Jury selection begins for yogurt shop trial

AUSTIN (AP) — Jury selection will take up to three weeks in the murder trial of one of the three men accused in the 1991 slayings of four teen-age girls in an Austin vogurt shop, a defense attorney said Monday, the first day of selection.

If convicted of capital murder, Robert Burns Springsteen IV could face the death penalty.

The murders stunned Austin residents, who have followed the decade-long investigation in the media and driven past billboards displaying the victims' pictures.

Finding fair jurors for highprofile cases is usually difficult, but Springsteen's lawyer, Joe James Sawyer, said publicity doesn't seem to be the obstacle he expected in this case.

'There was much less hostility than I would have thought to encounter ... not as many eyes looking at the floor as I'd have thought, not nearly the number of crossed arms," said Sawyer, who instructed potential jurors about the importance of fairness in capital murder cases. "It's a nice way to start.'

Of the first panel of 100 potential jurors, only two said they hadn't heard of the murder case before being called for jury duty.

Judge sets hearing date for Nichols

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) - A judge on Monday set a May 21 preliminary hearing date to determine whether convicted Oklahoma City bombing conspirator Terry Nichols should be tried on state murder charges.

State District Judge Ray Dean Linder said he wants to conclude the hearing by June 15. Nichols is charged with 160 counts of firstdegree murder in the April 19, 1995, bombing of the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building, which resulted in 168 deaths.

The date was set after defense attorney Brian Hermanson said he would not be ready by a suggested hearing date of May 7. Hermanson also said it would be inappropriate to begin May 17, because it would be the day after the scheduled execution of convicted Oklahoma City bomber Timothy McVeigh.

"We're talking about a delay of at most two weeks," Hermanson said. "The two weeks mean a significant amount to us."

Area wineries continue offering 'best buys' to national consumers im McPherson, the Cap-Rock winemaker, has been in the wine business for 22 years. His wines are recognized as "Best Buys" and "Best Values" in The Wine Enthusiast and Wines and Spirits.

Making wine is a year-long process, which begins with harvesting the grapes in August and September, he said. Cap-Rock's grapes come from its 119-acre estate vineyard. The wine ferments until November.

McPherson said the wines are bottled 20 days during March, April and May, with 53 wines bottled a minute and 1,600 cases bottled in an eight hour workday. He said the bottling equipment cost $280,000.

Cap-Rock's wine is distributed in New Mexico, Louisiana, Oklahoma, Idaho, Missouri, Canada, Switzerland and the Czech Republic, he said, as well as local restaurants, like Jazz, Grapevine and the Lubbock Country Club. "The restaurant industry is what really helps selling wine," McPherson

Don Roark, the sales and marketing manager, said Cap-Rock also designs their own labels for their wines. One of the designs depicts the geological formation of the caprock itself. Cap-Rock Winery received its name from the actual geologic formation of the Texas High Plains. The caprock extends from the Great High Plains to the northern part of the Texas Panhandle.

Tech grade

■ Requests must be made by students to the TechSIS Web site before their grades are sent in May.

> By Pam Smith Staff Writer

Students who are expecting the university to mail this semester's grades to them this May might be in for a surprise, a Texas Tech official said.

Registrar Don Wickard said beginning this semester, the registrar's office will no longer mail paper copies of student's grades to their permanent addresses unless requested by the student via the TechSIS Web site.

Instead, students' grades will be posted on the Web site. Grade reports will still be sent out to students who are on academic probation or suspension to their permanent legal address.

"We wanted to give students the option of receiving their grades online," Wickard said. "However, those students who still need a permanent copy can have one sent to their address. Students who would like to receive a paper copy should log on to the TechSIS Web site and select "update addresses." Wickard said they should then select "grades" from the pull-down list and click "select." Then the student should enter the address they would like their grades sent to each semeste This will be the only address grades will be sent to, whether it is the student's permanent address or not. Wickard said all faculty members should post grades by 5 p.m. May 14, however, some faculty members may have their grades posted to the Web site before this date. He said requested grade reports will be mailed out May 17.

