NATO strikes possible on Yugoslavia

Senior U.S. envoy fails to persuade Yugoslav President Milosevic to end crackdown in Kosovo

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (AP) — A senior U.S. envoy failed again Tuesday to persuade Yugoslav President Slobodan Milosevic to end the crackdown in Kosovo, a diplomatic source said, raising the prospects of NATO airstrikes.

Richard Holbrooke met Milosevic late Tuesday for a second day, warning that time is running out to resolve the seven-month crisis. Neither U.S. nor Yugoslav officials issued any detailed statement about the talks, but the source, who was familiar with the deliberations, said there was "no change" in Milosevic's stand.

"Kosovo is more important to him than Bosnia. The American people do not understand that because Bosnia was so much bloodier," said the source, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

The Bosnian war ended in 1995 when Milosevic accepted a peace agreement Holbrooke negotiated. Holbrooke was dispatched to the Yugoslav capital of Belgrade in what appeared to be a last-chance diplomatic effort to resolve the Kosovo crisis.

The source said Holbrooke was expected to meet Milosevic again Wednesday.

The United States has threatened military action unless Milosevic calls off his bloody crackdown on ethnic Albanian rebels seeking independence from Serbia, the main republic of Yugoslavia.

Holbrooke met the Yugoslav president after a visit to Kosovo. Following a meeting with ethnic Albanian leaders, the U.S. envoy said that Serbian security forces still maintain a strong presence, despite U.N. demands for them to withdraw from areas of conflict and allow political settlement.

"U.S. diplomatic observers are doing a terrific job bringing us information, and the information they're bringing is not good," Holbrooke told reporters in the Kosovo capital, Pristina.

Milosevic's crackdown against the secessionists has killed hundreds, left tens of thousands of ethnic Albanians homeless and led to growing resolve among NATO allies to stop the bloodshed by striking Yugoslav army targets if necessary.

Hours after Holbrooke returned to Belgrade, reporters saw about 100 Yugoslav security vehicles of all sorts — from armored personnel carriers to trucks loaded with troops — moving outside Kosovo in an apparent show of Milosevic's compliance with international demands.

Additionally, state-run Serbian TV claimed that all Serbian special police units, on the forefront of strikes against Kosovo Albanian militants, were pulled out of the province. Their pullback was one of the key international demands.

Ethnic Albanians constitute 90 percent of the 2 million people in Kosovo. Most ethnic Albanians favor self-rule.

In Washington, President Clinton warned that unchecked, Serb violence in the province could lead to instability throughout the region.

"The stakes are high," Clinton said. "The time is now to end the violence in Kosovo."

Defense Secretary William Cohen told Congress a pullback of troops in Kosovo by Milosevic was not enough to ward off NATO attacks. Airstrikes might be followed by some "international presence" on the ground, he said.

If more Serb forces don't pull out of the province, NATO intervention "will become inevitable," French President Jacques Chirac said.

However, Yugoslav deputy Information Secretary Miodrag Popovic told Associated Press Television News that the complete withdrawal of Yugoslav troops from Kosovo is out of question.

"Is there a country in the world that would do so, especially with an armed rebellion in their hands?" Popovic asked.

Milosevic told Holbrooke in talks Monday night that his government is willing to seek a "political solution" to the crisis. But he also called the NATO threats against his country "a criminal act."

NATO officials say they are ready to launch airstrikes. No decision is expected until Thursday, when NATO ambassadors meet in Brussels, Belgium.

Albania on Tuesday offered its airports and sea ports to NATO for use in any military operation against neighboring Yugoslavia.

Tech awaits Clinton, Congress to approve $4.4 million in aid

By Jonathan Biles
Staff Writer

Pending the signing of the recent appropriation bills by President Clinton and approval from Congress, Texas Tech has the opportunity to receive $4.4 million in federal aid, said David Schmidly, vice president for research and graduate studies.

In the past week, Congress reviewed three appropriation bills to give Tech federal aid in three different areas.

Two of the appropriation bills have passed through Congress and will become law once Clinton signs them, but the third bill still is on the floor awaiting approval of the House and Senate, said Keith Williams, press secretary for congressman Larry Combest, R-Texas.

"We could certainly use all the funding we can get."

Phillip Johnson
Tech professor

The first appropriation bill passed was in the Department of Defense and would allow Tech's Institute of Environmental and Human Health a grant for $3 million. This bill has passed Congress but is waiting on Clinton's signature. Williams said it is believed Clinton will sign the bill.

The second appropriation bill emerged from the Commerce State Justice Department to allow $1.2 million for Tech's Department of Wind Engineering. This appropriation bill has not passed Congress yet, but is expected to soon, Williams said.

The agricultural appropriation bill is the last to be approved. The funding from the bill will go toward cotton research at Tech, but expectations for Clinton to sign is not high, Williams said.

If the bill is signed, Tech will receive $200,000.

The money will be a great help toward cotton research, and is money needed, said Phillip Johnson, assistant professor in the Department of Agricultural and Applied Economics.

"We could certainly use all the funding we can get," Johnson said. "In order to continue, we need money to fund our efforts."

Even though the bills have been passed by Congress, Schmidly said if the president chooses to, he can veto all three.

Skating Haven

Skaters, bikers seek refuge at local church

By Sebastian Kitchen
Staff Writer

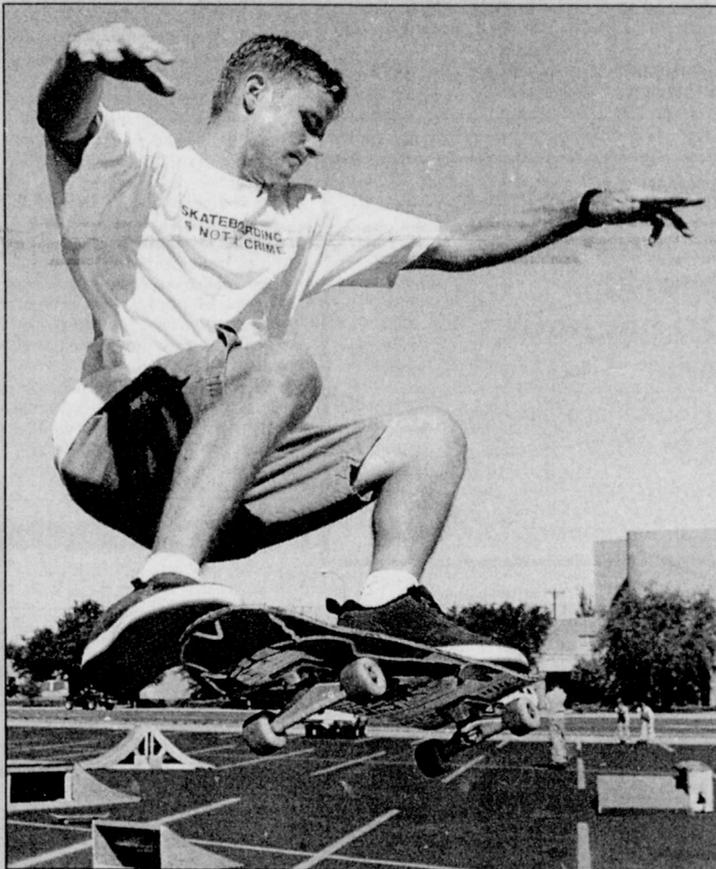

Although punishable in restricted areas on the Texas Tech campus, skaters are welcomed by a local church—no misdemeanors, no police. Just love and acceptance. Totally free.

