Man charged in killing of Tech graduate

By April Tamplen/Staff Reporter

Fort Worth police have charged a suspect in the slaying of Texas Tech graduate Rachel Urnosky, who was killed in her apartment in Fort Worth on Dec. 18.

Sheldon Ward, 22, was charged with two counts of capital murder, one for the killing of Urnosky, and another count for the Feb. 14 slaying of Fort Worth resident Nyanuer Pal. He was charged April 9 with Urnosky's killing after being arrested on Feb. 22 for Pal's death.

Another suspect, Ward's roommate, was also arrested for Pal's murder.

Police are investigating to see if there is a connection between the second suspect and Rachel Urnosky's killing, said Detective John McCaskill, from the Fort Worth Police Homicide department.

Rachel Urnosky's father, Terry Urnosky, said finding out this new information of his daughter's death did not bring the closure he had hoped it would.

"It is like the end of one chapter, but we are continuing to write the book," he said. "Just because the killer was caught, it doesn't do anything to fill the hole left inside of all of us."

McCaskill said he linked the two homicides because of a bullet shell found in both women's apartments.

"When police were investigating the hotel Pal was murdered at, a hand gun was recovered," he said. "It was matched with the case of Rachel's murder and we followed through to find enough information to link together the two homicides."

McCaskill said specific information relating the two homicides cannot be released because of the pending court case against Ward.

Urnosky was found dead in her apartment in southwest Fort Worth after co-workers reported she had not shown up to work.

She was a manager for the Buckle clothing store in Hurst.

When police arrived at Urnosky's apartment, the door was unlocked and there were no signs of forced entry, McCaskill said.

McCaskill said Pal was found dead in a hotel room in Fort Worth on Valentine's Day. She suffered a gunshot wound to the head.

Terry Urnosky said most of the information about the case is sketchy because detectives have been tight lipped.

"We are not even sure about what happened that night," he said. "We have suspicions, but most questions have not been answered, and we are in the dark."

Terry Urnosky said the two suspects that have been arrested were both involved with the Feb. 14 murder of Pal, but police have not charged the second suspect in relation to his daughter's death.

"Of course that is subject to change, but right now we do not know the specifics," he said.

Urnosky said the apartment complex his daughter lived in was a gated community and had a secure alarm system.

"Rachel had never met these guys; this was just a random act of violence," he said. "We are glad that the person that murdered her was not anyone close to her. Nobody who knew her would do this; she was my baby."

Rachel Urnosky graduated magna cum laude from Tech in 2000 with a degree in merchandising. She was a member of the dean's council and First Baptist College Ministry in Lubbock.

Ward is being held in Tarrant County Jail with bail of $500,000 for each charge.

Rachel Urnosky is survived by her parents, Terry and Pam Urnosky, and three sisters, Kristin Cary, Amy Tadlock and Kelly Urnosky.

Candidates say city business needs growth

By Jenny Klein/Staff Reporter

Voting began Wednesday for the May 4 city elections, which has drawn seven Lubbock citizens to vie for the mayoral seat being vacated by Windy Sitton.

Isaac "Ike" Garnett, Marc McDougal and Gilbert Montes are three candidates vying for the mayoral seat.

Garnett, 35, is an administrator for the Lubbock Housing Authority. Garnett has lived in Lubbock for 18 years.

Garnett said he is a firm believer in the democratic process. He said he believes the community is declining and said he wants to rebuild it, as well as restore democracy to the local government.

Public officials tend to push what is of interest to themselves, rather than what is in the best interest of the citizens, he said.

"It seems appropriate to get agenda on the floor that is not interest or party driven but a platform that is community driven," Garnett said.

Part of the initiative to make the city more community driven is by helping Lubbock grow, Garnett said. Economic development throughout the city is essential, but particularly in East Lubbock, where there are more vacant lots than houses, and businesses are becoming scarce.

"There is just no economic viability. No growth is happening. After a while, people become disillusioned and disgruntled," Garnett said.

Housing issues, along with issues of morale and hiring practices plague the city and City Hall, he said. Public officials should be recruiting a more diverse office.

The city needs to be aware of the increase of marginal homelessness within the community, he said. Low-income families are finding it more and more difficult to find affordable housing. Having worked at the Lubbock Housing Authority, Garnett said he is more aware of the problem than the city is, but he wants to bring awareness to the community's attention.