While Tabitha Moore, a senior human development and family studies major from Dallas, said she has not had any trouble receiving her grades in the mail, she thinks the availability of grades online will make receiving the information more convenient.

"I think posting grades on the Web is great," she said. "It will make receiving grades a lot easier and faster than before."

Wickard said the registrar's office began notifying students of the change last fall when grades were sent out. He also said cards have been distributed to several offices on campus and on the TechSISWeb site to remind students. 'We have placed reminders in various departments across campus to remind students," he said. 'Students need to know their grades will not be coming unless they do this." Other than providing students with a different option to receive their grades, Wickard said, posting grades online also will solve some of the problems students have in receiving their grades.

In the past, he said, the registrar's office usually encounters a large number of returned grade letters to its office. Once this happens, there is little they can do until the student contacts them. Also, when grades were automatically sent to students' permanent legal address, this delayed the reception information.

'Sometimes when we mailed the grades to a student's permanent address, their parents weren't home when they arrived, and the students were still here," Wickard said. "We have also had situations where students have requested their grades be sent

Grant could benefit forensics center's development

By Linda Robertson Staff Writer

Texas Tech and the Health Sciences Center have many experts in different fields. However, if proposed federal funding is granted, the experts will work together, not only just in academia, but also in criminal justice.

The grant, which is for $5.7 million over five years, will help to underwrite costs in developing the West Texas Regional Forensic Sciences Institute. des Agnes Cruser, assistant professor of psychiatry at Tech, said the grant proposal, which she wrote with the help of pathology professor Jerry Spencer, will help establish several areas necessary to have an institute as strong as is envisioned. "We need the money to acquire equipment, to provide training and get personnel who we don't already have," she said. "We have a multi-talented faculty here at Tech, but we do not have a forensic toxicologist, who is also very important in this line of work."

Cruser said the purpose of the institute is to provide a way to solve and study crimes, as well as to provide a network for other law enforcement agencies in the area.

Joel Kupersmith, dean of the School of Medicine, said this institute will be one of very few in the country because of the way Tech is set up.

"We are truly one of a kind here, area will include eastern New Mexico because on one campus we have a law school, a medical school and a general studies university," he said. "We are also unique in that we contract and do a lot of work with the prison system here, and since we are so rural, we work with many people."

Jerry Spencer, medical examiner for Lubbock and one of the few medical examiners trained in forensic pathology, said while the institute will be based in West Texas, the service and southwestern Oklahoma, with the educational facilities to hold training sessions for the nation.

"We hope to put together a teleconferencing facility that will let us talk to law enforcement agencies from all over," he said. "I agree with Dr. Cruser and Dr. Kupersmith in saying that this is a unique set-up. Most other places have medical

Marriage is a life sentence

he older I get, the more friends I see shuttled away in this thing we call marriage. It's a trap, no question about that. One of my roommates, who wishes to remain anonymous so his girlfriend won't find out he told me this, says with great trepidation that marriage isn't in fact a word but rather a sentence — a life sentence. I myself have never been a huge fan of commitment. I bought my ticket for the commitment flight several years ago, but when the time comes for the plane to pull away from the gate, I keep trading in my boarding pass for a later and better destination. Wow, I never Kenneth realized how good that analogy was until I put it on paper.