"One half is giving them a place to ride and the other is, more importantly, accepting the kids for what they do and who they are," said John Barnard, founder of the Cheap Skate Park at 34th and Quaker Avenue at Highland Baptist Church's activity center. Cheap Skate will be open from 11 a.m. to 7 p.m. every Saturday.

When Barnard, a senior English major from Houston, moved to Lubbock several years ago, he noticed Lubbock did not really have good places for skateboarders, in-line skaters and bikers. He had been involved in the sport for 14 years and wanted to find a way to bring a better environment for skating to take place in Lubbock.

Barnard was involved in Highland Baptist Church and tried to find a way to use skating as a way to minister to others. After convincing people in the congregation to follow his idea, Barnard and three others took the money given to them by the church, bought materials and started building ramps.

A month later, with plywood, two by fours and Masonite, nine portable structures were completed for Lubbock skaters to enjoy — at no charge.

"Everywhere else they go, they won't be accepted for what they do because they're not allowed to," Barnard said.

Saturday, Cheap Skate opened for anyone who was interested in skateboarding, in-line skating, biking, video games, playing pool or just to have a place to hang out. People can come and play pool and arcade games by the park. A snack bar is even open for people to enjoy.

"It is open to the community in general and not just skaters," said former Tech student Jeremiah Wassom, who helped Barnard with ideas and building of the structures. "We want to make this open to everybody. We want to

Lubbockites approve of city services

Ratings up 2 percent from 1997 standings, survey says

By Apu Naik
Staff Writer

Seventy-two percent of Lubbock citizens who answered a recent survey rated the overall quality of life in Lubbock as either good or excellent, marking a 2 percent increase over last year's approval rating.

The Citizen's Survey, conducted by Southwest Research Associates on behalf of the city of Lubbock, surveyed 904 citizens by phone and allowed them to offer their opinions on a wide variety of city services as well as answer general questions about life in Lubbock.

With a sampling of 904 citizens, the survey results have an accuracy level of plus or minus 3.6 percent and a confidence level of 95 percent.

General questions asked citizens to rate specific city services as excellent, good, fair, poor or no answer.

Sixty-nine percent of the citizens surveyed rated the city government's services as good or excellent.

"The goal of the survey was to tell us what areas we need improvement in as well as what we're already doing well," said Corporate Communications Manager Tony Privett. "We're happy about the climb in approval ratings, but at the same time, we realize that there are plenty of things we need to do in order to direct this city in the direction (toward a positive future)."

More detailed questions included inquiries such as: How safe do you feel in your neighborhood after dark? How do you rate the cleanliness of the streets in your neighborhood?

"Obviously we are pleased with the overall positive message from Lubbock taxpayers in the survey, but we are now trying to focus on the areas where we see improvement is needed," said City Manager Bob Cass.

If you had an extra $100 to spend on any one city service, what would it be?

1. Police protection — 20%
2. Better streets — 10%
3. Juvenile crime — 6.2%

Jumbo-sized details surround Diamond Vision

Big 12 video regulations limit number of in-stadium replays available to fans

By Jason Bernstein
Assistant Sports Editor

Many changes were made around the Texas Tech athletic department over the summer, but perhaps none were as intriguing as the addition of the Diamond Vision Mark III outdoor video display board at Jones Stadium.

One reason for the addition of the large screen is fans often miss those close and controversial plays when attending football games at Jones Stadium.

Another reason for the screen is to keep the fans involved for four quarters.

"We wanted to keep the fans involved in the game," said Tech's Manager of Video Operations David Houglund. "Over a period of time in the past, fans have lost interest by the fourth quarter."

The catch for Houglund, however, is that the Big 12 Conference has a number of in-stadium video regulations that effectively limit the number of replays available to fans at Jones Stadium.

"The controversial play is really a gray area," Houglund said. "Any play that has a flag thrown on it is deemed controversial. We've never shown a pass interference play, for example, because from an official's standpoint, we aren't out there to judge the officiating crew."

The Big 12 rules state anytime a flag is thrown, the play is deemed controversial. Furthermore, special attention is given to questionable calls pertaining to a catch or incompleteness as well as a fumble or non-fumble. The rules also cite in-bounds and out-of-bounds plays as well as end zone plays.

According to Big 12 Conference Regulations, "the purpose of the controversial plays replay rule is to avoid any situations that could incite the crowd against officials or opponents."

With that said, other schools in the Big 12 Conference that have video screens may not be abiding by Conference regulations, Houglund said.

"Texas does not follow the rules," Houglund said. "That's where the controversy comes into play because we are a self-policing body. As a member of the Big 12 Big Screen Committee, we look into these types of situations."

Ironically enough, there are no members on the committee from the University of Texas or Texas A&M as both schools sport big screens.

"We certainly don't want to bring the referee's judgement into consideration," said Texas A&M Assistant Athletic Director Dave South. "Our purpose isn't to show bad calls, but to show big plays, touchdowns, field goals and various running plays. When there is a controversial call, we are allowed to show it once, and not in slow motion."

Big 12 rules state any controversial play can only be shown one time at full speed.

The very nature of the play being controversial, however, has left Houglund and the rest of the video operations team with a dilemma.

"If you go by the philosophy of showing every controversial play, you tend to create the situation where the spectator begins to make judgement calls and second-guesses the officials," Houglund said. "The fans

Debate team wins multiple awards

By Melody Ragland
Staff Writer

The Texas Tech Forensic Union has been busy the past few weeks. The weekend of Sept. 25 through 27, two students traveled to the University of Alaska at Anchorage and two students traveled to the University of Houston for debate tournaments.

Paul dePadua and Will Edwards represented the team at the first Great Alaska Speakout Parliamentary Debate Tournament.

Tech was one of the top 10 debate programs at the tournament, said David Williams, associate professor of communications studies.

"It was an honor for us to send a team," Williams said.

He said the organizers of the tournament invited only one team from the top 10 debate programs in the nation. The top 10 programs are based on rankings from last year's National Parliamentary Debate Association.