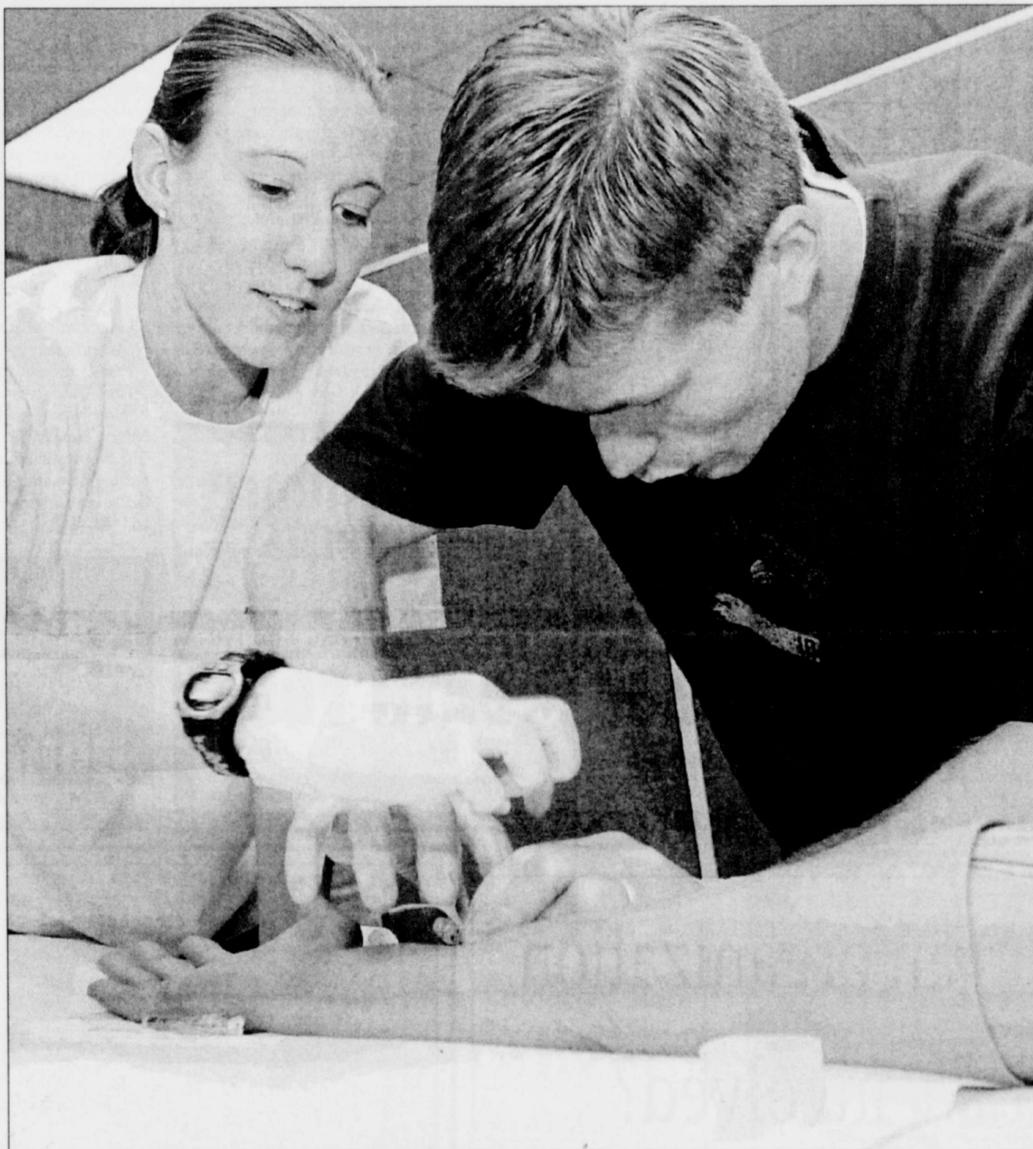

Community health should also be prevalent on the city's agenda. Health issues with the youth, like the high number of sexually transmitted diseases and high pregnancy rate, should cause concern for the city and prompt city involvement.

Increasing the morale in the police department is also on Garnett's agenda for his campaign.

"We have strong men and women in the police force right now, but the morale is low," Garnett said. "They need

PROSPECTIVE PREVIEW

Nursing school offers future students opportunity to see benefits

By Natalie Worthen/Staff Reporter

The Texas Tech School of Nursing offered prospective students the opportunity to see the benefits of becoming a nursing student while meeting faculty and current students on Tuesday at the Tech Health Sciences Center.

Prospective Red Raiders and others interested in the school rounded booths and toured the Clinical Simulation Center, led by current students.

Exa Goode, director of marketing and development for the school of nursing, said student turnout was a success.

"This is the first time we have hosted an all-school open house for all programs," she said. "We're the only school in the TTUHSC that offers an undergraduate, graduate and doctoral program for students."

Goode said the school offered amenities that have been nationally recognized and help intensify the productivity of the curriculums of the School of Nursing, School of Allied Health, School of Medicine and School of Pharmacy.

"The School of Nursing plans on collaborating with the Garrison Geriatric Care Center for students to focus on education, practice and research," she said.

Lewisville girl, boy attend hearing about death of youngest brother

LEWISVILLE (AP) — A 15-year-old girl and her 10-year-old brother who police say admitted to killing their 6-year-old brother appeared at a detention hearing Wednesday morning.

Assistant District Attorney Lee Ann Breeding would not release details of the proceeding, which was closed to the public.

The children's parents, Michael and Rita Carr, were accompanied by several members of their church and the children's Dallas attorney, Daniel Hagood.

"Why don't you just leave us out of it?" Michael Carr told reporters as he approached the detention center.

The body of Jackson Carr, with a puncture wound in the neck, was found buried in mud and debris about 100 yards behind the family's Lewisville home. Authorities and neighbors had spent hours searching for the boy Monday evening after his brother told the parents he could not find him after a game of hide-and-seek.