I really and truly wish more women thought like I do. Why can't you date someone for two weeks, stick around for the good times and then take your chips to a different table when you start getting dealt crappy cards? As efficient as my utopian dating philosophies would be, I shouldn't stray too far from realism — the idea that eventually I'll end up marrying the woman I'll spend the rest of my life with. There's no escaping it, we're paying for our years of female oppression. As the ladies in my women's studies class would agree, men had it coming. But does it really have to be so bad? With a little bit of

The first thing requiring drastic change is the wedding. Now I know this is a once-in-a-lifetime experience for our female partners, but so is a game seven during the Stanley Cup finals. First of all, we should be able to wear whatever we want. For me, it has to be a kilt. What guy out there doesn't want to be the William Wallace of his wedding and lead his groomsmen up to the front of the church in a plaid skirt? If she can take away your life and your freedom, shouldn't you at least get some say in the attire? And if your wife-to-be points out that you're not Scottish, remind her that it's just as arbitrary as her wearing

Second, practical jokes should be encouraged. A friend of mine has been banned from all events by his mother-in-law since he responded to the priest's question of whether or not he would take her daughter to be his wife with, "yeah, I'll give it a shot." We watch the video every time I'm back home.

Finally, at least give us the reception. Men have no say whatsoever in the actual wedding itself, we should at the very least get to plan the reception to follow. I say have it at a driving range. The groomsmen can put down his nine-iron, and lift up a Dos Equis long enough to say "You're married, congratulations" and go back to working on his backspin all the while fulfilling his traditional responsibilities. It's a win-win

Then we get to the marriage. I'm untraditional in that I'm down with pitching in with the housework and whatnot, but children are still your territory. I, like most men, hardly see myself responsible for another individual's life. I forget to feed my cat several times a month, and I get along pretty well with him, so reminding myself to feed a screaming, drooling and uncivilized product of my sperm is doubtful at best. I figure if it shot out of you, you can take him or her to soccer practice and sit through the PTA meetings.

And what's with you ladies putting so much thought into everything? Realize that if you did something different with your hair, and we didn't say anything, it's not that we don't like it, it's that we're complete idiots and probably wouldn't notice if the Earth's gravity reversed while we were sitting on the couch, let alone the eighth of an inch you had snipped off. And just as so many writers and comedians before me have commented on, if you ask us what we're thinking, and we say "nothing," it's true. Look at the guy sitting closest to you right now. Do you see that expression on his face? That's the look of a man whose shut down every part of his brain excluding the portions that control respiration and heart rate, and the small part behind the cerebellum that naturally directs the eyes to the girl in the pleather pants bending over a few rows in front of you.

If were ever going to curb the rate at which relationships diffuse before they even really start, both parties have to give a little. But as for me, I'll keep my soft seat in the terminal of bachelorhood.

Letters to the editor

Students granted a voice

To the editor: On April 26 and 27 there will be a chance for students to vote on a referendum involving the renovations to Jones Stadium. Senate resolution 36.30 will be voted on in the same manner as the SGA elections. This resolution has been written in the hopes of "improving student representation in athletic matters such as student seating, ticket prices and various other issues important to the students." The resolution serves as an agreement between the Health Sciences Center Student Government, Texas Tech University Student Government Association and the administration to work together on any future decisions involving the United Spirit Arena and Jones SBC Stadium. While not increasing costs to the student, this resolution, if passed, will allow for intramural championships to be held in both the arena and Jones Stadium, extended Raider vision, concessions to be purchased with Tech Express and increased seating for students. In addition to the aforementioned changes, an advisory board will be created consisting of members of the United Spirit Arena and Jones SBC Stadium administration as well as five students, all meeting at least three times during the long semesters. This will allow us, the students, to have a much greater position in regard to our athletic facilities. There is a lot of opportunity for benefit in considering this resolution. The passing of 36.30 will in no way increase student spending; in fact, it will only increase student benefits. Please take the time to familiarize yourself with this resolution so that on April 26 and 27 you will be informed of the advantages of this agreement.