The debate team's coaching staff chose dePadua and Edwards to represent the team, Williams said.

The tournament focused on current issues important to the state of Alaska.

Williams said debates are based on knowledge, and in order for the students to do well, they have to understand the topic.

At the tournament, dePadua was voted top speaker, and Edwards placed fourth.

"It was a nice tournament, very elite," said Edwards, a senior communications studies major from El Paso.

The same weekend, Autumn Edwards and Kyle Myers competed in the Bayou Bucket Swing at the University of Houston. The two came back with 11 awards, that's impressive," Williams said.

The two won awards in communication analysis, extemporaneous speaking and impromptu speaking. Autumn Edwards won the second place top speaker award at the tournament. She said her and Myers were the smallest group out of 15 teams.

"We have a really great squad this year," said Autumn Edwards, a senior general studies major from Levelland.

The Forensic Team is having a tournament here on campus Oct. 9 through 11.

“It was an honor for us to send a team.”

Trio of Democrats vote for impeachment inquiry

WASHINGTON (AP) — Several conservative House Democrats from Texas indicated Tuesday that they will vote for a presidential impeachment inquiry, breaking ranks with a Democratic rank-and-file that views the Republican-drafted resolution as a license to launch an unending fishing expedition.

As party leaders worked to minimize defections in advance of the vote expected Thursday, a trio of Texas Democrats said they would vote for an impeachment inquiry that Republicans insist must be without time or subject limits. "We have to realize who's in the majority and who's running the show," said Rep. Charles Stenholm of Stamford, who is locked in a tight re-election battle. "Republicans are running the show."

At least two other conservative Democrats from Texas — Ralph Hall of Rockwall and Jim Turner of Crockett — also will support the impeachment inquiry.

"It is in the best interests of the nation that we move forward with fairness and diligence," said Turner.

Hall, who has said he would be "pleased" if President Clinton were to resign, contends the investigation is necessary to ensure the country's peace of mind.

"If we don't have a full hearing on it, I don't think it will ever come to closure," he said in a recent interview. "It's going to be like the Kennedy assassination or the sinking of the Titanic. Everybody's got a different version of that."

Unlike Monday's House Judiciary Committee vote, which split along party lines, Republicans predict they'll get significant Democratic backing when the House vote occurs. Clinton, whose behavior has been unanimously denounced in Texas' 30-member House delegation, has gained no support among the state's 13 Republicans.

Rep. Gene Green, D-Houston, said he would be "disappointed" by any Democratic defections.

"I hope they're looking at the big picture, too, and not just their own districts," Green said, attributing likely defections to the elections just four weeks from now.

Senate sends farm aid plan to White House

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate Republicans sent their $4.1 billion farm aid package to President Clinton on Tuesday despite his admonition "not to leave town" before adding more money.

Clinton and the Democrats have pushed a $7.3 billion plan that would rely mostly on giving farmers an extra $5 billion through a program that subsidizes growers when commodity prices fall below set levels.

The 55-43 Senate vote for the smaller package sets the stage for Clinton's certain presidential veto.

It also means the $60 billion overall agriculture spending bill, to which the relief package is attached, is on hold until lawmakers reach an agreement, which must come soon. GOP leaders have said they hope to complete all of their spending work by this weekend, when Congress is scheduled to adjourn.

"Today the Senate had one last chance to improve this bill," said Tom Amontree, spokesman for Agriculture Secretary Dan Glickman. "We're disappointed they didn't do it."

Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss., said if the president goes ahead and vetoes the bill, Republicans plan to try to attach it to an omnibus spending bill with other appropriations measures.

"The president is willing to put at risk those programs that are funded in this bill to accommodate the interests of a few," Sen. Thad Cochran, R-Miss., said during debate Tuesday.

"To veto the bill creates more delay, more uncertainty," said Cochran, chairman of the agriculture appropriations subcommittee.

"Farmers need help now."

Other Republicans reiterated their fierce opposition to additional money with Sen. Paul Coverdell, R-Ga., urging Clinton to "withdraw his foolish veto threat" and Sen. Pat Roberts, R-Kan., declaring that failure to sign would be "an insult to America's farmers and ranchers."

The House passed the agriculture bill Friday by an overwhelming 333-53.

But the Senate's vote isn't enough to override a veto, a fact that gave Democrats hope for a compromise.

"The number of votes gives us the leverage," said Sen. Byron Dorgan, D-N.D.

"I don't think they're going to want to go home with nothing," said Sen. Tom Harkin, D-Iowa.

U.S. missions to close in Saudi Arabia

RIYADH, Saudi Arabia (AP) — The U.S. missions in Saudi Arabia will close today to review security because of information the embassy in Riyadh could be the target of a terrorist attack.

The embassy in Riyadh and the consulates in Jiddah and Dhahran would close until Saturday to "review present security measures and to implement physical security enhancements," the U.S. Embassy said in a statement Tuesday.

The missions are normally closed Thursday and Friday, in line with local custom.

The statement said the U.S. government had "received information indicating a terrorist attack may be planned on the American Embassy in Riyadh." It did not elaborate.

The embassy statement noted that a number of U.S. embassies and consulates "have received threats of possible terrorist activity" since the Aug. 7 bombings of U.S. embassies in Nairobi, Kenya, and Dar es Saalam, Tanzania, in which 259 people were killed and more than 5,000 injured.

The U.S. missions in Saudi Arabia closed for a day in August after retaliatory U.S. missile strikes on Afghanistan and Sudan.

Survey shows resident concerns

"In city planning, we can use surveys like this to get input from the community for planning and budgeting purposes."

The series of questions administered with the survey helped to reveal areas of Lubbock which citizens see room for improvement, which Cass said is always vital to a successful community.

Among the questions about city improvements, the survey asked citizens: If you had an extra $100 to spend on any city service, what would it be?

In response to the question, 20 percent of those surveyed said the area of most concern to them was that of police protection. But although police protection is the largest concern for citizens, violent crime in Lubbock has actually decreased by nearly 40 percent during the last 10 years, Privett said.

Second on the list of issues concerning residents of Lubbock was the status of the city's streets. According to the survey, 10 percent of those surveyed felt the overall cleanliness and maintenance of Lubbock's streets would be the area they would spend money on. And third on the list of changes Lubbock citizens felt should be addressed was the area of juvenile crime. Survey results showed 6.2 percent would spend an extra $100 to remedy crimes committed by Lubbock's youth.

"About 30 percent of the people surveyed admitted that they had already contacted the city this year either to complain or commend," Privett said.

"So all things considered, we have to be happy with the way the citizens feel, but we also have to realize these areas they are complaining about need to be improved."

One of the most disappointing facts learned from the survey was the outlook its citizens have on the future of the city.

