before "The Hunger Games," rather than during the actual fight for their lives. It built everyone up, and then let you down, with the cheap looking special effects that did not do the vivid imagery of the book justice.

This film was more of a synopsis of the book than an actual adaptation. Since the premise of this story is so amazing and had a good cast, I am giving this film two-and-a-half out of five stars. It had the potential (and budget) to be a five out of five stars kind of film, but the director took this in a direction it shouldn't have gone in. It probably would have been better if the actual author took more part in the film. Unfortunately, I can't give a completely unbiased review of this movie because I did read the book and had high expectations.

However, I think everyone who thought this film was perfect should read the novel and watch the film again. I'm a firm believer that if you make a film adaptation of a bestselling novel, do it right.

Weldon is The DT's movie reviewer.

Cordes said the trip was focused on India's architecture and the detail was "10,000 times" more than that of American architecture.

Before the trip, Aranha helped prepare the students with what to expect in India by showing movies and assigning readings.

Vicente Carrasco, who had a panoramic photograph he took in Orville, India on display in the exhibit, said he was pretty prepared for the amount of poverty there, but the Indian people did not show any sadness because of it.

"The poverty doesn't really show with the people," said the junior architecture major from Midland. "They're extremely happy, extremely nice, they're always willing and able to offer hospitality off the street. It was really nice."

However, Bryan Sablan, a junior architecture major from San Angelo, said the poverty did stand out, but the people were always happy.

He recalled on his peer's essays and said Americans have a mindset of thinking their way is the best way.

The trip to India helped him better grasp a different way of living, he said.

"It's a whole new way of life," he said. "It's kind of opened my eyes that just because you're in India, in a small, maybe third-world country, you don't have to be sad, you don't have to be depressed. Live with what you got and the people there were so amazing."

Tech wins first Big 12 game, loses two of three

By BRETT WINEGARNER
MANAGING EDITOR

It was another tough weekend for Texas Tech baseball in Big 12 Conference play.

After picking up their first conference win Friday, the Red Raiders lost the series, as they were unable to win the next two.

Head coach Dan Spencer said it was a tough series because he knows the team is better than it played this weekend.

"It's real frustrating because the losses are hard," he said, "but when you don't play like you want to play, or don't play like you have played, or don't play like you practice consistently, it is hard."

In the rubber match Sunday, Oklahoma took the series with an 8-2 victory against Tech.

The Sooners jumped on Tech's pitching early, as they scored four runs in the first four innings of play. The Red Raiders also made it tough, as they knocked 11 hits but only scored two runs from those hits, and had four errors as well.

The Sooners put the game away late by scoring three runs in the top of the ninth to extend their lead to six, ending any hope of a Tech comeback.

In game one of the series, Tech starting pitcher Duke von Schamann led the Red Raiders to a 6-1 victory against Oklahoma.

The Sooners had trouble getting to von Schamann during the game, as they scored their only run against him in the top of the eighth. However, even that run didn't blemish von Schamann's stat line, as it was unearned. von Schamann pitched all nine innings while allowing six hits and striking out three on a season-high 104 pitches.

von Schamann said he was pleased with his start, but was more excited for the team to pick up its first win in Big 12 play. "I felt good out there and our hitters really backed me up," he said. "It is really good to get that first one — that is the most important thing."

The Red Raiders' offense was balanced on the night, as four different players knocked in Tech's runs. It was Jamodrick McGruder though that provided the biggest sparks for Tech, with two leadoff triples in the game. Tech's offense put the game out of reach with a 3-run eighth to extend its lead to 6-1.

In game two of the series, the two teams played in front of 4,187 fans, which marked Tech's largest home crowd since April 21, 2006, against the Sooners as well. However, the Tech fans went home disappointed, as the Red Raiders fell 5-3 snapping a 10-game home winning streak.

Prior to the game, it was revealed that Reid Redman suffered a fractured second metatarsal in his left foot, with no timetable for his return to the team.

John Neely got his first start of the season for Tech and struggled early, allowing three runs to score in the first two innings, but calmed down after giving up just one more run the next five innings.

The Red Raiders were able to cut the lead to one in the eighth, but an insurance run in the top of the ninth secured the victory for the Sooners.

Oklahoma's starter matched von Schamann's performance from the night before, as Dillon Overton threw 128 pitches, while giving up just two earned runs on eight hits in a complete game effort.

Next for Tech will be a one-game series with New Mexico State at 4 p.m. Tuesday.

Brewer, JUCO transfers lead black squad to 25-19 win in spring game

Redshirt freshman Michael Brewer went 21-for-28 passing, throwing for 297 yards and two touchdowns to help lead the Black team over the Red team, 25-19, during Texas Tech's annual Red-Black Spring Game on Saturday at Jones AT&T Stadium.

Tech coach Tommy Tuberville said he was not only pleased that no players were injured, but also was happy with the competitive-ness displayed.

"That's one of the first spring games I've been involved with that was as competitive as it was today," he said.

With a multitude of Tech receivers recovering from injuries this past season, it was recent JUCO transfer Marcus Kennard who took advantage of the opportunity. Kennard led the receiving corps with two touchdowns and five catches, totaling 97 yards.

After missing the majority of spring practices because of a hamstring injury, Kennard said he was somewhat surprised regarding his performance, but felt he had to have a statement game.

"I felt like I was at the bottom of the totem pole," he said, "and I had to get my name back up."

JUCO transfer Will Smith led the black squad's defense with a team-high six tackles along with an interception and a tackle for loss.

"Will is a guy that will get better at every snap — you know he's playing inside (linebacker) now — he'll be our quarterback on defense in terms of getting us lined up and getting everything called for next year," Tuberville said.

It took 2011 starting quarterback Seth Doege only six plays to reach the end zone and connect with Kennard for an 18-yard throw to put the red team on top, 7-0, in the early going.

Doege threw for 217 yards, going 25-for-39 with one touchdown and an interception. He also scrambled for a 5-yard touchdown run at the end of the third quarter.

Redshirt sophomore kicker Ryan Bustin saw plenty of action, scoring the next two field goals for both the red and black squads in the second quarter. The field goals were good from 26 and 42 yards, respectively.

His last field goal attempt was his longest, going 49 yards through the upright to put the black team on top 13-10 going into the half.

Bustin finished 3-for-4 on the day.

On the black team's first possession of the third quarter, Brewer developed his chemistry with Kennard off two big snags — a 50-yarder to bring the ball to the red squad's side of the field and a 5-yard touchdown pass and catch.

Javon Bell had the longest play of the day, hauling in a 62-yard catch from Brewer via a tunnel screen in the third quarter.

Bell finished with two catches for 84 yards.

The final score of the game was a 34-yard field goal by redshirt freshman Kramer Fyfe in the final minutes.

Fyfe had trouble in the third quarter with his extra-point attempts, missing two consecutive tries.

Both Tuberville and offensive coordinator Neal Brown said an area of concern was the offensive line's performance, as the unit allowed nine sacks.

The spring game marked Tech's last solid look at the team for the rest of the spring and summer. Offseason workouts will resume August 5.

When asked of the drop-off between Doege and Brewer, Brown said in order to answer that question, Brewer would have to get snaps against the first team defense.

But after his spring game performance, Brown said Brewer is headed in the right direction and he would hope to have no qualms in Brewer starting if something were to happen to Doege.

"My goal is that when we kick off against (Northwestern State), that we have 100 percent confidence in Michael Brewer — if something happens to Seth Doege — that Michael Brewer comes in and we don't change anything that we're doing," Brown said.