We need not apologize

To the editor: This is in response to Mara Mcoy's column (UD, April 12). Along with the fact the body of the column does nothing to support the headline of the column shows just how little you know about politics. First off, McCoy wrote that the U.S. should apologize for a Chinese fighter hitting one of our planes outside of Chinese airspace. This is so ridiculous it boggles the mind to even think about it, and I think that all right-minded people will agree. Second, you seem to equate international politics with that of elementary school recess politics. International politics is a bit of a step up, in fact many, from that of saying you're sorry for throwing dirt in a friend's eye. The column also seems to say that we never did apologize for the incident when in fact we did in a letter to the wife of the lost Chinese pilot. McCoy also is under the impression that an apology should have been given when the incident happened, i.e. before any investigation into the matter and all possible information was gathered. As quoted directly from President Bush, "Sometimes diplomacy takes longer than we would like it to." This only proves the fact you do not hold even a minute grasp of politics, especially when one is dealing with a communist nation. Next time you decide to write a column about politics I would suggest two things. One, know about your topic. There is a wonderful news show on Channel 49 that is just wonderful and it runs 24-hours a day. Two, put yourself in the position of the person you are writing

Jeff Cummins sophmore undeclared

To the editor: I am responding to the completely ridiculous allegations made in column by Mara McCoy (UD, April 12). The naivete of this girl is blinding. One cannot even begin to compare matters of state and foreign affairs to an apology on an elementary school playground. If this were the case then the world would be united into one nation with no problems or for McCoy, a one world playground. I guess some have no understanding of what an apology is. Let me inform McCoy. An apology is an admission of guilt. You apologize, and you are now liable for the matter for which the apology was issued. I will explain some of the implications of such a strategic blunder as an apology and acceptance of wrongdoing. First, there are no decisive facts in the case to place blame. Remember, in America we believe in innocence until guilt has been proven. Secondly, if you were to apologize, you now introduce the possibility of subjecting our crew to charges and court proceedings. If you think our justice system is harsh, you should sit in on a Chinese court hearing. Thirdly, but possibly the most important, you weaken our national defense by giving Communists the rebuttal of "you did something wrong you now owe us," and what we want is the discontinuation of reconnaissance flights. Just in case you missed this one also, the flights were in accordance with international law and took place in international airspace. We have no reason to apologize, Bush did a great job and handled it with respect and boldness. China is a true threat to the sovereignty of America and continues to grow as a threat. McCoy's solution only would have made them stronger. I suggest she go back to her government class and ask to take it over. You obviously did not do so

Arbor Day rejuvenates

To the editor: I am writing in response to a poorly written column (UD, April 12), "Arbor Day depletes Lubbock resources." The ignorant headline quickly caught my attention, and I remained dumbfounded that such a poorly opinionated column could be printed in the school newspaper. This is obviously a subject Bell knows very little

First, Bell gives his definition of tradition, which is something he has never felt here at Tech. Because of this he has found the bad in every tradition here at Tech including the most beneficial, Arbor Day. Then Bell enlightens us as to a subject he knows very little about, the Ogallala aquifer. "The great Ogallala aquifer," Bell states, "is Lubbock's only source for water." I hate to inform you but this is incorrect. The water we drink and use comes from Lake Meredith.

Next, Bell states that Lubbock is an arid region. This is also incorrect; it is a semi-arid region. Although the two words may not sound much different they are. This means it can support some common types of drought tolerant vegetation, with little to no water application. So, the problem is not that we are planting trees here in Lubbock. Trees help protect against erosion. Here in West Texas we have wind erosion.

Properly planted trees can help shade houses in the summer helping to reduce energy costs. Also, a single acre of trees can sponge up to five and a half tons of carbon dioxide per year, which cleans the air, we breath.

Last, Bell tries to convince us that planting hemp will help sole the world's environmental problems. Not that I have a problem with hemp, but that should be the least of our worries.

I think it is unfair that Bell tries to push his simple-minded opinions on us. When April 27 comes around students and Bell must come up with a better excuse not to participate in Arbor Day.

Spelunking pervades life of cavers

By Cory Chandler Staff Writer

It is dark in the cave, and except for the occasional drip of water, the mountain breathes silently.

Suddenly, there is a scuffle, and a tiny flashlight pierces the blackness, providing the first light the deep caverns have ever seen.

