Divers return to cave despite death toll

SAN MARCOS (AP) - Jacob's Well, the flooded Central Texas cave that has claimed at least eight lives in the past three decades, is once again beckoning divers into its depths.

Divers of the San Marcos Area Recovery Team are trying to dispel the long-standing reputation of the spring as a death trap.

'There's this voice calling, saying come on down," cave diver Don Dibble told the San Marcos Daily Record in Monday's editions. "It's a Moby Dick syndrome. People want to get romantic about nature being a malevolent creature waiting for a human being to make a mistake.

'That's absurd of course," he said. "The well is not evil, but nature can be a problem when humans make mistakes."

Most of the deaths in Jacob's Well have occurred at or near a tunnel to a mysterious fourth chamber. The "magic tunnel," as Dibble calls it, was formerly so narrow that it required divers to remove their air tanks before trying to slide through.

So a new expedition was planned into the cave this week.

NAACP distributes poor hotel ratings

BALTIMORE (AP) - The hotel industry has not lived up to promises to improve its treatment of blacks in hiring, contracting and marketing, the NAACP said Monday.

The nation's largest and oldest civil rights organization gave the 11 major hotel chains a grade of C-minus in its fourth annual report card. Last year, the NAACP had said the hotel chains improved somewhat.

NAACP President Kweisi Mfume urged people "to avoid spending dollars in failing or underperforming hotel chains."

'What we've seen is a one-way relationship. Over the last three years, after our first report ended, the hotel industry has changed very, very little," Mfume said.

'Sustained progress has not been as fast as we had hoped, nor has it been as fast as it has been promised.

Marriott International earned a B from the NAACP; Cendant Hotels, B-minus; Hilton Hotels Corp., C-plus; and Hyatt Hotels Corp., C-plus.

Gunfire exchanged on verge of deadline

JERUSALEM (AP) - Palestinians and Israelis exchanged gunfire Monday, hours before the deadline on Israel's ultimatum to the Palestinians to end the violence or face "forceful" action. World leaders stepped up their efforts to stem the crisis.

Secretary of State Madeleine Albright held out the possibility of a leadership summit, and U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan and Russian Foreign Minister Igor Ivanov were due to arrive Monday evening to confer with Israeli Prime Minister Ehud Barak and Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat.

Arafat, returning from a meeting with Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak, said he would limit his talks with Annan to Palestinian demands for an international inquiry of the events of the past 12 days that have left 88 people dead, most of them Palestinians.

Relations That is something you can't present in a publication in order to portray campus life at Tech accurately," Mallon said. "Texas Tech is unique because it schedules University Day on a weekday instead of on a weekend like most colleges do."

He said this is beneficial because it allows prospective students to see what college life is like from the perspective of the student.

"By holding University Day on a weekday, visitors have the opportunity to see students going to class, watching the buses run and really interact with the students," he said. This isn't possible on the weekends."

University Day has proven to be successful in the past. Mallon said he anticipates a large percentage of the high school students who attend University Day will eventually enroll at Tech.

Women recollect personal experiences as emotionally, physically painful

By Mara McCoy Staff Writer

This is the second article in a series of stories concerning abortion, milepristone, adoption and foster care. Some names have been changed to protect sources'identi-

Rushing past screaming picketers shouting "murderer" and "baby killer" and holding signs emblazoned with the words, "Abortion is evil," a woman clutches herself tighter and covers her face as she tries to make it to the door of the clinic.

"It was the hardest thing I have ever done, even though I had agonized over the decision and knew this was the right thing for me to do," said "Beth," a Texas Tech student who had an abortion at age 21. Even if a woman strongly believes that abortion is the right option for her, walking past picketers still causes an amazing amount of emotional distress, Beth said.

"Walking past those people was so hard - it caused me so much emotional pain," she said.

While abortion is said by many to be an unnecessary evil, Beth said, sometimes, it is the right choice for

"None of the other options seemed right to me," she said. "I did what I thought was best for my life and my situation.

The picketers seemed to be hypocritical, Beth* said.

When you walk into the clinic, the picketers are yelling at you, telling you what an awful person you are. But when you walk out, they tell you that you are still loved and that are so damn hypocritical — what they are doing is wrong, and it causes more pain to the women who go into the clinic than anything else."

Beth also said she doubts if any of the picketers even understand what she or any other woman who uses abortion services is going

"I don't think most of those women, if any, were ever in the position I was in," she said. "They all came with their mini-vans and pictures of their kids and wedding rings on their fingers — it doesn't seem like they know what it is like to be young and make a mistake.'

The picketers don't seem to know that the decision to have an abortion is the hardest decision some women will ever have to face, Beth said.

"I don't understand them. They you can ask God for forgiveness. They say one of the reasons they are against abortion is because of the impact is has on the mother, not only physically, but emotionally as well," she said. "But them screaming at you, picketing the abortion clinics - that doesn't help anything. It just hurts.

> "Dawn," a Tech student, also said her experience was bad.

"I was only 16 when I found out I was pregnant. I had no idea what to do, but I knew I couldn't keep the child. I was involved in school and was one of the 'good kids.' If the people at my school had known I was pregnant, I would have been shunned for the rest of the time I was there," Dawn said.