The siblings were taken into custody early Tuesday after the girl led police to the shallow grave.

Lewisville police spokesman Richard Douglass said Wednesday that the children appeared before a magistrate in their home early Tuesday and were transported to the juvenile detention center on suspicion of murder.

The Denton County District Attorney's office will prepare any formal paperwork that could lead to indictments, he said.

Police declined to comment on a motive in the boy's death, but said important evidence was found in the family's home. The parents are not suspects, Douglass said.

"The sister confessed to killing her brother during an interview," Douglass said. "In an interview with the 10-year-old, he confessed to holding him down during the process of murder."

The Tarrant County medical examiner ruled the death a homicide caused primarily by a stab wound to the left jugular, but also caused by suffocation.

Children age 10 and older typically face juvenile crime charges, and punishment is determined by a juvenile judge. However, children as young as 13 can be certified to stand trial as an adult, depending on the circumstances and the type of crime.

The two older siblings have been in trouble before.

Ambassador to address Iraqi issues

By Preston Files/Staff Reporter

The office of International Affairs is bringing former U.S. Ambassador to Iraq, Edward Peck, to the International Cultural Center and the Texas Tech campus today and Friday.

Peck will deliver a lecture at the International Cultural Center in the auditorium at 7 p.m. today.

Peck has been involved in speaking and training in government agencies such as the CIA, Defense Mapping Agency, FBI, and J.F. Kennedy Special Warfare Center. His media interaction includes NBC, MSNBC, Fox, CNN, CNBC, ABC and CBS.

The title of the Ambassador's lecture is "Doing It All Wrong in the Middle East: Iraq."

Idris Traylor, executive director of the Office of International Affairs and director of the International Cultural Center, said Peck is an engaging speaker.

"This is important because it is a very timely and important topic that affects every person in the United States in one way or another," he said.

While Peck is here, he will lecture to students in classrooms and inform students of career opportunities.

Safei Hamed, assistant professor in the department of landscape architecture, said Traylor is bringing in people from the State Department to introduce another dimension onto the campus. He said the lecture is intriguing because Peck has been a career diplomat all of his life, and because he is retired now, he is free to reflect.

"Obviously due to his title of the lecture, he has some criticism of the way the U.S. is conducting its foreign affairs and policies," he said.

Peck will be speaking to Hamed's environmental planning course at 4 p.m. today.

"What students need to realize is that diplomacy does not stop with peace and war," Hamed said.

Peck will speak with Tech students interested in an international career, a career in foreign services or an internship for the State Department from 4 to 5 p.m. Friday at the International Cultural Center, Room 108.

Peck also will meet with Muslim and Arabic students from Tech and the Lubbock community Friday at 2 p.m. at the Islamic Center.

The Rundown

Houston couple mourns son's death

HOUSTON (AP) — While serving in Afghanistan, Army Staff Sgt. Brian Craig would call his family at least once a week, and sometimes more often if there were reports of American casualties.

"For the last couple months, the phone would ring early Saturday morning," said Barbara Craig, his mother. "He couldn't tell us where he was or exactly what he was doing. But he would check in just to say 'I am fine.'"

When Arthur and Barbara Craig of Houston heard that four U.S. soldiers were killed Monday in Kandahar as they dismantled confiscated rockets, they worried. Soon their fears were confirmed.

Barbara Craig was home alone on Monday when an Army car pulled up to the Craig residence in north Harris County and two military men got out.

She was just returning from taking her husband to the airport for a missionary trip to the Ukraine.

"I had just gotten home, and there they were," Barbara Craig said, bracing at the pain of receiving the news alone.

She called her husband, Arthur, and said their youngest son was among the dead.

Defense master plan to see big changes

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Pentagon is making the biggest changes in decades to its master plan for assigning war-fighting responsibilities at home and around the world, officials said Tuesday.

The redesign, expected to be announced Wednesday by Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld, is meant to reflect a stronger emphasis on defense of the United States in light of the Sept. 11 attacks.

It also is supposed to streamline a command structure that is complex and, in many respects, rooted in a Cold War-era approach to fighting standing armies, air forces and navies in predictable parts of the world. As the suicide hijackings of Sept. 11 showed, the nation faces unconventional threats from unpredictable sources, and former adversaries like Russia are now partners in the war on terrorism.

One new command, to be called Northern Command, will be responsible for defense of U.S. territory, including the waters off the East and West coasts, according to officials who discussed some details of the plan on condition of anonymity. President Bush is expected to nominate Air Force Gen. Ralph Eberhart as the first commander of Northern Command.

Under the existing arrangement for defense of U.S. territory, which has been in place since World War II, responsibility is shared by numerous commands. The North American Aerospace Defense Command, for example, is in charge of air defense of the United States and Canada.

Powell admonishes Arafat's hesitance

JERUSALEM (AP) — Ending a 10-day Mideast peace mission with little to show, Secretary of State Colin Powell said Wednesday that Israel had promised to withdraw troops from the West Bank within a week. He bluntly admonished Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat that he had to do more to fight terrorism.

President Bush said Powell had made progress but made clear that much more remains to be done, saying, "the time is now for all to make the choice for peace."