Although 72 percent of those surveyed confirmed the overall quality of life in Lubbock right now is good or excellent, the citizen's outlook on the quality of life for the future dropped from a 41.8 percent approval in 1997 to a 26.4 percent approval in 1998, showing a 15.4 percent drop in one year.

"The outlook for the future of Lubbock was definitely disappointing to see, but it also has to be considered that the survey was conducted between June 17 and July 14," Privett said.

"The outlook at that time was very dim because of the Texas Instruments plant shut-down, the drought hurting the agricultural economy and also the shut down of the Reese Air Force Base."

But when asked what part of their government they would most want to reduce, nearly 74 percent of Lubbock citizens surveyed said they would not want any particular service to be eliminated.

This is only the second year the city has conducted a citizens' survey. This year, however, the city included questions suggested by the International City Managers Association, whose results will be reported to ICMA and will be published later, along with results from other international cities.

When this report is completed, Lubbock will be able to see how it compares to cities worldwide.

Immigrants affecting Congress, study says

WASHINGTON (AP) — The influx of immigrants is significantly affecting which states will come out ahead in the redistribution of House seats, according to a study released Tuesday.

The Center for Immigration Studies, a think tank that favors lower immigration, said the concentration of new immigrants in just a few states resulted in six states losing House seats after the 1990 census. It predicted that seven more would lose seats after the 2000 census.

That is a "distortion of the political system in which seats are taken away from citizens and reallocated in effect to noncitizens," said Mark Krikorian, the center's executive director.

The 435 House seats are redistributed every 10 years based on changes in the population. The Census Bureau counts all residents, including noncitizens and illegal aliens, in determining the population.

Immigration groups warned against any disenfranchisement of noncitizens.

"Legal immigrants are future Americans so they should be counted," said Joel Najjar of the National Council of La Raza, an Hispanic advocacy group.

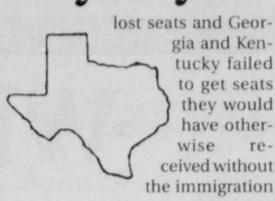

"The founding fathers decided on apportionment by population, not by votes," said Jeanne Butterfield of the American Immigration Lawyers Association. "Counting immigrants who live here, pay taxes and serve in the military ... is consistent with that principle."

The study said 800,000 to 900,000 legal immigrants arrive in the country every year, and the Immigration and Naturalization Service estimates that 420,000 illegal aliens enter the country annually.

Three out of four settle in six states: California, New York, Texas, Florida, New Jersey and Illinois.

As a result, California will get nine seats after 1990 and 2000 that it wouldn't have been allotted if there had been no immigration, the study concluded. New York picks up two, and Texas and Florida one each.

On the other side, after 1990 Louisiana, Michigan, Montana and Ohio lost seats and Georgia and Kentucky failed to get seats they would have otherwise received without the immigration factor.

In 2000, the study predicted, Michigan, Mississippi, Ohio, Pennsylvania and Wisconsin will lose one seat and Colorado and Kentucky will be deprived of a new seat because of immigration. Of the 13 affected seats, perhaps four are attributable to the presence of illegal aliens, it said.

"The stakes are high for low immigration states," said Steven Camarota, one of the report's authors. "This can be seen as distorting our democracy."

One result of the trend, he said, was that representatives from immigration-heavy districts were elected with far fewer votes. The report noted that in 1996 more than 200,000 votes were cast in typical congressional races in Michigan, which has few immigrants, while 55,000 votes were cast in the immigrant-heavy 33rd district of California and only 51,000 in the 25th district of Texas.

The concentration of immigrants, who usually vote Democratic, will lead to more safe Democratic seats, said James Gimpel, a University of Maryland associate professor who is an expert on immigration issues and spoke at the center's news conference.

"You are likely to see more partisan polarization on the immigration issue," he said.

That will be true "if Republicans continue to keep bashing immigrants," said Yolanda Chavez, chief of staff for Rep. Lucille Roybal-Allard, Democrat from California's 33rd district.

She said in the last election, her district had the biggest voter increase of any in the state and that new voters are turning out at higher rates than other citizens. The report did not make any recommendations on how to ease the effects of immigration on the political process.

River residents review options for taming tubers

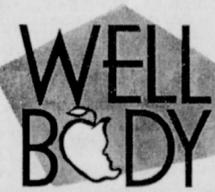

AUSTIN (AP) — Now that residents along the Guadalupe River have survived another summer of tubers and trash, they're trying to figure out how to tame the next tourist season.

New Braunfels area civic leaders like $50 million or more in sales tax revenues that 500,000 tubers and visitors left in their wake, but they dislike the floating beer cans, trash and occasional nudity and other offenses.

"I am adamant that we're going to clean this up," Comal County Judge Carter Casteel told the Austin American-Statesman. "We're not going to tolerate that kind of foolishness."

Along with other civic leaders, Casteel spent several weeks this summer meeting with homeowners concerned about the tubers' behavior. He said as few as 20 and as many as 100 attended the five meetings.

Many ideas designed to end river rowdiness emerged. They include banning aluminum from the waters and a complete prohibition on alcohol. Outlawing dogs from riding on tubes and rafts as well as increasing all fines and improving enforcement were also discussed.

Man faces real killer of daughter

SANTA ANA, Calif. (AP) — Kevin Green was 22 when he was sent to prison on the testimony of his wife, who swore he was the one who beat her nearly to death in an attack that caused her to lose her memory and her baby.

Now 40 and having spent 16 years in prison, Green sat in the back of a courtroom this week, a free man, as a former Marine went on trial for the same crime and five other murders blamed on the "Bedroom Basher," a serial killer who terrorized Orange County during the late 1970s.

"It's not easy," Green said during a break in the trial. "What he did to my wife, what he did to my daughter — I can't be that angry about what he did to me."

Green was released from prison in 1996 after DNA analysis not in use at the time of his trial showed he was not his wife's assailant.

Seated in the courtroom on Monday, Green listened as prosecutors outlined their case against Gerald Parker, whose crime robbed Green of nearly half his life.

Green paid special attention to count No. 4, the death of little Chantal Marie Green.

One night in 1979, Green was home with his wife, Dianne, who was asleep and two weeks overdue with their child. He said that an hour or so after midnight, he went out to get a snack. When he got back, he said, his wife lay in her own blood, her skull fractured.

She went into a coma but recovered, although she lost some of her memory.

Chantal was stillborn from the lack of oxygen.

Orange County police told Green the attack may have been the work of the "Bedroom Basher."

But they charged Green instead when his wife identified him as her attacker.

She claimed he beat her with his keys because she refused to have sex with him.

Green denied it, and at his trial, a worker at a fast-food restaurant testified Green was there at the time of the attack.

