Key elements of peace talks fall into place

Netanyahu, Arafat urged to keep momentum of accords moving forward

QUEENSTOWN, Md. (AP) — With key territorial and security elements of an accord falling into place, Israeli and Palestinian leaders turned to other nagging disputes Thursday in a drive to conclude a West Bank land-for-peace agreement.

As President Clinton turned up the heat slightly, diplomatic sources said there was "basic agreement" between Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu and Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat on an "operating system" to combat terrorism.

The sources, speaking on condition of anonymity, said it would include a timetable for the arrest and punishment of suspects identified by Israeli authorities. The CIA would oversee the meeting out of justice.

The sources said the marathon negotiations at a retreat on Maryland's Eastern Shore had made real progress since Netanyahu set deadlines for quitting the talks Wednesday night and then retracted his threat.

But State Department spokesman James P. Rubin said late Thursday afternoon: "There are still obstacles that have not been resolved."

At least three sticking points were identified by administration officials after Netanyahu and Arafat were given copies of an American draft to deal with security against terrorism. That became the biggest obstacle after Netanyahu accepted a joint U.S.-Palestinian proposal to relinquish a further 13 percent of the West Bank before the summit opened on Oct. 15.

Rubin said the text, which reflected lengthy bargaining with Netanyahu after he had threatened to pull out of the talks, is geared to instituting "a systematic battle against terror."

Netanyahu had refused to sign any pact in which Israel would surrender more land in exchange for Arafat's pledges to combat the terrorists who strike against Israel from territory already under his control.

Taking a tougher line than his predecessors in peacemaking with Arab neighbors, Netanyahu insisted on specific actions, including confiscation of illegal weapons and the arrest of some three dozen suspects wanted by Israeli courts.

Secretary of State Madeleine Albright agreed that security was an essential element of any accord.

The three sticking points identified by the American mediators were Palestinian demands for the release of 3,000 prisoners from Israeli jails and for another Israeli pullback on the West Bank after the 13 percent withdrawal offered by Netanyahu, and Israel's insistence that Arafat convene the Palestinian National Council to nullify anti-Israeli provisions in the PLO covenant.

Clinton rejoined the negotiations on Albright's advice and met with Netanyahu and Arafat together for an hour. He then met with Netanyahu separately while Albright talked to Arafat.

In late afternoon, Clinton met together with the two leaders and planned to see Arafat alone again Thursday night. White House spokesman Joe Lockhart called the meetings the most intense discussions so far.

"I hope the parties will seize this opportunity and not retreat from the clear moment to capture the momentum of peace and keep it moving forward," Clinton said before leaving the White House.

Lockhart said, "The president wants the parties to make important decisions today."

King Hussein of Jordan, who made peace with Israel in 1994 after losing two wars and territory to the Jewish state, returned as well, to lend a mostly symbolic presence to the summit. He is battling cancer.

With the Jewish Sabbath approaching, Rubin said "we will accommodate whatever is necessary" for observant Israelis. Last Saturday, even with a prohibition on work, Netanyahu engaged in informal talks with U.S. officials.

From the region, meanwhile, Jibril Rajoub, head of Palestinian preventive security on the West Bank, backed the idea of having the CIA play a role in overseeing how the Palestinians dealt with terrorist suspects. He said the CIA would be a "needed witness to balance Israel's claims of noncompliance by Palestinians."

Student challenges scholars program

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — A University of Tulsa freshman is challenging the Athletics Scholars Program of the Oklahoma State Regents for Higher Education, saying it discriminates against white males on the basis of race and gender.

The lawsuit is similar to court cases in California and Texas that successfully challenged race-based admission standards for colleges and universities, attorney Edward White said Wednesday.

Matthew Pollard sued the regents and the program in U.S. District Court on Wednesday.

The mechanical engineering student wants class action status on behalf of others similarly affected, the lawsuit said.

The Academic Scholars Program grants up to a full tuition, fee and book scholarship for top-level scholars. It is designed to keep Oklahoma's best students here and attract top out-of-state students.

But the 1989 state law that created the scholarships requires separate qualifying test scores for males, females, blacks, American Indians, Hispanics, Asian-Pacific Islanders and whites.

Females, blacks, Indians and Hispanics can make lower national test scores than white males and still qualify for three levels of scholarships. Asians and Pacific Islanders have the same standard as whites.

Upgraded process to ease registration woes

System expected to aid students, faculty, staff as early as summer 1999

By Jonathan Biles
Staff Writer

The time has come again for students to register, but this time the process is in the 21st century because Tech will upgrade its 15 year-old student records database this weekend.