Israel and the Palestinians blamed each other for Powell's failure to achieve more.

"Who can accept this?" said an angry Arafat, complaining of the Israeli siege of his Ramallah headquarters.

Powell, for his part, focused on Prime Minister Ariel Sharon's promise to wind down the Israeli military offensive in Palestinian towns and villages, calling the operation an obstacle to starting peace talks.

"I came here not knowing how long the operation would go on," Powell said.

"We had heard everything from a couple more weeks to a couple more months. I leave here able to say to the president, it wasn't immediate but it is now coming to an end."

Bush, in a speech at Virginia Military Institute, offered next steps for all sides, saying the Palestinian Authority "must act — must act — on its words of condemnation of terror." Israel, he said, "must continue its withdrawal and all Arab states must step up to their responsibilities."

"The Egyptians and Jordanians and Saudis have helped in the wider war on terrorism and they must help confront terrorism in the Middle East," Bush said.

In a news conference before heading home via Egypt, Powell said he would return to the region "to move ahead" with efforts to get peace negotiations on track. He gave no date and said in the meantime, CIA Director George Tenet, U.S. mediator Anthony Zinni and Assistant Secretary of State William Burns will try to improve security and direct the two sides to peace making.

Bonfire lawsuits will be heard in Bryan

BRYAN (AP) — While wrongful-death lawsuits relating to the 1999 bonfire collapse at Texas A&M will be heard in Bryan, a Tarrant County probate court judge has ruled.

During a Tuesday hearing in Fort Worth, Judge Steve King granted defendants' motions to transfer the cases from probate court in Tarrant County to state district court in Brazos County.

The suits were filed separately last year in Tarrant County by the families of Jerry Don Self and Chad Powell, two of the 12 Aggies killed when the bonfire toppled Nov. 18, 1999.

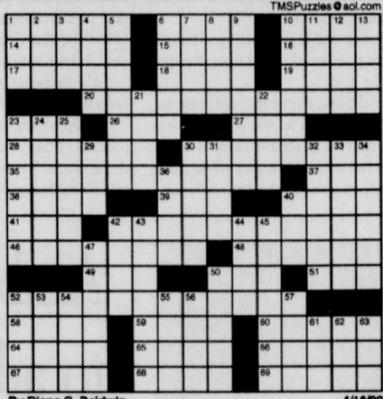

Darrell Keith, a Fort Worth lawyer representing Self's mother, Jacquelyn Self, said he intends to ask the court to reconsider and reverse the ruling.

"I have great respect for Judge King, but in this particular ruling, I believe he erroneously ruled in favor of the defense," Keith told the Bryan College-Station Eagle for its Wednesday editions.

Attorneys for the 60 defendants, including Texas A&M officials and former bonfire student leaders, argued that state law requires the trials to take place where the accident occurred.

to be encouraged and motivated to do the best job to the best of their ability."

Garnett said the city needs a mayor "who will ride with police officers on duty to see what they have to go through."

Improved communication between the citizens and the city is an important issue to be looked at, he said. City officials claim to have an open-door policy, but citizens aren't really being heard.

"A number of people feel like they don't have an ear in the city ... like they don't have access," he said. "Everybody claims to have this open-door policy, but are these people really being heard?"

Being mayor entails the ability to relate to a wide spectrum of people, Garnett said.

"I would treat every person with the utmost respect, despite their position in life," he said.

Garnett said he refuses to compromise integrity of the mayoral office for his own personal interests.

Garnett said he is familiar with the business side of the city administration and is familiar with the people who receive the benefits the city has to offer.

In addition, he said it is also vital to have a good working relationship with the Tech administrators and students.

The mayor has an obligation to form good relationships with all city entities and be a leader to the community, he said.

"The mayor needs to have a vision for the all the people," Garnett said. "Bringing the city together and being a leader enables the mayor to direct where the city needs to go. Whatever is the interest of the city is the interest of the mayor and becomes the interest of the Council."

McDougal, 37, is president of McDougal Companies and a lifetime resident of Lubbock. He has been involved with the council for four years and said he wants to do more for the city as mayor than he would be able to do as a member of the council.

"There are a number of issues that I want to see addressed, and I thought I could do a better job of getting things pushed through as mayor, rather than as a city council member," he said.

An issue at the forefront of McDougal's campaign is uniting the region. McDougal said he wants to have regional meetings to discuss what is going on in the workforce and what needs to be done on a state level.

Redistricting caused the area to lose two state representatives, McDougal said. Therefore, it is vital for the region to be united and have a voice on the state and national level.

"When we go to Washington, for whatever the issues are, we have to be united," McDougal said. "If something's good for Brownfield or Littlefield, then it will be good for Lubbock."

Another goal for McDougal, if elected Mayor, would be to increase sales tax revenue to keep the property tax low.

McDougal said he wants to find ways to create more jobs and give Lubbock a competitive edge.

"When students graduate, they could have the opportunity to stay here if they wanted if we offered competitive jobs in the job market," he said.

Economic growth in North and East Lubbock needs to be stabilized along with creating new businesses and thus creating more jobs, McDougal said.