"And I couldn't tell my parents if they had known, they would have

Moses selected by DISD

DALLAS (AP) - Dallas school trustees voted unanimously Monday evening to hire former education commissioner Mike Moses to lead the nation's 10th largest school district, ending a three-month search to replace fired leader Bill Moses, deputy chancellor of external affairs for the Texas Tech University System, was superintendent of the Lubbock School District before being appointed state education commissioner in 1995. He held the post four years before joining Texas Tech, where he earned $195,700 annually.

Moses has said the Dallas job appealed to him because he wants to return to public education.

Chancellor John T. Montford has said Moses is "imminently qualified" to turn around the troubled district and has a knack for dealing with boards and commissions.

Moses is credited with helping to raise more than $400 million for the system since 1997 through various fund-raisers. He's also credited with helping to raise Texas Tech from a Tier 4 to Tier 3 school in the latest US News and World Report college Outside of his chancellor duties, Moses taught in the college of education on the Lubbock campus. Montford has said he will ask N to stay on as an adjunct professor.

Dallas trustees also considered Dallas County Judge Lee Jackson and Randolph Ward, state administrator for California's Compton Unified School District. They were rejected as candidates last month.

Trustees in July fired Bill Rojas, who had sparred with the school board for most of his 11-month tenure. He was fired 7-1 by trustees who invoked a "good rapport" clause in his contract with the 163,000-student district, which has gained a national reputation for instability.

Inmates receiving no relief

FORT WORTH (AP) - Despite a ruling six years ago that Texas inmates could seek new trials when new evidence supporting their innocence surfaced, the state's highest criminal court has been unlikely to

According to a review by the Fort Worth Star-Telegram, the ninemember Court of Criminal Appeals has only granted new trials in two of 33 such appeals filed by lawyers.

Among those turned away were Roy Wayne Criner of Montgomery County, whose DNA didn't match the semen found in a murder victim who was also raped; and Ronnie Mark Gariepy, a mechanic from the Texas Panhandle whose stepdaughter testified he sexually assaulted her but later wrote a letter claiming she had lied. Both men were pardoned by Gov. George W. Bush this summer.

"This is a cruel system," Bill Allison, a University of Texas law professor, is quoted as saying in Sunday's editions of the Star-Telegram. "Nobody really knows how to deal with truly innocent people once they're caught in the system. In some cases, people in the system come to believe it, but usually it's just too late.'

very much pro-life. They still get in big debates about abortion and how wrong it is, and I just have to sit there, like it doesn't bother me. It hurts so bad inside. But I don't want them to not be proud of me. I love them, but this isn't something I can tell them. They would hate me."

Dawn said when she went to the abortion clinic in her hometown, the picketers were there in full force.

There must have been 30 of them there, just shouting at me and the other girl who was going in. I have never felt so awful," she

"And then, when you get into the pregnancy clinic, they treat you like some alien being. There is no one there you can talk to. They just shuttle you from room to room, like cattle or something. They have been so desensitized, what with the picketers outside and all those stories about bombings of clinics, afraid for their lives

"It shouldn't be like that. It's not humane

"Sarah," a Tech student who had an abortion at 17, said the coldness of the clinic was what bothered her.

"The picketers and everything outside was bad, but I was strong in my convictions, so while that hurt, it wasn't life-shattering," she said.

"But when I got into the clinic, they just took me from the waiting room to the operating room and then to the bathroom when it was all over. No one really ever spoke to me, except to tell me to put these pads on

Cow to give birth to cloned extinct ox

Cow set to give birth to previously extinct Asian gaur species of ox.

BOSTON (AP) - Meet Bessie, who could soon be the first cow to give birth to a cloned ox. If she delivers the rare Asian gaur growing inside her, she will herald a stunning new way to save endangered, or even recently extinct, animals.

The bovine surrogate mother is carrying the gaur fetus on a farm near Sioux City, Iowa, and is expected to give birth to "Noah" next month.

'He will be the first endangered animal we send up the ramp of the ark," said Robert Lanza, the vice president of medical and scientific development at Advanced Cell Technology, and one of the lead authors of a study published Sunday in the journal Cloning. "This is no longer science fiction.

It's very, very real.' Scientists had previously shown it is possible for one species to give birth to implanted embryos taken from a similar species. But this is the first time they have combined that technique with cloning.

Using a technique developed by ACT in Worcester, scientists removed the DNA from one of Bessie's eggs and fused the egg with a skin cell taken from a living gaur, producing a genetically gaur egg that would be accepted by Bessie's immune system.

Noah doesn't have a father. Before being implanted in Bessie's uterus, the egg was artificially induced to begin dividing without being fertilized.

The technique could not be used on long-extinct species because the DNA donor cells must come from a live animal, one that has been dead for less than five days, or one that has been frozen since its death.

The goal of the research is to use the cross-species cell transfer technology to reprogram human cells for medical purposes, said Michael West, chief executive officer of ACT.

Until then, if Noah's birth is successful, developers say the technique could be used to repopulate rare animal species.