Tech has been behind other colleges, such as University of Texas and Texas A&M, when it came to student registration. At other universities, students are able to register over the telephone and even over the Internet.

Tech however, has recently begun implementing a new system by the name of Tech Student Information Systems.

Research for Tech SIS began more than two years ago, said Linda Ricks, manager of auxiliary systems administrative information systems. However, conversions did not occur until Oct. 3.

Ricks said the first aspect, which was up and running, was the basic records of students, which went up Oct. 17.

"The change over from the old system to the new one was quite a job,"

Ricks said.

The new system is expected to aid students, as well as faculty and staff members, prepare for every semester and allow information access to be more readily available, Ricks said.

"Students are going to have many options available to them," Registrar Don Wickard said. "It will be more convenient, especially for those graduate students who are out of town."

The first sign of change will be noticeable Monday when all basic services, which student records currently use to run the university, will be implemented, Ricks said.

The changes made as of Nov. 5 will not be noticeable to students, Ricks said, but for students who are registering, they will appreciate the changes.

There are two main components of the system, which will benefit student use, Ricks said. These two components are telephone services and on-line services.

Telephone services will include such features as admissions, student registration, financial-aid, account balance check and grade checking, Ricks said.

The on-line services will include the same services as the telephone with the addition students will be able to pay their tuition or room and board with a credit card over the Internet, Ricks said.

Other services which will become available in the near future, Ricks said, will be the availability of class schedules, course catalogs and even corequisite and prerequisite check-ups on the Internet.

"The idea is to make it a convenience for students," Ricks said.

The new programming underwent a mock session last summer to observe how students will be able to react to the new technology, and Ricks said the tests went smoothly.

Students may see the finalization of the projects as early as registration for summer 1999. Wickard said however, this depends on the stability and performance the system will undergo during pre-registration for the spring semester.

Awareness week ends with self-protection seminar

UPD official speaks with students about how to keep themselves from being victims of campus hate crimes

By Gretchen Verry
Staff Writer

Texas Tech students received a lesson in violence awareness Thursday with a seminar dedicated to teaching students how to protect themselves from violence.

From the University Center Senate Room, Officer Matt Wolfington of the University Police Department spoke with students about how to keep themselves from becoming victims of crimes.

"The best form of self defense that you can do is to keep yourself out of situations that could harm you," Wolfington said.

Wolfington said students can take several steps to maintain their safety in all situations.

First, students should take precautions to always park in well-lighted areas. Wolfington said students should report to the UPD any areas of campus where lights have burned out, or where they do not feel there is enough light.

"If you don't feel like you're safe in an area, it's up to you to do something about it."

— Matt Wolfington
University Police Department

"If you don't feel like you're safe in an area, it's up to you to do something about it," Wolfington said. "Unfortunately, we can't be everywhere all of the time."

The second precaution students can take is to carry mace or pepper spray with them when traveling alone.

The blue light shuttle vans run from 5 p.m. until 4 a.m., and they serve as a resource for students in both emergency and non-emergency situations.

"A lot of students think that the shuttles are just for emergencies, but that's not true," Wolfington said. "No one should ever have to be in the situation where they have to walk across campus alone in the dark."

Wolfington also addressed issues that occur when a student breaks the law.

The Texas Tech Code of Student Conduct outlines sanctions the university can take against students who violate university guidelines.

"I'm going to graduate in the fall, and I've never even looked at the student handbook," said Aaron Tavitas, a senior telecommunications major from San Antonio. "This lecture helped me to understand those laws a lot better."

Students can receive a warning, probation or even suspension, depending on the severity of the crime.

"We at the UPD have the same jurisdiction as all other officers of the law," Wolfington said. "If you violate Texas state law, then you're violating Texas Tech policy too."

Research receives funding

The chance of Texas Tech receiving $8 million from Congress became official Wednesday night when President Clinton signed a $520 billion spending package.

The bill will award funds to Tech's Plant Stress and Water Conservation Laboratory, the International Cotton Research Center, the Institute for Environmental and Human Health at Reese and the Wind Disaster Mitigation Research Program.

Phillip Johnson, assistant professor in the Department of Agricultural and Applied Economics, said the money will be allotted to these programs as mentioned in the bill, and the money will be appreciated.

Congressman Larry Combest will review the beginning of Texas Tech Health Sciences Center at 10 a.m. today at Reese Center - Environmental Research Center, 1207 Gilbert Ave.

