weapons from U.N.

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — Taking advantage of a halt to U.N. arms inspections, Iraqis have hidden sensitive equipment and tampered with U.N. surveillance cameras, a senior U.N. official said Wednesday.

The chief U.N. weapons inspector, Richard Butler, said his teams would try to inspect two sites today "to establish the whereabouts" of material "which has been Butler suspended U.N. weapons inspections in Iraq last week after Baghdad ordered the expulsion of American members of his team.

Butler said the inspections would go ahead as planned Monday, but they have been scrubbed for three straight days because Iraq refused to admit American inspectors.

The inspections are meant to verify whether Iraq has destroyed its weapons of mass destruction. That was a condition for ending the 1991 Persian Gulf War, in which a U.S.-led coalition drove Iraqi forces from Kuwait.

The United Nations also maintains surveillance cameras at sensitive sites suspected of producing illegal weap-

The inspectors are trying to determine if Iraq has complied with U.N. orders to destroy all long-range missiles and weapons of mass destruction.

In a letter to the Security Council, Butler said there was evidence that the Iraqis have been tampering with surveillance equipment since the field inspections have not taken place.

"Significant pieces of dual-capable equipment, subject to monitoring by the (inspectors') remote camera monitoring system have been moved out of view of the cameras," Butler said.

"The equipment includes, for example, gyroscope rotor balancing equipment which could be used to balance prohibited missile gyroscopes."

There was no comment from the council to the letter, a copy of which was obtained by The Associated Press.

In the letter, Butler, an Australian, noted that movement of the equipment is prohibited without U.N. permission "and the equipment concerned is subject to continuous camera monitoring precisely because of its easy adaptation to prohibited activities."

He said it would "take only a few hours" to adapt some of the sensitive equipment "to produce seed stocks of biological warfare agent."

"Furthermore, it appears that cameras may have been intentionally tampered with, lenses covered and lighting turned off in the facilities under monitoring," Butler said.

Butler said he planned to send a team today to inspect two of the facilities where cameras may have been tampered with "to establish the whereabouts of the ... equipment which has been moved."

Destruction of the equipment is also the main condition for lifting crippling economic sanctions imposed on Iraq after President Saddam Hussein sent his troops into Kuwait in August 1990.

Au pair must wait for judge's ruling

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — British au pair Louise Woodward and those anxiously watching her murder case on both sides of the Atlantic will have to wait until at least Monday for a judge to decide her fate.

Judge Hiller B. Zobel, who is away at a conference the rest of this week, plans to post his ruling on the Internet through legal and media Web sites.

Defense lawyers asked Zobel on Tuesday to void the 19-year-old's second-degree murder conviction, order a new trial or reduce the verdict to manslaughter. The prosecution argued that last week's verdict should stand.

The jury found that Woodward had shaken and slammed 8-month-old Matthew Eappen Feb. 4, the day she called 911 to say the boy was having trouble breathing. Matthew Eappen died five days later.

Supporters of Woodward believe she is innocent or is guilty only of manslaughter. About 25 people kept a vigil outside the courthouse.

Support for Woodward is strong in her tiny hometown of Elton, where Rose Russell said she talked to Woodward's mother Wednesday.

Faculty senate ponders admission standards

BY JASON BERNSTEIN

The University Daily

The Texas Tech Faculty Senate discussed the possible increases in admission standards as proposed by the Board of Regents in its August

"The key is for all faculty to be involved in the recruitment and retention efforts," said James Brink, Tech's interim vice president for enrollment management. "The new management structure has been well-received on campus."

Brink's position has been responsible for placing more of an emphasis on various offices across campus.

"The Offices of New Student Relations, Admissions and Records, Financial Aid and the University Advising Center are all important facets to the increase in retention efforts," Brink said.

The senate also passed a motion to have the Board of Regents defer any decision on its report on admission standards in order to become better acquainted with the various issues at hand.

"There wasn't enough time allowed for the senate to make a thorough recommendation," said associate history professor Catherine

Miller. "The main sentiment of the senate is that the issues need to be studied in a professional manner."