One of the first steps in taking care of both issues is to get rid of city-owned, vacant lots in East Lubbock. Selling these lots and allowing people to build homes or businesses there rids the city's liabilities and it regenerates tax dollars.

"We need to move families back into that area," he said.

McDougal said he wants to concentrate on quality of life issues, such as park development, building baseball fields and creating more after-school programs. The city can partner with the school districts to create entertaining but educational after-school programs to keep kids off of the streets and get more parents in the workforce.

In addition, McDougal said he wants an open-door policy.

"It's important for the mayor to return phone calls and meet with all groups who have concerns. I want to find a pro-business approach to the mayor's office," he said.

When people request information that is public record, they shouldn't be given the runaround to get it, McDougal said.

He said the mayor should give the citizens what they ask for and hand out "the good with the bad."

If the information is not favorable to the city's image, it shouldn't be any more difficult to get that information, McDougal said.

It is important to improve communication with all citizens, especially young people, like Tech students, he said.

"We need to be making sure everyone feels like they're getting their voices heard," he said.

McDougal, like Garnett, said the police department needs to be improved in terms of diversity. He said the department needs to recruit within the minority community, and the officers should get to know the neighborhoods they are patrolling.

"We need officers who know the community, who know the faces and the vehicles of the people they serve," McDougal said.

The mayor oversees the City Council and the community, McDougal said, and determines what the city is doing and how to do it better.

"The mayor determines what we need to do to promote the city," he said.

McDougal said he knows the issues in the different parts of town, having lived here his entire life and would bring that knowledge with him if elected mayor.

Montes, another candidate, said he also has some ideas about the mayoral position he wants fill. Montes, 49, is a salesperson and is retired from the U.S. Air Force. He has resided in Lubbock for 10 years.

The mayor should be capable of guiding the city and ensure the flow of information for citizens, he said.

Montes said he is running for mayor because he sees some doors are being closed for citizens.

"I want to open some doors for people," Montes said.

More assistance should be given to small businesses, he said; the city should offer them help in getting started and expanding.

Montes said there is a lack of communication between the city government and Lubbock residents.

"There should be more meetings and exchanging of ideas to move forward and make this place a better place to live," Montes said.

People should be aware they can make a difference in the local government, and the local government should listen to what the citizens are saying, he said.

In terms of economic development, Montes said too much attention is being paid to North and Southwest Lubbock.

"We need to pay more attention to parts of West, South and East Lubbock," he said.

More small businesses would be also a good addition to the town, he said. If the city increased the flow of small businesses, more Tech students would have job opportunities, helping the workforce in Lubbock.

Because of his experience working with people, Montes said he could fulfill the duties as mayor, if elected.

"I have the ability to listen and come up with solutions for what people want," Montes said.

She said the open house was to students from junior high level to those working on certification in specific programs after receiving their masters.

Goode said extra curricular activities provided to nursing students include the Texas Nursing Students Association, where Tech's chapter is one of the top in the state.

Zan Hurley, TNSA president and a senior nursing major from Abilene, said she enjoyed touring the prospective students throughout the Clinical Simulation Center and answering their questions.

"I believe Tech has the strongest chapter of TNSA, and it is because of the team effort," she said. "We do community service, teach CPR and are involved with political aspects of nursing. That helps to portray a good image of nursing."

Hurley said she was excited to meet the visiting students and enjoyed informing them of what the school has to offer.

"Because I am a senior, I can still identify with the students looking into the school of nursing programs," she said. "I can answer their questions because it wasn't too long ago that I was here."

Nikki Case, a freshman nursing major from Plano, said she was ready to enter the School of Nursing as soon as she could.

"It's fun to see what we get to do in a couple of years," she said.

Lauren Ellis, a freshman nursing major from Kingwood, said the open house was informative.

"I didn't realize it was going to be so in-depth," she said.

Monty Lott, a nursing graduate student from Lubbock, said he came back to Tech after some soul-searching.

"I figured it was time to start increasing my education and move on and move up," he said.

Biological ticking makes my ears ring

COLUMN

DALLAS GRANT

In the span of the last three days, I've come across three discussions of women's biological clocks. Previously, (read as my entire life to this point) I've only heard the topic discussed a handful of times, thankfully. However, a cover story in Time magazine, a discussion on Politically Incorrect with Bill Maher and a column by Kristen Gilbreth on Tuesday have convinced me that the issue is vitally important — to women.

The cause of this wave of fertility talk is a recent book by Sylvia Ann Hewlett. The book addresses concerns that women have of raising a family while pursuing a career or vice versa. The topic has always been popular among career-oriented women but has gained new life in the light of recent research. Hewlett asserts that women who spend a decade or so establishing careers and then attempt to start families "are heading down a bad piece of road."

This research comes as a blow to women who had planned on securing themselves in a career before having kids. It seems there just isn't enough time to have it both ways.

Apparently, women have been under the misconception they could wait to have kids in their 40s after they conquered their career field. New research shows 42 to be the magic age when women lose the ability to conceive without special fertility help. Of course there are exceptions, like Hewlett herself, who conceived her last child at 51 years old. Gross!