Moments later, a figure climbs into the chamber, moving slowly in an attempt to spare the fragile, crystalline formations growing out of the cave's surfaces.

Spelunker Nancy Aulenbach has been exploring caves for as long as she can remember.

She said this comes naturally to her since she was raised in a family of people interested in cave explo-

"I have been caving my entire life," she said. "My parents are both big cavers, so I was basically doing in utero.' Aulenbach is now starring in a new movie, "Journey into Amazing

"Journey into Amazing Caves" follows two cavers, Aulenbach and Hazel Barton, as they explore caves in Greenland, the Grand Canyon and Mexico's Yucatan Peninsula.

The two cavers are in search of extremophiles, or microorganisms that live in extreme conditions, such as those found at the bottom of deep

Using these extremophiles, the explorers hope to find antibiotics stronger than those currently in use.

Aulenbach said these stronger antibiotics are necessary because antibiotics have been misused in the past, and the strains of bacteria they are meant to combat are growing stronger.

Aulenbach said though this is not her specialty, she worked with Barton to find extremophiles during

She said this is the first time she has worked with Barton.

"We had met several times during national conventions," Aulenbach said. "We had some casual conversations, but never actually considered caving together until we were on the plane to Greenland."

Aulenbach said she was selected for the movie along with Barton from thousands of potential candidates. She said filming the movie presented many challenges since it took place in such extreme conditions. She said the film crew, MacGillivray

Freeman Films, had to use special cameras and rigging to get most of the shots, and that sometimes it could take more than a day to set up for a Aulenbach, a speleologist, or someone who studies caves and their contents, said caving is such a part of her that she married a man who was into caving as well.

"I tried dating several guys who were not cavers," she said. "I took them into caves a few times, and they all thought it was cool at first but got burned out when they realized how hardcore I was. I decided I needed to find a ready-made cave-

Aulenbach said her husband, Brent, even proposed to her while they hung from ropes in the middle

Aulenbach said while she and her husband enjoy exploring new caves, it is something they take very seri-

'There are some sport cavers," she said. "But that is definitely different from what speleologists do. There are definitely times when I would rather run around than work, but that does not happen very of-

Aulenbach said people that are considering breaking into the sport should consider the fact that it takes a lot of work to preserve caves, and that they cannot be repaired once they are damaged.

"This is not something that can be treated like an extreme sport," she said. "A cave is not like a mountain biking trail, where you can replace the trees. If you trash a cave and break the formations, they are gone permanently.

"Journey into Amazing Caves" opened Friday and will be showing at the OMNIMAX theater at the Science Spectrum, 2579 South Loop 289, for about three months.

Tech football starts off on low point

By Phil Riddle Staff Writer

Quarterbacks Kliff Kingsbury and B.J. Symons combined for more than 500 yards passing, defensive back Eric Cooper snagged a pair of interceptions and head coach Mike Leach said Saturday's annual Red-Black spring football game may have been the low point of the off-season.

"It may have been the worst," Leach said after the game. "They need a wake-up call. If we're going to do all the things we do in the weight room, off-season and spring, and we still can't turn it on instantly, we're not getting anywhere."

After all was said and done, the Red team, consisting mostly of first and second teamers, registered a 31-17 win in the contest played at Lowery Field.

Symons, Kingsbury's backup, led all passers, connecting on 22-of-35 passes for 274 yards.

"I wasn't really looking at it as coming out and playing on the second team," said Symons, a sophomore from Houston Cypress Creek.

"I didn't want to be intimidated. I just came out and tried to make reads and look for open receivers and throw the ball. This team's got plenty of good athletes, just because I was on the Black team, I still had some good receivers and the offensive line protected really well. I just had to stay calm and collected and just throw the football. I think I did all right. There are a couple of balls I threw I'd like to get back, but I'm pretty happy with the way the game went.