Discussion to educate community

By Amy Bishop
Staff Writer

The 1998 Lubbock HIV/AIDS Awareness Task Force is sponsoring a panel discussion entitled "A Force for Change" at 4 p.m. Saturday at St. John's United Methodist Church, 15th and University.

The discussion will focus on educating our community on topics concerning HIV/AIDS.

The approach being taken is an educational and prevention approach, said Michael Turner, assistant administrator of the South Plains AIDS Resource Center.

"We mainly want to get across to the community to continue making smart choices and reducing high risk behavior," Turner said.

The panel presenting the discussion includes: Sorla Reyes, HIV prevention educator; Buddy McArthur, an HIV positive individual; Charles Bell, regional head of the Texas Department of Health; Darnell Dingle, registered nurse for Lubbock Independent School District; and Victor Hernandez, Lubbock City Council Member.

Each panelist will respond to a question prepared by the task force concerning HIV/AIDS in relation to each individual's field or perspective.

Questions are encouraged from the public following the prepared program.

"We want people to realize that people are living longer and there is new medicine, but it is still a disease that is killing people," Turner said.

"People tend to ease back when they hear good news. We don't want good news to knock people off balance. They still need to be cautious and smart."

ACTEEN, a teen theater program designed to use performing arts to educate our community on important life choices, also will be performing.

The panel discussions can identify some things that people who work in the community or are involved in the community can do to help, said Jo Henderson, health education coordinator at Student Health Services.

"I hope this panel will provide a better understanding on persons that are HIV positive, give an idea of what they are going through and how they can protect themselves," Henderson said.

Turner said he hopes by joining the ACTEEN performance with the panel discussion many people can be reached, and will have a huge impact.

Extended learning offers RHIM degree

By Melody Ragland
Staff Writer

Texas Tech's College of Restaurant, Hotel and Institutional Management now offers a hospitality graduate degree through correspondence courses.

Tim Dodd, graduate adviser in education, nutrition, restaurant and hotel management, said the program is for people who do not have the luxury of leaving their jobs to attend graduate school.

It is a 40-hour program and is only for people who have had five years experience in the hospitality industry.

Students have to be admitted to graduate school, but receive the courses through Extended Learning.

Lynn Huffman, chairwoman of education, nutrition, restaurant and hotel management, said there are seven students working in the pilot program.

The students were chosen through word of mouth.

The students are working on two courses: introduction to research and colloquium.

"In colloquium the students study major principles acquainted with graduate school," Huffman said.

The classes are done either by the World Wide Web or executive style, Huffman said. The executive meetings give students the chance to come together and discuss the course. During monthly meetings, students give feedback to the course and have a discussion on the class sessions.

Huffman said the students will get a degree equivalent to the students on campus and it will take the students the traditional two years.

Dodd said the program will be available in January with two courses. At this time, a new group will begin every September.

Dodd said a mix of people have been involved with designing of the program. The program has been in the works for the past six months.

Colorado River moves in on Texas town

WHARTON (AP) — The Colorado River rose to record levels and continued to force evacuations in much of this Southeast Texas town Thursday while swollen waterways elsewhere in the state receded but left behind at least 27 deaths and hundreds of millions of dollars in destruction.

Among the victims of the unprecedented flooding in South and Central Texas were four members of a San Antonio-area family whose bodies were found inside their car in a creek.

They had been missing for five days.

Also recovered Thursday was the body of a 7-year-old boy missing since the weekend in Caldwell County, south of Austin.

"We looked everywhere," Tanya Griffin, the aunt of one of the victims, said after the family's Lincoln Town Car was found by police divers Thursday morning in 10 to 12 feet of muddy Salado Creek about 150 yards from a road.

"We knew something was wrong," Richard Hartman, 47, of Kirby; his mother, Donna O'Bar, 65; Jennifer Allensworth, 20; and Allensworth's 2-month-old child, Mallory Hartman, were last seen Saturday night in Jourdanton, a suburb south of San Antonio, leaving a wedding reception during the heavy rains.

Authorities speculated that when their planned route was blocked by high water, they turned to an alternate road and got swept away in the raging creek.

Justin Hartman, of Bryan, the father of the infant and O'Bar's grandson, watched the retrieval efforts and fainted when the car was pulled from the creek.

'My Cowboy's Gift' opens tonight

By John Davis
Staff Writer

My Cowboy's Gift," a play written by Lubbock native, Andy Wilkinson, will open tonight at The Cactus Theater.