The Spanish government has given ACT approval to clone the bucardo, a newly extinct Spanish mountain goat. The last bucardo died earlier this year and was immediately frozen. Researchers also are considering rare animals such as the African bongo, the ocelot and the giant panda.

'We're not trying to build a big Noah's Ark and save every animal, but we want to point the way for how this can be done," he said. "Saving the world is a tall order, but we're trying."

However, animal preservationists fear the public will prefer the less-costly cloning techniques and pull funding for expensive breeding and habitat protection programs already in place. The danger is that this could be seen as an alternative," said John Rennie, editor of Scientific American magazine. "But cloning is just one more tool to use along with the rest of the measures we already take to preserve species.

Even some critics of cloning say the ACT researchers may have stumbled upon a positive use of the technology.

"There are no moral problems with this," said Michael Grodin, a professor in Boston University's School of Public Health who has opposed advances that could lead to the cloning of humans. "There are a host of reasons why cloning humans is wrong, but this could be a positive step toward maintaining these species.'

Bessie was one of 32 cows implanted with the fused eggs, and the only one to bring an embryo to near-

Three others came close, but researchers removed the embryos midway through the pregnancy to make sure the fetuses were developing.

"The tests showed that the chromosomes were developing as beautiful little gaurs," Lanza said. "This is the very first time this technology has ever generated a full pregnancy.

Although the technique could be used with cells from animals that were frozen immediately after death, it could not resurrect a woolly mammoth from specimens frozen for centuries in Siberian permafrost because their DNA has become fragmented, he

"It's like trying to rebuild the Roman Forum," Lanza said. "All the pieces are somewhere in Rome, but you have to be able to reassemble them. And that would take a long

Prospective students had the opportunity to attend advisement sessions concerning the departments of their choice. They could also visit about 200 booths in the University Center devoted to providing information about various campus organizations and programming.

Pam Sexton, a College of Arts and Sciences academic program assistant, said one of the most important aspects of University Day is that it allows prospective students to learn about the process of enrolling in college.

"University Day allows students to make sure they know what they are doing," she said. "It helps them to plan for what they want to do for the next four years and points them to the right people to get what they need. She said one of the fears parents have expressed when visiting the booth was that their child might become lost among the thousands of students who already attend Tech.

"The parents I have talked to want to make sure their student gets into the right area of study and doesn't get tossed around in the shuffle," Sexton said.

What the media misses

To the editor: For those of you who will be voting for the next U.S. president and know little about the current campaign financing, here are a few things you should know. BOTH major parties outspent the previous elections long ago. This money for the most part is coming from large corporate lobbying groups, which often spend the same amount for both candidates.

Do you think these mega-corporations (many of which wouldn't hesitate to cut insurance or retirement benefits for employees) genuinely care who becomes the next president of the U.S.? They are merely making an investment, which will offer them a huge return in the form of legislation. There are many examples of what their investment has returned them, such as the pharmaceutical industry (the largest of donors) getting patents extended on drugs (netting them billions of dollars from consumers), farm subsidies (costing taxpayers), and the acceptance of mega-mergers, which should be a violation of anti-trust laws. I am not anti-business in the least; it is the executives of corporations who hate competition. They are paying for legislation, which allows them to receive large tax breaks (so you and I will pick up the tab), and will allow them to retain an unfair advantage over the competition (so prices for you and I will go up). None of these issues are discussed in the media because they also have too much to gain from the current political climate.

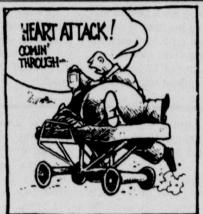

The issues discussed in the media are primarily about social issues, which cause passionate debates among voters and keep them focused on the differences between the two parties. These social concerns rarely are solved and are of no interest to most of the contributors. Meanwhile, in the background, laws are being passed, which end up costing the majority of Americans billions of dollars (and you thought taxes were high). I was compelled to write this letter because I am disgusted in our current 'democracy'.

I was brought up to believe that our system of government was sacred and the envy of the world, and now I am disillusioned. Real leaders who stand up to this corruption will not make it to major elections, like Sen. John McCain, because they will not receive the financial backing of the 'two' parties. No wonder voter turnout is so small. If you believe this corruption needs to be exposed, please vote for someone with the courage to speak out.

Do not let someone tell you that you are 'wasting your vote' or handing the election to 'the other candidate', but remember that the guiding principle behind a democracy is to vote for the best person, not for a 'winner'. A 'wasted vote' is one for someone other than what your conscience tells you or, worse yet, not voting at all. If you are at all interested in the extent of political corruption, please visit www.commoncause.org for up-todate information.

Reviewer confused

To the editor: I am writing in response to what I deem is a poor review of Texas Tech University Theatre's production of "Victims of Duty." The reviewer stated, "students were introduced to the theatre of the bizarre." I feel that the review stems from a misunderstanding of Absurdist theatre. Please let me clarify. A reasonable definition of Absurdism theatre is theatre that creates "the sense of metaphysical anguish at the absurdity of the human condition". (Martin Esslin. The Theatre of the Absurd, 1961.) The reviewer states that the message of the play is hard to grasp, which is typical of all of Ionesco's work. Every playgoer has the ability to receive something different from the experience. The challenge to understand the play, not just pan it, must come from within each person in the audience. Art can exist without understanding and frequently does exist without approval. Bravo to a cast, crew and director who tackled a brilliantly tough script. Thanks for exposing Tech to the possibility of learning something about themselves through theatre.