Who wants to be that old and have a kid? If her kid waits that long, she'll have to live to be 102 to see her first grandchild. She'll be approaching life expectancy at her kid's college graduation. I can see it now.

"That's nice of your grandmother to come," someone will say.

"She's not my grandmother; she's my 73-year-old mother!" her daughter will scream for the millionth time.

Actually, besides the freakish nature of grandmas giving birth, I really don't care when women have children. My concern is with the attitudes of these grandmothers and the goal that pushes them toward "golden years" pregnancy.

The goal in postponing child bearing so long women can "have our cake and eat it too," as Kristen Gilbreth stated in her column. Modern women are trying to find some way to be mothers and successful career women. And, this drive to wait as long as possible is an attempt to have the job and the kids without sacrificing either.

While this goal is commendable, it's hardly practical. If we could find some way to live longer, then it wouldn't really matter. But these women are finding out that there just aren't enough child-bearing years in their lives to firmly establish a career before starting their families.

The fact is careers and kids are inversely proportional. Extra time home with the kids means less time at work, and more time in the office means less time with the kids. So, women need to make the choice before they fall victim to the "no-choice," where women don't make the conscious decisions about their family's planning and essentially choose without choosing. Most often the choice becomes kids over career because women aren't accidentally getting promotions at work but instead getting accidentally pregnant at home.

When discussing this issue on "Politically Incorrect" Bill Maher said we live in a feminized society, and women think they can do it all.

Actually, some women can. For example, women who have jobs that require little education and no future (read as McDonald's) can take time off with little worry about being passed on the career ladder. However, Hewlett is concerned with the working woman with a career track. If you're a female doctor or lawyer and decide to raise your kids at home and return to work when they reach puberty, beware; you're losing time to men and childless women who aren't staying home.

In Hewlett's study of 1,648 "high-achieving" women, 42 percent were childless after 40, and of those making $100,000 a year, 49 percent were childless. These women didn't have any accidents. They didn't take off 10 years and return to work to find their associates were 10 years more advanced. They put their careers before children and they reaped the benefits, career-wise.

The point is women need to make choices instead of letting some sort of fertile destiny determine their career paths and maternal lives. If you want kids young, then have them and be willing to sacrifice some of your career. If you want the career first, don't be surprised when you find out your biological clock was strapped to explosives and has already gone BOOM.

Who is to say which option is more desirable, career achievements or stay-at-home parenting? I suppose it's a little different for every woman, and some may find middle ground. The most important thing to realize is that you cannot have the absolute best of both. So, stay informed and don't let the "no-choice" happen to you.

Today's power jobs (i.e. doctor and lawyer) simply won't allow for maternity leave and extra time off during the summers. Even asking your employer may be a quick way to derail your career track and hop right onto the mommy track. So make the "conscious decision" while being aware of the consequences.

You may be able to have your cake and eat it too, but you probably won't be eating it in the company president's office or at a partner luncheon. So women, ask yourselves if you want to be a professional with kids or a mom with a job or just a professional or just a mom.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Stolen art slap in the face

To the editor: I walked into the Architecture building Tuesday morning with my usual smile on my face. I saw one of my art teachers that morning. She asked me if I had taken my art project off the wall. I told her no.

Someone stole my artwork off the hallway wall. How disrespectful can someone be? Does this person not understand how much work I put into that piece? Now, don't get me wrong; I am not whining about it. I am just extremely upset and hurt that this person can actually steal something that is not even his or hers. What gives him or her the right to take that picture off the wall and actually keep this picture? I wonder if he or she even feels bad for what they did.

I want all of you to think about this and reconsider having your pictures posted in the hallway of the Architecture building. It makes me question if it is really safe for our teachers to hang our treasured pieces on the wall that we have worked on for so long.

I enjoy having my art posted in the hallway because it gives students and faculty a chance to see what the particular class is about. Also, it gives me the chance to show off my work that definitely represents me. I like the idea that I can share my ideas through my work with strangers I do not even know.

Since that person has stolen my picture, I can no longer trust having my work hung in the hallway anymore. This person not only stole one of the best pieces I have created this year, but he or she also took the trust I had to hang my work in the hallway. I already had a plan of what I was going to do with this piece. I could already picture how it would have looked if I just had the opportunity to complete my plans. But as irony would have it, someone had to have it without asking. I was told throughout the day that maybe I should take it as a compliment that someone actually stole my work because he or she liked it so much. The fact is that no matter what anyone tells me, I know that taking a picture of the wall without the artist's permission is completely wrong.

If the person who took my project of the wall is reading this, please understand that I would really like to have it back. This particular piece had a great deal of meaning to me. Please put it back on the wall or slide it under Architecture, Room 301. I will not be mad if I get it back; I will be thankful — very thankful. So once again, please understand the project had a lot of meaning to me. I pray you will realize how much it means to me and soon return it. Also, if anyone knows anything about this picture that was taken between April 4 and Monday, please contact me at hawtdamn314@yahoo.com. Thanks.

LOREN BELL

Dear Faculty: Thank you for choosing to teach. Now, please do so.

You must stop subjecting your students to the low level of uninspired, lecture-based drivel through which I have suffered these past years. Granted, some of you were at the top of your game, quite inspirational and veritable founts of information; I thank the five of you.