George Sorensen, director of the play and former Tech professor, said the play was different from other shows, in that the story is told in verse and song.

"It deals with a rancher who finds, after burying his wife, a stack of poems that were written to her, and it sets up doubts in his mind, as most of them are love poems," Sorensen said.

"He questions if he is the father of his child. He figures out that it may have been a cowboy, who was the foreman on his ranch."

He said the plot follows the rancher as he works through the process of blaming his wife for being unfaithful, until he, "comes to grips that they had a life together, and he certainly loved his wife."

Sorensen said though the rancher never sees the spirits of his wife or the cowboy, they appear during the show to explain what happened between them years ago.

To bring greater understanding to the script, Sorensen said he worked closely with Wilkinson to gain insights into why Wilkinson wrote the play and what viewpoints he was trying to bring out in the play.

This is the second time "My Cowboy's Gift" has run in Lubbock.

It was performed in May at the Lubbock Municipal Auditorium and produced by Lubbock Community Theatre.

Sorensen said the show will play next February at the "Cowboy Hall of Fame" in Oklahoma City.

Andy Wilkinson, who wrote the play, said watching his second play come to life on stage was, like watching your kid hit a home run in little league.

"I'd been interested to write something on the notion of faith," he said. "It occurred to me that faith wasn't something you have by degrees. You either have it or you don't."

He said he tried to come up with a different idea that tests the theory of faith with one central character.

"The one that kept coming back to me was the idea of faith with someone not related by blood, which is your spouse."

"My Cowboy's Gift," will start at 8 p.m. tonight and Saturday, and Oct. 30 and 31. Reserved tickets cost $20 for seats on the floor and $15 for seats in the balcony. For information, call 762-3233.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR FROM TEXAS A&M

Editor's note: The University Daily received a large number of responses to Assistant Sports Editor Jason Bernstein's column Thursday. Because many Texas A&M fans spent the better part of their day discussing the column on the Internet, The UD felt readers might want to see some of the letters we received.

Aggies deserve rank, Tech will fall

To the editor: It would seem to me the last thing Texas Tech students/alumni would care to bring up is anything having to do with infractions or NCAA preferential treatment.

The fact Tech still has a football program, considering the immeasurable violations committed by their athletic department (coaches), is an absolute aberration. Granted, A&M has not played host to the likes of perennial powerhouses such as UTEP, Fresno State and Iowa State, but their record does represent a top 10-caliber team, especially in consideration of excellent showings against two teams ranked No. 2 nationally (Florida State/Nebraska).

Your statement about A&M not deserving to win the Kansas game also requires address.

Under your same logic, Tech does not deserve to win their last three meetings against the Aggies, which I am sure you would contest. If you attempt to make a point, at the very least you should be consistent.

Arguments could easily be made about several other teams in the top 25 as to why they are ranked.

However, 6-1 does not necessarily make a team deserving of one of those spots. It's quality, not quantity.

The Red Raiders first bout with quality resulted in a loss to Colorado. We will see how their second attempt goes down in College Station this weekend.

Lane Thomson
Texas A&M supporter

Red Raiders have not faced NCAA powerhouses

To the editor: I am not sure if Mr. Bernstein is too young to recall the facts that have led to Texas A&M having a reputation as a national power or if he is just ignorant of sports history. Yes, I admit A&M gets a little leeway in the polls from time to time, but not nearly as much as other programs. Because we are using the imperfect poll system (which is another story). The pollsters often rely on a program's history and tradition when faced with equal records; but would you not do the same?

Now, to pat Tech on the back, I think you have a terrific program and have defended it to out-of-conference rivals for years. How do I know you have a good program? Because you have kicked our ass three years in a row and always played us tough.

But, why doesn't anyone out of conference think Tech's program is as good as it is? Easy, lack of big out of conference wins and bowl game wins against marquee football powerhouses. Tech has mostly been beaten handily whenever it had an opportunity to play a traditional power, although it has played some of them well, but you must get some wins, not just close games to get the respect. Beating A&M is not enough because most people think we are overrated. Therefore your column, and others like it, is the very reason Tech gets no respect. Ironic isn't it.