Neighbors said Green was not home and his car was gone about the same time. And his lawyers said Mrs. Green's memories could not be trusted.

However, there was also evidence that Green drank to excess, used drugs, dated other women and beat his wife. He was convicted and sentenced to 15 years to life.

Then, in 1996, DNA samples taken from Parker, a convicted rapist, were matched with traces from five unsolved crimes and the one "solved" one.

Parker, a Marine staff sergeant at the time, admitted he stalked his victims, waited until they were alone, broke into their homes and bashed their heads with a bat, board or mallet, prosecutor Michael Jacobs said.

Victims were raped while unconscious, and at least one may have been raped while dead.

The defense has acknowledged that Parker committed the crimes, and is asking the jury to find him guilty of a lesser offense, such as second-degree murder, claiming he was not sober at the time of the slayings.

Parker could get the death penalty if convicted of first-degree murder.

"We want you to look at his state of mind. Was he rational?" defense attorney James Enright said in opening statements.

Outside the courtroom, Green said he does not blame his now ex-wife for what happened to him, even though upon his release she insisted again he was her assailant.

"There were a lot of people after that who helped her regain her memory in a way that fit their needs," he said.

Green also did not blame the officers who helped convict him. Many of them apologized and worked for his release when the truth came to light.

As for his life lately, Green has wandered from job to job, from Salt Lake City to Jefferson City, Mo., carrying with him news clippings of his story because of the difficulty ex-cons have getting hired.

Sometimes he lectures at law classes and conventions, urging aspiring police officers and prosecutors to worry more about the facts than keeping score of convictions.

He also thinks it's about time California offered some compensation for its mistake.

On his release, authorities sent him off with about $200 in spending money, he said, part of it donated by deputies from their own pockets.

As for Parker, he said: "The guy is going to get a whole lot better defense than I did."

When is college routine?

It's just me or does it seem like there is just not enough time? It's gotten to the point where there is not any time for me to get around to my homework, and it's not because I go out drinking all the time.

Between work and school and extracurricular activities, how is one expected to have time to do what is needed for academic success?

The only way to get through it seems to be to totally isolate yourself and have no social life whatsoever.

Maybe it's just me, and everyone else is having a fine time this semester, but you can not tell me it feels like there is always something to do.

I truly commend those people who not only go to school and work but also have to take care of their families.

My problems however do not seem to stop there.

This semester is proving even more frustrating especially because I have realized there no longer is any inspiration here.

For the first three years I attended this university, I always found something or someone that inspired me, that made me feel like everything is worth it and the only place to really learn was at a higher institution of education.

Lately, though, that just does not seem to be the case. College is good for many areas of study that need to be taught in such a way (i.e.: engineering, computer science, business, medicine and science, law, etc); some areas though do not seem to need that. I guess those areas that would be considered liberal arts. I guess that explains why liberal arts majors would end up with a career as door-to-door squeezable pudding salesmen.

Now I am not saying that college is bad because it is not, but there apparently comes a time when it loses its allure, when you feel like you have gotten as far as you possibly can go, or at least as far as that university will take you.

I can only speak from my experience here at Tech, and it feels like there is nothing more they can offer. I have not been to other institutions, I am sure there are different and better ones, and they have different things to offer intellectually and spiritually.

Maybe all this is misguided because I am frustrated with the fact I have no time to do certain things for the betterment of myself.

It seems all I do is go from school to work and sometimes to bed. It also may have to do with the fact that a couple of my classes are not that interesting, not by choice mind you, but by requirement I had to take these.

Hopefully, next semester I will be able to handpick a better bunch of classes when all I have left are classes in my major.

But I am just wondering if anyone has ever reached that point in college, where things do not appear as golden-covered as you once thought them to be.

Where college once used to make you want to change the world, end racism, do away with taxes, stop poaching, poverty, crime, etc. and instead all you find out is you barely have time to take your car in for an inspection.

Maybe it's just me, and please do not get sad because of my observations, I just want to know if this has happened to anyone else, anyone else who values education, knowledge and wisdom as much as I do and realizes how important they are.

Have you gotten to a point where college no longer teaches or inspires but becomes rote, where college feels like it teaches out of a book and not out of experience, where college no longer teaches you about life, when before you felt like you were on your way to some answers?

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Columnist's remarks off the race, Clinton mark

To the editor: This is in response to a column written by Ms. ShaRhonda Knott.

Why is it, that a lot of minorities in this country think that America owes them something? America owes them nothing.

This country was founded upon a thing called the "Puritan work ethic."

This ethic is: Everyone — who is bodied — should "earn" their share of life's happiness. If one does not work, then one does not share in life's happiness.

Ms. Knott, your comments about the Tech law school dean, I believe, are close to being obligatory racial remarks.

The dean's remarks about the minority enrollment being up 6.5 percent at the law school is a good thing.

I am an African-American that happens to believe in the positive side when it comes to civil rights' issues.

I do not believe in quotes or further affirmative action initiatives.

I know some brothers/sisters in the Tech/Lubbock communities will say "He must be an Uncle Tom."

This is not true.

I was born and raised in the so-called "ghetto" (Eastside) of Lubbock.

I know what it is like to watch other children receive lots and lots of special attention one knows one will never receive.

This is my point, minorities will never get ahead in life's battles if we continue to degrade others and ourselves by calling each other names or by complaining about what we do not have.

We (all mankind) must continue to build upon our "American" heritage so that many (of all races) have given up their very lives for.

On another issue, President Clinton's sex scandal. I believe this scandal is not about "sex." It is about honor and integrity being maintained in the highest office in the land.

I know just as others know, we are all human and have our frailties. In this case, we are talking about a president, the president of the United States.

This office is the highest office.

The person that holds this office is the chief representative of the American people and the commander in chief.

This individual is similar to a "cheerleader." One who lifts the morale of a country in good times and bad times. The current occupant of the Oval Office, I believe, "desecrated" the presidency.

A presidency that has been graced with the likes of Jimmy Carter, Ronald Reagan and George Bush.

These men retained great dignity and moral conduct, while they were in office and continue to display statesmanship.

In 1974, President Nixon had 21 articles of impeachment against him and he resigned.

I am not suggesting that President Clinton resign, but it is still a variable option for him at the moment.

Lots of folks say, "The president's sex life is not the American public's business." I agree, it is not! But when a sitting president has a history of dalliances with women other than his wife, one has to wonder where are this person's morals and what does he base them on?

I have invoked my "freedom of speech" rights, but as I conclude, I reminisce back 24 years; 1974, President Nixon was quoted, as he left the White House, (my paraphrase) "... when one knows that others hate you, and one hates them back, that is when one destroys oneself." Good advice for a sinking presidency.