To the rest of you, I placed my future, my ambition and my drive in your hands. Thanks to your classroom presence or lack thereof. It was squandered on busy work and stagnant lectures. It is amazing how quickly a fascinating subject can have the life sucked right out of it by a teacher with no talent and utter lack of concern for the student.

By accepting a position as a university professor, you have agreed to make the students your highest priority. Sacrificing the quality of the classroom experience while you chase grants or scramble to publish; filling podiums with TAs with no teaching ability; basing grades on gimme tests and busy work; making it all too clear that you have no time for your students and no care for their well being is not only insulting to your profession and discourteous to your students, but reflects poorly on who you are as a person.

Perhaps it is just a lack of recognition of where you are missing the mark. The teaching experience is very different when you are on the other side of the podium, and it is easy to misinterpret the temper of a classroom with the Power Point projector blinding you. So let us review a few of the biggest affronts to the educational experience.

Despite what Microsoft would have you believe, PowerPoint is not the savior of classroom creativity. In fact, few things are more tedious and boring than to watch a colorful progression of your lecture notes flash up on a wall.

Sure, it is a lot easier to remember what you were going to say when you can read it from the screen, but we can read it too. Without bringing in your personal experiences or sharing the subtle nuances not found on the slides, you are nothing more than overpaid button pushers.

But this brings up another good point. We can read. We learned how to comprehend the written language long before we arrived at Texas Tech. We did not register for classes to have someone read to us from a textbook we already purchased at exorbitant prices from the local manuscript monopoly.

Your job is to challenge us, help us to see the big picture and teach us to make those connections not found in the chapter summaries. Far too often we are faced with that big decision: should we read the book and not show up to class or show up to class and not read the book? Either way we get the same information. At least the chairs are comfortable at home.

Some of you have noticed that students tend to spend a lot more time elsewhere than in your classroom. It always is amazing to watch the class size increase by powers of 10 on test day. However, taking attendance as a grade is an insulting means to admit that you cannot deliver the material in a way engaging enough to keep a tree upright.

If students do not show up to lecture, either they are lazy slackers that will fail out of your class anyway, or you are insulting their intelligence and are as boring as dirt. If a student never attends and does indeed pass all your tests, then perhaps it is time for you to teach beyond the textbook.

Or, perhaps it is time to actually teach instead of working on your own self-indulgent pursuits. Granted, research and publications are necessary components of the advancement of knowledge.

However, you have been hired to bestow wisdom upon the next generation of great minds. Still, many of you seem to find your time in a classroom to be grave impositions upon your personal endeavors. If research is your passion and students your burden, please leave. Find private lab space somewhere else with which to feed your ego. Quit stealing my tuition dollars.

So again, thank you for your time these semesters. Unfortunately, those of you who excel at your job are probably the only ones who read this; the rest of you probably felt insulted and will write this all off as the ramblings of some upstart graduate. So be it. I only hope the students following behind me will not settle for this and will hold you all to the high standard this university so richly deserves.

Deviant set to hypnotize crowd

By Natalie Knox/Staff Reporter

Hypnosis, music and drink specials. Those are the things that will be featured tonight at Bleacher's Sports Café, located on Buddy Holly in the Depot District. Ian Bertrand known as Dr. Deviant, a hypnotist from Canada, will perform a 90-minute show and will be followed by a local DJ.

"I saw him at a trade show in Las Vegas," said Kurt McMillan, owner of the bar Bleachers. "And I asked him to come to us."

The show McMillan attended was actually somewhat R-rated, playing to the Las Vegas crowd, he said.

"It was funny, just not good, clean fun," said McMillan.

Bertrand has never performed in the Panhandle area before, he said.

Bertrand said the name Dr. Deviant originates from the idea that people "deviate" from the norm when onstage.

He chose doctor because original hypnotists of the 1600's were said to be actual doctors. This notion of hypnotists as doctors has since been dismissed.

Bertrand said he is originally from Ontario, Canada, but performs all over the United States. He operates mainly out of Las Vegas.

Bertrand's interest in hypnosis began at age 12.

"I used to grind my teeth in my sleep so my dentist used hypnosis on me," he said. "I've never grinded my teeth since. Ever since then, I've been interested in hypnosis."

Some people have a general misconception about hypnosis, he said.

"There is nothing magical or spiritual about hypnosis," he said. "It's actually an effective tool in dental surgery, medical practices and law."

Bertrand graduated in 1995 from St. Lawrence College in Kingston, Ontario, with a bachelor degree in business but had taken psychology classes for years.

After graduation, he studied hypnosis with a hypnotist for six months and learned the art, he said.

"Hypnosis is a pretty fascinating realm," he said. "It's all about relaxation and the power of suggestion. We can even make people lose weight and quit smoking."

The show will start at about 10:30 p.m., but people are encouraged to be there by 10 p.m. There will be a $4 cover charge for everyone who comes, said McMillan.

"It's a really funny show," he said. "It will be something different than the usual 'who's playing, and what are tonight's drink specials?'" said McMillan.

Hypnosis happens in a specific way, Bertrand said.