If Tech is looking for national respect, why print a column proclaiming that your biggest game of the year is against an overrated Texas A&M club. For God's sake, we beat a Nebraska team that had not lost a regular season conference game in around 40 games and shared in three of the last four National Championships. As for your opinion we did not deserve to defeat Kansas; A&M won that game with a solid drive down the length of the field, no fumble or last second interception return ala Texas Tech (Zach Thomas). Those drives were made by champions, not the lucky. We have earned our ranking, so quit bitching about ours and go earn your own. One step would have been beating Colorado and another one would be beating A&M. It could easily happen, Tech has a tough ball club. The difference is, if Tech won I would congratulate them and wish them well as a gesture of respect for Tech, our conference and our state.

As far as your opinion that A&M is always overrated, look at the rest of the polls: Virginia was No. 6 ... please; Wisconsin, Oregon, West Virginia were all in the top 15. This is a joke. The bottom line is that the SEC and Big 12 are the toughest conferences.

The point to all this: We need to build up the conference's reputation

Voting turnout very disappointing

You know folks, I have a lot of things I have to worry about in the course of living my life. I have a stack of bills that could choke a pot-bellied pig. I have a job that I cannot stand. I need to shell out about 900 federal dollars (that's U.S. dollars to fellow LISD graduates) to install a new furnace in Casa Cameron. I have my senior seminar paper to work on. And to top it off, my little dog Rosebud has taken it in her head to bark at the ceiling fan every hour on the hour. Now I have to add one more thing to that list. And that is my fellow students.

Last Friday there was a mock election in the University Center to see who students would vote for if the election for Texas governor were today. It should come as no surprise that Gov. Bush took 96 percent of the votes. Let's face it folks, the man is going to win, and that is why the most important race in Texas is really the lieutenant governor's race between Republican Rick Perry and Democrat John Sharp. But I digress.

What concerned me most about this mock election was that only 60 some-odd votes were cast. When I read the results of the mock election I was really dismayed that only 60 of my fellow students took time to vote. Do you, gentle reader, have any idea of how many people walk through the UC on a daily basis?

I would be willing to wager that it is a whole, whole lot more than just 60 people.

Believe it or not though, this mock election is indicative about something. That is Texas Tech, a largely conservative campus, is very apathetic.

This is nothing to proud of friends. In my work in politics, since I came to this university, I have learned that people's perception of Texas Tech is that it is the A-No. 1 party school in the state and that the students only care about where the next kegger is going to be.

Now I have nothing against partying. Those who know me will back me up on that. But friends, there comes a time when you as a student, and as an American citizen, should and ought to take an active part in your country's political process.

Does that mean you have to work night and day and sacrifice time from your classes and personal lives to do this? By all means no. But you should be at least an informed voter. And above all you must take a stance.

Now here is what I mean by that. You have to find a political ideal that most closely represents your feelings. Then you need to seek out those that work for the party and they can give you the information you need.

It is starting to become fashionable to say, I do not vote for the party, I vote for the candidate. Well that is all well and good if this were a perfect world, but sadly it is not. You can literally cancel out your vote by voting for two people who will wind up working against each other.

Now for you students, there is at least one group on campus that I know of that can help you become and informed voter. Actually there are three, but since I do not know how the other two work, or if they are even active, then I will only talk about one.

The College Republicans of Tech exist to help the college student become a more informed and especially a more active voter. If you want to know more about this group, then I strongly suggest calling the Student Organizations Services office and they can give you the contact information.

But friends, you must take a stand. You must vote. I know a mock election is not that big of a deal, especially when one of the candidates is so far ahead in the minds and hearts of the people that it is going to be funny come election night. But when it comes to the real thing, please vote my friends. It is your right and your duty.

And maybe I will not have to worry about this anymore, and I can worry about the more mundane things in life.

Valuable Tech major similar to Halloween

Halloween reminds me of the fifth grade talent show at Lincoln Elementary School. Most kids performed in groups and they would lip sync to Guns-n-Roses or Aerosmith songs, but I put on a three-inch wax nose, painted my face green, spiked my hair straight up, tied a balloon to my butt, and recited original poetry.

Julie Mitchell
Columnist

Even then, I was so misunderstood.

Oh sure, there were a few years in junior high that I felt the need to conform. I joined the band in the eighth grade because the second love of my life (the first being Joey from New Kids on the Block) played the drums, and I felt the need to be with him even though he did not know my name.

So, one day he tells me that he thinks it is sexy for girls to dress in black. Well, from then on, at least one day a week, I wore all black clothing with bright red lipstick and styled my hair to cover half my face.

His name was Chad and he was so cool. He would throw pencils into the styrofoam ceiling, cuss, talk back to the teacher, you know all the attractive things guys do.

And he was quite talented, too. I used to watch him spit a stream of saliva that would almost touch the ground before he sucked it back up. What a man.