The process by which a university changes its admission standards is a lengthy one that requires all parties involved to examine the consequences of possible changes, Miller said.

The senate did pass a vote on select issues pertaining to the admission standards report that were deemed non-controversial issues.

The recommendations made by the senate on admission standards include providing more scholarships to students with SAT scores exceeding 1300 as well as rejecting the standard of a 50 percent acceptance ra-

Additionally, the senate opposes placing a 3,520-person limit on the number of freshmen accepted to the university.

The senate also heard a presentation from Cathy Allen, Tech's special assistant to the chancellor for cultural diversity.

"Our goals are to improve recruitment and retention for all underrepresented groups on campus," Allen said.

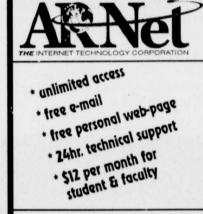

"We have set out to improve the overall infrastructure currently in place for Tech students."

Everyday male Texas Tech students are bombarded with vital matters in need of their attention - from catching up on Plato's "The Republic" for philosophy to making plans for Spring Break.

Add monthly testicular exams to the list.

Many men mistakenly believe testicular cancer cannot happen to them, and, like most cancers, that it usually occurs in the elderly, when in fact the most common age group stricken is 20 to 40, said Dr. Yikong Keung, an

Although testicular cancer is rare, because of its cure rate, detecting it early is imperative.

"If we detect it early, it can be cured in 99 percent of the cases, but if it has spread throughout the body, there is a 70 percent cure rate," Keung said.

The Women's Studies Program offers Texas Tech students the chance to look at the world differently.

"The courses present the world through the lens of gender," said Esther Lichti, assistant coordinator of women's studies. "The program offers the chance to look at the world in a different way than it is usually looked at."

Lichti said she believes a misconception exists about women's studies courses in that they are about feminism.

"I think there is a misconception that associates woman's studies with feminism, really it is associated out of women's rights movement in the '60s, '70s and '80s, but doesn't mean it is about feminism," she said.

AM radio like 'a diamond in the rough'

In the politically correct '90s, one could take a second look at several Disney characters that we've grown up with and question how they would fit into today's society.

For starters, there's Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs. Let's see now, that's seven guys living with one girl.

You draw your own conclusions. Then there's a sarcastic duck named Donald who wears only a shirt and hat — never pants — who takes care of his three nephews. What would Children's Protective Services have to say about this?

Lest we forget Goofy. In a day and age where ethnic groups are being subdivided, created and who knows what else, Goofy's ethnic identity would surely be quite a mess.

And how could we not wonder about two male chipmunks who live together named Chip and Dale. Enough said.

I wish that I could say I came up with some of these parodies involving well-known Disney characters, but then I would be telling you a white lie. Actually all of this material was heard in a similar form when I tuned my car stereo to an AM all-news station and heard a commentary by Charles Osgood poking fun at the proposed Disney boycott.

When the "Father of Radio" Guglielmo Marconi and his entrepreneurial radio cohorts began to develop the first crude forms of radio nearly 100 years ago, they knew their idea would make some waves. However, even they may have underestimated how radio would evolve in such a short period of time.

Today, radio fans can listen to tunes in the shower, while they drive to work, as they workout or just about anywhere else you can imagine. Listeners with varying tastes are bound to find something to appease their desires oftentimes by exclusively scanning the FM-radio dial. In Lubbock alone, there are several choices when it comes to country and western music, rock 'n' roll and alternative, as well as stations specializing in classic hits from the '60s and '70s and classical music. So what has happened to AM-radio?

Sadly enough, AM-radio seems to be following the paths of the pet rock, the hoola hoop, Michael Jackson zipper pants and Chuck Taylor Converse shoes as its odds of joining the endangered species list rapidly increase.