What about

To the editor: Before I begin this letter, I would like to state that everyone is entitled to their opinion, so here is mine. After reading Amy Curry's article "Abortion issues run deeper than deciding" (UD, Oct. 4), I felt it was my obligation to defend all the pro-life activists who believe an unborn child has a right to life. In her article, she stated that a woman is faced with only two choices (a morning-after pill or abortion). Curry left out one of the most reasonable and logical choices of all - adoption. There are many families out there that are faced with the problems and are unable to have children. Why not their dreams as well as an unborn child? In closing, my experience of working at a daycare center has shown me that each and every child is a blessing in their own way.

Futures not ruined by kids

To the editor: This is in response to Amy Curry's article on abortion (UD, Oct. 3). I am sure Curry's article was 40 percent opinion and 60 percent response seeking, but she led her readers astray. There is another option you failed to mention adoption. There are thousands of couples not able to have children, who would graciously take on the responsibility that some ladies are not willing to accept.

Let's face it, the No. 1 reason most women have abortions is because they don't want to endure the shame and consequences that go along with having sex. Anyone who takes a biology course knows that even contraceptives are not 100 percent effective, and the only way not to get pregnant is to not have sex.

If you are going to have sex, then be prepared for the consequences that can come with it (like STDs, intense emotions and pregnancy). Through pregnancy comes life. It seems to me that as soon as fertilization occurs, you have a living organism. It may not appear as a human, but unless that organism is destroyed, then it lives; if it lives - it is

As for all you ladies out there that are pregnant or thinking about having children, you might as well pack your bags and go home. According to Curry, your future doesn't have a chance and an abortion is the only way to "preserve any chances of having a future."

What about the single moms that work their way through college and become successful? They should be applauded. If abortion is the choice, then women need to seek help. They will be better off because one thing is for sure, that road is a long one to be traveling solo. God bless all associated with this issue.

Tramps defended To the editor: I am saddened by the fact that Saddle Tramps are again the target of unfair criticism; however, I do appreciate Mr. Formby's positive comments toward Saddle Tramps. I will only challenge the issue he raised regarding Jonathan Harrison's interview of Matt Muench.

First, could you please tell me the difference between Mr. Harrison using his show to defend Saddle Tramps as opposed to the use given by Mr. Muench on his column to criticize such an organization? If you would care to listen to Jock Talk on a more regular basis, you would grasp that it is a show with a broad range of topics regarding athletics at Texas Tech.

Second, the "stupid, mindless questions that had little or nothing to do with sports" are simply a fun part of the show. These questions are asked to all of Harrison's guests. I know they are not as serious or professional as The UD's columns that maintain the student body so well and objectively informed, but hey, live a little. I wrote this not because I consider Jonathan Harrison a friend (just as Brandon didn't write his column just because "Matt Moo" is his friend) but because, honestly, I am tired of all the negative things said about Saddle Tramps.

And your comment regarding tradition? Wow. Amazing. I wonder why traditions survive and transcend generation after generation. Regardless, Brandon, come to the Nebraska game Saturday. I personally invite you. But please wear red because that is part of the tradition. Such tradition also allows us to sit there (or talk to the Tech Athletic Department about it if you don't like it because they are the ones that provide us those seats). And tradition is an integral part of any society.

Column

It's just my opinion, not my manifesto

ll columnists, at some point in our lowly careers, fall victim to all types of criticism based on what we write. I am usually able to laugh off or disregard most of the negative things printed about me or said to me, but since I do have this limited space in The University Daily every Tuesday to rant about anything I feel the need to rant about, I am taking this opportunity to clarify and set the record straight.

I am the first to admit that my ideas are anything but mainstream. My beliefs are the product of thinking for myself, which is not popular with the masses, and it never has been. Larger examples include Socrates, Jesus, Gandhi and Thoreau, who all suffered at least some consequences for their unpopular views.

First of all, I am the most peace-loving person I know, but because I openly enjoy solitude, I try not to let my life center around material possessions and goals and it makes more sense to me to point out the polemics of our government rather than pretend it's flawless, I get compared to the Unabomber? Give me a break! I didn't know trying not to get sucked into the materialism of America was such a

Joe Secondly, I have a certain appreciation Colley for the world and the people in it. Individuals are the reason that we are able to live as we do, and my thanks goes out to them, not the government. Again, forgive me if respecting people and their freedom is a sin. The humble people of the world have my appreciation and when we individuals who deserve the credit not the arbitrary institution of government. I have been portrayed as mean-spirited because, allegedly, I don't give credit where credit is due; this is simply false.

receive benefits from living under the U.S. government, it's the

As I drive on the streets and highways, I'm sorry, but I don't thank my lucky stars that the government is generous enough to provide me with them. I thank the individuals who work through the heat and the cold to earn their paychecks. They are the ones who have my respect.