I am glad to say my taste in men has changed for the much better since my early years. And now, I laugh about my behavior back then. One of the few times in my life I purposely conformed to what someone else wanted me to be, and I made a fool of myself repeatedly.

Anyway, I am getting off the subject (whatever that may be). So, let's see ... we were talking about Halloween, and dressing up, and weird people, and oh yes, I remember, I want to talk about theatre majors.

People seem to think that something is wrong with us because we like to dress up and pretend to be someone else.

Well, what's wrong with that? That's what Halloween is all about, and people do not think that's strange.

And let me ask you this. Do you remember experiencing Halloween as a child? Do you remember how you had to pick just the right costume and how excited you were about the opportunity to be someone else? Someone that did not worry about reciting original poetry while everyone else lip synced. Someone that was not in love with a boy that could spit to the floor and suck it back up.

I get to experience Halloween every day. In fact, I experience more in one week than some people experience in an entire year.

I am different from the norm. I have always been different from the norm. Not because I do not dress the "right way," or act the "right" way (no pun intended), or have the "right" morals, but because I am brave enough to risk living a life of poverty and rejection to be who I am and do what I love.

So this is dedicated to the guy who stood up in class, declared that theatre was not a respectable major, and that we're all wasting our time. You wish you had the guts and the talent and the commitment to do what I do everyday.

You are the one wasting time, by worrying about my future. You need to concentrate your efforts on getting a "respectable" degree that will get you a job you do not enjoy, but will pay the bills, and let me worry about fulfilling my dreams.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Tech will prevail over Texas A&M

To the editor: OK, first let me make it perfectly clear I am as upset as our recent football loss as you are. After analyzing our position though, I am actually not as upset as I could be. I say that because I am more or less concerned about our next game at A&M.

The Aggies seem to thrive on beating teams that are extremely hard to beat or teams with undefeated seasons. If we went into A&M with a 7-0 record, not only would they have the drive to win because they do not like us any more than we like them, but also because they would be out to say "we are the team that beat undefeated Tech."

Everyone knows a team plays better when they want to prove a point. A&M would want to prove we were beatable. I hate to be a pessimist, but I think if we went to A&M undefeated, we would have lost.

The way I see it, I figure both Tech and A&M have heart and a good record going into the game, but to me, they almost cancel each other out. A&M has no motivation to beat us except to be Big 12 Champs. We have motivation to beat them because we can then claim "we beat the team that beat Nebraska." Besides, it would not only put us above A&M (where we belong), but also on top of the Big 12 South again and almost certainly in the Big 12 Championship game.

We would almost definitely knock A&M out of any chance of being Big 12 Champions.

My roommate said after the Colorado game, "that game sucked." I happen to disagree with that. Yes, losing sucked; it always does, but the game itself was good.

Yes, we shot ourselves in the foot way too much too early, but after the first quarter, Tech put up an admirable battle. Even up to the end (what everyone complains about), Colorado made only six points in the fourth quarter, we made seven points, and we were within inches of recovering an on-side kick at the end. Come on, we only lost by two points.

I truly believe we can come out of this season with a 10-1 record. I think we are able to beat Missouri and Texas in part because we are at home.

I believe if we went to A&M undefeated then we would have lost. So, I ask you, if we end up the season 10-1, wouldn't it be better for that one loss to be at the hands of Colorado rather than at the hands of A&M?

Raiders go for fourth-straight win over Aggies

By Jason Bernstein
Assistant Sports Editor

Two of the more successful schools in the brief history of the Big 12's Southern Division will square off at 2:30 p.m. Saturday in College Station when the No. 25 Texas Tech Red Raiders look to defeat the No. 8 Texas A&M Aggies for a fourth consecutive year.

Tech (6-1 overall, 3-1 Big 12) comes into Saturday's contest with one of the nation's better rushing defenses, anchored by senior defensive end Montae Reagor.

"You just have to fight off the distractions when you go on the road," Reagor said. "We've just got to keep our minds focused on the task at hand, which is trying to win the ballgame."

Tech enters the game with the nation's No. 11-ranked rushing defense in allowing 95.7-yards-per-contest on the ground. The Aggies (6-1 overall, 3-0 Big 12), who rank 13th nationally in rushing defense, are allowing just under 100 yards a game on the ground.

"I believe this will be the most physical game of the year," said junior defensive end Taurus Rucker. "This is the biggest game of the year. If we had beat Colorado and lost to A&M this week, we still wouldn't go to the Big 12 Championship."