The two throws he'd like to reclaim were both picked off by Cooper. The sophomore DB from Madison High School in Houston, returned both picks for touchdowns, one covering 45 yards and the other going for 99 yards.

Senior running back Ricky Williams led all rushers racking up 36 vards on seven carries for the Red team, and he added five pass receptions for 13 yards.

Williams said the Raiders were not focused on the job at hand when the spring game kicked off.

'We just didn't execute the way we need to," he said.

p.7 Raider football closes Spring Season

Raider baseball continues streak, sweeps Aggies

By Phil Riddle Staff Writer

Texas Tech left fielder Jason Rainey blasted a three-run homer to give the Raiders the lead and eventually a series sweep over Texas A&M in Sunday's Big 12 baseball series finale.

The Raiders posted a 7-4 win Sunday after notching a 17-7 victory Friday and a 4-1 decision Saturday.

Tech, now 30-14 on the campaign, has won eight straight games, including six in conference sweeps during the past two weekends.

"It's huge," Rainey said of the threegame defeat of the Aggies. "Going down there last year, we lost two out of three. It's a tough place to play, but I credit a lot of this to the fans. They're a big part of this. It's a great feeling to beat A&M and even get the sweep. I think we are out for blood a little more when they come into town."

The senior from Klondike finished the series 6-for-12, including a 4-for-5 outing Friday. He wound up with seven RBI in the set against the Aggies, including three on Sunday's dinger that helped Tech overcome a 3-1 A&M lead.

"The guy was throwing some pretty good pitches," Rainey said. "He was spotting the ball pretty well. I actually let a better pitch go by right before that one. The next pitch just kind of got in on me a little bit, but I got a good part of the bat on it and it got out of here."

The Raiders were limited to just one run on two hits prior to Rainey's homer. Aggie starter Todd Deininger kept the Raiders off balance for the first half of Sunday's game.

"I think their pitcher had us a little out of focus," said Tech coach Larry Hays. "He did a great job on us. Thank goodness he finally got tired."

Rainey's blast plated Tyler Carson, who reached on a fielder's choice, and designated hitter Austin Cranford, who walked.

The Aggies opened up a 3-1 lead in the third when Jeff Freeman doubled and came in after a Neal Stephenson single and a sacrifice fly by Ty Garner.

Tech added a pair of runs in the sixth as Bryon Smith walked and scored on a throwing error by Deininger, and Kerry Hodges was hit the start and he'll have to come in and by a pitch, scooted to third on the error by the A&M hurler and was driven in by a Tony Arnerich double.

Nick Blankenship slapped a ground ball to first for a fielder's choice that scored Cranford, who singled aboard, in the seventh, to wind up the Raiders' offensive output.

Junior left-hander Matt Harbin, now 3-1, earned the win, coming on in relief of starter Cory Metzler. Harbin lasted six innings, giving up one run on five hits and striking out four.

"I knew that if I could keep them from putting up any runs that our hitters would come around and get the job down for us like they did," Harbin

Harbin, while pleased with the Sunday win, said pitching in the third game of the series is something most starters on the staff want.

"Everyone wants to be out there starting and getting the job done," Harbin said. "When you're not out there, it hurts your pride a little. Metz is a great pitcher. They just got to him a little today. Next Sunday, I might get bail me out."

Deininger was Sunday's loser, lasting 5-1/3 innings and giving up five runs on just three hits, while fanning

Saturday's winner for Tech was starter Chris Phillips, 9-2, who posted a complete game victory, allowing seven hits and a single run, striking out four and walking three.

Phillips was aided offensively by Carson, who ripped three hits in as many at-bats, stole a base and drove

Friday's win for the Raiders was on the Big 12 10-run rule. Tech, leading 14-7, plated three runs in the bottom of the eighth to end the contest. Rainey's 4-for-5 was tops for the offense, followed by Cranford's 3-for-4 outing, including a homer and four runs batted in, and Chad Landry, who had three hits, one an RBI double, in