If you're like many people, myself included, your search for listening pleasure probably doesn't usually include a scan of the AM-radio frequencies. The fact of the matter is, AM-radio has played second fiddle to FM-radio for about the last 20-25 years following the introduction of FM's stereo sound.

Yet there still exists a number of quality programs that are reason enough to give AM a quick scan.

Where else could listeners in many cities and towns tune-in to hear Paul Harvey explain how a single catastrophe in the life of a young painter named Samuel Morse led to the creation of the telegraph?

Or how about the numerous occasions when die-hard sports fans who get fed up with TV announcers have turned the volume on the TV off and listened to the local radio announcers call the big game on an AM-station?

And for hard-core news lovers, there's nothing comparable to the hourlong broadcast of National Public Radio's "All Things Considered."

Unfortunately, programs such as these often get overlooked due to their frequency location and the entrenchment of FM as the choice for listening pleasure.

So next time when you're driving around town and are in the middle of your third search of the FM dial, switch over to AM for a second and give it a shot. You might just find what you're looking for. Andrew Schoppe is a junior political science major from Houston.

It goes both ways.

Gender-based discrimination is a tough call, even for people in Washington D.C., with the law degrees.

But this issue of gender discrimination just seems too weird to get all worked up about.

It comes down to the fact that testing a seemingly tried, true and beneficial gender role, such as women being ladies and covering themselves shows a complete lack of class.

Instead of testing her gender boundaries and making a spectacle of herself, maybe Carreras should try playing within the boundaries of respectability and class - even if it means wearing a tank top instead of a tube top.

ROTC deserves university support

To the Editor: In response to the article Tuesday about Army ROTC's removal from "Tech land," I would like to express my disgust with our university's lack of support for our military. I have watched the corps train extensively in the field across from the business administration building several times after class Thursdays, and they all take training long past the time that Tech and Spike very seriously. The ROTC is part of this university just like any of the athletic teams and deserves the same respect and privileges of having a school-funding area for training exercises and practice drills.

> From what I understand, Army ROTC is one of the oldest organizations/departments in this university. Texas Tech administrators need to reconsider allowing them to train on the land. Next semester is going to be extremely hard for them if they have to travel out of their way to train for a shorter time, learn less and then have to make the trip back to campus, unpack and finally go home. I feel asking them to do this is totally unreasonable and unfair to all of them. They are here to get an education just like

Minorities struggle with white standards

To the Editor: I wanted to comment on Andrew Schoppe's Oct. 30 column on test preparation. I feel that the author was very much so uneducated about the issues surrounding standardized test being culturally biased.

His first mistake was implying that the reason minorities don't do as well academic development." If he were to research this subject further, he would be surprised to find out that on all standardized test, at all levels of education, minorities tend to score less than whites do. On the GRE which is a graduate level exam, where it is arguable that the majority of those who take this exam are fairly educated, minorities score lower.

Secondly, many minorities tend to outscore whites in many areas, particularly math and science. The reason they end up scoring lower is because of the vocabulary and reading comprehension portions of the test. Asian Americans, in particular, tend to score significantly higher than white students in math and science.

Thirdly, I feel that it is the responsibility of public school to provide for the "public" welfare. If the only people doing well on these tests are white students, I don't see why standardized tests are still being used a measure of students' academic abil-

I can't speak on behalf of all minorities, but I am sick and tired of everything having to be the "white" way or no way. I am tired of the standards being set by white people only. America is a place of many diverse nationalities and cultures. Diversity is a good thing.

Anthrax visits Hub City this weekend

BY SEBASTIAN KITCHEN

The University Daily

Anthrax has been nominated for Grammy awards and is one of the most enduring heavy metal bands around, but after a year in the studio, the band is ready to go back on the road.

"We are doing this to kick morale to a different level," said lead singer John Bush, Monday from New York. "You need to get out there and play music. It reminds you what it's all about.'

Sunday, the band will meet up with Pantera in Lubbock for the first date of their tour together.

"We are going to get a chance to get out and tour with our friends," Bush said. "We are trying to break the monotony of being in the studio for the last year."