As I wake up in the morning everyday to further my education, I don't see that politicians make it possible. I see the professors, advisers and even the students who, just like the rest of us, work at what they do to make my education possible. These are the people that I thank for my benefits.

As I ride the bus around campus and to and from my house, I don't thank Citibus or the administration; I thank the bus drivers.

Even though I have been annoyed with certain departments, such as the Financial Aid Office, I have nothing but gratitude for the individuals who work there. They put up with 10 times more bullshit from us then we ever will from them, as those employees work to benefit us.

Sure, I'll admit that our government helps people here and abroad, and I could easily point out many good things that can be traced back to the institution of government, but I generally (always) leave that to the other columnists.

To put our government in terms of an analogy: If you had to choose between a cold, the flu, or tuberculosis, you would, of course, choose the cold, but that doesn't mean you are going to bow down and worship it because it is better than the alternatives, or would you?

I write for The University Daily for two main reasons. First of all, I enjoy it. I like writing. I like my opinions. Why not put them together? Secondly, I write in hopes of providing our readers with a change of pace, whether it be on my nonconforming political views or my skepticism of the world as I make fun of my own lack of ambition.

Regardless of whether or not you agree with me, I hope to entertain you, to get you to think, and to challenge you, as I welcome people to challenge me. Would you rather me choose a side? Do you want me to be a republican so that I can listen to Rush Limbaugh and regurgitate his high points? Do you want me to be a democrat so that I can tell you every week how we are destroying the earth? Maybe I should be a libertarian because that would at least muffle my vociferation in a politically correct manner.

I think I'll just go on doing what I do, believing what I believe, and writing what I write. I know some people are not going to be satisfied until I write exactly what they want to hear. Others understand that it is possible to enjoy reading about a particular view without agreeing with it completely. There might even be a person or two that see exactly where I am coming from.

I have been commended and condemned for my columns, and I am under no illusion that I'll ever be able to bring the condemnation to a halt. Anyone that makes their opinions public is bound to come under fire.

I don't mind if people disagree with me, but I cannot suppress my irritation when people insinuate that I am meanspirited or militant when these are the types of things that I wish to get rid of in society and in the government.

Open your eyes and, more importantly, your minds. I speak up for my freedom as well as yours.

Band's eclectic new style tops prior releases

Caedmon's Call's newest album, Long Line of Leavers, is the band's latest work since Forty Acres. Caedmon's Call has also added a new member to the group in pianist Josh ■ Caedmon's Call overcomes acousticfolk label and produces new sound.

> By Leslie Follmar Staff Writer

rom the seven piece, six-year old band Caedmon's Call comes their best album to date.

Long Line of Leavers, which was released today, is turning the heads of some who thought the little Houston band would always be categorized by acoustic-folk.

The band's previous eight releases have never been absent of an acoustic guitar or the sounds of the band's influences such as Indigo Girls and Toad the Wet Sprocket.

It comes as a shock to some diehard fans to hear a horn section in the first cut off the CD, "The Only One", written by Aaron Tate.

Every song on Long Line of Leavers paints a picture of what unconditional love is about.

"Love is Different," written by Derek Webb, tells how love isn't what is seen portrayed by Hollywood, but as the title suggests, is different.

Webb also lays his heart on the line with the song, "Mistake of My Life." Recently engaged, Webb describes his questions about commitment to the girl he wants to marry.

The lyrics read:

"Once I'm gone I cannot look back/ I've got to trust this is right/ 'Cause maybe I'm on my way to find you/ But maybe I'm on my way to make the mistake of my life."

Music Review

Webb finds himself dealing with the human dilemma of finding "the one" or just finding someone who will listen.

The highlight of the album comes on the sixth track, "Masquerade," written by producer Ed Cash.

"Masquerade", sung by Danielle Young, is fashioned as a "smoky 40's lounge jazz." It is easy to imagine Young sitting on top of a grand piano with a World War II soldier at the bar across the room.

This song is brilliant. Through the lyrics and music, they all come together as something very un-Caedmon's Call.

Stepping out of the band's comfort zone, Caedmon's Call has once again proven themselves as one of the most talented bands today.

Recently, 17-year-old Josh Moore was added to accompany the band on the piano, organ, accordion and harmonica.

After the success of the band's previous album, Forty Acres, it comes as no surprise that the Texas band could grow into a musical legacy.

Long Line of Leavers is bound to bring that long-awaited and much deserved Grammy.

There doesn't seem to be much room left for greatness with the album that might follow Long Line of Leavers.

Parents, doctors of babies born with ambiguous sexual organs object to frequent surgical procedures used to define sex of child

Chase was born in New Jersey in 1956, she says, the doctors "kind of freaked out."

"They wouldn't let my mother see me and they wouldn't tell her why," she says. "After three days they decided to tell her that I was a boy, but I was terribly deformed."

Chase was what doctors call an "intersex" baby — meaning she had ambiguous sexual organs. At least one in 2,000 infants is born this way match their chromosomes or don't conform to male or female norms.

Until recently, doctors have commonly operated on the genitals of such infants as soon as possible. Parents were traditionally told to keep the operations a secret, even

The difficulty is that no consensus has yet formed as to when genital surgery is cosmetic and when it is necessary.