Bookstore manager responds to column

To the editor: We at Varsity Book Store would like to respond to Hollye Hodges' editorial "Tech students captive buyers for bookstores" (Sept. 15). I am sure students must feel like they are a captive audience for bookstores, but that does not mean you are an unappreciated audience.

We spend a considerable amount of time trying to decide how to make the book-buying experience easier for Texas Tech students. In the past few years, we have added a website and call-in number so students can order their books and have them ready when they come to Varsity Book Store. We offer students the chance to leave us their schedules and let us do the work of pulling books for them. We spend months getting ready for the fall and do our best to take care of all the students during a tight time frame. We offer pizza, live music and the Vic and Val-U Pak to lighten things up for customers. We know buying books is not the most fun thing you will do each semester, but we try to make it as easy as we can. Hodges points out she has known students who have had the wrong book shelved. If we made the mistake, I apologize. I would like to remind students our lists of requested books come from professors. These professors are also the ones who decide when it is time for a new edition of a book to be used. We would love to be able to buy back every used book, but if that book is not requested for the subsequent semester, it would be of no use to us either. Tech students have been the mainstay of our business for more than 60 years, and we hope that never changes. We appreciate your business, loyalty and understanding when things go awry during this hectic time of year.

Problems should be put in perspective

Ginger Pope
Columnist

If there was a Victims Anonymous group, there probably would be a waiting list for people to join.

Most of the population seems to be a victim of one thing or another from today's society, and rather than try to make the best of their situation, many choose to wear a victim's badge of service.

These are the type of people who cannot have a five-minute conversation without mentioning the plight they are in, or the person or issue that wronged them in the past.

Would not it be amazing if there was a way one could set every issue and problem right?

But there is not.

Whoever it was that felt the burden of making every wrong issue or person right, probably in exasperation coined the phrase "get over it."

It always amazes me that in the same day I could run into a person who is functioning in this world with no eyesight, without complaining and then meet someone who still brings up issues from past wars or cultural differences they did not even have a part of.

Just think of all the time people are wasting retelling their tale of tears.

What would seem to be a better testimony is a person whose life shows what they have overcome and how they made the best of their circumstances.

Sure there are those who are an immediate victim of a crime or wrongdoing, but how long can this title last?

At one point in time, a person has to get up and move on.

Today's society is chock-full of programs and support groups to reaffirm people that they have been wronged in one way or another.

If people would lose their crutch or hold on the issue that is causing them to suffer, it seems there would be a smaller build up of cultural and social biases.

This is not to say some issues do not need to be addressed or that criminals should go free.

Individuals who let their unfortunate circumstances consume their personality or life are locking themselves in their own personal prison. Locked into a victim's world of misery.

Just the other night I heard Stoney Garland, former Tech football defensive tackle injured in an automobile accident, talking about how even through his paralysis he still finds courage to try and live a full life. People like him help put things in perspective.

Students studying abroad learn, share experiences

Brian White/The University Daily

By Laura Hensley
Staff Writer

Ashli McDonald does not mind standing in long cramped lines anymore or talking to someone an uncomfortable four inches away from their face.

She likes her coffee so strong to where the spoon can stand straight up, and she never judges her friends by the way they dress or the very liberal things they do.

After spending six months in the Netherlands, this senior international business major from Tyler ran across many shocking cultural differences between the American and Dutch.

"Liberal doesn't quite cover it," McDonald said.

"I had an open mind before I went, but now I have a clearer picture of life. They have such a different perception of physical space and time. That's just the way it's done."

She said her experience, like many other students who chose to study in a foreign country, helped her open her mind and become a stronger person.

McDonald, along with many other Texas Tech returnees from abroad, gathered Tuesday at the International Cultural Center to share experiences about studying abroad with other interested Tech students.

"I had no idea where I wanted to go, I just knew I wanted to go," McDonald said.

"The Cultural Center was very helpful for me to get things sorted out."

The center helps students find the perfect study abroad program.

The center also helps find financial aid and scholarships for students who are planning to study in foreign countries.

"I've talked a long time about the opportunities for Tech students to study abroad," said Tech President Donald Haragan, who spoke to the students at the reception.

"This is what education is all about. There is no substitution for someone who immerses them self in another culture. In doing so, you learn so much from other people."

Bryn Hafemeister, a senior marketing major from Plano, immersed herself in the Mexican culture for a year and said words cannot describe the experiences she had.

"It's one of the best things I've ever done," Hafemeister said.

"I made so many friends and saw so much. It was so awesome being there. I totally suggest it."

Hafemeister said after her trip, she feels like a changed person and thinks everyone should try it.

"My outlook on life is totally different," she said.

"I think I matured a lot down there."

For information about the study abroad program, call 742-1954.

Free skate park open to Hub City

bring people in and show them we're not just the ones who keep getting kicked out of places and that everyone complains about. We want them to have fun, too.

"It's definitely a place everybody needs," Wassom said. "Lubbock hasn't offered a free skate park since the 80s and I don't know if that was free. There are so many skaters and bikers out there who have no place to go. It's not a big place at all. It's a tiny project. It shows how much Lubbock needs a place like this."

Like many local skaters, Wassom had been kicked out of many places, with the Tech campus being the most obvious and most frequent.

"I had been kicked out more than a few times," Wassom said.

"Most of them (police) were real nice and I cooperated with them, but they were doing their job in keeping us off campus. It just didn't workout."

The portable ramps at the park allow an assortment of entertainment for the skaters from week to week.

"What else is great about our setup being portable is we can set up a different course every Saturday so it does not get boring," Barnard said.

"It is a skater supported facility, we don't ask them to pay but for new building projects and upkeep, they can donate," Barnard said.

"It is a free skate park and everybody is welcome, but we have a message," Wassom said.

To help out with Cheap Skate, call Barnard at 784-0351.

Washington scandal inspiring Halloween

BOSTON (AP) — This year's most popular Halloween costume may call for a blue dress, a beret and, yes, a cigar.

"We thought 'Titanic' costumes would be the big rentals, but it looks like Bill and Monica are winning the race," said Stephen LaLiberte, rental manager at Boston Costume.

As the impeachment process moves forward in Washington, stores around the country are fielding requests for costumes of President Clinton, Monica Lewinsky and Linda Tripp. And that's not all.

"Volvo-driving-type liberals are looking for Kenneth Starr costumes," said Mary Papayotou, owner of Chicago Costumes. "They want to support the president."

The story didn't break early enough for manufacturers to put together rubber masks or costume ensembles in time for Halloween.

"People even want the tie," said Marilyn Wick, owner of the Fort Lauderdale, Fla.-based chain Costume World, referring to one of the gifts the former White House intern gave the president.