"The brain runs on two levels, the subconscious and the conscious," he said. "Every decision you make is made from the conscious, and the uncon-

Movie makers keep images of World Trade Center in films

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The World Trade Center lives on in a handful of new films whose makers left intact their pre-Sept. 11 footage of the twin towers out of respect for the dead and defiance of the terrorists who destroyed the buildings.

In the weeks after Sept. 11, there was a rush to excise shots of the trade towers from such comedies as "Zoolander" and "Serendipity." Studios and filmmakers felt the images would be too wrenching so soon after the terrorist attacks.

But other movies that came out late last year such as "Vanilla Sky" and "Side-walks of New York" included shots of the trade center. As time passes, filmmakers say they sense audiences are better prepared to handle the sudden appearance of the vanished towers on screen.

"I think it's like our memories of a loved one," said director Sam Raimi, who left images of the trade center in his upcoming adaptation of "Spider-Man."

A "Spider-Man" trailer that included images of the World Trade Center was quickly pulled last fall.

Bluegrass music legend Peter Rowan set to perform in Lubbock

By Whitney Wyatt/Staff Reporter

Tech students have the chance to hear a living bluegrass legend when Peter Rowan's Texas Trio performs at 8 p.m. tonight at 19th St. Warehouse.

Ryan McWhirter, co-owner of Guerrilla Music Group, said Rowan, who played with Bill Monroe in the 1960s and Jerry Garcia in the 1970s is legendary.

"He's a legendary bluegrass icon," McWhirter said.

Rowan recorded an album, "Old and in the Way," with Garcia, Vassar Clements and David Grisman in 1973.

Opening frequently for the Doors in the 1970s, Rowan is a skilled singer-songwriter, who also yodels, he said.

Rowan also sits in with String Cheese Incident periodically, McWhirter said.

Jason Self, co-owner of Guerrilla Music Group, said he encourages Tech students to come to Rowan's show.

"It's a chance to see a piece of music history," Self said. "It's a chance to see a living legend."

Cuttin' the Grass, a local bluegrass band, and Smokin' Grass, a bluegrass band from Vermont, will open for Rowan, he said.

Guerrilla Music Group, which Self said he and McWhirter started in June 2001, handles booking and concert promotions for bands.

Self said bringing big shows to college towns is one of their goals.

"We are doing what we wished someone would have done when we were in college," he said. "It is music for the people by the people."

McWhirter, who graduated from Tech in 1995, agreed.

"We're trying to bring some top-notch shows to Lubbock," he said. "Instead of having students drive hours away for good music."

Making Lubbock a natural stop for bands on tour is important to him, McWhirter said.

Self said, the turnout of Tech students is going to dictate the band's return.

Tech swept by UT, now 1-13

By David Wiechmann/Staff Writer

On a day when former pitcher Amanda Renfro was immortalized by having her number retired, the Texas Tech pitching staff almost mirrored her. In a doubleheader with No. 16 Texas, pitchers Kristina Blair and Maggie Ayres handled the Longhorns' bats for the most part, but it was not enough. Tech lost game one, 3-2 in extra innings and dropped game two, 2-0. Tech coach Bobby Reeves said the two hurlers threw well and kept the Red Raiders (12-36 overall, 1-13 Big 12 play) in the game. "My hat's off to Kristina Blair," Reeves said. "She threw an incredible game and only gave up one earned run. Maggie Ayres did a great job of keeping (the Longhorns) off balance in the second game." Both pitchers threw complete games, and Blair said the team did a good job on both sides of the plate, as well. "The first game we hit quite good," Blair said. "They did great to pull together and pop off some runs right away. The team came together; we just didn't get the breaks at the right time." Texas (39-10, 12-1) started Cat Osterman on the rubber for game one. Reeves said Texas' other pitcher, Amy Bradford, caught his attention more than Osterman. "I was more impressed with their second pitcher," Reeves said. "We got to (Osterman) early and scored some runs off her. I think we did a great job against her." Shortstop Kristi Robles said it still hurt to lose, but because the games were so close, it is a little reassuring. "Those losses are hard, but it feels better to lose 2-0 than 9-0," Robles said. "We played as well as we have, and we didn't have any mental breakdowns." Blair said she felt a number of ways after the double dip with Texas. "I have mixed emotions," Blair said. "I'm upset that we lost, but I'm happy because we played a lot better. We made leaps and bounds in improving. We just didn't get any breaks at the right times." Because the wheels did not fall off, the Raiders were able to be in the game until the very end, and Reeves said that was important. "We were making plays out there," Reeves said. "Anytime you can keep yourself in a situation where you get one break and you can drive in one more run is great. We just didn't get that break again." Robles said one break was all Tech needed to

I have mixed emotions. I'm upset that we lost, but I'm happy because we played a lot better.

Texas Tech Pitcher

upset the top team in the conference. "They're a good team, and we almost had them," Robles said. "One more hit in each game and we would have won, but we made some steps to improving." Reeves said positives can be taken away from the losses. "We didn't win, but we sure played well enough to win," Reeves said. "We're going to Missouri, and we're going after them just like we did against Texas. Hopefully, we'll come home with two wins."