Chase was 22 before she obtained her medical records. She learned only then that she'd been raised as a boy named Charlie for a year and a half, after which, she says, her parents "found their way to some doctors who were newly minted specialists in intersex."

Outgoing Miss America earned raves from homeless veterans

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) -Every contender for the Miss America crown adopts a cause be it literacy, AIDS advocacy or another social issue.

Some do so because it's a pageant requirement.

Not Heather French, the reigning Miss America who spent much of her year lobbying lawmakers for more support for homeless veterans. Her platform ran much deeper than pageant protocol.

"It wasn't just a platform for me," French, 25, the daughter of a Vietnam veteran, said Sunday in an interview looking back on her reign. "Being able to show America that we haven't taken care of our veterans the way we should have, it was very emotional."

Appearing at shelters, speaking to groups and lobbying Congress for better programs during her 20,000-mile-a-month tour, French earned rave reviews from advocates in the field.

"On Capitol Hill, in the communities, with our posts, she was just fantastic," said Steve Thomas, a spokesman for the American Legion, the nation's largest veterans organization. In November, President Clinton saluted her efforts at a Veterans Day event.

In February, she urged Kentucky lawmakers to seek federal money for her home state's 350,000 veterans.

In March, she asked that $750,000 of the Department of Housing and Urban Development budget be devoted to homeless veterans.

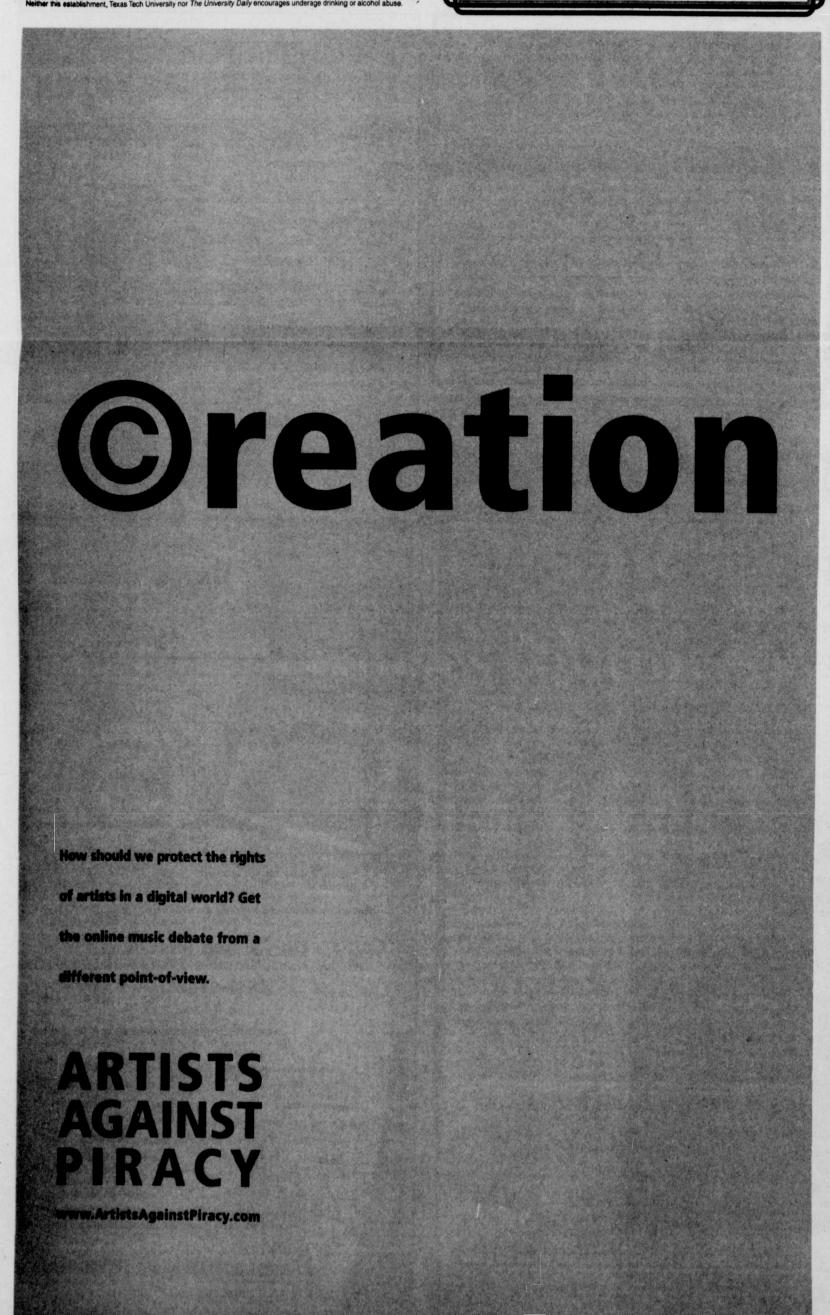

In May, she rode a motorcycle through Washington, D.C., during a "Rolling Thunder" rally to commemorate prisoners of war and veterans still missing in action.