The Red Raiders and the Aggies have played 56 times in their respective histories with the Aggies posting a 31-24-1 lead in the series.

But despite the recent Red Raider success against the Aggies, Tech is still prepared for a good old-fashioned dogfight.

"We're going to have to apply as much pressure as possible," Reagor said of the defense. "We'll need to put pressure on the quarterback and do the things we do best — play hard-nosed football running the ball and try to get some takeaways."

This season, the Red Raiders have lost 17 turnovers while only causing 12 of their own.

"As a team, we're playing well," Reagor said. "But we still have work to do. We can still get better and we're not totally satisfied with our effort. And that goes for myself also. I've played some big games, but the year's only going to get better. There's a lot more to come out of me."

During their first loss of the year last Saturday to Colorado, the Red Raider defense held the Buffaloes to 37 plays for no gain or a loss in the contest.

Tech's offense will need to take advantage of that if it has any hopes in repeating the outcome of the last three meetings between the former Southwest Conference foes.

As for the Red Raider offense, the key to Saturday's game will be holding on to the football to set up big plays from their big play players.

"They've got a great defense, but I hope we can utilize our speed for big plays," said sophomore flanker Derek Dorris. "We should be able to take it to them with Donnie (Hart) and Rob (Peters) and Ricky (Williams) and everybody doing our jobs. But they're a great defense and they held Nebraska in check."

Dorris, and the rest of the Red Raider offense are putting an average of 28.9-points-per-game on the scoreboard.

Tech will once again look for momentum going into the Texas A&M game. The Red Raiders have come into the Texas A&M game the past three years on the heels of a loss.

But despite the Red Raiders' three straight wins against the Aggies, each year is like a new dawn for both squads.

"There's no carry over," Dorris said. "We just have to take it one year, one game at a time. We've lost the last three years before this game, so we just have to go out there and play."

The Red Raiders and the Aggies are tied for the second-best road records in the Big 12 because both squads have posted a 7-3 mark during the first two-plus seasons of conference play.

Thus, both squads understand the importance of Saturday's game.

"If we win this game right here, we'll be in the Big 12 Championship," Rucker said. "If A&M wins this game, they'll be there. This is going to be the best game of the year. Both teams are putting a lot of pressure on themselves, but the winner will be able to handle the pressure."

Volleyball takes on Tigers, Cyclones

By Jeff Keller
Staff Writer

The Texas Tech volleyball team will be in action this weekend as Iowa State and Missouri come to Lubbock to battle the Red Raiders. Tech will face the Cyclones at 7 p.m. Friday and the Tigers at 7 p.m. Saturday. Both games will be played at the Lubbock Municipal Coliseum.

The Red Raiders (14-7 overall, 3-5 Big 12) are coming off a conference loss to Kansas State on the road last weekend.

Though Tech has lost five in a row at home, the Red Raiders are not worried about the losing streak, senior outside hitter Kristen Holmes said.

"We'll be alright," Holmes said. "The past matches are in the past. They were all tough matches, but we just have to build on the future right now."

Tech will have a chance to end its home losing streak and gain two conference wins this weekend against teams it has beaten earlier in the season.

Iowa State won its first conference match of the season last week against Oklahoma to move its record to 3-17 overall and 1-7 in conference.

"They got their first win in conference last weekend, so they're pumped up," Red Raider coach Jeff Nelson said of Iowa State.

"So, obviously the potential is there to have a great match."

Missouri is 12-9 on the season and is even with Tech in Big 12 standings with a 3-5 conference record.

Tech beat the Tigers in four games in the teams first meeting this season.

UCLA or Ohio State in the Fiesta Bowl for the national championship. So a loss is not immediately so tragic.

The Red Raiders remain in contention for the Big 12 South Championship, for now. But losing 19-17 to Colorado with a tough road trip to Texas A&M waiting in the wings, leaves the 6-1 Red Raiders dangerously close to the edge of Big 12 extinction.

What? But Tech is ranked. They are 6-1. They are already assured of a bowl berth. How could a loss Saturday leave them blowing in the wind? Well, listen carefully. The Red Raiders will tell, to a man, that no matter how they get there, the only thing that matters is a place in the Big 12 Championship game.

To do so, the Red Raiders must win the South division. They currently are tied for second with Texas. They trail the No. 8 Aggies by a game. To lose Saturday would place Tech two games behind Texas A&M with only three to play. It would be almost impossible to catch them. A 6-2 record never smelled so foul.