Tech soccer squad looks to rebound

By Brent Dirks
Sports Editor

Despite a Big 12-opening loss last week against Missouri, Texas Tech soccer coach Felix Oskam said the Red Raiders are not in a huge hole yet.

The Red Raiders (3-3-1 overall, 0-1 Big 12) had a 3-2 lead after the 76th minute, but the defense allowed three Tiger goals in a three-minute span that led to the Missouri victory.

"You could just see it coming," Oskam said. "You could see the momentum shift. We didn't play very well defensively. We gave too many goals. It was very disappointing. It was like all of the sudden we couldn't play soccer any more."

And Oskam said the Red Raiders need to play better mentally so games like Missouri can be won.

"We talked about it with our kids," he said. "It's all the mental aspect. How to protect, especially going into the last 15 minutes, because we have had some problems with it this season."

Red Raider defender Jamie Woods said communication was a problem in the loss.

"I think we just panicked and broke down," she said.

"Communication broke down, mentally we weren't in it. Mentally we weren't where we needed to be to win the game."

After the loss, Oskam said he is planning to start sophomore goalkeeper Kellie McCallister in Tech's next game Friday against Texas.

Freshman Brittney Peese had been the starting goalkeeper but Oskam said it is time to give McCallister, who has come back from an arm injury before the season, a start. McCallister was the starting goalie for the Red Raiders during the majority of last season.

"The luxury that I have with those two kids is that I've got quality goalkeepers," he said. "And I told both of them that. Maybe it comes to a point where I have to look at what game we play or which team we play. Kellie might play one and Brittney may another one. But right now Kellie will get a chance to start Friday."

The Red Raiders had a chance to redeem themselves with a scheduled game against Kansas Sunday in Lawrence, Kan., but the game was canceled due to thunderstorms in the area. The teams are currently looking at possibly next Wednesday to make up the game in either Oklahoma City or Stillwater, Okla.

But because Kansas was the home team for the game, the Jayhawks will have the final say on when the game is played.

Still Oskam said he was unsure on whether the delay was good or bad for the Red Raiders after the loss.

"When we first played SMU, and then we lost, and then didn't play for a week and a half. We then went to Maryland, and played very well. Maybe that's an omen. We've been in that situation before. The only difference now it's a conference weekend and those games count."

Tech still unranked

LUBBOCK (AP) — The Texas Tech Red Raiders unfolded their newspapers Monday morning to find that making the Top 25 will take more than a 5-0 record accumulated largely at the expense of teams such as North Texas and Texas El-Paso.

It appears Tech will have to beat Oklahoma State, which earned respect by threatening to defeat No. 2 Nebraska before falling 24-17. The Raiders face the Cowboys on Saturday at Tech's Jones Stadium.

Tech's star running back Ricky Williams said that some players were disappointed that the team wasn't included in the Top 25.

"I didn't get up in the morning and look (at the rankings) but I know a lot of players were concerned about it," Williams said. "I don't worry about what the rankings are. If we work hard, that will all work out in the end."

Tech received 103 votes, but lost out in the poll to Tulane, which received 114 votes after beating Southern Mississippi 21-7 and posting a 4-0 record on the year.

While Tech may do more to prove its case against sturdier opposition, the Red Raiders have posted impressive numbers on both sides of the ball during the '98 campaign.

Williams ran for more than 100 yards for the sixth straight game, gaining 159 yards and two touchdowns last Saturday. He is second in the nation in rushing with 929 yards this season.

Tech's defense, which is ranked fourth in the nation for rushing defense, has held opponents to a 29 percent conversion rate on third down this season. Tech has converted 52 percent of the time.

Montae Reagor has led the defensive effort, recording two sacks against Fresno State to become the school's all-time leading pass rusher. He said the Top 25 poll meant little to the team's confidence.

"You always want to be ranked but that didn't happen," Reagor said.

"We can't worry about the polls or what other teams think of us. We just have to be prepared for the game we're playing."

Besides a schedule that has yet to put Tech up against a ranked team, the Red Raiders may also be fighting the image that they can't put decent teams away.

After demolishing both North Texas and Texas-El Paso by 30-point margins, Tech had three nail-biters.

Leading 31-10, Tech let Iowa State creep back into the game with 7:03 left. After Iowa cut the score to 31-24, Tech recovered an onside kick attempt to seal the victory.

Tech also let Fresno State come back from a 24-6 halftime deficit to take a 28-27 lead in the fourth quarter.

Tech needed a last-second touchdown off a 1-yard-line Fresno fumble to win the game, 34-28.

The Baylor game was also in question until the very end, with the Bears quarterback being ruled out of bounds on a two-point conversion attempt that would have tied the game with just over a minute left in the contest.

Coach Spike Dykes said the games made him aware of improvement and adjustments he needed to make, but was not upset by the final scores.

"The bottom line is either you win or lose," Dykes said. "All the adjectives and expletives... really don't matter. This game is based on winning and losing and we've won."

Dykes said part of his team's success is due to their focus on winning each game.

"They haven't worried about all the things that don't matter," Dykes said. "We're not trying to get ourselves voted into anything, we're just going on down the road. We can't control what the other team's record is, all we can do is beat them. And that's what we've done."

NBA season in jeopardy

NEW YORK (AP) — After canceling the rest of its exhibition schedule Monday, the NBA's perfect record of never missing a regular season game because of a labor dispute is in serious jeopardy.

The league, which had earlier called off the first 24 exhibition games, canceled the final 90 Monday because of stalled labor negotiations with the players.

"At this point, our teams cannot possibly be ready to play any games before November," deputy commissioner Russ Granik said. "It's sad that we have been unable to have any meaningful negotiations."

The next collective bargaining session is set for Thursday. The league said decisions concerning possible cancellation of regular season games would be made next week. The season is scheduled to begin Nov. 3.

When the two sides finally meet again, they will have only a few days to strike a deal that would preserve an 82-game schedule.

Once a new agreement is reached, it will take at least three weeks to sign players, make trades and hold abbreviated training camps. So unless a deal can be completed a few days after the sides reconvene, there appears to be no way the season can start on its scheduled date.

The owners made their latest proposal 10 days ago, still calling for a system with an absolute ceiling on salaries—or a "hard" salary cap. The union said the owners included 16 pages of new demands that hadn't been discussed in any previous meetings.

"Our proposals would result in an average player salary of more than $3.1 million and a minimum salary for 10-year veterans of $750,000," Granik said Monday.

"Unfortunately, the union leadership has been unwilling to give any serious consideration to what we have offered."

Union officials had no immediate response.

Screens offer no problem to other schools

aren't there to be officials, they're there to enjoy the game. The last thing we want to do is to have some irate fan get so upset at an official that he or she will take action on it. I don't think there are fans like that at Tech, but I don't know all 40,000 people that come out to the games. I just don't want to put Texas Tech University in an unfavorable situation."