Raiders focus on penalty problem

By Patrick Gonzales Staff Writer

Texas Tech quarterback Kliff Kingsbury perhaps said it best when asked about his team's contest Saturday against No.1-ranked Nebraska.

"Any time you play the No. 1 team in the country, you pretty much have to play a perfect game," he said.

If that's the case, then limiting penalties is one area where the Red Raiders might want to improve on before their much-anticipated match up with the Cornhuskers.

Saturday's contest against Nebraska will be televised by Fox Sports Net (Cox Cable channel 20) at 6 p.m. from Jones SBC Stadium.

Against Baylor on Saturday, the Red Raiders had a season-high 17 penalties for 130 yards.

That performance came one week after Tech was flagged 12 times for 111 vards in a 33-15 loss to Texas A&M.

Last season, through its first six contests, Tech had 43 penalties for 369 yards. This year the Red Raiders have 71 penalties for 593 yards, an average of 98.8 yards per contest, which is 20 vards more than the 78.8 rushing vards Tech averages per game.

Tech coach Mike Leach said, after penalties was the biggest concern for his offense

"I don't know (what is causing it), but its been kind of frustrating," Leach said. "It's not like there is one guy that's doing it everytime; they're sort of passing it around a little bit. I think the biggest thing is to just emphasize it."

Despite the high number of penalties Tech produced Saturday, the Bears still could not take advantage of mis-

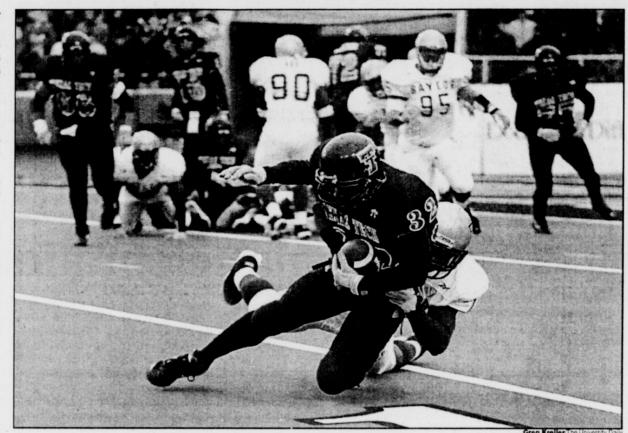

In fact, the 130 yards in penalties was more than the 100 yards Baylor had rushing.

However, against the Cornhuskers the Red Raiders may not have much room for mistakes.

Nebraska will enter the contest with the No. 1 rushing offense in the nation, averaging 351.4 yards-percontest. It will mark the fifth time in school history that Tech has faced a team ranked No.1 in the Associated Press Top 25 Poll.

The Red Raiders are 0-5 in those

"We just have to be kind of careful (against Nebraska), because we had 17 penalties (against Baylor) and that's going to hurt us if it's a pretty close game," Tech center Toby Cecil said. "We have to make sure that we limit the contest Saturday, that lowering the all of that and just stay focused."

Tech running back James Easterling is tackled after a run against Baylor last Saturday at Jones SBC Stadium. The Red Raiders had a season-high 17 penalties against the Bears.

Stoops and staff face tough challenge at Kansas State

DALLAS (AP) — When Bob Stoops They put a lot of hard work in that proput together his coaching staff at Oklahoma, he was only looking for the best coaches. Three of them — offensive coordinator Mark Mangino and codefensive coordinators Mike Stoops and Brent Venables — just happened to come from Kansas State. "I was hired here and paid good money. My job was to get the best coaches to coach with me if they wanted to," Stoops said . "I don't see that there's a problem. Coaches leave

Now they're returning eighthranked Oklahoma (5-0, 2-0 Big 12) to national prominence. And they face likely their toughest challenge to date when, a week after embarrassing No. 25 Texas 63-14, they play Saturday at second-ranked Kansas State (6-0, 2-0).

Bob Stoops had also been on coach Bill Snyder's staff at Kansas State. Stoops was an assistant coach and defensive coordinator for the Wildcats

Mourning's return in question in Miami

BOCA RATON, Fla. (AP) - At first the workout sounds like any other Miami Heat practice, with Pat Riley's voice and the squeal of sneakers reverberating in the gym.

This is more than just basketball, though. The Heat are playing a tense waiting game.

They broke training camp Monday without all-star center Alonzo Mourning, and they don't know if or when he'll return. He has been in Miami undergoing further tests so doctors can determine the best course of treatment for an apparent kidney disorder. Mourning told his best friend in the NBA, Seattle center Patrick Ewing, that he'll play this season. At Mourning's request, the Heat have declined to discuss his condition or prognosis.

"Zo left me a message Sunday and told us to keep working hard, and he'll take care of his end of it," Riley said. 'He's in great spirits. He just wants to find out what's available out there and what the definitive answer is, and then we'll go from there.'

Mourning's ailment was discovered during a routine physical examination before training camp began Wednesday.

'We're more concerned about Alonzo as a person than as a player," forward Brian Grant said. "We're not even thinking about when he's going to come back, but just is he going to be all right. We should know that pretty soon."

Mourning discussed his condition last week with Ewing, The Miami Herald reported.