The band turned its New York rehearsal studio into a recording studio and began to work at its own pace on its upcoming record, scheduled to be released in March 1998 or April 1998.

Bush's favorite Anthrax song is "Catharsis," one the public has not heard. They are working on the song for a new album.

"It is yet to be released but it's something people can look forward to," Bush said. "It may be our best song yet.

Anthrax

There's a vibe to it. It sounds special. It represents everything we are about. Awesome melody but sheer power."

As Bush discussed his favorite song, he heard guitarist Scott Ian playing it. Bush likes the song, and he enjoys being in a band.

"I like being in a band still," he said. "I wouldn't know what to do with myself if I didn't have this luxury of being in a rock band."

Their last album, Stomp 442, put them on tour with the Misfits. Sound of White Noise, the album before Stomp 442 was the band's sixth straight gold album.

Bush is the only member of the band who is not an original member. The band has been together for 15 years, and he joined them five and a half

The band recorded Public Enemy's "Bring the Noise" on its album Attack of the Killer B's, and following the re-bands such as Megadeth and Slayer. After the Clash tour, a sold-out tour with co-headliner Public Enemy fol-three and a half years ago, Bush said. "We last played there in 1994," he said. "We've got to make up for some lost time."

Anthrax is based out of New York, with bass player Frank Bello and drummer Charlie Benante still residing there. Bush is from California and so is Ian.

Gary Stone, an employee at Ralph's Records, said the show is selling well.

"This is a great bill," he said. "There is a little diversity. There is some old school and a new band."

Stone has been a Anthrax fan for many years.

Since becoming a fan, he has seen the band five times.

"It's a great live show," he said.

NCAA will impose wrath on Tech athletics

SPORTS REPORTER

"And I will strike down upon thee with great vengeance and furious anger, those who attempt to poison and destroy my brothers. And you will know my name is the Lord, when I lay my vengeance upon thee."

That's not "Pulp Fiction" my friends. That's the NCAA. And come spring, the association's vengeance will be laid upon Tech.

Deny it all you want. Say Tech is complying with the rules. Counter with the argument that Tech has fired all the wrongdoers. Moan that every other school does it, too.

Just get it out of your system, because Tech will be struck upon with great vengeance, not to mention furious anger.

And there's nothing Tech can do

See, anger is the root of all of this. The NCAA is angry because Tech initially didn't comply with its requests. It took Tech too long to reply to their documents. An assistant coach lied to their faces about wrongdoing, so they say. Now it is out of Tech's

A letter claims 18 rules violations. In the same letter it claims a lack of institutional control. Doesn't that sound great? Almost like comparing Tech to a 10-year-old that continually wets his bed. No control.

There were our golden-throated Tech athletic leaders Monday, claiming the letter was no surprise, and that it was totally expected. Well, that's fine. Tech admitted wrongdoing, and now Tech expects consequences.

Do the Red Raider good ol' boys not realize what is going to happen? For those without a clue of what probation does to a program, ponder this.

Miami and Alabama won the 1991 and 1992 national championships in football and had two of the best teams looked to be insurmountable. Alabama has more national championships than any other school, and Miami is the nation's winningest program since 1983.

Both were given probation in 1995, and their number of scholarships allowed to be given out were drastically cut. Two short years later, look at them. From perennial contenders to .500 teams.

when the NCAA decides punishment from rival schools.

They will be warned not to come to Lubbock, unless they want to play for a team that won't be on television or in a bowl.

How many players will ignore that and come to Tech anyway? Not a lot of 18-year-old athletes don't care about being on the tube. And bowls are nice, too.

That's why it is hard to understand these people that are begging for this investigation to be over. Because once it is, all the work that was put in to build this program to respectability will be torn down. Enjoy this life while you can.

Administrators, if you take a bowl game away this year, you need to fear the possibility that it could be Tech's last one for a while.

The Lady Raiders also added a valuable pinch of speed 5-foot-6-inch freshman guard Katrisa O'Neal from Plainview.