Despite the limited problems surrounding the video screens in the Big 12 Conference, most schools are having a relatively smooth time in delivering instant replays.

"I really don't see a huge problem with controversial calls," said Kirk Hartman, video production specialist at the University of Nebraska. "Personally, I don't see a problem with replaying controversial calls because it is part of the environment. But when it comes to having to protect the officials, that's when you have to draw the line."

As the Red Raiders move into the second half of their season, the video operations department is getting more and more experience in dealing with instant replays.

"Of course there's criticism in anything you do," Houghland said. "What people really need to do is take a look at video boards at other Big 12 schools. Then they might be able to see that what we do at Tech is perhaps the best in the Big 12."

Rockies land Jim Leyland

DENVER (AP) — The Colorado Rockies signed former Florida Marlins manager Jim Leyland to a three-year contract Monday night.

"Mr. Leyland has agreed to a three-year contract to manage the Rockies through the year 2001. He will be introduced at a press conference Wednesday morning at Coors Field," said Rockies public relations director Jay Alves of Leyland.

Rockies owner Jerry McMorris and general manager Bob Gebhard met with Leyland in Pittsburgh on Monday where the deal was made.

Terms of the contract were not announced.

Leyland, 53, replaces Don Baylor, the only manager Colorado had in its six-year history, who was fired a week ago after the Rockies had their first losing season since 1994.

Leyland led the Marlins to the World Series championship in 1997, his first year with the franchise. However, the team stumbled to a 54-108 record this season as the roster was decimated Earlier, Detroit Tigers general manager Randy Smith said he contacted Leyland about their manager's job.

Leyland managed the Pittsburgh Pirates from 1986 until 1996, reaching the National League championship series three times.

"He's the only one we've talked to," McMorris said last week.

"Jim is clearly at the head of our list. I wouldn't say he's the only candidate, but he's at the top of our list."

The Rockies apparently had the financial clout to lure Leyland to Denver, but they may have to overcome Coors Field's reputation as a manager's nightmare.

"That may be the toughest place in the major leagues to manage," Leyland said last week in reference to Coors Field.

"It's beautiful, and it's a great franchise. But for the home manager, it's a tough place."

Cowboys ready for stability

IRVING (AP) — Coming off a lopsided win on the road over a division rival and heading into a home game against a last-place team should have the Dallas Cowboys feeling pretty good about themselves.

Don't count on it. Just two weeks ago they were in the same situation after blasting the New York Giants in Giants Stadium and wasted that momentum by losing to the Oakland Raiders in Texas Stadium.

The Cowboys bounced back to beat the Washington Redskins 31-10 at Jack Kent Cooke Stadium this past weekend.

On Sunday, they get another chance to put together consecutive wins when the winless Carolina Panthers come to town for a battle at Texas Stadium.

"Consistency is our focal point right now," Dallas coach Chan Gailey said Tuesday of his team's focus.

"We need to ... put some things together back-to-back-to-back. It's not mandatory to happen right now, but at some point you've got to put together a consistent string. To be a championship team, you've got to do that."

The Cowboys have not won three straight games since late in the 1996 season. The last time they even won two in a row was the 10th and 11th weeks of last season, which they followed with a five-game losing streak of their own.

This year, Dallas has been consistently inconsistent: win-loss-win-loss-win.

The upcoming schedule offers the perfect tonic. The 0-4 Panthers begin a streak of five straight Cowboys opponents with a total of five wins.

Rangers and Astros look ahead to 1999

Jeff Keller Sports Reporter

When the Texas Rangers and the Houston Astros made the playoffs this year, baseball fever began to rise in the state of Texas. What if, just what if, the Rangers and the Astros made it to the World Series? In the span of a week and seven games, the hopes of an all Texas World Series has been shot down quicker than a Ranger batter against Yankee pitching.

At least the Astros won a game in their series with the San Diego Padres.

The Rangers looked like they were just happy to be in the playoffs. They went into their series with the New York Yankees with the highest team batting average in the major leagues. They came out of the series with three straight losses, two of them shutouts.

What happened to the explosiveness in the middle of the Rangers batting line-up? Rusty Greer, Juan Gonzalez, Will Clark and Ivan Rodriguez were a combined 4-for-44 in the three game series.

The Rangers finally got some good pitching as their staff held the Yankees to nine runs in the series. The Rangers offense never came through, scoring just one run in three games. Ranger batters struck out 27 times in the series and earned a mere four bases on balls. You know the Ranger's offense was non-existent when Todd Zeile and Royce Clayton were the offensive leaders. Zeile had three hits in the series and Clayton had two. The Rangers had no stolen bases which is no surprise since so few of them actually made it to first base.

It is true that the Rangers were facing a Yankee squad that won 114 games during the regular season, but playtime is no time to look for excuses to not play well. If the Rangers make the playoffs next year, they should think about taking a little extra batting practice before they embarrass themselves again.

The Astros played more respectable in their series with the Padres. They actually got some run production and even extended the series to four games.

Who would have thought the Padres, who limped into postseason play, would beat Randy Johnson twice and now they move on to face the Atlanta Braves in the National League Championship Series.

The Rangers and the Astros are a combined 0-7 in postseason playoff series. The Rangers need to take on a team other than the Yankees.

For the Astros, their performance in this year's playoffs, though disappointing, still gives them something to build on for next season. As for the Rangers, you can not build off a .141 batting average and one run in three games. All the Rangers can do is look forward to next year. Hopefully for Rangers and Astros fans, the American League West and National League Central divisions will play each other in interleague play. That might be the only way the two teams will meet, since neither squad has been able to produce when it counts, in the postseason.

Flag football playoff schedules

Just because the regular season is over does not mean that your team is finished.

The single-elimination playoffs provide an exciting state of frenzy that results in an overall champion.

Every team makes the playoffs, but you will not know when you play unless you pick up your schedule.

Playoff schedules will ready Oct. 8 after 2 p.m. with play starting Sunday.

You can not keep the season alive if you do not know when your team plays.

Wemp, Alford win golf tournament

Noah Wempe and Heather Alford battled windy conditions Sunday at Elm Grove Golf Course to win the fall Men's and Women's Intramural Golf Tournament, respectively.

Wempe shot a respectable score of 70 for the 18 hole tournament to best 22 other male golfers while Alford toured the course in a 90 to win the women's title.

Conditions were less than ideal with the West Texas wind blowing near 30 mph.

Mike Mays won the contest on the closest to the pin contest on the par three number five hole with a shot into the wind that hit six feet from the pin.

Golf tournaments entries taken now

The 1998 Intramural Golf Doubles Tournament entries are now being taken in the Rec Sports Office, SRC, 202.