"Our conversation went fine, and he was in good spirits,' Ewing said. "In fact, he cursed me out because I sounded depressed on the phone when he

Muench's keys to a Red Raider upset

Upset will be the word of the day come Saturday when Texas Tech meets No.1 Nebraska at Jones SBC

Now, when I say upset, I mean either, there will be another goalpost parade down University Avenue, or there will just be a lot of upset Lubbockites.

It will be interesting to see how Tech will play against maybe the best team they have faced in years.

However, is Nebraska really Muench that good? I have been thinking about this game since the Texas A&M loss and my first thought was that Tech is going to get crushed.

But now, it is too close to tell. Most people are probably saying Tech's chances of winning are as slim as the Saddle Tramps letting someone with a blue shirt sit with them at the games However, I think Tech has a good

Whoever wins on Saturday will not win in blowout fashion, but will win in more of a dramatic fashion.

I think Nebraska is the most overrated No. 1 in years, but I also think the Tech defense is a little overrated.

Tech can play with Nebraska, but the key is how long can they play with the Huskers?

If they play what coaches like to call "a full game," Tech wins and college football fans will all know who

But if they play just two or three quarters, the Red Raiders will remain in the middle class of college foot-

In Nebraska's last three games against Iowa, Missouri and Iowa State, the Huskers overcame sluggish starts in the first half, but blew out their opponents in the second terback Eric Crouch and the rest of the Huskers were just teasing the Hawkeyes, Tigers and Cyclones. No teasing will be allowed against

I guess you can say Husker quar-

Tech because there will be too many good matchups to look for during Saturday's contest.

Here are a few of them.

Crouch: The Huskers are a run-oriented team, but as he showed against Iowa, Crouch is not afraid to Crouch has made opposing offenses look like defenders chasing chickens all season.

Linebacker Lawrence Flugence does lead the nation in tackles but look at the opposing offenses he has

Saturday will be his and the Raider defense's first true test of the 2000 campaign.

Tech has to contain Crouch and keep the Husker offense off the field.

If they do that, defensive coordinator Greg McMackin will have a head-coaching job locked somewhere next season. Two: Kliff Kingsbury vs. Nebraska for Nebraska, it is their young sec-This is the game Kingsbury has to shine. This is the game we have to see if Mike Leach's new offense will secondary: If there is one weakness live up to all the hype it has had over the past months. Kingsbury has not been too successful throwing downfield this year and he has to do that Saturday to

One: Tech's defense vs. Eric exploit the young Husker defensive

But to do that, he must have time. Tech's offensive line is weak and has lacked consistency this season dealing with injuries and position

They have to have a big game because the little screen passes we have been seeing will not work most of the time due to the speed and strength of the Husker linebacker

Three: Shaud Williams vs. Mike Leach: Shaud needs to get the ball way more than he does now.

He is Tech's only big-time playmaker. Throw him a bomb, hand him the ball or just do something to get him involved.

It seems that Leach plays Ricky Williams more because of veteran respect, but if he doesn't involve Shaud more, than Leach better hope Shaud isn't thinking about somewhere else to play college football in Four: Tech fans vs. Nebraska: I already think Nebraska won this match-up because, frankly, I don't think Lubbock has good football

Even if Lubbock did, playing at

Jones SBC Stadium will be like playing against a high school crowd compared to what the Huskers have already faced on the road this year.

Nebraska is 2-0 away from home winning in front of over 50,000 fans against Iowa State last week, but earlier this year, they beat Notre Dame in South Bend, Ind. If you can win at South Bend, you can win anywhere. Tech fans have to fill the stadium ip no matter what the temperature is outside. The students have to be louder than usual. Maybe the reason they aren't as loud as they should be is because the cheerleader on the microphone annoys them so much that they just do not want to say anything.

My prediction for Saturday's game: I have no idea. Ask me on Fri-

Bulldogs will take on their opponents "Between the Chain Link Fence" instead of "Between the Hedges.

The damaged shrubs will be pruned so they can grow back in time for next season. In the meantime, an unsightly chain-link fence that used to be hidden from view will provide a barrier between fans and

"It's going to be ugly," athletic director Vince Dooley said Monday. 'We hope this will be a good lesson for the future.'

Dooley criticized those who took part in the postgame melee, which left one student seriously injured, a and the stadium itself with at least $70,000 in damage. Fans ripped out seats, vandalized alarm systems and destroyed wheelchair ramps in the hoopla over a 21-10 victory that ended a nine-game losing streak to the Volunteers.

"What really disappoints me is the destruction of other parts of our stadium," Dooley said.

"You could see a total disregard for the pride and tradition we have in our own place."

The mob scene at Georgia was only the latest in a series of incidents plaguing Southeastern Conference schools this season.

South Carolina fans have twice stormed the field at Williams-Brice Stadium, while LSU and Mississippi State have cleaned up from similar celebrations.

SEC presidents discussed the issue during a regularly scheduled meeting in Atlanta on Monday.

They announced a spring summit involving athletic directors and coaches to discuss ways of controlling unruly fans.

'It's a concern," SEC commissioner Roy Kramer said.

'We're going to take a hard look at it. We need to work with student bodies and fans. There's not a magic potion here."