So, just to back-track, let's take a look at how the red-and-black found themselves in this position. After all, just weeks ago, pleas were sent out to Tech students to keep their clothes on, and try to hold back the excitement of an undefeated start to the season.

That was before the Red Raiders decided they would find out how it felt to shoot themselves in the foot. They liked it so much, they did it three times.

The Red Raiders were a better team than Colorado. They out gained them in every category, except for penalties, which is a different story (take it from someone who was there in person, the referees stunk.)

But that is beside the point. Some baffling calls turned 7-0 into 6-1.

The Red Raiders were poised to take at least a 3-0 lead when they marched inside the Buffalo 10-yard line in the first period. Boom. Backup Matt Tittle throws an interception. So, let's analyze.

Tech is on the Colorado seven. They own the third-best rusher in the nation. Their backup quarterback is in the game. Why not run Ricky Williams three times and see if it pays off? Don't the Red Raiders have the biggest offensive line in the country? The odds are much better that Williams finds the endzone on the ground than Tittle finding it through the air.

And if he does not, then at least Tech has a 3-0 lead, on the road.

But the Red Raiders recovered, and fumbled. Again in Colorado territory.

Notice a trend? Well, it continued. A Rob Peters interception foiled yet another drive in opposing territory. Three turnovers led to a 10-0 deficit.

And to the Red Raiders' credit, they fought back, even threatened to win. But they did not. The altitude is just too much to handle in Boulder when you are trying to climb out of a hole that big. So, here they stand. One loss away from losing their grip on their primary season goal. Or, one win away from cementing their place as Big 12 South favorite.

This season all comes down to 2:30 p.m. Saturday at Kyle Field. Rarely has this rivalry had so much to offer. The Aggies are coming off a 35-14 cremation of Baylor, their follow-up to a 28-21 win over then-No. 2 Nebraska.

They are rolling, and they are mad about three consecutive losses to the Red Raiders. This all adds up to a bare-knuckle affair. Both defenses are dominant. Both offenses can be equally brilliant and stupefying. What does it mean? A low-scoring battle, just like the previous three.

The Red Raiders walked away victorious over the hated Aggies the last three seasons because they have won the turnover battle and waited patiently on a big play. Hardly the script Tech has used to get to their current 6-1. Listen to what Spike Dykes has preached recently. Turnovers kill. The Red Raiders were finally burned Saturday by their own ineptitude.

For the Red Raiders, this is a must-win in the truest sense. A replay of the fumbleitis exhibited in Boulder will push Tech over the edge of the Big 12 race.

Raider soccer team looks to bounce back from loss

By Brent Dirks
Sports Editor

After a disappointing 3-2 loss to No. 17 Baylor Wednesday, the Texas Tech soccer team will look to bounce back with two games this weekend.

The Red Raiders will battle Colorado at 4 p.m. today while playing Colorado College at 1 p.m. Sunday. Both games will be played at R.P.

Fuller Track Stadium on the Tech campus.

Tech coach Felix Oskam said the Red Raiders can take good things out of the loss.

"We played well," Oskam said. "That's a good thing. The second half we played better than Baylor, and that was good to see. I don't think Baylor played extremely well... but I think our kids played well. That's a good thing. That's a very positive thing about it."

Colorado (4-9-2 overall, 1-4-1 Big 12) comes into today's game on a four-game conference losing streak. In the past four losses, the Buffaloes have only scored one goal.

Even with the Buffs on a losing streak, Oskam said, Colorado is a team to be reckoned with. "They're dangerous," Oskam said.

"They have some big kids. They have a huge goalkeeper, 6-1, who has a tremendous punt. I wouldn't be surprised if she could punt from one goal to another goal. If they put the ball up in the air, we're going to have to make sure we can win those in the air. And that's not one of our strengths."

Colorado College (7-7-1 overall) will come into Sunday's game after playing North Texas today. The Tigers currently have lost three of their last four games.

In the two team's first meeting last season, Colorado College pounded Tech 4-1 in Colorado Springs, Colo.

"They have had an up and down year too," Oskam said. "They beat the crap out of us last year over their 4-1. So I know they have talented players."

Red Raider midfielder Lindsay Thompson, who had an assist in the Baylor loss, said Tech needs to continue playing well to come out of the weekend with two victories.

"We need to keep moving the ball really fast and finish our shots more and get some early crosses to Kristy (Frantz) and Amy (Rutstein)," Thompson said. "And they'll take care of it."
